"The stacks are generally staled (founded) on a layer of furze, thorns," &c. Agr. Surv. M. Loth., p. 94.
[A.-S. stal, Fr. estal, E. stall; Su.-G. staella, to plant, to station.]

STALE-HIRDIT, part. pa. Applied to a flock or herd under the care of a shepherd; q. herded by a staff.

"Gif it sall happin the cattel or scheip of the ane realme to be stalf-hirdit, or to remane depasturing upon the ground of the opposite realme, be the space of sax hours in ane day, it sall be lauchful to the awner of the ground sa depasturit,—for to tak and apprehend the said cattel or scheip, as foirfaltit and lost, to his awin use." Bordour Matteris, Balfour's Pract., p. 612.

The term staff-herding is used in the E. law. It "is a right to follow cattle within a forest: and where persons claim common in any forest, it must be inquired by the ministers whether they use staff-herding, for it is not allowable of common right; because by that means the deer, which would otherwise come and feed with the cattle, are frightened away, and the keeper or follower will drive the cattle into the best grounds, so that the deer shall only have their leavings." Jacob's Law Dict. in vo.

STALKAR, STALKER, s. 1. A huntsman.

Ouer all the cieté enrageit scho here and thare
Wandris, as ane stirkin hynd, quham the stalkar,
Or scho persais, from fer betis with his flaine
Amyd the woddis of Crete.

Doug. Virgil, 102, 6.

2. More commonly, one who ranges, illegally killing deer.

"The Justice Clerk sall inquire of Stalkaris, that slayis deer.—And alsone as ony stalkar may be convict of slaughter of deer, he sall pay to the king xl. s. And the halders and mantenaris of thame sall pay ten punds." Acts Ja. I., 1524, c. 39, Ed. 1566.

Ye lyke twa stalkers stells in cocks and hens.

Dundar, Evergreen, ii. 55.

A.-S. staels-an signifies, pedetentim ire. But the term seems immediately formed from E. stalk, "to walk behind a stalking horse or cover."

The following description of a stalking horse may perhaps be acceptable to some readers:—

"The stalking horse was a horse originally trained for the purpose, and covered with trappings, so as to conceal the sportsman from the game he intended to shoot at. It was particularly useful to the archer, by affording him an opportunity of approaching the birds unseen by them, so near that his arrows might easily reach them; but as this method was frequently inconvenient, and often impracticable, the fowler had recourse to art, and caused a canvass figure to be stuffed, and painted like an horse grazing, but sufficiently light, that it might be moved at pleasure with one hand. These deceptions were also made in the form of oxen, cows and stags, either for variety or for conveniency sake. In the inventories of the wardrobe belonging to King Henry VIII. we frequently find the allowance of certain quantities of stuff, for the purpose of making "stalking coats and stalking hose for the use of his majesty."
Harleian MS. ap. Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 29.
V. BOGSTALKER.

STALL, s. V. STALE.

STALL, pret. v. Stole.

My traisty sward fra vender my hede away
Stall scho, and in the place brocht Menelay.

Doug. Virgil, 182, 25.

* STALL, STA', s. The manger, as well as the stall, of a horse, S.

STALLANGER, STALLENGER, s. 1. A foreign merchant, who sets up a stall in a burgh for the sale of his goods during a fair or market.

"Ilk stallenger sall either agree with the Provost of the burgh, in the best forme as he may, or else ilk mercat day sall pay to him ane halfpennie." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Stallangiatores. L. B. stal-langiar-ius is also used, Iter Camerar. c. 39. s. 63.

2. A person, not a freeman, who, for a small consideration to his corporation, is allowed to carry on business for one year, S.

"Gine he beis sufficient of his craft, and not of power to mak his expensis haistellie wpon his fredome, he sell brakk the priviledge of ane stallanger for ane year, and no langer." Seill of Caus, Edin. 2d May 1433, MS.

STALLARIE, s. The prebend or stall of a dignified clergyman.

—"With—right of patronage of all benefices, chaplanreis, and stallareis, founded and lyand within the boundis of Orkney and Zetland," &c. Acts Ja. VI. 1612, Ed. 1814, p. 481.

STALLENG, s. The duty paid to the magistrates of a burgh, for liberty to erect a stall during a market.

"In the auld forme of customes, it is called the stalleng of the mercat." Ibid.

STALLINGER SYLVER. Money payable for the privilege of erecting a stall in a market.

"To pound all vnfreemen for their stallinger sylver." Aberd. Reg. A. 1598.

STALLIT, part. pa. Set, placed.

Wele maistow be a wretchit man callit,
That wantis the confort that suld thy hert glade,
And has all thing within thy hert stallit,
That may thy youth oppressen or defade.

King's Quair, v. 19.

V. STELL, v.

STALLYCH, s. "A thick stalk of grain standing by itself;" Gall. Enc.; from A.-S. stale, a stalk, or staelt, a column.

STALWART, adj. 1. Brave, courageous.

It seems to admit this sense in the following passage:

And now Amycus harme compleis he,
Now him allone the cruell fate of Licus,
Now strang Gyane, now stalwart Cloanthus.

Doug. Virgil, 19, 52.

—Fortemque Gyane, fortemque Cloanthum.

Virg.

The only difficulty as to this sense is that fortem, as applied to Gyas, is rendered strang.

According to the learned Hickes, either from A.-S. stal-ferhth, chalbei animi homo, sive fortis; or stathol-ferhth, stabilis et firmi animi vir; or stolt-ferhth, magnanimos.

Perhaps the word might have its origin from A.-S. stalwort, stahlwyrth, captu dignus, ejus estimationis ut operae pretium sit aueripere; from stael-an, to carry off clandestinely, and weorth, worth. Thus the Sax. Chron. speaks of stalwart ships. They brought to London, tha thaer stael-wyrthe waeron, i.e., those ships that were worth carrying off.

2. Strong, powerful, [enduring.]

—This wourthy stalwart Hercules,
That on this wise had Cacus set in pres,—
Efthr al kynd of wappinnis can do cry.

Doug. Virgil, 249, 45.

—With wapynnys stalwart of steele
Thai dang apon, with all thair myecht,
Barbour, xiii. 14, MS.

Ful lichtlie vp he hynt his stalwart spere.

Doug. Virgil, 409, 33.

We the besek that achaw also thou wald
To va irkit sum strenth and stalwart hald.

Ibid. 70. 10.

Moenia, Virg.

4. Hard, severe; violent, stormy.

He fand thare stalwart barganyng.
Nevyretheles thare duelt he,
And oft in gret perplexytè.

Wyntoun, viii. 38. 194.

I met dame Flora in dull weed disguised;
Which, into May, was dulce and delectable,
With stalwart storms her sweetness was surprisid;
Her heavenly hues were turned into sable.

Lyndsay's Dream, Ellis, Spec. ii. 24.

The word occurs in O.E., either in the first or second sense.

For Godes loue, stalcworthe men, armeth yow faste.

R. Glouc., p. 18.

The kyng adde by hys vorste wyf one stalcorde sone,
That, vor his stalwarthed, longe worth in mone.

Ibid. p. 293.

STALWARTLY, adv. Bravely, courageously.

Owtakyn thair mony barownys
And knyghtis that of gret renouwe is,
Come, with thair men, full stalwartly.

Barbour, xi. 234, MS.

Oure king and his men held the felde

Stalworthly, with spere and schelle.

Minot's Poems, p. 15.

To STAM, v. n. To strike down the feet with violence in walking, S.

"To gang stammin", to walk forward in a furious manner;" Ettr. For.

The term most nearly allied seems to be Isl. stam-r, reses, remissus, q. headlong. This is most probably nothing more than a secondary sense of the word, as signifying ballbutiens; Dan. stammende, stammering; because stuttering and stammering frequently proceeds from carelessness or impetuosity. The last part of Ram-stam indicates the same origin. Su.-G. stamm-a, however, signifies tendere, cursum dirigere.

STAMFISH, STAMPHISH, adj. 1. Strong, robust, coarse, Roxb.

In this sense it might seem allied to Isl. stam-r, rigidus, or Su.-G. stamme, truncus, q. strong or stiff as the trunk of a tree. Stump id. is a derivative from stamme.

2. Unruly, unmanageable, W. Loth.; from Teut. stamp-en, to kick, or perhaps originally the same with Stumfish, q.v.

[STAMMACK, s. Stomach, Gall.]

STAMMAGER, STAMMACKER, s. "A busk, a slip of stay-wood used by females," S.; Gall. Enc.; corr. from E. stomacher.

STAMMAGUST, s. A disgust at any kind of food, S. B.

The first part of the word is evidently from stomach, S. stammack, often pron. q. stamma. May gust be traced to Fr. goust, a taste, as it is common S. to speak of an ill gust?

STAMMAREEN, s. The sternmost seat in a boat, where the helmsman sits, Shetl.

Su.-G. stamm denotes either the fore or back part of a vessel; framstamm, the prow, backstamm, the stern. The termination may be from ren, lines, q. the boundary of the stern.

To STAMMER, STAUMER, v. n. To stagger, stumble, S.

"The horse stammers;" Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 94.

Isl. stumm-a, collabi; stumra yfer, Verel.

"My guide's pony began to stammer under his burden, that is, in vulgar Scotch, to stumble, which threw all my baggage in disorder." Carr's Caledonian Sketches, p. 473.

STAMMERAL, STAUMERAL, s. 1. One who falters in speech, Ayrs.

[2. An awkward, blundering fellow, ibid.]

[STAMMERIN, STAUMERIN, adj. Awkward, blundering; rude, noisy, ibid.]

STAMMEREL, s. Friable stone, S. B.

STAMMERERS, s. pl. Detached pieces of limestone, Renfr., Lanarks.

"Besides the regular strata, a great number of detached pieces called stammerers, are, in many places of the parish, imbedded in clay." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 259, q. staggerers.

To STAMMLE, STAMPLE, v. n. 1. To totter, [to stumble, S.]

"When Andrew Pistolfoot used to come stamplin in to court me i' the dark, I wad hae cried,—'Get away wi' ye! bowled-like shurf!'" Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 226.

2. To stumble into a place accidentally, or into which one ought not to have gone; as, "I stammlit in upon them when they were courtin'," S.

Perhaps merely a corruption of the E. v. Su.-G. stambl-a, has the same meaning.

STAMMYNG, adj. Of or belonging to taminy.

"Ane pair of brwn stammyng breikis pesmentit with gold.—Twa pair stammyng schankis [hose]." Aberd. Reg. A. 1560, V. 24. V. STEMMING.

STAMP, s. A trap; as, a rotten stamp, a trap for rats; a foemart stamp, a trap for catching polecats, S.

—Mony a trap, an' stamp, an' snare,
They hae their prey to catch in.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 53.

Man sets the stamp; but we can tell
He's aften taury-haun'd himsel!—Ibid. i. 65.

Su.-G. stampa, also stappa, Dan. stomp, id. It derives the Su.-G. term from stamp-a, to stamp or tread, because it is by treading on the snare that the animal is caught. In the same manner Su.-G. falla, S. faw, a trap, receives its name from something falling, so as to confine or catch the prey.

STAMP, s. The cramp; and metaph., stamp in their stomachs is used for a qualm of conscience, remorse.

—"There was many noblemen of both kingdoms that were not on this course, nor privy to the same, while about this council-day, this clandestine band began to break out and be divulged, whilk took some stamp in their stomachs, thinking they were not tied to this privy covenant, and would rather follow the king nor the chief leaders of this covenant." Spalding's Troubles, ii. 15.

Perhaps stop, demur, Belg. Fris. stemp-en, sisters; or struggle, qualm, Isl. stym, lucta levis.

STAMP-COIL, s. A small rick of hay, Dumfr.

The hay is first collected into small heaps called coils or coles; then of a number of these combined a larger heap is formed, as much perhaps as would be a cart-load. These are called stamp-coles, and are erected in the field. When brought to the barn-yard, it is formed into stacks. The name of stamp-cole has most probably originated from the operation of stamping or tramping the hay into a compact state.

[To STAMPLE, v. n. V. STAMMLE.]

[To STAM-RAM, v. n. To go into anything heedlessly; to walk with noise and rudeness, S.]

[STAM-RAM. 1. As a s., rude, noisy walking; also a rude, noisy person, Clydes., Banffs.]

2. As an adv., rudely and noisily, ibid.]

[STAN', s. and v. V. STAND.]

[STAN'-BY, s. A reserve, reservation, Banffs.]

[STAN'-O'-PIPES, s. The bagpipes, ibid. V. under STAND.]

STANCE, s. 1. A site, a station, an area for building, S.

Thence to the top of Law-Tay did we hye,
And from the airie mountaine looking down,
Beheld the stance and figure of our town.

Muses Threnodie, p. 152.

"He very judiciously remarked, that every man's house was built upon a rock, meaning that every man had a dry gravelly stance whereon to found his house." P. Cromdale, Moray, Statist. Acc., viii. 253.

"To be Feued,—the unfeued stances on the east side of Saxe-Cobourg Place, and the west sides fronting St. Cuthbert's Chapel," &c. Caled. Merc. Feb. 10, 1825.

2. A pause, a stop, S.

But here my fancie's at a stance;
Are we to have a war with France?

Cleland's Poems, p. 11.

To put to a stance, to stop, to suspend.

Their sad misfortunes, and unlucky chance,

—Had put their measures to a stance.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 167.

The term is Fr. evidently from Lat. sto, stare, to stand.

STANC'D, part. pa. Stationed.

For he ne'er advanc'd
From the place he was stanc'd,
Till no more to do there at a', man.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 66.

To STANCHE, STENCH, v. a. To assuage, to pacify.

O stanche your writh for schame, or al is lorne.
Doug. Virgil, 420, 3.

Fr. estanch-er, id.

STANCH-GIRSS, STENCH-GIRSS, s. Perhaps Yarrow or Millfoil, Achillea Millefolium, Linn.

But a' the washing wail na stench the bleed,
 On haste then Nory for the stanch-girss yeed;
 For thae auld warld foulks had wondrous cann
 Of herbs that were baith good for beast and man.
Ross's Helmore, p. 15.

Stench-girss, El. 1st.

In some places of Sweden, Stengrass. When bruised, it is applied by the peasantry for closing wounds. V.
Lightfoot, p. 497.

STANCHELL, s. A kind of hawk.

The tarsall galf him tug for tug,
 A stanchell hang in ilka lug.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 21.

Thair wes the herraldis foe the hobby but fable;
Stanchellis, Steropis, scrycht to thair sterne lordis.

Houlate, iii. 2.

This seems to be the Kestrel, falco tinnunculus, Linn., the Steingal of Turner, the Stannel, Stonegall, of Willoughby.

It is the same species, which in Ang. is called Willie-whip-the-wind, from the action of its wings on the air. For Pennant observes concerning the kestrel: "This is the hawk that we so frequently see in the air fixed in one place, and as it were fanning it with its wings; at which time it is watching for its prey." For the same reason it seems to be called in Germ. Windwachtel, Wannenweher, and by Willoughby Windhover. V. Penn. Zool., p. 195, 196. V.
WINDCUFFER.

The origin of the name is uncertain. It seems the same with Stainyell, q. v.

STAND, s. 1. The goal, the starting-post.

Richt swiftly on thare rasis can thay rak,
 The stand thay leif, and flaw furth with ane crak,
 As wyndis blast, ettland to the renkis end.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 17.

Teut. stand, statio.

2. A stall; also, the goods there exposed to sale, S.

"Stand—what is placed in such a situation, as cattle, goods," &c. Gl. Sibb.

3. A barrel set on end for containing water, or salted meat, S.; as, a waert stand, a beef-stand.

Sibb. refers to Gael. stannadh, a tub.

—"And for the spoliatioun, taking, withholding—of—two caldrounys, xvij pece of powder weschale, xiiij standis & barellis," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1492,
 p. 243.

"The air sall haue—ane baik-stule, ane flesch fat, ane mekle pype, ane breid basket, ane masking-fat, ane great stand, ane tub," &c. Balf. p. 235.

This must be viewed as the same with A.-S. stand, Teut. stände, a vat, a large tub; labrum, alveus statarius, orca, cadus. Hence,

4. An assortment, consisting of various articles necessary to make up a complete set in any respect; as, a stand of armour, a stand of claise, &c.

"The lordis decretis—that James of Rutherforde of that ilk sal restore & deliuer again to Adam of Pringil

the compleite stand of harnes, quihilk he borouit & resauit fra the sail Adam, as was prufit before the lordis." Act. Audit., A. 1471, p. 12.

"That euerie barroun be lyikwyis armit—and furnist with ane compleit stand of the foirsaid armour for euerie fyftene chaldier of wictuall that he may spend."
Acts Ja. VI. 1598, Ed. 1814, p. 169.

This word occurs in an old inventory of the vestments of St. Machar in Aberdeen, A. 1559.

"Item, a stand of brown silk and cloath of gold with stoles, albs, fawnous and paruts conform. Item, a stand of charbukle with stoles," &c. Hay's Scotia
Sacra, p. 169.

Here it signifies a full dress, perhaps a robe.

"Proclamation was made at the cross of Aberdeen, commanding both Newtown and Oldtown to furnish out to General Lesly's army, and to ilk soldier thereof their share of a stand of gray cloaths, two shirts, and two pair of shoes, under the pain of plundering."
Spalding's Troubles, i. 239.

5. To have stand, to continue, to remain.

"Be this way, nocht onlie nicht the small pepill repose sum parte of new landis,—bot als the ciete nicht have stand in pece and concorde." Bellend. T.
Liv., p. 307. In concordia fere, Lat.

STANDFULL, s. A tubfull of any thing, S.

Infekit watter sowllit thame, cheik and chin;
 Persauing that, sorrow nair thay socht it,
 Bot keepit standfull at the sklatis thairin.

Sege Edinburgh Castel, Poems 16th Cent., p. 290.

* To STAND, STAND one, v. a. and n. To cost;
 as, It stood me a groat, it cost fourpence, S.

—"1649, Sep.—The towre-head of the house of Lundie in Fyfe, was covered with leade: the repairing thereof stood above 500 merks Scots money." Lamont's
Diary, p. 11.

To STAND at, v. n. To feel such disgust at any food, as not to be able to taste of, or to swallow it; as, "I ne'er saw sic a soss; my stammak stude at it," S.; synon. Scunner, Ug.

Dan. opstoed som maven, "the rising or wambling of the stomach;" Wolff.

To STAND our, or o'er, v. n. 1. To remain unpaid, or undetermined, S.

2. To go on without adjournment; used in relation to a court.

"That this present parliament proceid and stand our without ony continuacioun, sa lang as plesis the kingis grace," &c. Acts Ja. V. 1539, Ed. 1814, p. 333.

The phrase is obviously synon. with the preceding term, proceid. According to the E. idiom, the language would suggest an idea directly the reverse; especially as continuacioun would be viewed as denoting progress instead of prorogation.

To STAND up, v. n. 1. To hesitate, to stickle, to be irresolute, Roxb.

2. To trifle, to spend time idly, ibid.

To STAND you, or yont, v. n. To stand aside, to get out of the way, S.

Claymores, that, erst, at Prestonpans,
 Gart foes stand you,

Were quiv'ring in the feckless hands
O' mony a drone.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 19.

[STANDARD, part. pr. Standing, Barbour, vi. 77.]

STANDARD-STANE. The name commonly given to any stone obelisk, whether in a rude or ornamented state, S.

—"And sua ascendand the markat-gate, and throw the furlie of Ardingrantane til it cum til a litil slak and standand stany, northwest upon the Carnameik." Reg. Aberd.

Sax years and something mair are gane,
Since I cam to the stanning stane.

Gall. Encycl., p. 346.

[STANDARTIS, s. pl. Standards, Barbour, xi. 465.]

STANDAST, adj. [Errat. for Standfast.]

"A almerie; a standast burd with tressis." Aberd. Reg. V. 16. Perhaps a board which stood upright, and was converted into a table by tressles being placed under it; a fashion very common in olden times. Teut. standastigh signifies stabilis.

STAND BED, STANDAND BED, STANDING BED. A bed with posts, as distinguished from one that might be folded up.

"Item, ane stand bed." Invent. A. 1566, p. 173.

"Item, in the chalmere of deis ane stand bed of eistland tymmer with ruf and pannel of the same." Ibid. p. 301.

—"For the whaldin fra him of a hors & harness, price XL merkis, a stand bed, a pot, a caldroune, & certane vtheris gudis of areschip," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1489, p. 132.

The phrase appears in the form of standand bed, Aberd. Reg. "Ane trein standand bed of fyr." A. 1541, V. 17. This is a singular tautology.

"Item, taken by the said McIlvorie from Allan Mac-lachlan, in the change-house of Calintrave, 20 merks worth of household plenishing, and ane standing bed." Depredations in Argyll in 1685.

STAND BURDE. A standing table, as opposed to a folding one.

"Item, in the hall [at Dunbarton Castle] thre stand burdis sett on branderis with their furmes, with ane irne chimnay." Inventories, A. 1570, p. 301.

STANDFORD, s. An opprobrious designation, of uncertain meaning.

—Foryeing the feris of ane lord,
And he ane strumbell, and standford.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 111.

Perhaps q. one of so mean extract, that he must stand at a distance in the presence of men of rank; A.-S. stand-an feoran, stare procul.

STAND-HARNES. [Prob., armour of mail.]

"The wholl number of the Scottis armie arose to the number of thriescoir thousand men, quhairof thair was twentie thousand in stand harnes, and twentie thousand in jack and spear, and twentie thousand with bowis, and habershones, and two handit swordis." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 393. Not in Ed. 1723, p. 173.

Prob., armour of mail, as contrasted with that which was made of rings?

[STANDIN-BANDS, s. pl. The tethers by which cows are bound to the vaigle or stall-peg, Shetl.]

STANE, STAN, s. 1. A stone, S. steen, S.B.

Sum straik with slings; sum gadlerit stanis;
Sum fled and weil escheuit.

Chr. Kirk, st. 15.

[2. A measure of weight=16 lb., S.

3. The stone (disease); schorn of the stane, cut for gravel, Accts. L. H. Treas., I. 305, Dickson.

4. On the stane, on the tombstone or altar, where special payments had to be made.

During the middle ages it was customary to make formal payment on tombstones or altars in churches; and in obligations, such a place of payment was often expressly specified. In the following extract this custom is referred to.

"Item, the xvij day of Maij, [1497], giffin to the King himself apon the stane in Striuelin, quhen he passit to D., iij vnicornis, iij French crovnis, and thre Scottis crovnis; summa vij lib. x s." Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 336, Dickson.]

Moes-G. stains, A.-S. stan, Su.-G. sten, anc. stain, id. The S.B. pron. corresponds more to Alem. Isl. stein, Belg. steen.

STANE-BARK, s. Liverwort, Roxb.

Prob., it originally meant some species of Saxifrage, as it so closely corresponds with Teut. steen-breke, and Su.-G. sten-bræcka, id.

STANE-BITER, s. The cat-fish, Shetl.

"Anarchichas Lupus, (Lin. Syst.) Stanebiter, (Steenbider of Pontoppidan) Sea-wolf, Cat-fish." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 307.

Pontoppidan observes, that it is "so called, because 'tis said it can bite pebble-stones to pieces with its excessive sharp-teeth." Nat. Hist. Norw. P. ii. p. 151.

STANECAST, s. The distance to which a stone may be thrown, S.

STANE-CHAKER, STONE-CHECKER, s. 1. The stone-chatter, S. Moticilla rubicola, Linn.

The "Stonechecker arrives about the first of May; disappears about the middle of August." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc. xv. 326.

"This bird is much detested in the country, because it is said to be hatched by the toad. 'The tale clocks, the stane-chacker's eggs' is the phrase; which may be partly true, as the toad is often found in its nest." Gall. Encycl.

2. The Wheat-ear, Moticilla oenanthe, Linn., S.; the Chack or Check of Orkn.

"The Wheat-ear is generally known in Scotland by the appropriate name of Stane-chacker." Fleming's Tour in Arran.

It seems to have borrowed the northern name of the Motacilla oenanthe or Wheat ear; Sw. stensquette, Norw. steen squette, Germ. steinschaker. The form of the word refers us to Sw. squætt-a, to squirt. But perhaps the name was formed from squattr, to chat, to chatter. V. CHACK, CHECK, s. and SCHAKER-STANE.

STANE-CLOD, s. A stone-cast, Roxb.

"Tam wad never come within a stane-clod o' him." Wint. Ev. Tales, ii. 199.

From stane, and clod as signifying to cast or throw, properly applied to lumps of earth or hardened mire.

STANE-DEAD, adj. Quite dead, having no symptoms of animation, S.

Dan. steen-deed, exanimis, Teut. steen-deed, emortuus, atque rigidus instar lapidis.

STANE-DUMB, adj. Totally silent, Roxb.

Wark gaes far lighter endways when
We joke away or haver, than
To sit stane-dumb. Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 72.

STANEDUNDER, s. A cant term for an explosion of fire-arms; liter., the thundering noise made by a heap of stones falling to the ground, Clydes.

STANEGRAZE, s. "A bruise from a stone;" Gall. Encycl.

[STANE-PECKER, s. The stone-chatter, Shetl.]

STANE OF PILLAR. V. PILLAR.

STANERAW, STEINRAW, s. Rock-liverwort, S.

The term steinraw is appropriated S.B. and Orkn. to the Lichen Saxatilis, Linn.

"In some places it is covered with lichen saxatilis, —throughout the north of Scotland called Steinraw." Neill's Tour, p. 50.

"Lichen saxatilis. Grey blue pitted Lichen, Anglis. Staneraw, Scotis australibus." Lightfoot, p. 816.

From A.-S. stan, or Isl. stein, stone, and raue, hair, q. the hair of stones; or Belg. rugg, mossy.

[STANER-BED, STANER-STEPS. V. under STANNER.]

STANNERIE, adj. Gravelly. V. STANNERY.

[STANERS, s. pl. V. STANNERS.]

STANE-STILL, adj. or adv. Totally without motion, S.

Tradition tells of an old minister in our own country, not of the brightest parts it may be supposed, who, in discouraging from some text in which the word Follow occurred, informed his audience, that he would speak of four different kinds of followers. "First," said he, "my friends, there are followers abint; secondly, there are followers before; thirdly, there are followers cheekie for chow, and sidie for sidie; and last of aw, there are followers that stand stane-still."

Stane-still has not been viewed as an E. word, although it has undoubtedly a better claim than many others that have been introduced as composite terms. The phraseology is used by Shakespeare and Pope.

STANEWARK, s. Building of stone, masonry, S.

"Siccan a gousty lump o' black pended stane-wark's no in a' Crail parish!" Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 113.

STANE-WOD, adj. Stark mad, Clydes.

Hence it has been remarked, that stane is used as an exaggerating term, or one giving additional force to that with which it is conjoined.

This would appear, indeed, not only from Stane-wod, but from Stane-dead, and even from Stane-blind.

VOL. IV.

To STANG, v. a. and n. To sting; to thrill with acute pain. My teeth's stangin, a phrase used with respect to the tooth-ache, S.

As quha vnwar tred on ane ouch serpent,
Ligand in the bus, and for fere backwart sprent,
Seand hir reddy to stang, and to infeik.

Doug. Virgil, 51, 48.

Sw. staang-a, to gore with horns, seems radically the same, as derived from sting-a, to prick. Isl. stanga is rendered not only impeto, but, pungo, transpungo, G. Andr., p. 223.

STANG, s. 1. A sting, the act of stinging, S.

2. The sting of a bee, serpent, &c., the instrument of stinging, S.

First athir serpent lappit like ane ring,
And with thare cruell bit, and stangis fell,
Of tendir membris take mony sory morsell.

Doug. Virgil, 45, 52.

3. An acute pain; as, a stang of the toothache, stound, synon.

The lady was leech, and had skill,
And spared not, but laid him till,
Both for the stang, and for the stound,
And also for his bloody wound.

Sir Egeir, p. 26.

4. The beard of grain, S.B. synon. Awn, q. v.

STANG, s. "A long pole or piece of wood, like the staff of a carriage," Gl. Sibb. S. A. Bor.

"Ye strake ower hard, Steenie,—I doubt ye founnered the child." 'Ne'er a bit,' said Steenie, laughing; he has bra broad shouthers, and I just took the measure o' them wi' the stang." Antiquary, ii. 293.

Isl. staung, Su.-G. staang, Alem. Dan. stang, Belg. stange, A.-S. staeng, steng, stung, Ital. stanga, C.B. ystang, id. These terms have been generally traced to Su.-G. sting-a, Moes-G. sting-an, pungere, ferire, as originally denoting a sharp-pointed pole (contus).

To RIDE THE STANG. The man who beats his wife, is sometimes set astride on a long pole, which is borne on the shoulders of others. In this manner he is carried about from place to place.

Grose mentions the same custom as remaining in Yorkshire; where the woman who beats her husband, is also punished in the same way. Prov. Gl. in vo.

It is also mentioned by Brand.

"There is a vulgar custom in the North, called riding the stang, when one in derision is made to ride on a pole, for his neighbour's wife's fault. This word Stang, says Ray, is still used in some colleges in the University of Cambridge, to stang scholars in Christmas time, being to cause them to ride on a colt-staff, or pole, for missing of chapel." Popular Antiq., p. 409, 410.

This, as Callander observes, "they call riding the stang," and "is a mark of the highest infamy.—The person," he subjoins, "who has been thus treated, seldom recovers his honour in the opinion of his neighbours. When they cannot lay hold of the culprit himself, they put some young fellow on the stang, or pole who proclaims that it is not on his own account that he is thus treated, but on that of another person whom he names." Anc. Scot. Poems, p. 154, 155.

In various counties, the man who had debauched his neighbour's wife, was formerly forced to ride the stang; but very frequently, another was substituted, who was said to ride the stang on such a person.

They frae a bairn a kaber raught,
Ane mounted wi' a bang,
Betwixt twa's shoulders, and sat straught
Upon't, and raide the stang
On her that day.

Ramsay's Poems, l. 278.

—On you I'll ride the stang.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 12.

Also a husband, who was notoriously under the dominion of his wife, was sometimes subjected to the same ignominious treatment.

Like hen-peck'd husband, riding the stang,
He by the mane, and tail, and knees hang,
Attended with a mighty noise
Of whores, and knaves, and fools, and boys.

Meston's Poems, p. 147.

Here we have evidently the remains of a very ancient custom. The Goths were wont to erect, what they called Nidstaeng, or the pole of infamy, with the most dire imprecations against the person who was thought to deserve this punishment; Isl. nidstong. He, who was subjected to this dishonour, was called Niding, to which the E. word infamous most nearly corresponds; for he could not make oath in any cause. The celebrated Icelandic bard, Egill Skallagrim, having performed this tremendous ceremony at the expense of Eric Bloddor, King of Norway, who, as he supposed, had highly injured him; Eric soon after became hated by all, and was obliged to fly from his dominions. V. Ol. Lex. Run. vo. Nid. The form of imprecation is quoted by Callander, ut sup.

To STANG, v. a. To subject a person for some misdemeanour to the punishment of the stang, by carrying him on a pole, S.B.

"This word is still used in some colleges in the university of Cambridge; to stang scholars, in Christmas-time, being to cause them to ride on a colt staff, or pole, for missing of chapel." Gl. Grose.

"School boys are stanged by the other scholars, for breaking, what they call, the rules or orders of the school." Brockett's Gl. North Country Words, p. 205.

STANG of the trump. A proverbial phrase, used to denote one who is preferred to others viewed collectively; as the best member of a family, the most judicious or agreeable person in a company, S. B. synonym tongue of the trump, S.

It is apparently borrowed from the small instrument called a trump or Jew's harp; of which the spring, that causes the sound, seem formerly to have been denominated the stang.

STANG, or STING, s. The shorter pipe-fish, syngnathus acus, Linn.

"Acus vulgaris Oppian, the Horn-fish or Needle-fish;" Sibb. Fife, p. 127. "Our fishers call it the Stang or Sting;" Note, ibid.

In Sw. it has a similar designation; Kantnaal, the border pin or needle.

STANGRIL, s. An instrument for pushing in the straw in thatching, synonym stobspade, Ang. also Sting, q. v.

STANGILLANE, s. The name of some saint anciently honoured in S. "Sanct Stangillane's day;" Aberd. Reg. V. 16.

There is no name that has any resemblance save Gillenus, mentioned as one of the companions of Columba, Camerar. De Scot. Fortit., p. 159. This might be correct from Sanct Gillan, like Tanton from Sanct Antony. Smith, however, writes the name Grellan, Life of Columba, p. 159.

STANIRAW, adj. A term used to denote the colour produced by dying with Rock-liverwort, in Ettr. For. called Stanieraw.

"He took the clothes and the shoes in one hand, the lamp in the other, and the staniraw stockings and red garters, in his hurry, he took in his teeth." Hogg's Wint. Tales, i. 316. V. STANE-RAW and STANE-BARK.

STANK, s. 1. A pool or pond, [a ditch], S.

Thay boundis, coistis, and the chief cieté,
Divers spyes send furth to serche and se,
And fand ane stank that flowit from an well,
Quhilk Numicus was hait.

Doug. Virgil, 210, 15.

Rudd. derives it from Lat. stagn-um, L. B. stagn-um. Su.-G. staang, Arm. stanc, Gael. stang, Fr. estang, Ital. stanga. A.-S. stanc, pluvination, seems allied.

It is used to denote a fish-pond.

"All thay that brekis—stankis, and takis or steilis furth of the samin—pykis, fische—salbe callit and punist thairfoir, as for thift at particular diettis." Acts Ja. V. 1535, c. 13, Edit. 1566.

Stagne is synonym in O.E.

They gatte eche daye, with nettes & other wile,
The fische in stagnes and waters sufficiencye.

Hardyng's Chron., Fol. 8, b.

2. The ditch of a fortified town,

Into this toune, the quhilk is callt Berwik,
Apon the se, it is na uther lyk,
For it is wallit weill about with stoune,
And dowbil stankis cassin mony on!

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 65.

[3. Stank of a byre, a ditch in rear of the cattle in which the excrement, &c., is caught and retained, Shetl.]

[To STANK, v. a. To drain by means of open ditches; as, to stank land, ibid.]

STANKED, part. pa. Surrounded with a ditch.

"Sir William Forbes of Craigievar at his own hand takes in the place of Kemnay, frae the widow lady thereof, plants some soldiers therein, being stanked about, and of good defence." Spald. ii. 295.

STANK-HEN, s. A species of water fowl that breeds about stanks or ponds, Ettr. For.; supposed to be the Common Water-Hen, Fulica Chloropus, Linn.

STANK-LOCHEN, s. A stagnant lake.

"Stank-lochen, dead lakes covered with grass;" Gall. Enc. V. LOCHAN.

To STANK, v. n. To have long intervals in respiration, to gasp for breath, to be threatened with suffocation, S.B.

Isl. Su.-G. stank-a, to pant for breath, to fetch the breath from the bottom of the breast, as persons in sickness use to do, Verel.; a frequentative from staen-a, sten-a, Germ. sten-en, suspirare; to breathe, to sigh.

In Ettr. For. it signifies to pant. A. Bor. "Stank, to sigh, to moan, to gasp for breath;" Gl. Brockett.

To STANK, v. n. To thrill with pain. V. under STANG, s. 2.

To STANK, v. a. To fill, to satisfy, to sate with food, Aberd.

Allied to Su.-G. staeng-a, claudere, q. to shut up the stomach by repletion; or a frequentative from stinn, also stind, distentus, inflatus. Mayer aër stinn, venter inflatus est; Ihre. Wara stind som en korf, to be as full crammed as a pudding; Wideg. Stinn of mat eller drick-a, sated with meat or drink; Seren.

[STANK, s. A surfeit, Banffs.]

STANNERS, STANNIRS, STANNYIS, s. pl. The small stones and gravel on the margin of a river or lake, or forming the sea-beach; applied also to those within the channel of a river, which are occasionally dry, S.B.

Even when the gravel is mingled with larger stones, the term is applied in common to both.

"I socht neir to the see syde. Than vndir ane hingand heuch, I herd mony huris of stannirs & stanis that tumlit doune vitht the land rusche, quhilke maid ane fellounne sound, throcht virkyng of the suelland vallis of the brym seyr." Compl. S., p. 61.

—The new collour alichting all the landis,
Forgae the stannyris schene and beriall standis.

Doug. Virgil, 400, 10.

"Dugar—hastily takes both the ferry-boats, and carries over his men to the stannirs whilk is in the midst of the water of Spey." Spalding's Troubles, i. 198.

"Interrogated, Whether, when they fish upon the south side of the Allochy Inch, they do not draw their nets in general upon the stannirs, and not on the grass-grounds? depones, That at low water the net comes ashore on the stannirs, and at high water on the grass." State, Leslie of Powis, &c., 1805, p. 94.

"The whole of the poles are fixed on stannirs, flooded over at the lowest tides." Ibid. p. 109.

Rudd. views it as perhaps q. standers, i.e., standing or lying within the current, or from stane, stone, q. a collection of stones. But the term is purely Su.-G. Stenoer, gravel; glarea, locus scrupulosus, Ihre; comp. of sten, a stone, and oer, gravel, literally gravel-stones. Ihre remarks, that oer was anciently written eir, which forms the last syllable of our word; and aur, which also denotes stones thrown into the water for making a ford. Teut. oerer, litus, ripa, seems to have a common origin. This nearly corresponds to Isl. eyre, as defined by G. Andr., p. 60. Ora campi vel ripae plana et sabulosa.

Basnage, in his History of the Jews, during the fourth century, says, that they were dismissed from the city of Constantinople, and that a place was given them "in the Stenor, that is, in the space that was left void betwixt the city and the sea." He adds, that here they remained in the year 1204, when the Crusaders went into the Holy Land; and quotes Harluin, as saying that they "lived in a place called Stanor;" l. vi. c. 14.

As it is evident that this is not a Gr. word, there seems to be little reason to doubt that it is Gothic. Not only is this the very term by which a Scandinavian, or any native of the N. of Scotland, would describe such a situation; but we learn from Ihre, that it is very ancient. We are not less certain, that the language of the Thracian Bosphorus, where this designation occurred, was Gothic; as that of Crim Tartary still is, according to Busbequius and other writers.

Norw. steinnr is used precisely in the same sense; being expl. in Dan. sand og stene sammen; i.e., "sand and stones together;" Hallager. Dan. oer, id.; Isl. urd, saxtum.

STANNER-BED, s. A bed of gravel, S.B.

[STANNER-STEPS, s. pl. Stepping-stones placed across the bed of a stream, Ayrs.]

STANNERY, STANERIE, adj. Gravelly, S.

The beriall stremis rinnand our stanagerie greis,
Maid sober noyis.

Palice of Honour, ii. 42. Elit. 1579.

"Depones, That at low water the said dike is dry: That it lies towards the river, and then turns up by the margin of it, and it lies upon a stannery and sandy bed." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805, p. 109.

"One meets with boggy, stannery, croft, and clay grounds, almost in every farm." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc., xv. 316.

STANNIN GRAITH. V. GÄIN GEAR.

[STAN'-O'-PIPES. The bagpipes. V. under STAND.]

STANNYEL, s. A stallion, Roxb.

Perhaps from A.-S. stan, testiculus, and gal, lascivus.

STANSSOUR, s. An iron bar for defending a window, S. stenchin; A. Bor. stansion.

Out off wyndowis stanssouris all thai drew,
Full gret irn wark in to the wattir threw.

Wallace, iv. 507, MS.

"They brake down beds, boards, cap ambries, glass windows, took out the iron stenchens," &c. Spalding's Troubles, i. 157.

Fr. estançon, a prop.

STANT, s. A task, a stint. V. STENT, s.

To STANT, v. n. To stand, to be situated.

The housis of famell, or the nobyl stede
Of thy kynrent stant vnder mont Ida.

Doug. Virgil, 430, 13.

Now grave I stant in Naplis the ciété.

Ibid. 486, 9.

Sometimes it is used for standeth, as in Chaucer:

It stant not with the as thou wall, perchance.

King's Quair, V. 16.

STAP, STEPPE, s. A stave, S.

I'll tak a stap out of your coag; S. Prov.; I will put you on shorter allowance.

"That the steppes of the said firlo, be of the auld proportion, in thickness of baith the buirdes, ane inche & ane halfe." Acts. Ja. VI. 1587, c. 114.

Su.-G. staaf, id.

A. Bor. "Stap, the stave of a tub;" Gl. Brocket.

To FA' A' STAPS. To become extremely debilitated, q. to fall to pieces, like a vessel made of staves, S.

To STAP, v. n. To step, to move slowly, S.

"But lat's now stap inby to the house, an' rest oursell's." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 174.

To STAP forward. To advance.

"So schortlie they concludit, and bad him stap forward to his awin richt, and not be stopp'd with no priest to reive him of his authoritie." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 413.

STAPPIN-STANE, s. A stepping-stone. To stand on stepping-stanes, to hesitate, especially on trifling grounds, S.

To STAP, v. a. 1. To stop, to obstruct, S.

2. To thrust, to insert, S.

3. To cram, to stuff, S.

Then I'll bang out my beggar dish,
And stap it fou o' meal.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 143.

— The meal kist was bienly stappit.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 10.

[4. To hash, to mix together, Shetl.]

Su.-G. stopp-a, obturare; metaph. farcire.

Isl. stapp-a, farcire; Dan. stopp-e; Belg. stopp-en, to stuff, to cram.

[STAP, s. A dish composed of the liver and soft parts of the head of a fish; in stap, in a crushed state, Shetl.]

STAPALIS, s. pl. Fastenings. [V. STAPPLE.]

Throw the stuf with the straik, stapalis and stanis, — He hewit attanis.

Gawan and Gol., iii. 26.

Teut. stapel-en, stabilire; allied, perhaps, to A.-S. stapul, stipes, a log set fast in the ground. Here it denotes the nails of the helmet. Stapalis and stanis, both the fastenings and the precious stones.

STAPPACK, s. Drammach, or meal mixed with cold water, Loth.

"About break of day, on the 11th, the wind rising, they hoisted sail; now, being short of food, made drammach (stappack) with salt water mixed with meal, of which the Prince eat heartily." Ascanius, p. 136.

STAPPIL, STAPLE, s. The stopper of any thing; as, the stappil of a mill, the stopper of a horn for holding snuff, S.

Sw. stopp, id. Belg. stoppel, E. stopple.

STAPPIN, s. The stuffing prepared for filling fish heads, Aberd.

Isl. stappa, cramming, stuffing, minutal; Sw. stopping.

STAPPIT HEADS. The same with Crappit Heads, ibid.

STAPPLE, STAPLE, STAPPLICK, s. [1. A stopper; a catch or fastening for a bar or bolt, Clydes.]

2. A small quantity of thatch, made up in a particular form, S. O.

"Stapples, thatch made in handfals, for thatching;" Gall. Enc. Teut. stapel, caulis, stipes; stapel-en, stabilire, firmare.

3. The shank or stalk of a tobacco-pipe, Roxb., Ettr. For.; Pipe stapple, synon.

[* STAR, s. A speck upon the eye; a cataract, Shetl. Sw. starr, Dan. starr, id.]

STARE, adj. Stiff, rough. [V. STARR.]

Bot at the last out oner the flude yit than Sauslie sche brocht bayth prophetes and man,

And furth thame set amyde the foule glare,
Among the fauth riasp harsh and stere.

Doug. Virgil, 178, 17.

Synon. with Su.-G. Germ. starr, rigidus, durus. The Carex in Su.-G. is denominated storr, Isl. staer, quum herba sit perquam rigida; Ihre. Starr korn, barley, either, says Ihre, because it abounds with awns, or as distinguished from softer grain, and especially from oats.

STARF, pret. v. Died. V. STERUE.

STARGAND, adj. Perhaps err. for sterand,

Q. V.

Gawyn was gaily grathed in grene,—
On a stargand stede that strikes on stray.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., li. 14.

STARGLINT, s. A shot star, Perth.

Jupiter complacent louts
From its sphere; the starglint shoots.
Donald and Flora, p. 188.

Q. the glance of a star. V. GLENT, v.

STARK, adj. [Strong], potent, intoxicating; as applied to liquors, S. "Stark, mychty wynis, & small wynis." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. [Comp. starkar, superl. starkest.]

Stark occurs in a singular connexion in the same record. "Calland hir commond stark thief, & sayand that scho smorit hir avin barne windir hir hipis, with diueras wthir evill wordis." Aberd. Reg., V. 15, A. 1535. This seems equivalent to arrant; as in the E. phrase, "an arrant rogue;" or to Dan. staerk, as signifying great.

[A.-S. stearc, Isl. sterkr, strong.]

Sw. stark is used in the same sense. Starkt vin, strong wine, wine of a good body. Starku drycker, strong liquors. The term in Dan. is also given as synon. with maegtig, mighty. Staerk eller maegtig, strong, &c., Wolff.

To STARK, v. a. To strengthen.

And Jhon Wallang was than schyreff off Fyff,
Till Wallace past, starkyt him in that stryff.

Wallace, xi. 892, MS.

Sw. staerk-a, Teut. starck-en, to strengthen, to confirm, to fortify.

2. A single grain, a particle.

No a starn meal, not a particle of meal, S. It is sometimes applied to liquids.

"Nocht twa mylis fra Edinburgh is ane fontane dedicat to Sanct Katrine, quhair sternis of oulie [oil] springis ithandleie with sic abundance, that howbeit the samyn be gaderit away, it springis incontinent with gret abundance." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 10.

This term is not now applied to liquids.

3. A small quantity of any thing, S.

A little starnie, a very small quantity, Gl. Shirr.

4. The outermost point of a needle, S.B.

It seems to be merely the term, denoting a star, used metaph., to signify any thing that is very small. Sterne is synon. A. Bor. "Have you a shilling in your pocket? Answ. Sham a sterna, i.e., not one." Lamb's Notes, Battle of Flodden, p. 70.

STARNIE, s. 1. A little star, S.2. A very small quantity of any thing; as, "a starnie o' meal," "a starnie o' saut," S. B. It is not used of liquids.STARN-LIGHT, STERN-LIGHT, s. 1. The light of the stars, S.

2. Metaph. used to denote the flash of light seen in darkness, when the eye receives a slight stroke, S.

Hence the phrase, "Put your finger in your ee, and ye'll see stern-light," an absurd answer given to one who complains that it is dark.

STARNY, STERNY, adj. Starry, S.

A starny nicht, a clear night, in which the stars are visible.

STARR, s. Carex caespitosa, Linn.

"Turfy-pink-leav'd Carex. Anglis. Starr. Scotia. Perhaps a corruption of stare, signifying rough or harsh." Lightfoot, p. 560.

But Lightfoot had not observed, that in Sw. starr is the generic name for Carex, and is found in composition in the names of all the different species; as Sif-starr, C. dioica, Lopp-starr, C. pulicaris, Myr-starr, C. uliginosa, Har-starr, C. leporina, Raef-starr, C. vulpina, Tuf-starr, C. caespitosa, &c. Flor. Suec. No. 833—855. Starr signifies a sedge. [V. under STARE.]

START, s. 1. An upright post morticed into the shafts of a cart, and into which the boards of the side are nailed, Lanarks.2. In pl., the pieces of wood which support the aws of a mill-wheel, Mearns.

Most probably allied to A.-S. staert, steort, stert, cauda; whence, according to Lye, A. Bor. start, "a long handle of any thing."

• START, s. A moment; as, "Ye maunna bide a start," You must be back immediately. In a start, in a moment, S.

This was Styrt in O. E. "Styrt or lytell while. Momentum." Prompt. Parv. Mr. Todd has remarked that the v. to Start, was anciently Stert. But Styrt was still more ancient. "Stirtyn. Salio. Stirtyn, sodeynly in [on] an enemy or make a breyde or a saute on a man. Insilio. Irruo.—Styrt or skyp. Saltus." Ibid.

• To STARTLE, v. n. 1. To run wildly about, as cows do in hot weather, S.; as,

"I saw the foolish auld brute, wi' her tail o' her riggin startling as fast as ony o' them."

It is to be remarked, that this sense of the word, which most probably is the primary one, either does not occur in the E. language, or is overlooked by lexicographers.

2. To be in a mighty bustle, S.

"It will be a hot [het] day that will make you startle," S. Prov.; spoken to settled, sober, grave people, who are not easily moved. Kelly, p. 214.

He expl. Startle, "Run as cattel does when sting'd by wasps." N., ibid.

Another Prov. is used, containing the same allusion; "An I were to startle as often as ye cry Bizz, my tail wou'd never be aff my riggin," Loth. This refers to the practice of mischievous boys, who often cry Bizz, as imitating the sound of the wasp or gadfly, that they may set the cattle a running.

STARTLE-O'-STOVIE, JOCK-AN-STARTLE-O'-STOVIE. The exhalations seen to rise from the ground, with an undulating motion, in a warm sunny day, Ettr. For.; synon. Aijer and Summer-couts.STARTY, adj. Apt to start, skittish; as, "a starty horse," S. B.STASHIE, STISHIE, s. 1. Uproar, commotion, disturbance, a quarrel, Aberd., Banffs.

[2. A frolic, a banter, Banffs., Perth.]

Perhaps it has originated from O. Fr. estase, an ecstasy of passion.

[To STASHIE, STISHIE, v. n. To engage in any kind of frolic or banter, ibid.; part. pr. stashiein, stishiein, used also as a s.]STASSEL, STATHEL, s. 1. The props or supporters used for stacks of grain, to keep them from touching the ground, that they may be out of the reach of vermin, are called stassels or stathels, S.B.2. The stathel of a stack, the corn which lies undermost, and supports the rest, S. B.; staddle, A. Bor.[3. A small stack or rick temporarily built, Banffs., Perth.; called a staidel.]

Stassal most nearly resembles Belg. stutnel, a support; stathel, A.-S. stathel, stathol, a foundation; Isl. studrell, basis, columna. V. STUT, v. and s.

[To STASSEL, STATHEL, v. a. To build small temporary stacks, ibid.][STAT, s. Position, estate, condition, Barbour, x. 264, vii. 128.]

STATE AND SESING. V. under STAIT.

STATERIT. Gawan and Gol, iii. 22.

The knight staterit with the straik, all stonayt in stound. Leg. stakerit, as in Edit. 1508. V. STACKER.

STA'-TREE, s. The stake, in a cow-house, to which an ox or cow is bound, i.e., the stall-tree, Mearns.

To STATUTE, v. a. To ordain. This v. unknown in E., is every where used in our legal deeds, S. Statute, part. pa., ordained.

"It is thocht that this article is warry necessar to be prouidit: and tharefor statutis and ordanis," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 363.

"It is statute and ordanit that euery erle, lord, baroune, lard, or vtheris cumand to the saidis wapin-schawingis, geif the names of the personis that sall cum with thame thareto in bill to the schireff," &c. Ibid.

[To STAUL, v. n. To squint, Banffs.]

[STAUL, s. A squint, ibid.]

[To STAUMER, STAWMER, v. n. 1. To stammer, stutter; blunder, Clydes.

2. To walk with a heavy, awkward, unsteady step, to stumble, ibid., Banffs.]

[STAUMER, STAWMER, s. V. STAMMER.]

[STAUMERIN, STAWMRIN, adj. Rude, noisy, blundering, awkward, ibid.]

STAUMREL, STAWMRAL, adj. Half-witted, [blundering.]

Nae langer thrifty citizens, an' douce,
Meet owre a pint, or in the council-house;
But staumrel, corky-headed, graceless gentry,
The herryment and ruin of the country.

Burns, iii. 58.

In Gl. it is also expl., as a s., "a blockhead;" according to Sibb., "one who is incapable of expressing his meaning," q. a stammerer. V. STUMMER.

[STAUN, v. and s. Stand, q. v.]

STAUP, STAWP, s. A stave, Ettr. For.

"Gin I had the heffing o' them, I sude tak a staup out o' their bickers." Perils of Man, i. 55. V. STAP, STEFFE.

To STAUP, STAWP, v. n. 1. To take long awkward steps, Roxb.

2. To walk as a person does in darkness, when uncertain where he is going to place his feet, Ettr. For.

"I staupit, and gavit about quhille I grew pe-sitlye donnarit." Wint. Ev. Tales, ii. 41.

"To Staup, to lift the feet high, and tread heavily in walking; North." Grose.

STAUP, s. 1. A long awkward step, Roxb.

2. A tall awkward person; as, "Haud aff me, ye muckle lang staup," ibid.

A.-S. Teut. stap, gradus, passus. Stap is the vulgar pronunciation of Step.

STAUPIN', part. pr. 1. Stalking awkwardly, ibid.

2. Awkwardly tall, ibid.

To STAVE, v. a. and n. 1. To push, [thrust], drive, [sprain], S.

"An it wadna be a gude turn tae dronk their lugs in a sowp o't, gif it war'na for misguiglin' the drap gude drink it the puir lads wad be blythe o', it ha'e been a' night stavin' at ane anither, and struailin' i' the dark." Saint Patrick, iii. 265.

[2. To walk in a rude, awkward manner, S.]

Perhaps from Teut. stave, baculus.

STAVE, s. A push, a dash, [a sprain], S.

"Our bit curragh's no that rackle sin it got a stave on the Partan-rock." Saint Patrick, i. 220.

To STAVEL, v. n. To stumble, S.

Su.-G. stapl-a, Germ. steppel-n, used precisely in the same sense with our term; titubare, cespitare. This Ithre views as a frequentative from A.-S. stap-an, [r. staepp-an] incedere.

A. Bor. "staveling, wandering about in an unsteady or uncertain manner; as in the dark—stumbling." Gl. Brockett. Grose writes it Stevelling.

To STAVER, v. n. [1. To totter, S.] V. STAIVE.

"As I didna like to come hame wi' my errant half dune, I staverel awa down by the muckle brig, to see gin I cudna catch a glimpse o' him as he passed on the tap o' the coach." St. Kathleen, iv. 142.

2. To saunter, [to walk listlessly], S.

STAVERALL, s. [A blundering], foolish person; Gall., Clydes.

To STAW, v. a. To surfeit, S.

Is there that o'er his French rayout,
Or olio that wad staw a sow, —
Looks down wi' sneering, scornfu' view,
On sic a dinner!

Burns, iii. 219.

Weel staw'd wi' them, he'll never spear
The price o' being fu'.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 52.

To stall one, to give one a surfeit, I'm stall'd, I am surfeited, Northumb. Lincoln. "Staud, cloyed, saturated;" Gl. Brockett.

Probably from Belg. sta-a-n, Su.-G. staa, to stand, metaph. used. We have an example of a similar use of the Belg. v. Het tegen me stant; I am disgusted at it, I have an aversion at it. In like manner it is said, S., My heart stands at it, i.e., It is disgusting to my stomach.

STAW, s. "A surfeit, disrelish;" Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 129, S.

STAW, pret. v. Stole, S.

He staw fra thaim as priuale as he may.

Wallace, vi. 296, MS. Doug. id.

"Notheless he sall mak restitution of the gudie, or of als mekill, to thame quhom fra he reft or staw the samin." Balfour's Pract., p. 546.

It seems merely corr. from stall, the old pret. of steal, stole; formed from the common mode of pronunciation in S., which converts ll into w.

STAW, s. Stall in a stable, S.

Gryt court hors puts me fra the staw,
To fang the fog be firthe and fald.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 112.

[To STAWMER, v. n. V. STAMMER, STAU-
MER.]

STAWN, s. A stall in a market, Dumfr.,
Clydes.

To furnish weapons for the fray,
Craems, tents, and stawns were swept away.
Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 75.

V. STAND, s.

STAY, STEY, adj. 1. Steep, difficult of ascent, S.

The dale wes strekyt weill, Ik hycht ;
On athyr sid thar wes ane hycht ;
And till the watre doune sum deill stay.
Barbour, xix. 319, MS.

Ane port thare is, quham the est fludis has
In manere of ane bow maid boule or bay,
With rochis set forgane the strems full stay.
Doug. Virgil, 86, 22.

"We say Scot., a stay brae, i.e., a high bank of difficult ascent," Rudd.

In cart or car thou never reestit :
The steyest brae thou wad hae fac't it.
Burns, iii. 144.

Teut. steygh, steegh, acclivus, leviter ascendens cum acumine, praeceps ; Moes.-G. staigs, A.-S. stige, stie, Dan. stie, Su.-G. stig, Teut. steyhe, stijghe, Germ. steg, semita, a footpath ; A.-S. stey, a bank,
Gl. Aelfric.

2. Lofty, haughty ; metaph. applied to demeanour.

Be ye humane, our humill thai will hald you.
Gif ye beir strange, thai yow este me ovr stay :
And trows it is ye, or els sum hes it tald you.
Maitland Poems, p. 158.

Teut. steegh is rendered pertinax, obstinatus. But it is probably abbreviated from stedigh, of which it is given by Kilian as the synonyme.

* To STAY, v. n. To lodge, to dwell, to reside, S.

"I was told that I must go down the street, and on the north side, over against such a place, turn down such a Wynde ; and, on the west side of the Wynde, enquire for such a Launde (or building) where the Gentleman stayd, at the thrid stair, that is, three stories high." Letters from a Gentleman in the North of S., i. 25.

STAY-BAND, s. 1. In a door formed of planks reaching in one piece from the top to the bottom, the planks stretching across to fasten the upright ones are called the stay-bands, S.

2. A narrow band of linen brought through the tie of an infant's cap, and fastened to its frock, to prevent the head from being thrown too far back, S.

STEAD, STEADING, STEDDYNG, s. 1. "Stead,
Scot., is commonly taken for the foundation or ground on which a house or such like stands ; or the tract or impression made in the earth, and appearing when they are taken away," Rudd. V. STEDE.

2. A farm house and offices, S.

"The farms were small, and the miserable steadings
(the old phrase for a farm-house and offices) denoted the poverty of the tenants." P. Alloa, Clackmann.
Statist. Acc., viii. 603, N.

"I am exilit fra my takkis and fra my steddyngis."
Compl. S., p. 191.

"And then what wad a' the country about do for want o' auld Edie Ochiltree, that brings news and country cracks frae ae farm-stead to another ?"
Antiquary, i. 263.

3. Improperly used for a farm itself.

I think na wyis nian will deny
But it wer better veraly
Ane steking for to labour weill,
And in dew sesoun it to teill, —
Than for to spill all ten atanis,
Quhilk he may not gyde by na meanis.

Diall. Clerk and Courtenar, p. 22.

Moes.-G. stads, staths, A.-S. sted, steile, locus, situs ; Folk-stede, populi statio, habitatio. Moes.-G. stad also denotes a mansion ; Su.-G. stad, id. also urbs.

4. To Mak Stead, to be of use, S. B. It seems equivalent to the E. phrase, to stand in stead.

STEADABLE, adj. Of any avail, q. standing in stead.

—"Except they had been assured that he who rose was God, the Sonne of God,—the knowledge of his resurrection had not been steadable to salvation."
Rollock on the Passion, p. 490.

"Neither was he steadable to the faithful that heard him by his vine voice onely in his life preaching, but also his workes yet teaches the posteritie." Ep. Dedie.
(H. Charteris) to Rollock on Thessal.

To STEAK, STEEK, v. a. To shut, to close.
V. STEIK, v., 2.

STEAK-RAID, STIKE-RAIDE, s. A collop of the foray ; or portion of the live stock taken in a predatory incursion, which was supposed to belong to any proprietor through whose lands the prey was driven, S.

"Macintosh, (A. 1454), then residing in the island of Moy, sent to ask a Stike Raide, or Stike Crieck, i.e., a Road Collup ; a custom among the Highlanders, that when a party drove any spoil of cattle through a Gentleman's land, they should give him part of the spoil."
Shaw's Moray, p. 219.

"This kind sister of mine would persuade you,— that I take what the people of old used to call a stak-raid, that is 'a collop of the foray,' or in plainer words, a portion of the robber's booty, paid by him to the laird, or chief, through whose grounds he drove his prey." Waverley, i. 256.

Staoig is given as Gael. for a steak. But the word has undoubtedly been borrowed from Su.-G. stek, Isl.
steik, id. ; from steik-ia, to roast. Perhaps raide signifies inroad, hostile expedition, q. the steak due on a raid. Crieck seems to be the same with Gael. crack, plunder ; thus Stike Crieck must signify, "a steak as a tithe of the plunder." This term I suspect is also originally Gothic. V. CREACH.

STEAL, s. 1. A theft, Aberd.

2. The thing stolen, ibid.

This is more fully expressed in A.-S. stal-thing, furtiva res, fortum. Su.-G. stoeld, Isl. stuhl-r, Dan.
stielen, a robbery, a theft.

STEAL-WADS or STEAL-BONNETS. A game played by two parties equal in number or in strength, who lay down as many hats or bonnets at one end of a field as have been deposited at the other. They, who can steal or reave most to their side till the whole are carried off, gain the game; Teviotdale.

This is the same with Wadds. V. WAD.

STEAL, s. "Steals, the shafts of a barrow, as if stays;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

The word is not, however, from stay, but the same with Belg. steel, a helve, a handle; Teut. stele, scapus, stipes, scapulus, manubrium; Kilian.

To STECH, STEGH, (gutt.), v. a. and n. 1. To fill, to cram, S.; as, to stegh the guts; A. Bor. stie, anc. stigh, id. Ray.

Fræ morn to e'en it's nought but toiling,
At baking, roasting, frying, boiling;
An' tho' the gentry first are stechin,
Yet ev'n the ha' folk fill their pechan
Wi' sauce, ragouts, and sicklike trashtrie.

Burns, iii. 4.

His father steght his fortune in his wame,
And left his heir nought but a gentle name.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 136.

Come see, ye hash, how sair I sweat
To stegh your guts, ye sot.

Watty and Madge, Herd's Coll., ii. 199.

It is sometimes used in a neut. sense, as signifying to gormandize, to gorge.

Allied to stick-en, farcire, saginare turundis; also, aggerare, cumulare; and to O. Teut. staek-en, stipare, to stuff, to cram, from staek, stipes.

2. To have on a great quantity of body-clothes; also, to confine one's self in a very warm room, S. B.

Germ. stick-en, suffocare, seems allied.

3. To stech in bed, to indulge sloth in bed, to please one's self with the heat, so as to be unwilling to rise, S. B.

To STECH, STEGH (gutt.), v. n. 1. To puff, to be out of wind, to blow hard, as when one goes up hill, Roxb.; Pech synonym.

2. "To groan when overcharged with food;" Gl. Surv. Ayr., p. 693.

Allied to Teut. stick-en, strangulare, suffocare? O. Teut. steygh-en signifies stagnare.

STECH, s. 1. A heap, or crowd; conveying the idea of many thronged in little room; as, a stech of bairns, a number of children crowded together, S. B.

2. A confused mass; as, a stech of claise, a great quantity of clothes, S. B.; stechrie, id.

3. It also frequently conveys the idea of heat, as naturally connected with that of a crowd, S. B.

STECHIE (gutt.), adj. 1. Stiff in the joints; including the idea of laziness, Fife.

Teut. steygh, pertinax, obstinatus.

2. One who does nothing but stegh or cram his belly, ibid.

To STED, STEDE, v. a. 1. To place, to situate; part. pa. stad; [also sted, beset.]

Succour Scotland and remede
That stad is in perplextà.

Wyntoun, vii. 10. 534.

2. To establish.

Thir brethir thre
Had stedede thame in thare cuntre,
And in-tyl quiete and pes
Ilkane in his regnand wes.

Wyntoun, iii. 3. 36.

Su.-G. stad-ga, id. Lat. stat-vere.

3. To furnish, to supply. "Everilk man to sted his own caraigis;" Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

To STEDDY, v. a. To make steady, to preserve from moving, S.

This v. was anciently used in E. "I stedye, I sattel or set faste a thing;" Palagr. B. iii. F. 373, a.

STEDDYNG, s. A farm house and offices. V. STEAD.

STEDE, STEID, s. 1. Place, as E. stead.

—"Then aucht the Clerk to title the court, makand mentioun of the day, yeir and steid, quhan and quhair the court is haldin." Balfour's Pract., p. 38.

Stead is used in this sense by Spenser.

[2. A stithy, an anvil, Accts. L. H. Treas., I. 250, Dickson.]

3. Fut stede, a footstep.

The pray half etin behynd thame lat thay ly,
With fute stedis vile and laithlie to se.

Doug. Virgil, 75, 53.

i.e., the place where the foot has been set. V. STEAD.

[To STEED, v. a. To found, to lay a foundation, Shetl. V. STED.]

[To STEEDGE, v. n. To walk with a slow and heavy step, Banffs.]

[STEEDGE, s. 1. The act of walking so, ibid.

2. A person of great size, and of dull heavy disposition, ibid.]

[STEEDYIN, adj. Having a habit of walking with long, heavy steps, ibid.]

To STEEK, v. n. To push, to butt, as a cow with its horns, Teviotd.; synonym. Punce.

Teut. stek-en, pungere, lancinare.

STEEK, s. A stitch. V. STEIK.

To STEEK, v. a. To shut. V. STEIK.

STEEL, s. 1. A wooded cleugh or precipice; but applied to one of greater extent than Slain, Roxb.

2. The lower part of a ridge projecting from a hill, where the ground declines on each side, Liddesdale. It is generally understood as including the idea of the remains of old shealings.

Isl. stejl-ur, Dan. steile, via prærupta; Isl. stal also signifies præruptum quill, and stalberg, præcipitium rupis. Teut. steyle placetæ, præcipitium. But as this word is radically the same with STELL, adj., I shall subjoin some other kindred words under that term.

STEEL, s. The handle of any thing; as, of a hand-barrow, &c., Roxb. Stele, E. V. STEAL.

STEEL, FINGER-STEEL, s. A covering for a cut or sore finger, Roxb., Ang. V. THUM-STEIL.

STEEL, s. Stool, Aberd. To won the steel, to be entitled to the stool of repentance, ibid.

—No to parsons be a tell-tale,
Upon chaps that's won the steel.

Tarras's Poems, p. 58.

STEELBOW GOODS. Those goods on a farm, which may not be carried off by a removing tenant, as being the property of the landlord, S.

"Till towards the beginning of this century, landlords, the better to enable their tenants to cultivate and sow their farms, frequently delivered to them, at their entry, corns, straw, cattle, or instruments of tillage, which got the name of steelbow goods, under condition that the like, in quantity and quality, should be redelivered by the tenants, at the expiration of the lease." Erskine's Instit. B. ii. T. 6. s. 12.

"The stocking in Sanday, belonging to the proprietor, is called steelbow." P. Cross, Orkney, Statist. Acc., vii. 472.

This custom is referred to by Schilter, Gloss., vo. Stal, chalybs. Stahline briefs, he says, are denominated from the matter which they respect, such as stahline riehe, or otherwise Eisern rich, [literally steel or iron cattle, S. fe or fee.] Such a brief, he adds, "is a convention or bargain, by which he who receives a thing from another is bound to restore it, although it has perished by violent means." He cites a variety of writers on jurisprudence; but, in his usual manner, is indefinite and obscure.

Wachter is more distinct, and throws considerable light on the subject, by what he advances on the Germ. term Eisern, ferreus. From him we learn that this word, in a forensic sense, means inviolable. An eisern brief, he says, signifies "letters of prorogation, which give security to a debtor, that he shall not be incarcerated for five years, or be compelled to payment by his creditors. Eisern rich,—animals substituted in place of those that have died, if a tenant changes his place of residence. The reason of the phraseology is, that the animals belonging to farms are viewed as immortal, and die to the tenant, not to the proprietor who placed them there.—All from the nature of iron, which, while by its hardness it resists the touch and corruption, is a symbol of things inviolable and immortal. Hence the same figure was used by the Latins, Ferreæ jura, i.e., perpetual and inviolable rights; Virgil, Georg. ii. 501." Thus the metaphorical phrase would literally signify, "unperishable goods."

One mode of contract, to be found in the Code Napoleon, seems to resemble the Steelbow. "What is called the Cheptel de Fer, or Cheptel of Iron, is that by which the proprietor of a farm lets it on condition that, at the expiration of the lease, the farmer shall leave cattle of an equal value to those which he has received." Pinkerton's Recollections of Paris, ii. 222-3.

The Fr. term cheptel is from L.B. capitule, denoting a stock of cattle; for the word cattle is traced to this. V. Du Cange. This seems to be an ancient custom, perhaps introduced into France by the Normans. The term fer might seem a translation of the first syllable in steel-bow. I mention this fact, as it may be a clue to some other writer, more conversant with law, for discovering, by analogy, the origin of the designation. No light can be borrowed from Du Cange.

From the termination, it is most probable that the word has been imported from Denmark, through the Shetland or Orkney islands; for we find a word of similar formation, though different in signification, still used in Denmark. This is sterboe (Wolff), or rather sterboe, as given by Buley; rendered by the former "the estate after a dead man;" by the latter, haereditas, bona relicta. It is evidently from sterr-e, to die, and boe, the same with Su.-G. bo, supellex, Isl. bu, res familiaris, pecora, &c. Thus stael-bu, may be viewed as strictly analogous to Germ. stahline rich.

The same law had extended to Denmark, and even to Iceland. For Haldorsen renders Isl. kugillti, pecudes ferreæ, and also by Dan. iernfae, i.e., iron cattle.

This term, which appears to be very ancient, may be deduced from Teut. stell-en, Su.-G. staell-a, to place, and Teut. houe, a field, q. goods placed on a farm, or attached to it; or A.-S. stael, Su.-G. stael, locus, and bo, supellex; q. the stocking of a place or farm. Bo is used in a very extensive sense, as denoting a farm; furniture of any kind; also, cattle; from bo, bo-a, to prepare, to provide. This word, as still used in Orkney, is most probably of Scandinavian origin. It may be merely an inversion of Sw. bo-ställe, a residence, domicilium.

STEELRIFE, adj. [Overbearing.]

"If I likit to take counsel of that which exists only in my own mind, is the rackle hand o' steelrife power to make a handle o' that to grind the very hearts of the just and the good?" Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 211.

D. Anderson's Poems, p. 123.

STEEP-GRASS, s. Butterwort, S.

"Pinguicula vulgaris. Mœn. Gaulis. Steep-grass, Earning-grass. Scotis austral. The Lowlanders believe that the leaves of this plant eaten by cows induce a ropiness in the milk. Probably there may be some foundation for this opinion, considering the known effects of this plant when put into warm milk." Lightfoot, p. 1131.

"The inhabitants of Lapland, and the North of Sweden, give to milk the consistence of cream, by pouring it, warm from the cow, upon the leaves of this plant, and then instantly straining it, and laying it aside for two or three days, till it acquires a degree of acidity. This milk they are extremely fond of." Ibid., p. 76, 77. V. SHEEP-ROT.

STEEPIL, s. The staple or bolt of a hinge; Ettr. For.

* [STEEPLE, s. A pile; as, a steeple o' fish, a pile of partially dried fish, Shetl.]

To STEER, STEIR, v. a. 1. To touch, to meddle with, so as to injure; as, I winna steer you, I will not meddle with, or injure you in any way, S.

"Angus Macdonald, returning out of Ireland did not stir the pledges [hostages], who were innocent of what was done to his lands in his absence." Conflicts of the Clans, p. 35.

This, it appears, was the O. E. pronunciation. "I steere, I remoue a thyng.—No man steere nothyng here tyll I come agayne." Palagr. B. iii., F. 373, b.

2. To give ground a slight ploughing, S.

"The in-field land is generally all stirred after harvest, and the dunged third part is again ploughed in spring, and sown with bear about the beginning of May." P. Alford, Aberd. Statist. Acc., xv. 452.

But yet I ken my master dear
Will miss me warst ava!
The tornip land it's a' to steer,
An' monnie he's to saw.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 61, 62.

3. To give ground a middle furrow; to plough a second time, when it is to be ploughed thrice, S.

A.-S. styr-ian, to stir, to move. V. STERE, v.

[4. To stir; as in cooking food; steer the parritch, S.

5. To guide, govern, keep in order. V. STERE.

Scho hard him, and scho hard him not,
Bot stoutly steirid the stottis about.

Wife of Auchtermuchty, st. 13.]

6. To steir up, to excite, to stimulate.

—"To give ordour to the seuerall ministeris with in the presbittries to steir up the peopill of thair particular paroches—to extend thair liberalitie thairto. Acta Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 579.

STEER, s. Disturbance, commotion, S. Stir, E.

—That may help perhaps to quench the ire,
That glows 'mang the Sevitanis, like a fire:
For up they'll be upon a wond'rous steer;
And guded's the hap we hae your honour here.

Ross's Helenore, p. 110.

V. STERE.

STEER-PIN, s. A pin in the stilt of the old Orkney plough.

STEER-TREE, s. The stilt or handle of a plough into which the beam is inserted. It steers or regulates the plough in its motion, Lanarks.

[STEERACH, s. 1. A quantity of ill-cooked food, Banffs.

2. State of disorder; also, disorderly work, manner, or conduct; a disorderly company, ibid.]

[To STEERACH, v. a. and n. To act, work, or walk in a dirty, disorderly manner, ibid.]

[STEERACHIN, part. pr. Used also as a s., and as an adj. V. STEERACH.]

STEERIE, STEERY, s. 1. Disturbance, bustle, tumult; a diminutive from Steer, South of S.; steerie-fyke, Fife, Perth.

But when the bedding came at e'en,
Wow, but the house was in a steery,
The bride was frighted sair for fear,
That I wad take awa' her deary.

Herd's Coll., ii. 217.

"Indeed, brother, amang a' the steery, Mary wadna be guided by me—she set away to the Halket-craig-head—I wonder ye didna see her." Antiquary, i. 188.

"Steery, quandary;" Gl. Antiq.

2. A tumultuous assembly, Roxb.

3. A mixture, ibid. V. STEER, and STERE.

STEERING-FUR, s. A slight ploughing, S.

"In the spring give a steering-fur as it is called; then the seed-fur; then sow barley or bear, with grass-seeds." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 83.

So called from its effect in exciting the principle of vegetation.

[STEET, s. A shoar for a boat, Mearns.]

STEETH, s. The bottom, the foundation, Orkn. [V. STEDE, STEED.]

Isl. stytta, fulcrum, peilamen, Su.-G. stod, id. It seems nearly allied to STYTNE, q. v.

[STEETHE-STANE, s. A stone attached to the bnoy-rope to serve as an anchor to the haaf-lines, Shetl.]

STEEVE, STIEVE, STIVE, adj. 1. Firm, stiff, strong; as, A steeve grup, a firm hold. Had stieve, hold firmly, S.

2. Applied to trade; a steeve bargain, S.

3. Firm, compacted; as applied to the frame of an animal; also, stout, strong, S.

Sax souple hemies, stive an' stark,
Frae ilk side forat stendit.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 15.

Thou ance was i' the foremost rank,
A filly buirilly, steeve, an' swank,
An' set weel down a shapely shank.

Burns, iii. 141.

4. Steady, strict in adherence to principle; applied to the mind, S. "He's a steeve ane that."

5. Trusty; as, a steeve friend, S.

It seems to be in this sense of trusty, that stieve occurs in an imitation of Horace, in the translation of Lat. acer.

A fery etter-cap, a fractious chiel;
As hot as ginger, and as stieve as steel.

Robertson of Struan's Poems.

6. Sometimes used for obstinate.

A steeve carle, an inflexible man, S.

Germ. stif, firm, stable; A.-S. stife, inflexible. Dan. stiv, stiff, hard, not flexible; stiv-e, Teut. stiv-en, firmare.

To STEEVE, STEIVE, v. a. To stuff or cram; [to pack firm and full, S.]

It is used in the proverbial phrase, "Steeving hads out storming;" addressed to those who are about to expose themselves to bad weather, as an excitement to them to eat and drink freely.

"I am even like a sojourner with his knapsack on his back. It may be I come to a good house long syne, and I sticord the knapsack well: now I am going through a long muir where there is nothing to be gotten, and I tak down the knapsack, and I tak a 20 years old experience,—and I will sit down and take a meal of meat of it." M. Bruce's Soul Confirmation, p. 20.

STEEVELIE, STIEVELIE, adv. Firmly, S.

—Till life's short blink be dune,
Still stievelie may ye fill your shoon.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 103.

STEG, s. A gander, the male goose, Gall.

Ye come, led by your chosen king,
Some champion steg wha heads your string.

Gall. Enc., p. 440.

It has been observed, vo. Staig, that Isl. stegge signifies the male of birds, as of grese and ducks. Voluminum mas, utpote anatum et anserum; G. Andr. Hallorson extends the use of the term to quadrupeds. Vulpes mas; item mas plurium ferarum. I observe no vestige of this term in A.-S. or in any other dialect.

To STEG, v. n. To stalk, Gall.

It is expl. by Mactaggart, "to walk like a Steg."

"When this laird [Cool] left the world, his ghaist was seen by many stegging about the estate like a thing in trouble, to the terror of the people about." Gall. Enc., p. 111.

[STEGGIE, s. A sharp pain in the back; a sprain, Shetl.]

To STEGH, v. a. To cram. V. STECH, v.

STEID, s. A place. V. STEDE.

To STEID, v. a. To provide, to supply.

"Nor steidis thame self," used as to "bying of mair malt," &c. Aberd. Reg., V. 16.

This is nearly the same with the first sense of the E. v. to Stead, "to help, to advantage," &c. The v. has been derived from the s., as denoting place. But sted-en is an O. Teut. v. signifying, stabilire, confirmare, constituere.

STEIDDIS, s. pl. States, applied to those in the Netherlands.

Swadrik, Denmark, and Norraway,
Nor in the Steiddis I dar nocht ga.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 176.

Teut. stad, stede, urbs; hence stad-houder, stede-houder, prorex, legatus.

STEIDHALDER, s. "Steidhalderis to the justeis generalis of our souerane lord;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

Perhaps persons who acted as deputies for the Justices General; from sted, place, and halld, to hold. Teut. stad-houder, legatus vicarius; vice et loco alterius substitutus.

To STEIGH (gutt.), v. n. To groan or pant from violent exertion, Roxb. V. STECH.

STEIGH, s. A stifled groan, as if from one in distress, or bearing a heavier load than he can well carry, Roxb.; synon. Peigh, S. Pegh.

To STEIGH (gutt.), v. n. To look big, Roxb.

Ye sour moud' fo'k, pang'd fu' o' prose,
--Nae doubt ye'll steigh and cock your nose,
An say an' think,
That now ilk fool maun spew a dose
O' random clink.

Raickbie's Way-side Cottager, p. 182.

Teut. steggh-en, elevare, in altum tollere.

To STEIK, STEKE, v. a. 1. To pierce with a sharp-pointed instrument, to stab; E. stick.

The kingis men sa worthy war,
That with speris, that sharply sechar,
Thai steykt men, and stedlis bath,
Till rede blade ran off woundis raith.

Barbour, viii. 321, MS.

2. To stitch, to sew with a needle, S.

His riche array did ouer his schulleris hyng,
Bet on ane purpore clath of Tyre glitteryng,
Fetously steykt with puryt goldin thredis.

Doug. Virgil, 103, 51.

V. BEGAIRIES.

Moes.-G. stigg-an, A.-S. stic-an, stic-im, Teut. stick-en, Germ. stech-en, Su.-G. stick-a, pungere.

3. To fix, to fasten.

Forgane thaim eik at the entre in by,
The goldin branche he steykt vp tare and wele.

Doug. Virgil, 137, 13.

Figere, Virg.

The proper signification undoubtedly is, to fix on, or by means of, a sharp instrument. Thus it occurs as a v. n.

—Ful dolorously thay se
The twa hedis steykand on the speris.

Ibid., 293, 29.

Thus A.-S. stic-ian on, signifies, inhaerere; Germ. stech-en, Teut. stick-en, figere.

4. To shut, to close, S. A. Bor.

Ane hundreth entres had it large and wyde,
Ane hundreth durris thareon steykt cloce.

Doug. Virgil, 164, 4.

"Tavernes sould be steykt at nine houres, and na person suld be found therein." Skene's Acts, Index, vo. Tavernes.

It is also used as a v. n.

"When ae door steyks anither opens;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 76. [v. s. 6.]

"We say, Scot. to steyk the door; He steyked his eyne; A steyked neive;" Rudd.

It is also written steak.

"Wo be vnto you Scribes and Pharisees hipocrites, for ye steak the kingdome of heaven before men." Reasoning betuix Crosraguell and J. Knox, A. iii. b.

This word occurs in a very emphatical proverb, "Steik the stable dore when the steid's stown," S.

This, which is incorrectly printed in the Scottish Proverbs, is thus explained: "Spoken when people shew that care and concern after the loss of a thing, which had been better laid out before." Kelly, p. 286.

Rudd. refers to Teut. stick-en, figere. Sibb., more properly, mentions stek-en, [steck-en], claudere ligneis clavis; Kilian. This is evidently from steck, synon. with stetel, a bolt; q. to shut by means of a wooden bar.

5. To stop, to choke up; as referring to the course of a stream.

And Bannok burn, betuix the brays,
Off men, off horsse, swa steykt wais,
That, apou drownyt horsse, and men,
Men mycht pass dry out our it then.

Barbour, xiii. 333, MS.

Stoked is used by Chaucer for confined. This seems to correspond to Belg. ge-stoken. Gower uses stoke.

For if thou woldest take kepe,
And wysely coutheest ward and kepe
Thyne eye and eare, as I haue spoke,
Than haddest thou the gates stoke
Fro such foly.

Conf. Am., Fol. 10, b.

Stoken, part. and stak, pret. occur in Ywaine.

Als he was stoken in that stall,
He hard byhind him, in a wall,
A dor opend fair and wele.
And tharout come a damysel,
After hir the dor sho stak.

Ver. 695, 697.

Ritson's E. M. R., i. 30.

Gower also uses vstoken in the sense of opened. Speaking of the avaricious person, he says ;

Thus whan he hath his cofer loken,
It shall not after ben vstoken,
But whan hym lyst to haue a syght
Of golde, howe that it shyneth bright.

Conf. Am., Fol. 83, b.

6. Used in a neuter form ; as, "a' thing that opens and steeks," i.e., every thing without exception, S.

Thus it is said to a person who is viewed as possessing much knowledge ; "Aye, ye'll can tell me ; ye ken a' that opens and steeks."

7. To steik the gab, to shut the mouth, to be silent, S. ; a low phrase.

But yaltie billies, steek your gab,
An' fore we fidge let's hae the scab.

Tarraz's Poems, p. 21.

- STEIK, STEEK, STYK, s. 1. A stitch, or the act of stitching with a needle, S.

Then up and gat her seven sistern,
And sewed to her a kell ;
And every steek that they pat in,
Sew'd to a silver bell.

Gay Goss Huxck, Minstrelsy Border, ii. 12.

—Still making tight, wi' tither steek,
The tither hole, the tither eik,
To bang the birr o' winter's anger,
And had the hurdles out o' langer.

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 89.

"For want of a steek, the shoe may be tint ;"
Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 26.

—The best that sewes her ain styk,

Takes bot four penys in a wik.

Ywaine, v. 3053.

Ritson's E. M. R., i. 123.

2. The threads in sewed or netted work ; improperly used.

He draws a bonie silken purse,
As lang's my tail, whare, thro' the steeks,
The yellow letter'd Geordie keeks.

Burns, iii. 4.

3. A small portion of work, S.

Sa did our Lord the reprobate ay mark,
As members of sedition and stryf,
That maisters of ane evil steik of wark
Sould ay detest the godlie upright lyf.

N. Burne, Chron. S. P., iii. 452.

4. To the steeks, completely, entirely.

He brags he'll tak baith hill an' bowe,
An' to the steeks us plunder.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 10.

STEIK-AND-HIDE, s. The play of Hide-and-seek, in which one or more shut their eyes, while the rest hide themselves, Aberd.

[STEIKERS, s. pl. Shoe-ties, Gall.]

STEIKING-SILK, s. Sewing silk.

"2 lb wgt of fyne steiking-silk, £12 : 16 : 0." Chalmer's Mary, i. 285, N.

Belg. stikk-en, to stitch, Su.-G. stikk-a, to sew.

STEIKIT, part. pa. 1. Stitched.

"Item, twa doublettis of canves of silk, steikit, geitit, and buttouit with the self." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 92.

[2. Shut, closed, barred, Clydes.]

To STEIK, v. a. To accommodate ; used for Staik. "Bying of hydis, &c., mair nor steikis thame selfis ;" Aberd. Reg.

STEIK, s. 1. A piece of any thing, as of cloth.

"That in euerie burgh, thair be ane qualifeit man chosin, to seill all claith, and sall haue for his laubouris of ilk steik seilling xii. d." Acts Ja. V., 1540, c. 93, Ed. 1566.

This seems the origin of what is now called stamping cloth.

[2. A fragment, small piece, bit ; "She has na left a steik o' the claith," Clydes.]

A.-S. sticce, stycce, a part or piece. This might be traced to Su.-G. staek-a, deurtare.

STEIKIS, s. pl. Small Anglo-Saxon coins.

Sum gat thair handfull of thir half merk steikis
Will haue na mair within ane yeir nor we.

Poems Sixteenth Century, p. 294.

This word has been handed down from the Anglo-Saxons. It is undoubtedly an improper application of styc, stuca, stycra, which denoted a small brass coin, in value about half a farthing. This is derived from stirke, a fraction, a small part, as being their lowest denomination of money. Su.-G. stycke, pars, frustum ; also moneta minuta ; rundstycke, a penny. V. STICK-AMSTAM.

STEIL, s. "Handle. Steils of a barrow, or plough, the handles. Teut. steel, caudex, scapus ;" Gl. Sibb.

STEILBONET, s. A kind of helmet.

"That all vthers our souerane lordis liegis, gentilmen vnlandit and yemen, haue jakis of plate, halkrikis, splentis, sellale, or steilbonet, with pesane or gorget." Acts Ja. V., 1540, c. 57, Edit. 1566.

"This deponent abode half an hour or thereby, locked his allane, having his secret, plate-sleeves, sword, and whinger with him, and wanting his steilbonnet." Cromarty's Gowrie's Conspiracy, p. 49.

Isl. stalhufa has the same signification ; from stal, steel, and hufa, hat. The ancient Goths and Swedes also called this piece of armour iarnhatt, i.e., an iron hat ; in like manner, katilhatt, q. kettle-hat, when made of brass. Priscus Gothis et Sueconibus Galea Iarnhatt vel Katilhatt, dicebatur, quod esset ea ferro aut aere, capiti tuendo aptata. Loccenij Antiq. Sueo-G. Lib. iii. c. 2. p. 119. Our term seems to be a translation of Fr. chapelle de fer, which, Father Daniel says, was "a light helmet, without visor or gorget, like those since called bacinets." Grose's Milit. Antiq., ii. 241, 242.

STEILD, part. pa. Set, Wallace, vii. 868.

V. STELL.

STEILL MIRROUR. A looking-glass made of steel.

"Item, ane steill mirroure set in silver within ane grays caise of velvott." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 63.

This shows that metallic mirrors were used in Scotland so late as the reign of James V. Indeed, A. 1578, mention is made of "ane fair steill glass," as part of the royal furniture, also of "ane uther les [less or smaller], schawing moun faces in the visie." Ibid. p. 237.

The latter must undoubtedly have been a multiplying mirror.

STEIN, s. A stone, S.B. V. STANE.

STEIN-BITER, s. A fish, Orkney; perhaps the lump, Cyclopterus Lumpus, Linn.

"Two of the best kinds of fish we have are the tusk and the stein-biter, but these are seldom caught." P. Birsay, Orkn. Statist. Acc., xiv. 314.

The Swedish name of the lump is Stenbit. It seems to be so named because it adheres very strongly to the rocks; q. biting the stones. The Wolf fish, Anarchicas Lupus, Linn. is called the Steen-bider, Pontoppidan's Norway.

STEING, s. A pole. V. STING.

STEINRAW, s. Rock Liverwort. V. STANERAW.

STEIR, adj. Stout, strong.

And efter that, within a twentie yeir,
His scone gat up ane stewart man, and steir.
Priests of Pebbis, S. P. Repr., iii. 10.

Su.-G. starr, rigidus; Isl. staer-a, sese obfirmare.

To STEIR, v. a. [1. To steer, guide], govern; also, v. n. to stir. V. STERE.

2. To steer one's tail, to bestir one's self, or, at any rate, to make advances towards exertion.

"He was assured, that the Quene had danced excessively till after midnycht, becaus that scho had received letters, that persecutioun was begun agane in France, and that her uncles were beginning to steir their tailis, and to trouble the hole realme of France." Knox's Hist., p. 308.

An expressive metaphor; as the design of the tiger, cat, &c., before springing on its prey, is indicated by the wagging of its tail.

3. To steer the tyme, to lay hold on the opportunity, q. to lose no time in fulfilling what one has in view.

"Inglistemen, — sieing this divisoun among the nobilitie of Scotland, they steired thair tyme." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 431.

Perhaps from Steer, Steir, to stir: But one sense of A.-S. stir-an, is corripere; q., "snatched" or "laid hold of the proper season."

[STEIR, s. Stir, commotion, &c.; on steir, astir, Barbour, vii. 344. V. STEER.]

STEIT, pret. v. Sir Tristrem, p. 172. V. STOIT.

[To STEKE, v. a. and n. To shut, &c. V. STEIK.]

[STEKAND, part. pr. Stabbing, part. pa. stekit, stabbed, Barbour, xiii. 70, x. 684.]

STEKILL, s. 1. A latch for fasteuing a door.

Allace, quod scho, quhat sall I do?
And oure doure hes na stekill.

Pebbis to the Play, st. 22.

2. Vulgarly used for the trigger of a musket, S.

"If the shot went off, the presumption is, that the off-going of the shot might have been occasioned by the stickle [trigger] its being ruffled or touched by the pannel's shoulder, or some part of his cloaths; and so the shot not necessarily ascribable to the pannel's alledged designedly firing at the defunct." MacLaurin's Crim. Cases, p. 27.

A.-S. sticcel, Teut. steket, Belg. steckel, aculeus, stimulus, from stek-en, Su.-G. sticka, pungere; also, figere.

To STELL, STEIL, STILE, v. a. 1. To place, to set; to plant, to mount.

Off hewyn temyr in haist he gert thaim tak
Sylls off ayk, and a stark barres mak,
At a foyr frount, fast in the forest syll,
A full gret strenth, quhar thair purpost to bid.
Stellyt thaim fast till treis that growand was.

Wallace, ix. 831, MS.

The Lord Cambel syne hynt it by the bar,
Heich in Cragmor he maid it for to stand,
Steild on a stayne for honour off Irland.

Ibid. vii. 868, MS.

This, in editions, is changed to still.

To stile or stell cannons, to plant them.

"The earl Marischal at Stonehaven had stiled his cartows and ordnance just in their faces."—"They stiled cannons on ilk one of their mounts for pursuit of the castell." Spalding's Troubles, i. 172. 215.

They stell'd their cannons on the height,
And show'r'd their shot down in the how.

Minstrelsy Border, iii. 222.

"The batterie was laid to the castle, and [it was] blaidit partlie—with the cannones that war stelled vpon the steiple headis." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 490.

2. To set, to point, to fix; as, To stell a gun, to point it, to take aim; His een war stell'd in his heud, his eyes were fixed, he did not move them; Loth.

3. To fix, to make firm or stable. "Stell your feet, fix your feet so as not to fall" (Gall. Enc.), or rather not to be in danger of falling.

4. To put; used in a forensic sense.

Stelling to the horne, putting to the horn, declaring one a rebel.

"The maist part of all billis, warrants, and chargis, hes ben deliverit and directit to officiaris of arms quha hes execut thame, quhilk hes not only bein very hurtfull and prejudicial to all his Majesty's leigis, in drawing in question diverse and sundrie of the chargis and executions maid be the said officiaris of arms, and by stelling of sundrie persons to the horne maist privele and wrangulie; bot also, and to our particular interest." Act Sederunt, 9th Nov. 1596.

Belg. stell-en, Su.-G. staell-a, to place, to put.

STELL, STILL, STOLL, s. 1. "A prop, a support. The stell o' the stack, the stick which props the stack;" Gall. Encycl.

Teut. stell-en, suggerere, suppeditare.

2. Stells, the indentations made in ice for keeping the feet steady in curling, Dumfr.; synon. Hacks.

3. A covert, a shelter; a small enclosure for sheep or cattle, S.

"The stock land has been much improved of late, by draining the wet and marshy grounds; by planting clumps of firs, for stells to shelter the flocks in storms; and by inclosing some part of the lands contiguous to the farm houses, for hay to the sheep in severe winters and springs." P. Oxnam, Roxburghs. Statist. Acc., xi. 326.

—Truth maun own that monie a tod,—
In fauld or stell nae lambie worried,
Then aff, leg-bail, directlie hurried.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 90.

This enclosure is meant for sheep, especially during the nights of winter, generally of a circular form, smaller in size, but with higher walls than a fold, S. A. They now begin to cover them for greater warmth.

Sometimes the composite word shelter-stell, is used; denoting either an enclosure of stone, or a small planting. A sorting-stell is one into which sheep are driven for being separated from each other. It is generally constructed so as to contain some interior divisions. Sicamb. stelle, locus tutus, Kilian.

4. A deep pool, in a river, where salmon lie, and nets for catching them are placed. Ald stell, a place appropriated of old for salmon-fishing.

"Anent the fishing of the ald stell in the water of Tweide, clamyt be the abbot & conuent of Dunfermelyne, the lordis ordanis that knaulage be takin be ane inquisicioune of the best & worthiest, thit best knawis whether the said abbot & conuent suld, be resoune of thair ald charteris & infestimentis, haue the hale fishing of the ald stell, or bot a [i.e., one] dracht in the water callit the ald stell." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1478, p. 24.

"Lethem standing infest in a part of the barony and abbacy of Kinloss with five stell salmon fishings in the river of Findhorn;—the said Sir James has much damaged and impaired his fishings, by building a new town near to the said stells, which are deep ponds, pools, and ditches in the river, where the salmon haunting are taken in nets spread beneath them." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 680. V. STELL-NET.

STELL-NET, STILL-NET, s. A net stretched out by stakes into, and sometimes quite across, the channel of a river, S. This net is much used in Solway Frith. The fishes are caught in it by the neck.

"A still net has been tried on the lake with some success, but not enough to defray the expence of attendance." P. Strachur, Argyles. Statist. Acc., iv. 557.

This is called stell-fishing.

"There is belonging to the public good of Dingwall, a stell salmon fishery on Conan, or a fishery on that part of the river into which the sea flows." P. Dingwall, Ross, Statist. Acc., iii. 4.

"Culloden has on his property what is called a stell-fishing." P. Petty, Invern. Ibid., p. 29.

It is also written Stale-fishing, q. v. From Teut. stell-en, Su.-G. staell-a, to place, the nets being fixed by means of stakes. L. B. estellus, pali in fluvio fixi ad sustinendum rete eisdem annexum in piscium capturam.—Estalaria, id. Fr. estellier & estalee; Carpentier, Suppl., Du Cange.

This is also called a Stent-net, S. B. as being extended and fixed by stakes.

STELL-SHOT, s. A shot taken by one who rests his gun on some object for greater accuracy of aim, S.

STELL, adj. Steep, Stirlings.

Dan. steil, steep, en steil klippe, a steep rock, steilheid, steepness; A.-S. styll, scansio, styll-an, scandere, whence, says Lye, our style, scansile; Su.-G. stel, prae-ruptus; Alem. and Germ. steil, id.; Teut. steyl, praeceps, steyl-en, erigere, elevare.

To STELL, v. a. To distil.

"As it apperis the victuall salbe skaut this present yeir; and vnderstanding that thair is ane greit quantitie of malt consunit in the haill partis of this realme be making of aquauitie, quihik is ane greit occasioun of the derth within the samin;—That na maner of persone within burghs or land, nor vtheris quhatsumeuir, mak, brew, nor stell ony aquauitie fra the first day of December approcheand quhill the first day of October," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1579, Ed. 1814 p. 174.

STELL, s. A still, S.

STELLAR, s. A distiller.

"That na maner of persone [as above]—vndir the pane of confiscatioun of the said aquauitie, and breking of the haill lowmes of the makaris, brewaris and stel aris thairrof." Ibid.

To Still is used as E. v. by abbreviation from Distil.

STELLAGE, s. The ground on which a market is held.

"The two merk lands of Cloan & Corneat, comprehending the Stellage, & Croft of land with the yard & pertinents lying near the Church of Penningham; and all and whole another Stellage, & another piece of ground," &c. Earl of Galloway's Title Deeds.

From L. B. stallay-ium, the money paid for a stall, used in an oblique sense. Stallage, in the E. law, denotes either the right of erecting stalls in fairs, or the price paid for it.

STELLFITCH, STELLVITCH, adj. Dry, coarse; applied to flax or grain that grows very rank, Fife.

Teut. staef, stefe, caulis, stipes herbac, whence the E. synon. stalk.

STELLIFYIT, part. pa. Converted into a star; Lat. stella and fro.

O Venus clere, of goddis stellifyit,
To quhom I yelde homage and sacrifice,
Fro this day forth your grace be magnifyit!

King's Quair, ii. 33.

STELLIONATE, s. A forensic term applied to crimes of fraud, which are not specified in our common law.

"Stellionate, from stellio, a serpent of the most crafty kind, Plin. Hist. Nat. L. 30, c. 10, is a term used in the Roman law, to denote all such crimes, where fraud or craft is an ingredient, as have no special name to distinguish them by. It is chiefly applied, both by the Roman law and that of Scotland, to conveyances of the same right granted by the proprietor to different disponees." Ersk. Inst. B. iv. T. 4, sec. 79.

"There is not a beast again," says Pliny, "more spitefull to mankind, and envious of our commoditie, inasmuch as the word Stellio is growne to be a reproachfull terme among us." Holland has this marginal note; "Stellionatus crime, as much as couzenage, or conycatching."

[STELLS, s. pl. V. under STELL.]

STEM, s. The utmost extent of any thing.

One is said to be at one's stem in a journey, when it is not meant to go any further, Loth.

A. S. stemme, the fixing of time and place, the announcing of anything as to be done at a certain time; Su. G. stemma-a, stemma-a, to fix a day; Stemma en til sig, to charge one against a particular day. Hence faedraustemma, the day appointed for the celebration of nuptials.

[STEMMAND, part. pr. Steering in one direction, holding a straight course, Barbour, v. 25, Skeat's Ed. Dan. stemme, to attune.]

STEM, s. The name given in Caithn. to a sort of enclosure made with stones on the side of a river, into which salmon are driven.

"So they bring down the net softly and warily to the mouth of an enclosure, which they call a Stem, into which the fishes are driven, where the fishers, standing with this larger net, others take a lesser net, and going therewith into the Stem, catch the fishes so enclosed, that scarce one can escape; for up the water they cannot run, because of the larger net, and neither down can they go, because of the Stem, or stones laid together in form of a wall." Brand's Orkn. p. 151.

This is evidently a word of Northern origin. As Su. G. Isl. stemma signifies, in general, to stop the motion of any thing in a fluid state, it has been originally used in regard to water. Thus it is applied to the obstruction of the water of a mill. Nu stæmis et the quærn; Si obstruatur aquae molendini, Leg. Sueth. ap. Ibre.

Isl. stemma vatn, to stop the course of water by works for the use of mills and fishponds. Hence, says Verelius, stemma, piscina, a fishpond. He expl. it by Sw. fiskdam, as its synonyme.

* To STEM, v. a. To stanch, used rather differently from the v. in E.; as, to stem blude, S.

Su. G. stemma-a blodn, to stanch blood.

STEMING, STEMING, s. The cloth now called tamine or tamingy.

"Item, ane pair [of hois] of quhite stemmyng cutt it out on quhite taffatis." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 45.

"Item, ane dule gowne of furring and the body of stemmyng.—Item, ane cloik of blak stemmyng garnisit on the fairbreist with jennettis, and the bord of the same and nathing in the rest." Ibid., A. 1561, p. 130-31.

Fr. estamine, Teut. stamijne, Ital. stamagna, L. B. staminea, id.

Perhaps the cloth, which now bears this name, was originally of goat's hair. For Kilian expl. stamijne, cilicium; and as O. Fr. estain is synon. with estaim, Cotgr. gives the phrase, Bouc d'estain as denoting "the great-bearded, and long-horned wild goat, Ibex. Worsted, however, must have been early substituted. For Du Cange gives a variety of authorities for the term in this sense. Even so early as the sixth century, in the life of Odilo, we find the expression, lanca veste quam vulgo staminum vocant, &c. In Dict. Trev., mention is made of silk tanina. It seems to have received its name from O. Fr. estaim, Mod. Fr. etain, which Cotgr. defines, "fine woollen (or linnen) yarne, thread, or woofe." Both this word, and estamine, the Fr. term for our temmyng, are deduced from Lat. stamen, flax prepared for spinning; thread; also cloth in the loom. L. B. staminum, expl. by Du Cange as the same with Fr. estamine, whence E. tamingy, S. temmyng.

STEMPLE, s. A plug; a term used by the miners in Leadhills, which seems merely a corr. of Stapple, id. q. v.

[To STEN, v. n. To stride, bound, Clydes, Banffs. V. STEND.]

[STENCH, adj. Strong, firm, true, Banffs; E. stanch.]

To STENCH, v. a. 1. To stop, stay, or call off a dog from pursuing cattle or sheep, Dumfr.

This is merely E. Stanch used in a peculiar sense. The immediate origin is Fr. estancher, to stop. This seems to have been formed from Ital. stagn-are, id. Stierhelm refers to old Goth. stagn-a, cohibere, as the radical term.

2. To satisfy with food, Clydes., Banffs. The E. v. is sometimes written Stench. This is obviously the same v., used as signifying that the craving of the stomach is stopped.

[STENCH, s. Satisfaction; a surfeit, Banffs.]

STENCHIEL, STANCHIEL, STENCHIEN, s. An iron bar for a window, Ettr. For., Loth. [V. STANSSOUR.]

"Stanchels, stanchions, iron bars for securing a window;" Gl. Antiq.

To STEND, STEN, v. n. 1. To leap, to spring, to move with elastic force, S.

—Things have taken sic a turn
Will gar our vile oppressors stend like flaes,
And skulk in hidlings on the hether braes.

Ramsay's Poems, li. 83.

"To stend, in common use, signifies to stride," Gl. Compl., p. 374. But this does not accurately express the idea.

2. Metaph. to rise to elevation; applied to the mind.

Whase fancy can sne tow'ring stend,
Thy merits a' to trace?

Ramsay's Works, l. 119.

Fr. estend-er, Ital. stend-ere, to extend. Lat. extend-ere.

STEND, STEN, s. 1. A leap, a spring, [a stride], S.

Bot fra the hors on fer did him espye
Sa grym of chere stalkand sa bustuously,

For fere they stert abak, and furth can awak
The duke Nipheus wyde apoun his bak,
And brak away with the carte to the schore,
With stendis fell, and mony bray and snore.
Doug. Virgil, 338, 31.

It is sometimes written Sten, as it is generally pronounced.

Ane takes a sten across the foggy fur,
Wi' rackless force.—

Davidson's Seasons, p. 25.

2. Sometimes, a long step or stride, a leap on one foot, S. Rudd.

[STENDIN, STENNIN, adj. Bounding, striding; energetic in walking, Clydes.]

STENDLING, STENNIN, s. The act of leaping or springing with great force; [taking long strides, S.]

"It was ane celest recreation to behald ther lycht lopene, galmoounding, stendling bakaart & forduart." Compl. S., p. 102.

STENDERIS, s. pl. Standards.

"Four stenderis of fedderis for the toppis of beddia." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 238.

[To STENGLE, v. a. To enclose, to close in, Shetl.]

[STENGY, STAING, s. The mast of a boat, Shetl. Dan. and Su.-G. stang, a pole.]

STENLOCH, STENLOCK, s. An overgrown seath or coal-fish, Dunbartons., West. Isl.

"They [the inhabitants of Islay] catch a number of stenlock, commonly called pichtich mór, i.e., great saithe [r. seath] fish, off the point of the Rinns of Islay, where the stream is very violent; and they frequently run over with cargoes of them to the opposite coast of Ireland, and sell them under the name of wild salmon, braddan, faich." Agr. Surv. of the Hebrid., p. 631.

STENNERS, s. pl. Gravel or small stones on the margin of a river, Ayr., Clydes.
V. STANNERS.

To STENNIS, v. a. To sprain, East Loth.

STENNIS, s. A sprain, E. and M. Loth.

Most probably from A.-S. stun-ian, impingere, alidere, obtundere, whence E. to stun; as primarily denoting the shock produced by striking against a stone or other hard substance. Isl. stinn-r, however, signifies stiff, non facile flexilis; and stinn-az, obdurescere; G. Andr., Haldorson. It seems exactly synon. with the term used in the north of S. to stungle, signifying to sprain slightly.

STENNYNG, STENING, s. A species of fine woollen cloth anciently worn in Scotland.

"28 August 1561, the Provost, Baillics, and Counsale,—ordanis Louke Wilsoun Thesaurer to deliver to every one of the twelfe servands,—als mekle blak stennyng, as will be every ane of thame ane pair of hoise, and every ane of them a black bonet again the tyme of the Triumphe." Regist. Counc. Edin., Keith's Hist., p. 189.

This is perhaps only a variety of Steming, q. v. We find not only Fr. estain, but estain used for fine woollen cloth; Cotgr., Roquefort; and L. B. stanum, which Du Cange expl. by Fr. estamine.

[To STENSII, v. a. and n. To stop, desist, Shetl. V. STENCH.]

To STENT, STINT, v. a. 1. To stretch, to extend, to straiten. A cord is said to be stentit, when straitened; stent, at full stretch, S.

His ost all thar arestyt he,
And gert a tent sone stentit be;
And gert hyr gang in hastily.

Barbour, xvi. 282, MS.

—On athyr half the watre of Wer
Gert stent thair pailyownys, als ner
As thar befor stentyt war thair.

Ibid. xix. 515, MS.

2. To restrain, to confine, S.

—Never did he stent
Us in our thriving with a racket rent.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 90.

3. To erect; improperly, in allusion to the mode of erecting a tent.

—Than to his freynd the service funeral
With obsequies to do for corporis absent,
And in my memour vp ane tombe to stent.

Doug. Virgil, 232, 43.

It is certainly allied to Fr. estend-re, Ital. stendere, from Lat. extend-ere, as Rudd. observes. But it deserves to be remarked that Su.-G. stinn-a is used in a similar sense; stinna segel, the sail when extended by the force of the wind; from stinn, rigidus, robustus, Ihre. Hence, STENT, STENTIT, adj. Stretched out to the utmost, fully extended, S.

Nel Shuter, wi' his crabtree kent,
Fell'd down for Leezy drew,
Until her apron was sae stent,
The strings in target flew.—

Davidson's Seasons, p. 120.

STENT-NET, s. A net stretched out and fished by means of stakes or otherwise, S.B.

—"That he had no instructions whatever to mark any thing upon the plan that did not appear evident on the ground, except as to the place where a stent-net was said to have been fixed, a cruive-dike once placed, and such other things as are engrossed in the letter produced." State, Leslie of Powis, v. Fraser of Frasertield, p. 39.

"No nets can be counted stent-nets, unless they cross the water." Ibid. p. 78.

To STENT, v. n. To stop, to cease, S. the same with the E. v. a. stint.

I the require suffer me to assay
With my retinew and thir handis tway
The first dangers in batal, or I stent.

Doug. Virgil, 381, 38.

I wan the vogue, I Rhaesus fell'd
An' his knabbs in his tent;
Syne took his coach, an' milk-white staigs,
Ere ever I wad stent.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 25.

O. Sw. stynt-a, Isl. stunt-a, abbreviare; West-Goth. stynta up, religare.

To STENT, v. a. 1. To assess, to tax at a certain rate, S.

"Then they began to stent the King's lieges within the shire of Angus. Southesk asked by what authority they were thus stenting the King's lieges?" Spalding's Troubles, i. 105.

—"And then, be the gude discretions of the saidis Provesta, &c. to taxe and stent the haille inhabitants within the Parochin—to sik ouklike charge and contribution, as sall be thoct expedient and sufficient to susteine the saidis pure peopill." Acts Ja. VI., Parl. 6. c. 74, Murray.

From L.B. extend-ere, aestimare, appretiare; a term common in the E. law. Fr. extend-re, id. Par mesmes les Jours soient les terres estendues à la very valuee. Du Cange, vo Estendere. V. the s.

STENT, STANT, s. 1. A valuation of property, in order to taxation; also, taxation, a tax, S.

"Because his rentis and treasour wes nocht sufficient to sustene the samyn (as he visit) he desyrit ane general stent to be tane throw the realme of ilk person efter his faculte." Bellend. Cron., B. v. c. 6. Petiit censum agi, Boeth.

L.B. extent-a, aestimatio. O.E. and S. extent. V. Cowel. Hence the juridical phrase, Lands of old extent.

"The rental & valour of lands hes bin taxed and liquidat to ane certaine sum of silver, conforme to the profitis and dewties, quhilk the lands paid at that time [about the year 1280], quhilk is called the auld & first extent.—Ane vther taxation and extent was maid in the time of peace, as the former extent, conforme to the profitis augmented;—quhilk therefore is called the new or second extent." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Extent. V. also Erskine's Instit., B. ii. T. 5. s. 31.

Thus stent is merely the corr. of extent.
"The nobill Gladus (that recoverit his realme) desyrit neur stent of thaim for na maner of chargis that he sustent aganis his ennymes; knawying weil how odious it was to the pepyl to seik any new exactionis on thaim." Bellend. ubi sup.

"Stent, the tax, or proportion of it, payable by a Burgh or Incorporation," S. Rudd. It is also used to denote the proportion paid by individuals.

"When necessary, they voluntarily assess themselves in such sums as the support of the poor requires, thereby wisely preventing a general stent." P. Irvine, Ayr. Statist. Acc.; vii. 179.

The term had been used in the same sense in O. E. "Stente. Taxacio. Stentyt. Taxatus." Prompt. Parv.

2. A task, S. stint, E.

"Scot. stent, i.e., a piece of work to be performed in a determined time," Rudd.

The fassoun how this stant to do maist habill
Herk at schort wordis, that point I sall you say.
Doug. Virgil, 103, 43.

Their stent was mair than they cou'd well make out.
And whan they fail'd, their backs they soundly rout.
Ross's Helenore, p. 49.

It seems questionable, whether the word in this sense, is not rather allied to Su.-G. stynt-a. V. STENT, v. n.

3. The aperture for receiving a bar or bolt.

A loklate bar was drawyn ourthourth the dur,
Bot thai mycht nocht it brek out of the waw.
Wallace was grewyt quhen he sic tary saw.
Sumpart amowet, wraithly till it he went,
Be foras off handis he raist out of the stent;
Thre yerde off breide als off the wall puld out.
Wallace, iv. 238, MS.

This perhaps signifies the aperture in the wall, which received or confined the bar. But Editions read,

By force of hand it raised out of the sprent.

V. SPRENT.

VOL. IV.

STENTER, STENTOUR, s. The same with Stentmaster.

—"It wes answertit that this conuentionn had no pouer nor auctoritie to mak any suchie impositionn, nor to nominat stentouris to that effect; and that it wes aganis his Majesties command—to raise any taxationn, bot onlie to vrge a voluntair contributionn." Acts Ja. VI., 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 590.

STENTMASTER, s. The person appointed to fix the quota of any kind of duty payable by the inhabitants of a town or parish, S.

"To the end these impositions, warranted by public authority, may be equally laid on, the Lords declare, that they will from time to time nominat one advocat, and one wryter to the signet, for each quarter of the town, to meet with the Stentmasters, who shall be appointed by the Magistrates." Act Soderunt, 23 Feb., 1687.

This term is analogous to L. B. Extensor, aestimator publicus, cujus munus est res haereditarias inter comparticipes aestimare et partiri; Du Cange.

STENT-ROLL, s. The cess-roll, S.

"At the end of the year, that the taxation and stent-roll may be alwayes maid of new." Acts Ja. VI., 1579, c. 74, Murray.

To STENYE, v. a. To sting. "Conscience stenyies if he steil;" Gl. Sibb.

STEP-BAIRN, s. A step-child, S.

"My father's making a step-bairn o' me, mother, and has gi'en Charlie a' the outcome frae the till." The Entail, i. 240.

STEP IN AGE. Advanced in years.

This ald hasard caryis ouer flutis hote
Spretis and figuris in his irne hewit bote,
All thoct he eiklid was, or step in age,
Als fery and als swipper as ane page.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 53.

This phrase may be analogous to what we now use, past his grand climacteric. For as the E. word, originally refers to the ascent of a ladder, from Gr. κλιμακτρον, scalae gradus, secondarily, annus transilii; Teut. stap is rendered climacter, scalae, (Kilian), as synon. with sporte, leder-sporte. Hence Germ. stapfen, stapp-en, scandere, ascendere.

STEPPE, s. A stove. V. STAP.

STER, STARE. The termination of various names of trades, as Baxter, Webster, &c. V. BROUSTARE.

This termination in Germ. also forms one s. from another; as schuster, a shoemaker, from schu, a shoe, hamster, a field-mouse, from hamm, ager. V. Wachter, Prol. Sect. 6. In like manner, our term bangster is formed from bang, maltster from malt, &c.

Somner derives this termination from A.-S. steor-an, regere, gubernare; as denoting power, or the authority of a master over others. V. Lex. Sax. vo. Steoran.

STER. A termination of many names of places in Caithness.

"The names of places here seem to be either Danish, Icelandic, or Norwegian. Many of them end in ster, a contraction of stader, (that is to say, a stand of houses, a station or habitation.) Thus Ulbster, properly Wolfster, either from its being of old a place infested with wolves, or from a person called Wolf—having possessed it." P. Wick, Statist. Acc., x. 39.

"Ster, which signifies an estate, is the terminating syllable of an immense number of the names of places in Caithness and elsewhere.—Brabster is the estate or possession of Brab." P. Canisbay, Ibid., viii. 162, 163, N.

"Many names of places—terminate in seter, which implies a dwelling or place of resort; thus Brinna-seter,—corrupted from Brindaseter, the dwelling of Brinda. A considerable number end in ster and bister, as Swaraster, Muraster, Symbister, Fladabister, Kirkabister. It is probable, however, that the names at present supposed to end in ster, are abbreviations from seter. It is true, that many of the places which at present retain the termination of seter, are such as are situated near commons, and may therefore be supposed to have been more recently cultivated; while most of the places, whose names end in ster are on the seacoast, and exhibit marks of a more ancient origin. Both, however, imply settlement or dwelling-places." Zetland Isl., i. 137.

"In the ancient Shetland language, the green pasture attached to a dwelling was named a Setter or Seater." Hibbart's Shetl. Isl., p. 427, N.

Isl. staer, Su.-G. sturr, denote long grass; Isl. stord, Sw. star, gramin, locus gramine consitus, Verel.; q. a fit place for residence.

STER, STERE, s. The helm. V. STERE, v. 1.

[STERAP, s. A stirrup; pl. sterapis, Barbour, iii. 118, xii. 51. A.-S. stirap.]

STERDE, STERDY, adj. Strong, stout, E. sturdy.

The tuelf makis ane end of all the were but dout,
Throw the slauchter of Turnus sterde and stout.
Doug. Virgil, 12, 52.

Isl. styrd, rigidus.

To STERE, STER, STEER, STEIR, v. a. and n.

1. To stir, S. steer.

Quha standis welle, he suld nocht stere.
Wynetown, viii. 40. 24.

Steir nocht, bruder, bot hald us still,
Till we haif hard quhat be his will.
Lyndsay, S.P.R., II. 113.

Bat fat did Ajax a' this time?
Een he like idle tike;
He steert na' sin Sigeis's hill,
Bat alipt abint the dyke.
Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 22.

2. To govern, to rule.

—This mychty gay Lyoun,
May signify a prince or emperour—
Quhilk suld be walkryfe, gyd, and govynour
Of his peple, and takis na lawbour
To rewll, nor steir the land, nor justice keip.
Henryson, Bannatyns Poems, p. 129.

A.-S. steor-an, styr-ian, Teut. stier-en, Su.-G. styr-a, id. Hofca styrelsen of et land, to govern the state. Hence of styrig, who cannot be managed. Moes.-G. Libanda setiuriba, vivens lascive, Luk. 15. 13.

STERE, STER, STEER, STEIR, STERAGE, STERING, s. 1. Stir, motion, commotion, S.

On stere, in a state of commotion, astir, S. asteer.
Bot principally the fey vnsilly Dido—
Nicht not refrane, nor satisfy hir consate,
Bot ardentlie behaldis al on stere.
Doug. Virgil, 35, 53.

Ilk sowch of wynd, and euery whispur now,
And alkin sterege affrayit, and causit grow.
Doug. Virgil, 63, 7.

Awonderit of this sterege, and the preis,
Say me, virgine, sayd Enee, or thou ceis,
Quhat menis sic confluence on this wattir syde?
Doug. Virgil, 174, 24.

2. Government, management, direction.

Sturtin study has the stere dystroyand our sport.
Doug. Virgil, 238, a, 21.

Thir twa the land had in stering.
Barbour, ix. 510, MS.

3. The helm.

Thir takyll, ayris, and thar ster,
Thai hude all on the samyn manner.
Barbour, iv. 374, MS.

Doug. Virgil, 133, 23.

A.-S. steor, Su.-G. styr, Alem. stür-a, Isl. störn, id. gubernaculum navis; hence E. stern, the back part of the ship where the helm is fixed.

STERAND, part. pr. 1. Active, stirring, lively, mettlesome.

Apoun ane sterand stede of Trace he sat.
Doug. Virgil, 275, 27.

[2. Steering, Barbour, v. 25, MS.]

[STERIS, STERNIS, s. pl. Stars, Barbour, iv. 675, 711. Isl. stjarna, Dan. stjerne, a star.]

STERK, adj. Strong, hardy, E. and S. stark.

Schyr Eduuard callyt off Carnauerane,
—Wes the sterkast man off ane,
That men mycht [se] in ouny cuntré.
Barbour, iv. 72, MS.

Isl. sterk-ur, Franc. starc, Germ. stark, validus, robustus.

I take notice of the word, merely to observe that this does not seem the primary meaning. The only sense of A.-S. stearc, sterc, is rigid, hard, severe. Wachter gives this as also the primary sense of the Germ. word; which, after Stiler, he with the highest probability deduces from starr-en, rigere, indurare, q. starrig. It may be added that Moes.-G. staurknith, arscit, drieth up, Mark ix. 18, seems to have the same origin. V. STARK, above. It retains this sense in R. Glouc. Chron., p. 393. When it is said that Robert Courthose had to pledge Normandy to his brother William Rufus, for the loan of an hundred thousand marks; the author speaks of the terms as hard—

And borwede of hym thervppe an hondred thousand marc,
To wend wyth to the holy lond, & that was somdel starc.

"Hard, severe," Gl.

STERK, s. A bullock. V. STIRK.

STERLING, s. The name of a river-fish, Aberd. V. DOWBRECK.

STERMAN-FEE, s. The wages of a steersman. "To pay vij sh. of stermanfee;" Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

STERN, STERNE, s. A star; also, a grain. V. STARN.

STERN O' THE EE. The pupil of the eye, Ettr. For.

This is a Teut. idiom. Sterre der ooghe, pupilla, acies oculi. It certainly conveys a more natural idea than Su.-G. oegenden, id.—quasi diceret lapillum oculi, the small stone of the eye. Three conjectures with great probability that the Su.-G. term was formerly oegnas-zen, quasi lucidum oculi. This would exactly correspond with another Scottish designation of this most delicate and useful part of our frame, the Sheen o' the Ee, S.B., q. v.

[STERNIE, adj. Starry, Lyndsay, Test. Sq. Meldrum, l. 1784.]

STERNYT, part. adj. Starred, starry.

—The swyft God of slepe gan slyde
Furth of the sternyt heun by nyctis tyde.
Doug. Virgil, 156, 30.

To STERT, v. n. To start, [to startle], S. B.
This is one of the old forms of the E. v.
Stert, pret. started.

Fræ this was sayd, from the hie sets he stert.—
Ibid., 262, 10.

STERT, s. A leap, a spring; [a surprise], S.

—In the gap
With haisty stert amyd the fyre he lap.
Ibid., 250, 11.

V. START, s.

STERTLIN, STERTLING, adj. 1. A term used to denote the restlessness of cattle from the bite of the cleg or gad-fly, "Ma kye are aw stertlin the day, that I canna keep them i' the park;" S.

2. Applied to females who have not lost hopes of the connubial state; as, "She has na gi'en owre her stertlin fits yet, the great gowk she is!" S.

STERTLIN, s. Applied to cattle and to females as above; "She may gie owre her stertlin; for she'll die the death of Jinkam's [Jenkin's] hen."

To STERUE, STERF, v. n. To die; pret. starf.

Mor sall I desyr hyr frendschip to reserue,
Fra this day furth than euir befor did I,
In fer off wer, quhethir I leiff or sterue.
Wallace, vi. 40, MS.

—Amydwart the mellé

Or do me steruen furthwith in this place.
King's Quair, iii. 29.

A.-S. sterf-an, Germ. sterb-en, occidere, interficere. facere ut moriatur; A.-S. sterfa, caedes.

STEUCH (gutt.), s. Same with Stew, q. v.; but generally applied to a foul smell or stench, Clydes.]

[To STEUCH, v. n. To cause a stench, to smell foul, ibid.]

STEUEN, s. Expl. "hour, or time."

No say nought what thou ses,
Bot hold astow art hende,
And hele;
Lay it al under hende,
To stuen gif thait it stela.

Sir Tristrem, p. 170.

The term seems properly to signify judgment, judicial trial, as synon. with Stewyn. Thus the meaning of the phrase is, "If they place it in judgment," i.e., if they make any judicial or strict inquiry. In like manner, the phrase used both by S. and E. writers, unset stevin, denotes a time not fixed, in allusion to the determination of a day of law, or of trial.

Quhen cup is full, then hold it evin;
For man may meit at unset stevin,
Thocht mountainis never meits.

Montgomerie, M.S. Chron. S. P., iii. 504.

We may chance to meete with Robin Hood.
Here at some unset stevin.

Percy's Reliques, i. 70.

V. STEWYN.

STEUG, STEWG, s. 1. A thorn, a prickle, or any thing sharp-pointed, S. B. synon. stob, sprieg.

This seems the primary sense; in which it is allied to Germ. stich, punctum, ictus; stech-en, A.-S. stic-an, pungere, cuspidare fodere, confodere; as Wachter observes of the v.; Incipit a puncto, et desinit in vulnere.

2. A rusty dart, Aberd.; [a spike, Ayrs.]

This doughty lad he was resolv'd
Wi' me his fate to try,
Wi' poison'd steuys o' Hercules;
But 'las! his bleed wis fey.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 6.

[3. A stab, a prick; as, "He gae me a steug wi' a roosty nail," Ayrs.]

4. Obliquely, a hasty stitch with a needle, a slight and coarse sewing, S. B.

The idea evidently suggested is, that this sense has originated from the use of a coarse instrument in place of a needle; as small pins of wood were formerly used, instead of buttons, for fastening an under-waist-coat. Hence,

To STEUG, v. a. [1. To stab, to prick, Ayrs.]

2. To stitch, to sew slightly and coarsely, S. B.

[STEUN, s. and v. V. STEVEN.]

STEUN, STEVEN, s. 1. The voice.

—Streckand vp my handis toward heuin,
My orison I made with deuote steuin.
Doug. Virgil, 73, 26.

—Oft by Sibyllis sawis he tonys his steuin.
Ibid., Prod., 159, 29.

The word is still used in this sense, S. B.

Quo' Jean, My steven, Sir, is blunted sair,
And singing frae me frighted aff with care.
Ross's Helenore, p. 117.

2. Sound, a note.

The clamour of the men and trumpis steuin
Gan springing vp on hicht vnto the heuin.
Doug. Virgil, 367, 41.

The stirling changes diuers steynnys nyse.

Ibid., 403, 23.

Moss-G. stibna, A.-S. stefne, stefen, vox.

[STEUT, s. 1. Anything long and pointed, or large and sharp edged, Banffs.

2. A big stupid person, ibid.

Stental is another and more common form; but as a s., it is the intensive form of Steut.]

[To STEUT, v. n. To go about in a silly or stupid manner, ibid.]

STEVEL, adj. Firm, substantial, not flummery; as, "stevel brose;" Perth.

To STEVEL, v. n. To stagger into a place into which one ought not to go; to walk as one who at every step is on the point of stumbling, Roxb. Loth. V. STAVIE.

"At the launge, I stevellit backe, and lowten downe, set mai nebb to ane gell in the dor." Hogg's Winter Tales, ii. 41. V. STAVIE.

STEVEN, STEUN, s. The stem or prow of a ship.

—The Trolanis frakkis ouer the flude,—

Thare steynnys stowrand fast throw the salt fame.

Doug. Virgil, 14, 14.

"Prora, the stereu of the ship, or the fore-castle." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 22.

Rudd. mentions S. stereu as synon. with Belg. steca, rostrum navis, stere, prora. Without sufficient reason he views this and the preceding s. as originally the same. Isl. stofn signifies caudex, stipes, stirps; and stafn, prora; which Seren. deduces from stofna, inchoari. A.-S. stefn, also signifies prora. Ihre views Isl. stof, tabula, asser, as the origin; vo. Stamm.

To STEVEN, STEUN, v. a. To direct the course of a ship towards a certain point, by turning the prow towards it; proras seu rostrum obvertere, Rudd.

To turn thare course he gan his feris command,
And stevin thare schippis to the samin land.

Doug. Virgil, 206, 37.

Isl. stefn-a, proram aliquo dirigere; Ihre, vo. Stacma, p. 757.

STEW, STEW, STEUCH, s. 1. Vapour, S.

On athir half that war as stad,
For the rycht gret heynt that thair had,
For fechtyn, and for sonnys bet,
That all thair flesche of swate was wate.
And sic a stew rais out of thaim then,
Off aneding bath of hors and men,
And off powdyr; that sic myrknes
In till the ayr abowyn thaim was,
That it was wondre for to se.

Barbour, xl. 614, MS.

2. Smoke, S.

All Scell trymblys quaking with ane reid,
And ouglie stew ouerquhelmys heuin and erd.

Doug. Virgil, 88, 4.

—The heynnis hie did waxin dirk,
Inauluit with the reky stewis mirk.

Ibid., 367, 32.

"They take the aulde man Walter Mill, and cruellie briat him: althocht fra that fyre rais sic ane stewe, quhilk did straik such sturt to thair stomakis, that they rewit it ever efter." H. Charteris' Prof. Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, A. 4, a.

[3. A foul smell, a stench, Clydes.; steuch is also used.]

4. Dust; [spray; synon., stour.]

Bot thys Eneas, full bald vnder scheld,
With all his oist driuls throw the plane feild;
And with him swyftly bryngis ouer the bent
Ane rout cole blak of the stew quhare he went.

Doug. Virgil, 426, 6.

Stew is thus expl. by Grose, "when the air is full of dust, smoke or steam," A. Bor.

"Stur, dust raised and making an offensive smell in an apartment; the dust drifted by the wind on the highway;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

The first branch of this definition more properly belongs to sense 1.

Whan drift out owre the hillocks blew,
Or roads wis dank, wi' blinnin stew,—

I—spankit aff.

Tarras's Poems, p. 33.

5. Metaph., battle, fight; [also, state of commotion, anxiety, heat, &c.], S.

Rudd. derives the word immediately from Belg. stof, pulvis, pulvisculus. It seems more nearly allied to Isl. stofn, vapor in vaporariis non defumatis; G. Andr. Rudd. properly mentions E. stew, Fr. esuve, Ital. stufa, hypocaustum, as cognates; also Hiap. tuso, vapor calidus et densus qualis e balneishalat.

MILL-STEW, s. The dust which flies about a mill, S. Germ. muhlstaub.

STEWATT, s. 1. "A person in a state of violent perspiration; from Stew, vapour," Gl. Sibb. V. STUVAT.

[2. A stinker, a brothel haunter, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 2490.]

To STEW, STEW on, v. n. To rain slightly, to drizzle, Aberd.

This v. seems to have been formed from Stew, q. v. as formerly signifying vapour; q. a rain so thin that it resembles a vapour.

STEWART, STEWART, s. 1. "In the strict sense,—a magistrate appointed by the king over special lands belonging to himself, having the same proper jurisdiction with that of a regality;" Ersk.

"Quharsoeuer he happynis to be takyn, that schirref, stewart or balye of the regalite sal sende him to the schirref of the next schirrefdome or his balyeis," &c. Acts Ja. I., A. 1432, Ed. 1814, p. 21.

2. The deputy of a lord of regality.

"And gif he happynis to fle in the regalite oute of the rialte, the schirref sal certify the lorde of the regalite, or his stewart or balye, the quhilk sal persew the trespassour in lik maner as the schirref sal as is beforisaid." Acts Ja. I., A. 1432, Ed. 1814, p. 21.

"The lord of regality might appoint deputies, called stewards, or bailies, not only during pleasure or for life, but heritable, who had, by that deputation, all the profits incident to the jurisdiction made over in pro-prium to themselves and their heirs." Ersk. Inst. B. i. T. 4, § 7.

3. Steward of Scotland, a chief officer of the crown.

"We may here take occasion, from the identity of the name, to add a few words concerning the office of Steward of Scotland. This officer was in ancient times of the highest dignity and trust; for he had not only the administration of the crown revenues, but the chief oversight of all the affairs of the household, and the privilege of the first place in the army, next to the king, in the day of battle. Some antiquaries affirm that he had the hereditary guardianship of the kingdom in the sovereign's absence; for which reason he was called steward, or stedeward, from ward, guardianship, and sted, vice, or place. From this the royal house of Stuart took its surname; but the office was sunk on their advancement to the crown, and has never since been revived." Ersk. ibid., § 10.

This distinguished officer is by our writers generally denominated "high steward," or "steward." V. Crawford's Hist. Fam. of Stewart, p. 4. 6. 9. Pinkerton's Hist., i. 5.

M. Casaubon deduces the term from A.-S. stow, locus, and ward, custos, a locorum custodia. But A.-S. steward signifies dispensator, economus; Isl. steward-r, from stia, opus, and wardur, custos, q. praefectus operis.

STEWARTIE, s. 1. A jurisdiction over a certain extent of territory, nearly the same with that of a Regality, S.

"For the future, no sheriffship or stewartry (i.e., no high sheriffship or high stewartry) is to be granted, either heritably, or for life, or for any term exceeding one year." Ersk. Inst., B. i. T. 4, § 11.

2. The territory over which the jurisdiction extends, S.

"Where lands were expressly erected by the king into a stewartry, the jurisdiction annexed to them must, without doubt, have been equal to a regality, whatever the former jurisdiction had been. Most stewartries consisted of small parcels of land, which were only parts of a county, as Strathern, Menteith, &c.; but the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and that of Orkney and Zetland, make counties by themselves, and therefore send each of them a representative to Parliament." Ersk. ibid., § 10.

STEWLE, s. The foundation of a rick or haystack, Ettr. For.; from A.-S. stol, Alem. stul, Teut. stoel, sedes; or softened from A.-S. stathol, fundamentum, basis.

[STEWARN, STEWARNIN, s. A small quantity, a pinch, Banffs. V. STOURIN.]

[To STEWRN, v. a. To sprinkle, ibid.]

STEWYN, s. Judgment, doom.

Vengeance off this through out that kyurik yeid,
Grantyt wes fra God in the gret hewyn,
So ordand he that law suld be thair stewyn.
To fals Saxonis, for thair fell jugement,
Thar wykkydues our all the land is went.

Wallace, vii. 232, MS.

The Minstrel here relates the story concerning the hanging of the Scottish Barons at Ayr. The sense is; "It was the will of God, that they should be judged according to their own law, or their mode of dispensing law to others." The signification of stewyn is determined by the expression in the following line, "thair fell jugement."

Isl. stefna, denotes a fixed time, statutum tempus, Ibra. This is the precise sense of E. steven, as given by Lye; Add. Jun. Etym. vo. Stevin, vox. The Isl. term also signifies a meeting, convention; G. Andr. At times it denotes, in a general sense, a meeting for whatever purpose.

Sometimes it signifies a more solemn meeting, that which in Lat. is denominatum comitia. Ener heidnu menn höfðu þá stefna fölmenna, oc toki þat rad at blötu tveim monnom or hveirum forðungi; In the mean time the heathen, having held a full meeting, took counsel that they would sacrifice two men for every province. Kristnis., p. 92.

It also denotes an action at law, dica, G. Andr. As thiri fell stefnan: Lis sopita est, Kristnis., p. 96. Eg stefne, dicam indico, dicam scribo, accerso.

Moes.-G. stau-an, stoi-an, signify to judge; Raihtaba stauides, Thou hast judged right, Luke vii. 34. Hence staua, a judge, stauastol, a judgment-seat, and andas-taua, an adversary, one who appears against another in judgment.

The A.-S. word denoting a fixed time, is stemne, to which Su.-G. staemma corresponds; diem definire, in jus vocare. Ibra views this word as analogous to Isl. stefna. V. STEVEN.

STEY, adj. Steep. V. STAY.

[STEYAG, s. An enclosure for geese, Shetl.]

[To STEYR, v. a. To govern, Barbour, i. 38. V. STERE.]

STIBBLE, s. Stubble, S.

"Shod i' the craddle, and barefoot on the stibble;" Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 23, "spoken of those who are tenderly used in their infancy, and after meet with harsher treatment." Kelly, p. 289.

STIBBLE-RIG, s. The reaper in harvest who takes the lead, S.; harvest-lord, E.

But Stibble-rig gat time to rue

That he sae laid about it;

'Tween punch an' ream a tulyie grew,

An' fiercelie was disputit.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 155.

STIBBLART, adj. Well-grown, plump, Aberd.

A stibblart gurk wi' phiz o' yellow,

In youthit's sappy buil.

Christmas Ba'ing, Ed. 1805.

Perhaps q. fattened on the stubble.

I kent him just a stibblart loun

Without a shoe. Shirreff's Poems, p. 239.

STIBBLER, s. 1. One on the harvest-field, who goes from one ridge to another, cutting and gathering the handfuls that are left by the reapers in going regularly forward, S.

Not the long 'tending stibler, at his call,
Not husbandman in drought when rain descends;—
E'er knew such pleasure as this joyful swain.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 212.

2. A ludicrous name frequently given to a Probationer, as having no settled charge, S.

"What—are ye feared for, wi' your French gibberish, that would make a dog sick? Listen, ye stickit stibler, to what I tell ye, or ye sall rue it whiles there's a lim o' ye hings to anither." Guy Mannering, iii. 127.

The name Stibbler has been applied to probationers, because of their supposed resemblance; as having no fixed station, but going from one place to another, to supply where there is necessity.

3. A horse turned out, after the harvest is gathered in, to feed on the stubble, S.

A custom formerly prevailed in S., and has not entirely gone into desuetude in some places, of turning out horses loose, to feed among the stubble, after harvest. These horses are denominated stibblers. In former times it was reckoned allowable for a person to take one of them, and ride him for a few miles, without asking the leave of the owner, or paying any hire. Hence, it is said, a Preacher received this designation, as he might be employed by any minister who needed his assistance; and, little to the credit of these times, the slightest consideration for his services was rarely accounted necessary.

STIBBLERT, s. A young fellow, a stripling, Aberd.

—My breath begins to fail;—
I was a stibblert at the fall
Afore Culloden.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 13.

V. STIBBLERT.

To STIBBLEWIN, v. a. Applied to a ridge of corn cut down before another, between it and the standing corn, Roxb.

Perhaps q. to win or dry, on the stibble. V. STIBBLE.

STIBBLY, adj. Covered with stubble, S.

—O'er the stibbly plain that niblin rooks
In numbers spread, a sable multitude.
Davidson's Seasons, p. 130.

To STICHLIE (gutt.), v. n. To rustle, to cause a rustling sound, S. Fissle, synon.

Hence stichling, the act of rustling. Pinkerton improperly renders it chirping, Gl. S. P. R.

The stichling of a mouse out of presence
Had bene to me mair usome than the hell.
Palace of Honour, i. 20.

—Itthers dose
While, stichlan, whistles through their nose
Row't in the arms o' saft repose,
The eldritch snore.

Picken's Poems, 1788; p. 166.

"Stichlin", emitting a sound like that of snoring;"
Gl. This must refer to the sound caused by the motion of the snout in the nostrils.

STICHLES, s. pl. The hot embers of the fuel of a kiln, whether of peat or wood, Mearns.

STICHLIE, adj. Filled with fibres. "A stichlie peat," a peat having large vegetable roots interspersed through it, Mearns.

The same with Sticklie, q. v.

To STICK, v. a. 1. [To stop], not to be able to go on with; as, "Puir lad, the first time he tried to preach, he stickit his sermon," S.

The term is applied to composition, S.

Thy verses nice as ever nickit,
Made me as canty as a cricket;
I ertg to reply, lest I stick it.

Hamilton, Ramsay's Poems, ii. 334.

"To stick any thing; to spoil any thing in the execution." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 23.

"A speech is sticket when the speaker is unable to proceed;" Gall. Eac.

2. To bungle, to botch. A stickit coat, a coat so made as not to fit the wearer, S.

Apparently allied to Germ. stecken, impediens, impedimentum objicere.

To STICK, v. n. Let that fee stick in the wa', Give yourself no trouble about that business, S. Prov.

"Ochon, that I should ever be concerned in aiding and abetting an escape frae justice! it will be a shame and disgrace to me and mine for ever." 'Hout tout, man, let that fee stick in the wa', answered his kinsman, 'when the dirt's dry it will rub out.'" Rob Roy, ii. 218.

Alluding, apparently, to a fly sticking in the fresh paint, or plaster, of a wall.

STICK, s. [1. A stand-still, a stop, a break-down; also, the act of stopping or breaking down, Clydes.

2. A bungle, a botch, ibid.]

3. A temporary obstacle, or impediment.

"This mistrust will be a grief and a stick, but hardly a total and final stop." Baillie's Lett., ii. 190.

Q. something that causes to stop. V. STEIK, v. 2.

STICKIT, part. pa. Denoting the relinquishment of any line of life from want of means or ability to go on with it, or in consequence of any other impediment, S.

Dominie Sampson is called "a stickit stibbler," because he gave up the work of a Probationer, after having received license. V. STIBBLER.

It has been asserted, that, in the French translation of this work, the phrase stickit stibbler is rendered pasteur assassiné; as if the translator had understood stickit as here equivalent to E. stabbed. This has afforded many a hearty laugh at the expense of the French, in regard to their ability to explain the language of that nation which was once so closely allied to them. But it is not so, at least in the edition of 1822. There may have been an earlier edition (as this is seven years posterior to the publication of the work in Britain), or perhaps a different translation, in which some such error had a place. But here the passage stands thus; Avez-vous peur, grand novice? This indeed is far enough from giving the sense; besides that the question, Avez-vous peur, has nothing corresponding with it in the original.

[To STICK, v. a. To prop.] To stick pease, to prop them by inserting sticks between the rows, S.

- * [STICK, s. 1. A perch.] To fa' aff the sticks, to die; a phrase borrowed from a bird when it drops down in its cage, Fife.

[2. A stake.] Stick and stowe, an adverbial phrase equivalent to, completely, altogether, S.

But new-light herds gat sic a cove,
Folk thought them ruin'd stick-an-stowe.
Burns, iii. 225.

Mair sports than these there were a few,
Which, gin I ga'e you stick an' stow,
Wad tak o'er meikle time o' enow.

Shirref's Poems, p. 214.

V. STAB and STOW.

3. Gane a' to sticks and staves, gone to wreck or ruin; become bankrupt, &c.; borrowed from the state of a tub, when the hoops lose their hold, S.

"I think the story was, that she had been crossed in love with some gentleman, and that she married a Highland drover, or tacksman, I can't tell which, and they went all to sticks and staves." Inheritance, i. 95.

STICKAMSTAM, STICKUMSTAM, s. An ideal denomination of money of the smallest kind; half a penny Scots, or the twenty-fourth part of an English penny. Its no worth a stickamstam; a phrase used in W. Loth. to denote any thing of no value.

A.-S. sticca signifies a part, a fraction, something broken off. Hence the adverb to sticcum, in frusta, frustatim, membratim; and also the term stica, styra, used to denote a brass coin which was current among the A.-Saxons. It was thus denominated, as being the smallest money in use among them, for it is viewed as only equivalent to half a farthing. Thus, where mite occurs in our version, the term used in the A.-S. is stycas, Mark 12. 42. Tweyen stycas, that is, feorþung peninges.

STICKE, s. A piece, as of cloth.

"Sticks of silk great and small peces all mesourit with a Scottis elnwand." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 267. V. STEIK.

STICKIE-FINGERED, adj. Thievishly disposed; applied to one to whose fingers the property of others is apt to adhere, Roxb.; Tarry-fingered synon., also Pickie-fingered.

[STICKIN, part. pr. Stabbing, killing; used also as an adj., S.; stickin-piece, that part of the neck of an animal in which the butcher plunges the knife, Shetl.]

STICKIT, part. pa. Embroidered.

"Item, ane covering of blew taffetie stickit." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 140.

This article has a remarkable marginal note, which occurs more than once in this curious collection; "In 1567 wes tynt in the K. [King's] lodging." This refers to the shocking fate of Henry Darnly, in the house called Kirk of Field. V. STIKKIT.

STICKLE, s. "Bustle;" Ayrs. Gl. Surv., p. 693.

Perhaps from Teut. stick-en, aggerare, cumulare; or softened from stick-rol, refertus, turgidus. Isl. stiak, motus, tumultus; stiaak-a, deturbare.

STICKLE, s. 1. The trigger of a gun or pistol, S. V. STEKILL.

2. The cabirs or spars placed from one side of a kiln to another, for supporting the hair-cloth, or straw, on which the grain is laid, are called stickles, S.B.

"An old man,—near Elgin—had been drying corn on one of the old fashioned kilns, in which stickles and hair cloth are used in place of brick or metal; and having gone upon these to turn the corn, while the fire was going, the stickles gave way, and he was precipitated to the bottom, where he was in an instant suffocated and burnt to death." Edin. Ev. Cour. Dec. 23, 1820.

Teut. steghel, fulcrum; stekel, staerkel, stickel, aculeus, stimulus, from stick-en, pungere, figere; or Isl. stickill, tomus, truncus.

STICKLY, adj. A term applied to soil which is intermixed with stems of trees, Banffs.

"The third is called a stickly moss, because it is all mixed with crops of trees, which, in old time, had grown in that ground, or have been accidentally carried into it." Surv. Banffs., App. p. 77.

Because they stick or impede one's labour.

[STICKS. V. under STICK.]

STIEVE, adj. Firm, &c. V. STEEVE.

To STIEVE, v. a. To cram, to stuff. V. STEEVE.

[STIEVELIE, adv. Firmly, S. V. under STEEVE.]

STIFE, STOIF, s. A close sulphureous smell, particularly that arising from the burning of drossy coals, Tweedd. In Dumfr. it is expl. "the smell of a chimney without fire, or that which is caused by the smoke of an adjoining vent."

O.Fr. estouff-er, to stifle, to suffocate.

STIFF-BACK, s. A kind of game, Clydes.; the same with Suceir-Tree, q. v.

STIFFEN, STIFFENIN, STIFFING, s. The name by which starch is vulgarly called, because linens, &c. are stiffened by it, S. The E. name has a similar origin.

"Smalts or blew stiffing, the pound—x s." Rates, A. 1611.

Stiffen is still used in Angus.

—Brawest lasses us'd nae lawn.

—Stiffen wasna sought, nor blew

To matches. — Piper of Peebles, p. 6.

The same analogy is found in some of the northern tongues. Isl. stirelsi, Dan. stirelse, Belg. stijfel, id. anylum.

[To STIFFEN, v. a. To starch clothes, S.]

STIFFT, s. A duchy, Germ.

"He ordained and left the Duke of Anhalt as Stat-holder; not only over the towne, but also over the whole stift of Magdeburg." Monro's Exp., P. II., p. 26.

The term originally and properly signifies a bishopric. Its primary form was sticht, from sticht-en, struere, aedificare. Ludwig observes, that this term was used to denote the duchy of Bremen, Ferden, Magdeburg, &c., "which formerly were bishopricks, but in the time of reformation were secularised."

STIGGY, s. A stile, or passage over a wall, Shetl.

Norw. stij, a stair; Isl. stig, Su.-G. steg, gradus, a flight of steps, from stig-a, to climb, to ascend. Stiggy has thus a similar origin with E. Stile, which although differently formed, is from A.-S. stigel, id., the root being stig-an, ascendere; Moes.-G. steig-an, id.

STIGIL, s. A clownish fellow, Aberd.

Isl. styggr, asper, difficilis; 2. ferus; styggr-a, offendere, irritare, styggyleg-r, immitis, austerus; Su.-G. styggy, teter, deformis. Proprie notat odiosum, invisum; Dan. styggy, ugly, deformed, disagreeable; Wolff.

STIKE, STIKKE, s. A piece; pl. stikkis.

"Item, vii stikkis of t'pessaries of antik werk, of the the histories of Venus, Pallas, Hercules, Mars, Bachus, and the moder of the Erd." Inv. A., 1539, p. 51.

"Item, vii stikkis of the historie of Jason that wan the golden fleys." Ibid.

Teut. stik, frustum.

STIKE RAIDE. A raid collop. V. STEAK RAID.

STIKKIT, part. pa. Embroidered.

"Item, twa stikkit mattis to the samyne bed, with ane bowstar, and ane cod, with ane stikkit holland clait, and ane scheit of fustiane." Ibid., p. 45.

Teut. stik-en, pingere, acu plumare. styeu, i. notis signare, aut picturatis signis ornare; stik-werck, opus plumarium, acu pictum. Su.-G. stik-a, acu pingere: En sticka klædning, vestis acu picta. V. STELK, v.

STILCH, s. "A young, fat, unwieldy man;" Gall. Enc.; perhaps q. Stillish, from E. Still, adj.

To STILE, v. a. To place, to set. To stile cannons, to plant them. V. STELL, v.

STILE, STYLE, s. A sparred gate, S. an oblique use of the E. word.

It seems to signify a gate, in the following passage—

Bat was to that unlucky night!

I'm like to brake my heart!

That night Achilles kept the style,

An' died by Paris' dart.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 28.

• STILL, adj. This term in S. often combines the ideas of taciturnity, reservedness, and some degree of moroseness; as, He's a still, dour chield.

To STILL, v. n. To cease, to be at rest, S.

They've gotten a geet that stills no night nor day.

Ross's Helenore, p. 19.

Teut. Germ. stillen, sistere.

STILL-STAND, s. A truce.

"Pledges delivered hinc inde, a still-stand or cessation of armes was concluded on by both parties, for a fortnight's time." Monro's Exped., P. I., p. 74.

"Here we see the use of treaty, and still-stand (or truce) ordained of policy, that every man may presse to winne his owne aymes." Ibid., p. 76.

Dan. stilstand, Sw. stillstande, id. Another term, of similar combination, is used in the same sense in Sw. This is wapn-hvila, q. the rest of weapons.

[STILL of the Tide. The interval between ebb and flow, Shetl.]

STILL, adv. Still and on, without intermission, S.

STILLATOOUR, s. An alembic, a vessel for distillation.

"That Robert of Crechtounne sall restore—to Robert Broiss of Arth—an chandelare price ij s., thre pottis price of thaim all iij li., ane stillatour price xij s. iij d." Act. Dom. Conc., A, 1491, p. 195.

E. stillatory, id.; Fr. stillatoire, distilling.

To STILP, [STILPART, STILPER], v. n. 1. To stalk, to take long steps, [lifting the feet high], S.B.

"I did na care to stilp upo' my queets, far fear o' the briganners." Journal from London, p. 6.

Germ. stolp-en, caespitare.

[Stilper is properly a frequentative of Stilp, and Stilpart is a stronger form implying noise or awkwardness in the action.]

Perhaps from Isl. staul-a, to walk step for step after one. G. Andr., defining stelpa, novitia puella, says, a staula, quasi staulpa, quae scilicet nondum didicit moderare gressus.

2. To go on crutches, S.B.

STILPER, s. 1. A stalker; or one who has long legs, S.B.

2. Stilpers, pl. crutches; also, two long poles, with notches for supporting the feet, by means of which one crosses a river dry-shod, S.B.

[3. Awkward walking, a long striding walk, Banffs.]

Su.-G. stolpe, a prop, a support, a pillar.

To STILT, v. n. 1. To go on crutches, S.

2. To halt, to cripple, S.

It is sometimes used metaph. in this sense—

My spaviet Pegasus will limp,

Till once he's fairly het;

And then he'll hiltch, and stilt, and jimp,

And rin an unco fit.

Burns, iii. 160.

3. To cross a river on poles, or stilpers, S. To stilt the water, Roxb.

"These stilts were two branches of a tree, of a proper strength, with a cleft or small branch preserved in each, of a sufficient wideness to receive a person's foot, about 18 or 20 inches from the root end; upon which the person being mounted, with a foot on each cleft—and the top or small end of the stilt in each hand, they stalked through the river at the fords. This they called stilding." Stat. Acc., xv. 157.

Su.-G. styll-a, grallis incedere; prob., from stol, fulcrum, that upon which any thing rests.

[STILT, s. A crutch, a prop, a pole]. Stilt of a plough, the plough-tail, or handle of a plough, S.

"Their ploughs are little and light, having only one stilt." Brand's Orkney, p. 155.

"Aratrum, a plough.—Stiva, the stille" Wedderburn's Vocab., p. 13.

STILTS, s. pl. [Crutches]; also, poles used for crossing a river.

"It is unequally divided by the river [Don], which the people commonly pass upon stilts; which are poles or stakes about 6 feet in length, with a step on one side, on which the passenger, raised about 2 feet from the ground, resting them against his sides and armpits, and moving them forward by each hand, totters through." P. Kildrummy, Aberd. Statist. Acc., xviii. 411.

In the South of S. stilts of this description are often made of polished wood; the supports being properly fixed in, and the whole neatly painted. Where a river is to be crossed, it is common for persons, going to church, to carry them from home on their shoulders.

STIMIKET, pret. v. Belched.

How masterlyk about yeld he!
He stimiket lyk a tyk, sum saed.
A mirrear dance nicht na man see.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 96.

q. stomached, from stomach.

[STIMMA, s. Strength, power, ability, Shetl.]

To STIMMER, v. n. To go about in a confused manner, S.B., perhaps the same with Stammer, or a deriv. from Styme, v., q. v.

STIMPART, s. 1. "The eighth part of a Winchester bushel," Gl. Burns.

A heapit stimpert, I'll reserve ane
Laid by for you. Burns, iii. 144.

[2. A stimpert of meal was the fourth part of a peck; synon. forget, lippie, Ayrs.

3. A stimpert of land was as much as would yield the fourth part of a peck of flax-seed, ibid.

4. A stimpert shearer was the rating of a young person who could do only half of the usual work, i.e., a fourth part of a ridge; a shearer's work being half a ridge. Synon. stibbler, ibid.

STING, STEING, s. 1. A pole, S.

Wallas that steing tuk wp in till his hand.
Wallace, ii. 41, MS.

In ver. 33, fasteing occurs, Perth Ed. In MS. it is easteing. But the term is still unintelligible.

And als be was a sport he tuk in hand;
He bar a easteing in a boustous poille;
On his braid bak of ony wald he thoille,
Bot for a grot, als fast as he mycht draw.

It is evident that the easteing denotes the same instrument afterwards simply called a steing.

Sum stralk with stings; sum gadderit stanis,
Sum fled and weil escheuit.
Chr. Kirk, st. 15. Chron. S. P., ii. 363.

Then forth came Duncan on the morrow,
As he had been to ride on sorrow,
With a long sting, which he did borrow,
To chase the meir away.

Watson's Coll., i. 43.

L. on forrow.

"As Scottish say signifies a water-bucket, this may refer to the pole used for carrying it. The following definition might seem to throw light on this singular term. 'So, or soon, a tub with two ears to carry on a stang,' Ray's Coll. of North Country Words. The term was most probably pronounced say-sting; as a, in our old writers, must often have been sounded ai." The Bruce, and Wallace, ii. 365.

VOL. IV.

A.-S. stung, steng, sudes, vectis, clava; probably from sting-an, pungere, because commonly sharp-pointed, and as Rudd. observes, "frequently made use of for goads and water-poles." Isl. stanga, Su.-G. staeng, fustia, pertica.

2. Used to denote a pike or spear.

Mezentius the grym, apoun ane spere,
O heich sting or stoure of the fir tre,
The blak fyre blesis of reik inswakkis he.

Doug. Virgil, 235, 43.

And dang thame down with pikkis and poyntit stingis.
Ibid. l. 22.

—Thair was na sic bataill:
Bot thair wes daylie skirmishing,
Quhair men of armis brak monie sting.
Lyndsay's Snyer Meldrum, 1534, A. iv. b.

He stall away thair stings baith clair.—
Quhair is my speir, says Sym the knight.
Everygreen, ii. 177.

Isl. stang, steing, hasta.

3. A instrument for thatching, S.

Hence, or from stang, is formed Stangril, id. q. v.

"The roof is first covered with divots—laid on, overlapping like slate; with that end only exposed which hath received a knead or glassing by the first entry of the paring spade; when after standing one year, the thatch, in small handfuls, twisted together at top, is thrust into holes previously made obliquely upwards in the divots by an iron-shod, dovetailed-pointed hand instrument, called a sting, by which both operations are performed in alternation." Notes to Pennecuik's Descr. Tweedd., p. 88.

4. The mast of a vessel, Shetl. Su.-G. staang, is used in the same sense; stor-staangen, the main top-mast, &c.

5. The pole used for shoving a boat from the beach, &c., S.

To STING, v. a. 1. [To push, thrust]; as, to sting a boat, to push it forward, or across a river by means of a pole, S. A., Perth.

2. To thatch, to fix on thatch by means of a sting, S.

STING and LING. 1. [Lit. pole and rope]; the use of a pole and a rope, as in the management of horses and cattle.

Then did she halt lang in despair,
Withdraw her to a place, even where
She thought there should be least repair,
And that nane should come near her.

—By sting and ling they did up-bang her,
And bare her down between them

To Duncan's burn, and there, but dread,
They left her, and came hame good speed.

Mare of Collingtoun, Watson's Coll., i. 48.

i.e., They forced her to rise by using both a pole and a rope.

2. To carry sting and ling, to carry with a long pole, resting on the shoulders of two persons; as dray-men carry a barrel of beer, S.

"On Tuysday the tent of Apryle, the heid of wit the Secretare landit in the nyght at Leyth whare he remaned till the mornie, and was borne up with sex workmen with sting and ling, and Mr. Robert Maitland haulding up his heid; and when they had put him in at the castell yeat, ilk one of the workmen gat iii sh. which they receavit grudgingle, hoping to have gottin mair for their labouris." Baunat. Journal, p. 130.

3. To carry off sting and ling, to do so entirely, wholly, S. Gl. Silb.; also, by force, S.

As sting denotes a pole, ling has been supposed to signify quick motion; or as expressing the relative situation of the bearer, as they move in a line, the one following the other. V. LING.

"I was at my mother to get her awa' sting and ling or the red-coats cam up; but I might as weel hae tried to drive our auld fore-a-hand ox without the goad." Tales of my Landlord, iii. 10.

"There was little fear of his coming there without Sir Arthur—he had gotten a sair gliff the night afore, and never intended to look near the place again, unless he had been brought there sting and ling." Antiquary, iii. 322.

"Sting and ling," is expl. "vi et armis;" Gl. Antiq.

STAFF-AND-STING. To pay with staff and sting, to beat severely, to give a complete cudgelling.

It occurs in a remarkable passage, in a very bold and honest address of Ninian Winzet to the nobility of Scotland.

"And sua ye nobilis specialie, and youris lait progenitouris, blyndit be carnall affectioun of youris babeis, brether or uther freindis, or be avarice, hes destroyit the trew religioun and triumphand kingdome of Christe, sa fer as ye mycht; putting in the place of godly ministeris, and trew successouris of the Apostolis, dumb doggis; quha for the maist part in extreme dainger of thair Maisteris house the kirke of Christe, quhair ennimeis ar without and within, dar nocht only nocht barke, bot maist schamefullie payit with staff and sting, dar nother quhryne nore quhyngae." First Tractat, Keith's Hist. App. p. 206.

STINGER, s. A mender of thatched roofs; so called, because he uses a sting or short pointed stick in doing his work, S.

STINGIN' SPURTLE. An instrument used in thatching, for pushing in the straw, Clydes. V. STING, v., and SPURTLE.

STINGISDYNT, s. "Ane dint or straike with a sting or batton; in Latine, Fustigatio;" Skene, Verb. Sign., in vo.

"Within bourgh, bloudwit, stingindynt, marchett, herreyeld, nor other like things—sould not be heard." Barrow Lawes, c. 19.

STINGE, adj. 1. Stiff, austere, rigid, forbidding, Aberd.

2. Hard, difficult, ibid.

This may be allied to Su.-G. stinn, rigidus, robustus; Isl. stinn-r, non facile flexilis; stinn-az, obdurescere. G. Andr. renders stinn-r, rigidus, firmus.

STINK, STINKARD, STINKER, s. A prisoner in the play of English and Scots, S.

"The person—seized in his attempt to rob the camp, was made a prisoner, and conducted to the enemy's station, where he remained under the denomination of stinkard till relieved by one of the same side, or by a general exchange of prisoners." Blackw. Mag., Aug. 1821, p. 35.

Tent. stinkard, homo foetidus; from the disgrace attached to his captivity.

[To STINK, v. a. To capture prisoners in the game, S.]

STINKIN, adj. Saucy, manifesting much hauteur in one's looks, S.

This term always suggests, to a Scotchman, the idea of one looking at another, with such a disagreeable expression of countenance as if he felt the smell of some very offensive object immediately under his nose.

STINKING DAVIES. The name of the Stinking weed or Ragwort, Fife. Stinking Willies, id. Moray.

STINKING ILL. A disease of sheep, S.

"On opening the body, it contains a strong sulphureous smell, characteristic of the disease; hence it is called the stinking ill; and the stomach and bowels are prodigiously distended with air, having the same intolerable foetor." Ess. Highl. Soc., iii. 364.

STINKING-WEED, s. Common Ragwort.

"Senecio Jacobaea, Bualan Gaulis. The stinking weed, Scot. aust." Lightfoot, p. 1132.

STINKLE, s. The stone-chatter, Shetl.

"Motacilla Rubicola, (Lin. syst.) Stane-chaker, Stinkle, stone-chat." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 268.

STINNEL, s. Sting, or perhaps thrilling pain.

"Thereftir hir Majestie recommendit unto thame the stait of the religioun within this realme, praying tham effecteously to truble nor press na man in his consciens that professit the catholic religioun, aggreging meikle the prik and stinnell of consciens, quhilk is ane sair mater to prease; with hir awin determinationis to die constant in the catholic religioun." Lett. B. of Ross to Abp. of Glasgow; Keith's Hist. App. p. 134.

A dimin. from Sting, q. stingel; or an error for stimule, a Fr. term, signifying a goad, prick, or sting. It may indeed be of the same origin with the v. to Stangle, q. v.

To STINT, STYNT, v. n. To stop.

He saw per ordoure al the sege of Troy.—
He stynis, and wepand sayd Achates tyll, &c.
Doug. Virgil, 27, 20.

Stynt, pret. stopped.

"Styntyn. Pauso. Subsisto. Desisto.—Styntinge or sesinge. Pausacio. Desistencia." Prompt. Parv.

Right styth stuffit in steill thai tottit na stynt.
Gawan and Gol., iii. 3.

O. E., id. Thus it is used, Hoccleve, p. 41.

He styntith never, till his purs be bare.

To STIR, v. a. 1. To plough slightly. V. STEER.

2. To injure. V. STEER, v.

STIRK, STERK, s. 1. A bullock or heifer between one and two years old, S. A stot is a bullock about three years old; the name being generally changed from stirk to stot, about the time of its being fit to be yoked in the plough.

"There was ay some water where the stirk drowned ;" i.e., "there was certainly some occasion for so much talk, rumour, and suspicion." Kelly, p. 309.

—Ye half our oxin rest and slane,
Bryttnyt our sterkis, and young beistis mony ane.
Doug. Virgil, 76, 5.

The stirkis for the sacrifice per case
War newly bryttuit. Ibid., 138, 36.

Jok that wes wont to kelp the stirkis,
Can now draw him an cleik of kirkis.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 68.

Stirk is the mod. pron.

"Commonly Scot. Bor. they distinguish between stirk and steer, the first being younger, and either male or female, the other some older, and only male ;" Rudd.

2. [A coarse, stout, stupid or ignorant fellow.]

For me I took them a' for stirks—
That loo'd na money.
Ramsay's Poems, i. 307.

A stalwart stirk in tartan claise,
Sware mony a sturly aith.
Skinner's Christm. Bawing, st. 16.

STIRKIE, s. A little stirk, S. B.

STIRKIE'S-STA, STIRK'S-STA, s. 1. The place in a cow-house appropriated to a young stirk, S. B.

2. To be put in the stirkie's sta, a phrase applied to a young child who receives less attention than formerly, from its mother having brought forth another child; an allusion to the removal of a stirk from its dam, S. B.

A.-S. styre, styre, juvenca, juvenca. Hence E. stirk, a young ox or heifer; styrke, Lancash. Somn. styre, styre, is undoubtedly a dimin. from A.-S. styre, stear, Moes.-G. stiura, Alem. stier, a steer. The more ancient form of the latter is supposed to be Su.-G. tiur, Isl. tyr, C. B. tar-us, (Lat. taur-us), from tar-o, tar-u, ferire, percutere. V. Scen. vo. Steer. V. also the letter K. Hence,

To STIRK, v. n. To be with calf, S. B.

STIRKIN, part. pa. Wounded, stricken.

Ouer all the ciety enrageit scho here and thare
Wandris, as aue stirkin hynd, quham the stalkar,
Or scho persaff, from fer betis with his flaine.
Doug. Virgil, 102, 6.

"The king wes stirkin haistellie with na les fere than hevy thocht." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 97.

"The Felischis war effrayit,—specially be remembrance of the last battall stirkin be Rومانis aganis thame." Ibid., p. 342.

STIRLIN, s. The denomination of a silver coin, apparently ascribed to David I. of Scotland.

"The stirlin in the time of the said King David, did wey threttie twa graines of gude and round quheat: Bot now it is otherwaies, be reason of the minoration of the money." Stat. Rob. III., c. 22. s. 6. Lat. copy, Sterlingus.

This is expl. by Du Cange,—pro monetac specie, quam denarium Sterlingum vocabant. He quotes Matt. Paris, An. 1247, as using the term in a similar sense. Praecepit Dominus Rex—ut quicumque deinde Esterlingus in regno suo pondere non legalis inveniretur, statim funderetur; vo Esterlingus.

The term stirlinges, as used by Chaucer, is expl. "pence of sterling money;" Tyrwhitt.

The name has evidently originated from the term sterling or stirlin, as denoting the quality of the money. Thus it is also used as an adj.

"It is statute, that the kings money, that is stirlis money, sall not be caried furth of the realme." Stat. David II., c. 37.

STIRLING, STIRLENE, STERLIN, s. The stare or starling, a bird, S. Sturnus vulgaris, Linn.

"The garrulling of the stirlene gart the sparrow cheip." Compl. S., p. 60.

"The Sterlins, or stares are as numerous (in Sanda) I judge, as the sparrows are with us." Brand's Orkney, p. 37.

"Sturnus, a stirling." Wedderburn's Vocab., p. 15.

—I think ane greit derisoun ;
To heir Nunnis, and Sisteris, nycht and day,
Singand and sayand psalmis and orioun ;
Nocht understanding quhat thay sing or say,
Bot like ane stirling, and ane popingay,

STIRRAH, STIRRA, s. 1. A stout boy, S.

An honest neiper man, Ralph was his name,—
A dainty stirrah had twa years out-gane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 13.

Here they dwalt, till Cain an' Abel

Twa fine stirrahs, blest their bour.

A. Scott's Poems, 1818, p. 177.

It would seem to be occasionally used in the sense of E. stirpling.

A stirrah, at the age fifteen,
I had the Gentle Shepherd seen,
The boast o' Allan's pen. Ibid., p. 31.

2. A term of contempt, apparently corrupted from Sirrah, S.

"Where are ye gaun ?" 'I'm gaun to Monk barna.'
'Stirra, this is no the road though.' Antiquary, i. 33.

3. A young fellow.

If ony mettld stirrah green
For favour frae a lady's een,
He mauna care for bein' seen

Before he sheath
His body in a scabbard clean
O' gude braid claiith.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 22.

STIRRING, STIRRING-FURROW, s. A slight ploughing, S.

"In the spring, a good harrowing, and a second ploughing, before they lay on their dung; and then the seed furrow, or stirring, as they call it." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 217.

"What is called the stirring-furrow is taken across." Surv. Banffs., p. 147.

The general, if not the invariable, pronunciation among those who retain their ancient language, is steering. Thus Maxwell has himself given it elsewhere. V. STEERING-FUR.

STIRRUP-DRAM, STIRRUP-CUP, s. A glass of ardent spirits, or draught of ale, given by the landlord of an inn to his guest when about to depart, S.

"'Tib Mumps will be out wi' the stirrup-dram in a gliffing.'—In a moment after, Tib, the landlady, appeared with her stirrup cup, which was taken off." Guy Mannering, ii. 18, 19.

• STITCH, s. A furrow or drill, as of turnips, potatoes, &c., Dumfr.

Johna. seems to be right in viewing the word as used in this sense by Chapman.

Many men at plow he made, and drave earth here and there,
And turn'd up stitches orderly.

Iliad.

Perhaps originally the same with A.-S. sticce, "frustum, a portion or piece," Somner; Belg. stick, id.

To STITE aff, v. n. 1. To stumble, so as to go to one side, S. A.

"It is a deep cleuch, wi' a sma' sheep rodding through the linn not a foot wide; and if ye war to stite aff that, ye wad gang to the boddom of the linn wi' a flaip." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 134.

2. To move about in a stiff and unsteady way, S. V. STOTT, v.

STITH, STYTH, adj. 1. Firm, steady, S.

— Als thai haid

A lord that sua swete wes, and deboner,—
And in bataill sa styth to stand,—
That thai had gret causis blyth to be.

Barbour, viii. 384, MS.

And athir gan contrare vthir stith stand,
With fingeris fast fakand thare mace in hand.
Doug. Virgil, 141, 51.

2. Strong; applied to inanimate objects.

— He made

A styth castell, and thare he hade
Of and mekil his duellyng.

Wynntoun, vii. 7, 8. Also Ibid., x. 108.
Barbour, iv. 101.

3. Stiff, in consequence of being stretched; applied to a rope, Upp. Clydes.

4. Dead; properly, having the stiffness of death. Sheet styth, shot dead, Aberd.

"For, thinks I, an' the horses tak a brattle now, they may come to lay up my mittens, an' ding me yavil an' as styth as gin I had been elf-shot." Journal from London, p. 4.

Up-by the lambie's lying yonder styth;
But makens, that it's no yoursel I'm blyth.

Ross's Helenore, p. 15.

A.-S. stith, styth, durus, rigidus, severus. Stethe, however, signifies, stabilis, firmus.

STITHILL, adv. [Stoutly, eagerly.]

Mony sege our the sey to the cité socht,
Schipmen our the strene thai stithill full straucht,
With alkin wappyas I wys that wes for were wrought.

Gawain and Gal., ii. 12.

Mr. Pinkerton views this as a v., rendering it, interrogatively, steer. But it seems rather an adj. or adv., from A.-S. stithlic, durus, or stithlice, severè, strenuè. Thus straucht must be the v. "Mariners stretched full firmly," or perhaps, "sternly, over the sea."

[STITHLY, adv. Severely, firmly, Barbour, x. 326, xii. 381.]

STIVE, adj. Firm. V. STEIVE.

STIVAGE, adj. "Stout, fit for work;" Gl. Shirr. V. STAFFAGE.

[To STIVEN, STIVVEN, v. n. To congeal, stiffen, to coagulate, Shetl. Dutch, stiven, id.]

STIVERON, s. "Any very fat food, such as that of a haggis;" Gall. Enc.

STIVET, s. 1. A short stout-made man, Roxb.

2. A stubborn, self-willed person, ibid., Ettr. For.

In this sense it might seem to be merely the Dan. part. stivet, retained, which signifies "starched, stiffened." Stiv, "hard, not flexible," Wolf.

STIVEY, STEEVIE, s. A great quantity of thick food; as, "a stivey of parritch," Fife.
Germ. stiffe, stiffness, Teut. styv-en, firmare.

To STOAN, v. n. To give out suckers or stems from the root; applied to herbs and trees, Upp. Lanarks. Stool, synon.

STOAN, s. A quantity of suckers springing from the same root, ibid.

Isl. stofn, caudex, stipes, stirps, a stem or stalk; stipes cum radicibus, Verel. Teut. steune columnen, and steun-en, ston-en, niti, fulcire, seem to have a common origin.

STOB, s. 1. The stump of a tree.

— Sum wer fletand on the land:
Quhailis and monstouris of the seis,
Stickit on stobbis among the treis.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 43.

2. A palisade, a stake driven into the ground, for forming a fence, S.; more commonly, stab.

Sum of Eneas feris besely
Flatis to plet thayn preissis by and by,
And of smal wikkis for to beild vp ane bere,
Of sowpill wandis, and of brounys sere,
Bound with the syounis, or the twistis sle
Of smal rammel, and stobbis of akin tre.

Doug. Virgil, 362, 9.

Fimen, however, is the only term used by Virg.

"The different articles made from these woods are sold at the following prices on the spot: Stobs, at 4s. the hundred, four feet long." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc., xv. 321.

3. A pole, a stake.

"He was taken and headed, and his right hand set upon a stob in the same place where he was slain." Spalding's Troubles, i. 53.

A.-S. steb, stubb, Belg. stobbe, Su.-G. Mod. Sax. stubbe, stipes, truncus. Dan. stub, "a stump, a stock, a stem or stalk;" Wolf.

4. The stump of a rainbow, or that part which seems to rest on the horizon, when no more of it is seen, S.

This, by seamen, is viewed as a prognostic of an approaching storm, and is called a doggy. [Called also a weather-gurr.]

Su.-G. stubb, which denotes a part of any thing broken off from the rest: Notat rem quamvis minorem a suo continuo abruptam; stubbig, mutilus, brevis, lre; (E. stubb). Dan. stuv, a remnant, an end.

5. A coarse nail, Ettr. For.
6. A prickle, or a very small splinter of wood, fixed in any part of the body, S.

In this sense it is also used metaph., as denoting something that mars peace of mind.

"Ye had no need to be bare-footed among the thorns of this apostate generation, lest a stob stick up in your foot, and cause you to halt all your days." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 79.

7. The puncture made by the means of a prickle, S.

Germ. stuf, stipp, punctum, stuf-en, stipp-en, pungere.

- To STOB, v. a. 1. To pierce with a pointed instrument, S.; synon. job.

This is used, like E. Stab, for piercing with a sword:

Then Baanah and Rechab did conspire
To slay Ishbosheth for to winne a hire;
These bloody men him stobbed on his bed!
And after that with haste to Hebron fled, &c.

Z. Boyd's Garden of Zion, p. 164.

2. To point with iron, S.

Thay maid them burdawns nocht to bow,

Twa bewis of the birk;

Weil stobbit with steil, I trow,

To stik into the mirk.

Symmye and his Bruder, Chron. S.P., i. 360.

- [3. To dress a stack of oats, wheat, &c., by pushing in the ends of the sheaves with a pitch-fork, Banffs.

4. To uncover a peat-bank, by cutting off the rough surface, ibid.]

STOB and STAIK. To hald Stob and Staik in any place, to have one's permanent residence there, to be domiciliated.

"All burges that was bying & selling of merchandreis to cum & duell within the burcht, & hald thair stob and staik within the same within 40 dayis nyxt heireftir." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. V. STAB and STOW.

STOB-FEATHERS, s. pl. The short unfledged feathers which remain on a fowl after it has been plucked; applied also to those which appear first on a young bird, S.

Hence, a bird is said to be stobbed, or stob-feather'd. The origin is stob, a stump, from the shortness of the feathers.

A. Bor. "Stob-feathers, the short unfledged feathers that remain on a fowl after it has been plucked;" GL Brocket.

[To STOB-FEATHER, v. a. To provide for, S.]

The term is used metaph. Of a young couple, who have little provision or furniture, it is said; They're nae stob-feather'd yet, S.B.

STOP-SPADE, s. An instrument for pushing in the straw in thatching, Angus; synon. Stangril and Sting.

[To STOB-THACK, v. a. To thatch roofs by driving in the straw with a stob, sting, or stake, S.B.

The work thus performed is called stob-thacking or thatching; and the workman, a stob-thacker.

"Stob-thacking is now become pretty general, and, when well executed, makes a warm and durable roof." P. New Deer, Aberd. Statist. Acc., ix. 187, 188.

STOB-THACKIT, STOB-THATCHED, adj. Thatched in the manner described above, S.

"Farm-houses and cottages.—Within these five years, a very few of them have been stob-thatched, or covered with a deep coat of straw,—and sneaked or harled with lime." P. Keith-Hall, Aberd. Statist. Acc., ii. 534.

"The ha', or dwelling-house, is what they term stob-thatched; that is, the rafters are laid far distant from each other, on the coupling, and these rafters are then covered with shrubs, generally broom, laid to cross the rafters at right angles; over this is placed a complete covering of divots (turf), which is again covered with straw, bound up in large handfuls, one end of which is pushed between the divots; this is placed so thick as to form a covering from four to about eight inches deep, and, after being smoothly cut on the surface, forms a warm, neat, and durable roof." Edin. Mag., Aug. 1818, p. 127.

To STOCK, v. a. 1. To branch out into various shoots immediately above ground, applied to grasses, grains, or flowers, S.

Thus, grass is said to stock, when it forms such a stool as to fill the ground, and to cover the blank spaces. O. Teut. stock-en, concresecere, conglolari, densari; Kilian,

[2. To amass money, to store past, Banffs.]

[STOCK, s. A full grown, well built person; as, "He's a braw stock o' a chiel," Banffs., Clydes.]

STOCKING, s. The act of sending forth various stems, S.

"When it hath lien till the seed begin to rot, cross harrow it, and so let it ly till the time of stocking."—"Stocking, when more than one stem shoots from the seed." Surv. Banffs. App., p. 42.

[STOCKIT, adj. Amassed, hoarded, accumulated, Banffs.]

To STOCK, v. n. To become stiff, to be benumbed, S.

Germ. stock-en, to be stopped or obstructed; Su.-G. stock-a, to harden, to condense. Blodlet stockar sig, the blood congeals. In the same manner we say that one stocks, or that the limbs stock, from cold or want of exercise, S. Hence, STOCK, s. 1. One whose joints are stiffened by age or disease; an auld stock, id., S.

Belg. stok-oud, very ancient, decrepid.

2. The hardened stalk or stem of a plant.

A kail-stock, the stem of colewort, S.

Thro' the kail,
Their stocks maun a' be sought ance.

Burns, iii. 126.

Su.-G. kaalstock, id., from kaal, brassica, and stock, caulis.

STOCKET, part. pa. Trimmed; or perhaps stiffened.

"Deponia, that my lord his maister came to his chalmere about 12 hours at evin,—and chingit his hois and doublet, viz. ane pair of hoiss stocket with black welvet, pasementit with silver," &c. Anderson's Coll., ii. 174.

Tent. stock-en, firmare, stabilire.

[STOCKIT, adj. Hard, stubborn in disposition, Banffs.]

STOCK, BED-STOCK, s. The fore-part of a bed.

—"Hezekiah turned his backe to the stocke, and his face to the wall, that he might conferre with his God." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 71. Bed-stocke, ibid., p. 65.

—I winna lie in your bed,

Either at stock or wa'.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 159.

Weel brook ye o' your brown brown bride,
Between you and the stock. Ibid., i. 31.

Su.-G. stock, id., sponda, vel pars lecti anterior.

STOCK AND BROCK. The whole of one's property, including what is properly called Stock, and that which consists of single or detached articles, or such as are not entire, S. V. BROK.

STOCK AND HORN. A toast commonly given by farmers; including sheep-stock and horned cattle, Roxb. A synon. toast is, "Corn, Horn, Wool, and Yarn."

STOCKING, s. The cattle, implements of husbandry, &c., on a farm, in contradistinction from the crop, S. "Stock, live stock;" Yorks., Marsh.

STOCK-DUCK, s. The Mallard, a bird, Orkney.

"The Mallard, (anas boschas, Lin. Syst.), our stock-duck, is a pretty numerous species, which builds in marshes, meadows, and holms, through all the Islands." Barry's Orkney, p. 301.

Germ. stock-ent, Kramer, p. 341. Norv. stok-and, Penn. Zool., p. 591. Dan. id. The name is the same, and ent signifying duck. The meaning of stock, as thus applied, I do not know. As it denotes a stick, also, the trunk of a tree, can this signify the tree-duck? it being "known sometimes to lay the eggs in a high tree, in a deserted magpie's or crow's nest;" Encycl. Britann. vo. Anas, No. 32.

STOCK AND HORN. A musical instrument anciently used in S.

When I begin to tune my stock and horn,
With a' her face she shaws a caulrife scorn.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 68.

Ritson describes it as "a reed or whistle, with a horn fixed to it by the smaller end." V. CORNE PIPE.

But it is more particularly described by Burns.

"It is composed of three parts; the stock, which is the hinder thigh-bone of a sheep, such as you see in a mutton-ham; the horn, which is a common Highland cow's horn, cut off at the smaller end, until the aperture be large enough to admit the stock to be pushed up through the horn, until it be held by the thicker end of the thigh-bone: and lastly, an oaten reed, exactly cut and notched like that which you see every shepherd boy has, when the corn stems are green and full-grown. The reed is not made fast in the bone, but is held by the lips, and plays loose in the smaller end of the stock; while the stock, with the horn hanging on its larger end, is held by the hands in playing. The stock has six or seven ventiges on the upper side, and one back-ventige, like the common flute, [or whistle]. This of mine was made by a man from the braes of Athole, and is exactly what the shepherds wont to use in that country." Burn's Works, iv. 209, No. 64.

"The common flute is an improvement on the original genuine Scottish pastoral pipe, consisting of a cow's horn, a bower-tree stock, from stoc, in Gaelic, a pipe, called the Stock-in-horn, with stops in the middle, and an oaten reed at the smaller end for the mouth piece." Notes to Pennecuik's Descr. Tweedd., p. 96.

There is no evidence, however, that in Gael. stoc ever signified a pipe. The sense given is, "a sounding horn, a trumpet;" Shaw. It is the same in the parent Irish, as given by Obrien and Lhuyd.

There seems to be no reason to doubt, that it is the same instrument which is described as used in Ireland. "The Stuic, Stoc, Buabal, Beann and Ad-harc, were different names for the same instrument, and were only the common Bugle Horn, with a wooden mouth-piece, still used by the common people. The horns of animals were most probably the first attempt at musical instruments, and used in common by all the barbarous nations of ancient Europe." Beauford; V. Ledwich's Antiq. Ireland, p. 247.

STOCK-HORNE, s. A horn anciently used by foresters in S.

"Ane stock-horne—commonly is maid of timmer and wood, or tree, with circles and girles of the same, quihilk is yet used in the Hie-landes and lles of this realme; quhairof I haue scene the like in the cuntrie of Helvetia, in the yeir of God 1568, amongst the Zuitzers." Skene, Verb. Sign., vo. Mendum.

Ane stocke horn, ex Lib. Sconensi, species et forma cornu lignei quod si inflatur magnum et raucum edit sonum. Leg. Forest., c. 2, N.

STOCK-OWL, s. The eagle owl, Orkn. V. KATOGLE.

STOCK-STORM, s. Snow continuing to lie on the ground, Aberd. V. STORM.

I know not, whether we ought to view, as allied to this, the Su.-G. phrase, en stickande storm, saeva tempestas, and Isl. stakastormur, id.

[STOCK-STOVE, s. The wood for a roof and partition of a small house, brought from Norway in former times ready made, Shetl.]

[STOCK-WHAAAP, s. The large curlew, Scolopax arquata, Shetl.]

STOCKERIT, pret. Staggered. V. STACKER.

STOCKIE, s. A piece of cheese, or a bit of fish, between two pieces of bread, Fife.

STODGE, s. A pet, Ayr. V. STADGE.

STODGIE, adj. Under the influence of a pet-tish or sulky humour; ibid.

STOER-MACKREL, s. The tunny fish, S.; Scomber Thunnus, Linn.

"Thunnus, nostratibus, the Stoer-Mackrel." Sibb. Scot., P. iii., p. 23.

Perhaps from Sw. stor, great, large, and makrill, mackerell.

To STOG, v. a. 1. A term used in turning, chipping, or planing wood, when the tool goes too deep, Berwicks. V. STOK.

2. To push a stick down through the soil, in order to ascertain the distance of the till from the surface, Ettr. For.

3. To search a pool or marsh, by pushing down a pole at intervals, ibid.
Fr. estoquer, to thrust or stab.

To STOG, v. n. 1. To plant the feet slowly and cautiously in walking, as aged or infirm persons do, ibid.

2. To walk heedlessly on with a heavy, sturdy step, Ettr. For. Gall.

"I slings aye on wi' a gay lang step—stogs aye through cleuch and gill." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 38.

How angry did he hotch and stog,
And croak about!

Gall. Encycl., p. 398.

Isl. stig, gradus, via; stig-a, gradi; stiga rumt, accelerare pedes; or stoek-ra, salire; steg, passus, gradus.

STOG, s. 1. Any pointed instrument; as, "A great stog o' a needle," or "o' a preen," S.

2. A prickle, or a small splinter of wood, fixed in the flesh, S. V. STOK, STOG SWORD.

3. One with a stupid kind of gait, Gall.

STOG SWORD. V. STOK.

STOG, s. Applied in reaping to the stubble which is left too high, or to an inequality thus produced, S.

Isl. styggr, asper, may also be viewed as a cognate term. V. STUGGY.

To STOG, STUG, v. a. To cut down grain, leaving some of the stubble too high, from not holding the hook horizontally, Loth.; pron. Stug, Ettr. For.

STOGGIE, adj. 1. Rough in a general sense, Upp. Clydes.

2. As applied to cloth, it denotes that it is both coarse and rough, ibid.

This nearly resembles Stuggy, q. v.

To STOICH, v. a. To fill with bad or suffocating air; as, "The house is stoicht wi' reek," i.e., filled with smoke, Lanarks.

STOICH, s. Air of this description; as, "There's a stoich o' reek in the house," ibid.

This seems nearly allied to Stech, Stegh, v. and s. and in fact seems to have a closer affinity to Germ. stick-en, suffocari.

STOICHERT, part. adj. 1. [Suffocated; overpowered by suffocating air, stench, fumes of sulphur, &c., Clydes.]

2. Overloaded with clothes; as, "She's a stoichert quean," or, "He's stoichert up like a Dutchman," Ayr.

This resembles A. Bor. "Stucker; when the air in a house is filled with steam and smoke;" Grose.

3. Overpowered with fatigue, Renfr.

This may be allied to Stech, Stegh, v. But V. STOICH.

STOIFF, s. A stove.

"His maicstie haifand consideratioun of the guidwill and skilful dispositioun of the said Eustatius to excogitat sum na inventiounis,—specialle be ane new inventioun fund out be him of ane forme of stoiff quhilk he hes takin vpoun him to mak mair profitabill and commodious." Acts Ja. VI., 1599, Ed. 1814, p. 187. V. STOW.

STOIP, s. A measure of liquids. V. STOUR.

[STOIND, s. A long time; used ironically, Shetl. E. stound.]

To STOIT, STOT, STOITER, STOITTE, v. n.

1. To walk in a staggering way, to totter, S.

—What comes!—an auld, belid carle,—
Just stoitin to the ither warl

As fast's he can.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 61.

Hame he stoiter'd fu' as Bacchus,
Ilka night gaed o'er his head.

Train's Poetical Reveries, p. 66.

"Sawners Carson, dinna be surprised gin I take the land into my ain hands next Whitsuntide. I could stoiter at the plough-end yet." M. Lyndsay, p. 261.

"O. E. stolyn or stameryn. Titubo. Blatero. Balbucio. Blateo.—Stotar. Tituballus. Blessus. Stotinge. Titubatus. Balbutacio." Prompt. Parv.

Lancash. "stawtert, reeled;" Gl. "Stoter or stotre, North." Grose.

2. To stumble on any object, S.

Sho stottis at strais, syn stumbillis not at stanis.

Montgomerie M.S. Chron. S. P., iii. 499.

Steit has anciently been used in the same sense.

As Ganhardin steit away,

His heued he brac tho,

As he fleighe.

Sir Tristrem, p. 172, st. 62.

W' writing I'm sae bliert and doited,
That when I raise, in troth I stoited.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 336.

3. Used metaph., as denoting the staggering state of public affairs.

—He can lend the stoitering state a lift,
W' gowd in gowpins as a grassum gift.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 86.

4. To skip about, to move with elasticity, S. O.

"What signifies a wheen tutors and laddies gaun stoiting about wi' gowns and square trenchers?" Reg. Dalton, iii. 212.

Sa.-G. stoot-a, allidere, offendere. Stoeta sin fot emot stenen, to strike one's foot against a stone. Isl. staut-a, steyt-a, Teut. stuyt-en, impingere; Dan. stoel, offendiculum; Teut. stoot-steen, lapis offensiois. Wachter derives Germ. stotter-n, balbutire, from stot-en, impingere.

STOIT, s. [1. A stagger, stumble; also, a rude, blundering person, Clydes.]

2. A springing motion in walking, S. V. STOT, s.

[3. The proper movement of the hand in using a tool, the proper method or manner of working; as, "Ye hae na got the stoit o't yet," Clydes.; synon., hilt, cast.]

4. To loose or tyne the stoit, to lose the proper line of conduct, S.

STOITER, STOITLE, s. The act of staggering, S.

To STOITLE O'ER, v. n. To fall over in an easy way, in consequence of infirmity. It implies that the person is not hurt; Loth.

A dimin. from Stoit, v., as denoting that the fall is occasioned by the tottering and unequal motion of age or imbecility.

[STOITLIN, STOITRIN, part. adj. Having a staggering, unsteady gait, like an old man or a drunk person, Clydes.]

[STOK, s. 1. The stock, as of an anchor, a gun, &c., Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 289, 323, Dickson.

2. The form, set, or mould, according to, or in, which a thing is made; as, the shoeing-stock and the bending-stock for tires of wheels, ibid., i. 296.]

To STOK, v. a. To thrust.

For so Eneas stokkis his stiff brand
Throw out the youngkere hard vp tyl his hand.

Doug. Virgil, 349, 14.

The sword wichtly stokkit or than was glade
Throw out his coist.

Ibid., 291, 52.

This v. seems formed from the part. pa. of stik; stokyn, pierced, stabbed.

Grekis insprent, the foremost haue thay stokyn,
And slane with swordes.

Ibid., 55, 29.

E. stock, which is nearly allied, denotes a thrust, a stoccado. V. the s. and STUC.

STOK, STOK SWERD, STOG SWORD, s. "A stiff or strong sword," Rudd.; but, as Sibb. observes, rather "a long small sword."

This Auentinus followis in thir weris,
Bure in thare handis lance, staiffis and burrel speris;—
With round stok swordis faucht they in melleé,
With poyntalis or with stokkis Sabellyne.

Doug. Virgil, 231, 51, 52.

The term properly denotes a sword formed rather for thrusting than for striking down.

"Thay had stok swordis quhom na armour may resist." Bellend. Cron., B. x. c. 16. Hostem punctim magis quam carum petere assueti essent, commoda brevitate mucronibus munimentum omne rupturis. Boeth.

This is also written stoge, stog.

"And so he straik him twyss or thryss throw with a stog sword." Knox's Hist., p. 65. A stog sword, MS. i.

"He strikes twice or thrice throw with a stog sword." Watson's Histor. Collect., p. 69.

[Fr. estiquer, to thrust.]

[STOKING, s. Thrusting, Barbour, xvii. 785.]

STOKEN, part. pa. Shut up, inclosed. V. STEIK, v.

STOKIT MERIS. Apparently breeding mares, or such as are with foal; also Stokkit.

—"To pruf that James of M'ray spulyet and tuk fra him—xij stokit meris and a stag of a yere auld," &c. Act. Audit., p. 74. V. STAG.

—"Anent the produccioun of certane vitnes, tuiching the spoliacioun of xij stokkit meris, a stag, and iij of hoggis," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1479, p. 32.

Mention is made of "a stokkit mere and hir folow-are." Ibid., A. 1490, p. 146; i.e., her foal.

Stockin Mare is a phrase still used in Fife for a brood mare, i.e., one kept for increasing the stock of horses.

Teut. stock, genus, progenies; or stock-en, conglolari, densari.

STOLE, STOWL, s. [1. A throne; liter., a stool, Barbour, ii. 151. A.-S. stól.]

2. A stalk, a shoot, S.

"A single stole of corn growing in a dunghill, has plenty of air, light, and heat; but it becomes rank by excess of manure, and rots instead of ripening." Ess. Highl. Soc., iii. 476.

Stowl or Stolc, a scion from a root. Thin-sown corn on good land is said to spread by stowling;" Gall. Enc.

"E. stool, a shoot from the trunk of a tree;" Todd.

Sa.-G. stol, basis, fulcrum.

To STOLL, v. a. To place in safety, or in an ambush.

Bot quha sa list towart that stede to draw,
It is ane stolling place, and sobir herbry,
Quhare oft in stall or embuschment may ly,
Quhiddir men list the bargane to abyde,
Owthir on the richt hand or on the left side.

Doug. Virgil, 392, 36.

Rudd. derives the term from Fr. estal, locus ibi quidpiam reponitur. Teut. stolle denotes a mine, q. a secret place under ground, from stoll-en, fulcire. Perhaps stell-en, ponere, is the radical word.

Stolling, stollin, is used for the stowing of a cargo on shipboard.

"That na merchandis gudis be reuin nor spilt with vnreasonabill stollin, as with spakis." Acts Ja. III., 1466, c. 17, Edit. 1566.

This, however, may be rather from O. Teut. stouw-en, accervare, accumulare, cogere.

STOLL, s. A place of safety, Gl. Sibb. V. the v. and STELL, s.

STOLLIN, s. The act of stowing, or packing goods on shipboard.

"And at na merchandis gudis be reuin nor spilt [torn or spoiled] be vnreasonabill stollin as with spakis," &c. Parl. Ja. III., A. 1467, Acts, Ed. 1814, p. 87.

In our old MSS. it is often used for it.

[STOLM, s. A branch, shoot, scion; to gather a stolm, to be with young, Shetl. V. STOLL.]

STOLTUM, STOLUM, s. 1. A good cut or slice, as of bread and cheese, Roxb.; synon. Stow, Whang.

2. A large piece of any thing broken off another piece.

3. A supply, a store, Ettr. For. In this sense it approximates to C. B. ystal, a stock or produce, ystal-u, to form a stock.

4. As much ink as a pen takes up, S. Teut. solle, frustum.

STOMATICK, s. A medicine supposed to be good for the stomach, S.; Stomachick, E. The word has undoubtedly received this form in S. euphoniae causa.

"Plaisters, of Bay-berries, Stomaticks." St. Germain's Royal Physician, p. 57.

It is also written Stomathick.

"Some medicaments—such as are proper to the breast, are called Pectoral,—to the lungs Pulmonicks,—to the stomach, Stomathicks," &c. Ibid., p. 48.

STOMOK, s. That part of female dress called a Stomacher.

"Item, fra Will. of Kerkettill, and deliveret to Caldwell the samyne tyme, ane elne of satyne, for stomoks to the Quene . . . 1 10 0." Acc^t. A. 1474, Borthwick's Brit. Antiq., p. 140.

"Item, in the same box, a stomok & on it set a hert all of precious stanis & perle." Inventories, A. 1488, p. 5.

STOMOK, s. A shred, a piece of cloth, a fragment.

Frae claith weil can thou cleik a clout,
Of stomoks stown, baith red and blew,
A bag fou anes thou bore about.

Stewart, Evergreen, l. 120.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. Germ. stump, a segment, a fragment; stumpig, mutilated; from stufu-a, amputare.

To STONAY, STUNAY, v. a. 1. To astonish.

—For to stonay the chasseris,
That Alysander to erth he bar.

Barbour, iii. 82, MS.

Thair wes nane auentur that mocht
Stunay hys hart, na ger him let
To do the thing that he wes on set.

Ibid., l. 299, MS.

2. To be afraid of, to be dismayed at the appearance of.

—He na stonayit, for owtyne wer,
That folk, that well ten thousand wer,
With fifty armyt men, but ma.

The Bruce, xi. 495, Edit. 1820.

"Although he had no more than fifty with him, he was not overpowered with terror at the sight of ten thousand foes." Some editions exclude the negative, the idiom not having been attended to.

STONE. To Go to the Stones, to go to church, Highlands of S. For the origin of this phraseology, V. CLACHAN.

STONE-BAG, s. A dry skin filled with stones, used for driving away strange beasts from flocks or pastures.

"Henry Piercie Earle of Northumberland—being come unawares into Scotland with seven thousand men, was driven away by the boores and herds, by the helpe of stone-baggies, as they are called to this day in our Highlands of Scotland, being used by the inhabitants to fright wolves, and to chase deere and other beasts from their grazings: the instrument is made of dry skinnies made round like a globe, with small stones in it that make a noise, as they did neere the English campe, that their horses broke loose through the fields, where after long flying they were taken by the boores of the country." Monro's Exped., P. I. p. 71.

When the worthy Colonel speaks of wolves as being driven away in his time, he is undoubtedly mistaken; as I believe we have no certain account of any in this country later than the reign of James V.

STONE CELT. V. CELT.

STONE-CHECKER, s. A bird. V. STANE-CHAKER.

STONE-FISH, s. The spotted Blenny, S.; Blennius Gunnellus, Linn.

"Gunnellus Cornubiensium, the Butter-fish of the English; our fishers call it the Stone-fish." Sibb. Fife, p. 121.

Probably denominated from its being found lying under stones. V. Penn. Zool., p. 171.

STONE-RAW, s. Rock Livewort.

"Like the felt elfen of the Saxons, the usual dress of the fairies is green; though, on the moors, they have been sometimes observed in heath-brown, or in weeds dyed with the stone-raw, or lichen." Minstrelsy Border, ii. 226.

Here the term has an E. orthography. V. STANE-RAW.

STONERN, adj. Of or belonging to stone.

"The southern and northern parts of Leith are conjoined by a handsome stonern bridge of three arches.—The quay—is strongly fenced with an ashler stonern wall." Maitland's Hist. of Edin., p. 487.

Germ. steinene, also steinern, id. Hodie steinera, says Wachter.

STONKERD, STONKARD, STONKART, adj. Silent, and at the same time sullen; obstinate; S. stunkart.

—And ken them well whase fair behaviour
Deserve reward and royal favour,
As like you do, these stonkerd fellows,
Wha merit naithing but the gallows.

Ramsay's Works, Life, xlii.

"A sight o' you is gude for sair een, my Laddy, I was speerin' for you at my Lord, but he is sae stunkard and paughty; but—I'se ne'er bode myself on the best man that e'er wore breeks." Saxon and Gael, i. 77.

Isl. dygg-r, conveys nearly the same idea; indomitus, insolens, non mansuetus, G. Andr.; Su.-G. styggy, odiosus, inivus; Belg. zug, surly.

To STOO, v. a. To crop. V. STOW.

[STOOD, s. A mark; half the ear cut off across, Shetl.]

[STOONS, s. pl. V. STOWINS.]

STOOK, STOUK, s. A rick or shock of corn, consisting of twelve sheaves, S. A. Bor.

"As a proof of the productive crop we have had this harvest, 17 stooks of wheat, in a farm at Woodhall, have produced 11½ bolls excellent grain." Edin. Even. Courant, Oct. 13, 1803.

Germ. stock, tectum, from steck-en, tegere, q. a quantity of sheaves covered, for resisting rain; or Teut. stock, meta, a heap, hoy-stock, meta foeni, Kilian; q. a stook of hay.

To STOOK, v. a. and n. 1. To put corn into shocks, S.

When corn is ripe, and fit for the shearing,
The joys of the harvest we jointly shall see;—
And when 'tis a' cut, I'll stook it with pleasure,
And fit it for mill, or fit it for measure.

R. Galloncy's Poems, p. 199.

"The fruitis of the samin benefice beand separate fra the ground, he scheiring, stouking or stakking theirol, the samin, efter his deceis, aucht and sould pertene to the executouris." Balfour's Pract., p. 220. V. SHEAR, v.

[2. To bulk in stook; as, "The corn's no stookin weel the year," Clydes., Loth., Banffs.]

STOOKER, s. One whose province it is to put corn into shocks on the field, S. O.

—"Finding my back stiff in the stooping, I was a stooter and a bandster on the corn-rigs." Lights and Shadows, p. 214.

[STOOKIE-SUNDAY. The Sunday in harvest on which the greatest number of stooks are to be seen. From this date, and until winter is past, there is only one diet of Divine service in the churches of rural districts, S.]

STOOK-WAYS, adv. After the manner in which shocks of corn are set up, S.

"If rain falls between the pulling and rippling, the lint is tied and set up stook-ways, with the seed-end downward, to save the seed and bows from the rain." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 323.

STOOK, s. 1. A sort of wedge anciently used in sinking coal-pits in S.

"The mode then practised in sinking through hard strata, was by a set of tools termed stook and coil, or stook and feathers.—A bore-hole, of from two to three inches diameter, was put down several feet, by means of a steel augur; two long slips of iron, named the feathers, were placed down each side of the hole, and betwixt these a long tapering wedge, termed the stook, was inserted; this wedge was driven down with ponderous hammers, till the rock was wrenched asunder." Bald's Coal-trade of S., p. 12.

[2. A shoulder strap, Shetl.]

Stook may be allied to Germ. stocke, a stake, a peg; or stick-en, pungero. Coil, I am convinced, used as synon. with feather, is merely Germ. keil, Teut. kiel, Isl. Su.-G. kil, a wedge.

STOOKS, STUGS, s. pl. Small horns; often straight, and pointed irregularly, but for the most part backwards, like those of a goat, Moray.

STOOKIE, s. The name given to a bullock that has horns of this kind, ibid.

STOOKIT, part. adj. Having such horns, ibid. [Syn., buckit.]

It may be from A.-S. stoc, caulex, truncus; or Teut. stuck, fragmen, segmen, segmentum, pars; as these horns are so much shorter than others.

STOOL. To draw in one's stool, a phrase used of one who marries a widow, or a female who has a furnished house. "He has naething to do but draw in his stool and sit down," S. A.

STOOL-BENT, s. Moss-rush, S.

"Juncus squarrosus. Stool-Bent. Scot. aust." Lightfoot, p. 1131.

To STOOM, v. n. To frown, generally connected with gloom; as, to gloom and stoorn, S. B.

Su.-G. stumm, Belg. stum, Germ. stom, dumb; q. to look sour and with sullen taciturnity.

[STOON, STOUN, s. and v. Same with STOUND, q.v., Clydes., Banffs.]

[STOON, STOUN, s. A moment, an instant. V. STOUND.]

STOOP, STOUPE, STUP, s. 1. A post fastened in the earth, as that on race ground, S. A. Bor.

Whan mark'd the ground, whan plac'd the stoop,
They made a proclamation,
That sic as for the prize had hope,
Soud tak the middle station.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 15.

2. A prop, a support, S.; pron. stoop.

"Gif thair be ony stoupis set under stairis, stoppan the King's calsay, or yit the channel." Chalm. Air, Balfour's Pract., p. 587.

3. Metaph., a supporter, one who stands by, or maintains another, S.

"Lethingtoun and the Maister of Maxwell wer that nicht the two stoupes of hir chair." Knox's Hist., p. 343.

"Since he heard of Ratcliff prisoned, and Wentford's death, his two stoops, his heart is a little fallen." Baillie's Lett., i. 226.

Dalhousie, of an auld descent,
My chief, my stoup, and ornament. —
Ramsay's Poems, II. 367.

Su.-G. stolpe, columna, fulcrum.

4. It is used in a ludicrous sense in relation to the limbs of an animal. Thus, in describing a lean worn-out horse, he is said to consist of "four stoups and an o'ertree." Loth.

STOOP and ROOP. V. STOUN and ROUP.

STOOP-BED, s. A bed with posts, S.

FOUR-STOOPIT-BED, s. A four-posted bed, S. V. STOOPE, STOUPE.

STOOPS OF A BED. The bed-posts or pillars, S.

"Item, ane bed of broderie on black satine dividit in bandes, furnisheit with ruif and beade pece, with sevin pandes, and thre under pandes, and four coveringis for the stourppis." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 124.

STOOR, adj. Strong; austere, &c. V. STURE.

To STOOR, v. a. and n. 1. To move swiftly. V. STOUR, v.

- [2. To pour out, to gush]. "To pour leisurely out of any vessel held high;" Gl. Surv. Moray. Often to Stoor up liquor.

Allied to Teut. stoor-en, turbare; irritare; q. to raise the froth.

[STOOR, s. A stiff breeze, a strong gale, Shetl.]

[STOOR, adv. 1. In a gush, swiftly, Banffs. 2. Avast, get away, Aberd.]

[STOORADRIK, STOORAM, s. A mixture of oatmeal and water or swats stirred together, Shetl.]

[STOORDIE, s. Liter., speedy-foot, a name given to a dog; used also as an interj., Banffs.]

[STOOS, s. pl. Green points of land, Shetl.]

To STOOT, v. n. To stutter. V. STUTE.

To STOOOTH, v. a. To lath and plaster a wall, Ettr. For., Ayr.

STOOTHING, s. Lathing and plastering, ibid.

In A. Bor. the same term appears slightly changed: "Steathing, a partition of lath and plaister. North." Grose; Yorks. Marshall.

A.-S. stuthe, palus, a pale or stake; destina, fulcrum, an upholder, a supporter, &c.; Somner. Teut. stutte, id., stullen, fulcire: Isl. studd-r, suffultus.

STOOTHED, part. adj. Apparently, studded.

"Balteus vel balteum, a sword belt or stoothed belt." Desapaut. Gram., D. 11, b.

To STOP to, v. a. To cram, to stuff.

"If he lues and eates his meate by his worke, he lues in rule and keeps a good order; but when he stops to his meate and hes not done a good turne for it, he is out of rule." Rollock on 2 Thes., p. 145.

"When thou hast beene an idle vagabound, and hes done no good, and yet stops to thy dinner,—that is unlawful eating: for the Lord sayes to thee that is an idle bodie, touch not, nor handle not." Ibid., p. 146.

Teut. toe-stopp-en, obstipare, obturare; Dan. stopp-r, Sw. stopp-a, to stuff, to cram. In the same sense it is now vulgarly said, To stup in, S.

STOP, s. A stave.

—"The same to be brint be the tounne irne and cow-paris irne on baith the endis, and vpoun the stop beside the bung." Acts Ja. VI., 1584, Ed. 1814, p. 302. It is steppe, Edit. Skene. V. STAP.

STOP COMPTOUR. A board or bench for holding stoups, S.

"That William Halkerstoune—has done wrang in the withhaldin fra Juhue of the Knolles—a wayr almyr, a peraling of the hall, a stop comptour, a greet pot, & a half galloun stop." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1489, p. 131.

We still use the term Counter for a long desk or kind of table in a shop, containing drawers. This phrase might signify a board or bench for holding stoups or vessels for measuring liquids.

STOPPED, adj. Apparently used for stupid.

"So the soule becommes drunken and stopped, an auaritious bodie a dotting bodie, a man set on pleasures a dotting bodie." Rollock on 1 Thes., p. 251.

[STOPPIT, part. pa. Stopped, Barbour, viii. 60.]

STOR, adj. Rough, severe. V. STURE.

STORE, s. Applied to sheep or cattle; hence, a store farm, a farm principally consisting of a walk for sheep, S.

STORARE, STOROUR, s. An overseer, one who has the charge of flocks.

Welcum, stouare of al kynd bestial.

Doug. Virgil, 403, 48.

Tyrreus thare fader was hie maister and gyde
Of steddiss, flokkis, bowis, and hirdis wyde,
As stourour to the kinge, did kepe and yym.

Ibid. 224, 27.

STOREMASTER, s. The tenant of a sheep-farm, S.

"Few storemasters in Lammer-muir breed as many sheep as keep up their stock." Agr. Surv. E. Loth., p. 193.

[To STORE-THE-KIN. To keep up the stock, to live; as, "He's unco ill; he winna store the kin lang," Banffs.]

STOREY-WORM, s. A slug, Shetl.

—"A cold north wind prevails in the month of May,—and in wet and moorish ground gives birth to the slug, or what is here called the storey worm, which wholly destroys the grain." P. Walls, Stat. Acc. xx. 116.

This might be q. "the large worm," from Isl. stor, magnus, and orm, vermis. But perhaps it is merely a variety of Torric-worm, q. v.

STORG, s. "A large pin;" Gall. Enc.; corr. perhaps from Stog, s., q.v., if not from Gael. sturrig, a pinnacle.

STORGING, s. "The noise a pin makes, rushing into [the] flesh;" ibid.

• STORM, s. Snow, Aberd.

This use of the term is pretty general in S.

"Great frosts and snows in this oat seed-time, no ploughs going, and little seed sowing, so vehement was the storm." Spalding's Troubles, i. 216.

When snow continues on the ground, it is called a lying storm; also, a Stock-storm, q.v.

"I got into the lower country; and then there fell a very great storm (as they call it), for by the word storm they only mean snow." Burt's Letters, ii. 67.

"Storm, a fall of snow;" Yorks. Marshall.

This is evidently the sense in which the term is used in the following act of Parliament:—

"That quhatsumeur persone or personis—slays any of his hienes deir, stryand in tyme of stormes to barne—yardis, or vther partis maist ewest, seikand thair fude; Or beis fund tryit to haue schot with hagbute in the winter nicht, within any of the foirsaidis woddis or parkis;—thair hail guidis and geir salbe escheit and inbrocht to his hienes vse, and thair personis pvnist at his hienes will." Acts Ja. VI., 1593, Ed. 1814, p. 67.

FEEDING-STORM, s. Snow, lying on the ground, which, instead of dissolving, is increased by a further fall, S.

STORMING, s. The operation of tempestuous weather.

It is used in the proverbial phrase, "Staffin' hauds out stormin'," i.e., a well-filled belly is the best antidote to the effects of a severe blast, Roxb.

STORM-STEAD, STORM-STAID, adj. Stopped in a journey, by reason of a storm, and under a necessity of keeping a place of shelter, till it be over, S.

This might seem q. storm-bestead. But Spalding's orthography directs to the v. stay; stayed, i.e., stopped.

"Saturday he came to Fettercairn,—where he was storm-staid.—He is storm-staid while the tenth of February." Troubles in S., i. 41.

STORM-WINDOW, s. A window raised from the roof, and slated above and on each side, S.; anciently storme-windoik. "The bigging of the storme-windoik;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

[STORM, s. A corr. of storum; same with Stolum, q. v., Banffs.]

• STORY, s. A softer term for a falsehood, a lie; as, You tell a story, S. evidently borrowed from the fabulous character of most of those narrations commonly called stories or story-books.

STORY-TELLER, s. A softer name for a liar, S.; nearly synon. with E. Romancer.

STOT, s. 1. A young bull or ox; properly, one that is three years old, S.

Mare nedeful now it war, but langare tary
Seuin young stottis, that yolk bare neur nane,
Brocht from the bowe, in offeraud brittin ilkane.

Doug. Virgil, 163, 47.

"The general run of stots and queys, reared here, from three to four years old, seldom fetch above 30s. or 40s., according to their size and shape." P. Wattin, Caithn. Statist. Acc., xi. 270.

O. E. "Statte [Fr.] boueau;" Palsgr. B., iii. F. 67, b.

2. The term is often used for a bull of any age, S. B.; but it more generally denotes one that has been castrated, S.

The term is used O. E.

And Grace gaue Pierce of his goodnes four stottes,
All that hys oxen eried, they to harrowe it after;
One hyght Austen, and Ambrose an other,
Gregory the greate clarke, and Jerome the good.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 108, a.

Skinner expl. stot, "a young hors." This is most probably the sense in Chaucer, from A.-S. stail, a stallion. Germ. stutte is rendered a filly-fole, Arnold's Dict. Tyrwhitt justly observes, that "the passage which Du Cange, in vo. Stottus, has quoted from Maddox, Form. Angl., p. 427, to shew that stottus signifies Equus admissarius, proves rather that it signifies a bullock. John de Nevill leaves to his eldest son several specific legacies, et etiam cc. vaccas pro stauro, cc stottos et stirkes, m m bidentes, &c. Stirke is the Saxon name for a heifer, so that there can be little doubt that cc stottos et stirkes should be rendered cc bullocks and heifers." Note, ver. 617. A.-Bor. stot, a young bullock or steer.

Su.-G. stut, juvenens; Dan. stud, a bull, an ox, ung stud, a bullock. Ihre deduces the term from stoot-a, ferire, q. one that strikes with the horn. Germ. stossig thier, bos cornupeta. V. NOLT.

To STOT, v. n. To take the bull, S.B.

STOT'S-MILK, s. Unboiled flummery, Lankars.; ludicrously so named because it is a substitute for milk, when it is scarce.

To STOT, v. a. and n. 1. To strike any elastic body on the ground, to cause it to rebound; as, to stot a ball, S.

2. To rebound from the ground; used with respect to any elastic body, as a hand-ball, S.

But whan he has't maist up, down wi' a dird
Back stots the stane, and yarks upo' the yird.

Homer's Sisyphus Paraphrased.

3. To bounce in walking, to raise the body at every step, S.

4. To stumble, [to stagger; also, to stutter.] V. STOTT.

5. To hinder, to stop.

Quhen that the Lord of Lorne saw
His men stand off him ane sik aw,
That thai durst nocht folow the chase,
Rycht angry in his hart he was;
And for wondyr that he suld swa
Stot thaim, him ane but na,
He said, "Me think, Marthokys son,
" Rycht as Golmakmorn was wone,
" To haif fra hym all his mengne;
" Rycht swa all his fra ws has he."

Barbour, lii. 66, MS.

It may be allied to Belg. stuyt-en, vertere, avertere, impedire; Kilian.

6. To stop, to cense.

Their lufy lances thal loissit, and lichtit on the land.
Right styth stuffit in steill thal stotit na stynt;
Bot buskit to battaille, with birne and brand.

Gawan and Gol., iii. 3.

Mr. Pinkerton expl. it staggered. V. STOTIT. But that this cannot be the sense, is evident from the use of the same term afterwards.

Schir Oviles, Schir Iwell, in handis war hynt,
And to the lufy castell war led in ane lyng.
Thairwith the stalwartis in stour can stotin and stynt:
And haith Schir Agalus and Schir Hew was led to the Kyng.

Ibid. st. 10.

It is here corrected from Edit. 1503. Mr. Pinkerton reads stotin. Stot is thus synon. with stynt; and the phrase redundant, which is very common with our old writers.

Belg. stuyt-en, to bounce, weerstuyt-en, to rebound; Sw. stuts-a, stutt-a, v. n. to rebound, stoet-a tilbaka, v. a. id. Stoet of stene; si subliat a lapide; Ihre, vo. Stuts, i.e., gif it stots aff a stane, S. The primary sense of stoet-a is, tundere, percutere; Moes-G. stant-an, Isl. steyt-a, Alem. stozzen, Germ. stoss-en, id. Isl. stant-a impingere. Su.-G. stoet, ictus, pulsus; stuts, repercussio.

STOT, s. 1. A rebound, the act of rebounding, S.

"We see here, how easie it is for a victorious armie, that is once master of the field, to take in frontier garrisons, while as they are possessed instantlie with a panicke feare, especially being taken at the stot or rebound, before they have time to digest their feare." Monro's Exped. P. II., p. 118.

2. A bounce or spring, in walking, any sudden motion, S.

3. A leap, or quick motion, in dancing, S.

Weel danc'd Eppie and Jennie!
He that tynes a stot o' the spring.
Shall pay the piper a penny.

The Country Wedding, Herd's Coll., ii. 94.

"I find it difficult to keep all stots with Christ." Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 71.

[4. A stumble, stagger; a stutter, Clydes.

5. A hinderance, obstruction; a stand still, ibid.]

[STOT, adv. With a rebound; also, with a tottering step, Banffs.]

STOTIT, Gawan and Gol. iii. 3. V. v.

To STOTTER, v. n. To stagger, to stumble, to be ready to fall, Ettr. For. V. STOTIT, STOTTER.

[STOTTIN, part. pr. Used also as a s. and as an adj. in each sense of the v., Clydes.]

[To STOUFF, v. n. To walk with a lazy, heavy step, Banffs.; used also as a s. and an adv., ibid.]

STOUND, STOON, STOUN, s. A small portion of time, a moment. A. Bor. id.

Anchises son tho stentis ane litill stound,
And bayth hys futesteppis fixit on the ground.
Doug. Virgil, 174, 54.

The self stound amyd the preis fute hote
Lucagus enteris into his chariote. Ibid. 338, 32.

A.-S. Su.-G. Isl. Teut. stund, tempus, hora, spatium, momentum; Su.-G. skam stund, a short time; Belg. terstond, immediately.

To STOUND, STOON, STOUN, v. n. To ache, to have the sensation of acute pain, S.

—Tharewyth all the hirnyis of his goist
He rypit wyth the swerd amyd his coist,
So tyl hys hart stoundis the pryk of deith:
He weltis ouer, and yaldis vp the breith.

Doug. Virgil, 339, 39.

A. Bor. It stounds, dolet; Isl. styn, doleo, stunde, dolui.

STOUND, STOON, STOUN, s. 1. An acute pain, affecting one at intervals; as, a stound of the on beast, or toothache, S.B.

2. Applied to the mind, denoting any thing that causes a smarting pain; as, a stound of lute, S. i.e., of love.

The fader of goddis and men—
Inducis and commouis to the melle
Tarchon of Tuskanis principal lord and syre,
In braithful stoundis rasit brym as fyre.

Doug. Virgil, 390, 55.

Stounds, sorrows, damps, Skinner. Chaucer uses stound ill in the same sense.

—She ne male staunche my stound ill.
Rom. Rose, ver. 4472. Urry.

STOUP, STOIP, s. 1. A deep and narrow vessel for holding liquids, a flagon, S. stoop, E.

"O! but they be brave Divines, forsooth, and fit to be ministers, that will call one in the paroch an honest man, if he keep him and the pint-stoop well, whereas he will be as graceless a wretch as in all the paroch again." W. Guthrie's Serm., p. 4.

This is also written Stop. V. STOP COMPTOUR.

Freyr Robert said, "Dame, fill ane stoip of alle,
"That we may drink, for I am very dry"
With that the gudewyf walkit furth in hy.

Sche fild ane stoip, and brought in cheis and breid.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 67.

The term is frequently used to denote a vessel used as a measure, of indefinite size; as, a pint-stoup, a vessel made of pewter, that contains two quarts; a mutchkin-stoup, a vessel containing half a pint English, &c.

A.-S. stoppa, a pot or flagon for wine, Somner; Belg. stoop, poculum majus, cantharus; Teut. stoop, urna. Su.-G. stop, mensura liquidorum.

2. A pitcher or bucket used for carrying water, narrower at the top than at the bottom, for securing the iron-hoops. This is denominated a water-stoup, S.

The name water-stoup is also given, at Leith, to the common periwinkle, Turbo terebra, Linn.

"It is said that their sister with a timber stoup slew ane called Mercer, wife to Alexander Dumber of Braks, who was at the slaughter of her brethren, and she and they were all buried together in the kirk of Alves." Spalding's Troubles, i. 53.

STOUPFULL, s. As much as fills the vessel called a Stoup, of whatever size, S.

—"Second, for making a stoupfull of poisoned aill for performance of your devillish malise, wherewith ye killed sundry." Pref. Law's Memor., xxviii.

STOUP, adj. Stupid, Aberd. V. STUPE.

STOUP and ROUP, adv. Completely, entirely, S.

"Nae mair about it," quoth the miller,
The fowl looks well, and we'll fa' till her.
"Sae be't," says James; and in a doup,
They snapt her up baith stoup and roup.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 527.

i.e., stump and rump.

"But the stocking, Hobbie?" said John Elliot;
'we're utterly ruined.—We are ruined stoup and roup.'"
Takes of my Landlord, l. 196.

"The marquis of Tweeddale and lord Belhaven, with the militia and volunteers of Lothian, &c. made altogether an army which might have eaten up old Borlum and his Highlanders stoup and roup." Jac-cobite Relics, ii. 264.

This orthography gives the true pronunciation, S.

It is singular that the very same mode of expression should be common in Lancash. "Steaup on reawp, all, every part." Gl.

"I creemt Nip new on them o Lunshun, boh Tum took care oth' tother, steaup on reawp; for I eet like o Yorshar-mon, en cleart th' stoo." T. Bobbin's Works, p. 37.

On is used for and.

STOUP, s. A prop. V. STOOP.

STOUR, STOURE, STOWR, STURE, s. 1. The agitation of any body, the parts of which are easily separable from each other.

Sam grathis thame on fute to go in feild,
Sum hie montit on hors bak vnder scheild,
The dusty powder vpdriuannd with ane stoure.
Doug. Virgil, 230, 3.

2. Dust in a state of motion, S. pron. stoor.

And the stout stedis with thare huffis sound,
With swift renkis dynlit the dusty ground:
The blak stoure of powder in ane stew,
Ah thik as myst towart the wallis threw.
Doug. Virgil, 397, 19.

—Stour of powder vp strekis in the are.
Ibid. 426, 30.

Yestreen I met you on the moor,
Ye spak na, but gned by like stoure.
Burns, iv. 286.

The term is also used, but improperly, with respect to dust that is laid, S.

My books like useless lumber ly,
Thick cover'd owre wi' stour, man.
A. Douglas's Poems, p. 41.

3. A gush of water; also, the spray driven, in consequence of the agitation of a body of water; or, as Rudd. expresses it, "water flying like dust."

Beesly our folkis gan to pingil and strife,
Sweepand the flude with lang routhis belife,
And vp thai welt the stoure of fomy see.
Doug. Virgil, 77, 34.

—Hir bowkit bysyme, that hellis belth
The large fludis suppis thris in ane swelth,
And vthir quhillis apoutis in the are agane,
Driuannd the stoure to the sternes as it war rane.
Ibid. 82, 18.

Dust or water is called stour, merely from its agitated state; Teut. stoor-en, turbare, perturbare; lutum aut vadam commovere; Kilian. This derivation is confirmed by the use of upstourand as an epithet conjoined with dust.

—Younder mycht thou se
The heirdys of hartis wyth thare heddis hie
Ouer spyunerand wyth swyft cours the plane vale,
The hepe of dust upstourand at thare tale.
Doug. Virgil, 105, 15.

4. Metaph., trouble, vexation. To raise a stour, to cause disturbance, S.

Yon hobbleshow is like some stour to raise:
What think ye o't! for, as we use to say,
The web seems now all to be made of wae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 89.

5. Battle, fight, conflict.

Famows Lordis and Borownys,
Fled to the castelle ow't of the stour.
Wyntown, viii. 11. 157.

—The best, and the worthiest,
That wilfull war to wyn honour,
Plungyt in the stalwart stour,
And rowtis ryud about thaim dang.
Barbour, ii. 355, MS.

It is still used in this sense, S.
There Scotia's sons most firmly stood,
Maintain'd an' gain'd the stour, man.
A. Douglas's Poems, p. 11.

It occurs in this sense in O. E.
Out of the stoure that stode tuo men askaped ware
Of Sir Harakle's blode, Eadwyn & Morkare.
R. Brunne, p. 71.

Isl. styr, Dan. styri, pugna, praelium; O. Fr. estour, a fight, a combat. Rudd. views A.-S. styr-ian, stear-an, turbare, as the root.

6. Perilous situation, hardship, conflict, severe brush, S.

And I trast yhe wald nocht set till assaill,
For your worschipe, to do me dyshonour,
And I a maid, and standis in mony stour,
Fra Inglistmen to saiff my womanheid,
And cost has maid to kepe me fra thar dreid.
Wallace, v. 690, MS.

Ye are informed what a sture
Innes got at Lilsly Mure;
And Sharp's lifeguard, how they in Fife
Were in the hazard of their life.
Cleland's Poems, p. 21.

7. Force, violence; a paroxysm of rage.

"Thocht thai [the soland geese] have ane fisch in thair mouth abone the seis quhair thai fle, yit gif thai se ane vthir bettir, thay let the first fall, & doukis with ane fellon stoure (magno impetu, Boeth.) in the see, & bringis haistelie vp the fische that thay last saw."
Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 9.

Scho quham thou knawis within hir breist full hate
Soroufull vengeance compassis and dissate,
And certanely determyt for to de,
In diuers stouris of ire brandissis sche.
Doug. Virgil, 119, 52.

Vario irarum aestu, Virg.

8. Severe reproof; as, "I wadna stand your stour," S. B.

Our lads and ye'll about it pluck a crow,
For forty groats I wadna stand your stour,
Ross's Helenore, p. 83.

Allied to A.-S. steore, reproof, correction, chastise-ment; from stear-an, to reprove, to correct.

9. A fright, Dumfr. q. a state of perturbation.

It is evident that this word, in all its senses, may be traced to Belg. stoor-en, Teut. stoor-en, A.-S. styr-an, turbare, movere, E. to stir. A.-S. stear-an, to reprove, to correct, has been viewed as a different v. from styr-an. But the latter also signifies, to irritate. Steor-an, in its primary sense, gubernare, is the very same with styr-an, movere. For steor-an, like Su.-G. styr-a, seems originally to have been applied to the government of the helm, or steering of a ship.

To THROW STOUR in one's Een. To blind one, to impose upon one by false appearances, S.

"He proposed—that they should take a stroll through the town; and my grandfather being eager to throw stour in his eyes, was readily consenting thereto." R. Gilhaize, i. 160.

To STOUR, STOWRE, STOOR, v. n. 1. To rise in foam or spray. To stoor, to rise up in clouds, as smoke, dust, &c. A. Bor.

The salt fame stouris from the fard thay haild.
Doug. Virgil, 45, 43.

Fit sonitus, spumante, sale, Virg.

2. To move swiftly, "making the dust or water fly about;" Rudd. S.

—It was ane glore to se—
The siluer scailit fyschis on the grete,
Ouer thowrt clere streames sprinkilland for the hete,
With fynnyis schinand broun as synopare,
And chesal talis, stourand here and there.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 400. 8.

V. STURIN, s. 2.

I alipt my page, and stoor'd to Leith,
To try my credit at the wine.

Watson's Coll., i. 14.

Stoor, avast, get away, S. V. STOUR, s. 2.

3. To gush, [to drive in spray, S.]

To STOUR about, v. n. To move quickly from place to place; implying the idea of great activity, and often of restlessness of mind, in consequence of which a person cannot keep in one place, S.

"Na, na, ye needna stour about that gate; I'll no be violented by the force o' man into any measure of the kind." Duplessis walked with increasing agitation up and down the room." Tournay, p. 285.

To STOUR aff, v. n. To move off quickly, Clydes.

STOURIE, adj. Dusty, S.

"He did grievously—cry, because we preferred listening to the gospel melody of Mr. Swinton under a tree;—as if it was nae a more glorious thing to worship God—beneath the canopy of all the heavens, than to bow the head in the fetters of episcopal bondage below the stoury rafters of an auld bigging, such as our kirk was, a perfect howf of cloaks and spiders." R. Gilhaize, ii. 191.

E'en drudgery himsel looks gay,
While sweatin' he the cart doth ca',
Or stow'ry biggeth up the wa'.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 147.

STOURIN', s. A slight sprinkling of any powdery substance; as, "a stourin o' meal," Clydes.

STOUR, adj. 1. Tall, large, great, stout, Shetl. V. STURE, sense 3.

2. Austere, stern. V. STURE.

STOUR-LOOKING, adj. Having the appearance of sternness or austerity, S.

"Take notice, Jenny, of that dour, stour-looking carle that sits by the cheek o' the ingle, and turns his back on a' men. He looks like ane o' the hill-folk, for I saw him start awae when he saw the red coats, and I jalouse he wad hae like to hae ridden by, but his horse (it's a gude gelding) was ower sair travailed; he behoved to stop whether he wad or no." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 70.

"Stour-looking, gruff-looking;" GL. Antiq.

STOURNE, adj. Stern; used as a s.

In stele he was stuffed that stourne upon stede.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 5.

A.-S. styrne, id. Teut. stuer, torvus.

STOURNNS, s. Largeness, bigness, ibid.

STOUR, STOURE, s. A stake, a long pole, Dumfr.

Mezentius the grym, apoun ane spere,
Or heich sting or stoure of the fir tre,
The blak fyre blies of reik inswakkis he.

Doug. Virgil, 295, 43.

"Another method is called pock-net fishing. This is performed by fixing stakes or stours (as they are called) in the sand, either in the channel of the river, or in the sand which is dry at low water. These stours are fixed in a line, across the tide-way, at the distance of 46 inches from each other, about three feet high above the sand, and between every two of these stours is fixed a pock-net, tied by a rope to the top of each stour." P. Dornock, Dumfr. Statist. Acc., ii. 16.

[STOURIE, adj. Long and slender, Banffs.]

Su.-G. Dan. stoor, anciently staur, id. vallus, palus. Isl. staur, fulcrum seipimenti; Su.-G. stoor-maal, interstitium inter paria perticarum, quae aepem sustinent, Ihre. Hence stour-a, to prop up with sticks or poles, Wideg.

To STOURE, v. a. [To manage, oversee.]

"Item, a marshal to be chosen, to take ordre for the watche and stourage, and to give the watch-woorde to suche as shall watch and stoure for the tyme, and to give nightlie the watch-woorde unto the lords governors." Orders for the Scottish Troops, Sadler's Papers, i. 540.

This may perhaps signify, to have the command, to govern. Teut. stuer-en, stuyr-en, regere, dirigere.

STOURAGE, s. Apparently the direction or management. V. the v.

STOUR-MACKEREL, s. Expl. as denoting the Scad, on the Firth of Forth.

"Scomber Trachurus. Scad, Horse-mackerel, or stour-mackerel, is said sometimes to have been found in the Firth; but I have not met with it." Neill's List of Fishes, p. 15.

Sibbald makes this to be the Tunny. V. STOUR-MACKEREL.

STOURREEN, STOURUM, STOORUM, s. A warm drink, Shetl.; Brochan, q. v., Aberd.

A. Bor. stoorey denotes "a mixture of warm beer and oatmeal with sugar;" GL. Brocket.

Su.-G. stoor-a, or Teut. stoor-en, turbare? V. STUR-UCH.

STOUSHIE, STOUSSIE, adj. Squat; strong and healthy; prob., corr. from stout, S. Used also as a s.

Germ. stutz-en, to support; q., one who is able to bear some pressure.

To STOUTER, STOTTER, v. n. To stumble, to trip in walking, Fife.

Evidently the same with E. Stutter, as applied to speech; from Teut. stuyt-en, to stop.

STOUTH, s. 1. Theft, S.

"Erle Thomas (seand how difficul it was to bring thaim fra stouth that hes bene hantit thairwith) held ay with hym ane gard of bodin men." Bellend. Cron., B. xv., c. 1.

2. Stealth, clandestine transaction.

Sum roways till his fallow thaim betwene,
His mery stouth and pastyme lait yestrene.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 402, 52.

Su.-G. stæld, id. furtum, from stinel-a, furari.

STOUTHREIF, s. Theft accompanied with violence; robbery.

"Because the cryme of thift and stouthreif, is sa commonlie vait amang the kingis liegis, and for stanching of the samin, it is statute, &c." Acts James V., 1515, c. 2. Ed. 1566.

Although thift and stouthreif are mentioned as if they were the same cryme, they are evidently distinguished in what follows in the act, by the expression thief or reif. They are also distinguished, Acts James VI., 1587, c. 60, Skene.

"Robbery is truly a species of theft for both are committed on the property of another, and with the same view of getting gain; but robbery is aggravated by the violence with which it is attended. It is in our old statutes called rief, 1477, c. 78, or stouthrief, 1515, c. 2, from stouth, or stealth, and rief, the carrying off by force; and it is in all cases punished capitally." Erskine's Inst., B. iv., Tit. 4. s. 64.

The same word is still vulgarly pron. stouthrie, S. But it merely denotes theft.

STOUTH AND ROUTH. Plenty, abundance, S.

"It's easy for your honour and the like of you gentle folks, to say sae, that hae stouth and routh, and fire and fending, and meat and claith, and sit dry and canny by the fire-side." Antiquary, i. 253.

Teut. stouw-en, accervare, accumulare?

STOUTHRIE, s. Provision, furniture, synon. with Splechrie, Fife.

STOUTLYNYS, adv. [A misreading for Frontlynys, in front, face to face.]

For thai that hardy war and wycht,
And stoutlynys with thair fayis gan fycht,
Pressyt thaim fornaist for to be.

Barbour, xvi. 174, MS.

[See note in Prof. Skeat's Ed., p. 780.]

STOUTNESS, s. Stubbornness, Barbour, vii. 356.]

To STOVE, v. a. To stew, S.

—Ye may well ken, goodman,
Your feast comes frae the pottage-pan;

The stov'd or roasted we afford
Are aill great strangers on our board.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 525.

Germ. stov-en, Su.-G. stufic-a, id.

STOVE, STOUÉ, s. 1. A vapour, an exhalation.

Mysty vapoure vpspringand swete as sence,
In smoky soppis of donk dewis wak,
With hallsum stouis ouerheidand the slak.
Doug. Virgil, 399, 51.

This is evidently the same with Stew, q. v.

[2. A stove o' sickness, a fit of illness accompanied with heat, Aberd.]

To STOW, STOWE, v. a. To crop, to lop, to cut off, S. A. Bor. Pron. stoo.

Vegetables are said to be stov'd, when the tender blades or sprouts are nipped off.

The hair is said to be stov'd, when it is cropped or cut short. I'll stow the lugs out of your head, I will crop your ears.

Thare he beheld ane cruell maglit face,
His visage menyete, and haith his handis, allace!
His halfettis spulyeit, of stov'd his eris tuay,
By schamefull wound his neis cuttill away.

Doug. Virgil, 181, 23.

After their yokin, I wat weel
They'll stoo the kebbuck to the heel.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 46.

Quhae—maid you a gentillman wald not stow your luggis! Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 61.

Sae, as ye stow the stunted tree,
That pudlock-stool, my pedigree,
A branch of laurel ye may eik.

Poems, Engl., Scotch, and Latin, p. 109.

"Rob—protested—that if ever any body should affront his kinsman, an' he would but let him ken, he would stow the lugs out of his head, were he the best man in Glasgow." Rob Roy, iii. 252.

This is purely Su.-S. stufic-a, stufic-a, signifying, amputare. Warder styft of hanni naesser eller oerum; Si nares aut etiam aures illi amputantur. Leg. Suderm. ap. Ibre. Stufica oeronen paa en haest; aures equo decurtare; to stoo a horse's lugs, S. Mod. Sax. stuv-en, afstuv-en, id. This is the origin of Su.-G. stubb, E. stub, "a thick short stock left when the rest is cut off." V. STOB. Hence also E. stubble; and, STOW, s. A cut or slice, pron. stoo; S. B., Roxb., the same with Stoltum; from Stow, v. to crop, to lop.

"Stow, a large cut or piece;" Gl. Shirr.

STOWKIT, s. A shock of corn; the same with Stook, Aberd. Reg.

STOWINS, s. pl. The tender blades or sprouts nipt from a plant of colewart or any other vegetable, S.

O' meals sit-parritch was the best,
Or stowins, o'en right poorly drest.
Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 63.

STOW, interj. Hush, silence, Orkn.

Perhaps from Su.-G. stoa, Isl. staa, to stand; q. stop, cease.

STOW, s. A stove. Pl. stouis, stoves.

—"Fewall—is alreddie brocht to ane grit decay within the boundis of this realme be the excessive spending and consumption thair of for laik of the formes of killis, stowis, and furnessis eftermentionate." Acts Ja. VI., 1598, Ed. 1814, p. 187.

Su.-G. stufica, anc. stuw, A.-S. stofa, hypocaustum.

STOWEN, s. A gluttonous fellow; as, "He's a great stowen for his guts," Teviotd.

It would seem to be properly a part., q. stowand, stowend; O. Teut. stouw-en, acervare, accumulare, cogere; Dan. stuv-er, to stow, stuver, a stower.

STOWLINS, adv. Clandestinely, q. by theft, from stouth, stealth, S. Stowenlins, S. A.

—A' his aim at putting, jump, or play,
Is frae the rest to bear the gree away;
And stowlins tectin' wi' a wishfu' ee,
Gin she he loves his manly feats does see.

Morison's Poems, p. 164, 185.

—Stowenlins, whan thou was na thinkin,
I'd been wi' bonnie lasses jinkin.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 53.

—Tho' we stowlins eat, yet man
At theft an' robbing is na shau.

Picken's Poems, i. 67.

This differs from Stowlins, merely in being formed from the part. pa. Stowen, stolen, while the other is from the noun, q. Stouthlins.

STOWN, STOWIN, part. pa. Stolen, from which word it is softened.

"Oft tymes geir tynt or stowin, is gettin agane he coungerars," Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 16. b. V. Stомок.

STOWP, s. A post, as that of a bed; the same with Stoop.

"Item, ane bed of yallow dames—and foure coverings for the stowppis, all freinyeit with yallow silk." Inventories, A. 1562, p. 154.

[STOWPAND, part. pr. Stooping, Barbour, viii. 297.]

[STOWTAR, adj. Stouter, sturdier, Barbour, xiv. 2.]

[To STOY, v. n. To walk leisurely, to saunter; part. pr., stoyin, used also as a s., Banffs.]

[Stoy, s. A leisurely walk, a saunter, ibid.]

STOYLE, s. A long vest, reaching to the ancles; E. Stole.

"Item, ane chesabill of purpourt velvot; with the stoyle and fannowne orphis," &c. Inventories, A. 1542, p. 58.

Fr. stole, Lat. stola, id.

STRA, STRAE, STRAY, s. 1. A straw, S.

—With hir cours na reile nor tendir stray
Was harmyt oucht, nor hurt by any way.

Doug. Virgil, 237, b. 26.

2. Metaph., a thing of no value.

Stra for thys ignorant blabering imperlite.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 3, 36.

A.-S. stre, Su.-G. straa, A. Bor. streea, id.

3. To draw a strae before ane, to attempt to deceive one, S.

I'm our auld a cat to draw a strae before, Prov. S.; or as given by Ferguson, p. 21. "It is ill to draw a strae before an auld cat." Signifying that one has too much experience to be easily deceived.

VOL. IV.

"Morton was too old a cat, to draw such a strae before him, or to propound any thing tending that way; wherefore their best was to make him away, that so the plot might goo on." Hume's Hist. Doug., p. 347.

The phraseology is also inverted.

"The Earle of Angus, though he were no very old cat,—yet was he too warie and circumspect to be drawn by a strae." Ibid., p. 228.

This proverb is undoubtedly very ancient, and must have been transmitted from our Gothic ancestors. The very same occurs in Su.-G. Thet aer suuart, at draga straa, for gumla kuttor, i.e., It is difficult to deceive an old cat. Draga straa foer en, to deceive; ibro.

It is vulgarly believed that those who have the power of that species of fascination called catling glaumer, often employ a strae, making it appear as large as a pole.

There seems to be a vestige of the magical use of strae in incantation in Sempie's Legend. V. STRAE.

Principal Baillie has a phrase, now obsolete, which most probably contains a similar allusion.

"It seems Digby and Langdale intended to have kept Montrose's parliament at Glasgow, but—God laid a straw in their way. In their route, Digby's coach was taken, and sundry of his writs."—Letters, ii. 166.

4. To bind or tie with a strae. When one is so overcome with laughter, as to have no power over himself, it is commonly said, Ye might hae bund him wi' a strae, S.

"No stage play could have produced such an effect;—every member of the Synod might have been tied with a straw, they were so overcome with this new device of that endless woman, when bent on provocation." Annals of the Parish, p. 157.

STRAE-DEAD, adj. Used in the sense of, quite dead, S.

"And gin ye dinna haste ye, doakter, I'm in a dridder it may be strae dead afore ye come on till't." Glenfergus, ii. 21.

STRAE-DEATH, s. [Natural death.] A fair strae-death, a natural death on one's bed, as opposed to a violent or an accidental one, S.

For a' the claiht that we ha'e worn,
Frae her and her's sae often shorn,
The loss o' her we cou'd hae born,
Had fair strae-death tane her awa'.

Skinner's Mis. Col.

This term alludes to the simple manners of our forefathers, who slept on straw. Hence the phraseology retained, S. B.

Sick, sick she grows, as ever lay on straw,
And near gae up the ghost 'tweesh that and wae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 56.

Isl. stradaudi, mors senectute decrepiti; Dan. straa-doed, id.

It is entirely a Goth. idiom. Su.-G. straa-dor, id., from straa, straw, and dor, to die. Isl. stradaudi, mors senectute decrepiti; Dan. straa-doed, id.

The warlike Goths reckoned this kind of death disgraceful. They therefore denominated it Kerlinga daude, i.e., the death of old women, S. carlins' dale; Keyser. Antiq. Septent., p. 145. V. GER.

According to an entertaining English writer, some of the Highlanders carry this still farther, accounting it more honourable to die even by a halter. He tells of a woman who, being interrogated as to the characters of three husbands she had had, "said, the two first were honest men, and very careful of their family ; for they both died for the Law. That is, were hang'd for theft. Well, but as to the last? 'Hout!' says she, 'a fulthy peast! He dy'd at hame, like an auld dug, on a puckle o' strae.'" Burt's Letters, ii. 232, 233.

An account of the Highland manners, nearly resembling this, may be found in Waverley, i. 272. It concludes with these words:

"'You hope such a death for your friend, Evan?'—'And that I do e'en; would you have me wish him to die on a bundle of wet straw in yon den of his, like a mangy tyke?'"

[STRAE-DRAWN, adj. Marked on the ear by a thin slice being cut out from top to bottom, Shetl.]

STRAEIN, adj. Of or belonging to straw, S. A straein ruip, a rope made of straw; A.-S. strawene, id.

STRAA. To SAY STRAA to one. To find fault with one, to lay any thing to one's charge. Naebody dare say Straa to him.

Probably allied to Teut. and Germ. straffe, Dan. straf, poena, supplicium; animalversio, correptio. Alem. straf, strof, punitus; Su.-G. straff-a, Dan. straf-e, punire. Dan. straffe prædiken, an invective. Synon., "Naebody can say Bo to his blanket," S. Prov. It nearly resembles the Su.-G. phrase, lag kan ej straffa honom, Ego ipsum criminis accusare non possum; Ihre, vo. Straffa.

STRABBLE, STRAB, s. 1. Any thing hanging loose and awkwardly, or trailed on the ground; a shred, a tatter, S. B.

[2. A long withered stalk of grass, &c.; a piece of straw, Banffs.]

Yer head's just like a heather-bush
Wi' strabs and straes.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 5.

Teut. strobbe signifies frutex. But strabs would seem to be merely a provincial variety of straps, which occurs in a similar connexion, "Straps and straes." V. STRAPS.

[To STRABBLE, v. n. To hang in tatters, ibid.]

[STRABBLIE, adj. Full of shreds or long fibres, ibid.]

STRABUSH, s. Tumult, uproar, S. allied perhaps to Su.-G. rabbus, tumultus, qualis esse solet hostium diripientium.

Strabash is the pronunciation of Fife.

"But haena we been weel awa frae this town this mornin' an' yesterday? Siccan a strabash as has been in't syn we left it!" Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 171. "Perhaps rather from Dan. strabas, pain, trouble, toil, labour;" Wolff.

STRACK, adj. Strict, S. B. A.-S. strae, upright, strict, severe. V. STRAK.

STRACUMMAGE, s. The same with strabush, Fife.

STRADDLE, s. The small saddle, or furniture, put on the back of a carriage-horse, for supporting the shafts of the carriage, Sutherl. Car-saddle, synon.

Prob., so named from its bestriding the horse.

STRAE, s. Straw. V. STRA.

[STRAFF, s. A strait, a difficulty, Shetl. Dan. and Sw. straff, penalty, punishment.]

STRAG, s. "A thin-growing crop, the stalks straggling;" Gall. Enc.

A.-S. stræg-an, to scatter.

STRAGGER, s. A straggler, Ettr. For.

I know not whether this should be viewed as an abbrev. of Stravager, or as allied to Isl. strakur, adulescens cursor; strok-u, cursitare.

STRAICIEK, s. A stroke.

"Yong Octouian lamentit hauly the slauchtir of his faier adoptive Cesar, that gat xxii. straiciekis vitht pen knyuis in the capitol." Compl. of S., p. 38, 39.

Dr. Leyden refers to A.-S. straician, to stroak. He must have meant strac-an, id. But the sense (demulcere), is rather adverse to the id-a here expressed, It is probable that the word had been written strakis, or straickis, i.e., strokes or blows.

STRAICT, STRAYTE, s. A narrow pass.

And at Roslyne at the last,
There in the Stractis, thait tuk down,
And stentyt tent and pawillown.

Wyntown, viii. 16. 89.

[STRAIF, pret. Strove. Barbour, vi. 185.]

STRAIFFIN, s. The thin filmy substance made of the secundine of a cow, used for covering the mouths of bottles, &c. Sutherl.

STRAIGHT, s. A straight line, S.

"That the distance from opposite the angle of the ford dyke to the Coffin-stone on the Seaton side, taking the straight, and leaving the small angles and turns of the banks unnoticed, is about 2060 feet." State, Fraser of Fraserfield, 1805, p. 186. V. STRAUCHT.

To STRAIGHT, v. a. To lay out a dead body, S. O.; synon. Streik, S. B., and Straughten.

"Meg—got the body straightened in a wonderful decent manner, with a plate of earth and salt placed upon it—an admonitory type of mortality and eternal life, that has ill-advisedly gone out of fashion." Annals of the Parish, p. 220.

To STRAIK, STRAYK, v. a. 1. To stroke, to rub gently with the hand, S.

With Venus hen wyffis, quhat wyse may I flyte?
That straykis thir wenschis hedes thame to pleis.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 96, 54.

A.-S. strac-an, Germ. streich-en, Su.-G. stryk-a; molliter fricare.

O. E. Stryke was used in all these senses. 1. "I stryke ones heed as we do a chylde whan he dothe well: Je applanie. My father sayeth I am a good sonne; he dyl stryke my heed because I had conned my lesson without the booke."—2. "I stryke a thyng with hony, I lay hony a brode vpon it: Je emmielle. I hald as lefe stryke my breed with butter as with hony."—3. "I stryke, I make smothe.—Stryke ouer this paper: Aplaniſsez ce papier." Palsgr., B. iii., F. 376, b. 377, a.

2. To anoint with any unctuous substance, S.

Su.-G. stryka a up haret med pomaila, to rub up the hair with pomatum, S. To straik bread, to put butter on it; stryka smør pa broed, id. Wileg. Sw. stryka ut et plaaster, to spread a plaister.

3. To render even, as in measuring grain in a bushel or firlok, when a straight piece of wood, or roller, is drawn across the top of the measure, S.

O. E. "Strekyn or make pleyne by mesure as bushell or other lyke. Hostior. Hostio." Prompt. Parv.

Su.-G. stryka has the same application, to smooth a measure of corn by the stritchel. Hence struket maal, i.e., straked measure, is opposed to rogadt maal, mensurae cumulate; Ihre, vo. Stryka.

- To STRAIK TAILS with one. To make an exchange of goods of any kind, where one article is given for another without boot on either side; Fife.

[When two cats meet on friendly terms, they exchange greetings and rub tails.]

- STRAIK, s. 1. The act of stroking, S. Germ. streech, id.

"And for eschewing of fraud, hes thought expelient that all victual salbe measured be strak." Acts James VI. 1587, c. 114. Skene. This is called straked measure, as opposed to heaped.

2. A piece of hard wood, with straight edges, used for stroking off all that is above the legal measure of grain, salt, &c., in the vessel used for measurement, S.

This in our Acts is denominated Ring-straik, because fastened by a ring to an iron bar, which, according to the enactment, should cross the vessel.

"That the said cowpar cause the ring-straik of the said firlok passe from the one end of the said over iron barre to the other." Acts Ja. VI., 1618, iv. 586.

3. The quantity of grain that is stroked or rubbed off from the top of the bushel, in the act of measurement, S.

In this sense, it would appear, the term is used in the following passage;

"The bern preferred home-brewed ale to Scotch twopenny, and never quitted hold of the tankard with so much reluctance, as when there had been, by some manœuvre of Jasper's own device, a double strak of malt allowed to the brewing." The Pirate, i. 72.

O. E. "Strike of a mesure. Hostorium. Hostorium." Prompt. Parv.

4. The act of anointing, S.

- STRAIKER, s. That with which corn is stroked, for levelling it with the bushel, S. Strickle, Stritchel, E.

- [To STRAIK, v. a. To strike.] To straik hands, to join hands.

The bridal-day it came to pass;—

This winsome couple straked hands,

Mess John ty'd up the marriage-hands,

Muirland Willie, Herd's Coll., ii. 76.

The ancient Goths had a similar mode of confirming bargains, to express which they used a term synon. with Strike. This is slaa, ferire, percutere. Ex con-suetudine veterum, qui contractus suos complosione dextrarum manuum firmabant, usurpatur in significatione paciscendi. Hinc slaa sig til samman, in societatem concedere. Ihre, vo. Slaa, col. 656.

- STRAIK, pret. v. Struck.

Thus wourthit Schir Gawyne wrnith and wepand,

And straik to that stern knight, but ony styt.

Gawan and Gol., iii. 26.

- STRAIK, STRAKE, s. 1. A stroke, a blow, S.

Bot wyth his diuinacion nor augury

The strak of deith ne couth he not pnt by.

Doug. Virgil, 237, 28.

"I sall visit and punis thair wyckednes with a wand, and thair synnis with strakia." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechism, 1552, Fol. 23, a.

2. Metaph. used as signifying remorse.

"Therefore knowledge must go before the strak of the consience. Thy hart can neuer feele that to be euill, quhilk thy mynde knawis not to be euill." Bruce's Sermon on the Sacr., N. 8, a.

Germ. streich, Sw. streck, ictus.

3. An engagement in the field of battle.

At the first strak with thaim he had nocht beyne;

With him he led a thousand weill besyne.

Wallace, vi. 634, MS.

From the idea of striking a battle.

4. Coinage, the act of striking money.

"As anentis the money, it is referrit to the act's maid of befor he the xxiiii personis chosin thairt, baith for the hame bringing of the bulyeon be the merchandis, and of the new strak to be maid." Acts James II., 1449, c. 30 Edit. 1566.

5. The sound of the clock, like E. Stroke.

"That na man in burghie be fundyn in tauernys at wyne, aile, or beir, efter the strak of ix hours, and the bell that salbe rongyn in the said burghie," &c. Parl. Ja. I., A. 1436, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 24.

- REDDING-STRAIK, s. V. under RED, REDD, v. To clear.

- STRAIK, s. [1. A streak, a line, a longitudinal mark, S.]

2. A tract, an extent of country, S.B.

3. Ground travelled over. A lang straik, a long excursion on foot, S.B.

4. An excursion, the act of travelling over a considerable tract, S.

"Aweel, we've haen a fine straik, and are now safe hame agen." Tennant's C. Beaton, p. 171.

5. Upo' straik, in motion, in a state of activity, S.B.

A.-S. strica, strice, tractus, linea, directio, from stric-an, ire, proficisci, cursum tenere. V. STRAUGHT, s.

- To STRAIK, v. n. To take an excursion, Fife.

"We'd better slip awa' soon to our beds the night, that we may rise wi' the day daw, if we're to struik down to the coast." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 28.

- STRAIKEN, adj. Linen cloth made of coarse flax, and worn for shirts by working people; generally pron. streekin, S.O. Isl. strigi, textura cannabina.

At that time men cou'd gang to market,
Wi' plaidin' hose, and straiken sarket.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 111.

V. GASH, adj.

STRAIT BIELDS, s. Shelter. V. BEILD.

To STRAIT, v. a. To straighten, to tighten, Aberd.

O. Fr. stret, streit, stroit, reserré, étroit; Lat. stringere, stric-tus.

STRAITIT, part. pa. Constrained.

"And incaice thair sones efter thair depairture out of the cuntrey sall hant the exercises of contrarie religion—that thair parentis—salbe straitit to find caution actit in the buikis of secrite counsals vndir suche panes as sall be modifeit." Acts Ja. VI., 1609, Edit. 1814, p. 406. Fr. estroit, id.

[STRAITIE, s. The shank of the leg, Shetl.]

STRAITIS, s. pl. "A kind of coarse woollen cloth, or kersey;" Gl. Sibb.

Thair gloves wer of the raffel richt,
Thair schone wer of the straitis.

Chr. Kirk, st. 2.

Sibb. seems justly to reject the common idea that this means Morocco leather, or that which was brought "from the Straits of Gibraltar." For this woollen stuff is mentioned in several O.E. Acts of Parl. as An. 18. Hen. 2., 4. Edw. 4. c. 1. and 1 Rich. 3. c. 8.

STRAK, adv. Straight, in a straight line.

And quhen [that] Jhou off Lorn saw
The hund [so hard] eftre him draw,
And folow strak eftre thair twa,
He knew the King wes ane off tha.

Barbour, vi. 587, MS.

A.-S. strac, right, direct; Alem. strack, id. Su.-G. stracks, a straight road; Isl. Gangy strak til Jerusalem, They go straight to Jerusalem.

STRAK, STRAKE, pret. Struck; perhaps more properly strack, S.

"For my own pleasure, as the man strake his wife;" S. Prov.; "a foolish answer to them who ask you why you do such a thing." Kelly, p. 108.

[STRAK, s. A stroke, Barbour, v. 643, Camb. MS.]

[STRAM, adj. Rough, rude, noisy, Aberd.; used also as a s., applied to a person, Banffs.]

[To STRAM, v. n. To walk with rude, noisy steps, to jostle, ibid.]

STRAMASH, s. Disturbance, disorder, broil, Loth. synon. strabush, S.; also Straemash, Ayrs.

"Others think she will raise sick a stramash, that she will send the whole government in to the air, like peelings of ingons, by a gunpooter plot." Ayrs. Legatees.

"I' the middle o' the stramash, ye'll no hinner Bryan to gang owre the burn an' couk about through the busses like a whitret." Saint Patrick, i. 169.

"Lucky, here, has just been telling me that there's like to be a stramash amang the Reformers." R. Gilhaize, i. 153.

Ital. stramaz-are, to fling, cast, beat, or strike down with force.

Fr. estramaçon, a blow, a cuff. Hence perhaps our term a little varied, may have been used to denote a broil in which persons come to blows. A. Bor. to stramash, to crack or break irreparably, A. Bor.

To STRAMP, v. n. To tread, to trample, S.

Sa Christ is signyfyt the stane,
Quhais monarchie sall neuer be gane;
For vnder his dominioun,
All princis salbe strampit down.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 108.

"Thou art over peart, Lown, to stramp on my foot; were thou out of the King's presence, I should take thee on the mouth." Pitscottie, p. 98.

Our trechour Peirs thair tyrraus treit,
Quha jyb them, and thair substance eit,
And on thair honour stramp.

Vision, st. 8, Evergreen, l. 216.

"Stramp, to tread upon, to trample;" Gl. Brockett. Germ. strampfen, id. used by Luther, in his version, Job xxxix. 24.

STRAMP, s. The act of trampling, S.

"But the stramp of Mr. Patrick Lindesay was so sad on his brother's foot, who had a sore toe, that the pain thereof was very dolorous." Pitscottie, Fol. Edit. p. 98.

STRAMPER, s. A trampler, one who tramples, Teviotd.

STRAMULLEUGH, adj. "Cross, ill-natured, sour;" S.O., Gl. Picken.

Ir. mollach is ragged, rough, shaggy.

STRAMULLION, s. 1. A term used to denote a strong masculine woman, Fife.

[Lit. a stram hullion, a rough, strong serving-wench. V. HULLION.]

2. A fit of ill humour, a display of pettishness, Clydes.; sometimes Stramullion, S.B.

STRAMULYERT, part. adj. Confounded, panic-struck, Angus.

Wi' mony a sigh and dolefu' grane,
John gaz'd stramulyert on the scene:
Dim wax'd the lustre o' his ee,
He guess'd the weird he had to dree.

Beattie's John o' Arnha', p. 64.

STRAM-YULLOCH, s. A battle, a broil; given as synon. with Stramash, Gall. Enc., p. 439.

Yulloch might seem to be corr. from Yelloch, as referring to the noise made in such an uproar. But this must certainly be viewed as merely a variety of Stramulleugh.

STRAMMEL, s. A cant word for straw; Strommel. Grose's Class. Dict. O. Fr. estramier, id.

"Yes, you are a' altered—you'll eat the goodman's meat, drink his drink, sleep on the strammel in his barn, and break his house and cut his throat for his pains." Guy Mannering, ii. 98.

This might originally denote the broken straw; Dan. strimmel, a shred.

STRAND, s. 1. A small brook, a rivulet.

On salt stremes wolk Dorida and Thetis
By rynnand strandis, Nymphes and Naiades.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 402, 28.

2. A gutter, a passage for water, S.

Wallace and his thair wist off no ramoid
Bot could wattr that ran throu owt a strand;
In that lugeyng name othir fud thair fand.
Wallace, xl. 443, MS.

This sense, in which the term is still commonly used, as well as the former, is a deviation from that of all the other Northern dialects; in which it signifies, as in E., the shore, the margin of the sea, or any water.

"Strand, a kennel, or occasional rill, caused by falling rain; which, when heavy, makes the strands run;" Yorks., Marshall.

STRANG, adj. 1. Strong, powerful.

Away, away, thou traitor strang!
Out o' my sight soon may'st thou be!
I grantit never a traitor's life,
And now I'll not begin with thee.
Minstreley Border, l. 64.

Strange, id. is used by Blind Harry.

Schir Amar Wallange, a fals traytour strange,
In Bothwell duelt, and thar was thaim amange.
Wallace, iii. 261, MS.

A.-S. strang, Alem. streng, robustus.

2. Harsh to the taste, bitter, S.B.

Germ. streng, id. Isl. strang, asper, durus, rigidus.
Sw.-G. magstark is used in the same sense.

STRANG, s. Human urine long kept, and smelling strongly; otherwise called Stale Master, Aberd.; Gall., Dumfr.

He niest fell in wi' Mungo's wig,
An' Lowrie's sneeshin' mill;
Sae stappit baith in Kittie's pig.
An' steepit them right weel
Mang strang that night.
Jam. Cock's Simple Strains, p. 137.

"Strang, old urine,—used in washing;" Gall. Enc.
This seems merely an ellipsis, q. "strong urine."
V. STRANG, adj.

STRANG PIG. The earthen vessel in which urine is preserved as a lye, S.O.

"Strang, old urine, kept in the strang pig," &c.
Gall. Enc.

To STRANGE, v. n. To wonder, S.

I strange to hear you speak in sic a stile.
Shirrefs' Poems, p. 164.

[STRANGE-LIKE, adj. Having an old look, S.]

To STRAP, v. n. To be hanged, S.

But the thief maun strap, and the hawk come hame.
Jacobite Relics, l. 97.

From E. Strap, a long stripe of cloth or leather.

It is also used as an active v.

"Weel I wot its a crime baith by the law of God and man, and mony a pretty man has been strapped for it." St. Ronan, ii. 26.

STRAPIS, s. pl.

Tua leathering bosses he hes bought;

Thay will not brek, albeit they fall;

"Thir strapis of trie destroyis us all,

"Thay brek so mony, I may nocht byde it."

Legend Bp. St. Androis, p. 338.

Strapis seems merely the E. term denoting long slips of cloth or leather; applied either to the panniers in which earthen jars were carried in travelling, or to the staves of which barrels are made.

STRAP-OIL, s. The application of the shoe-maker's strap as the instrument of drubbing. The operation is sometimes called anointing, Roxb.; synonym. Hazel-oil, from the use of a twig of hazel for the same purpose, S.

STRAPPING, STRAPPAN, part. adj. Tall; generally including the idea of handsomeness, S.

—"Randolph, the English minister, proposed to hire a band of strapping Elliots, to find Home business at home, in looking after his corn and cattle." Keith ap. Minstreley Border, l. xxxv.

Wi' kindly welcome Jenny brings him ben,

A strappan youth; he takes the mother's eye;

Blythe Jenny sees the visit's no ill ta'en;

The father cracks of horses, ploughs, and kye.

Burns, iii. 176.

STRAPS, s. pl. Ends of thread from the dish-clout, sometimes found in victuals, Kinross.

A man who found a mouse among his porridge, said to his landlady;

On straps and straes we maun concither;

But I dinna like motes that look till ither.

Teut. strepe, stria, striga, linea.

[STRAT, adj. Narrow, Barbour, vi. 362; comp. struter, super. stratest.]

[STRATE, s. A narrow pass, Barbour, iv. 458.]

[STRATLY, adv. Closely, straitly, Ibid., vii. 216.]

[STRATNES, s. Narrowness, Ibid., xii. 430.]

STRATH, s. A valley of considerable size, through which a river runs, S. It forms the initial syllable of a great many names of districts in S.

"In this district there is a considerable strath, i. e., valley, or level land between hills." P. Kiltarn, Ross. Statist. Acc. i. 360.

"A strath is a flat place of arable land, lying along the side or sides of some capital river, between the water and the feet of the hills; and keeps its name till the river comes to be confined to a narrow space, by stony moors, rocks, or windings among the mountains." Burt's Letters, ii. 16.

C.B. ystrad, "a flat, a vale, a bottom or valley, formed by the course of a river. It forms the name of many places in Wales, as Ystrad Yr, Ystrad Theyl, and the like;" Owen.

Gael. srath, a country confined by hills on two sides of a river.

STRATHSPEY, s. 1. A dance in which two persons are engaged, otherwise called a turasum dance, S.

[2. A lively tune adapted to such a dance, S.]

Named from the country of Strathspey in S., probably as having been first used there.

STRAUCHT, adj. Straight, direct. The straucht road, the direct way, S.

A.-S. straecs, Germ. streck, rectus.

This, ought to be viewed as originally the part. pa. of A.-S. strecc-an, and other Goth. verbs, signifying to stretch. For a straight line gives us the idea of that which is stretched out between two points.

STRAUCHT, s. 1. A straight line, S. B.

2. A district, S. B. Straik, synonym. q. v.

STRAUCHT, STRAWCHT, adv. 1. Straight, in a straight line, S.

This Malcolm's entryd in Scotland,
And past oure Forth, down strawcht to Tay,
Wynntown, vi. 18, 357, MS.

2. Directly, immediately.

And strawcht vnto the presence soleylny
Off dame Minerne, the pacient goddesse,
Gude Hope my gyde led me redily.

King's Quair, iv. 8.

Germ. Belg. strack, cito; Dan. strac, id.

To STRAUCHT, v. a. 1. To make straight, to stretch; pret. straucht, straughtit, S.

Baith hys handis joyfully furth straucht he than.
Doug. Virgil, 189, 17.

"I hae never heard o' ane that sleepit the night afore trial, but of mony a ane that sleepit as sound as a tap the night before their necks were straughted." Heart M. Loth. ii. 313.

Straucht is also used for the part. pa., from streik; as raucht, from reik.

2. To stretch a corpse on what is called the Dead-deal, S.; synonym. Streik, S. B.

"She—gathered his brains, and tied up his head, and straughted his body, and covered him with her plaid, and sat down and wept over him." Walker's Peden, p. 43.

"—Hand of woman or of man either, will never straught him—dead-deal will never be laid till his back." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 231.

"Let us do what is needfu';—for if the dead corpse binna straughted, it will girn and thraw, and that will fear the best of us." Ibid. p. 233.

To STRAUGHTEN, v. a. To stretch out; used to denote the act of laying out a corpse, Dumfr.; synonym. Streik, Straight, and Straucht.

"—She'll make a gruesome and unsensie corse. It will be a deft hand that can straughten her." Blackw. Mag., Aug., 1820, 513.

"If red wine can cheer ye, e'en sigh and souk away, and leave me to straughten this crooked bouk." Ibid., Sept., 1820, p. 632.

To STRAVAIG, v. n. To stroll, to wander; to go about idly, S.

—Pith, that helps them to stravaig
Owr ilka cleugh an' ilka craig.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 106.

"To vraig, is in common use as well as stravaig." Gl. Compl. vo. Vagit, p. 379.

Ital. stravag-are, from Lat. extravag-are, to wander abroad; whence also Fr. extravaguer, id.

[STRAVAIG, s. An aimless walk or stroll; also, the act of wandering about idly, Clydes., Banffs.]

STRAVAIGER, s. 1. One who wanders about idly, a stroller, S. Strayvayger, Stravauger.

"Here are twa unco landloupers cumin dirdin down the hill—the tane o' them a heech knock-kneed stravaiger wi' the breeks on, and the tither, aye o' the women—folk, as roun's she's lang, in a green joseph, and a tappan o' feathers on her pow." Blackw. Mag., Sept., 1819, p. 709.

"It is hard to be eaten out o' house an' hald wi' sorners and stravagers this gate." Perils of Man, iii. 321.

"I turn't at the lin, jealousying that ye wad be a' hame afore me, an' saebins ye warn't, maybe some hill stravauger wad hae seen or hard tell o' ye." Saint Patrick, i. 166.

2. One who leaves his former religious connexion, S.

"Nor was there wanting edifying monuments of resignation even among the strayvaygers." Annals of the Parish, p. 392.

STRAVAIGING, s. The act or practice of strolling, S.

A. Bor. Stravaiging, strolling about; generally in a bad sense; Gl. Brockett.

STRAVALD, s. A foreign measure.

"Ane thousand brasill makis the tun. Item, Sax hundreth straval is aye tun." Balfour's Pract., p. 88.

STRAWN, s. A gutter, West of S.

—Ay the king of storms was foamin,
The doors did ring, lunn-pigs down tuml'd;
The strawns gush'd big,—the synks loud ruml'd.
Tannahill's Poems, p. 126.

V. STRAND.

STRAWN, s. A strawn of beads, a string of beads, Mearns.

Teut. strene is synonym. with stringhe; F. string.

STRAY. On stray, astray.

The stedis stakerit in the stour, for streking on stray.
Gawan and Gol., iii. 21.

Perhaps this is equivalent to astray, like on brede, &c., q. "staggered aside in consequence of the violence of the stroke."

STREATH, s. A term used to denote the mode of drinking formerly observed in the Western Islands.

"The manner of drinking used by the chief men of the isles, is called in their language Strath, i.e., "a Round;" for the company sat in a circle, the cup-bearer filled the drink round to them, and all was drunk out, whatever the liquor was, whether strong or weak. They continued drinking sometimes twenty-four, sometimes forty-eight hours. It was reckon'd a piece of manhood to drink until they became drunk, and there were two men with a barrow attending punctually on such occasions. They stood at the door until some became drunk, and they carry'd them upon the barrow to bed, and returned again to their post as long as any continued fresh, and so carry'd off the whole company one by one as they became drunk. Several of my acquaintance have been witnesses to this custom of drinking; but it is now abolished." Martin's West Isl., p. 106.

Gael. srath is by Shaw rendered, "a row, rank," &c.

To STREAMER, v. a. To streak, to cover with straggling flashes of light, resembling the aurora borealis, S. A.

"In the solemn gloom of the evening, after the last rays—had disappeared, and again in the morning before they began to streamer the east, the song of praise was sung to that Being, under whose fatherly chastisement they were patiently suffering." Brownie of Bolsbeck, i. 21.

STREAPE, s. A small rill. V. STRIPE.

STREASE, s. pl. Prob. for straws.

—Raising the devil with invocations,
With herbis, stanis, buikis, and bellis,—
Palme croces, and knottis of strease.

Legend Bp. St. Andrew, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 318.

STREAUW, s. Straw, Ettr. For.

STREAW, STROW, s. The shrew mouse, Gall.

Wi' hungry inaw he scoors frae knowe to knowe,
In hopes of food in mowdy, mouse, or strowe.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 4.

She nyarr'd when she gat him as he had been a mouse,
Or some lang-snouted, cheaping strowe.

Gall. Enycl., p. 143.

[STRECOUR, s. A dog for the chase;
lit. a runner, Barbour, vi. 487. A.-S. strican, to continue a course.]

To STREEK down. To lie down flat. V. STREIK.

To STREEL, v. n. To urinate forcibly, Fife; synon. Strule, q. v.

STREEN. The streen, the evening of yesterday. V. STREIN.

STRENGE, s. A stroke, Fife; a variety of Skrenge; or from Lat. string-ere, to strike.

[To STRENGE, v. a. To beat, scourge, ib.]

STREICH, adj. Stiff and affected in speaking.

And be I ornate in my speiche,
Than Towsy sayis, I am sa streich,
I speik not lyk thair hous menyie.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 63.

Perhaps from A.-S. stracc, strict; or rather Fr. estrecci, straitened, contracted, made short.

To STREIK, STREEK, v. a. 1. To stretch, S.

To Streck, expandere; Northumb., Ray; to stretch out the limbs; Thoresby.

—Ilk proud o' what he's done,
Now homeward turns, and oer the burn brae
Strecks out his weary shanks and laps his fill.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 28.

2. To lay out a dead body, S. A. Bor.

The waxen lights were burning bright,
And fair Annie streckit there.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 32.

"I find in Durant a pretty exact account of some of the ceremonies used at present in what we call laying out or strecking in the North.—A strecking-board is that on which they stretch out and compose the limbs of the dead body." Brand's Popular Antiquities, p. 23.

3. To engage in any work, the noun added determining the nature of the work, S. B.

As day last week, I mind it weel,
She happ'd by chance to streck the wheel.

Morison's Poems, p. 109.

i.e., to spin.

When cogs are skim'd, an' cirn streckit,
The yellow drops fast in are steckit.

Ibid., p. 111.

One streck the rake, or to the house and spin;
Who eats a breakfast, should a breakfast win.

Ibid., p. 131.

[4. To streck the plew, to draw the first furrow after harvest, Aberd., Banffs.

This was done with great ceremony: the whole household attending. Bread, cheese, and home-brewed ale were partaken of by all present; and a piece of bread and cheese was thrown over the field or put into the pleugh, as an offering to the birds. See Gl. Banffs.] A.-S. streck-an, expandere, Germ. streck-en.

To STREIK, STREEK, v. n. 1. To extend.

Fra thine strekis the way profound anone
Depe vnto hellis flude of Acherone.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 35.

2. To go quickly, S. B.

O'er hill and dale with fury she did dreel;
A' roads to her were good and bad alike,
Nane o't she wyl'd, but forward on did streck.

Ross's Helenore, p. 56.

A.-S. strec-an, to go, to proceed; Isl. strik-a, Su.-G. stryk-a, currere, vagari. Isl. striuka a brant, aufugere, q. to streck abroad. Su.-G. stryka omkring i landet, to ramble about the country. Wideg. Germ. streich-en, Teut. stryck-en, tendere, proficisci.

3. To streck down, to lie down flat, to stretch one's self at full length, S.

A Jacobite virago, who had filled the stool of repentance, is introduced as saying; "Vengeance on the black face o't! Mony an honest woman's been set upon it than streaks doon beside ony whig in the country." Waverley, ii. 122.

STREIK, STREEK, s. 1. A handful of flax; also, a small bundle of flax into which flax dressers roll what they have already dressed, Lanarks.

O. E. "Streck of flax. Limpulus." Prompt. Parv.

2. Extent, S. V. STRAIK, Upo Straik.

3. The longitudinal direction of a stratum of coal in a mine, or a district of country.

"At Preston Grange these coals are found dipping to the N.W.—all which is a course, which in streck lies near to S.W. and N.W., and will be in length about eight miles." Sinclair's Hydrost. Misc. Obs., p. 263.

"The longitude is nothing else than what is termed by the coal-hewers, the streck. For if you imagine a line along the extreme points of the rise or crop of the coal, that is properly the streck of the coal." Ibid. p. 273.

4. Opinion; as, "Tak your ain Streich," i.e., take your own way, Clydes.

It has also been expl. "chance;" q. "Let him take his chance." Ibid.

This phrase, however, seems merely equivalent to

"Let him take his course," or "go to his stretch," q.
"go all the length of his tether."

5. Speed, expedition. To mak little streik, to make small progress, S. B.

6. Exertion in whatever way, S. B.

Contrive na we, your shacklebanes
Will mak but little streik.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 35.

7. Bustle, tumultuous noise, disturbance. It is said, that there is a michty streik in the house, when people are buzzing up and down in a confused way. To raise a streik, to make much ado, to make great noise or disturbance, S. B. V. the preceding v.

[STRIKER, STREEKER, s. A very tall person, Clydes., Banffs.]

STREIKIN', part. adj. Tall and agile; as, "a streiken' hizzie," a tall, tight, active girl, Teviotd.

STREIKING-BURD, STRETCHING-BURD, s. The board on which a dead body is stretched, before the animal heat is gone, S. A. V. STREIK, v. a.

STREIN, STREEN, s. The strein, yesternight, S.

The streen to chamber I him leil;
This night Gray Steel bath made his bed.
Sir Egeir, p. 53.

V. MIRLIGOGES.

Corr., as would seem, from Yidrene, q. v.

To STREIND, STREEND, r. a. To sprain, Roxb., Berwicks.

STREIND, STREEND, s. A sprain, ibid.

This must be merely a slight deviation from E. Strain, or Fr. estreind-re, id. estreinte, a sprain. V. STREYND.

STREIPILLIS, s. pl. Apparently, stirrups. "Ane sadill with streipillis;" Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

A dimin. from the E. word, or from Isl. stigreip, A.-S. stiga-rap, a rope for ascending; unless it might be viewed as a corr. of what Kilian calls the vulgar or L. B. name, strepasellae.

To STREK, STREKE, STRYKE, v. n. To extend; [strekil, stretched, Barbour, xviii. 130.]

"This statute sal nocht streke to bordouraris duelland on the marches bot for thift to be done eftir the making of this statute." Parl. Ja. I., A. 1436, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 23. Stryke, Ed. 1566. V. STREIK.

To STREK A BORGH. V. BORCH, BORGH, s.

STREK, adj. Tight, strait. E. strict is used in this sense.

For gif ye hauld your saie our strek,
Thair may cum bubbis ye not suspek.
Schaw, Mailland Poems, p. 133.

Germ. strack, tensus, intensus; from streck-en, tendere, intendere. Belg. strikk-en, to tie, strikk, a knot; Su.-G. strek, a rope, funis.

[STREKYT, part. pa. Stricken, i.e., fought, Barbour, xiii. 152.]

[STREMAND, part. pr. Streaming, Barbour, xii. 560.]

STREMOURIS, s. pl. [The streaming light of sunrise.]

The twynkling stremouris of the orient
Sched purpou sprayngis with gold and asure ment,
Persand the sable barnikin nocturnall,
Bet down the skyes cloudy mantil wall.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 399, 26.

The description quoted does not apply to the Aurora Borealis; and the poet has previously said;

Nyctimene affrayit of the licht,
Went vnder couert, for gone was the nycht.

STRENEWITE', s. Fortitude, stoutness.

B in thi name betaknis batalrus;—
W valycantnes; S for strenewit.

Ballad, S. P. R., iii. 140.

From Lat. strenuit-as.

STRENIE, adj. Lazy, sluggish, Kinross; given as synon. with Stechie; apparently q. bound, from O. Fr. estren-er, contraindre, comprimer; Roquefort.

To STRENKEL. V. STRINKIL.

To STRENTH, v. a. To strengthen.

"Forthir to strenth his manheid with more crafty slycht, he maid deip fowseis in the place quhare the battall wes set, and daug in staikis with scharp pointis rysing vp, couerit with scherrettis." Bellend. Cron., B. xiv., c. 10.

This word is used by Palsgr. "I strenth; Je renforce.—Thyse be greatly strenthyl syns I knewe them first." B. iii. F. 376, b.

[STRENTH, s. Strength; a stronghold, Lyndsay, Exper. and Court., l. 1723; Barbour, iv. 458.]

STRENTHE, adj. Strong, powerful.

"That we can nocht perceauce, quhat difference thair be betuix the simple and strenthie defence of ano iust caus, and the craftie coloring of ane lesing." J. Tyrie's Refutation, Pref. 2.

"This aduernite, cum to the ciete, maid the accioun of tribunis mair strenthy than afore." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 383. Vires adjecit, Lat.

STRENTHIT, part. pa. Corroborated, supported, strengthened.

"This I eik—that gif ony thing negligentie, and nocht sufficientlie strenthit be set furth in this werk, it suld be impute to my haist and fervour, and to nane uther injustlie." N. Wynyet's Fourscoir thre Quest., Keith's Hist., App., p. 221.

STRENTHLY, adv. By force, by main strength.

The tothyr that makys ws eggyng,
Is that thair our possessiounne
Haldis strenthly, agayne resoun.

Barbour, iv. 541, MS.

To STRENYIE, v. a. 1. To strain, to sprain.

——— Baith hir tenilr handles
War strenyeit sailry boundin harl with handles.
Doug. Virgil, 52, 36.

2. To constrain.

——— We for our lyvis,
And for our childre, and for our wywis,
And for our fredome, and for our land,
As strenyeit in to bataill for to stand.
Barbour, xii. 248, MS.

[O. Fr. straindre], Lat. string-ere.

3. To distract.

—"The lordis auditoris—decretis—the said Johnne, Walter, & Johnne, to pay the said soume of forty pundis to the said Schir Richert, & lettres be writtin to strenye thare landis & gudis tharfor." Act. Audit., A. 1476, p. 43.

STRENYEABILL, adj. 1. Used to denote one who is possessed of so much property, that he can relieve his bail by being restrained.

"Ilk frie man may be borch for himselfe in court, or outwith court, for his awin vnlaw, or other small things; awa he be responsall and strenyeabill to the judge." Quon. Attach., c. 37.
Contr. from distrenye, Lat. distring-o.

2. Applied to goods that may be distrained; synon. Poyndabill.

"To remaine in ward quhill he schaw gayr strenyeabill," &c. Aberd. Reg., A. 1541, V. 17. Gayr, i.e., substance, goods, S. gear or geir.

STRESS, s. 1. An ancient mode of taking up indictments for the Circuit courts.

"This method of taking up of dittay or indictments is substituted—in place of the old one by the stress, (traindis) and porteous rolls mentioned in 1487, c. 99." Erskine's Instit., B. iv., T. 4, s. 86, Acts Ja. II., c. 86, Ed. 1566.

This learned writer seems to view stress as a corr. of Traistis, q. v.

2. Distress, the act of distraining.

"Of the taking of stressis be the Constabill." Acts Ja. II., 1457, c. 86, Tit. Edit., 1566. This in the act itself is called distressis.

"In the actioun—persewit be the baillieis—of Ranfrew aganis Johnne of Quhitfeldr baillie to the abbot of Pastlay for the wrangwis spoliatioun & takin fra thaim of certane poyndis & stressis fra the officiariis of the said burgh of Ranfrew," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1491, p. 162.

"The baillies chargit thair officiariis to pas & tak a stres wurtht xvj sh." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

To STRESS, v. a. 1. To incommode, to put to inconvenience. It often denotes the overstraining effect of excessive labour or exertion, S.

It is used in an emphatical S. Prov., meant to ridicule those who complain of great fatigue, when they have scarcely had any thing to do, or at least have done nothing that deserves the name of work. "Ye're sair stred stringin' ingans;" i.e., forming a rope of onions.

The origin is probably O. Fr. straindre, mettre à l'étrait, Lat. strangere; as Fraunces gives O.E. Streynyn as synon. with "gretly stressen. Distringo."

VOL. IV.

STRESTELY, adv. Prob., errat for Trestely, faithfully.

Thar duelt a Wallas welcummyt him full weill,
Thocht Inglistmen thar of had litill feille.
Bathe mette and drynk at his will he had thar.
In Laglyne wode, quhen that he maid repayr,
This Gentill man was full oft his resett;
With stuff of houshold strestely he thaim lett.

Wallace, ii. 18, MS.

In Gl. Perth Edit. this is expl. fully. But it rather signifies, with difficulty, because of the danger of discovery by the English; from Fr. estreit, etroisse, pinched, straitened. He did it, as we would say, S. with a stress.

This may be an errat. from Trestely, faithfully. V. TRAIT; as the idea of difficulty in providing Wallace is not suggested by the connexion.

[STRET, adj. 1. Strait, narrow; also, steep; as, a stret brae.

2. In want of; as, stret o' siller, ibid.]

[To STRET, v. a. To take a good, hearty meal, ibid.

Evidently the local pron. of Strait, q. v.]

[STRETIN, STRETAN, s. 1. The act of tightening; also, of taking a hearty meal, ibid.

2. A hearty meal, ibid.]

To STRETCH, v. n. To walk majestically; used in ridicule, Ettr. For.; q. to expand one's self.

STRIAK, s. Sound, [tuck.] Strick of the swesch, sound of the [drum]. V. STREIK, s. and SWESCH.

STRIBBED, part. pa. "Milked neatly;" Gall. Encyc. V. STRIP, v.

To STRICK. To strick lint, to tie up flax in small handfuls, in preparing it for being milled, S. B. [V. STREIK.]

STRICK, s. A handful of flax knit at the end, in order to its being milled, S. B. Strike, Chauc. id.

Bot smoth it heng, as doth a strike of flax.

Procl. Cant. Tales, ver. 678.

"After you have beat it for some time, open the strike, turn the inward part of it outward, and beat it again,—until you think it sufficiently wrought." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 336.

But smoth it heng, as doth a strike of flax.

Chaucer, Procl. v. 678.

"Strike of flaxe, [Fr.] poupée de filaxe;" Palagr. B. iii. F. 68, a.

"Strike of flax. Lumpulus." Prompt. Parv.

STRICK, STRICT, adj. Rapid. The stream's very strict, S., it runs rapidly.

"That the said dike is for the benefit of the Ford-shot, and without it the Ford-shot would be gool for little, as it stems and calms the water where the shot is felled, while otherwise it would be a strict current." State, Leslie of Powis, v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 60. It also occurs in a metaph. sense.

H 3

"Furnish him with strength, whereby he may row against the strictest streams of all temptations, till hee arrive into the haven of the heauens, the sole and safe harborie of saluation." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1075.

Sw. strake, stroke, the main current of a river, midstream; Wideg.

STRICK, s. Strick o' the watter, the most rapid part of any stream, S. O. V. STRICT, adj.

[To STRICK, v. a. To make barley, Banffs.]

[STRICKEN, part. pa. V. under STRIKE.]

STRIDE, s. The same with Cleaving, Ayrs.

I'm new come frae Dumbarton-side,

Whar I had gane to travel;

An' am as sair about the stride,

As gin I had the gravel.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 176.

STRIDELEG, STRIDELEGS, STRIDELINGIS, adv.

Astride, astraddle. To ride stridelegs, to ride astride as a man does on horseback; as opposed to riding sidelegs, which denotes the female mode, S.

—Stride-legs, on a bougar-stake,

Sat Cupid, wild an' clever.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 148.

Auld Willie Dillie, wer he on lyus,

My life ful weill he culd discryue;

How as ane chapman beiris his pack,

I bare thy Grace vpon my back,

And sum times strydylings on my nek,

Dansand with mony bend and bek.

Lyndsay's Warkie, 1592, p. 262.

V. LINGS, term.

To STRIDDLE, v. n. To straddle, S.

From E. stride, or Dan. strett-a, pedibus divaricare.

"Na, na,—its nae pleugh of the flesh that the bonnie lad bairn—shall o'er striddle between the stilts o'."

The Pirate, i. 69.

Here's kye that gie wall pints a-day;

Their udders gar them striddle.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 55.

Dan. stritt-e, id., A.-S. straed-an, strid-an, spargere, dispergere.

STRIFE RIGS. "Debateable ground, patches of land common to all;" Gall. Enc.

STRIFFAN, s. "Film, thin skin. Striffan o' an egg, that white film inside an egg-shell;" Gall. Enc.

Isl. strophe signifies the yolk of an egg, liquor ovi. But Striffan is perhaps rather allied to stry, res rarefactae; G. Andr.

STRIFFEN'D, part. pa. Covered with a film, Gall.

The twosome pided down on the cauld sneep snaw,
Wi' the sorry hauf striffen'd e'e.

Gall. Enc., p. 412.

STRIFFIN, s. Starch, Shetl.

The letter r seems inserted by corruption. It probably was originally like S. Stiffen.

To STRIFFLE, v. n. To move in a fiddling or shuffling sort of way; often applied to one who wishes to appear as a person of importance, Ettr. For.

"I striffit till thiike saamen plesse as gypelys as I culde." Hogg's Wint. Tales, ii. 42.

STRIFFLE, s. Motion of this description, ibid.

Flandr. strobbe-en, strubbe-en, cespitare, titubare, vacillare gressu.

STRIKE, s. A handful of flax. V. STRICK.

* To STRIKE, STRYKE. To strike a battle or field, to fight.

—That Jhon gat Edwarde,
That come in-til Scotland syne,
And strak the battaile of Duplyne.

Wynetown, viii. 6. 278.

"We find in our Erische Cronickelia, that Coelus King of Norroway commandit his nobils to take his bodey and burey it in Colm-kill, if it chancit him to die in the iles; but he was so discomfitt, that ther remained not so maney of his armye as wald burey him ther; therfor he was eirled in Kyle, after he stroke ane field against the Scotts, and was vanquishit be tham." Monroe's Descr. W. Isles, p. 20.

This corresponds to Su.-G. slay, as primarily signifying a stroke, in a secondary sense a battle.

STRIKEN, STRICKEN, part. pa. Stricken; as referring to a field of battle.

"The battle was stricken in the year of God 1445." Pitscottie, Ed. 1768, p. 38.

"The field was stryken at Langside." Anderson's Coll., ii. 277.

[STRIKIN-TECK. Cutting heather with a short scythe, Shetl.]

To STRING, v. a. and n. 1. To hang by the neck, S.

Tho' by the neck she should be strung,
She'll no desert.

Burns, iii. 25.

2. To be hanged, S. also used in cant E.

—"My accusations—are so well founded, that was there (as we say in Scotland) a right sitting Sheriff, I would not doubt to see some Gentlemen string." Carnwath's Pref., ix.

3. To string, to string awa, to move off in a line, Gall.

And ay she cries, "Hurlie Hawkie,
String awa my crummies, to the milking loan,—
String, string awa hame,

Old Song, Gall. Enc., p. 257.

A.-S. string, linea, String, s. is used in the same sense with E. Row; as, "a string of wull geese."

[STRING-OF-TIDE, s. A rapid tideway, Shetl.]

STRINGIE, (g soft), adj. Stiff, affected, Loth. corr. perhaps from E. stingy.

STRINGS, s. pl. An inflammation of the intestines of calves, Roxb.

"Calves, during the first three or four weeks, are sometimes seized with an inflammation in the intestines, provincially called liver-crook, or strings." Agr. Surv. of Roxb., p. 149.

To STRINKIL, STRENKEL, v. a. 1. To sprinkle, S.

—And with thare bludis schede, as was the gise,
The funeral flamb strinkil in sacrificye.
Doug. Virgil, 362, 53.

2. To scatter, to strew, S.

Stones of sral they strenkel, and strew.
Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., li. 20.

"Plow the ground again; and in May, or June at farthest, (chuse moist weather) cause your gardener strinkle turnip-seed upon it." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 250.

"It would much increase the fermentation, if the seeds of barley, or any other quick-growing vegetable, were strinkled, or strewed thin, on the middling." Ibid. p. 36.

Sibb. views this as a variation of sprinkle. Prob. allied to Teut. strekl-en, leviter tangere. V. SPRAYNG.

STRINKLING, STRINKLING, s. A small portion of any thing, q. a scanty dispersion, S. Strinklun, a small quantity, Shetl.

"If you bestow upon it a strinkling of any dung, or of the milding directed, the advantage will be considerable." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 55.

O. E. "Sprenkelynge or Strenkelynge. Aspercio. Conspicio." Prompt. Parv. Fraunces also gives the s. "Sprenklyn or Strenklyn. Aspergo. Conspergo. Strenkled or Sprenkled. Asperaus." Ibid.

[To STRINN, v. n. To flow in a thin, narrow stream, Banffs. Dimin. of Strone, q. v.]

STRINN, s. 1. Water in motion, smaller in extent than what is called a Strype, Banffs.

2. The run from any liquid that is spilled, as water on a table, ibid.

This is obviously the same with Strynd, s. 2. The origin is certainly Isl. strind, stria, a groove, furrow, or gutter. Halderson expl. it by Dan. stribe and strimmed, both signifying a stripe.

[3. A strinn o' the pipe, a short smoke, Banffs.]

[STRINNLE, s. A very small stream, a runnel, Banffs.]

[To STRINNLE, v. n. To flow in a small stream, ibid.]

STRIP, STRYPE, STREAPE, s. 1. A long narrow plantation, or belt of trees, Roxb.

2. A small rill, S.

"In this ile of Mula is ane cleir fontane two mylis fra the see. Fra this fontane discendis ane litil burne, or strip rynnand ful of rounis to the seis. Thir rounis ar round & quhit schynand like perle full of thik humour: and within two houris eftir that thay come to see thay grow in gret cocles." Bellend. Desc. Alb., c. 13.

"Out of this well runs ther ane little strype down-with to the sea." Monroe's Isles, p. 31.

"This brooke Cedron—was a little streape that ran when it was raine, but in time of drought it was drie." Bollocke on the Passion, p. 3.

A strype is distinguished from a burn. "When the fish ascend forth of the said Loch, to the waters, burnes and strypes that fall in the same to spawn therein, there is great slaughter and destruction of them committed by the country people about." Acts Charles I., 1633, c. 29.

The gradation seems to be; watter, a river, burn, a brook, burnie, a small brook, stripe, a rill of the smallest kind, synon. sike.

E. strip, used in a peculiar sense; as denoting a very narrow gully or passage for water?

STRIPIE, STRYPPIE, s. A very small rill, S. B.

See gin you'll win unto this strypie here,
And wash your face and brow with water clear.

Ross's Helenore, p. 18.

This is still carrying the gradation a step farther than as it appears under STRYPE.

STRIPPIT, part. adj. Striped, S.

To STRIP, STRIPE, v. a. and n. 1. To cleanse by drawing between the finger and thumb compressed, Ettr. For.; apparently only a variety of the E. v. to Strip.

2. To draw the after-milkings of cows, S. A. Bor. This in Galloway is pron. Strib.

STRIPPINGS, s. pl. The last milk taken from the cow; evidently from the pressure in forcing out the milk, Roxb.

"Stribbings, (corr.) "the last milk that can be drawn out of the udder;" Gall. Enc.

"Strippings, after-milkings, strokings, North." Grose; incorporated by Mr. Todd.

Halderson gives Isl. strefta as synon. with stir-hreita, lactic ultima enunctio.

[STRIPPIT, part. adj. Clean milked, S.]

STRITCHIE, adj. Lazy, sluggish, Kinross; given as synon. with Stechie and Stenie.

STRIUELING MONEY. V. STERLING.

STRIVEN, part. adj. On bad terms, not in a state of friendship, Aberd. O.Fr. estricer, debattre.

[STRO, s. Straw, Orkn. V. STRA.]

To STRODD, STRODGE, STROWD, v. n. 1. To stride along, to strut, Ettr. For.

"Whae ever coups the lave, we let him try his hand at the courtin' for a wey, an' the rest maun juist strodd their ways." Hogg's Wint. Tales, i. 232.

"Hae ye tint your shoon, that ye maun strodge in about i' your boots?" Ibid., p. 241.

2. To walk fast without speaking, Roxb.

Germ. stross-en, strotz-en, to strut.

STRODS, STROUD, s. A pet, a fit of ill-humour, Roxb.

Isl. string signifies animus insensus, also fastus.

[STRODIE, STROTHIE, s. 1. A narrow strip, as of a gown or garment, Shetl.

2. An avenue between parallel dykes or walls, ibid.

Dan. stræde, Sw. strat, a strip, a street.]

[STROINT, s. A short or narrow garment, Shetl.]

STROKOUR, s. A flatterer.

Stuffets, strobour, and stafische strummels,
Vyld hauchbalds, haggabalds, and hummels.
Dunk. Compl. Mailland Poems, p. 109.

Isl. striak-a, to stroke, metaph. to flatter.

To STROMMEL, v. n. "To stumble," Gl. Sibb. V. STRUMMAL.

STRONACHIE, s. A stickleback, or banstickle, S. Gasterosteus spinachia, Linn. V. HECKLEBACK.

STRONE, s. A hill that terminates a range, the end of a ridge, Stirlings.

Bold Tushilaw, o'er strone and steep,
 Pursues the doe and dusky deer;
 The abbot lies in dungeon deep,
 The maidens wail, the matrons fear.

The Queen's Wake, p. 213,

Gael. eron, the nose, a promontory; radically the same with C.R. trwyn, a point, a snout, a nose.

To STRONE, STROAN, v. n. "To spout forth as a water pipe," Gl. Sibb.; also, to urinate, synonym. strule.

Nae tawted tyke, tho' e'er sae daddie,
 But he wad stan't, as glaid to see him,
 And stroan't on stanes, an' hillocks wi' him.

Burns, iii. 2.

Isl. streing-r, cataracta fluvii fluxus fortior, G. Andr.; or stroningum, sparaim, Verel.

STRONE, s. The act of urinating copiously, S.

Dan. stroening, spreading, strewing, sprinkling. It is singular, that Fr. estron signifies evacuation of another kind; merda, sterces. V. Cotgr.

[STRONGE, adj. Rank, harsh to the taste, Shetl.; E. strong.]

STRONTLY, adv. Strictly. Laws are said to be strontly led, i.e., rigidly observed on domysday.

I pray to Jean Chryst verrey
 For us his blud that bled,
 To be our help on domysday,
 Qubair lawis ar strontly led.

Bludy Serk, S. P. R., iii. 194.

This may be a derivative from streng, strictus, rigidus; or perhaps rather abbrev. and corr. from Fr. estreinct, estreint, id. V. STRUNTY.

STROOD, s. A worn-out shoe. "Stroods, very old shoes;" Gall. Enc.; q. what is wasted, from Gael. stroidh-am, to waste.

STROOSHIE, STROUSSIE, s. A squabble, a hurly-burly, Roxb.

O. Fr. estruss-er, given as synonym. with Battre, to beat.

STROOT, adj. Stuffed full; drunk. V. STRUTE.

To STROOZLE, v. n. To struggle, Gall. V. SPROOZLE and STRUISSLE, v., also STRUSSEL, s.

STROP, STROAP, s. Treacle, Ang.

Belg. strop, id.

STROTHIE, STRODIE, s. An avenue betwixt two parallel dikes or walls. Shetl.

Dan. straed, a lane, a narrow street.

[STROUD, s. 1. A stroud o' clues, a suit of clothes, Shetl.

2. In pl., strouds, the shrouds of a boat, ibid.]

STROUL, s. Any stringy substance found among sorbile food; as, a lang stroul among the parritch, Fife.

Stroil, "a denomination for the long roots of weeds and grass in grounds not properly cultivated," Exin. Grose. Isl. strial, raritas, strial-ast, rarus ferri. Dan. straal, radius rarus. Gael. straeil-am, to draw after.

STROUNGE, STROONGE, STRONGE, adj. 1. Harsh, "especially to the taste, as a shoe," Gl. Sibb. S. [Strounge bitters, Aberd.]

2. Surly, morose, S.

It often includes the idea of a forbidding aspect; although Strunge-like is frequently used in this sense.

To STROUNGE, v. n. To take the pet, Roxb. V. the adj.

Isl. string-r, denotes a sort of sorbile food, that is unpleasant to the taste; also, asper. Gefa string fraer; Aspera verba evomere, gravibus convitiis uti; Gl. Landnamab. O. Fr. truang-er, is synonym. with gourmand-er; Male habere, indignum in modum excipere; Dict. Trev.

STROUP, STROOP, s. The spout of a pump, tea-kettle, tea-pot, &c. S.

[STROUPIE, s. A tea-pot, Clydes., Shetl.]

Su.-G. strupe, Isl. strup, guttur; q. throat of a kettle, &c.

Dan. strube, a throat, a gorge, a gullet.

STROUTH, s. Force, violence, Aberd.

To STROUTH, v. a. To compel, to use violent measures with, ibid.

This might seem allied to A.-S. strith, Su.-G. and Isl. strid, certamen, pugna; as originally denoting the violence exercised in warfare. A.-S. gestrod signifies confiscation, and gestroden, confiscated. But perhaps we should prefer strud-an, spoliare, vastare, diripere.

STROW, s. A shrew-mouse, Dumfr., Gall. V. STREAW.

STROW, (pron. stroo), s. 1. A fit of ill humour, a tiff, Ang.; [stroved, Bauffs.]

2. A quarrel, a state of variance, a scramble, S.

"I ken the faces o' them weel—they canna leave a fair without some strow, an' they're making the thair mark the neyght." Hogg's Winter Tales. i. 267.

In some parts of Sweden, Lure informs us, they still use strow to denote hatred or envy.

3. Bustle, disturbance, South of S.

What needs sic phiz 'bout lovers sighing,
Their languishing in tears are crying?
While a' the strow's 'bout naething else
But flesh an' blude just like themselfs?
But my affections firmer settle,
Sublime on goud, the king o' metal.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 119.

Phiz, improperly used instead of fizz, signifies fuss.
Strow is evidently meant as synonymous.

[4. A short illness, Banffs.]

Sax. struo, signifies asper, viewed by Ihre as synon. with Su.-G. straf, id.; also used in a moral sense, de homine moroso et austero. Isl. struy-r, animus insensu; fastus. O. Fr. estrois, fracas, bruit éclatant.

Strow has formerly been used as an adj. "Daft folk's no wise strow," S. Prov., i.e., not hard to be dealt with; "spoken when people advise what is not prudent, or promise what is not reasonable;" Kelly, p. 89. The origin undoubtedly is Su.-G. strug, simulas.

STROWBILL, STRUBLE, adj. Troublesome; [stubborn].

The red colour, quha graithly wnderstud,
Betaknes all to gret lattaill and blud;
The greyn, curage, that thou art now amang,
In strowbill wer thou sall conteyne full lang.
Wallace, vii. 138, MS.

To STRUBLE, v. a. To trouble, to vex.

"He haid wtrajusly mispersonit & strublit him, call- and him hurstone," &c. Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

"Wnder the pane of standing in the goyffis, quhill thai that echo strublis mak request for hir." Ibid.

STRUBLENS, s. Disturbance; still sometimes used, Aberd.

"Strublenis quhill he deyde in malyce & iyr." Aberd. Reg. A. 1535, V. 15.

"For the strublenis of him & braking of his elwand." Ibid. V. 16.

The O.E. form nearly resembles this. "Sturbelyn or trohlyn. Turbo. Perturbo.—Sturblyar or troublar. Turbator. Perturbator. Sturblynge, or troubllynge. Turbacio. Perturbacio." Prompt. Parv.

STROWD, s. A senseless silly song, S.B.

Isl. strail, stred-a, futuere obscœnum.

[To STROWD, v. a. To sing in a stupid, bad manner, Banffs.]To STROY, v. a. To destroy.

Mekyl of France oure-rad he than,
Ande gret skaith did in all the land,
Nakyn thing of froyt sparand,
Abbays, and many solempne place,
That stroyit, but recoverance, wace.
Wynetown, viii. 45, 26.

It was used also in E.

Lincolne & Lyneseie thei stroid & wasted.
R. Brunne, p. 42.

Ital. strugg-ere, id. corr. from Lat. destru-ere.

STRUBBA, s. Milk in a certain state, Shetl.

Can this have any connexion with Isl. strobe, liquor ovi, vitelus sive vitellium maturum?

STRUCKEN, [part. pa. Stricken, struck.]
To be strucken up, to be metamorphosed into stone; a transformation believed to have been frequently effected by the power of evil spirits, Aberd.

STRUCKLE, s. A pet, a fit of ill-humour, Mearns.

This might seem to be a dimin. from Su.-G. strug, simulas, or from its cognate, S. Strow, q. v.

To STRUD, v. a. 1. To pull hard, to tug, Shetl.

[2. To run rapidly, as a fish when hooked, ibid.]

[STRUDDIN-ON. Pulling hard against something that resists, ibid.]

Isl. streu-a, niti; strit-a, laborare; Su.-G. strid-a, certare.

To STRUISSLE, STRUISLE, STRUSSLE, v. a.
To struggle, W. Loth.

"An it wadna be a gude turn tae drouk their lags in a sowp o't gif it war'na for misgruglin the drap drink it the puir lads wad be blythe o' it, hae been a' night stavin' at ane anither, and struidin' i' the dark." Saint Patrick, iii. 265.

STRUISSLE, s. A struggle, W. Loth.

"It's a wicked struggle that ye had there.—'Struissle, say ye, frien', replied the hunter in a broad Caledonian accent,—'the vile brute had maist war't me, but I trou I hae gi'en him what he'll no cast the call [cold] o'.'" Saint Patrick, i. 67.

Allied perhaps to Alem. straus, certamen, pugna, (Wachter), originally the same with the general Goth. term strid. Isl. strids-væll signifies arena, the place of combat. The termination indicates a Goth. origin.

To STRULE, v. n. 1. To urinate, S.2. It occasionally signifies, in a general sense, to pour water from one vessel to another, to emit any liquid in a stream, S. street, Fife.

Mod. Sax. Fris. Sicamb. struyll-en, strull-en, streyll-en, reddere urinam, mejere; Sw. stril-a, to stream out, to gush out; Wileg.

STRUM, s. A pettish humour, S.B. synon. strow, stront, strunt.

Su.-G. strug, stru, is probably the radical term. V. STROW.

"So I see ye're just the auld man, Archie,—ay ready to tak the strums, an' ye diinna get a' thing ye're ain way." Marriage, ii. 134.

STRUM, adj. Pettish, sullen, S.B.

Strummy is used in the same sense, Aberd. Halderson expl. Isl. strembin not only difficilis, but superbus.

To STRUM, v. n. To be in a pettish humour, Buchan.

Sinkin wi' care we aften gag,
Strummin' about a gill we're lag,
Syne drowsy hum.

Tarras's Poems, p. 132.

"Strumming, glooming, looking sour;" Gl.
Perhaps it merits observation that Isl. strem-b-en signifies dry, astringent, difficult; spissus, stypticus, difficilis; G. Andr.

STRUM, s. The first draught of the bow over the fiddle strings, S.

Dirdum, Drum,
Three threads and a thrum.
Cat's Song, Gall. Enc.

Teut. stroom, strom, tractus.

To STRUM, v. n. To play coarsely on a musical instrument, S. Thrum, E.

STRUMMING, s. 1. A loud murmuring noise, Ettr. For.

2. A thrilling sensation, sometimes implying giddiness, Ettr. For.

"It was on the hill of Hawthornside where I first saw the face o' an enemy; and I'll never forget sic queer strummings as I had within me." Perils of Man, ii. 234.

3. A confusion, ibid.

Teut. stram, strigosus, rigidus; stramme leden, membra rigida.

STRUMMAL, STRUMMEL, STRUMMIL, adj. Stumbling.

He stockerit lyke ane strummal aver.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 94.
My strummil stirk yit new to spane.
Clerk, Evergreen, ii. 21, st. 8.

Teut. striemel-en, vacillare, cespitare, nutare gressu. Strompel-en is used in the same sense: Isl. stumr-a, id. A stumrathorse, is a phrase still used S. to denote one that is habituated to stumbling.

STRUMMEL, STRUMBELL, s. A person so feeble that he cannot walk without stumbling.

Stuffets, strokours, and staffische strummels.
Dunb. Compl. Mailland Poems, p. 109.

i.e., old men, who are under the necessity of leaning on a staff, for supporting them in walking. Strumbell, ibid. p. 111. V. FORTYING.

STRUMMEL, s. The remainder of tobacco, mixed with dross, left in the bottom of a pipe, Peebles-shire, Roxb.

Dan. strimmel, Isl. strimill, a shred?

[To STRUNG, STRUNK, v. n. To be sulky or sullen, to sulk, Clydes. V. STRUNT.]

[STRUNG, s. A sulky fit; pl. strungs, the sulks, ibid.]

STRUNGIE, adj. Sulky, quarrelsome, Ayr.; the same with Strounge, sense 2.

To STRUNT, v. n. 1. To walk sturdily, S.

I canna say but ye strunt rarely,
Owre gauze and lace.
Burns, iii. 228.

It is applied to a rutting cow, when she runs off to the male, Galloway.

"Upo' the hill," the callan cries,
"She cock'd her gaucy runt;
An' to Strathfallan green Burn-brae
Fu' nimble she did strunt."

Davidson's Seasons, p. 50.

2. To walk with state, to strut, S.

The wooer strunted up the house;
And vow! but he was wond'rous crouse.

Old Song.

STRUNT, s. Spirituous liquor of any kind, Gl. Burns, S. O.

Syne, wi' a social glass o' strunt,
They parted aff careerin'
Fu' blythe that night.
Burns, iii. 139.

STRUNTING, part. pr. [Swaggering, bouncing, Clydes.]

High were their hopes for food and cash,
And drink to keep them strunting.
Gall. Encycl., p. 268.

V. STRUTE, adj.

To STRUNT, v. a. To affront; as, "He strunted the puir lass," he affronted the poor girl, Teviotdale.

O. Fr. estront-oier, attaquer, injurier. Estrouen signifies, stercus humanum.

[STRUNT, s. The contents of a close-stool, Shetl.]

STRUNT, s. 1. A pet, a sullen fit; [also, a pettish person]. "To tak the strunt, to be petted or out of humour," Gl. Rams.

Wow, man, that's unco sad!—Is that ye'r jo
Has ta'en the strunt!—
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 4.

It may be radically the same with its synonym, Strum, q. v.; or the adj. from which Strontly is formed.

The way o' lovers—a' their soul will dunt,
Giff ony wayward lassie tak the strunt.
Donald and Flora, p. 49.

A. Bor. "Strunt, a sullen fit;" Gl. Brockett.

[2. Any thing short and narrow, Banffs.]

STRUNTIT, part. adj. Under the influence of a pettish humour, Roxb.

STRUNTY, adj. 1. Short, contracted; as, a strunty gown, Ang.

2. Applied to the temper; pettish, out of humour, S. as Short is used in the same sense.

Fr. estreint, straitened, pinched, shrunk up.

STRUNTAIN, s. A species of tape made of wheelin or coarse worsted, about an inch broad.

"Before this period, the only manufacture was what is called Stow struntain, made of the coarsest wool, and wrought by the women on a loom like a bed-heck." P. Stow, M. Loth. Statist. Acc., vii. 138.

Sw. strunt, trash, any thing worthless, refuse, Widge. This corresponds to the quality of the wool.

STRUSH, STRUSHAN, s. 1. A disturbance, a tumult, Roxb. V. STROOSHIE and STRUSSEL.

[2. A state of disorder, Banffs.]

[STRUSHAL, STRUSHLY, adj. 1. Untidy, disorderly, Banffs.]

[2. To go about in an untidy state, ibid.]

STRUSSEL, s. A brawl, a squabble, Clydes.

O. Fr. estrôis, fracas, bruit éclatant; or estruss-er, battre, étriller, froter; Roquefort. C. B. ystrin, pugna, contentio; Boxhorn. V. STRUISSLE, v.

STRUTE, STROOT, adj. 1. "Stuffed full," Gl. Rams., S.

The — cut off their hands, quoth he,
That cramd your kytes sae strute yestrein.
Wife of Auchtermuchty, Herd's Coll., ii. 129.

O. Fr. stroite signifies strait, shut up, closed; etroit, resserré; Roquefort. This is nearly allied to the sense of the term, as signifying stuffed or crammed.

2. Drunken, S.

When lying bed-fast sick and sair,
To parish priest he promis'd fair,
He ne'er wad drink fou ony mair:
But, hale and tight,
He prov'd the auld man to a hair,
Strute ilka night.

Ramsay's Poems, l. 237.

3. Metaph. vain-glorious.

E. strut, O. E. strout, to swell, to protuberate; prae superbia cristas erigere, &c., Jun. Etym. Germ. strotzen, turgero. The term primarily respects what is turgid in a literal sense.

STRUTE, STRUIT, s. Stubbornness, obstinacy, Fife; synon. Dourness. V. STRUNT and STROW, s.

To STRY, v. a. "To strive, to oppose," Pink.

May no man stry him with strength, while his whale stoules.

Sir Gawain and Sir Galleh, l. 21.

Perhaps for try, the alliteration being preserved; or stry, destroy.

[To STRYK, v. a. To strike, Barbour, x. 179.]

To STRYKE, v. n. To extend. V. STREKE.

STRYNCHT, s. Strength. "Sic stryncht, fors & effect;" Aberd. Reg. A. 1545.

STRYND, STREIND, STRYNE, s. 1. Kindred, race, offspring.

It suffeyt well than, Man-kynd,
Anys suld cum of Adamys strynd.
Wynntown, v. 12, 1299.

Here was the noble kyn and anciant strynd,
The maist douchty lynnage sprang he kynd
Fra king Teucer—

Doug. Virgil, 187, 39.

Chauc. strene, E. strain, id. A.-S. strynd, stirps, genus, from streon-an, strin-an, gignere.

2. A particular cast, disposition, or quality of any person, who in this respect is said to resemble another. It is generally used as to those related by blood, S.

I've spoken to a frien' of mine,
—Gin he cou'd sometimes wi' you dine,—
And do't he will, I ken his stryne,
As far's he can.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 175.

Commentators on Shakespeare have puzzled themselves in attempting to explain the phrase; "Unless he know some strain in me, that I know not myself," &c. Merry Wives. Some read stain; others explain it "wrench." But it is obviously the same with S. Strynd, also written Strain. It belongs to the sense given of Strain by Dr. Johns., "hereditary disposition."

O. Fr. estraine, race, origin, extraction, seems to acknowledge a Goth. source, though traced by Roquefort to Lat. extractio. But it has still more resemblance of C.B. ystrain, a tribe, a breed.

"Scot. the word strynd or strain is metaph. used for the resemblance of the features of the body. As we say, He has a strynd or strain of his grandfather, i.e., resembles him;" Rudd.

It is also said, He takes a streind of such an one.

STRYND, s. Expl. stream, rivulet, spring of water.

Apollo chargit vs to speidle bedene
To Tyber flowand in the se Tyrrehe,
And to the fountane and the stryndis clere
Of Numicus the hallowit fresche riure.

Doug. Virgil, 214, 1.

Vada sacra Numici, Virg.

Strynde occurs in old deeds, as denoting the course of a rill.

"And fra thence descend and to the Harewellys, and swa down the strynde of that wellis til it enter in a burne," &c. Merches of Bischop Byrnes, 1437, Chart. Aberd. F. 14.

—"And sua descendand lynaly [in a straight line] fra the Quhytstane to the strynd of Sanct Huchonys well," &c. Chart. Aberbroth. F. 80.

It properly denotes the shallow places nigh the source of a river, which may be easily waded. This is probably the same with E. strand.

To STRYNE, v. a. To strain or sprain.

"Strynd legs, sprained legs;" Gall. Enc. V. STREIND, v.

STRYNTHIT, s. Strength; Aberd. Reg. A. 1538.

[STRYNTHIT, part. pa. Strengthened, Barbour, xvii. 331.]

[STRYPAL, s. A tall, slender person; any thing long and flexible, Banffs.]

[To STRYPAL, v. n. 1. To hang in loose folds or tatters, Banffs.

2. To walk with long, unsteady step, ibid.]

[STRYPIE, s. A very small rill, Angus. V. STRIP, s.]

STUBIE, s. A large bucket or pitcher, narrower at top than at bottom, with an iron handle, used for carrying water, Dumfr.

This seems to have a common origin with Stoup.

STUBBLIN', adj. Short and stoutly made; as, "He's a little stubblin' fellow," Roxb.

Viewed as derived from E. Stubble; Isl. stobblæg-r has the same signification; firmus, crassus, (Halderson), from stobbi, stubby, Su.-G. stubb, truncus.

STUCHIN (gutt.), STUCKIN, s. A stake, generally burnt at the lower part, driven into the ground for supporting a paling, or a sheep-net, Roxb., Teviotd. In Ettr. For. Stuggen.

A.-S. stoc, Su.-G. stuck, stipes, traba. This word, however, in form resembles A.-S. stacunge, staking, fixing with stakes, and Moca.-G. stakeins, in hleithrostakins, the term used for tabernacles, Joh. 7. 2. q. leather stakings.

[STUCKIE, s. A thick codlin, Shetl.]

[To STUDDIE, v. a. and n. To steady, stand firm, Clydes.]

STUDINE, STUDDEN, pret. Stood, S.

"Provyding alwayis, that the saidis airis—beis fund not to have studine against the maintenance of religion, lawis, and liberties of kirk and kingdome," &c. Acts Cha. I., V. 308. Studden, VI. 64.

STUDY, STUTHY, STYDDY, s. An anvil, a smith's forge; stiddie, S., studlie, S. B.

The huge cone, and all the mont wythin,
For straik of studyis, gan resound and din.

Doug. Virgil, 258, 21.

Fine of the grettest and maist chief cieteis,
Thare wappinis to renew in all degreis,
Set vp forgeis and stele styldyis syne.

Ibid. 230, 16.

"Item, thre iron studdis, and ane cruik studie." Inventories, A. 1566, p. 168.

E. stithy, from A.-S. stith, strong. Isl. stedia, incus. Stedia, however, is derived from Su.-G. stail-ia, to prop, to make firm, as denoting any thing on which another solidly rests. V. Gl. Kristnisag.

Styth is used by Chaucer in the same sense with E. stithy.

—The smith
That forgeth sharpe swerdes on his styth.
Knights T., ver. 2028.

STUE, s. Dust, S. B. V. STEW.

[STUF, STUFF, adj. Stuff, Shetl.]

[STUFFEN, s. A vulgar term for starch, ibid.]

*To STUFF, v. a. 1. To supply, to furnish, to provide.

Quhill I had ony thing to spend,
And stufit weill with warldis wrak,
Amang my freinds I weis weill kend.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 184.

i.e., "amply supplied with the trash of this world."

Fr. estoff-er, stoff-er, id. from Teut. Germ. stoff, apparatus, Wachter. Teut. stoff, materies.

2. To supply with men; referring to warfare.

Hay, hav, go to, than cry thay with ane schout,
And with ane huge brute Troianis at schort
Thare wallis stufit, and closit every port.

Doug. Virgil, 275, 4.

It is also applied to the field of battle—

—Vmbro eik, the stalwart chiftane rude,—
The bargane stufis, relevand in agane.

Ibid. 337, 18.

Hence, the phrase so common in Wallace, to stuf the chass, to furnish men necessary for giving chace to a flying enemy.

The Sotheron fled, and left thaim in that place.
Horsis that ran to stuf the chass, gud spede.

Wallace, v. 935, MS.

Fr. Bien garnir et estoffer les villes de frontiere. Teut. stoffer-en, munire.

SUFF, s. 1. "Corn or pulse of any kind," S. Gl. Burns, q. provision for sustenance.

The summer had been cauld an' wat,
An' stuff was unco green.

Burns, iii. 132.

It denotes grain in whatever state; whether as growing, cut down, in the barn, or in the mill.

Lang winnowit she, an' fast, I wyte,
An' snodly clean't the stuff.

Tarras's Poems, p. 67.

2. This term is used in a singular mode of expression. It is said of one, who will not yield in reasoning, or in fighting, "He is good stuff, or, a piece of good stuff," S.

This is undoubtedly a Fr. idiom. Chevaliers de bonne estoffe, Knights well armed, and well managing their arms; Cotgr.

3. The men placed in a garrison for its defence.

The warlane than fra Perth is gane,
To Stryvelyne wyth of his ost ilkane,
That castelle till assege stowtly,
That than Schyre Thomas of Rukby
Held wyth othyr worthy men,
That of the stuff war wyth hym then.

Wyntown, viii. 37. 138.

4. A relief, or reserve in the field of battle.

The hardy Bruce ane ost abandownyt, xx thowsand he rewlyt be force and wit.
Upon the Scottis his men for to reskew,
Serwynt thai war with gud speris enew:
And Byschop Beik a stuff till him to be.

Wallace, x. 321, MS.

STUFFIE, adj. 1. Stout and firm, Loth., Clydes.; as, "He's a stuffie chield," a firm fellow.

2. Mettlesome; a term applied to one who will not easily give up in a fray; Fife.

It being said, in a similar sense, that one has stuff in him, or is good stuff; this might seem to have given rise to the adj.

O. Fr. stoffey, qui est bien garni, à qui rien ne manque; Roquefort.

STUFFILIE, adv. Toughly, perseveringly, Clydes.

STUFFINESS, s. Ability to endure much fatigue, ib.

STUFFING, s. A name given to the disease commonly denominated Croup, S. O.

To STUFF, v. n. To lose wind, to become stifled from great exertion.

At the Blackfurd thar Wallace doune can licht;
His horsis stuffyt, for the way was depe and lang;
A large gret nyile wichtly on fute couth gang.

Wallace, v. 235, MS.

O. Fr. entouff-er, "to stifle, smother, choake, whir-ken, suffocate, stop the breath;" Cotgr.

*STUFF, s. Dust, Ang.

Teut. stuyre, stof, pulvis.

STUFFET, s. Prob., a lackey, a courier.

Stuffets, strokours, and stafische strummels.

Dunb. Compl. Maitland Poems, p. 94.

Mak your abbotis of richt religious men,
Quhilk to the pepill Christis law can ken:

Bot not to rebahlis new cum from the roist,
Nor of ane stufet stollin out of ane stabil,
The quhilk into the scule maid neuer na coist.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 286.

Prob., corr. from Fr. estafier, id. or estafete, Ital. staffetta, a courier.

To STUG, v. a. 1. To stab, to prick with a sword.

"They stugged all the beds with their swords, and threatned to rost the children in the fire, and forced one of them to run from the house with nothing on him but his shirt, about a half a mile in [a] dark night." Wodrow's Hist., ii. 173. V. Stok, v.

2. To jag. One who is jagged by long stubble is said to be stuggit, Fife, Mearns.

To STUG, v. n. To shear unequally, so as to leave part of the stubble higher than the rest, Fife, Mearns.

STUG, s. 1. A thorn, or prickle; as, "I've gotten a stug i' my fit," I have got a thorn in my foot, Lanarks. V. Stog.

2. Any clumsy sharp-pointed thing, as a large needle is called "a stug of a needle," Ang., Fife.

3. Applied to short irregular horns, generally bent backwards. As used in this sense, frequently pronounced Stook, S. B.

4. A piece of decayed tree standing out of the ground, S. B.

5. A masculine woman; applied to one who is stout and raw-boned, Fife.

6. In pl. Stugs, stubble of an unequal length, caused by carelessness in the mode of cutting down grain, Mearns. A.-S. stoc, Su.-G. stock, stipes; stock-a, indurare.

STUGGEN, s. 1. A post or stake. V. STUCHIN.

Belg. stug, surly, resty, heady; stugheyl, surliness.

2. An obstinate person, Ettr. For.

STUGGY, adj. 1. Stubble is said to be stuggy, when it is of unequal length, in consequence of carelessness in cutting down the corn.

Germ. stucke, pars a toto separata; or Su.-G. styggeter, deformis.

[2. A comb is said to be stuggy, when some of its teeth are broken, and it therefore rugs the hair, Clydes.]

STUGHIE, s. Something that fills very much, as food that soon fills the stomach, Loth. Hence, STUGHRIE, s. Great repletion, Loth. V. STECH, v.

VOL. IV.

STUHT, s. The permanent stock on a farm, equivalent to Steelbow Goods.

Et tunc quilibet husbandus cepit cum terra sua stuh, scilicet duos boves, unum equum, tres celdras avenae, sex bollas ordeï, et tres bollas frumenti. Et postmodum quando abbas Ricardus mutavit illum servitium in argentum, reddiderunt sursum suum stuh, et dedit quilibet pro terra sua per annum xviii. solidos. Cartular. Kelso, seculi xiii.

Gael. stuth, expl. by Shaw, "stuff, matter or substance, corn." Such transpositions of a letter are by no means uncommon in ancient MSS.

[STUIND, STOIND, s. A while, a time, Shetl. V. STOUND.]

[STUIT, STOIT, s. A fit of ill-temper, sulks, Shetl.]

[STULE, pret. Stole, Shetl.]

STULE of EYSE. A night-stool, i.e., stool of ease.

"Item, ane canapy of grene dammas, frenyeit with gold and silk, to ane stule of eyse. Item, ane canapy of reid dammas to ane stule of eyse." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 47.

STULT, adj. Having the appearance of intrepidity, or perhaps of haughtiness.

Wallace and his than til aray he yeid,
With x thousand off douchty men in deid.
Quha couth behald thair awfull lordly wult,
So weil beseyn, so forthwart, stern and stult,
Sa gud chyftanys, as with sa few thar beyn.
Without a King, was neur in Scotland seyn.
Wallace, x. 78, MS.

This may indeed be merely metri causa for stout, which is the reading of Edit. 1648. It must be observed, however, that Su.-G. stolt, Isl. stoltt-ur, have the sense of magnificus, fastuosus; Teut. stolte, superbus. This has a strict analogy with the phrase, awfull lordly wult. The Su.-G. word also signifies what is excellent in its kind.

STUMFISH, adj. Strong, coarse, rank; applied to grain when growing, Tweedd.

Germ. staemmig, robustus, a term derived, according to Wachter, from stamm, stirps, as expressing the quality of the trunk of a tree: stumpf, blunt, as denoting a trunk wanting the top or point.

To STUMMER, v. n. To stumble, A. Bor.

Thair stedis stakkerit in the stour, and stude stammmerand. Gavan and Gid., ii. 25.

He slaid and stummerit on the sliddry ground,
And fell at erd grufelingis amid the fen.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 41.

"Hes not mony throw inlake of techement, in mad ignorance misknawin thair deuty, quhilk we all aucht to our Lord God, and sua in thair perfitt belief hes sairly stummerit?" Ninian Winzet's First Tractate, Keith's Hist. App., p. 205.
Isl. stumr-a, cespitare.

* STUMP, s. 1. A ludicrous term for the leg; as, "Ye'd better betake yoursel to your stumps," S. B.

A. Bor. Stumps, legs. "Stir your stumps." Gl. Broc.

Teut. stumpe does not merely denote a mutilated member, but is rendered, junctura manus, vertebra manus; so that the phrase may have been originally equivalent to "Move your joints."

[2. A short thick-set person, S.]

3. A stupid fellow, a blockhead, a dunder-head; as, "The lad was aye a perfect stump," S.

A. Bor. "Stump, a heavy, thick-headed fellow;" Gl. Brockett.

To STUMP, v. n. 1. To go on one leg; to halt, S.

Teut. stompe, mutilatum membrum. Hence stompen, hebetare.

2. To walk about stoutly; at times implying the idea of heaviness, clumsiness, or stiffness in motion, S.

An' stump an his ploughman shanks,
He in the parlour hammer'd.

Burns, l. 139.

Bent on their toil, the mowers frae their cots
Stump lustily, an' o'er the flushing mead,
Wide spreading, stretch the long keen-biting scythe.
Davidson's Seasons, p. 60.

[STUMPER, STUMPART, s. 1. A person of awkward, stupid, or stamping gait, Clydes.

2. The act of walking thus, ibid.]

[To STUMPER, STUMPART, v. n. To walk with a stamping, or hobbling step, ibid.]

[STUMPERIN, STUMPARTIN, adj. Stamping, hobbling, awkward, ibid.]

STUMPIE, STUMPY, adj. 1. Squat, short on the legs, S.

"I was in the House of Lords when her Majesty came down for the last time, and saw her handed up the stair by the usher of the black-rod, a little stumpy man, wonderful particular about the rules of the house." Ayra. Legatees, p. 273.

"This Mr. Peevie was, in his person, a stumpy man, well advanced in years." The Provost, p. 318.

"Stumpie, stout, thick;" Gl. Picken.

2. Mutilated; used also as a s. for any thing of this description, as a limb which has undergone amputation, S.

Su.-G. stumpig, curtus, mutilatus; Ihre, vo. Stufica.

STUMPIE, s. 1. A short, thick, and stiffly-formed person, S.

"The persons of the Misses Lumgaire were not at all to their own satisfaction,—they were too short.—You may dress as you please; these upstart stumpies, the Lumgaire, and their manoeuvring mother, are determined to secure the coronet." Glenfergus, iii. 82. 142.

[2. A bottle, Shetl.]

STUMPISH, adj. Blockish, Ettr. For., Roxb.

To STUMPLE, v. n. To walk with a stiff and hobbling motion, South of S., Renfr.

Syne aff in a fury he stumped,
Wi' ballets an' poulther an' gun;

At's curpin, auld Janet she humped
Awa to the next neighbouring town.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 192.

A frequentative from the v. to Stump, q. v. Germ. stumpel-n, as well as humpel-n, signifies to bungle, to buddle. The former is also rendered, to mutilate; Su.-G. stump-a, mutilare.

[STUMPSED, STUMST, part. adj. Stupified with astonishment, Shetl. Sw. stum, dumb, speechless.]

To STUNAY, v. a. To confound. V. STONAY.

STUNCII, s. "A lump of food, such as of beef and bread;" Gall. Enc.

Perhaps from Teut. stuck, Germ. stuch, frustum, fragmen, with the insertion of the letter n.

[STUND, s. A sudden, sharp pain, S. V. STOUND.]

To STUNGLE, v. a. Slightly to sprain any joint or limb. I've stungled my kute, I have sprained my ancle, S. B.

Perhaps a dimin. from E. stun, or Fr. estonn-er.

STUNK, s. The stake put in by boys in a game; especially in that of taw. It is commonly said, "Hae ye put in your stunk?" or "I'll at least get my ain stunk," i.e., I will receive back all that I staked, Loth.

Prob., a remnant of A.-S. on-stinc, on-sing, census, exactio, tributum, an impost; Somner. Lye derives it from sting-an, immittere se in; explaining the s. Jus, ei pertinens qui sese immisit in fundum.

[STUNK, s. A groan, a pant, Shetl.]

[To STUNK, v. n. To pant, to make a panting noise, as when out of breath, ibid.

Sw. stanka, to pant, to puff.]

[To STUNK, v. n. To be silent or sullen, to sulk, Aberd.]

STUNKARD, adj. Sullen. V. STONKERD.

Germ. stenker, litigator. Wachter derives this from Dan. sting-en, to strike with the horn; stanger, an animal that strikes in this manner.

STUNKEL, s. A fit of ill-humour or pettishness, Mearns; synonym. Dorts.

In Angus, it is more generally used in the pl. Stunkels, and rather includes the idea of sullenness.

STUNKS, s. pl. The Stunks, pet, a fit of sullen humour, Aberd.

STUNKUS, s. A stubborn girl, Roxb., Selkirks. V. STONKERD.

STUNNER, s. [1. An extraordinary person or thing, Clydes.] "A big foolish man, S. Stunner o' a gowk, a mighty fool;" Gall. Enc.

[2. Anything very large, beautiful, or wonderful, Banffs., Perth., Clydes.]

A.-S. stun-ian, obstupescere; whence apparently stunt, stultus, stolidus. Fr. estonn-er has undoubtedly a common origin.

STUPE, s. A foolish person, S.B.

Teut. stuppe, deliquium, defectio animi.

STUPPIE, s. "A wooden vessel for carrying water," S. O., Gl. Picken; a dimin. from Stoup, q. v.

STURDY, s. 1. A vertigo, a disease to which black cattle when young, as well as sheep are subject. A bag of water gathers in the front between the horns, which, producing giddiness, makes them run round about, S.

"The principal diseases in sheep are—5th, the sturdy, or water in the head. The scull grows soft above where the water is lodged; and they are sometimes cured by a trepan performed by a herd's knife." P. Linton, Tweedd. Statist. Acc., i. 138.

"The Sturdy—When the forehead feels soft, a knife is inserted: both skin and bone are raised up, and the breath of the animal is stopped, till a small globule of fluid matter issues at the orifice." Prizo Essays Highl. Soc. S., ii. 208.

2. The name given to a sheep affected with this disease, South of S.

"When I was a youth, I was engaged for many years in herding a large parcel of lambs, whose bleating brought all the sturdies of the neighbourhood to them." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 402.

The immediate origin is most probably O. Fr. estourdi, dizzy-headed; estourd-er, to make giddy, or dizzie in the head, Cotgr. This, however, may be radically allied to Belg. door-en, to trouble, to disturb, or Su.-G. stort-a, to fall or rush headlong.

3. A plant that grows amongst corn, which, when eaten, causes giddiness and torpidity, Gall. Enc.

Supposed to be either Darnel, Lolium temulentum, or Field Brome grass, Bromus secalinus, denominated Sleepies, S. The same narcotic quality is ascribed to both these plants.

This must be called Sturdy from its stupifying power. For the same reason Darnel is, by the peasantry in some parts of Ayr., denominated Doit.

4. "Steer my sturdy," trouble my head, Gl. Aberd.

What tho' some sage of holy quorum
Should lightlie me for Tillygorum,
I'll never steer my sturdy for him
Whae'er he be,
As lang's I ken to keep decorum
As well as he.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 184.

Fr. estourdie, dullness, sottishness; q. "bestir myself, shake off my stupor."

STURDIED, part. adj. Affected with the disease called the Sturdy, ibid.

"I caught every sturdied sheep that I could lay my hands on, and probed them up through the brain and the nostrils with one of my wires." Ibid., p. 402. j

[STURE, s. A sturgeon, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 278, Dickson.]

STURE, STUR, STOOR, adj. 1. Strong, hardy, robust, S.

He wes a stout carle and a sture;
And off himself dour, and hardy.

Barbour, x. 158, MS.

O der Wallace, wnaquhill was stark and stur,
Thow most o neide in presoun till endur.

Wallace, ii. 206, MS.

The tothir of limmis bygger & corps mare sture is.

Doug. Virgil, 142, 11.

—In his hand the self tyme had he

Ane bustuous spere percais baith stiff and sture.

Ibid. 383, 39.

2. Rough in manner, austere, S.

He lighted at lord Durie's door,
And there he knocked, most manfullie;

And up and spake lord Durie, sae stoor,

"What tidings, thou stalward groom, to me?"

Minstrelsy Border, iii. 115.

In O. E., Stoore has been used in the same sense.

"Grym or stoore, Austerus. Grymnasse' or stoore-nesse." Austeritas. Prompt. Parv.

3. Rough, hoarse. A sture voce, a harsh voice, Gl. Shirr., S.

A.-S. Su.-G. stor, anc. stur, ingens, magna, Isl. stor, doer. Lapp. storra, id. Isl. styrir, rigidus, asper, is also, like the S. term, used to denote a harsh voice. Germ. storr, asper, rigidus.

Stor, store, is used in a sense nearly akin, Ywaine and Gawin.

The king and his men ilkane
Wend tharwith to have bene slane;
So blew it stor with slete and rayn.

E. M. Rom., i. 55.

Ritson renders it "loud, blustering;" rather, severe, keen, rough. For it is elsewhere said;

The store windes blew ful loud,
So kene come never are of clowd.

Ibid. p. 16.

To STURE at, v. n. To be in ill humour with.

"This pryor—also shew how bischope Forman had—caused the governour to sture at him, quhilk caused the bischope to give over manie benefices," &c. Pitt-cottie's Cron., p. 296.

There seems to be an error in what follows this. The reading of Ed. 1723, is preferable; "caused the Duke to thraw with him, till he [the prior, not the bischope] gave over certain benefices to the Duke," &c., p. 125.

Either from the adj. Sture, in sense 2, signifying rough in manner, austere; or from Teut. door-en, irritare, exacerbare.

STURE, s. 1. A penny, Shetl.; pl. sturis. "The waring of xxij sturis." Aberd. Reg.: probably stivers.

[2. He wants a sture o' the doit, a term applied to the contents of the head as well as the pocket, ibid.

A sture o' the doit is evidently another form of a penny o' the shillin, which is still used. Sture, a stiver, from Dan. styer, Belg. stuiver.]

To STURKEN, v. n. [1. To stiffen, congeal, coagulate, Shetl.]

2. To become stout after an illness; generally applied to females recovering from childbirth, Roxb.

To Sturken, A. Bor. is "to grow, to thrive;" Grose.

STURKEN, part. adj. Congealed, coagulated, Shetl.

A. Bor. "Storken, to congeal or coagulate like melted wax; Sturken, id.; Grose. Mr. Brockett expl. it "to cool, to stiffen."

Isl. storkn-a, congelare, rigescere, storkinn, congelatus, storknun, coagulatio; Dan. storkn-er, to coagulate, to congeal, storkniet, coagulated, storkning, a coagulation, a congelation. Ulphilas uses Moes.-G. ga-staurk-nith, in the sense of arescit, Mark 9, 18.

STURNE, s. Trouble, vexation, disquietude.

This word occurs in one of the rubrics in Barbour's Bruce, Edit. 1620, p. 201, although not in MS.

How Sir Edward withouten sturne,
Vndertook the battell of Bannockburn.

STURNILL, s. "An ill turn; a backset;" Gall. Enc.; apparently a corruption and inversion of ill turn.

STUROCH, s. Meal and milk, or meal and water stirred together; Perth. Crowdie, synon. Teut. stoor-en, to stir. V. STOURUM.

To STURT, v. a. To vex, to trouble, S.

Insacit of haltrant I rest in pece,
That was sa bald afore, and neuer wald ceis,
Qnhen thay ware chasit of thare natyfe land,
To sturt them on the strene fra hand to hand.
Doug. Virgil, 216, 28.

But human bodies ar sic fools,
For a' their colleges and schools,
That when nae real ills perplex them,
They mak enough themselves to vex them,
An' ay the less thay hae to sturt them,
In like proportion less will hurt them.
Burns, iii. 9, 10.

To STURT, v. n. To startle, to be afraid, S.

He marches thro' amang the stalks,
Tho' he was something sturtin;
The graip he for a harrow taks,
An' hurls't at his curpin.

Burns, iii. 133.

Belg. stoor-en, to move, to trouble, whence stoorenis, disturbance.

Su.-G. stoert-a, praecipitem agere, deturbare; stoerta en i olycka, aliquem in infortunium praecipitem dare. This Ihre properly derives from the obsolete v. stoor-a, synon. with A.-S. styr-ian, movere; Germ. sturz-en, praecipitare, deturbare. For to sturt is, greatly to stir one.

STURT, s. 1. Trouble, disturbance, vexation, S. B.

Dolorus my lyfe I led in sturt and pane,
Heuely wittand my innocent frende thus slane.
Doug. Virgil, 41, 36.

Suffer me swelt, and end this cruell lyffe,
Quhill doutsum is yet all syc sturt and striffe.
Ibid. 263, 40.

2. Wrath, indignation, heat of temper, S. B.

Ane bent ane bow, sic sturt couth steir him,
Grit skayth war to haif skard him.
Chr. Kirk, st. 8.

"A pund of patience is worth a stane of sturt;" S. Prov.

"Sturt pays no debt;" S. Prov.; "spoken with resentment, to them who storms when we crave of them their just debts." Kelly, p. 292.

Dan. stirl, stjrt, strife, is probably allied.

[STURTEN, adj. Of a sour disposition, Banffs.]

[STURTING, s. Shrinking, budging, Barbour, vii. 545.

This word may be read sturting or stinting, as it stands in the MS. Prof. Skeat prefers the latter, because the Cambridge MS. reads stynting.]

STURTSUMNES, s. Crossness of temper, Maitland Poems.

STURTY, adj. Causing trouble, S. B.

The lave their thumbs did blythly knock
To see the sturdy strife.
Skinner's Christmas Ba'ing, st. 23.

In Ed. 1809, changed to stalwart.

STUSHAGH, s. A suffocating smell arising from a smothered fire, Strathmore. Sinus-hach, synon.

The origin is probably Su.-G. stufw-a, Belg. stooft, Germ. stube, (whence the diminutives stübchen, stüfchen) a stew; because of the oppressive quality of the air.

To STUT, STUTE, STOOT, v. n. To stutter, Roxb., Ettr. For.

"The factor has behaved very ill about it, the muckle stootin gowk!" Wint. Ev. Tales, ii. 197.

A. Bor. "Stut, to stutter. An old word still in general use;" Gl. Brockett. V. Stut, Gl. Nares.

This differs from E. to Stut, only in pronunciation. Sw. stoot-a, id. balbutire. Our v. to Stot, to rebound, indicates a common origin; Teut. stoot-en, impingere. The S. verbs, Stoit, Stot, and Stute, seem all reducible to one primary idea, that of striking against some object.

STUTER, s. A stutterer, Roxb.

To STUT, v. a. To prop, to support, with stakes or pillars, S.; steel, Aberd.

"In the north of Scotland, to steel still signifies to prop, and a steel, a prop." Jamieson's Popular Ball, ii. 227, N.

Isl. styt-ia, stod-a, Germ. stuss-en, id. Stüttit, S. supported; Isl. stodad-r, id.

STUT, s. A prop, a support, S.; stud, E. a post, a stake.

Belg. stut, A.-S. studu, stuthe, Isl. stud, Su.-G. stod, fulcrum.

STUTHERIE, s. A confused mass, S. B. V. STOUTHRIE, s. 2.

STUTHIS, STUYTHIS, s. pl. Studs, ornamental knobs.

"Item, twa swardis of honour, with twa beltis; the auld belt wantand foure stuthis." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 49.

"Item, ane harnessing of yallow velvett, grene velvett, and purpoure velvett, with stuthis and bukkillis all ourgilt with gold." Ibid., p. 53.

"Aue siluer belt continand xxix haill stuythtis with heid & pendes of siluer." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.
This is undoubtedly the same with E. Stud, an ornamental knob or nail; A.-S. stuthe, destina, fulcrum, falcimentum; Somner."

STUVAT, STEWAT, s. "A person in a state of violent perspiration;" Gl. Sibb.

Howbeid I se thy skap skyre skoirde,
Thou art ane stural I stand foird.
2d. Serj. Put in your leggis into the stocks,
For ye had never ane meiter hois.
Thir stewats stink as thay war broks.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 221.

O. Fr. estuv-er, "to stue, soake, bathe; s'estuver, to sweat in a hothouse;" Cotgr. estuvinte, baignour. Ital. stufat-o, stewed.

STY, s. A strait ascent.

Tristrem on a day,
Tok Holain wel erly;
A best he tok to pray,
Bi a dern sty.

Sir Tristrem, p. 151.

Su.-G. sto, locus. The term may, however, signify a path, a strait ascent; Su.-G. Isl. stig, A.-S. stiga, Moe.-G. staija, Germ. steg, semita.

O.E. "Sty, by path. Orbita. Semita. Callis." Prompt. Parv.

[STYCHIE, s. An unseemly mass; confusion, disorder, Banffs.]

[To STYCHLE, v. a. and n. To stifle, suffocate; to cause suffocation; to be in a state of suffocation; Clydes., Aberd., Banffs.]

[STYCHLE, s. A close, suffocating atmosphere; also, whatever causes it, ibid.]

[STYCHLY, adj. Close, foul, suffocating, ibid.

Sw. styg, foul, nasty.]

[STYCHT, s. Fixed position, firm place, Barbour, iii. 658.]

To STYE, v. a. To climb.

From thence, with curious mind my standeris styes
The hill, where sunne is seen to set and ryes.

Hudson's Judith, p. 74.

Moe.-G. steig-an, A.-S. Alem. stig-an, Su.-G. stig-a, Germ. steig-en, id. adscendere.

This occurs in Palsgr. "I stye, I assende or I go vpwarde; Je monte. A farre northerne terme." B. iii., F. 374, b.

It also occurs in Wiclif's Wicket, in relation to our Saviour's ascension.

"And so we must beleue that hee was very God and very man together, and that hee styed vp very God and very man to heaven, and that he shal bee there till he come to deme the world." P. 15.

"For a recipe to the soreness of eyes called the styen, its ordinar to cause them stale in such and such parts, whereby they imagine the effect will follow." Law's Memor., Pref. LV.

The origin may be A.-S. stig-an, ascendere; Teut. stigh-en, elevare; because it swells or rises on the eye-lid. Lat. hordeolus is defined, "a little swelling in the eye-lids like a barley-corn." It appears that it had received its Lat. name from its resemblance to a grain of (hordeum) barley.

In the South of S. it was reckoned to be a sovereign remedy for this disorder, to rub the part affected with the tail of a cat.

STYK, s. A stitch. V. STEIK, s.

To STYLE, v. a. To give a person, in speaking or writing, the title that belongs to his rank, S.

STYLIT, part. pa. Honoured.

Howbeid that I lang tyme hee bene exylit,
I trest in God my name sowld yit be stylit.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 49.

From style, a title or appellation, a term frequently used in S. for a title of honour, as that belonging to a nobleman.

STYME, s. 1. A particle, a whit, the faintest form of any object, like E. Glimpse, as signifying the exhibition of a faint resemblance, S.

"I don't see a styme of it, i.e., a glimpse of it;" A. Bor. Grose.

Styme seems properly to signify a particle, a whit.

The Fr. phrase, Je n'y vois goutte, I see it not a whit, is somewhat analogous; literally, a drop.

—In underneath the flowr,
The lurking serpent lyes;
Suppose thou seist her not a styme,
Till that scho stings thy fute.

Chernie and Slue, st. 40.

Thou lichtlies all trow properties

Of Luv express;
And marks quhen neir a styme thou seist,
And hits begess.

Scott, Evergreen, i. 113, st. 4.

2. The slightest degree perceptible or imaginable; as, "I couldna see a styme," S.

—For dust that day
Mycht na man se ane styme,
To red thame.

Pebbles to the Play, st. 15.

3. A glimpse, a transitory glance; as, "There's no a styme o' licht here," S. This sense it seems to require in the following passage:—

I gae him bread and ale to drink,
And ne'er a blythe styme wad he blink
Until his wame was fou.—Herd's Coll. ii. 150.

4. A moment, Ayrs.

To flame as an author our snab was sae bent,
He ne'er bliund'd a styme till he gat it in prent.

Picken's Poems, ii. 132.

"He did not cease for a moment."

5. Styme is also defued, "a disease of the eye;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

Su.-G. stomm denotes the elementary principle of any thing; elementum aliquid rei, et prima adumbratio. Stymelse, species unde quid concludere queamus, aut subodorare; Ithre. C.B. ystum, form, figure, species.

To STYME, v. n. 1. To open the eyes partially, to look as one does whose vision is indistinct, S. B. to blink, synonym.

2. It also denotes the awkward motions of one who does not see well. Hence a person of this description is vulgarly called a blind stymie, S. B.

A. Bor. stimey, dim-sighted, Grose.

STYMEL, s. A name of reproach given to one who does not perceive quickly what another wishes him to see, Clydes.

This is evidently the same with Stymie, S. B. V. STYME, v.; also STYME, s., in sense 2.

To STYNT, v. n. To stop.

He saw per ordoure al the sege of Troy. —
He stynis, and wepand sayd Achates tyll, &c.
Doug. Virgil, 27, 20.

Stynt, pret. stopped. "Styntyn. Pauso. Subsisto. Desisto. — Styntinge or sesinge. Pausacio. Desistencia." Prompt. Parv.

Right styth stuffit in steill thai stotit na stynt.
Gavean and Gol., iii. 3.

O. E. id. Thus it is used, Hoccleve, p. 41.
He styntlik never, till his purs be bare.

STYPE, s. [Prob. an errat. for Stype, q. v.]

"The way of vecture and carriage of the barrels of ale into the town being altered —; which was by horses, on each side of which a four-gallon barrell was put; — now the way of importing ale is upon sleds and stypes, whereon the brewers put two nine-gallon trees, which is more than double what of old they imported on the horse's back." Fount. Dec. Suppl. iv. 309.

V. SLIP, SLYP, a kind of draught carriage.

STYTE, s. 1. "Absurd prating, nonsense;" Gl. Surv. Moray; Aberd., Mearns; Buff, synon.

2. Applied to a person who talks in a foolish way.

As M—y M—n steer'd the sow'ns,
An' keepin constant chattin
Up, glackit style, atween the loons,
Her pat it got a sautin.
D. Anderson's Poems, p. 77, Ab. 1813.

Perhaps allied to Teut. stuyt-en, to boast; jactare, ostentare, magnifice de se loqui; stuyter, thraso, grandiloquus. Thus Isl. steyt-a, allidere, is the original term. For steyt-r, allisio, is used, according to G. Andr., in the sense of boasting; —pro jactura; p. 223.

[To STYTE, v. n. To stagger, rebound, stot, Clydes. V. STOIT.]

[STYTE, s. A stagger, rebound, ibid.]

[To STYTER, v. n. To totter, stumble, ibid.]

[STYTERIN, adj. and adv. Staggering, tottering, ibid.]

[STYTH, adj. Strong. V. STITH.]

STYTHER, s. Place, station.

Out of my stithe I winna rise,
(And it is not for the awe of thee),
Till Kempion, the king's son,
Cum to the crag, and thrice kiss me.
Kempion, Minstrelsy Border, p. 15.

A. S. style, locus. This would seem to have been also written styth. For we find styth-fæst synon. with sted-fæste, which signifies, loco fixus, stabilis.

[SU, pron. She, Shetl.]

SUA, SUAWE, SWAY, conj. adv. So. V. SWA.

For the sustand suaive suartly hem suelles.
Sir Gawin and Sir Gal., l. 7.

Bot he moucht nocht amonyss sway,
That ony for him wald torne agane.
Barbour, viii. 348, MS.

V. SA.

[SUAGAT, adv. So, in such wise, Barbour, iv. 307.]

SUADENE BUIRDIS. Swedish boards.

"Tymmer skowis, Suadene buirdis, guirdstingis and boddummis." Aberd. Reg., 1543, V. 18.

This is obviously the same with that article mentioned in our old Book of Rates; "Boords called Swaden boards, the hundreth, xl l." A. 1611.

To SUALTER, SWALTER, v. n. To move with a plashing noise in water.

Than Rany of the Reidhewch—
Licht lap at a lyn;
He felyeit and he fell in;
And Hoge was sa haisty
That he sualterit him by.
Colkelbie Sow, F. I., v. 228.

The same with Swatter, v., q. v.

SUASCHE, s. A drum.

"Ordanis the provest of Edinbure to tax the remanent of the haill burrowis as use is; provyding always that it sall nocht be an tabroun or suasche to gang throw ony burc for suttin of men to the rest of the ansaingies unto the xx day of December mixtocum be bypast." Sedt. Conc., A. 1552, Keith's Hist. App., p. 67. V. SWESCH.

[E. swash, to strike with force, to clatter; Sw. swasa, to speak or write bombast. O. Fr. caisse, quaise, a drum, Cotgr.]

This term in its various forms Jamieson rendered a trumpet, a meaning which even the quotations show to be wrong. The suasch or swesch was the drum, and the tabroun, taburn, or labour, was the small drum beaten with one stick, and generally used as an accompaniment to the pipe. V. under SWESCH.]

SUBBASMONT, s. The lower pane of a bed.

"Item, four grete beddis, viz. ane of grene, with standartis coverit with grene velvett, the rufe of grene velvett, with the heid frenyeit with grene silk and gold, thre curtingis of grene dammas frenyeit with grene silk and gold, with ane subbasmont of grene velvett frenyeit of the samyne sort." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 45.

Fr. soubassement de lit, "the bases of a bed; that which hangs down to the ground at the sides, and feet of some stately bed;" Cotgr.

SUBCHETT, SUBDITT, s. One who is subject to another,

Defy the world, feynyeit and fals,
With gall in hart, and hunyt hals.
Quha maist it servis sall sonast repent:
Of quhais subchettis sour is the sals.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 122.

"It was also ane odious thyng to ane kyng to fecht aganis his subdittis." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 19, a.

The former is immediately allied to Fr. soubject, O. E. subyette, Gower, Lat. subject-us: the latter to subdit-us. By writers of the dark ages, subtili is often used as equivalent to vasalli. V. Du Cange.

SUBDANE, adj. Sudden.

"I began nocht littill to mervel at sa haisty and sa subdane a walter of this warldie, in sa mony grete materis, and specialie of the subdane change of sum cunning clerkis, of the silence and fleitnes of utheris, and of the maist arrogant presumption aprovin specialie in the ignorant." N. Winyet's Fourscoir Thre Questionis, Keith, App., 218.

O. Fr. soubdain, id.

[SUBDIT, SUBDITT, s. V. SUBCHETT.]

SUBERBYLIS, s. pl. Suburbs.

"Aboue mony othir his vailyeant dedis, he brint the suberbyllis of Carlele, hauand bot two seruandis in his company." Bellend. Cron. B. xvi. c. 5. Lat. suburbani.

To SUBFEU, v. a. V. FEV., v.

SUBITE, adj. Sudden; Fr. subit, -ite, Lat. subit-us.

"In phlebotomy or other manual operations,—the acts are subite or transient." Fountainh. Suppl., Dec., p. 232.

SUBJECT, s. Property, estate whether heritable or moveable, S.

"A relict, who has the care of a rich minor, and is left a good subject herself, has business enough in this wicked world." Saxon and Gael, i. 75.

SUBMISSE, adj. Submissive; O. Fr. soub-mis.

"He—gives him his bond of service, (or manreid), and that in ample forme, and submisce terms." Hume's Hist. Doug., p. 214.

SUBPAND, s. An under curtain for the lower part of a bed; synon. Subbasmont.

"Ane auld bed of blak dames, with the ruif and pandes, and twa subpandis, ane for the syde, ane uther for the feit." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 210. V. PAND.

To SUBSCRIBE, v. a. To subscribe; the vulgar pronunciation, S.

"I see gentlemen of girt worth among the C—s my accusers, wha are said to have subscribed or presented mony of those addresses." Speech for D—ssc of Arnistown, p. 6.

* To SUBSIST, v. n. To stop, to cease, to desist.

"Here, at this time, I shall subsist, since I will have occasion to speak to this matter afterward." M'Ward's Contend., p. 41.

"So I might here subsist. But for a further and more full declaration of my mind, in this matter—I shall append—these few things." Ibid., p. 227.

Lat. subsist-ere, to stop, to stand still.

SUBSTANCIOUS, SUBSTANTIOUS, adj. 1. Powerful, possessing ability.

2. Substantial, as opposed to what is slight or insufficient.

"To gar hyg an substantious dyk;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1541, V. 17.

"That—all the fencible persons—shall provide themselves with—ammunition, arms, and other warlike provisions of all sorts, in the most substantious manner, for horse and foot." Spalding, ii. 101.

It seems to occur in both senses in the following Act, A. 1561.

"That letters be direct to charge all the Erles, Lordis, &c.—that thai with their subtancious housaldis, weill bodin in feir of weir, in their maist subtancious maner, meit James Commendatour of Saintandrois," &c. Keith's Hist., p. 198.

3. Effectual.

"The Lord Governour and Lordis of secret Counsall, and the maist pairt of the hail nobellis of this realme—hes for substantious resistance,—willinglie of their awin courage, offerit thameselfis reddie to defend their awin auld liberties with their bodies and substance; and to win the hail nobilitie thairupoun," &c. Sed. Counc., A. 1549, Keith's Hist. App., p. 58.

"Fr. substantieus, -euse, substantial, stuffie;" Cotgr.

SUBSTANTIOUSLIE, adv. Effectually.

—"To the effect the saids vnlauchfull meitingis—may be substantiouslie suppressit, Ordains the hail inhabitantis of the saidis burrowes at all occasions to reddelie assist and concur with the magistratis and officiaris thairof for satling of the saidis tumultis & trublances, and pynischeing of the authoris and movearis thairof." Acts Ja. VI., 1606, Ed. 1814, p. 238.

Substantiouslie, Aberd. Reg.

[SURTILITE, s. Crafty work, fine workmanship, Barbour, xx. 306.]

SUCCALEGS, s. pl. Stockings without feet, Shetl.

Isl. sok-r, soccus, caliga, and legg-r, Su.-G. larg, tibia, crus; or perhaps from seika, fraus, q. legs that deceive, as having no feet. Seikull, deceitful.

SUCCRE, SUCCUR, SUCCURE, s. Sugar, S. sucker.

"At that tyme straynege cuntreis var nocht socht to get spicis, eirbis, drogis, gummis, & succur for to mak exquisit electuars to prouoke the pepil til ane disordinat appetit." Compl. S., p. 227.

Seropys, sewane, succure, and synamone.

Doug. Virgil, 401, 40.

"Poyson, confected with succe, is moste piercing and deadlie." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 938.

Burns writes sucker, iii. 14.

Fr. succe, Dan. sucker, Teut. zucker.

To SUCCRE, v. a. To sweeten with sugar, S.

"All fleshlie pleasures are both vain and vile.—Beware of such succred poyson." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 950. V. SUGERT.

[SUCCRE-ALI, s. Liquorice. V. SUGARALLIE.]

SUCCRE-SAPS, s. pl. A sort of pap sweetened with sugar, S.

The term occurs in a foolish song, entitled The Wren, or, Lennox's Love to Blantyre; in which the characters must certainly be viewed as allegorical.

—In came Robin Red-breast,

Wi' succar-saps and wyne. —

Now, maiden, will you taste of this?

It's succar-saps and wyne.

Herd's Coll., ii. 210.

[SUCCUDERUS, SUCCUDROUSLY. V. SUCKUDRY.]

[SUCK, s. 1. A wet state of the ground that one may sink in, Shetl.

2. Loose straw, rubbish, Orkn.]

[SUCKY, adj. Untidy, ibid.]

[To SUCK, v. a. To exhaust; applied to land, Banffs.]

[SUCKY, s. Clover, S. V. SUCKIES.]

SUCKEN, s. 1. The territory subjected to a certain jurisdiction, Orkn., Shetl.

"Sucken, a Baillery, so much ground as is under the Baillives jurisdiction." MS. Expl. of Norish Words. [Sw. socken, a parish.]

2. The jurisdiction attached to a mill; or that extent of ground, the tenants of which are bound to bring their grain thither, S.

"The astricted lands are called the thirl, or the sucken; and the persons subjected to the astriction get the name of suckeners. Hence the duties payable by those who come voluntarily to the mill, are called out-sucken, or out-town multures; and those that are due by tenants within the sucken, in-town or insucken multures." Erskine's Instit., B. ii. T. 9. s. 20.

3. Vulgarly used to denote the dues paid at a mill, S.; shucken, Moray.

Her daldie, a cannie auld carl,
Had shucken and mouter a fouth.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 294.

—"And sex bollis of moulder or suckin quhilks pertinet to the Carmelite freires of the said burcht." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 657.

This term is used in both senses in the North of E. V. Gl. Brockett.

4. The subjection due by tenants bound to a certain mill.

"He com nocht to grynd his quhyt in thair mill as he that aucht suckyn thareto." Aberd. Reg., V. 16.

A. S. socne, privilegium, immunitas; soc, jurisdictio, Somner. Su. G. sokn, id. exactio, jurisdictio; ofsokn, nimia exactio; Isl. ysrsokn, jus summum; Ibre. The origin is sok-a, quærere, to seek; in an oblique sense, exigere, to exact.

SUCKEN, adj. 1. Legally astricted; bound to have corn ground at a certain mill is sucken to it, S.

2. Used for bound in relation to any tradesman, shopkeeper, &c. "We're no sucken to ane by anither," S.

SUCKENER, s. One who is bound to grind his grain at a certain mill, S.

[SUCKENS, j. A small grapple used in searching for lost lines, Banffs.]

SUCKIES, SUCKIE-SOOS, s. pl. The flowers of clover, S.

The flocks an' herds are spremlin' seen,
The fragrant suckies nippin'.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 21.

V. SOUKS.

The term is sometimes used, in the singular, as equivalent to clover.

"You may try sowing part of the big red clover and part of the white and yellow sucky with the ryegrass." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 49.

SUCKUDRY, SUKUDRY, SUCQUEDRY, s. Presumption.

And quhen he hard Schyr Philip say
That Scottis men had set a day
To fecht; and that sic space he had
To purway him; he wes richt glaid.
And said, it wes gret sukudry
That set thaim apon sic foly.

Barbour, xi. 11, MS.

And for sic sucquedry vnder taken now,
His awne mischief, wele wourthy till allow
He fundin has.

Doug. Virgil, 467, 47.

Gower expl. it, in one of his Lat. rubrics, by presumpcio.

His loquitur de tercia specie superbie, que presumpcio dicitur.

Sarquedrye is thylke vice
Of pryde, which the third office
Hath in his court, and will not knowe
The throwth, till it ouerthrowe
Upon his fortune and his grace.

Conf. Am. Fol. 18, a.

From obsol. Fr. surcuidre, from sur, super, and cuid-er, agitare, imaginari, Rudd. Surcuydée, vain, Rom. de la Rose.

SUCCUDERUS, adj. Presumptuous.

Ye Sarazeins ar succuderus and self willit ay.

Rauf Coilyear, D. ij. a.

SUCCUDROUSLY, adv. Arrogantly.

Than said the Sarazine to Schir Rauf succudrously,
I haue na lyking to lyfe to lat the with lufe.

Rauf Coilyear, D. ij. a.

V. SUCKUDRY.

[SUD, SOOD, s. and adj. South, Shetl. Dan. sud, id.]

[SUDDAIN, SUDDAND, adj. Sudden.]

SUDDAINTY, s. 1. Suddenness, S.

"This is a wonderful change in sik a suddainty." Bruce's Eleven Sermon. D. 2. b.

"Spokin in suddainty, int he first motioune of yre;" Aberd. Reg.

2. Accidental homicide is called "slaughter of suddantie," as opposed to what is "of forethocht felonie."

"Greit slaughter—hes bene rycht comoun amangis the Kingis liegis now of late, baith of forethocht felony and of suddantie." Acts Ja. III., 1469, c. 43. Edit. 1568, c. 35. Skene.

Sometimes this term is used by itself elliptically to denote sudden slaughter; as opposed to intentional homicide.

"And gif it be fundin forthocht felony, to be punist eftir the kingis lawis. And gif it be fundin suddantie, to be restorit again to the fredome & immunitie of haly kirk and girth." Acts Ja. III., A. 1469, Ed. 1814, p. 96.

3. Mishap, harm, mischief, Aberd.

[SUDDANDLY, adv. Suddenly, Barbour, vi. 11.]

SUDDARDE, SUDDART, s. A soldier.

"The baill cuntrey being vnder the proclamatioun, sum wer licentiat to byd at home, be resoun of thair compositiounis bestowit vpon payment of the suddardis, quhair of thair wer iij^e horsmen and vj^e futemen." Belhaven MS., Mem. Ja. VI., fol. 67.

"Inquirit, gif this deponar, at my lord Bothwells desyre, socht ane fyne lunt of any of the suddartis: and answerit, that he did the same, and gat a piece of fyne lunt of half a faddome, or thareby, fra ane of the suddartis,— and deliverit to John Hepburne of Boltoun upon Saturday before the kingis slaughter." Anderson's Coll., ii. 170.

O. Fr. soudart, soldat; L. B. soldit-us; Roquefort. The term in L. B. also assumes the form of solidar-ius, soldar-ius, soldaer-ius, &c., from solid-um, sold-um, pay, denominated from the money paid to a soldier.

SUDDILL, adj. [Filthy, defiled.]

—The suddill sow of the sord.—
Colkelbie Sow, F. I. v. 171.

Isl. saur, sordes, impuritas, stercus; Verel.

[SUDDIL, s. A piece of dress much worn, Banffs.]

To SUDDIL, SUDDLE, v. a. To sully, to defile, S.

—In the dusty powder here and thare
Suddil and fule his criske and yallow hare.
Doug. Virgil, 410, 1.

Allied to Teut. sodel-en, Germ. sudel-n, inquinare, polluer. Wachter views this as formed from sul-en, id. d being inserted. Moes.-G. saul-jan, A.-S. syl-ian, Franc. sal-on.

SUDEREYS, s. pl. A name given to some of the Hebrudæ; [Southern Isles.]

"The title of these prelates, during the conjunction of Man and Sodor, had been universally mistaken, till the explications of that most ingenious writer, Dr. Macpherson: it is always supposed to have been derived from Sodor, an imaginary town either in Man or in Iona: whose derivation was taken from the Greek Soter, or Saviour. During the time that the Norwegians were in possession of the isles, they divided them into two parts: the northern, which comprehended all that lay to the North of the point of Ardnamurchan, and were called the Norderays, from Norder, North, and ey, an island. And the Sudereys took in those that lay to the South of that promontory." Pennant's Voyage, Hebr., p. 294.

The propriety of this etymon appears beyond a doubt from the following passage:—

Logmadr het son Gudraulur Sudreyia konongs; Logmadr var settr til landearnar i Nordrey-om. "The son of Gudraud, king of the Sudereys, was called Logmadr, [or Lagman, q. Laur-man]. He was set over the Norderays, that he might protect the lands." Snorr. Sturles. ap. Johns. Antiq. Celt. Scand., p. 233.

SUDGE, adj. Subject to, Shetl.

This term is not of northern origin; but is probably a corr. of Fr. sujet.

SUEFIS, SWEFIS, s. pl. Suevi or Swevians.

—How the Empriour dois dance
Suefs in Suavia syno.

Colkelbie Sow, F. I., v. 368.

In a MS. copy, Suefs. Su.-G. swaefswja signifies comitatus; swaef-a, A.-S. swef-ian, sopire; swaefen, somnium. But the meaning seems to be, that the Emperor danced to a tune denominated "the Swevi," or "Swevians in Suabia." A.-S. Swefas, Suevi.

SUELLIEG, s. Expl. "heat, a burning fever."

"Lev. xxvi. Moyses sais, be the spreit of Gode, gyf ye obeye nocht my command, I sal visee you vitht dreddour, vitht fyir, ande vitht suellieg." Compl. S., p. 37.

—The valyand Hectour loist the sweete
On Achilles spere.

Doug. Virgil, 16, 13.

Both Junius and Rudd. view this as an adj., signifying sweet, and think that the term life must be supplied. Sibb. has justly rendered suete, life; referring to A.-S. swat, sanguis.

This is a Gothic idiom. We learn from Ihre, that Su.-G. swell properly denotes humour, moisture, but that the term has been restricted by use to two principal humours of the body. It not only signifies swat, but also blood. The latter sense, he says, anciently prevailed throughout the North. In this sense it is still used in Upland; as in suelt in Iceland.

• To SUFFER, v. n. To delay.

It is said of Wallace, after he received an invitation, while in France, to return to his country, and take the crown ;

The wyrt he gat, bot yett suffer he wald,
For gret falsheid that part hym dyd off ald.
Mekill delour it did him in his mynd,
Off thar mysfayr, for trew he was and kynd.
He thoct to tak amendis off that wrang ;
He answered nocht, bot in his wer furth rang.
Wallace, x. 1057, MS.

A Fr. idiom ; Se soufrir de, to forbear the doing of.
The v. Thole is used in a similar sense, q. v.

SUFFER, adj. Patient in bearing injurious treatment.

Syne he gart lousse him off thar handis new,
And said, he was baith suffer, wyss and trew.
Wallace, vi. 481, MS.

It is changed to sobber, Edit. 1648.

SUFFISANCE, s. Sufficiency ; Fr.

—Quhat have I gilt to faillie

San every wight has thereof suffisance ?
King's Quair, li. 7.

[SUFFISAND, SUFFICYAND, part. pr. Sufficient, Barbour, i. 368.]

SUFFRAGE, SUFFERAGE, s. A prayer for the dead. It is more generally used in the pl.

"Oure souerane lord—having—perwait and considerit the charter—grantit—to the puir memberis of Jesus Christ—resident within the burgh of Perth, off
—all and sindrie annuallrentis, &c., to quhatsumeur kirk, chappell, college, alter, monasterie, prebendarie, place, or benefice without the said burgh, for quhat-sumeur caus or occasioun, and speciallie for celebratioun of suffragis :—hes ratifijt," &c. Acts Ja. VI, 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 581.

"The said chaplain, every year, once in the year, for the said Michael and Jonet, sall make suffrages, which is, I am pleased, and direct me, O Lord, with an Mess of Rest, being naked, he clothed me ; with two wax candles burning on the altar. To the whilk suffrages and mess, he shall cause ring the Chappell bell the space of ane quarter of ane hour, and that all the foresaid poor, and others that shall be thereintill, shall be present at the foresaid mess with their habites, requesting all these that shall come in to hear the said mess to pray for the said souls." A.
1545, Blue Blanket, p. 40.

This term occurs in a still more singular connexion, in the Petition of the Surgeons and Barbers of Edinburgh (who then formed one corporation) to the Lord Provost and Council. As they ask that a subject may be given to them annually for dissection, they bind themselves to a species of service, from which, in this form at least, as good Protestants, they must find themselves now happily relieved.

—"That we may haue anes in the year ane condempait man after he be dead, to mak Anatomia of, wherthrew we may haue experience ilk ane to instruct others, and we shall do suffrage for the saul." A.
1505, Blue Blanket, p. 55.

Palsgr., B. iii., F. 350, b. Perhaps this O. Fr. v. by which Swagge is rendered, has a Goth. origin.

SUGGAN, s. "A thick coverlet ;" Gall.

SULLIGE, SULYE, SOILYIE, s. Soil, ground, country; Lat. sol-um. V. SUILYE.

"So the earth, dirt, and sullige, conveyed by the water, must have remained among the fallen wood, and such a stagnation is the very mother of moss." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 65.

This has been evidently borrowed from the Fr. "Solage, soyle, or good ground;" Cotgr.

The sulye spred hir brade bosom on brede.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 400, 24.

Sulye, Ibid., 369, 51.

"Gif any beast, horse, oxe, or kow, or other cattell be founden within the lordship, and the soilye of any man," &c. Baron Courts, c. 65, s. 1.

SULE, s. A ring with a swivel, S. B.

Seren. derives the E. word from Isl. sveif, volva, instrumentum quo aliquid circumrotatur; sveif-a, volutare. Su.-G. soelia, however, denotes a ring into which a thong is put; Isl. syglia, which, because of its rotundity, G. Andr. derives from sole, the sun; others from Fenn. sul-ien, to close.

SULE, s. [Prob. an errat. for Scule, a school.]

I sall degrad the graceless of thy greis.

Scald thee for skorn, and scor thee af thy sule.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 68, st. 19.

This, I apprehend, should be scule, as in Edit. 1508.

Scalle the for scorne, and schere the af thy scule.

q., delete thy name from the list of thy school. This corresponds with the preceding idea, of stripping him of his literary degrees.

SULFITCH, adj. Suffocating; applied to smell, Ang.; corr., perhaps, from sulphurous.

To SULK it. To be in a sullen humour.

Our admirall, though tide and wind say nay,
He'll row and work, and sulk it all the way.

E. Argyle, Law's Memorials, p. 213.

This evidently refers to James Duke of York. We sometimes use the term sulks, in the sulks, S. in the same sense.

SULLIGE, s. Soil. [V. under SULE, v.]

[SUIP, s. A wet state of ground, a marsh, Shetl.]

[To SULP, v. a. To bring cut grass from a swampy meadow, ibid.]

[SULYE, s. Soil. V. under SULE, v.]

SULYEART, adj. Clear, bright, glittering.

And lusty Flora did hir blomes sprede
Under the fete of Phebus sulyeart stede.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 400, 14.

Ir. soilier, splendens, rutilus; soilierachd, splendor, fulgor.

SUM. A termination of adjectives, frequently occurring in S.; it is used in three senses.

1. It denotes conjunction; as, threesum, three together, [or in all, altogether.]

"It is nocht possible to gar thresum keip counsel, and speciale in causis of trason." Compl. S., p. 205.

"There were three of them set upon him,—I brought the twasome—but wha was the third?" Guy Mannering, iii. 299, 300.

The twasome sat curmud thegither, &c.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 46.

This signifies "two in company."

It is also used in this sense in Lanarks., and carried on through all the numbers; as, twasum, saxsum, tensum, twentysum, threttisum, fortisum, hundersum. Isl. saman, simul, una collectio, has precisely the same sense.

Thresum occurs in the same sense in The Bruce.

—Jamys of Dowglas, at the last,

Fand a litill sonkyn late,
And to the land it drew fut hate.

Bot it aa litill wes, that it

Mycht our the wattr bot thresum flyt.

Barbour, iii. 420, MS.

He also uses twasum and fycesum in a similar signification.

—That wes in an ewill plass,

That aa strayt and aa narow was,
That twasum samyn mycht nocht rid
In sum place off the hillis sid.

Barbour, x. 19, MS.

Samyn here is redundant; the idea being conveyed by the termination of the preceding word.

Dr. Leyden, in his Gl., refers to Su.-G. samja and sama (Leg. saem-ia, saem-a) consentire. "Hence," he adds, "the termination sam expresses union or agreement; as hedersam, consistent with honesty; icarsam, consistent with prudence; fraendsaemia, jus consanguinitatis; magsaemia, jus affinitatis." Su.-G. sam, whence saem-ia, saem-a, signifies, plurium unitas.

Twasum is used Caithn. for two acting together. Thus, a sick person is said to be lifted by twasum. Threesum, generally through S., denotes the union of three, in a particular kind of dance, called a threesum reel.

2. It signifies similitude, S.

This is the proper idea, when it seems to be used, in a general way, as denoting quality. It is commonly affixed to a s., and forms an adj., expressing a property analogous to the idea conveyed by the s.; as, lufeum, amiable, hairtsam, cheerful, winsum, id. jucundus, gaudio similis.

Su.-G. sam, mentioned above, also bears this sense. Ihre renders fridsam, pacifico similis. Som is used in the same way. Thus also, according to Wachter, sam occurs in Germ.

Wachter has observed that lich is synon. with sam;

as, friedsam and friedlich, used in the sense of pacific; Proleg. sect. 6. in vo. This is confirmed by our use of hairsum and hairtie, as conveying the very same idea.

3. In some degree, [somewhat, rather], S.

Both Ihre and Wachter view A.-S. sum, as perfectly synon. with Su.-G. and Germ. sam. Now, Lye observes that the term sum, in certain A.-S. words, has its origin from the pronoun sum, aliquid, aliquantum. There are indeed various words, both in A.-S. and S., in which it seems most naturally to bear this signification; as A.-S. lang-sum, diuturnus aliquantum, long in some degree, S. id.; forsum, applied to things that are more full than what is necessary; as to a piece of dress that has rather a clumsy appearance, from its being made too large.

SUM. As an adj., some; used distributively, denoting first the one, then the other.

"Betwix Clid and Lennox lyis the baronie of Renfrew, in the quhilk ar twa lochis, namyt Quhyn-south and Leboth, sum. xx. and sum. xii. mylis of lenth." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 7. Unus and alter are the correspondent terms used by Boeue.

This is an A.-S. idiom. Sum was becoren preode, sum was laeicde; Hic erat attonsus clericus, ille erat laicus; Bede ap. Lye. Moes-G. sums and suma also signify unus, a, um. V. Hicke Gramm. A.-S. and Moes-G. p. 36.

2. As an adv., in some degree; as, "That pin's sum muckle," i.e., somewhat large, S. B. V. SOME.

SUMDELL, SUMDEILL, SUMDELE, adv. 1. Somewhat, in some degree.

And he, that hard sa suddanly
Sic noyis, sumdele affrayt was.
Barbour, vi. 221. MS.

2. Used as respecting quantity or number.

Bot thal the chansell sturdely
Held, and thaim defendyt wele,
Till off thair men war slayne sumdell.
Barbour, v. 358, MS.

It occurs in sense 1, O.E.

Corineus was tho somdel wroth, ys'axe on hey he drow.
R. Glouc., p. 17.

But she was sumdele deaf, and that was skaith.
Chaucer, Prolog. W. Bathes T.

A.-S. sum dæle, aliqua parte, partim.

[SUMKYN. Of some kind, Barbour, x. 519. V. ALKYN, NAKYN.]

SUMPAIRT, adv. Somewhat.

"As to my auin ansueris, albeit I haue retenit the substance of thame, yit findand greitar commoditie of buikes heir nor in Scotland, I haue sumpairt amplifeit and enlargit thame, to accomodat my self to the capacite of the ruid people, quha could not be abill to comprehend sua vechtie materis in sua feu vordis, as I was constraint to vse in my conference." Nicol Burne's Disputation, To the Christ. Reidar.

SUMLEYR, s. An officer who had charge of the royal household stuff.

"William Gryse sumleyr to our souerane lord & ladie, the king & quenis maiesteis." Aberd. Reg. A. 1565.

Cotgr. renders Fr. sommeiller, a butler. But it seems to denote an officer who had the charge of the royal household-stuff; L.B. Summularius. Du Cange expl. Somarii as signifying butlers; but remarks that there were different officers who bore this name. Occurrunt varii summularii, nempe summularii map-parum, scancionariae, camerae denariorum, fructuariorum, Capellae, &c. He also mentions the Sumelarius coquinae; referring to the Lib. Niger Scaccarii; and the Somalerius, who had charge of the burden of the pack-horse.

SUMMER, adj. Summary; Fr. sommaire.

—"Grantis full power—to consult, conclude, and put in wreate [writing] all sick good ordoure, &c. quhair-by goodle and summer justice may be done—to all his hienes liegis without long delays and extraordinier expensis." Acts Ja. VI., 1617, Ed. 1814, p. 550.

[SUMMER, s. The principal beam in a wooden building, Barbour, xvii. 696.]

SUMMER, SWMMER, s. A sumpter horse.

And nocht for thi all that thai wer
Come weil out our it, hale and fer;
And tynt bot littill off thair ger,
Bot gif it war ony summer,
That in the moss was left liand.
Barbour, xix. 746, MS.

O. Flandr. Fr. sommier, id.

That the term properly denoted a beast of burthen, appears from the signification of the synon. sommier, in Old Flemish, jumentum clitellarium, sarcinarium; Kilian. Also, Teut. som-beeste, id. som-peerd, equus clitellarius. The origin is somme, onus, sarcina. A.-S. seam, seom, id. whence sem-an, sym-an, onerare. V. Sowme, s. 2.

To SUMMER, v. a. To feed cattle, &c., during summer, S.

"It occurs very seldom that cattle are fed on the same ground for twelve successive months, or summered where they have been wintered." Agr. Surv. Dunbart., p. 211. V. SIMMER.

SUMMER-BLINK, SIMMER-BLINK, s. A transient gleam of sunshine, S.; used also metaph.

"Yet I am in this hot summer-blink, with the tear in my eye." Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 86. V. BLENK.

SUMMER-CAUTS, SUMMER-COUTS, SIMMER-COUTS, s. pl. 1. The name given to the exhalations seen to ascend from the ground in a warm day, S.B. Landtide, synon. B.

And she is like to sconce wi' the heat:
The summer-couts were trembling here and there.
Ross's Helenore, p. 27.

— Het, het was the day,
The simmer-couts were dancing brae frae brae.
Ibid. p. 87.

In second Edit. 1788, it is also summer-cauts, p. 28, and summer-cauts, in the first Edit., A. 1768, p. 21 and 82. But in Edit. second and third, cauts or couts alone occurs. We must then view cauts as an errata in the first edition; especially as I have before me the second, corrected for the press in the autograph of the late learned Dr. Beattie of Aberdeen (who was the early friend of Ross); and he has given no intimation that couts is not the proper sound. V. OUDER.

2. The gnats which dance in clusters on a summer evening, Lanarks.; pron. simmer-couts.

8. In sing. A lively little young fellow, synon. with E. Grig; "He's a perfect summer-cout," Lanarks.

Perhaps q. summer-colls, in allusion to the undulating motion of these vapours, which may have been thought to resemble the frisking of young horses. These are called king's weather, Loth. In the South of S. it is pron. king's wethers; and it has been supposed to refer to the gay and unsteady motion of wedders, analogous to the other designation of coute.

- [SUMMER-CLOCKS, s. pl. The sunbeams dancing in the atmosphere during a fine summer day, Shetl.]

SUMMER-FLAWS, s. pl. Used as synon. with Summer-couts, Angus.

SUMMER-GROWTH, s. V. SEA-GROWTH.

SUMMER-HAAR, s. A slight breeze from the east, which often rises after the sun has passed the meridian. It receives this name from the fishers of Newhaven, though not accompanied with any fog.

SUMMER-SOB, s. A summer-storm, Ang.

— You summer-sob is out;
This night bodes well, spy, 'oman, round about,
The morn will better prove.—

Ross's Helenore, p. 75.

In Aberd. the term is used to denote frequent slight rains in summer, commonly in May.

Gael. siob-am, to blow; siobun, drift, blast. Perhaps in allusion to the sobbing of a child in bad humour, who is soon pacified; or allied to Teut. seoff-en, flare.

SUMMER-TREE, s. Apparently, a maypole. V. SKAFRIE.

SUMMYN, adj. Some.

All and *summy*n, all and every one.

Or list appruse thay pepill all and *summy*n
To giddir myddill, or jone in lyig or band.

Doug. Virgil, 103, 35.

A.-S. sumne signifies, aliquot. It is properly the accus. of sum, aliquis. Sumon is also used as the ablat. pl.

SUMP, s. A sudden and heavy fall of rain, S. A.; synon. Plump.

"Aye! aye! we shall have a thick and heavy hoar frost, or a sounding sump o' rain, I wotnae whilk." Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1820, p. 146.

Of thunder July speaks, and sumps of rain;
And August winds uproot the growing grain.

Ibid., Jan. 1821, p. 423.

"Sump, a great fall of rain;" Gall. Enc.

Can this be viewed as allied to Su.-G. sump, palus, a marsh, E. swamp?

SUMPED, part. adj. Wet, drenched.

But now with the dead I must lay down my head,
On this bluid sumped field—Waterloo.

Gall. Encycl., p. 442.

SUMP, s. The pit of a mine.

"A shaft, or sump, as the miners term it, was made, to the depth of several fathoms, immediately below the bottom of the waste, from whence the rich mass of ore, above-mentioned, had been taken, and a drift carried on, in the direction of the silver vein, upon that level." P. Alva, Stirl. Statist. Acc. xviii. 142.

[SUMPAIRT, adv. V. under SUM, adj.]

SUMPH, s. 1. A blockhead, a soft, blunt fellow, S.

"Better thole a grumph than a sumph." Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 20.

The finish'd mind, in all its movements bright,
Surveys the self-made sumph in proper light,
Allows for native weakness, but disdains
Him who the character with labour gains.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 347.

[2. A sour, sulky fellow, Clydes.]

Callander derives this from Su.-G. stamm, balbutiens stuttering; MS. Notes on Ihre, (in vo).

Perhaps it is rather allied to Germ. sumpf, Teut. sompe, a marsh; or Su.-G. swamp, a sponge, also, a mushroom, q. fungosus homo; as, a foxy chield, S. B. Ihre, vo. Swamp, refers to Gr. σούφος, spungy. Teut. sompe is sceptrum morionis. It may be observed, however, that if we suppose m to have been inserted, the word would be literally analogous to Teut. suff-en, delirare, desipere, hallucinari; suff, delirius. Thus there would be no occasion for having recourse to a figurative origin.

Tó SUMPH, v. n. 1. To dote, to be in a state of stupor.

I will affirm they're skant of wit,
Who in a supream court like that,
Will sumph and vote they wot not what.

Cleland's Poems, p. 113.

[2. To go about in a sulky humour, Clydes.]

[SUMPHIN. 1. As an adj., sulky, grumbling, ibid., Banffs.

2. As a s., the act of sulking or grumbling, ibid.]

SUMPHISH, adj. Stupid, blockish, S.; [sulky, Clydes.]

The sumphish mob, of penetration shawl,
May gape and ferly at your cunning saul,
And make ye fancy that there is desert
In thus employing a' your sneaking art.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 349.

SUMPHION, s. "A musical instrument; same perhaps with O. Engl. symphonie, which seems to have been a kind of tabour or drum;" Gl. Sibb.

SUNDAY'S CLAISE. Dress for going to church in, S. corresponding to Su.-G. kyrkioklaedhe, i.e., kirk-claise.

Here country John in bannet blue,
An' eke his Sunday's Claes on.—

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 26.

[SUNDAY SARK. Among the poorest classes it means a clean shirt; but among the more provident, a shirt of finer texture reserved for Sabbath wear, Ayr.

I'll get my Sunday sark on.

Burns, Holy Fair, s. 6.]

SUN-DOWN, s. Sunset, South of S.

—“And sitting there birling—wi’ a scaff and raff o’ the water-side, till sun-down, and then coming hame and crying for ale, as if ye were maister and mair.”
Tales of my Landlord, ii. 114.

This word is used in the United States of America.
“Daylight! do but hear the silly child!—’Tis but just sundown.” Lionel Lincoln, i. 41.

SUN-FISH, s. The basking shark, S. Squalus maximus, Linn. V. SAIL-FISH.

SUNNY-SIDE. Land having a southern exposure, S. V. SONIE HALF.

This phrase is still very common in law-deeds. In the Lat. of our writs it is denominated, Pars solaris.

[SUN-SITTEN, adj. Applied to eggs injured by the heat of the sun, Shetl.]

[SUNE, adv. Soon, S. A.-S. súna, id.]

To SUNGLE Lint, v. a. To separate flax from the core; the pron. of Swingle, S. B.

—Lint was beaten wi’ the mell,
And ilkane sungled to themself.

Piper of Peebles, p. 6.

V. SWINGLE.

[SUNIE, s. A term of reproach, Shetl.]

SUNK, s. A seat of turf, Ross, Helenore, p. 141.

[SUNK-DYKE, s. A dyke built of stone or sods on the one side, and built with earth on the other, Banffs.]

SUNK-POCKS, s. pl. The bags tied to the Sunks or Sods on the back of a tinker’s ass, in which the goods, baggage, and children are carried, S. V. SONK, s.

SUNKIE, s. “A low stool;” Gl. Antiq., South of S.; a dimin. from Sunk.

“Mony a day hae I wrought my stocking, and sat on my sunkie under that saugh.” Guy Mann., ii. 18.

It is frequently used to denote such a stool as a dairy-maid uses when milking her cows.

It seems originally to have signified a seat of turf or straw. V. SONK.

SUNKS, s. pl. A sort of saddle made of cloth, and stuffed with straw, on which two persons can sit at once; synon. Sods, S. V. SODDIS.

It may be added that A. Bor. sunk has the same meaning; “a canvas pack-saddle stuffed with straw;” Gl. Grose.

SUNKAN, part. adj. “Sullen, sour, ill-natured;” Gl. Picken. This seems merely Sunken, the old participle of the v. to Sink, q. dejected in spirit.

SUNKET, s. A lazy person, Roxb., S.

A.-S. sweag, desidiosus, from sweanc-an, fatigare, sweuced, sweucte, fatigatus.

SUNKETS, s. pl. Provision of whatever kind; a term used indefinitely, S.

Lay sunkets up for a sair leg.

Ramsay’s Poems, i. 298.

It is often applied to food.

—He was weel likit by ilka body,

And they gae him sunkets to rak his wame.

Jamieson’s Popular Ball., i. 301.

We are told of an English gentleman who, hungry and weary, alighted in the evening at some petty inn in the South of S., the appearance of which had no great promise. “Good woman,” said he to the landlady, “can I have any thing for my horse?” “Ou aye,” she replied, “he’ll get sunkets.” Although he did not understand the meaning of the term, he naturally enough concluded that this must be the food commonly given to horses in that part of the country. In a little, urged by his personal wants, he proposed another question; “Good woman, can I have any thing for myself?” His astonishment may well be imagined, when he received the very same answer: “Ou aye, ye’es get sunkets.”

This is also used in the singular.

—“A kindlie night for—earning a meltith for tomorrow’s sunket.”—“Hame he never came without a kind kiss and sunket for me.” Blackw. Mag., May, 1820, 158, 159.

Supposed to be a corr. of E. somerchat; as, What shall I get to eat? You’ll get sunkets. In Suffolk, suncate signifies a dainty, Grose.

SUNKET-TIME, s. Meal-time, the time of taking a repast, Dumfr.

—“A green petticoat—cam to my hand at sunkit-time on the sunny-side o’ a thorn bush.” Ibid., Dec., 1820, p. 321.

To SUNYE, v. a. To care. SUNYE, s. Care. V. SONYIE.

SUNYIE, SUNZIE, s. An excuse. Ye mak aye sae mony sunyies, you have always so many excuses, Roxb. Evidently an abbreviation of the old law term Essonyie, q. v.

To SUOUFE, v. n. To slumber.

Than softlie did I souufe and sleep,

Howbeid my bed wes hard.

Burel’s Pilgr., Watson’s Coll., ii. 34.

This is the same with souf, q. v.

SUP, s. A small quantity of any liquid or sorbile substance; as, “a sup water;” “a sup porridge,” &c., Aberd. V. SOUR, s. sense 3.

To SUP, v. a. To take such food as broth or porridge with a spoon, S.

“They—dish up this dung of hell, and set it as manna before such as they would make disciples, to be supped up and swallowed down,” &c. Rutherford’s Lett. Postscript.

The term occurs in a S. Prov. which emphatically expresses the danger which attends sinful compliances; “He would need a lang spoon that sups wi’ the deill.”

Su.-G. sup-a, sorbere, sorbiliare. Sw. supamat is expressly rendered by Widegren, “spoon-meat.” A.-S. sup-an, Teut. supp-en, scep-en, id.

To SUPEREXPEND, v. a. To overrun in disbursement; or to run in arrears.

—"His hienes thesaurarie is of the self becum vnabill to discharge the burding quhilk presentlie it vnderlyis, quhairthrow not onlie is the said office in the yeirle comptis thair of excessivelie superexpendit, bot thair maiesties seruice lyikyis greittlie hinderit," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1598, Ed. 1814, p. 180.

To SUPEREXPONE, v. a. To expend, or lay out, over and above.

"Anent the—causs persewit be Schir Johne Ruthirfurde of Tarlane knycht aganis the aldermen, bailieis & commite of Abirdene, for the wrangwis detention and withholding fra him of the soume of fiftj merkis,—the quhilk soume he superexponeit mare than the commounie gudis of the said toune extendit to the last yere, quhene he was alderman of the said toune," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1491, p. 230.

Formed from Lat. super, and expon-ere used in a literal sense, not warranted by classical authority.

SUPERFLEW, adj. Superfluous; Fr. superflu, -ue, id.

"To the fyne that na man of his realme, be occasion of slenth, sall vse reiffis on the cuntrie, he send all superflew pepyl to be wageouris to the Brytonis." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 53, b.

* SUPERINTENDENT, s. An office-bearer in the Church of Scotland, who, for some time after the Reformation, when there was a scarcity of fixed pastors, was appointed to oversee a particular province, to preach the word, plant churches, ordain elders, and to take cognisance of the doctrine and life of ministers, and of the manners of the people; being himself subject to the pastors and elders of the said province.

"We have thought good to signifie to your Honours—how many superintendents we thinke necessarie, with their bounds, office, the manner of their election, and the causes that may deserve deposition from that charge.—We have thought it a thing most expedient at this time, that from the whole number of godly and learned men, now presently in this realm, be selected ten or twelve (for in so many provinces we have divided the whole), to whom charge and commandment should be given to plant and erect kirkes, to set order, and appoint ministers as the former order prescribes," &c. First Buik of Discipline, c. 6.

SUPERINTENDENTRIE, s. The province or district in which a superintendent exercised his office.

"Maister Robert Pontt commissioner of the superintendentrie of Murray, was presented to the personage and vicarage of the parish kirk of Burnie, in the diocie of Murray—Jan. 13, 1567." Reg. Present. Life of Melville, i. 280, N.

This termination rie, as in Bishopry, is from A.-S. rice, jurisdiction.

SUPERSAULT, s. The somersault, or somerset; Catnav, synon.

"His head going down, he louns the supersault, and his buttocks light hard beside me, with all his four feet to the lift," Melville MS. Mem., p. 184.
Fr. soubresault, id.

To SUPIR, SYPR, v. n. To sigh.

My spreit supirs and sichs maist sair,
Quhen I rement me euer mair.

Bure's Pidgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 43.

Sypyring, quhils wyring
My tender bodie to.

Ibid. p. 34.

Fr. souspir-er, soupir-er, id.

SUPPABLE, adj. What may be supped; as, "Thai kail ar sac. saut, they're no suppable," S.

[SUPPIN, part. adj. To be supped, that must be supped; as, suppin-sowens, S.]

SUPPE, v. a. Errat. for suppedite, supply, maintain.

"And ordinis our soursane lordis lettrez to be direct to kepe & suppe the said Johne yongare tharintill." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1489, p. 136.

It seems probable that this is an errat. for suppedite, i.e., supply, or maintain; especially as the occurs twice, miswritten in the first instance for dite.

To SUPPEDIT, v. a. To supply; Lat. suppedit-o.

"Bot yit no man suld 'decist fra ane gude purpose quhou beit that detractione be armit vitht inay redly to suppedit & tyl impung ane verteo' verk." Compl. S., p. 18, 19.

[SUPPLE, SUPPLIE, s. Support, reinforcement, Barbour, xiii. 225 (rubric) Camb., MS.]

To SUPPLIE, v. a. To supplicate; Fr. suppli-er.

"The said Mr. Robert [Montgomerie]—hes maist humblie suppliit to tak consideration of his petious complaint," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1584, Ed. 1814, p. 212.

[SUPPLICANT, s. A person in great distress, one who is an object of pity, Banffs.]

SUPPOIS, SUPPOSE, conj. Although, S.

Eurill (as said is) has this iouell hint,
About his sydis it brasin, or he stynt;
Bot all for nocht, suppois the gold dyd glete.

Doug. Virgil, 289, 13.

"In the year 1788 I saw the same use of Suppose for Though, in a letter written by a Scotch officer at Guernsey, to my most lamented and dear friend, the late Lieutenant General James Murray.—

"I feel exceedingly for Lord W. M., suppose I have not the honour of being personally acquainted with him."

"I believe that the use of this word Suppose for Though is still common in Scotland." Tooke's Divers. Purley, i. 188.

SUPPOIST, SUPPOST, s. 1. A supporter, an abettor.

"Save your persone by wisdom, strenthen yourself againis force, and the Almychtie God assist you in bothe ane and the uther, and oppin your eyis, understanding, to sic and perceave the craft of Sathan and his suppoists." Lett. D. of Chatelherault, Knox's Hist., p. 171.

Fr. suppost, a deputy, one that is put in the room of another. Hence the phrase, Un suppost de diable, a limme of the devil, Cotgr.

2 A scholar in a college.

—"In the first Colledge, which is the entry of the University, there be four classes or sieges; the first to the new Supposita, shall be only of Dialectick."

—First Buik of Discipline, c. 7, § 7, id. Spotswood, p. 447.

L. B. suppositum, id. V. Du Cange.

SUPPONAILLER, s. A supporter. "Lele helps, consanthers, supponailers & furtherers;" Chart. at Panmure, A. 1391, Aberd. Reg.

To SUPPONE, v. a. and n. To suppose; to expect, to hope. Lat. suppon-ere.

"Wpoun the morne, the chancellour happened better nor any man supponed." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 25.

"Daylie amitie and freindschip increased,—that all men supponed the same to endure for evir vnbrokin." Pitcottie's Cron., i. 15.

SUPPONAND, part. pr. as a conj. Supposing, although.

"The said contracte obliissis the merchandis—to cum with thar schippis and gudis to the havin and port of Middelburgh, vnder the pane of tynsall of thar schippis and all thar gudis, supponand be storme of wedire, or truble of weiremen, the saidis schippis be aventure may be dreivin or chasit to vthir portis." Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 314.

To SUPPOSE, v. a. To put any thing into the place belonging to another, in a suppositious manner.

"As to the history of the Church, ascribed commonly to him [Knox], the same was not his work, but his name supposed to gain it credit." Spotswood, p. 267.

Fr. suppos-er, to suborn, to forge.

[SUPPOSE, imper. as a conj. Although. V. SUPPOIS.]

SUPPOWALL, SUPPOWALE, s. Support.

He wyst rycht weill, with owtyne wer,
That thair rycht ner suppowall had.

Barbour, xvi. 111, MS.

Mr. Macpherson refers to O. Fr. apuyal.

To SUPPOWELL, v. a. To support.

"Fore my service in maner as I hase before writyn, that yhe will vouchesauf tyll help me, and suppowell me tyll gete amendes of the wrangs and the defowle that ys done me." Lett. Geo. Dunbar E. of March to Hen. IV., A. 1400. Pinkerton's Hist. Scot., i. 449.

To SUPPRISE, v. a. To suppress, to bear down.

Suppriset with a surget, he beris hit in sable.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., l. 24.

SUPPRISS, s. Oppression, violence.

Our all the toune rewlyng in thair awne wiss,
Till mony Scot thair did full gret suppriss.

Wallace, ii. 26, MS.

O. Fr. sousprie is rendered, impot extraordinaire; Gl. Roquefort. But both this and the v. may be from Fr. supprim-er, to suppress; part. suppris.

[To SUPPRISE, SUPPRISS, v. a. To surprise; part. pa. supprisit, taken unawares, Barbour, vi. 37, xviii. 426.]

SUPRASCRYVED, part. pa. Superscribed.

—"Together with ane warrand suprascryved be our said souveraine lord," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 577.

[SURCHARGE, s. Additional load, Barbour, xvi. 458, Camb. MS.; Edin. MS. has sourcharge.]

SURCOAT, s. An under-waistcoat, S.

This is entirely different from the signification of the term in E.

In the days they call'd yore, gin auld fouks had but won
To a surcoat hough-side for the winning o't,
Of coat raips well cut by the cast of their bun,
They never sought mair of the spinning o't.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 137.

Sarket seems used in the same sense. V. GASH, adj.

It is a word of ancient use, and originally the same with the E. term. Knyghton mentions sorcolium, A. 1296. Sibi fecit vestes, tunicam, sorcolium, et mantellam. Vestis species, says Du Cange, Ital. sorcotta, Gal. sarcol, vel surcol, itadicta forte quod Cotto superadderetur. Also in L. B. surcot-ium, surchot-us, syrcol-um.

Verelius, however, claims this as a northern term; deducing the Ital. name from Isl. syrkotfodr, pellis tunicae exteriori nobilium superinducta. Inde Ital. Sorcotto: Tunica exterior, quae cotta, super inducitur. V. Aug. Ferr. (i.e., Ferrarius), in Cotta.

He views the term as compounded of Syr or Sir, dominus, cotta, tunica, and fodr, vagina; q. "the case" or "covering thrown over the coat of a nobleman." This, it appears, was anciently some kind of skin. V. Ind. Scytho-Scand., p. 251.

SURFET, adj. 1. Extravagant, immoderately high in price.

"Be that way thay mycht eschew surfet expensis, hauand decision of thair actionis with esy proces be thair superior." Bellend. Cron., B. xiii. c. 5.

2. Superabundant, extraordinary.

"The Inglisemen has made this somer bygane, and traistis to haif this somer to cum, surfet coist and travell." Acts Ja. II., A. 1456, Ed. 1814, p. 45.

3. Oppressive in operation.

"The pepill—war movit aganis him—for the surfett spending of thare laubouris, ithandle in his erandis and biggingis." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 99.

4. Excessive in any respect; as, in regard to violence or severity.

"The earle of Douglas speciall freindis,—being wext and irked so long be frequent hirschipis, and surfett roadis [inroads],—gave counsell to thair cheife to leive and desist from his seditious disobedience." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 111.

From Fr. surfaire, to overprize, to hold at an overdear rate, Cotgr.

[SURGENARE, SURRIGINARE, s. A surgeon.]

"Ratifijs—the yerlie fee and pensioune grantit & gevin be oure souverane lorde to his seruande George Leithe his surriginare of his casualitie for all the daies of his life." Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 320.

[O. Fr. surgien, contr. of chirurgien.]

SURGENARY, s. The profession of a surgeon.

"We consent and grant the samen to the forsaid crafts of surgenary and Barbars, and to their successors." Seal of Cause, Edin. A. 1505, p. 59.

SURGET, s. [An upstart, a rebel; Fr. surgir, L. nurgere; or, more probably an errat. for sujet, a subject.]

Thei shullen dye on a day, the doughty bydeane;
Suppriset with a surget, he beris hit in sable,
With a sauter engreled, of silver full shene.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 24.

This seems to denote some emblem in heraldry.

The phrase, suppriset with a surget, may refer to the celebrated Arthur's being suppressed by the infidelity of Guenevir his wife, who joined with his nephew Mordred, by whom she was debauched. O. Fr. surget, surdite, femme debauchée.

• SURLY, adj. Rough, boisterous, stormy, S.

This appears to be merely a figurative use of the E. word, not supported by other kindred dialects.

SURNOWME, SURNOWNE, s. Surname;
Fr. surnom.

Abowte that tyde swne it wes tald,
That Roxburgh suld be gyvyn til hald
Til a mychty gret Barowne,
That of Graystok had surnowne.

Wyntown, ix. 5. 40.

SURPECLAITHIE, s. A surplice.

"If surpeclathies, cornett cap and tippet hes bein badges of idolaters in the verie act of their idolatrie, quhat hes the preacher of christian libertie, and the oppin rebuker of all superstition to doe with the dregs of that Romish beast?" Gen. Assembly, A. 1566, Keith's Hist., p. 565.

Fr. surplus, from L. B. superpellicium, id. But surpeclathie has been formed, as if clathie or cloth constituted the latter part of the word; as in Belg. it is denominated koorkleed, from koor, a quire, q. a quire-cloth.

SURPLES, s. Apparently the same as E. Surplice; as Chaucer writes surplis.

"Item, the surples of the robe rial." Regalia Scotiae, p. 11.

• TO SURPRISE, v. n. To be surprised, to wonder, Aberd.

SURRIGINARE, s. V. SURGENARIE.

SURS, s. A hasty rising, or flight upwards.

He smyt porturit pantand for the hete,
Quham with ane surs swiftly Jouis squyare
Claucht in hys clewis, and bare vp in the are.

Doug. Virgil, 136, 12.

Sursante, rising, is used by R. Brunne, p. 337.

Sursante he tham mette, als thei fro kirke cam.

From Lat. surgo, sursum, to rise. V. SOURCE.

TO SUSH, v. a. To beat, to flog, Ayrs.

Perhaps originally the same with Squiss, to beat up, q. v.; or corrupted from the E. v. to Switch.

SUSH, SUSHIN, s. A rushing sound, applied to the wind, S.

Dan. vindens susen, fremitus venti proruentis; Haldorson, vo. Thytr. Susus-er, to murmur, to buz, to hiss, to whistle; susenen, sususing, a murmur, a buzzing or humming noise. Teut. suys-en, sibilare; suysinghe, levis aura, summissum murmur. Gael. susnan, a humming or buzzing noise.

VOL. IV.

TO SUSHIE, v. n. To shrink, W. Loth.

Apparently from the same source with Sussy, q. v. Fr. soucier, "to infect with carke," Cotgr.

SUSKIT, adj. Much worn, threadbare; a term applied to clothes, S. B.

SUSPEK, part. adj. Suspected. "Ony suspek place," any suspected place; Aberd. Reg.

SUSSIE, Sussy, s. 1. Care, anxiety, trouble, S.

Quhat sussy, cure, and strange ymagyning?

Doug. Virgil, ProL 97, 53.

"My Lord of Angus took little sussie at the same, but guided and ruled the King as he pleased." Pit-scottie, p. 133.

2. Hesitation, Gl. Ross.

But an' my new rock were anes cutted an' dry,
I'll a' Maggie's care an' her cantraps defy,
An' but ony sussie the spinning I'll try,
An' ye's a' hear o' the beginning o't.

Ross's Rock and Wee Pickle Tow.

Fr. souci, id. which Menage, with great probability, derives from Lat. solicitem. Arm. sourci, and Su.-G. Isl. syssla, cura, have some resemblance.

TO SUSSIE, SUSSY, s. 1. As a v. a., to trouble; I wadna sussie mysell, I would not put myself to the trouble, Aberd.

2. As a v. n., to be careful, to care.

Thay sussy nocht for schame,

Nor castis nocht quhat cumis syne.

Scott, Chron. S. P. iii. 146.

Bakbytars ay be brutis will blasphemie you—
And, walde ye wand yow upe betwene tua wais,
Yit so ye sall not frome thair sayings save yow.
Bot, gif thai see ye sussie of thair sais,
Blasone thai will, how ever ye behave yow.

Maitland Poems, p. 157.

The v., bearing this sense, if not still retained, was in use not long ago in Loth.

"Scot. Bor. say, I sussy not, i.e., I care not." Radd.

SUSSIE, adj. Careful, attentive to.

[SUSSLIN, s.] A small Danish coin once current in Shetland.]

[SUSSNIN, s.] The smallest quantity, Banffs.]

SUSTER, s. Sister, Aberd. Reg. A.-S. swuster, Teut. suster, Moes.-G. suistar, Alem. suester, Su.-G. syster, id. (y pron. u.)

SUTE, adj. Sweet, pleasant; Wyntown.

Sw. Belg. soet, id.

SUTE, s. A company of hunters.

Quhen that the range and the fade on brede
Dynnys throw the grauis, sercheing the woddis wyd,
And sulis set the glen, on euey syde,
I sall apoun thame ane myrk schoure down skale.

Doug. Virgil, 103, 51.

Fr. suite, a chase, pursuit; the train of a great person; Su.-G. sweet, comitatus, Isl. sweet, militum congregatio.

SUTE, s. Perspiration, sweat.

"Als sone as his gounne wes dicht fra sute and duste, of power he clothit him tharewith." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 244. Lat. sudore. Isl. sucit, id.

SUTE HATE, Barbour, xiii. 454, Edit. Pink.

[Errat. for Fute Hate, q. v.]

[SUTELL, adj. Subtle, Barbour, xix. 32.]

[SUTELTE, s. Subtle device, Ibid., i. 177.]

SUTH, s. Truth, verity, E. sooth.

And, gif I the suth sall say,
He wes fullfillt off bounté
Barbour, vii. 594, Ed. 1820.

A.-S. soth, veritas.

[SUTH, adj. True, Barbour, i. 9, 5, 609.]

SUTHFAST, adj. True, [abiding.]

Than suld storys that suthfast wer,
And thai war said on gud maner,
Hawe doubill plesance in heryng.
Barbour, i. 3, MS.

O.E. "Sothfast. Verax.—Sotheness or Sothfastnesse. Veritas. Veracitas." Prompt. Parv. A.-S. sothfast, id.

[SUTHFASTLY, adv. Truly, Barbour, iv. 328.]

SUTHFASTNES, s. Truth.

The fyrst plesance is the carping,
And the tothir the suthfastnes,
That schawys the thing rycht as it wes.
Barbour, i. 7, MS.

Chaucer, sothfastness, id.

[SUTHLY, adv. Truly, verily, Barbour, vi. 32.]

SUTHROUN, s. A collective term for those who belong to the English nation.

For suthroun ar full suttaille enirilk man.
Wallace, i. 273.

V. SODROUN.

[SUTSHKIN, s. A near relative; also, all the brothers and sisters of a family, Shetl. Sw. syskon, id.]

SUTTEN on, part. adj. Stunted in growth, Ettr. For. A.-S. on-sitt-an, insidere, incumbere; q. having sat down so as to make no further progress.

Sitten is often used by itself in the same sense; Sitten-like, having the appearance of being stunted; and I think also Sitten-down, S.

[SUTTIE-RONAMUS, s. A dirty, sooty-looking woman, Shetl.]

SUWEN, 3 pl. v. Attend, wait on.

With solas thei semble, the pruddest in palle,
And suwen to the sovereigne, within schaghes schene.
Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 6.

Fr. suiv-re, to follow, 3 pl. suivent.

SWA, SWAY, conj. adv. So. V. SA, SUA, ALS.

SWAGAT, SWAGATIS, adv. So, in such wise.

—He reskewyt all the fearis,
And styntyt swagat the chassaris,
That nane durst owt off batall chass.
Barbour, lii. 52, MS.

From A.-S. swa so, and gat a way.

[SWAAR, adj. Too high, top heavy, heavy, Shetl. Dan. svær, heavy.]

[SWAAR, s. Darkness; as, "The swaar o' the dim," the middle of the night, Shetl. Dan. svart, dark, black.]

SWAB, s. The husk of the pea; pease swabs, Dumfr. V. SWAP, SWAUP, WHAUP.

This must be an old E. word, as Phillips explains it "a bean-cod." O. Teut. schabbe, operculum.

SWAB, s. A loose idle fellow. "A drunken swab" is a phrase very common, Roxb.

Su.-G. and E. swab, (a mop for cleaning floors,) used metaphorically; q. one who sucks up liquor like a mop; synon. with Spunge, Sand-bed, &c.

[TO SWAB, v. n. To go about in a loose, idle manner, Banffs.]

SWABIE, s. The Great black and white Gull, Shetl. Swartback synon.

"Larus Marinus (Lin. syst.) Swabie, Bawgie, Swartback, Great black and white Gull." Edmonston's Zetl., ii. 256.

"The water-fowl took to wing in eddying and confused wheel, answering the echoes with a thousand varying screams, from the deep note of the swabie or swartback, to the querulous cry of the tirracke and kitteiwake." The Pirate, i. 227.

Probably a fondling sort of term from Swartback.

SWABBLE, s. A supple rod; also, a tall thin person, one who is not thick in proportion to his height, Ettr. For., Upp. Clydes.

"I heard Davie o' Craik saying to his brother, 'Take care o' that lang swabble Charlie, and keep by his side.'" Perils of Man, ii. 243.

TO SWABLE, SWABBLE, v. a. "To beat with a long stick;" Gl. Sibb., Roxb., S.O. Swablin, part. pr.

Here some resort the night before,
Where sheep, pent up, are bleetin;
And herds exert their muirland lore,
Wi' swablin' sticks a' sweatin'.
St. Boswell's Fair, A. Scott's Poems, p. 54.

In Tweedd. Swabble is understood as strictly signifying to beat with a supple stick. It is also expl. "to beat with a leathern belt," Roxb.

SWABBLIN, s. "A gude swabblin," a hearty drubbing, ibid.

SWABBLIN-STICK. A cudgel, ibid.

Dan. svoebe, a whip, a scourge; Teut. sweepe id.; swEEP-en, flagellare; A.-S. swebb-an, verrere, flagellare, Benson. Su.-G. swaef-to, motitari, librari; Germ. schweb-en, id.

SWACK, adj. 1. Limber, pliant, S.

"S. swack, i.e., supple, flexible;" Rudd. vo. Swik.
Twill mak ye supple, swack, and young.
Ferguson's Poems, ii. 40.

—She was swift and souple like a rae;
Swack like an eel, and calour like a trout;
And she become a fairly round about.
Ross's Helenore, p. 16.

V. GAUCIE.

2. Clever, active, nimble, S.B.

It seems to be used in this sense in Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 10.

Her cherry cheeks you might bleed with a strae,
Syne she was swack an' souple like a rae.

3. Weak, not stout; as a slight bar of iron, or piece of wood, Loth.

This is merely a slight obliquity from the primary sense. An object is said to be weak, from this idea being suggested by its flexibility.

Teut. swack, wack, lentus, quod facile flectitur, flexilis. As wack is synon. with swack, it seems the radical term; A.-S. swac, lentus, flexibilis; Su.-G. Germ. wig, alacer, agilis, Isl. vig-ur, id. Isl. sveigja, incurvare, and Teut. swack-en, vibrare, are probably from this root.

SWACK, s. [1. A stroke or blow with anything pliant; also, the sound made by it, Clydes.]

2. A gust, a severe blast; as, a swack of wind, Etrr. For.

This is distinguished from a Sob, which denotes a lower gust, or a blast that is less severe than a Swack, ibid. It may be allied to Teut. swack-en, vibrare, or Isl. swack-a, inquietus esse, swack, turba, motus. A.-S. sveig-an, signifies intonare, "to thunder, to make a rumbling noise;" Sommer.

To SWACK, v. a. and n. [1. To beat with anything pliant, to thrash, Clydes.]

2. To blow suddenly and severely, S.

To SWACKEN, v. a. and n. 1. To make supple or pliant; also, to become so, Aberd., Mearns.

Wi' that her joints began to swacken,
Awa' she scour'd like only maukin.
Beattie's John o' Arnha, p. 23.

[2. To beat or thrash with great severity, Banffs.]

Teut. swack-en, debilitare, et debilitari. V. the adj.

SWACKING, adj. Clever, active, Dumfr. V. SWACK, adj.

SWACK, s. 1. A large quantity, a collection (congeries), a share, S. V. SWEG.

—There bath man, and wife, and wean,
Are stegh'd while they dow stand their lane,
For a' the langboard now does grane
Wi' swacks o' kale. The Har't Rig, st. 137.

2. A large draught of liquor, Banffs. synon. Swanger, Scoup, Waucht, Sweig.

SWACK, adj. Abundant, S.

"Swack, plenty and good;" Gall. Enc.

To SWACK, v. a. To drink deep, or with haste; to drink greedily, to swill, Ayrs.

—Ithers lend an unco haun
At swackin' owre the liquid brawn.
Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 15.

"Swack, to drink deep, or with haste;" Gl. Picken. E. swig, id. Isl. siug-a, sorbere; Su.-G. siug-a, sugere. Brawn, in this passage, must be meant for brown, as applied to ale.

SWACKING, adj. Of a large size, S.

"Swacking nout, fat large animals;" Gall. Enc.

SWAD, s. A soldier, a cant term, S.

—True it is that they may mell you,
Or for a *swad or sailor sell you,
In time o' weir.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 170.

* "A soldier," N.

"Swad, or swadkin, a soldier. Cant." Grose's Class. Dict.

SWADGE. V. SWAGE.

SWADRIK, s. Sweden.

Swadrik, Denmark, and Norraway,

Nor in the Steiddis I dar nocht ga.

Interl. Droichis, Bannatyne Poems, p. 176.

Sw. Swerike, contr. from Svea rike, i.e., the kingdom of the Suiones. V. Swoiar, Ihre.

SWAG, s. A large draught of any liquid, S.

This is evidently from the same origin with the E. v. to Swig, "to drink by large draughts." V. SWACK, v.

SWAG, s. 1. Motion, Roxb., Gall.

2. Inclination from the perpendicular, S.

3. It sometimes denotes a leaning to; as, "a swag in politics," S.

4. A festoon, used for an ornament to beds, &c., Loth.; q. what hangs loose, as allied to Teut. swack, flexilis.

To SWAG, v. n. To move backwards and forwards, ibid.

"Swag, to swing; swagging, swinging;" Gall. Enc. Isl. swak, fluctus lenis; swakar ad, ingruit; G. Andr. Swack, turba, motus, swack-a, inquietus esse; Halderson. Siug-ur, aestus maris, mare aestuans, G. Andr.

To SWAGGER, v. n. To stagger, to feel as if intoxicated, Moray. It is not known in the sense given in E.

Teut. swack-en, vibrare; Isl. sveig-ia, flectere, curvare.

SWAGGIE, s. The act of swinging, or the game of Meritot in E., Roxb.

"At swaggie, waggie, or shouggie-shou." Urquhart's Rabelais, B. I., p. 96.

[SWAGAT, adv. So. V. under SWA.]

To SWAGE, SWADGE, v. a. To quiet, to still; to retain.

The fiercelings race her did so hetly cadge,
Her stamack cud na sic raw vittals swage.

Ross's Helenore, p. 56.

Apparently abbreviated from E. Assuage.

SWAGERS, s. pl. Men married to sisters, Shetl.

Moes.-G. suaihero, A.-S. sweager, Alem. swecher, Su.-G. swager, swaer, &c. socer, properly a father in law. But it appears to have been afterwards used with greater latitude.

SWAIF, v.

Receive, and sraif, and haif, ingraif it here.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 201.

"Probably kiss, receive cordially," Lord Hailes. It may rather signify, "ponder this bill or poem; which I have written for your use;" Su.-G. suaesw-a, Isl. suej-a, to be poised (librari); also, to hover, to fluctuate. But the first sense is preferable.

SWAIF, SUAIF, s. A kiss.

Adew the fragrant balmie suaif,
 And lamp of ladies lustiest!
 My faithful hairt scho sall it haif,
 To byd with hir it luvis best.
Scott, Chron. & P., iii. 167.

SWAILSH, s. A part of a mountain that slopes much, or any part on the face of a hill which is not so steep as the rest, Ettr. For.

It seems very doubtful if it be allied to Su.-G. sualg, Isl. suelg-ur, abyssus, barathrum. I would rather view it as comp. of Isl. suiq, curvatura, or sweig-ia, Dan. suej-e, curvare, and hala, collum (a term used by itself in S. to denote a defile, or narrow passage between hills); q. sueighals or suejhals, "the bending neck of a mountain." It may be added, that Isl. snoade also snoada, is thus defined by Haldorson; Continui rupis declivitas.

This seems to correspond with the term Corrie, used in that part of the country that was under the dominion of the Celts.

SWAINE, s. The country of Sweden.

"And because the souldiours of baith pairties hade na farder actionn at hame, the capitane receauit thair bands haill, and sowme of thaim past in Swaine, some in Flaunderis, quhair they behavit themselues valiantly." Hist. James the Sext, p. 237.

This designation of the country corresponds with that given it by the Swedes themselves. They call it Swea and Swia, and an inhabitant Sueusk. Isl. Suia Konguer, rex Sueciae. In A.-S. the Swedes are generally denominated Sueon, and their country Sueon-land. As the Swedish territories were by ancient writers called Swithiod, q. the people, or kingdom, of the Suiones; I here supposes that, from this designation, the Greeks formed the name of Scythia.

SWAIP, adj. Slanting, Ettr. For.

Isl. sweip-a, involve, quip-a, subito se vertere. This word, however, seems of the same family with SWIRP, v., q. v.

SWAIPILT, s. A piece of wood like the head of a crosier put loosely round the fetlock joint of the foreleg of a horse, when turned out to graze, in order to impede his progress, Roxb.

Perhaps from Scipe, v., to strike in a semicircular mode; unless we could view it q. away-pelt, what gives a pelt or blow from its swinging motion.

SWAISH, SWESH, adj. A term applied to the face, implying fullness, with the idea of suavity and benignity, South of S.

This, at first view, from its including the idea of fullness, might seem to be the same with Swash, q. v. But, from what is considered as the predominant idea, I imagine that it should be traced to A.-S. suaes, suaes, "suavis, blandus, comis; pleasing, sweet, delectable, alluring, courteous," (Somner); suaeslice, blande, benigne; suaesme, benignitas, Lye; Alem. suaz, suazai, dulcis, suavis.

SWAITS, s. New ale or wort, S. swats.

Now drink thay milk and swaits in steid of aill,
 And glaid to get peis breid and wattir caill.
Lament L. Scot., F. 5. b.

She no'er gae in a lawin fause, ———
 Nor kept dow'd tip within her waws,
 But reaming swats.

A.-S. swate ale, beer. Ramsay's Poems, l. 229.

To SWAK, SWAKE, v. a. 1. To throw, to cast with force. [Another form of Swap.]

The entrellis eik fer in the fludes brake
 In your reuerence I sall flyng and swake.
Doug. Virgil, 135, 30.

Nenir sa swiftlie quhiddend the stane flaw,
Swackit from the ingyne vnto the wall.
Ibid. 446, 47.

2. To strike, S.

Prob., allied to Teut. swack-en, vibrare; as persons are wont to poise, and sometimes to brandish, a missile weapon, before it is thrown.

Teut. swick denotes a lash, to which sense 2 agrees, from swick-en, synon. with swack-en, vibrare; Su.-G. sweg, which has the same signification, is deduced from Isl. sueig-ia.

SWAK, SWAKE, s. 1. A throw, Rudd.2. A stroke; properly a hasty and smart blow.

That man haid fast his awyn sword
 In-til his neve, and wy thrawand
 He pressit hym, noucht agayne standand
 That he wes pressit to the erd,
 And wyth a swake thare of his swerl
 [Throw] the sterap lethir and the bute
 Thre ply or four, a-bove the fute
 He straik the Lyndesay to the bane.
Wyntoun, ix. 14. 56.

"Blow with a sudden turn; Isl. sueig-r, bend, curve." Gl. Wynt.

3. A violent dash, as that of waves.

Hie as ane bill the jaw of the watter brak,
 And in ane hepe come on them with a swak.
Doug. Virgil, 16, 25.

4. Metaph. a little while.

— He had slummerit bot an swak,
 Quhen the fyrst silence of the quyet nycht
 His myddell cours and cyrkyl run had rycht,
 Pronokying folk of the fyrst slepe awaik.
Doug. Virgil, 256. 38.

"So Scot. we say, I'll be with you with a rap, and with a clap [more commonly in a rap, &c.] and Scot. Bor. is a weaving: and so our author uses frequently the word thran;" Rudd.

To SWAK away, v. n. To decay, to consume, to waste.

Yet deil sall tak him be the bak,
 And gar him cry, Allace!
 Than sall he swak away with lak.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 182, st. 2.

Lord Hailes thinks that there is an "allusion to the oscillatory motion, remarkable when great loads are carried on men's shoulders." But as the person is described as in the hands of Deid or Death, the language does not seem expressive of motion, but to decay. Dan. swackt-er, to waste; Teut. swack-en, Germ. schwack-en, to become weak, to fail; Teut. swack, feeble, languid, enervated.

SWAK, s. Wallace, vii. 1043, Edit. Perth.
V. SNUK.

SWALD, SWALE, part. pa. Swelled; fat,
plump, S.

"It is a world's pity to see how these rings are pinching the pair creature's swald fingers." The Private, i. 178.

To feding and to dant thare sleyk swales tedis,
Thay han it, quhil thay leuit here on lyffe,
Doug. Virgil, 187, 54.

It is also used by Chaucer.

To SWALL, SWALLY, v. a. To devour, to swallow.

Sum swallis suan, sum swallis duik,
And I stand fastand in a nuik,
Quhil the effe of all thay fang thame.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 104.

"The deuil our ennymye—gangis about lyk ane ramping lyon seikand quhom he may deuoir and swally." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, Fol. 159, a.

Su.-G. swaely-a, A.-S. swelg-an, Teut. swelgh-en, id.

• SWALLOW, s. In Teviotd., this harmless and almost domestic bird is reckoned un- cannie, and supposed to have a drap o' the de'il's bluid. It is also believed that if young swallows be deprived of their eyes, they will soon have them restored, for "the de'il is kind to his ain," Teviotd.

SWALME, s. A tumor, an excrescence.

I sall the venum avoyd with ane vent large;
And me assuage of that swalme, that suellit was greit.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 50.

A.-S. swam, Teut. swamme, Germ. schwam, tuber, fungus; Moes.-G. swamms, spongia.

SWAM, s. A large quantity; as "a swam o' claise," a great assortment of clothes, Up.
Clydes.

Corr. perhaps from Teut. somme, L.B. sauma, onus, sarcina.

[SWAM, s. A swoon or faint, Shetl. Dan.
svag, feeble.]

[SWAMBLE, s. Disagreement; a wordy quarrel, Shetl.]

SWAMP, adj. 1. Thin, not gross, slender, S.

2. Not swelled, S. Lincolns. synon. clung.
Swamp is opposed to hoven. The belly is said to be swamp, after long fasting.

"An animal is said to be swamped, when it seems clung, or clinket, or thin in the belly;" Gall. Enc.
Swamp, slender. Gl. Picken. [Swank, Ayrs.]

SWAMPIE, adj. A tall thin fellow, Dumfr.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. swang-er, Isl. swang-r, hungry; esuriens, qui vacua ilia habet, Ihre. Siceingd, fames.

• SWAMPED, part. adj. Metaph., imprisoned;
a gypsy word, S. A.

SWANDER, SWAUNDER, s. An apoplectic giddiness, which seizes one on any sudden emergency or surprise, Fife.

To SWANDER, SWAUNDER, v. n. 1. To fall into a wavering or insensible state, ibid.

2. To want resolution or determination, ibid.

Su.-G. swind-a, swinn-a, anciently foerswaend-a, deficere, tabescere, evanescere; whence foerswander, tabescit; A.-S. swind-un, tabescere; Germ. schwincer-a, diminuere, facere ut deficiat, schwincul-en, to pine, to languish, E. swoon is obviously from a common origin.
Goth. man, denoting defect, is viewed as the root.

SWANE, SWAYN, s. 1. A young man, as E.
swain.

2. A man of inferior rank, [a peasant.]

Sweyngeouris and skurvyvagus, swankys and swanys,
Geuis na cure to cun craft.

Doug. Virgil, 238. q. 23.

A.-S. swan, O. Dan. Isl. swain, Su.-G. swen, Juvenis; servus.

SWANGE, s. Prob., the groin.

The swerd swapped on his swange, and on the mayle sliik.
Sir Gawin and Sir Gal., ii. 22.

Perhaps the groin; Su.-G. swange, ilia. V. Ihre vo.
Swanger: or some part of the armour that moved round;
Germ. schwung, motus rotantis, Su.-G. swaeng-a, motitare.

SWANK, adj. 1. Thin, slender. It particularly denotes one who is thin in the belly, as opposed to a corpulent person, S.

2. It often conveys the idea of limber, pliant, agile, S.

In this sense Fergusson speaks of fallows,
Mair harly, souple, steeve, an' swank,
Than ever stood on Tammy's shank.

Poems, ii. 78.

"Steeve and swank, firm and agile." Gl. Morison's Poems. Hence,

It is improperly expl. "stately, jolly," Gl. Burns.

Thou ance was i' the foremost rank,
A filly buirdly, steeve and swank.

Burns, iii. 141.

Dan. swang, lean, meagre, thin; also, hungry. V.
SWAMP. Germ. schwank, agilis, mobilis, quod dicitur de gracili et macilento, quia caeteris alacrius movetur, Wachter; from sweng-en, to move quickly, whence schwank-en, motitare. The words of this form may be all traced to SWACK. This seems to suggest the most natural etymon of Swanky, s. q. v.

SWANK, SWANKY, s. A clever or active young fellow, S.

His cousin was a bierly swank,
A derf young man, hecht Rob.—
Christmas Bawing, Skinner's Misc. Poet. p. 123.

Doug. uses the term. V. SWANE.

Like bumbees bizzing frae a bike,
Whan birds their riggings tirr;
The swankies lap thro' mire and syke,
Wow as their heads did berr!

Skinner's Miscellaneous Poetry, p. 123.

A. Bor. "Swanky, a strapping young country-man;"
Gl. Brockett.

SWANKING, part. adj. Supple, active, South of S.

"I lived on his land when I was a swanking young chield, and could hae blaun the trumpet wi' ony body, for I had wind enough then." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 244.

SWANKY, adj. 1. [Lean, lank, hungry.]

Sweir swapit, swanky swyne, kepar ay for swats.
Dunbar, Boergreen, ii. 54, st. 11.

It may signify empty, hungry; as Kennedy is compared to a sow still seeking to catch wort. V. SWAMP and SWANK.

2. Swanky is applied to a person who is tall, but not filled up; lank, Fife.

SWANKYN, part. pa. [Swelled, hosed up.]

—The halkit hoglyn
Snelly snattis swankyn.
Colkelbie Sae, F. i. v. 166.

Read suattis for snattis, q. "keenly labouring at new ale." V. SWATS. Swankyn may be from A.-S. swaencan, laborare, exercere. Isl. swinkad-r, however, signifies, "filled like a swine."

To SWANKLE, v. n. A term used to express the sound emitted from a vessel, when the liquid which it contains is shaken, Shetl.; apparently synon. with S. Clunk.

Teut. swanckel-en, nutare, vacillare; a frequentative from swanck-en, vibrare, quater; fluctuare. Su.-G. swang, motus, swaeng-a, vibrare.

To SWAP, v. a. To exchange, S.

[This term occurs in O. E. in various dialects. V. Halliwell's Dict.] Dryden uses swap, id. The learned and ingenious Callander, in his MS. notes on Ihre, views it as allied to Su.-G. onsuorp, ambages, a term also used in Germ., translated from A.-S. ymb-swape, id. turnings and compassings, Somner; from ymb-swipan, circumire; as denoting the circumvention often used in bartering commodities.

There is a passage in Orkneyinga Saga, ap. Johns. Antiq. Celto-Scand., which, as it refers to a very ancient custom among those who wished to cement their friendship, a custom which still prevails when friends are about to part for a long time, seems also to point out the origin of this word. Their Gilla-Kristr oc Kali skiptuz gjofofum vid at skilnadi, oc het huor othrum sinne vinattu fullkominne huar sem fundi theirra boeri saman. Gilchrist and Kali swaupit gifts when they were about to separate (skail) from each other, mutually promising entire friendship wheresoever they should afterwards meet together. P. 253.

Instead of Isl. skipt-a, in Su.-G. it is skift-a, (mutare). E. shift is more immediately allied. But it is not improbable, that this is also the origin of swap.

"I wad be content to swap the garment for the value in feathers, or sea otters' skins, or any kind of peltrie." The Pirate, i. 218.

SWAP, s. A barter, an exchange, S.

"For the pounther, I e'en changed it with the skipkers o' Dutch luggers and French vessels, for gin and brandy,—a gude swap too, between what cheereth the soul of man and that which dingeth it clean out of the body." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 294.

To SWAP, v. a. 1. To draw, with the prep. out.

And thai that held on hors in hy
Swappyt owt swerdys sturdily.
Barbour, ii. 363, MS.

[2. To roll tightly round, to gird; as, "Noo swap the string hard, au' the splico'll haud," Clydes., Banffs.]

3. To throw with violence.

In hy he gert draw the cleket,
And smertly swappyt out a stane.
Barbour, xvii. 675, MS.

Schir Philip of his desynes
Ourcome; and persawit he wes
Tane, and led suagat with twa:
The tane he swappyt some him fra,
And syne the tothyr in gret by;
And drew the suerd deliuerly.
Ibid., xviii. 186, MS.

4. To strike.

This man went down, and sodanlye he saw,
As to his sycht, dede had him swappyt snell;
Syn said to thaim, He has payit at he aw.
Wallace, ii. 249, MS.

The term in this sense, occurs in Palsgrave. "I swappe, I stryke; Je frappe. He swapped me on the shoulder with his handle." B. iii. F. 381, a.

Teut. swerp-en, flagellare.

Teut. swipa, [sweipa, swipa], raptare; swerda swipan, ibratia gladiorum, i.e., the swapping out of swords; Landnamab., p. 409.

SWAP, s. A sudden stroke.

With a swap of a swerde that swathel him swykes.
Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 16.

Wap is the modern term, q. v.

This term is still used as denoting a slap, Ettr. For., Roxb.

"Whan a thing comes on ye that gato, that's a dadd.—Then a paik, that's a swapp, or a skelp like." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 135.

"Pell-mell, swap for swap, was a' that they countit on." Perils of man, ii. 243.

[SWAP-THAK, s. Thin boards of wood firmly fastened over a thatched roof, as a girding for the thatch.

"Item, to the sawaris, for swap-thak sawing to the samyn hous [i.e., the werk hous in Edinburgh Castle], xxx s." Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 310, Dickson.]

SWAP, SWAUP, s. 1. The cast, mould, or lineaments of the countenance; as, the swaup of his face, the general cast of his face, S.

"She is a weel-farr'd settin lass your dochter, very like her mither, but yet a great swaup o' auld uncle Binky." Saxon and Gael, i. 163.

Isl. swip-r, vultus, swipad-r, vultu similis; Haldorson.

Isl. swip-ur, umbra alicujus rei vel imago apparens; Verel.

2. The husk, [shell or pod] of the pea, while in a flat state, before the pease are formed, S.; [syn. shaup.]

3. Applied to peas in the pod, while in an immature state, S.

[4. Swappis, withered grass or herbage; mere husks.]

—Brayis bair, raif rochis like to fall,
Quhairon na gers nor herbis wer visibill,
Bot swappis brint with blastis boriall.
Palice of Honour, l. 2.

To SWAP, SWAUP, v. n. 1. [To form, set, or shape]; applied to peas and other leguminous herbs, when they begin to send forth pods, S.

—"Sow it with pease, which, beginning to swap, or to have pods, plow down, and cover under the fur; and let it ly in this condition all winter." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 13. V. SHAUPE.

2. Metaph. applied to young growing animals of every description, S.

SWAPIT, adj. [Formed, inclined: by nature or instinct.] Sweir-swapit, lazy-moulded, [i.e., born-lazy; syn. deid-sweir.]

Sweir swapit, swanky swyne, kepar ay for swats. Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 54.

[SWAPPIS. V. SWAP, s. 4.]

SWAPPYT, part. pa. Rolled or huddled together.

In their brawnys sone slaid the sleuthfull sleip,
Through full guttne in swarff swappyt lik swyn.
Wallace, vii. 349, MS.

Isl. sweip-a, Su.-G. sweep-a, involves.

SWAR, s. A snare.

Wallang, he said, he forthwart in this case,
In sic a swar we couth nocht get Wallace,
Tak hym or sla; I promess the be my lyff,
That King Edwart sall mak the Erl of Fyff.
Wallace, ix. 878, MS.

Be he entrit, hys hed was in the swar,
Tytt to the bawk hangyt to ded rycht thar.
Ibid. vii. 211, MS.

Ye wald wa blynd, sen Scottis ar so nyss;
Syn pleassand wordis off yow and ladyis fayr,
As quha suld dryff the byrdis till a swar,
With the small pype, for it most fresche will call.
Ibid. viii. 1419, MS.

In the last two places erroneously snar, Edit. Perth; in older Edit. snare.

A.-S. syru-an, to lay snares, and syrua, a snare, are evidently allied. But the term, used by the Minstrel, is more immediately connected with Moes.-G. swær-an, insidiari; so Herodianai swor imma; Herodias laid snares for him, Mark vi. 19. The word in the A.-S. version is syrode.

[SWAR, pret. Swore, Barbour, i. 165.]

SWARCH, SWARGH, (gutt.), s. A rabblement, a tumultuous assembly, S. B.

A swargh o' gladsome neibour fock,
That glomin did forgather
About the town, to sport, an' joke,
An' rant wi' ane anither, &c.
Tarras's Poems, p. 63.

"Swargh, a convention of individuals;" Gl. ibid.
O. Teut. swarcke, swecke, nubes, perhaps like E. cloud, as signifying a crowd, a multitude.
It would seem that Swarrach (q. v.) is allied.

SWARE, SWIRE, SWYRE, s. 1. The neck.

—The foremost, clepit Diopd
In ferme wedlock I sall conione to the
For this reward, that lilly quithe of sware
With the for to remane for enernare.

Doug. Virgil, 15, 21.

With Thomlyn Wayr Wallace hym self has met,
A felloun strak saddy apon him set,
Throcht hede and swyre all through the cost him claiff.
Wallace, ix. 1334, MS.

Swere, Gower, and Kyng of Tars; swyre, Chaucer id.

2. A hollow or declination of a mountain or hill, near the summit, corr. squair, S.

The soft south of the swyre, and sound of the stremes,— Micht confort any creature of the kyn of Adam.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 64.

Mr. Pinkerton renders it hill. But this does not express the sense.

This folkis ar in likyng at thare willis,
This land inhabitis vale, mount, and swyre.
Doug. Virgil, 259, 33.

Lo, thare the rais rynnnyng swift as fyre,
Dreuin from the hichtis brekis out of the swyre.
Ibid. 105, 11.

—The prince Enee with al his men
Has enterit in, and passit throw the glen,
And ouer the swyre schawis vp at his hand;
Eschape the derne wod, and wyn the euin land.
Ibid. 393, 26.

Jugum, Virg.

Hence the designation, the Reid-squair Raid.

At the Reid-Squair the Tryst was set.
—But yit, for all his cracking crouse,
He rowd the Raid of the Reid-squyre.
Evergreen, ii. 224, 226.

Godscroft writes Red Swyre, Hist. Doug., p. 339.
"Sir John Forrester warden of the English side, and Sir John Carmichael of the Scottish, meeting at a place called the Red Swyre for redressing some wrongs that had been committed, it fell out that a Bill (so they used to speak) was filed upon an Englishman, for which Carmichael, according to the law of the borders, required him to be delivered till satisfaction was made." Spotswood, p. 274.

3. It is used, in a looser sense, to signify the most level spot between two hills, Loth. "a steep pass between two mountains," Gl. Sibb.

In winter wedderis baith in wind and rane,
Sum tyme with seiknes sa ourset with pane,
He raid throw montanes, many mose and myre.
In frost and snaw, quhen all the folkis ar fane
With double bonattis for to hap thair brane,
Then wes he worsland our ane wondie swyre.
Sege Edinb. Castel, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 299.

i.e., wrestling through a windy defile among mountains.

A.-S. sweor, originally denotes a pillar; hence, according to Lye, transferred to the neck. Isl. swyr, however, simply signifies the neck. Our term, in its secondary senses, is confined to the South of S.

To SWARE, SWARTH, v. n. 1. To faint, to swoon, S. swarth, Ang.

Al pale and bludeles swarffis scho rycht thare,
And in the deith closis hir cauld ene.
Doug. Virgil, 394, 51.

—She grew tabetless, and swarft therewith.
Ross's Helenore, p. 25.

2. To abate, to become languid; applied to inanimate objects.

Mony abade the ebbing of the sand,
Quhill the swarf fard wallis abak dyd draw.
Doug. Virgil, 325, 45.

Recurvus languentis pelagi, Virg.

Rudd. very naturally supposes that it should be read swarfand wallis, i.e., failing, retiring waves.

3. As a v. a., to stupify, Gall.

"The scene dumfounder'd the wretch, and scarf'd him so that he could not utter a word." Gall. Enc., p. 323.

Prob. from Belg. scerv-en, errare, vagari, whence E. scerve. Our v. may have the same respect to scerv-en, as doil'd to dieul-en, errare; denoting stupor of mind. Perhaps the original idea is retained in Su.-G. scervfo-a, tornari, in gyrum agitari; as a person, when seized with a swoon, often feels a kind of vertigo. Seren. derives the Sw. term from Moes.-G. hairb-an, ire, praeterire, transire.

SWARFF, SWERF, s. 1. Stupor, insensibility.

Off ayle and wyne yneuch chosyne haiff thai:
As bestly folk tuk off thaim self no keip,
In thair brawnys sone slaid the sleuthfull sleip,
Through full gluttre in scarf swappytlik swyn,
Thar chyftayne than was gret Bachus off wyu.
Wallace, vii. 349, MS.

2. A fainting-fit, a swoon; swarth, Ang.

The Swerf, and the Sweiting, with Soundling to swelt.
Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 14.

V. FRYK.

But, Gentlemen, I crave your pardon,
A scarf of love my heart is harl on.
Cicland's Poems, p. 33.

V. the v.

"I can tell you this, Sirs, since my trouble began, many a fainting-fit has come over my heart; but no sooner began a scarf or a dwam to go over my heart, but he answered me with strength in my soul." Mich. Bruce's Lectures, p. 68.

3. Faintness, dejection of spirit.

"Word came in the morning that a swerfe had overgone the lordis hairtes," &c. Belhaven MS., Hist. Ja. VI., Fol. 42.

SWARFE, s. The surface.

"Wee may not settle vpon the swarfe of the heart, but the heart must be pricked with many interrogations, it must be lanced deipely." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 501.

[SWARFISH, s. The spotted blenny, Shetl.
Dan. swartfisk.]SWARGH, s. V. SWARCH, SWARGH.[SWARRA, s. 1. Thick soft worsted for underclothing, Shetl.2. A knitted woollen under-jacket, ibid.]SWARRACH, SWARRIG, s. A large unseemly heap, Ang., Shetl. It often implies the idea of disorder. V. SWARCH.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. swær, gravis.

[To SWARRACH, SWARRICH, v. n. To crowd closely and in confusion; part. pr. swarrichin, used also as a s.][SWART, SWARTER, adj. Black, Shetl.
Dan. and Sw. swart.]SWARTATEE, interj. Black time, an ill hour, Shetl. Also expl. "expressing contempt or surprise."

From Su.-G. Isl. swart, black, and tid, time; or perchance q. swart to ye, "black be your fate!"

SWARTBACK, s. The Great Black and White Gull., Orkn.

"The Great Black and White Gull, (Larus marinus, Lin. Syst.) our black-backed meve, or as it is sometimes called swartback, is the largest of the gull kind in our seas." Barry's Orkney, p. 304.

Norv. swartbag, id. V. Penn. Zool., p. 528.

SWARTRYTTER, s. [Lit., black-horseman]; one belonging to the German cavalry.

"He changeit his apparell, becaus he wald be vnknawin of sic as met him: and put on ane lose cloke, sic as the Swartrytters weir, and sa yeid fordwart throw the watche to execut his intendit traiterous fact." Buchanan's Detect., B. ii. 6. Penulam laxior-em, qualis Germanorum equitis est, superinduit. Lat. copy.

Swerte ruyters, according to Kilian, are, milites nigri, formerly in lower Germany. "Their garments," he says, "as well as their spears, were black. They called themselves devils, to infuse terror into the minds of those against whom they were sent; and to many indeed, according to their name, they brought destruction, till at length they were wasted by frequent wars."

This term is illustrated by what Fynes Moryson has said.

"At this day the horsemen of Germany are vulgarly called Schwartz-Reytern, that is blacke horsemen, not onely because they weare blacke apparrell, but also for that most of them haue blacke horses, and make their hands and faces blacke by dressing them and by blacking their bootes, wherein they are curious; or else because custome hath made blacknesse an ornament to them; or else because they thinke this colour to make them most terrible to their enemies." Itinerary, Part III. B. iv. c. 3, p. 197.

Kilian refers to And. Altham and B. Rhenanus, as his authorities. I need scarcely add, that the word is formed from Teut. swert, black, and ruyter, a horseman.

SWARTH, s. Sward, Ettr. For.

The groans are heard on the mountain swarth,
There is blood in heaven and blood on earth.
Brownie of Bodsbeck, l. 292.

SWARTH, v. and s. V. SWARF, v. and *s.*SWARTH, s. In swarth o', in exchange for, Rox.

Prob. a corr. of A.-S. wearth, Su.-G. ward, &c. worth, price, value, with the sibilation prefixed.

To SWARVE, v. n. To incline to one side, E. Swerve.

"I had the ill luck to hit his jaund o' a beast on the nose with my hat, and scaur the creature, and she scarved aside, and the king that sits na mickle better than a draff-poke on the saddle, was like to have gotten a clean coup." Nigel, i. 74.

"By the grace of Mercy the horse scarved round, and I fell aff at the tae side as the ball whistled by at the tither." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 248.

Teut. scerv-en, deerrare, divagari; fluctuare.

SWARYN, s. V. SYVEWARM.SWASH, s. [1. A severe blow, dash, or fall, Clydes., Banffs.2. The noise made by it, ibid.] "The noise which one makes falling upon the ground;" Rudd. vo. Squat.

It is used to denote the noise made by a salmon, when he leaps at the fly.

Forthwith amain he plunges on his prey,
Wi' eager swash; the lucky moment watch,
As in his gills engorge the barbed death.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 31, 32.

The E. v. Swash is explained, "to make a great clatter or noise."

E. swat, used as signifying a sudden fall, has been deduced from Ital. quatt-are, chiatt-are, acquatture, hami desidero. Seren. mentions Su.-G. suatt-a, liquidum excrementum ejaculare, as the probable origin.

[3. A blast of wind; a dash of water or of a wave; also, the noise made by it, Clydes.]

[To SWASH, v. a. and n. To beat severely; to clash violently, ibid.; part. pr. swashin, used also as a s; a severe beating, ibid.]

To SWASH, v. n. 1. To swell, to be turgid.

—"Who, in a word, in hight of stomacke, ruffling & swashing, did tread vpon God's turtles, accounting them the most vile off-scourings of the earth." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 673.

It is probable that this is the same v. which occurs in Shakspeare, when he speaks of the affectation of valour.

We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances.

As You Like it.

Su.-G. swassa denotes the swelling of language, a bombast style; also, to walk loftily: whence it is probable, that it was formerly used literally to signify any thing swollen or inflated.

[2. To walk with a haughty, boastful air, Banffs.]

3. To boast, to bounce, ibid.]

SWASH, s. [1. Ostentation, display, Clydes.]

2. A vapouring dandy, Banffs.]

3. A person of a broad make, or of a corpulent habit, S.

"And so these are the eyes of the world!—pretty eyes they are, to be sure, to drive a man out of his ain house! The tane a pair silly spendthrift, the tither a great gormandizing swash, and the third—but how comes the world to have but three eyes?—can you no mak out a fourth?" Inheritance, i. 200.

4. A large quantity viewed collectively; as, a swash of siller, a large sum of money, S.

It is often applied to meat or drink, Berwicks.

SWASH, SWASHY, adj. [1. Gaudy, showy, ostentatious, Banffs.]

2. Of a broad make; or, of a full habit, S. B. "squat," Gl. Shirr.

3. It is also rendered fuddled, ibid. "swollen with drink," Gl. Rams.

Fou closs we us'd to drink and rant,
Until we baith did glow'r and gaunt,—
Right swash I true.

Ramsay's Poems, l. 218.

[SWASHER, s. A tall, dashing, ostentatious person; anything large and attractive, Clydes., Banffs.]

VOL. IV.

SWASH, s. [A drum; swasher, swashman, a drummer.] "He convenand the wachemen be the sound of his swash throw the towne;" Aberd. Reg., V. 24. V. SWESCH.

[SWAT, s. Sweat, Barbour, xi. 613.]

SWATCH, s. 1. A pattern, generally of cloth, S. Swache, A. Bor. "a tally, that which is fixed to cloth sent to dye, of which the owner keeps the other part;" Ray.

"A swatch (from snouth); a pattern, or piece for a sample." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 161.

Sir W. Scott remarks:

"The original use identifies swatch with patch. Thus Tusser:

One spreadeth those bands, so in order to lie,
As barly (in swatches) may fill it thereby."

This idea seems to acquire probability from the previous use of the word Dallops.

Of barly the longest, and greenest ye find,

Leave standing by dallops, til time ye do bind.

Five Hundred Points, p. 99.

For dallops, according to Kersey, is "a word used in some places for patches, or corners of grass, or weeds amidst the corn." But as I have met with swatch in no other E. work, I hesitate whether this be not an erratum for swatches.

2. A specimen of whatever kind, S.

"This is but a short swatch of the unprecedented force, violence, and heavy oppression of Ministers, in their ministerial and judicative capacity." Wodrow, i. 41.

"Mr. William Carstares put in her [Queen Mary's] hand one of that compendious treatise of Mr. William Guthrie's, The Trial of a Saving Interest in Christ. Sometime thereafter he enquired how she pleased the little swatch of Scots Presbyterian writings? She said, she admired it, and should never part with it while she lived." Walker's Remarkable Passages, p. 88.

3. Metaph. a mark. An ill swatch of him, a bad mark of one's character, S.

[To SWATCH, v. a. 1. To equal; to select, supply, or make, anything exactly to pattern; as, to swatch worsted, to select or supply worsted of a given shade and quality, S.

2. To tak the swatch o', to take the measure of, hence, to estimate; to work so as to equal, hence, to mar or to defeat one's plan, Clydes.; in Banffs. this phrase means the strongest negation, Gl. Banffs.]

SWATHIEL, s. A strong man.

With a swap of a swathe that swathel him swykes.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 16.

A.-S. swithlic, ingens, vehemens; swith, potens, fortis.

SWATS, s. pl. 1. New ale, S. V. SWAITS.

2. The thin part of sowens or flummery, Shetl. Isl. swade, lubrices.

To SWATTER, SQUATTER, v. n. 1. To move quickly in any fluid substance; generally including the idea of an undulatory motion, as that of an eel in the water, S.

The water stank, the field was odious,
Quhair dragonis, lessertis, askis, edderis swatterit.
Palice of Honour, l. 25.

Some by their fall were fixed on their spears,
Some swat'ring in the fload the streame down bears.
Muse's Threnodie, p. 112.

Birdis with mony piteous pew
Efferitlie in the air thay flew,
Sa lang as thay had strenth to flee;
Synne swatterit down into the see.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 41.

Burns writes squatter, Ayrs.

Awa ye squatter'd like a drake,
On whistling wings.

Works, lll. 72.

2. To move quickly in an awkward manner; used improperly.

I shall remove, I you assure,
Tho, I were nere so weak and poor,
And seek my meat throw Curry moor,
As fast as I can swatter.

Watson's Coll., l. 43.

3. Expl. as signifying, in Galloway, "to swim close together in the water like young ducks;" Mactaggart.

"To Swatter, to spill or throw about water, as geese and ducks do, in drinking and feeding;" Yorks. Marshall.

Teut. swadder-en, profundere, turbare aquas, fluctuare. Perhaps Su.-G. squatt-a, liquida effundere, and squacttr-a, spargere, dissipare, have a common origin.

SWATTER, s. A large collection, especially of small objects; as, a swatter of bairns, a a great number of children, Loth., Ayrs.

This may allude to the unequal motion of a crowd, and thus be allied to the v. Kilian expl. Teut. swadder-en as also signifying, strepere.

[To SWATTLE, v. a. and n. To swallow greedily; implying also the gurgling sound made in so doing, Clydes.]

SWATTLE, s. 1. The act of swallowing with avidity, Stirlings.

[2. Thin soup, or any liquid of which one can swallow a considerable quantity, Shetl., Clydes. V. SWITTLE.]

To SWATTLE, v. a. To beat soundly with a stick or wand, Aberd.; Swaddle, E. to beat, to cudgel.

SWATTLIN, s. A drubbing, ibid.

Prob. this is a very ancient word. For it may be a dimin. from Isl. swada, cutem laedere; swada, vulnusculum cutis laesae; swœdn-aar, id. Or we may trace it to Isl. swida, which Haldorson renders by Framea, armorum quoddam genus, a sort of partizan or halbert; but Verelius, by Clava, a club; adding Sw. klubba and suedia as synonymes.

SWATTROCH, s. "Strong soup, excellent food;" Gall. Enc.

Corr. perhaps from Gael. uthbrith, decoction; uth, juice; C. B. sudat, id.; utrach, dregs.

SWAUGER, (g hard.) A large draught, Banffs.; synon. Scoup, Swack, Waucht; S. and E. Swig.

—Than we took a swauger
O' whiskie we had smugglins brewn,
Outwittins o' the gauger.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 143.

Isl. siug-a, Su.-G. sug-a, sugere, E. to swig.

[SWAUGER, s. and v. Stagger, Banffs. V. SWAGGER.]

SWAUKIN, part. Hesitating. V. HAUKIN and SWAUKIN.

To SWAUL, v. n. To increase in bulk, to swell, Gall. Swall is the common pron. of S.

At my ain ingle than my spawls I cud beek,
Whan that swaul'd the wrily snaw.

Song, Gall. Encycl., p. 411.

The wun it will shift, and the deep it will swaul,
The faem it will flee, and the broylment will brawl.

Ibid. p. 212.

SWAUL, s. "A large swell;" ibid.

SWAULTIE, s. "A fat animal;" ibid.; q. one that is swollen.

To SWAUNDER, v. n. To become giddy, &c., Fife. V. SWANDER, v. and s.

To SWAUP, v. a. Applied to a mother or nurse, who puts a spoonful of meat first into her own mouth, in order to cool, soften, and bring it to the point of the spoon, before she gives it to her child, S.

To SWAVER, v. n. To walk feebly, as one who is fatigued, S.B. "walked wearily," Gl. Ross.

—By the help of an auld standin' stane,
To which she did her weary body lean,
She wins to foot, and swavering makes to gang.

Ross's Helmore, First Ed., p. 20

[SWAVER, s. A stagger, Banffs.; synon. stoiler.]

Teut. sweyv-en, vagari, vacillare, fluctuare, nutare; sweyver, vagus.

To SWAW, v. a. 1. To produce waves, to ruffle the surface of water.

2. To cause a motion in the water; applied to that produced by the swift motion of fishes, ib.

SWAW, s. 1. A wave, S.

2. The slight undulation in water, caused by a fish swimming near the surface; also, that caused by any body thrown in the water, ibid. Aiker, denotes a feebler undulation.

SWAWIN o' the Water. The rolling of a body of water under the impression of the wind, ibid.

Tout. swey-en, vagare, fluctuare; Germ. schwelf-en, id.; Dan. swev-e, to wave, to move. Isl. svif-a, ferri, moveri; Su.-G. sweafw-a, motitari, fluctuare. An ancient term still used in Isl. and Su.-G. in relation to the water; as in the Isl. phrase, skipa sveifungr, navis anchorae alligatae, et ventis impulsae circumactio; sveif, navis velis et remis concitatae remora; Verel.

To SWAY, SWEY, v. n. (pron. swey). 1. To incline to one side, S.

—Thir towris thou seis doun fall and swey,
And stane fra stane doun bet, and reik vpryse.
Doug. Virgil, 69, 18.

Growing corn, or grass, is said to be sweayed, when wind-waved, S.

"For the heart, pleasing that device, in so far sweyeth to it." Guthrie's Trial, p. 116.

Allied to Isl. sveig-ia, Su.-G. svig-a, inclinare, flectere.

2. To move backwards and forwards on a seat or pillow, suspended by a rope fastened at both ends to the branch of a tree, or any similar support, S. swey, A. Bor. id. sving, E.

A. Bor. "Sveigh, to play at see-saw, or titter-totter." Grose. "To Sway (pron. swey), to ride upon a plank or pole, moving on a fulcrum, as children are wont." Yorks., Marshall.

SWAY, s. 1. A moveable instrument of iron, of a rectangular form, fastened to one of the jambs of a chimney, on which pots and kettles are suspended over the fire. [E. crane.]

2. A swing, or rope fastened for the purpose of swinging. V. the v.

In the swey-snow, in a state of hesitation or uncertainty, Loth. Synon. In the Wey-bauks, q. moving backwards and forwards.

[SWAY, adv. So, Barbour, iv. 571. V. SWA.]

To SWAYL, v. a. To swaddle, S. B. sveal, S. V. SWILL.

A.-S. swæthil, swethil, fascia, from sweal-an, vincire.

SWAYWEYIS, adv. Likewise; Acts Ja. I.

To SWEAL, SWEEL, v. a. and n. 1. To whirl, to turn round with rapidity, S.; synon. Swir.

2. To swaddle, [swathe, wind round], S. V. SWILL.

[3. To rinse a pail or tub; also, to rinse clothes after they have been washed, Clydes.]

SWEAL, SWEEL, s. 1. The act of turning round with rapidity; often applied to the quick motion of a fish with its tail, ibid.

[2. The act of swathing or swaddling; also, as much cloth as will go round one's body, &c., Clydes.]

3. The act of rinsing a vessel, a piece of cloth, &c., ibid.]

Isl. sveift-a, agitare; circumagere, gyrare; as, sveifn sveit, gladium rotare, q. "to sweal a sword." Sveifla, agitatio, gyratio; Halderson.

To SWEAL, v. a. and n. To melt away hastily; also, to carry a candle so carelessly as to make it blaze away; as, "Ye're swealin' a' the candle," S.

"Dinna let the candle sweal." Tales of my Landlord, 1st Series, i. 104.

"Sweal; to waste away, as a candle blown upon by the wind;" Yorks., Marshall.

Swall or Swail is the E. orthography of this old word. V. Todd.

To SWEAP, v. a. To scourge, S. Rudd vo. Scripper.

Isl. sveipa, a scourge.

SWEAP, s. A stroke or blow, Banffs.

This must be merely a variety of Swipe, q.

SWECH, s. [A drum.] "Passing throw the town with ane swech;" Aberd. Reg. V. 25. [V. SWESCH.]

SWECHAN (gutt.), part. pr. Sounding; applied to the noise made by water, while the v. Sough is used of the wind, Lanarks.

The cowllan bells on the weelan fude
Are the ships whilk we sail in;
Alike scartfree on the pule are we,
And in the swechan lin.

Marmaiden of Clyde, Edin. Mag., May 1820.

A.-S. swey-an, sonare.

SWECHYNGE, s. A rushing sound, as that of water falling over a precipice: or a hollow whistling sound, as that made by the wind, South of S.

SWECHT, s. 1. The force of a body in motion.

Bot thys ilk Latyne, knawand thare malyse,
Resystis vnmounyt as ane roik of the seis,
Quham with grete brute of wattir smyte we se,
Hymself sustenis by his huge wecht,
Fra wallis fel in al thare bir and swecht,
Jawpyng about his skyrtis with mony ane bray.
Doug. Virgil, 228, 27.

Mole, tenet, Virg.

For as thay ran abak, and can thame schape
For till withdraw toward the tothir side,—
Than with thare swechtis, as thay rele and lepe,
The birnand towris doun rollis with ane rusche.

Ibid., 296, 33.

Pondus, Virg.

2. A multitude, a great number or quantity, Berwicks.; synon. Swack, Sweg, q. v.

Rudd. renders this "burden, weight, force," viewing it as probably nothing else but the E. sveight, with s prefixed. But it is more probably allied to Su.-G. swigt-a, vacillare, ut solent loco cessura; from Isl. sveig-ia, incurvare. Thus swecht is a s. from the same origin with swey, swey, to incline to a side.

SWEDGE, s. An iron chisel with a bevelled edge, used for making the groove round the shoe of a horse, Roxb.

Isl. sveig-la, flectere, curvare, sveigia, curvatura, flectio. This Haldorsou expl. by Dan. svejning, a chamfering, a slope or sloping.

To SWEDGE, v. a. To make a groove in a horse-shoe for receiving the nails, Roxb. This is done by such a chisel as that above described.

To SWEE, SWEY, v. a. and n. 1. To incline or swing to one side; to cause to incline so, S.

"Bairns, swee that bouking o' claes aff the fire; ye'll burn't i' the boiling." Perils of Man, i. 60. V. SWAY, SWEY, v.

2. To move backwards and forwards, as a tree, from the action of the wind; to swing, or cause anything to swing so, S.

"'Why didn't you hinder these boys from sweein' the gate off its hinges?' 'Me hinder boys from sweein' gates, Mr. Gawffaw!'" Marriage, ii. 99.

3. To be irresolute, S. V. SWAY, SWEY.

To SWEE aff, v. a. To give a slanting direction, as to a stroke, S. A.

"Instead of sweein' aff my downcome wi' his sword, he held up his sword-arm to save his head." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 42.

SWEE, s. 1. An inclination to one side, S.

"Ye ken, the wind very often tak a swee away round to the east i' the night-time, whan the wather's gude i' the harst montha." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 139.

Isl. sveigia, curvatura, flectio.

2. Used in a moral sense, as transferred to the mind, S.

"I'm nae fear't for any imprudence, lassie; and I'm nae fear't you do aught that's wrang; but its your mind that I'm sad for; they'll gie't a wrang swee, thae chaps." Hogg's Winter Tales, i. 253.

3. A chimney crane, for suspending a pot over the fire, S. V. SWAY, s. also KIRN-SWEE.

4. A line of grass cut down by the mower, S., Swath, E.

SWEE-SWAY, adj. In a state of suspense or hesitation, halting between two opinions, W. Loth.

Allied to E. See-saw, a term expressive of motion from one side to another.

SWEY, s. V. SWAY.

To SWEE, v. a. and n. 1. To smart with pain, Orkn.; synonym. Gell, Sow, S.

2. To singe, ibid.

Dan. swei-e, to smart, sveie, a smart; Isl. svid-a, Su.-G. svid-a, dolere, angere. Isl. svida signifies both to singe and to smart, in Dan. the v. having both senses, has the same form. A.-S. æ-on, effervescere, evidently claims affinity. S. Sow, pronounced Soo, is undoubtedly the same with Swee.

Some have traced S. Scouter, commonly pron. Scouter, to Isl. svida, Su.-G. svida. The Orkn. term retains the more simple form of Dan. swei-e.

[SWEED, adj. Singed; as, a sweed head, i.e., of a sheep, ibid.]

[SWEEN, adj. Singeing; smarting with pain, ibid.]

[To SWEEG, v. n. To drift slowly, to loose ground, to settle to leeward, Shetl. Dan. svigte, id.]

[SWEEGIN, s. Applied to any liquid oozing from a cask or tub, ibid.]

WEEK, s. The art of doing any thing properly. When one cannot accomplish what he attempts, it is said, He has nae the week o't, S. B.

It is probably the same with Su.-G. swik, swek, dolus, insidiae. V. SWAK, and SWIK, s.

To SWEEL, SWEAL, v. a. and n. V. SWEAL.

SWEELER, s. A bandage, that which sweels or winds round, Kinross. V. SWILL, v.

To SWEEL, v. a. To swallow or drink copiously, S. Swill, E.

I never money sooner got—
Then to get clear
Of it, I sweel'd it down my throat
In ale or beer.

Dominie Deposed, p. 28.

Cauld whisky-punch, and ale, nut-brown,

He gart her sweel,

Till, dizzy, a' the world ran round,

As in a reel.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 64.

A.-S. swilg-an, swylg-an, swelg-an, to swallow, to swill. Dr. Johns. views the corresponding E. v. as the same with Swill, to wash, to drench. But according to A.-S. lexicons, they seem to claim distinct origins.

[SWEEL, s. A large draught, a large quantity of any liquid, Clydes.]

[SWEEM, s. A state of great wetness; sweemin, drenched, Banffs.]

[SWEEP, s. The piece of rope by which the sinking-stone is tied to a herring-net, Banffs.]

[SWEEP-STANE, s. The stone used for sinking a herring net, ibid.]

SWEEPIE, s. A chimney sweeper, Aberd.

SWEER, SWEERT, adj. Slow. V. SWEIR.

To SWEESH, v. a. To beat, S. V. SQUISHE.

SWEET-MILK CHEESE. Cheese made of milk without the cream being skimmed off, Dunlop cheese, S.

"Sweet-milk cheese, i.e., cheese made of the whole milk without abstracting the cream, is not made for sale in this county; but only for private family use." Agr. Surv. Perth., p. 83.

SWEET-MILKER, s. The day on which, in a farm house, cheese is made; Gall. Enc., p. 443.

SWEETIES, s. pl. The term vulgarly used for sweetmeats or confections, S.

"Sweetys, sweetmeats, confectionary." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 151.

—Snuff-boxes, sword-knots, canes, and washes,
And sweeties to bestow on lasses.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 547.

SWEETIE-BUN, SWEETIE-SCON, SWEETIE-LAIF, s. A cake baked with sweetmeats, or with raisins, S.

—The bride's sweetie bun, and good liquor,
Wi' gawin and jeerin' gaed down.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 296.

SWEETIE-MAN, s. A confectioner; a man who sells confections, or sweet-meats at a fair, S.

"The sweetie-men, or confectioners, take up their station here, and reap a rich harvest." Agr. Surv. Kincard., p. 406.

SWEETIE-WIFE, s. A female who sells sweet-meats, S.

"A long rank of sweetie-wives and their stands, covered with the wonted dainties of the occasion, occupied the sunny-side of the High-street." The Provost, p. 136.

The sweetie-wife awaits with apron'd hands,
And broad before, an empty pouch expands.

Village Fair, Blackw. Mag. Jan. 1821, p. 423.

SWEG, SWEIG, SWIG, s. 1. A quantity, a considerable number, Loth.

Franc. sueig, pecus, grex; Alem. suiga, armentum; Germ. schweigen, praedia pecuaria.

2. A large draught of liquor, S. This is merely E. Swig.

SWEIG, SWEEG, s. A very bad candle, Roxb. Synon. Water-wader, q. v.

Denominated perhaps from its limber form; Isl. sueig-r, a twig, sueig-ia, to bend. If from the faintness of the light it gives, allied perhaps to Dan. Su-G-nag, weak, feeble, faint.

SWEIL, s. 1. A swivel, or ring containing one; also Sowle, S. A. and O.; synon. Sule, S. B. [Isl. sveifla.]

"She went in to the miller's house, and asked for the sweil of a tether.—John Smith,—as he rode by the mill of Rachean, asked if his wife had been there seeking a sweil." History of the horrid and unnatural murders, by J. Smith, Edin. 1727, p. 4. V. SULE.

2. Any thing that has a circular motion, Gall. Enc.

To SWEILL, v. n. To move in a circular way, Gall.

The dark brown tap, o' some big hill
He centers, then around will sweill.

Gall. Encycl., p. 399.

SWEIR, SWERE, SWEER, SWEAR, adj. 1. Lazy, indolent, S.

Mony sweir bumbard belly-huddroun,
Mony slute daw, and slepy duddroun,
Him servit ay with sounyie.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 29.

Lord Hailes says; "In modern language, the consequence only is used; for sweir means unwilling;" Note, p. 237. But I know not how the learned writer could assert this, as the word is still commonly used in the sense of lazy.

Not sweir, bot in his delis diligent,
Palyurus furth of his conche vrsprent.

Doug. Virgil, 85, 36.

Quharfor bene nobillis to fallow proves sweir?
Ibid., ProL 354, 8.

Hence the name given to a lazy girl, Ketty Sweerock, as in the S. Prov.;

Ketty Sweerock frae whare she sate,
Cries, Reik me this, and reik me that.

Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 48.

"Work for nought makes fowk dead sweir;" Ibid. p. 79.

This term is, I think, most generally in the west of S. pron. Sweert.

A.-S. swaer, sucere, piger, deses. Swer thegn, piger servus, Matt., xxv. 26. But the primary sense of the A.-S. term is, heavy; corresponding to Su.-G. suaer, Alem. suar, gravis.

2. Reluctant, unwilling, S. V. sense 1. To do a thing with sweir will, to do it reluctantly.

Yet sweir were they to rake their een,
Sic dizzy heads had they.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 271.

Unyoke thee, man, an' binna sucur
To ding a hole in ill-hain'd gear!
O think that eild, wi' wylie fit,
Is wearing nearer bit by bit!

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 106.

3. In the western counties, it is often used in the sense of niggardly; as denoting one who is unwilling to part with any thing that is his property. Hence,

DEAD-SWEIR, adj. Extremely lazy, S.

"Deferred hopes need not to make me dead-sweir (as we use to say)." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 199.

SWEIR-DRAUCHTS, s. pl. The same with Sweir-tree. The amusement is conducted in Tweeddale by the persons grasping each others' hands, without using a stick.

SWEIR-DRAWN, part. pa. To be Sweir-drawn, to hesitate or be reluctant about any thing, Roxb.

Perhaps originally the part. pr.; q. Sweir-drawin, like Dreich o' drawin.

SWEIR-JINNY, SWEIR-KITTY, s. An instrument for winding yarn, S.

So called from its affording an easier mode of working than had formerly been known; from sweir, and Kitty, a contemptuous term for a woman. There is probably an allusion to the nickname given, in the S. Prov., to a lazy girl. V. SWEIR, sense 1.

SWEIR MAN'S LADE, SWEIR MAN'S LIFT. The undue load, taken on by a lazy person, in order to avoid a repetition of travel, S. More than he can accomplish, S.

SWEIRNES, s. Laziness, S.

Syne Sweirnes, at the second bidding,
Com lyk a sow out of a midding;
Full slepy wes his grunye.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 29.

"Pride and sweerness take meikle uphadding;"
Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 27.

Als in the out Ylls, and Argyle,
Unthrif, sweirnes, falsel, pouertie and stryfe,
Pat Policie in danger of his life.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 255.

—"In this cais it could be diligentlie eschewit, that it be not verifit that is said in ane common proverb, viz., 'He that for sweirnes and could wald not work in winter, sall thairfor beg in the sommer time, and yit nathing sall be gevin unto him.'" Balfour's Pract., p. 536.

SWEIRTA, SWEIRTIE, s. Laziness, sloth, Aberd.; formed like Partye, Dainta, &c.

How gat ye pith your bitter spleen to break,
I marvel much that sweirta lute ye speak.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 49.

SWEIR-TREE, s. 1. A species of diversion. Two persons, seated on the ground, having a stick between them, each lays hold of it with both hands, and tries who shall first draw the other up. This stick is called the sweir-tree, Fife, q. lazy tree.

V. etymon. of DAINTY, adj.

And nane o' them can ither beat,
At putting-stane and doure sweirtree.
Gall. Encycl., p. 412.

2. The stick used in the amusement of drawing the Sweirtree, South of S.

3. A Sweir Kitty, q. v. Teviotd.

SWEIRNE, part. pa. Sworn, Aberd. Reg.

SWEIS, s. pl. Apparently cranes, or instruments of this description.

"Item, fyve sweis of tymmer." Inventories, A. 1566, p. 170. V. SWEY and SWEZ.

SWELCHIE, s. A seal, Brand, p. 143. V. SELCH.

SWELCHIE, s. A whirlpool, Orkn. V. SWELTH, s.

SWELL, s. A bog, S. B. V. SWELTH.

To SWELT, SWELLY, v. a. To swallow, [to suck in greedily], S.

Bot rather I desyre baith cors and sprete
Of me that the erth sweelly law adoun.

Doug. Virgil, 100, 2.

A.-S. swelg-an, Teut. swelgh-en, Su.-G. swael-ja, vorare. V. SWALL.

SWELTH, adj. Gluttonous, voracious.

Thou swelth deuourare of tyme vnrecouerabill,
O lust infernale, furnes inextinguibill.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 98, 6.

Swelgeth and swelgth occur as the 3 p. sing. pres. A.-S. v. deuorat, q. that which swalloweth.

SWELTH, s. A gulf, a whirlpool.

Fra swelth of Silla and dirk Caribdis bandis,
I mene from hell sauf al go not to wraik.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 66, 54.

Qubhat profitit me certis that soukanil sand,
Or yit Scylla the swelth is ay routand.

Ibid. 216, 34.

Swelchie is still used in this sense, Orkn.

"On the north side of this isle is a part of Pightland-Firth, call'd the Swelchie of Stroma,—very dangerous to seamen." Wallace's Orkney, p. 5.

"Did we credit the tales of former times, wells and swelchies, gulphs and whirlpools, are constantly surrounding this island, like so many gaping monsters, more hideously formidable than even Scylla or Charybdis." Barry's Orkney, p. 44.

Swell, in modern S. B., is used in a sense very nearly allied, as synon. with bog.

—"He knows the place called the Waggle, between which and the water [river] there was a bog or swell that beasts would have laired in." State, Leslie of Powis, A. 1805, p. 74.

Su.-G. Swalty, which, like Teut. swelgh, primarily signifies the throat, (guttur, fauces), is used, in a secondary sense, for an abyss or gulf.

To SWELT, v. n. 1. To die.

At Jerusalem trowyt he Grawyn in the Burch to be;
The quethyr at Burch in to the Sand
He swelt rycht in his awn land.

Barbour, iv. 311, MS.

A.-S. swælt-an, swelt-an, Moes-G. swilt-an, mori; Su.-G. swælt-a, to perish by hunger. Callander, MS. Note in vo., mentions "Scot. to swalt, to die." I have not heard the word used in this sense.

2. To feel something like suffocation, especially in consequence of heat, S., nearly allied to E. swelter.

—Hot, hot was the day;
With faut and heat, I just was like to swelt,
And in a very blob of sweat to melt.

Ross's Helenore, p. 87.

"Swelt, suffocated, choked to death," Gl. Shirr.

O. Flandr. swelt-en, deficere, languescere, faticere.

This ought to be made a distinct v. from the preceding; and deduced from Isl. swael-a, swælt, suffocare. Swæla, as a noun, is rendered, fumus vehemens et acer. This seems to be the origin of E. Swelter, nearly allied in signification to the S. verb.

"To swelt, deficere, to sownd;" Northumb. Ray.

[SWELTIN-COD, s. A very poor cod-fish, Shetl.]

[SWELTH, s. and adj. V. under SWELT.]

SWENGEOUR, s. V. SWEYNGEOUR.

SWENYNG, s. Dreaming. V. SWEUIN.

SWERD, s. A sword. V. SUERD.

SWERF, s. A fainting fit, a swoon. V. SWARF.

SWERTHBAK, s. The great Black and White Gull. [V. SWARTBACK.]

The Goull was a garnitar,
The Swerthbak a scellarar.

Houlate, l. 14.

This in Orkn. is still called Swarthback, q. v. Thus it appears that it formerly had the same name in S. unless this should be the Lesser Guillemot; Isl. swarbak-ur; denominated from the blackness of its back. V. Pennant's Zool., p. 520.

SWESCH, SWASCH, s. [A drum.]

"All the Gild brether all convene, and compeir after they heare the striak of the swesch." Stat. Gild,
c. 14.

Ane thousand hakbuttis gar schute al at anis
With swesche, talburnis, and trumpettis awfullie.

Lyndsay, Sq. Meldrum, l. 1178.

[Dr. Jamieson rendered this term as meaning a trumpet; but that it means a drum is evident from the extracts themselves. And Dr. Laing, in his note on the passage from Lyndsay, alludes to this mistake of Jamieson, and corrects it. Besides, in the book of Bon Accord, edited by Dr. Joseph Robertson, several extracts from the Council Register of Aberdeen are given, in which the terms swesch and sweschman occur, and are rendered by drum and drummer; and in Knox's History, vol. ii., p. 496, we are told—"the swesch, tabron, and drums, were stricken or beaten." And that the swesch or swesch was a kind of drum is put beyond doubt by the following extracts from the Register of the Canongate:—"Item the tent October, 1576, gevin for an swesche to our moustiris, iij li;" and, "Item for twa stickis to the swesche, vj d." For etym. &c. V. under Swasch.]

SWESCHER, SUESCHER, [SWESCHMAN,] s. [A drummer.]

"The common swescher;" Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

"Common tabernar and swescher;" ibid.

SWEUIN, SWEVING, SWEVYNYNG, SWEN-
YNG, s. A dream, the act of dreaming.

The figure flei as licht wynd or the sonne beme,
Or maist likly ane wauerand sweuin or dreme.

Doug. Virgil, 65, 15.

—Sam tyme in our swewing we tak kepe.

Ibid, 446, 11.

I slaid on ane swewyning, slomerand ane lite.

Ibid, ProL 238, a. 8.

A swewyng swyth did me assaile
Of sonis of Sathanis seil.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 19.

The latter is merely a contr. O.E. swæven, A.-S. swæfen, id. from swæf-ian, to sleep; Dan. sove, id. whence soven, sleep; Isl. swefn, id. from sof-a, dormire.

That swuin has also been formerly used as a v., appears from its part. sweyning.

Than come Dame Dremyng, all clad in black sabill,
With sweyning Nymphis, in cullouris variabill.

Dial. Honour, Gude Fume, &c. p. 1.

SWEY, s. A long crow for raising stones,
Ang. as punch denotes a smaller one.

Probably from Isl. swig-ia, inclinare, q. to move the stones from their place. V. SWAY, v.

[SWEYN, s.] A proper name, Shetl.]SWEYNGEOUR, SWYNGEOUR, SWINGER, s. Expl. "a fellow, a scoundrel; swcir swingeouris, lazy fellows. A variety of swinker, a labourer, as in O. E., Chaucer." Gl. Lynds.

In Shetl. this word is expl. "a rogue."

"Wherefore shines the sunne, but that thou mightest walke? The sunne is not giuen thee to sleepe: he is but a swinger, but a lubbar, that will lye idle in the day light, and the sunne shall witnes against him in that day; much more that heauenly light, that sunne of righteounease shines he for nothing?" Rollock on Coloss., p. 20.

Sweyngeouris, and skuryvagus, swankys and swanys,
Geuis na cure to run craft.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 238, b. 23.

Ane swyngour coffe, amangis the wyvis,
In land-wart dwellis with subteill menis,
Exponand thame auld sanctis lyvis,
And sanis thame with deil mennis banis.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 170.

Lord Hailes renders this "a rascally wench." Were this the sense, it might be allied to Dan. swangr-er, gignere, which is probably from swange, ilia. Rudd. expl. it "scoundrel, rascal;" but gives no probable etymon. Lye renders it desidiosus, iners, piger; Add. Jun. Etym. This sense is more probable; A.-S. sweng, swong, lazy, swongornes, torpor. In Edin. Review, Oct. 1803, it is observed, however, that the term "means only a strong man, or as the vulgar still say, a swingeing fellow, from Moes.-G. swinthains, potentia, or swinth, validus, robustus, as in Ulph., Galatida swinthain, fecit potentiam." P. 206.

[SWEYNT, s.] A quick, active movement,
Shetl.]SWICK, adj. Clear of any thing, Banffs.

Perhaps allied to Su.-G. swig-a, loco cedere, Isl. swig-ia, flectere; like S. Jouk.

[SWICK, s.] Good opinion, approbation; art, ability, Banffs. Same with Sweek, q. v.]To SWICK, v. a. 1. To deceive, to illude,

Germ. schwef-en, to flit or float with little motion, to hover; the word is used by Luther, Gen. i. 2. "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." He subjoins; "Schweiden, or Schwaeden, is thought by Adelung to be from the same root."

Prob. allied to A.-S. swaether, which of the two, contr. from swa hwaether. But as it occurs in the Pallice of Honour, perhaps it may rather be allied to Germ. schwitten, concutere, concuti. For Doug. evidently uses it to denote a mental concussion. The Germ. v. is a frequent. from schutt-en, Teut. schuuld-en, id. Su.-G. skuld-a. Hence E. shudder. "Swither is expl. trembling." Gl. Morison's Poems.

SWIDDER, SWIDDERING, SWITHER, s. Doubt, hesitation.

SWIFF, s. 1. Rotatory motion, or the sound produced by it; as, the swiff of a mill, Loth.

2. Any quick motion, producing a whiffing sound; as, It past by me wi' a swiff, Fife.
V. SWIFT.

3. A sound of this description, ibid. Synon.
Souch, s.

Isl. swef-ast, Su.-G. swaefio-a, circumagere, motitari.

SWIFF of Sleep, s. A disturbed sleep, ibid.
V. SOUF, v. and s. Isl. swaef-a, sopire.

To SWIFF, v. n. A term used to denote the hollow melancholy sound made by the wind, Roxb., Berwicks. Synon. Souch, v.

To SWIFF asleep, v. n. A phrase used to denote that short interval of sleep enjoyed by those who are restless from fatigue or disease, South of S. Hence,

To SWIFF awa, v. n. To faint, to swoon,
S. A.

"When she had read it, I thought she was gaun to swiff awa, for she turned as white in the gills as a haddock that's new taen out o' a cod's mou." St.
Johnstoun, ii. 201. Swuff, id., Ettr. For.

SWIFT, s. A reeling machine used by weavers, S.

Isl. swelf, volva, instrumentum quo aliquid circum-rotatur, ansa rotatilis, verticillum. V. SWIFF.

[To SWIFT, v. a. To reef, to reduce; as, swift the sail, Shetl.]

To SWIG, v. n. 1. To wag, to move from side to side, to walk with a rocking sort of motion, S. B. "To turn suddenly," S. A.

He through the glen gaed canty swiggin,
As trim's a bead.

Tarras's Poems, p. 141.

[2. To walk or work with energy, Banffs.]

Isl. swig-ia, flectere; Su.-G. swig-a, loco cedere.
Ihre seems to view this and waeg-a, to have an inconstant motion, E. to Wag, as originally the same; and the idea has every appearance of being well founded.

SWIG, s. 1. The act of turning suddenly. V.
Gl. Compl. vo. Suak.

[2. Art, manner; skill, ability, Clydes.,
Banffs. V. SWECK.]

To SWIK, v. a. "To soften, assuage, allay;" Rudd. Sibb.; to deceive.

And sum tyme wald scho Ascanes the page,
Caucht in the fygure of his faderis ymage,
And in hir bosum brace, gyf scho tharby
The luf vntellibyl mycht swik or satisfy.

Doug. Virgil, 102, 38.

Swik here undoubtedly signifies to deceive, used metaph., from A.-S. swic-an, id. in its primary sense.
For it is the v. corresponding to fallere in the original.

SWIKFUL, adj. Deceitful, Wyntown.

SWIKFULLY, adv. Deceitfully.

Bot a fals traytoure cald Godwyne
This Ethelrede betraysyd syne,
And hym murthersyd swykfully.

Wyntown, vi. 15. 85.

SWIL, s. The swivel of a tedder, Shetl.
V. SULE and SWEIL.

SWILK, SUILK, adj. Such.

With swilk wordis thai maid thair mayn.

Barbour, xx. 277, MS.

"Ilk mane as wil nocht pay—swilk maner of dettis throu obligationis &c. in the mone that now rynis, that thai sal pay it in the money at rynniss fra that day furth." Acts Ja. II., A. 1541, Ed. 1814, p. 41.

A.-S. swile, swylc, talis. S. sic, sik, is evidently corr. from this, as the A.-S. word is contr. from Moes-G. swaleik, id. from sica, so, and leik, like, (similis).

To SWILL, v. a. To swaddle, S. swéal, swayl.

How that gaist had been gotten, to guess they began;
Well swill'd in a swins skin and smeir'd o're with suit.

Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 13.

Attour, I hae a ribbon twa ell lang,
As broad's my loof, and nae a thrum o't wrang.
Gin it hae mony marrows, I'm beguil'd,
'Twas never out of fauld syn she was swayl'd.

Ross's Helene, p. 114.

Isl. swellit, strictus.

SWILL, s. Prob., a duty, for which money was taken.

"Thre sh. for sax huikis in hervest, xiiij d. for ilk swill of viij pultre." Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

This term relates perhaps to a duty for which money was taken in exchange. The cain due for each plough-gate might be eight fowls. A.-S. sul denotes a plough. Hence, O. E. "Scolding or Suling of land, as much as one plough can till in a year;" Kersey. L. B. swollunga, sulinga, id. V. Spelman.

SWINE. The swine's gane through't, a proverbial phrase used in relation to marriage, when something untoward has taken place which breaks it off, S.

"The swine's gone through it;" spoken when an intended marriage is gone back; out of a superstitious conceit that, if a swine come between a man and his mistress, they will never be married." S. Prov., p. 330, Kelly.

"You should sift James's tender passion;—and if it's within the compass o' a possibility, get the swine driven through't, or it may work us a muckle dule." The Entail, ii. 285.

The idea was carried so far, that when a swine followed a marriage-party, it was reckoned an indubitable presage that the connexion would be unfortunate. Grose mentions the same superstition as prevalent in E. with still greater latitude of application. "If going on a journey on business, a sow cross the road, you will probably meet with a disappointment, if not a bodily accident, before you return home. To avert this you must endeavour to prevent her crossing you; and if that cannot be done, you must ride round on fresh ground. If the sow is attended with her litter of pigs, it is lucky, and denotes a successful journey." Popular Superstit., p. 45. Suppl. to Prov. Gloss.

The reason why this intervention of this animal has been supposed so unlucky, and particularly as to marriage, is nowhere assigned; but it might originate from the generally received idea that it is an unclean animal. Certain it is, however, that among ancient nations the swine was sacrificed at the celebration of nuptials; particularly by the Etrurians, the early Latins, and the Greeks in Italy. Instead of its being said of an intended marriage that "the swine had gone through it," when it failed after all the necessary preparations had been made, and among others the act of sacrificing a hog, the disappointed bridegroom is represented as thus expressing his losses;

Perit quidem sus, et talentum, et nuptiae.

VOL. IV.

"I have lost my swine, my money, and my nuptials." Pierii Hieroglyph. Lib. 9. fol. 69, b.

It may be remarked in general, however, that most of the quadrupeds, and birds of evil omen, are such as were pronounced unclean by the Mosaic law. Besides the swine, the hare was deemed unlucky, particularly if it crossed a traveller's road; and among birds, the kite, the raven, the owl, the heron, the bat, &c. were accounted prognosticators of evil. Compare Lev. xi. 6 7. 14. 19. with Brand's Popul. Antiq. ii., 510. 518-537.

SWINE-ARNOT, s. The same with Swine's Mosscoorts, Banffs.

"Swine-arnot is clown's allheal, Stachys palustris." Surv. Banffs. App. p. 38.

SWINE-FISH, s. The wolf-fish, Orkn.

While hemp and lint grow tap to lift,
And maids and matrons mingle,
May social glee set dunts adrift,
When lint they list to swingle.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 18.

The poem, whence this example is given, which possesses a considerable degree of humour, is entitled The Swingling of the Lint.

A.-S. swing "flagellum, a whip or scourge. Item, scutula; a swingle-staffe or bat to beat flax." Swingle, in pl. swingla, "verbera, strokes, stripes, lashes. Item, flagella, scutulae; swingella, flailles, staves or bats to beat flax, or thresh corn." Somner.

SWINGLE-TREE, s. The stock over which flax is scutched, Dumfr.; synon. Swingling-stock.SWINGLE-WAND, s. The instrument with which flax is swingled, S. B.

SWINGLER, s. The instrument used for beating flax, Dumfr.

SWINGLING-HAND, s. A wooden lath or sword for dressing flax, Roxb.; synon. with Swingle-wand.

SWINGLING-STOCK, s. An upright board, about three feet in height, morticed into a foot or stock, over which flax is held while it is beaten by the swingling-hand, ibid.

SWING-LINT, s. An instrument used for breaking flax, Roxb.

I find it written swinglind, perhaps erroneously.

"Swingle-trees, are crooked pieces of wood, to which the horses traces are made fast behind the horses." Clav. Yorks.

"Sometimes the breast-woddies, an' sometimes the theets brak, and the swingle-trees flew in flinders, as gin they had been as freugh as kail-castacks." Journal from London, p. 5.

Teut. swinghel-en, to vibrate, to move backwards and forwards.

To SWINK, SWYNK, v. n. To labour.

His servand, or himself, may nocht be spard,
To swynk or sweit, withouttin meit or wage.
Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 120.

"I swynke, I busye, I trauayle my selfe.— I am but a fole to swynke for other men." Palagr. B. iii. F. 381, b. A. Bor. "Swinked, oppressed, vexed, fatigued;" Gl. Brockett.

SWINK, s. Labour; Chauc. swinke.

Ever as thai com newe,
He on ogain hem thre;
Gret swink.
Sir Tristrem, p. 97.

[To SWINT, v. n. To squint, Shetl.]

To SWIPE, v. n. 1. To move circularly, Lanarks.

2. To give a stroke in a semicircular or elliptical form, as when one uses a scythe in cutting down grass, S.

Isl. swip-a, signifies vibrare, to brandish, to move backwards and forwards. The term seems to include the idea of the celerity of action or motion, being also rendered celerare. Swicp-r, has the sense of vortex, apparently from the whirling motion. Perhaps the word may be traced to swicf, ansa rotatilis, verticillus, instrumentum quo aliquid circumrotatur; or to swicfast, Su.-G. swaefw-a, circumagi. It is probable that the E. v. to Swicp, as including great affinity of sense, has a common origin both with Swype, S. and with these northern terms. The S. word may, however, be allied to Isl. swip-a, flagellare, swicp-a, percutere. Thorgils swicpadi svinninum; Thorgils puerum flagellavit. Muna their Gizor geirum swicpa, Gizorem non percuteus frameis; Haldorson. These terms all seem primarily to express the idea of a quick, smart stroke, from swip-a, cito agere.

SWIPE, SWYPE, s. 1. A circular motion, Lanarks.

2. A stroke fetched by a circular motion, ibid., Aberd.

Syne Francie Winsy steppit in,
A sauchin slavery slype,
Ran forrat wi' a furious din,
And drew a swinging swype.
Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 124.

SWIPPER, SWIPPERT, adj. 1. Quick, swift, nimble.

All thoct he eildet was, or step in age,
Als fery and als swipper as ane page.
Doug. Virgil, 173, 54.

Bot than the swypper tuskand hound assayis
And neris fast, ay redly hym to hynt. Ibid. 439, 29.

A. Bor. "Swipper, nimble, quick; Ray; Brockett. This is also O. E. "Swypir or delyuir. Angilis." Prompt. Parv.

2. Sudden, hasty, tart. One is said to speak swippert-like, when he speaks hastily, as if in ill-humour, S.

In rinning aff lay my relief I thought;
But of my claime he took a swippert claught.
Ross's Helenore, p. 88.

SWIPPERTLY, SWIPPIRLIE, adv. Swiftly.

Turnus the chiftane on the tothir syde,
Come to the ciete, or that ony wist,
Furth fleand swippirlie, as that him best list.
Doug. Virgil, 275, 24.

Then swippertly started up a carl.—
Jameson's Popul. Ball., i. 303.

[SWIRD-DANCE. A dramatic martial dance performed by seven men in armour, representing the seven champions of Europe, Shetl.]

To SWIRK, v. n. To spring, to set off with velocity.

Full craftely conjurit scho the Yarrow,
Quhillk did forth swirk as swift as ony arrow.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 4.

Allied perhaps to E. Jerk, or Belg. schrikk-en, to start; whence probably the E. word.

To SWIRL, v. a. and n. 1. To whirl like a vortex; to carry off as by a whirl-wind, S.

—Fearfu' winds loud gurl'd,
And mony a lum dang down, an' stack
Heigh i' the air up swirl'd.
A. Wilson's Poems, 1798, p. 61.

"The trees—waved and soughed, and some withered leaves were swirled round and round as if by the wind." Marriage, ii. 33.

—"He forgot, in harkening to the cheerful prattle of the Garnock waters, as they swirled among the pebbles by the road side, the pageantries of that mere bodily worship which had worked on the ignorance of the world to raise such costly monuments of the long-suffering patience of heaven." R. Gilhaize, i. 150.

2. To be seized with giddiness, Ettr. For.

"We'll never mair scar at the poolly-woolly of the whaup, nor swirl at the gelloch of the ern." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 288.

3. Used to denote the motion of a ship in sailing; but improperly.

—Wha—in a tight Thessalian bark

To Colchos' harbour swirl'd.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 3.

Su.-G. surr-a, scarfu-a, Isl. noirr-a, Belg. noier-en, to be hurried round. Swarf-a and swirr-a are originally the same with hwerrf-a, s being prefixed. Hence hwerrf-a, to be carried round, wattu hwirfel, a whirlpool, &c.

SWIRL, s. 1. A whirling motion of a fluid body, S.

The swelland swirl rphesit vs to heuin.

Syne with the wall swak vs agane doun euin,

As it apperit, vnder the sey to hell.

Doug. Virgil, 87, 24.

2. A whirling motion of any kind, as that caused by the operation of the wind, S.

"The leaves are withering fast on the trees, but she'll never see the Martinmas wind gar them dance in swirls like the fairy rings." Bride of Lam., iii. 96.

It often signifies an eddy; applied to water, to wind, to driving snow, S. V. the v.

3. The vestiges left of a motion of this kind.

"Swirl—the remaining appearance of such a motion;" Gl. Sibb., S.

4. A twist or contortion in the grain of wood, S.

5. The same with Cowlick, a tuft of hair on the head which brushes up, &c., Clydes.

SWIRLIE, adj. 1. Full of twists, contorted; full of knots, knaggy, synon. S.; q. as denoting the circunvolutions of wood, the veins of which are circular.

He taks a swirlie, auld moss-oak,
For some black, grousome carlin.

Burns, iii. 136.

2. Entangled; applied to grass that lies in various positions, so that it cannot be easily cut by the scythe, S.

3. Inconstant, ever in a state of rotation, Roxb.

But whan the glass is fillin',
Then, swirlie fortune, frown and fight;
Their joys are past your killin'.

Ruickbie's Way-side Cottager, p. 187.

SWIRLING, s. Giddiness, vertigo, S.

SWIRLON, SWIRLIN, adj. Distorted, S.O.; applied to the human body, West of S.

Auld, swirlon, slathorn, camsheugh, crooked wight,
Gae wa', an' ne'er again come in my sight.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 29.

[SWISK, s. A whisk, a small broom, Shetl. Dan. risk, id.]

SWITH, SWYTH, SWYITH, adv. Quickly; als swyth, as soon.

For hunger wod he gapis with throttis thre,
Swyth swelliland that morsel raucht had sche.

Doug. Virgil, 178, 27.

Als swith as the Rutulianis did se

The yet opin, thay ruschit to the entre.

Ibid. 302, 32

Chaucer, aswith.

Swith is also used as a sign of the superlative, like Lat. valde, E. very. Sometimes it signifies vehementer; from swith, valens, potens, fortis.

"Scot. we say, Swith away, i.e., be gone quickly," Rudd.

Sibylla cryis, that prophetes diuine,

Al ye that bene prophane, away, away,

Swyth outwith, al tha sanctuary hy you, hay.

Doug. Virgil, 172, 13.

Swyth man! fling a' your sleepy springs awa'.

Fergusson's Poems, li. 6.

Swith frae my sight, nor lat me see you mair.

Shirreff's Poems, p. 62.

SWITHNES, s. Swiftmess, velocity.

"After deith of Canute succedit his son Herald, namit for his gret swithnes Hairfut, quhillk reiosit the crown of Ingland twa yeris." Bellend. Cron. B. xii. c. 8. A pedum velocitate, Boeth.

To SWITHER, v. n. To hesitate. SWITHER, s. Hesitation, confusion. V. SWIDDER, v. and s.

To SWITHER, v. n. 1. To swagger, Roxb.

2. To talk or act as assuming a claim of superior dignity or merit, as E. swagger is used; to hector, South of S.

3. To exert one's self to the utmost, Roxb.

To wark they fell, what they could swither.

The lint flew fast frae ane anither, &c.

Swingling of the Lint, Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 71.

4. As a v. a., to make to fall, to throw over, Tweeddale.

SWITHER, s. 1. A severe brush, like one who is made to swagger, or becomes giddy from his situation, ibid.

O sweet is Hymen, nuptial tether,—

Where lovers leal, wi' ane anither,

Stand clear o' dool;

Nor wi' the kirk ere risk a swither,

On cuttle stool.

On Matrimony, A. Scott's Poems, p. 43.

2. A trial of strength; applied to mental or lingual exertion, ibid.

Then we'll at crambo hae a swither,

In hamespun dress.—

Let poor folk write to ane anither,

The way they learn'd it frae their mither,

Or some auld aunt's loquacious swither
O' wit and glee.
Ruickbie's Way-side Cottager, p. 184, 189.

3. The act of throwing down, or over, ibid.

Allied perhaps A.-S. swith-ian, praevalere, praepollere, "to prevail, to overweigh, to surmount;" from swith, potis, able, good. Swithor, swithre, in comparative, potior, more able. Swithran hand, (q. d. potior manus), the right hand; Somner. Teut. swuelder-en, however, signifies streperare, to make a noise.

To SWITHER, v. n. To whiz.

"With such an unwonted force did he fly forward, —that the staff which he carried above his shoulder, came by me with a swithering noise like that made by a black-cock on the wing at full flight." Hogg's Winter Tales, i. 240.

Perhaps radically the same with Quhiddir, Quhüther, to whiz, with the sibilant substituted for the guttural sound.

[SWITTER, s. A state of entanglement or confusion; work done in such a state; also, one who works so, Banffs.]

[To SWITTER, v. n. To work in confusion, or in a confused manner, ibid.

Prob., another form of Swither.]

[SWITTLE, s. Thin liquid, as soup, &c., Shetl.]

SWONCHAND, part. pr. [Dashing, swaying, heaving; gliding along.]

Yit induring the day, to that dere drew
Swannis swonchand full swyith, sweetest of sware.
Houlate, l. 14.

"Swimming." Gl. Pink. But this is too general. The term may either signify, vibrating, Germ. swenck-en, motitare, whence swanck-vederen, penae remiges, Kilian; or it may denote the stateliness of the motion of this beautiful fowl, as allied to Dan. meink-er, to strut, to have a proud gait.

[This term occurs repeatedly in Morte Arthur and in the Troy Book, but almost always in connection with waves or with water in motion.]

SWOND, s. A faint, a swoon; [swonand, swooning, Barbour, xvii. 648.]

"It list up one of its hellish claws, and struck the mother on the left side of the head with such violence that she immediately fell into a swoon for a considerable time." Relation of a Hellish Monster, A. 1709, — Law's Memor., p. 245, N.

SWOON, s. Corn is said to be in the swoon, when, although the strength of the seed is exhausted, the plant has not fairly struck root, S. B. In this intermediate sort of state, the blade appears sickly and faded.

A.-S. swinn-an, deficere, to decay.

SWORD-DOLLAR. A large silver coin of James VI. of S. V. JAMES RYALL.

SWORDICK, s. The Spotted Blenny, Orkney.

"The Spotted Blenny (blennius gunrellus, Lin. Syst.), which, from the form of its body, has here got the name of swordick, is found under stones among the sea-weed, both at low-water mark and above it." Barry's Orkney, p. 292.

SWORDSLIPERS, s. pl. Sword-cutlers, Gl. Knox's Hist.

This was anciently written Sword slyper. Thus, in the records of the burgh of Ayr, "John Wallace sword-slyper" is mentioned as one of the deacons of crafts, about the year 1583.

Teut. slip, aerugo ferri; slip-en, acuere, exterere aciem ferri, atterere gladium coti; slyp-slcen, cos; Belg. slyper, a whetter; Germ. schleif-en, to whet; schleif-er, a grinder, &c. Su.-G. slip-a, acuere. C. B. yslip-ann, polire, liff-o, acuere. Thus it appears that the term has been generally diffused.

SWORL, SWORIL, s. 1. A whirling motion, swirl, synon.

Bot lo ane swort of fyre blesis vp thraw,
Lemand toward the lift the flambe he saw.
Doug. Virgil, 435. 38.

[2. A swivel, Lyndsay, Compl. of Bagsche, l. 203.]

V. SWIRL, s.

SWOURN, Wallace, vi. 575. Perth. Ed. Read, Smoryt, as in MS. i.e., smothered.

Palyone rapys thai cuttyt in to sowndyr,
Borne to the ground, and mony smoryt owndir.

SWOW, s. The dull and heavy sound produced by the regurgitations of the dashing waves of a river in a flood, or of the sea in a storm; Clydes.

I' the mirk in a stound, wi' rainir' sound,
Aspait the river rase;
An' wi' swash and swow, the angry jow
Cam lasha' down the braes.

Marm. of Clyde, Edin. Mag., May, 1820, p. 423, 452.

A.-S. swog, sonus, bonibus; frigor; a variation of swog, id. Swog-an, is also used for swog-an, sonare, cum sonitu irruere. Swow is thus originally the same with Souch, q. v., and with O. E. Swough, sound, noise, used by Chaucer.

To Swow, v. n. To emit such a sound, ibid. Edin. Mag. ut sup.

To SWOWM, SWOME, v. n. To swim.

"And the convoyar of thaim sall see & consydder gif thar be ony fische scowmand thar for the tym." Aberd. Reg. A. 1538.

To SWUFF, v. n. 1. To breathe high in sleep, Ettr. For.; pron. Swoof.

"I was—keeping a good look out a' round about, and Will he was swuffing and sleeping." Perils of Man, ii. 256.

A.-S. swef-ian, sopire; swefod, "fast or sound asleep," Somner.

2. To whistle on a low key, or under the breath, ibid. V. SOUF, v.

3. To move past in a whizzing way, Ettr. For.

SWUFF, SWOOF, s. The act of whizzing, ibid.

Probably from A.-S. swif-an, circumrotari; a rotatory motion often producing a whizzing sound.

[SWY, s. A swing, Shetl.; the local pron. of sway, swee, q. v.]

[To SWY, v. a. and n. To swing, ibid.]

SWYCHT, adj. [Errat. for Wycht, stout, q. v.]

And for thair is na hors in this land
Swa swycht, na yett sa weill at hand,
Tak him as off thine awyne hewid,
As I had gevyn thairto na reid.

Barbour, ii. 126, MS.

SWYK, s. Fraud, deceit. V. SWICK.

To SWYKE, v. a. To cause to stumble, to bring to the ground.

With a swap of a sward he swathel him swykes,
He stroke of the stele-hede, streite there he stode.
The faire fole fondred, and fel to the ground.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 16.

A.-S. swic-an, facere ut offendat.

[SWYLE, s. A bog, Banffs.; swylie, boggy.]

[SWYLK, pron. Such, Barbour, i. 85.]

[SWYNG, s. A swinging blow; also, a swing, Barbour, xv. 188, xvii. 574.]

SWYNGYT, Barbour, viii. 307. Ed. Pink.

For thair that fyrst assemblyt wer,
Swyngyt, and faucht full sturdely.

But in MS. it is fwyngyt, i.e., foined, pushed; as in Edit. 1620, fonyed. Foin is from O. Fr. foine, a sword. V. Dict. Trev.

[SWYNGEOUR, s. V. SWEYNGEOUR.

[SWYPE, s. and v. Same with Swig, q. v., Banffs.]

SWYPES, s. pl. Brisk small beer.

"The twopenny is undeniable; but it is small swypes—small swypes—more of hop than malt—with your leave I'll try your black bottle." Redgauntlet, i. 313.

This term might originate from C.B. swyff, spuma, cremor, (Davies, Boxhorn;) or, according to Owen, swyff, yeast; q. beer that carries a good deal of foam,

"a reemin' bicker," S. Or, it might be traced to A.-S. swip-an, Isl. swip-a, citō, agere, agitare; to which Germ. schwips, citō, is obviously allied.

SWYRE, s. The neck; also, a declination in a hill, &c. V. SWARE.

SWYTH, s. Used for Suth, E. Sooth, truth.

Bot to sa swyth, thair fled nocht all.

Barbour, B. 7, 962, Ed. 1820.

To "say the truth." This might, however, be a mistake of the copier, casually giving the orthography of the adv. which signifies quickly.

SWYTHIN, adj. Swedish; or, from Sweden.

"Ane hundreth *Swyth*in buirdis of portage;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1541, V. 17.

This seems equivalent to the language of our old Book of Rates; "Swaden boards, the hundreth," &c. A. 1611.

[SYB, adj. Akin, Barbour, xiii. 511. V. SIB.]

[SYCHT, s. and v. V. SIGHT.]

[SYCHT, s. Errat. for Fycht, fight, Barbour, ii. 388, MS.]

SYCHTIS, s. pl. [The front parts of a gown, coat, &c. V. FORBREIST.]

"Item, ane schort gown of sad cramasy velvott, lynit with quhyt tasslateis, the sychtis with quhyt letuis." Invent. A. 1542, p. 100, 101. V. FOIRSCHT.

[SYDE, adj. Wide. V. SIDE.]

SYDESMAN, s. One who takes part with another, an abettor.

"Be it kend, &c., me, Thomas of Killpatrick, laird of Clouseburne, and sydesman to ane honourable lord, John Lord Somervill, for all the dayes of my life; and obleidges and binds me to the said lord, be the faith of my body," &c. Memorie of the Somervills, i. 234.

Syde, as conjoined with man, is evidently used in the sense of Teut. sijde, pars, factio.

SYDIS, s. pl. Cuts of flesh, Doug. Virgil. V. SCHIDE.

[SYDLINGIS, adv. V. SIDELINS.]

[SYE, SYER, s. A sieve or strainer for milk, Clydes.; syer, Shetl.]

SYE, s. The sea.

—To Acheron ruin down that hellis sy. — Doug. Virgil, 227, 44.

SYE, s. A seath or coalfish.

"The fishes commonly caught on the coast are—lythe, sy.—Syes under one year old are called cuddies." P. Portree, Invern. Statist. Acc., xvi. 149. V. SEATH.

SYES, s. pl. The herb called in E. chives, or cives, S. Allium Schoenoprasum, Linn.

Fr. sire, cire. O.E. "Cyues, herbe." Prompt. Parv.

SYFF, s. A sieve. In S. it is generally pron. q. siv.

Que quidem Cana de frumento, super fundum dictarum terrarum crescenti bene, et sufficienter cum cribro et tiretantro, vulgariter loquendo syff and ridyl, cribrato, mundato, et debite depurato, prout et quemadmodum frumentum quod deferretur communi foro vendendum, preparatur et mundatur Abbati et conventui predictis. Regist. Scon., p. 92. Macfarl. MS.

O. E. sife, A.-S. syfe, Alem. sef, Belg. sif, id.

To SYILL, v. a. To ceil. V. SILE, v.

SYIS, SYISS, SYSS, SEIS, s. pl. Times; generally used in composition, as fele syis, oft syss.

So thik with strakis this campoun maist strang
With athir hand fele syis at Dares dang.
Doug. Virgil, 143, 14.

Lo how hardyment tane sa sudandly,
And drewyn to the end scharply,
May get ofsyss unlikely thingis.
Cam to rycht fayr and gud endingis.
Barbour, ix. 634, MS.

Wyntown uses fyve syis for five times.

And the leit syde lang sall thou but dout
Cirkill and saile mony seis about.
Doug. Virgil, 81, 55.

V. SYITH.

SYISS, SYSE, s. Sice, the number of six at dice; from Fr. six.

Sum tynis syiss, and winnis but ess.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 164.

"Thus Chancer, Monk's Tale, l. 687. 'Sice fortune is touned to an ace.'" Lord Hailes, p. 295. Note. Hence to sett apoun syse, to set on a throw at dice, to play at dice in general.

Sum ledis langis on the land, for luf or for lak,
To sembly with thare chafis, and sett apoun syse.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 14.

SYISSTRIE, s. [Lit. the measure-stick; the measure for the boll or barrel.]

—"To apply to the use of the said brucht with the syiss boll and syistrie." Acts Cha. I., ut sup., p. 627.

SYITH, SYTH, s. Times; feil syith, many times.

Set I feil syith sic twa monethis in fere
Wrote neur ane wound, nor nicht the volume sterc.
Doug. Virgil, 434, 19.

Full fele syth, and weill fele syth, a great many times, very often.

Nocht for thi full fele syth,
Thai had full gret default off mete.
Barbour, iii. 470, MS.

Mr. Pinkerton expl. syth, easy; in reference perhaps to the following passage—

—And saw it wes not syth to ta
The toune, quhill sik defens wes mad.
Barbour, xvii. 454.

But here it is syth, in MS. A.-S. sithe, Moes.-G. sintha, vices, used in composition. Twaimesintha, twice; sibansintha, seven times.

SYKARIS. R. synkaris, i.e., his who sinks or cuts.

—"He gevand to the kingis grace fre of ilk punde of cuneyt money xx schillingis, except the wardenis fe, the sayaris fe, and the sykaris of the irlis fee," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 317. V. SAYAR.

[SYKES, SYKIS, s. pl. Trenches; rills, Barbour, xi. 300, xix. 742. Isl. sik, a trench.]

SYKKIS, s. pl. Perhaps sacks.

"To deliuer ij sauld treis [barrels for holding salmon] and ij sykkis within xv daies." Aberd. Reg. V. 16, p. 377.

To SYLE, v. a. 1. To deceive, to circumvent.

Dissimulance was bissie me to sytle,
And Fair Calling did oft upon me smyle.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 16.

"Surround, encompass;" Lord Hailes. But the character, in the personification, fixes the meaning as given above.

—Certis, we wemen
We set us all fra the sighte to sytle men of treuth:
We dule for na evil deidis sa it be device halden.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 16.

Thus subtelie the king was sytilit,
And all the pepill wer begyilit.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 64.

"Choose ye this day, whether with humbled Esther you will wisely resolve to prove constant,—or if you will—like Peter overwhelmed with fear, adventure to seek your comforte and quietnesse in the sway of time, as though the Lord could be syled, as Absalom was with Chusaye's policie." Epistle of a Christian Brother, A. 1624, p. 5.

Allied to A.-S. syl-an, to betray. Isl. sel-ia, Su.-G. sale-ia, to deliver into the hands of another.

2. Elsewhere it may be rendered, betray.

Sen that I go begyild
With ane that faythe has syld.
Murning Maidin, Maitland Poems, p. 205.

i.e., delivered up faith, acted a false and treacherous part.

SYLERIN, SYLING, s. The ceiling.

"Yow may sie, in the cathedrall church of Aberdeen, the noblemen of Scotland ranked in order vpon the sylerin of the roof of the bodie of the church, wher the Earle of Southerland is placed before Crawford." Gordon's Hist. Earls of Sutherl., p. 55.

—"The olde syling that was once fast joynted together with nailes will begin to cling, and then to gape," &c. Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 812.

This has some resemblance of Teut. solderinghe, Belg. zoldering, the ceiling.

To SYLL, v. a. To cover. V. SILE, id.

SYLOUR, s. [Canopy], Gawan and Gol., 66. V. DEIR.

[Selure occurs in Green Knt., l. 76, and seloure in Awnt. Arth., 326.]

SYLL, s. A seat of dignity.

Had never [ever] leld of this land, that had been levand,
Maid ony feute before, freik, to fullil,
I suld sickirly myself be consentand,
And seik to your soverane, seymly on syll.
Gawan and Gol., ii. 10.

Than Schir Gologras the gay, in gully maneir,
Said to thai segis, semely on syll,
How wourschipful Wayne had wonnin him on weir.
Ibid., iv. 16.

A.-S. sylla, "sella, a seat, a chaire, a bench;" Somner. Syll, as applied to Arthur, may denote his throne; as respecting his nobles, the honourable seats provided for them; seymly on syll, the dignified appearance made both by the king and his lords.

To SYLLAB, v. a. To divide into syllables, S.

C. B. silleb-u, to syllabyze, to form the elements of speech.

[SYMER, s. Summer. V. SIMMER.]

SYMION-BRODIE, s. Expl. "a toy for children; a cross stick;" Gall. Encycl.

If the name has not been originally that of a tradesman who made such toys, the latter part of the word may be from Brod, a board. Teut. simmen signifies camous or crooked.

[SYMONET. A mistake in Edin. MS. for Symon het, called Simon, Barbour, ix. 10.]

[SYMPILL, adj. Low-born; inoffensive. V. SIMPILL.]

SYMPYLLY, adv. Poorly, meanly, in low and straitened circumstances.

—Soue to Paryss can he ga
And levyt thar full sympylly.
Barbour, l. 331, MS.

[SYN, adv. V. SYNE.]

[SYND, v. and s. V. SIND.]

[SYNDINGS, s. pl. Slops; properly rinsings, S.]

SYND, s. Aspect, appearance.

Quhair boun ye to, my friend, sche sais,
Astonishtly me think ye gais,
Tell me quhat mouis your mynd.
Gif ye gang wrang, I sall ye gyde,
Apearandly thou wanderst wyde,
I se weill be your synd.

Burel's Pūg., Watson's Coll., ii. 37.

Su.-G. syn, facies, A.-S. onsien, onsyne, vultus, aspectus.

[SYNDIR, SYNDRI, adj. Sundry, various; separate, Barbour, v. 106, ix. 441.

SYNDRELY, adv. Asunder, separately, Ibid., xii. 138.

SYNDRYNES, s. State of separation. V. under SINDER.]

SYNE, SYNDE, SYN, adv. 1. Afterwards, since, S.

—Thai wele sone gat of thair bed
A knaw child, throw our Lordis grace,
That eftre hys gud eldfadyr wes
Callyt Robert; and syne wes king.

Barbour, xiii. 695, MS.

Ane clene sacrifice and offerandis made I syne,
Into the fyris yettand sence and wyne.

Doug. Virgil, 73, 27.

It occurs in the same sense O.E.

Rowen drank, as her list,
And gave the king: sine him kist.

R. Brunne. V. Ellis, Spec., i. 116.

The spirit said, Think on the rich man,
Quhilk all tyme in his lustis ran,
Body and saull he loissit than,
And synde was buryit into hell,
As Jesus Christ hes said him sell.

Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 25, 26.

Synde corresponds with Teut. sind.

2. Late, as contradistinguished from soon.

"What I know I shall ever give you an account of soon or syne." Baillie's Lett., i. 355.
i.e., sooner or later.

Each rogue, altho' with Nick he should combine,
Shall be discovered either soon or syne.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 313.

Notwithstanding the similarity of A.-S. sarne, segnis, tardus, to sene, nimis segnis, too slow; this must certainly be viewed as originally the same with sen, prep. For this, as equivalent to E. since, merely denotes the time that has elapsed after some date or event referred to. Teut. sind, Germ. sint, post, postea. Wachter gives sint as synonym. with seit, which he deduces from A.-S. sith-ian, ire, venire, rendering it, transitus in aliud tempus. A.-S. sith, as signifying time, might indeed have this origin; Su.-G. sen signifies both post and seno. V. SEN.

Our phrase sen syne may be viewed as a tautology consisting of two words radically the same, and, in fact, including no other idea than what is conveyed by sen; although the latter preserves more of the form of A.-S. sith-than, (after then), being immediately contr. from sythyn. Or, it may be considered as compounded of sen, conj. since, and the adv. syne, in the sense of then, q. since, after-then, or after that time. Still, however, it is tautological.

Syne, in the phrase lang syne, and auld lang syne, is used as if it were a s. To a native of this country, it is very expressive; and conveys a soothing idea to the mind, as recalling "the memory of joys that are past."

Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
And days o' lang syne?

—We'll tak a cup o' kindness yet,
For auld lang syne. Burns, iv. 123.

SYNE, conj. Since, seeing, S.

Bot Lordis, gywe your curtesy,——
Syne that I set my besynes
Tyl al yhoure plesans generally.

Wynston, i. Prol. 52.

Barbour uses sen in this sense.

SYNETEEN, adj. Seventeen, S. B.

SYNING-GLASS, s. A looking-glass or mirror, Roxb.

Su.-G. syn, inspectio, syn-a, inspicere; Isl. syn-az, videre; Dan. syn-er, id., syne, a view, a sight.

SYNLE, adv. Seldom, S. B. V. SEINDLE.

[SYNNYS, s. pl. Sins, Barbour, xx. 180.]

SYNOPARE, SYNOPEIR, s. Cinnabar.
Doug. Virgil, 400, 7.

SYOUR, s. Apparently a scion, a tender shoot.

"The designation of the person performer, is by two titles. 1. That lion of the tribe of Juda. 2. That root or syour of David.—Hec is the root or syour of David, by Juda and David to shew the true Messias promised of their seed." Forbes on Revel., p. 27.

[To SYPE, v. n. 1. To ooze, to drip, S. V. SIPE.]

2. To sip or drain up, to wipe, Clydes., Shetl.]

SYPINS, s. pl. The liquor that has oozed from an insufficient cask, S.

[SYPER, s. A cypress, Lyndsay, Exper. and Court., l. 712.]

SYPLE, s. "A saucy, big-bellied person;" Gall. Enc.

Belg. sepel-en, signifies to drop; Teut. sijfel-en, to whistle; Isl. seift-a, to be wheeled about. But as the definition includes ideas so little connected, it is scarcely possible to form any probable conjecture as to the origin. C. B. syplawt might seem to correspond with the latter idea, as it signifies "tending to heap together," from syplaw, accrevare.

To SYPYRE, SUPIR, v. n. To sigh.

Than softlie did I souufe and sleep, —
Sypyring, quhils wyring
 My tender body to.

Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 34.

My spreit supirs and sichts maist sair.

Burel, ibid., ii. 48.

V. REMENT.

Fr. souspir-er, Lat. suspir-are, id.

[SYR, s. Sire, lord, Barbour, i. 283.]

SYRE, s. A title of honour. V. SCHIR.

SYRE, s. A sewer, S. syver, sometimes pron. as syre.

He and I lap o're many a syre.

Watson's Coll., l. 12.

V. SYVER.

SYSE, SYSS-BOLLE, s. A duty exacted at some harbours.

"Tolles, customes, syse bolles, port harberie, office of water bailliarie," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, Vol. V. 94.

Perhaps from Teut. assijac, vectigal; q. assise-boll, or "boll paid as duty." L. B. sis-a, Hisp. sis-a, tributum.

SYSE, s. Six at dice. V. SYSS.

[SYSTEME, s. A cistern, Lyndsay, Exper. and Court., l. 4945.]

[SYTE, s. Grief, sorrow, Lyndsay, The Dreame, l. 333.]

SYTH, s. pl. Times. V. SYTH.

[SYTH, SYTHENS, SITTENS, conj. Although, since, seeing, S. V. SITH.]

[SYTHYN, adv. Afterwards, Barbour, ii. 85.]

To SYTHE, v. a. To strain any liquid, Larnarks. Sey, Sile, synon.; from the same origin as SEY, q. v.

SYTHOLL, s. An instrument of music. V. CITHOLIS.

[SYV, SIV, s. A sieve, S.]

[SYVER, s. A covered drain. V. SIVER.]

SYVEWARM, s. [Errat. for Fyswarin, a corr. of Fitz-Warren.]

The Syrewarin was takyn thar.

Bot sa rad was Richard of Clar,

That he fled to the south countré.

Barbour, xv. 75, MS.

"Editions read, 'The Sicaryn.' I cannot interpret either." Pink. N. The Edin. Edit., 1658, reads syve-waryne.

[This mistake of the Edin. MS. is corrected by the Cambridge MS. which has fizwaryne, the vulgar pron. of Fitz-Warren. As this reading makes the passage clear, Dr. Jamieson's elaborate note, which was founded on a mistaken interpretation, has been deleted. V. Prof. Skeat's Edit. of Barbour, p. 594.]

SYWEILL, adj. For civil; apparently used in the sense of reasonable.

"A syweill mendis;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

To SYZZIE, v. a. "To shake. He never syzzied me, he never shook me;" Gall. Encycl.

Allied perhaps to Isl. syst-a, actito, factito; or to Teut. mys-en, murmurare, Su.-G. sus-a, id., the wind, whose action these terms respect, being often the cause of shaking. Or shall we view it as corr. from C. B. yegyd-w, yegwyd-w, to shake, yegyt-iaw, to shake violently?

T.

TA, art. The, Dumfr.; Te, [West of S.]

Most probably this is merely a provincial corruption. It must be observed, however, that by Norman-Saxon writers te is used as the article in all the cases; as te king, rex, the king; te earl, comes, the earl, &c. V. Lye in vo.

TA, adj. One; used after the; [as, the ta—thet a, the one.]

Thusgat, throw dowbill wnderstanding,
That bargane come till sic ending,
That the ta part dissawyt was.

Barbour, iv. 306, MS

The Quene hir self fast by the altare standis,
Haldand the melder in hyr deuote handis,
Hyr ta fute bare—

Doug. Virgil, 118, 15.

[TA, TI, TO; the sign of the inf.; as, ta gang, to go; also, as a prep., as, “gang ta the toun”; and as an adv., as, “put ta the door,” i.e., shut the door, West of S., Shetl.]

TA AND FRA. To and from, on this and on that side.

Bot the slouth hund maid styntyn thar;
And waweryt lang tyme ta and fra;
That he na certane gate couth ga.

Barbour, vii. 41, MS.

To TA, v. a. To take. The v. frequently occurs in this form, even when it is not used metri causa.

His men he dressyt, thaim agane,
And gert thaim stoutly ta the playn.

Barbour, xiv. 263, MS.

To, Edit. Pink., take, Edit. 1620.

—We may nocht eschew the fycht,
Bot gif we foully ta the flycht.

Ibid. xv. 350, MS.

V. also xviii. 238.

TAA, s. A thread; [a tough fibre or filament, a fibrous root], Shetl.; Isl. tae, filum; Dan. tave, a filament, a string.

[TAAIE, adj. Fibrous, full of fibres, ibid.]

[TAAND, s. A brand of fire, a burning peat, Shetl. Sw. tända, to kindle, Dan. tände.]

TAANLE, s. V. TAWNLE.

[To TAAT, TAUT, v. a. and n. To mat, to entangle, Clydes., Shetl.]

[TAAT, TAUT, s. A mat; matting; pl. tauts, thick, coarse worsted for making rugs, Shetl.]

VOL. IV.

[TAATIT, TAUTIT, adj. Matted; as, tuatit hair, S.; also, made of taats or tufts. V. TAAT, s.]

[TAATIE, s. A potatoe, Clydes., Shetl.]

In Shetland the pit dug in the field to preserve potatoes from the frost is called a Taatie-hock; and the bunker or corner in a house where the potatoes are kept is a Taatie-kro. V. Gl.]

To TAAVE, TYAAVE, v. a. and n. 1. To make any thing tough by working it with the hands, Moray, Banffs. pron. q. Tyaave. V. TAW.

[2. To tease out, as oakum; also, to caulk or close a rent by stuffing; part. pr. taarin, Shetl.]

3. To touse, to tumble, to wrestle in sport, Gl. Surv. Moray; as, “I saw them tyaavin’ and wrestlin’ thegither.”

This sense corresponds with an idea suggested by an acute correspondent in Moray, that Tyaave of the north is the same with O. E. Tew, to lug, or pull; Bailey. It seems to have still more affinity to A. Bor. “Teave, to paw and sprawl about with the arms and legs;” Grose. The pronunciation of Yorks. must be nearly, if not entirely, the same; for Marshall gives the term in this form: “To Teeave, to paw and sprawl,” &c. Prov. Yorks.

• In sense 3. it nearly resembles that of Lincolns. Tacr, as given by Grose. “Sick people are said to tave with their hands when they catch at any thing, or wave with their hands when they want the use of reason.” This must certainly be viewed as only a variety of A. Bor. Teave. V. TAAVIN.

4. To ravel, Moray. [Tyaven-skate, skate reduced to filaments, Mearns.]

This v., in its primary sense, would seem to claim affinity with Dan. tave, a filament, a string; taved, stringy; q. to draw out into strings. Baden renders tave, stupas, tow, hards, ockham.

TYAAVE, s. [Palaver, bustle, trouble], difficulty, pinch; as, to do any thing with a tyaave, I have a great tyaave, I have much difficulty; applied to means of subsistence, &c. Banffs., Shetl.

TAAVE-TAES, s. pl. The name given to pit-fir, used in Moray and the neighbouring counties, for making ropes, being split into fibres and twisted. Denominated from its toughness, taes, toes.

The term, as thus used, has considerable appearance of affinity to Fr. tuyau, a reed, also, a stalk. Palsgr. expl. tyar, tuyau, “the drie stalke of humlockes or burres;” B. iii. F. 43, a. Westmorel. taus, wood split thin to make baskets of.

TAAVIN, TAWIN, s. Wrestling, tumbling. Aberd. V. v.

"By this time the gutters was coming in at the coach-door galore, an' I was lying taavin an' wainlin under lucky-minny like a sturdie hoggie that has fa'en into a peat-pot." Journal from London, p. 3. 4. V. VOGIE.

Westmorel. taavin or teavin, kicking (Gl.), is perhaps originally the same.

Tent. touu-en, agitare, subigere, Su.-G. tag-a, to struggle, A.-S. taw-ian, to beat.

TABBERN, TABERN, s. A kind of drum.

"When they cam nere the towne, hard the common bell and tabbern, and withal reteirit so fierslie as man persuing, while they lost summe weapins by the waye." Lett. Jo. Wood, Sadler's Papers, i. 618. V. TALBRONE.

TABERNER, s. [A drummer.] "Commoun tabernar and swescher;" Aberd. Reg.

"Whissels for Taberners, the dozen—xxiii s." Rates, A. 1611.

[In 1574, the Town Council of Aberdeen ordered John Cowper, their Swescher, to play on the Almany Quissail, with a servant playing on the tabourine. E. pipe and tabour.]

TABBET. To Tak Tabbet, to take an opportunity of having any advantage that may come in one's way, Ayr.

"I'll tae tabbit wi' you anither time." Edin. Mag., April 1821, p. 352.

Fr. tabut-er, to butt or push; to trouble, to molest; tabut, trouble, disquiet. Roquefort renders the verb, Quereller avec chaleur.

TABBIT, adj. Tabbit mutch, "a cap with corners folded up," Gl.

Her mither ware a tabbit mutch,
Her father was an honest dyker,
She's a black-eyed wanton witch,
Ye winna shaw me mony like her.

Lizzy Liberty, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 156.

Prob. allied to Isl. tepp-a, Su.-G. tapp-a, cohibere; q. "having the lappets confined," or "tucked up."

TABEAN BIRBEN. [Prob., made of Tabian ivory.]

And wha will kame thy bonny head
With a Tabean birben kame?
And wha will be my bairn's father,
Till love Gregory come hame?
—Myself will kame his bonny head
With a Tabean birben kame;
Myself will be the bairn's father
Till love Gregory come hame.

Urban's Scots Songs, B. I. p. 13.

V. also Herd's Coll., i. 149, 150.

The first word seems to denote the place where these combs were made. Fr. Tabian denotes of, or belonging to Tabia in Italy.

Prob., birben is a corr. of evourbane, the term used by Gavin Douglas for ivory? If so, Tabean birben kame must denote "an ivory comb made at Tabia."

TABELLION, TABELLIOUN, s. A scrivener, a notary; a word introduced into our laws from Lat. tabellio, id.

"It is thoct expedient—that his hienes may mak notaris & tabellionis, quahis instrumentis sal haue ful faith in all contractis ciuile within the realme." Parl. Ja. III., A. 1469, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 95. Tabellionis, Edit. 1566.

* TABERNACLE, s. To keep up the tabernacle. 1. To continue in a full habit of body, not to lose flesh; as, "For a' the sair wark he speaks about, he ay keeps up the tabernacle."

2. To use means for keeping in full habit, S.

This is a common but low phraseology, which, prob., has originated from the figurative use of the word, in our version, as signifying the body, 2 Cor. v. 1., 2 Pet. i. 13.

[TABERNER, s. V. under TABBERN.]

TABETS, TEBBITS, s. Bodily sensation, feeling. My fingers lost the tebbits, i.e., they became quite benumbed, so that I had no feeling, S. B.; pron. Taipit or Teppit, Fife, Loth.

C. B. tyb-to, tyb-yye, are expl. sentio, I feel—Lhuyd; but seem properly to apply to the mind, existimare, putare, opinari; Davies.

TABETLESS, TAPETLESS, TEBBITLESS, adj.

1. Not as expl. by Shirr. and Sibb., "without strength," but destitute of sensation, benumbed, S. B. Teppitless, Fife, Loth.

But toll and heat so overpower'd her pith,
That she grew tabetless and swart therewith.

Ross's Helenore, p. 25.

2. "Heedless, foolish," Gl. Burns, S. O.

The tapetless ramfeel'd hizzie,
She's saft at best, and something lazy.

Burns, iii. 243.

This is undoubtedly the same word.

TABILLIS, s. pl. Boards for playing draughts or chess.

"Item, ane pair of tabillis of silvir, ourgilt with gold, indentit with jasp and cristalline, with table men and chess men of jasp and cristalline." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 49.

It seems very doubtful, indeed, if the term tables was ever commonly applied to draughts. Phillips confines it to dice and chess. While Gern. taefel is a very ancient word, in its general sense corresponding with Lat. tabula, it had been very early applied both to dice and chess. Thus A.-S. taefel signifies a die, and also the game of chess; and taefel-mon, a chess man; taef-ian, "to play at dice or tables;" Somner. Su.-G. tafwel also signifies a die, (Isl. taft, id.) while skafstafwel, changed from skachtafwel, denotes a chess-board; from schach, a Persic word, signifying a king, retained in modern Shah, and also in Arab. Sheik; taefla, tessera ludere, Isl. tefta, id. Thorbiorn sat a taefli; Thorbernus alcae vacavit; Gretia, c. 64.

TABIN, s. A sort of waved silk, E. Tabby; Ital. tabin-o.

"Tabins of silke, the elle—v.l." Rates, A. 1611 In Edit. 1670, Tabies is substituted, p. 58.

TABLE, TABLES. 1. The name given to the permanent council held at Edinburgh for managing the affairs of the Covenanters during the reign of Charles I.

"Montrose answered, their warrant was from the table (for so were their councils in Edinburgh now called) requiring him also and them that were present to number their men, and have them armed, and in readiness to assist the table." Spalding, i. 103.

"The marquis procures a safe-conduct or pass from the tables to his son Ludowick (who then was at Strathboggie) to come to him wherever he was." Ibid. i. 299.

This council had received its name from a green table at which the members sat. Spalding sometimes designates it in these very terms.

Another reason has been given thus:

"As each rank consulted by themselves, they were called the Tables." Bower's Hist. Univ. Edin., i. 184-5.

[2. The table spread for the Sacrament of the Supper; the Communion, S.]

TABLE-SEAT, s. A square seat in a church S.; apparently so named from the table in the middle, round which those who occupy it are seated.

TABLET, TABILLET, s. A small enclosure for holding reliques.

"Targattis, tabilletis, and hingaris with braislettis, in the said Henryes keeping."—"Item, ane tablet with ane floure delice of dyamonttis with thrie uther dyamonttis and rubie."—Item, ane tablet with the image of our lady." Inventories, A. 1552, p. 65.

Du Cange gives L.B. tabulet-a as denoting a small square box for holding the pix; and tabulet-us, for one in which reliques were kept. He describes them as adorned with precious stones, and one as having a Camacheu, apparently a Cameo.

TABLET, TABLIT A FACE. Synon. Fast, Fassit, q. v.

"Tua grit diamantis, ane tabled, & ane uther tablet a face. And a quheit sapheir tablit a face." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 265.

In the parallel inventory, it is tallie a face, p. 291.

Ce lapidaire scait fort bien tailler les diamans en facettes, en tables, au cadran. Dict. Trev. vo. Tailler. Facette, petite face. Latus, angulus. Les lunettes qui multiplient les objets sont faites de verres taillés à facettes. Les diamans se taillent à facettes, ou en tables.—Facetter, 1. Terme de Diamantaire, tailler à facette. Scalpere in varia latera.

This is certainly the same with FAST, FASSIT, q. v. Fr. facette, cut in angles.

TABOURS, s. pl. A beating, a drubbing, Upp. Clydes.

The v. to Tabour occurs once in our translation, in regard to smiting the breast, in token of great sorrow. But I scarcely think that it is used, as in S., as signifying to drub. V. TOOBER.

TABRAGH, s. A term applied to animal food, that is nearly in the state of carrion, Fife; perhaps corr. from CABROCH, q. v.

TABURNE, s. A tabour. V. ROBIN-HOOD.

To TACH, TATCH, v. a. To arrest, to attach.

As he thus raid in gret angry and teyne,
Off Inglissmen thar folowed him fyfteen,
Wicht, wallyt men, that towart him couth draw,
With a maser, to tach hym to the law.

Wallace, vii. 304, MS.

Tack, Edit. Perth; teach, Edit. 1648, 1673.

"Those men,—being challanged of sacrilegious guiltines, will offer themselves no otherwayes to tryall, then, as if a cunning and long covered thiefe tatched with innumerable fanges, and having all his houses stuffed with stolen wares, yet should partly protest, that in so farre as he had bene once honest, and of all men accounted so: hee ought therefore to be reputed so still, notwithstanding of any thing found by him, except it may bee cleared, what hour of his lyfe he did first begin to steale, in what place, and from what persounes." Forbes's Discoverie of Perverse Deceit, p. 6.

This is also O.E. "Tach-yn or arrestyn. Arretto.—Tachinge or arrestinge. Arrestacio." Prompt. Parv.

Most probably abbrev. from Fr. attach-er; L. B. attach-are, which, according to Hickee, primarily signifies, to seize by the hands of lictors or officers.

TACHT, adj. Tight, tense, close, S. B. Sw. tact, id.

[To TACK, v. a. 1. To take, to lease. V. TAK.

2. To hold, fasten, fix; to fix by means of small nails, S.]

TACK, TACKE, TAK, TAKK, s. 1. The act of taking; particularly used to denote violent seizure.

"—Certane gentilmen—heas vait to tak Caupis, of the quhilk tak thair, and exactioun thair of, our soverane Lord, and his thre estatiss knew na perfite nor resonabill cause." Acts Ja. IV. 1489, c. 35, Edit. 1566. Tacke, Edit. Murray, c. 18.

2. The act of catching fishes; [also, the quantity or number caught]; as, a gude tack, success in catching, S.

"He [the King] suld haue of euery boate, that passis to the draue and slayis herring, an thousand herring of ilk tack that halis, viz., of the lambmes tack, of the winter tack, and of the Lentron tack." Skene, Verb. Sign., vo. Assisa.

"This ile hath also salt water loches, to wit, Ear, ane little small loche with guid tack of herringes.—Then is Lochfync, quherein ther is a guid tack of herringes." Monroe's Isles, p. 18.

Isl. tek-ia, captura, G. Andr.

3. A slight hold or fastening; [also, that which holds or fastens]. It hings by a tack, It has a very slight hold, S., from the E. r. tack.

4. The lease of a house or farm; also, possession, S.

"—Suppois the Lordis sell or annaly that land or landis, the takaris sall remaine with thair takkis, vnto the ischie of thair termis, quhais handis that euer thay landis cum to, for siclyke maill, as thay tuik thame for." Acts Ja. II., 1449, c. 17, Ed. 1566. Tackr, Skene.

TACKET, TACK, s. A small broad-headed nail, S.

—Johnny cobbles up his shoe
Wi' tackets large and lang.

Morison's Poems, p. 47.

V. CLAMP, s.

The idea of lang is not quite correspondent.

Evidently a deriv. from E. tack, id., [Gael. tacaid, a tack, Breton tack, a nail.]

WHISKEY-TACKET, s. A pimple, supposed to proceed from intemperance, S.

[To TACKET, v. a. To drive tacketts into boots or shoes; to fasten with tacketts, S.]

[TACKETIE, TACKETIT, adj. Filled with tacketts, S.]

[TACKIE, s. The name of a game in which one is appointed to pursue and catch the others; generally played in a stack-yard. The pursuer is also called a tackie, Banffs.]

[TACKIN, s. A state of excitement, Clydes., Shetl.]

TACKIT. Tongue-tackit, adj. 1. Having the tongue fastened by a small film, which must sometimes be cut in infants, to enable them to suck, S.

2. Tongue-tied, either as signifying silence, or an impediment in speech, S. He was na tongue-tackit with them, i.e., he spoke freely.

[TACKNE, s. An old ridiculous person, Shetl.]

TACKSMAN, s. 1. One who holds a lease from another, S.

"An assignation by the tenant without the landlords consent, though it infers no forfeiture of the right of tack itself against the tacksman, can transmit no right from him to the assignee." Erskine's Instit., B. ii., T. 6, s. 31.

"To direct furth lettres in his hienes name and auctoritie, chargeing all Takkismen of the teyndis and londis—to compeir befor thaim," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 553.

2. In the Highlands, used in a peculiar sense, as denoting a tenant of a higher class.

"In this country, when a man takes a lease of a whole farm, and pays L.50 sterling, or upwards, of yearly rent, he is called a tacksman; when two or more join about a farm, and each of them pays a sum less than L.50, they are called tenants." P. Lochgoil-head, Argyles. Statist. Acc., iii. 186, N.

"By tacksmen is understood such as lease one or more farms; and by tenants, such as rent only an half, a fourth, or an eighth of a farm." P. S. Knapdale, Argyles. Statist. Acc., xix. 323, N.

TACKLE, s. An arrow, S.B. V. TAKYLL.

[TADE, s. A toad, S. V. TAID.]

SHEEP-TADE, s. The sheep-louse, the tick, Gall.; synon. Ked.

"Sheep-tade or sheep-tick, an insect which feeds on the blood of sheep;" Gall. Encycl.

TAE, adj. One, S.

"Ye'll—only hae to carry the tac end o' the hand-barrow to the water." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 161.

A. Bor. Tae the one; as, "tea hand, the one hand, North." Gross. V. TA, adj.

TAE, s. 1. The toe, S. A. Bor.

2. The prong of a fork, leister, &c.

A.-S. Isl. ta, Dan. taa, Su.-G. taa, (pron. to), id.

3. Applied to the branch of a drain, Aberd.

"Where several branches meet, near the head of a principal drain, which are provincially named its toes or taes, (from some resemblance to the letter T), these branches generally enter it at an obtuse angle." Agr. Surv. Aberd. p. 42.

Isl. tae, stirps, ramus; also expl. by Dan. gren, i.e., a branch.

[TAE'D, TAE'T, adj. Toed; pronged, S.]

THREE-TAE'D, adj. Having three prongs, S.

An awfu' scythe, out owre ae shouter,

Clear-dangling hang;

A three-tae'd leister on the ither

Lay, large and lang.

Burns' Works, iii. 42.

TAE'S-LENGTH, s. Used to denote the shortest distance conceivable, S.; [tae-breedth, tae-breeth, is also used, Clydes., Banffs.]

"Am I no gann to the ploy, then?"—"And what for should ye? to dance a' night, I'ae warrant, and no to be fit to walk your tae's-length the morn, and we have ten Scots miles afore us?" Redgauntlet, i. 216.

TAE, TA, TI, prep. To; written in this manner to express the pronunciation, S. O.

"Ye'll soon see the want of education whan ye gang tae the uncos." Writer's Clerk, i. 122.

Teut. te, id.; ad. a, in.

To TAEN, v. a. To lay hands on the head of one who is caught in a game, Gall.

"One has to run with hands locked, and taen the others;" Gall. Encycl., p. 349.

"When schoolboys catch one another in their games, they lay their hands on the heads of the one [those] caught; this ceremony is termed taening or taking."—"After a runner is taend, he is not allowed to run any more in that game." Ibid. p. 443.

This v. seems to be merely a barbarism, formed from the abbreviated pret. or part. pa. of the v. to Take, as being a term frequently used in the sports of children.

TA'EN about, part. pa. V. TANE.

[TAET, s. A small quantity, a tuft, West of S.; a nap or soft lump, Shetl. V. TATE.]

TAFF-DYKE, s. "A fence made of turf;" Gall. Encycl.

Ae day he ram'd his han' in a fumart hole,
The hole was i' the auld taff-dyke.

Ibid. p. 176.

Allied perhaps to C. B. tycarch, a turf, comp. of tyer, that which overspreads, and arch, uppermost. The term taff, however, may not respect the material of which the dyke is formed, but its use as a fence against the irruption of cattle; Isl. taf-ia, Su.-G. toefwa, a, impetere.

TAFFEREL, adj. 1. Thoughtless, giddy, Ettr. For.

"Beasy Chisholm—Heh! Are ye therein? May Chisholm—where's your titty? Poor tafferel ruined tawpies?" Perils of Man, iii. 202.

2. It sometimes signifies ill-dressed, ibid.

Probably from Dan. taabe, a fool; or perhaps q. taivrel, from S. Taiver, to wander.

TAFFIE, s. Treacle mixed with flour, and boiled till it acquire consistency; a sweet-meat eaten only on Hallowe'en, Dumfr.

"A. Bor. taffy, a sort of candy made of treacle;" Gl. Brockett.

From the viscosity of this stuff, shall we suppose that the term is allied to Dan. tave, a string, a filament, taved, stringy?

TAFFIL, TAIFLE, s. A table. Now it generally denotes one of a small size, S. B.

—"There was a four-nooked taffil in manner of an altar, standing within the kirk, having standing thereupon two books, at least resembling clasped books, called blind books," &c. Spalding's Troubles, i. 23.

"Then the Earl of Errol sat down in a chair,—at a four-nooked taffil set about the fore face of the parliament, and covered with green cloth." Ibid., p. 25.

Germ. tafel. Su.-G. tafla, tabula cujuscunque generis; skriflaffa, tabula scriptoria. Hence, as would seem, A.-S. taefl, a die, because tables were used in playing at dice; Su.-G. tafeel-bord, a dice-table, tabula aleatoria, taefla, to play at dice; skaf-taefel, chess.

To TAFFLE, v. a. To tire, to wear out; Taffled, exhausted with fatigue, Fife.

Su.-G. taefl-a, signifies certare. But this is a secondary use of the verb as referring to playing at the tables, or at dice. Our term may have originally denoted the fatigue and lassitude of mind proceeding from delay and disappointment; as allied to Isl. tefi-a, morari, also impeditur.

TAFT, TAFTAN, s. A messuage or dwelling-house and ground for household uses, S. B.

"He—scrapt upo' paper at the dissolments an' tancements o' the taftens, an' bad pit to my name." H. Blyd's Contract, p. 5.

This term seems radically the same with E. toft, L. B. toftum.

TAFTEIS, s. Taffeta. Fr. taffetas, id.

"James Lord Torphechin grantit that he had ane rufe of ane reid bed of crammase velvet, freinyeit with gold and lynit with reid tafteis." Inventories, A. 1573, p. 189.

To TAG, v. a. To tie, to bind, S.

Formed perhaps from A.-S. tig-an, vincire (Benson,) or Isl. tey-ia, teig-a, distrahere, distendere. [Sw. taga, to grasp. V. TACK.]

TAG, TAGG, s. 1. The latchet of a shoe; any thing used for tying, S.

2. Any thing tied or attached; also, the end, tip, tail; as, "That's a gude tag, as the coo said o' its tail," Clydes.]

"Gif ony persoun calls and persewis ane uther for improbation of ony evident, be resoun that the seill appendit thairto is false and feinyeit, because the samin is dividit and brokin, the ane part fra the uther, for altering of the tag quhairby the samin is hungin," &c. Balfour's Pract., p. 382.

3. Any little object hanging loosely from a larger one; as, "There's a tag o' clay hingin' at your coat," S. O. It is always applied to something disagreeable and dirty.

4. The white hair on the point of the tail of a cow or stot, Moray.

5. A disease in sheep, Loth.

"A disease,—affecting the tail, has been denominated Tag. It consists of scabs and sores, situated on the under side of the tail, arising, in warm weather, from its being fouled in purging." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 434.

6. A long and thin slice of any thing; as, a tag of skate, i.e., a slice of skate hung up to be dried in the sun, S.

7. Trumpery, trifling articles.

Thus quhan thay had reukit the raggis,

To rounne thay wer inspyrit;

Tak up thair taipis, and all thair taggis,

Fure furth as thay war fyrit.

Symmye and His Bruder, Chron. S. P., i. 360.

Perhaps it may denote shreds of parchment on which pardons or indulgences were written. The language seems borrowed from a tailor's board.

[8. Fagging, troublesome labour, Shetl.]

TAGGIE, s. A cow which has the point of the tail white, S.O., Moray.

TAGGIT, TAGGED, part. adj. Applied to cattle that have the lower end or point of the tail white, Loth., Roxb., Moray, Ayr.; synon. with Tuigit. V. TAIGIE.

"Tua ky, the ane thairof blak cut-hornit, the vther broun taggit." Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

Her little tail wi' white was taggit,

Which often she in kindness waggit.

Ruickbie's Way-side Cottager, p. 178.

"If the lower part of her tail was white, she was said to be taggit." Agr. Surv. Ayr., p. 425.

The terms Tag, Taggie, Taigie, and Taggit, seem to have no respect to the distinguishing colour, but have originated from the part of the animal thus marked i.e., the extremity or point of the tail; Su.-G. and Dan. tagg, Isl. tagg-r, cuspis, aculeus.

It is a curious circumstance, indeed, that the very word tail has had its origin from one denoting hair. For this is the sense of Moes.-G. tagl. Hence Junius has observed; Islandis tagl est cauda equina; dubio precul ob densitatem pilorum. Atque adeo ab hoc ipso tagl [in Moes.-G.] ob eandem quoque causam cauda Anglosaxonibus dicta est taegl. Goth. Gl. p. 323.

TAGGIT, part. pa. [1. Fastened; confined, imprisoned.]

This rich man, be he had heard this tail,

Ful sad in mynd he wox baith wan and pail,

And to himselfe he said, sickand ful sair,

Allace how now! this is ane hasty fair.

And I cum thair, my tail it will be taggit,

For I am red that my count be ovir raggit.

Priests of Peblis, S. P. R., i. 38.

"Pulled," Pink. But it seems to be the same term, which in E. is sometimes used as equivalent to tacked. The phrase certainly signifies, "I shall be confined," or "imprisoned." There may be an allusion to a custom which still prevails in fairs or markets. Young people sometimes amuse themselves by stitching together the clothes of those who are standing close to each other; so that when they wish to go away, they find themselves confined. This they call tagging their tails, S. B. Hence the phrase may have come to denote the act of depriving one of liberty by imprisonment. V. OVER RAGGIT.

[2. Oppressed with work, exhausted, Banffs.]

To TAG, v. n. To wane, applied to the moon; as "The mune's taggin'," she is on the wane, Peeblesshire.

This might seem to be an elliptical use of a northern phrase; Sw. Maenen tager af, the moon decreases, from the v. aftag-a, or tag-a af, to wane.

* TAG AND RAG. This E. phrase is used as denoting the whole of any thing, every bit of it; as equivalent to Stoup and Roup, Aberd.

TAGEATIS, s. pl. Prob., cups.

"That Robert of Crechtoun sall restore, content, & pay, to Robert Broiss of Arth—twa blankatis price viij s., twa tageatis, price of the pece x s., thre basnatis," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1591, p. 195.

This seems to signify cups; corr. from Fr. tasce, a little cup; a dimin. from tasce, a bowl or cup. It confirms this view, that they are conjoined with basnatis, or small basons.

TAGGLIT, adj. Harassed with any thing; incumbered, drudged, S. B., most probably originally the same with Taigled. V. TAIGLE.

TAGHAIRM, s. A mode of divination formerly used by the Highlanders.

—Last evening-tide
Brian an augury hath tried,
Of that dread kind which must not be
Unless in dread extremity,
The Taghairm called; by which, afar,
Our sires foresaw the events of war.

Lady of the Lake, p. 148.

"A person was wrapped up in the skin of a newly slain bullock, and deposited beside a water-fall, or at the bottom of a precipice, or in some other strange, wild, and unusual situation, where the scenery around him suggested nothing but objects of horror. In this situation he revolved in his mind the question proposed, and whatever was impressed upon him by his exalted imagination, passed for the inspiration of the disembodied spirits, who haunt their desolate recesses." Ibid. Note, p. lxx.

Gael. taghairm, "a sort of divination;" Shaw. O'Reilly expl. Ir. taghairm, (overlooked by O'Brien) in the same terms; adding, "echo." The very design of this heathenish rite was to invoke the spirits of the dead. According to one form of it, the companions of the inquirer, whom they held by the legs and arms, cried; "Let his invisible friends appear from all quarters, and let them relieve him by giving an answer to our present demands." V. Martin's Western Isles, p. 110, &c.; also Pennant's Voyage to the Hebrides, ii. 360.

TAGHT, TACHT, part. adj. Stretched out, tightened, S.

—Ev'ry art'ry, nerve and sinnen,
Were scrow'd in concert, flat and sharp,
To whistle like the Aeolian harp,
Ilk tendon, taght like thairm, was lac'd;
Twa wounds seem'd sound holes, on his breast.

Beattie's John o' Arnha, p. 55.

This seems properly the old part. pa. of the v. to Tie, or that of A.-S. ti-an, vincire. V. TIGHT.

TAID, TED, s. 1. A toad, S. A.-S. tade.

Hunger and thirst, in stead of meat and drink,
And for thair clathing taidis and scorpions.

Lyndsay's Dreame.

He conjoins toads with scorpions, perhaps because the vulgar view the toad as a poisonous animal.

2. Transferred to a person, as expressive of dislike, aversion, or disgust, S.

Johnny Bull is wooing at her,
Courtin' her, but canna get her,
Filthy ted she'll never wed, as lang's sae mony's wooing at her.

Lizzy Liberty, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 129.

Toad E. has the same metaph. use, though very frequently applied in good humour.

3. A term of fondness for a child, both in the north and south of S.

TAIDIE, TEDDIE, s. The diminutive from Taid, used as in sense 3, S.B.; Roxb.

It is singular how much habit can reconcile the mind to the most absurd metaphors or the most incongruous combinations! This term, from being originally used as expressive of disgust or contempt, has at length, by a strange transition, become a fondling denomination. Thus, S.B., a handsome child is called a bonnie teddie, or little toad; an amiable one, a sweet teddie; a darling, a dear teddie, &c.

TAID-STULE, s. A mushroom, S. B., synon. Paddock-stool.

In O. E. it was not named the seat, but the covering of the toad. "Musheron todys hatt. Boletum. Fungus." Prompt. Parv. Tode is expl. Bufo; ibid.

To TAID, v. a. To manure land by the droppings from cattle, either in pasturing or folding, Fife. V. TATH.

TAIDREL, s. A puny feeble creature.

Let never this undought of ill-doing irk,
But ay blyth to begin all barret and bail:
Of all bless let it be as bair as the birk,
That tittit the taidrel may tell an ill tale.
Let no vice in this world in this wanthrift be wanted.

Poets. & Montgom. Watson's Coll., iii. 19.

A dimin. from A.-S. tedre, tyldre, tener, fragilis, imbecillus.

TAIFFINGOWN, s. "Ane pair of taiffingownis;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. It is also spelled Taffyngownis.

Perhaps a corr. of Tabin, a species of silk formerly imported into S. V. TABIN.

TAIGIE, TEAGIE, TYGIE, s. A designation given to a cow which has some white hairs in her tail. On this account she is also said to be taigit, Fife. V. TAGGIE.

An' whare was Rob an' Peggy,
For a' the search they had,
But i' the byre 'side Teagie,
Like lovin' lass an' lad.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 124.

To TAIGLE, v. a. and n. 1. To detain, to hinder, S.

"Whatt taigled yessae lang, Peggy," asked her mother.
'Did you no hear Hawky making a routing enough to deave a body?'" Petticoat Tales, i. 269.

"Many a bitter ban, my grandfather said, they gave him for taigling them so long, when wind and tide both served." R. Gilhaize, i. 19.

- [2. To take up one's time or attention; to weary or fatigue, Clydes.] Taiglit must signify tired, wearied, in the following passage.

—"As Duinhé-wassal was a wee taiglit, Donald could, tat is, might—would—should send ta curragh." Waverley, i. 246.

3. To tarry, to delay, to procrastinate. "Now, dinna taigle."—"I winna taigle," S.

Poor Towser shook his sides a' draig'd,
An's master grudg'd that he had taig'd.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 128.

"Do ye think Mr. Keelivin has nothing mair to do than to wait for us, while ye're talking profanity, and taigling at this gait?" The Entail, i. 185.

"The shearers quat rather suner that nicht nor usual; an' my brither an' I taiglit a while ahin'." Edin. Mag. Sept. 1818, p. 153.

Allied to Sw. taaylig, slow of motion, Wideg. toelig, lentus, Ihre. This the latter derives from A.-S. tohlce, lentus, lente, from toh, tenax, lentus, from Su.-G. toj-a, ducere. The pret. is togh.

- [TAIGLE, TAIGLIN, s. Hinderance, delay; also, whatever causes it, Clydes.]

TAIGLESUM, adj. What retains or retards; as, "a taiglesum road," a road which is so deep, or so hilly, that one makes little progress, S.

TAIKIN, s. A token, S. B.

Saxteen year after, he was at
A braithel, where the broth was fat;
In ancient times a taiken sure,
The bridegroom was na reckon'd poor.

Piper of Peebles, p. 14.

TAIKNING, s. A signal. V. TAKYNNYNG.

TAIKNE, TACKNE, s. An old ridiculous person, Shetl.

Isl. taeki, instrumenta magica; or from Su.-G. tok, fatuus, tok-as, ineptire; unless it be merely tekn, prodigium.

TAIL, TALE, s. Account, estimation.

Thai send to Perth for wyn ande ale,
And drank, and playid, and made na tale
Of thare fays, that lay thame by.

Wyntown, viii. 26, 80.

Of me altyme thou gave but lytil tail;
Na of me wald have dant nor dail.

Friends of Peblis, S. P. R., i. 43.

i.e., "Thou madest little account of me."

Su.-G. tael-in, A.-S. tel-an, to reckon; to esteem.

- TAIL, s. 1. The termination of any particular portion of time; as, "the tail o' har'st," the end of harvest, S.

"Tail of May, end of May;" GL Shirr.

- 2. The retinue of a chieftain, Highlands of S.

"Ah! if you Saxon Duinhé-wassal (English gentleman) saw but the chief himself with his tail on!" "With his tail on?" echoed Edward in some surprise. "Yes—that is, with his usual followers, when he visits those of the same rank." Waverley, i. 238.

- 3. He's gotten his tail in the well now, a proverbial phrase used to denote that one has got one's self entangled in some unpleasant business, affecting either character or interest, S.

It undoubtedly refers to some animal that, although anxious to keep itself dry in making a leap after its prey, gets itself wetted.

- [4. Tails, the extremity of a gown or petticoat, S.]

TAIL-BOARD, s. The door or hint-end of a close cart, S.; [syn. back-door.]

[TAIL-NET, s. The herring net farthest from the boat, S.]

To TAILE, v. a. [To agree with, to covenant, to bind; him taile, bind himself.]

And a rycht gret ost gadrit he.
And gert his schippis be the se
Cum, with gret toysoun of wittail.
For at that tyme he wald him taile
To distroy wp sa clene the land,
That naue suld leve tharin lewand.

Barbour, xviii. 238, MS.

In Edit. 1620, it is rendered without regard to the MS.

For at that time hee thought all haill, &c.

P. 360.

[Isl. tal, a talk, speech, account; hence, a bargain. V. GL Skeat's Barbour.]

TAILE, TAILYE, TAILYIE, TAILLIE, TAYLYHE', s. 1. Covenant, agreement, synonym. with conand.

And quhen this conand thus wes maid,
Schir Philip in till Ingland raid;
And tauld the King all baile his tale,
How be a xii moneth all hale
Had (as it wrytyn wes in thair taile),
To reskew Strewillyue with bataill.

Barbour, xi. 5, MS.

Edit. 1620, tailgie.

For bayth thai ware be certane tailyhe
Oblyst to do thare that deide, sawf tailyhe.

Wyntown, ix. 11. 15.

"Bond, indenture, so called because duplicates are made, which have indentings, Fr. tailles, answering to each other;" GL Wynt.

- 2. An entail; merely a secondary sense of the term, as denoting a covenant or bond, S.

And at this tailye suld lelyly
Be baldyn all the Lordis swar,
And it with selys affermyt thar.

Barbour, xx. 135, MS.

This respects the entail of the crown on his daughter Marjory, and her heirs, failing his son David.

This worthy Prince, according to the taille
Made by King Robert, when heirs male should faillie,—
Into these lands he did himself invest.

Muse's Threnodie, p. 33.

"Entails were unknown in Scotland till the seventeenth century; a deed of taille merely regulating the manner of succession, and commonly altering it from heirs general to heirs male.—Craig, who wrote about the year 1600, knew nothing of entails in the modern sense. It was in the reign of Charles II. that they began to be frequent in Scotland." Pinkerton's Hist. Scot., i. 367-8.

O. Fr. taillier is used in this sense, in an instrument quoted by Du Cange, and bearing date A. 1406, vo. Talliare.

To TAILYE, TAILZE, TAILIE, v. a. 1. To bind an agreement by a bond or indenture.

For had the Talbot, as tailzet was,
Justyd, he had swelt in-to that plas.
Wyntown, viii. 35, 199.

V. v. 149.

2. To entail, S.

"Of King Fergus orison to his nobillis, and how the crown of Scotland was tailzet to hym and his successors." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 8, b. Rubr.

"The lands that were not taillied, fell in heritage to a sister of the said William, viz. the lands of Galloway." Pitcottie, p. 18.

L.B. talli are, in re feudali, idem est quod ad quamdam certitudinem ponere, vel ad quoddam certum hereditamentum limitare; Du Cange.

TAILE, s. A tax [paid by an heir on his succession]; Fr. taille.

—Gif only deys in this bataille,
His ayr, but ward, releff, or taile,
On the fyrst day sail weid.

Barbour, xii. 320, MS.

TAIL-ILL, s. A disease of cows, an inflammation of the tail, cured by letting blood in the part affected, Loth.

"Taill, a distemper common with cows. The tail is sometimes cut quite away, ere a cure be effected;" Gall. Enc.

TAIL-SLIP, s. A disease affecting cows, Lanarks.

—"The tail-slip, a disease which cold sometimes brings upon cows,—first appears in the end of the tail, by affecting it in such a manner, that it seems soft to the touch. As the disease proceeds upwards, every joint has the appearance of being dislocated." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 191.

The last syllable may have the same meaning with Tent. slip, crena, incisura; as the means of cure is, by making "a deep incision, with a sharp knife, the whole length of the part affected." Ibid.

TAIL-WORM, s. A disease affecting the tails of cattle, S. B.

"The tail-worm is also cured by cutting off a few inches of the tail, which bleeds pretty freely." Agr. Surv. Aberd., p. 491.

TAILLES, s. pl. [Prob. pendicles.]

—"All and hail the landes and baronie of Glasgow castle and citie, burcht and regalitie of Glasgow, with all landis, boundis, and tenementis, housis, biggingis, orchardis, yairdis, tailles, killes, barnes, brewhousis," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 597.

This cannot well admit of the sense of taxes, from Fr. taille. But the same Fr. term is given by Du Cange, when illustrating its synonym. L. B. tall-ia, as signifying, Territorium urbis.

TAIL-MEAL, s. An inferior species of meal, made of the tails or points of the grains. As these are first broken off in milling, they are separated from the body or middle part, which is always the best, Ayrs.

TAIL-RACE, s. V. RACE.

TAIL-TYNT. 1. To Ride Tail-tynt, to stake one horse against another in a race, so that the losing horse is lost to his owner, or as it were tines his tail by being behind; Fife.

2. To Play Tail-tynt, to make a fair exchange, ibid. To Straik Tails, synonym.

TAILWIND, s. To Shear wi' a Tailwind, to reap or cut the grain, not straight across the ridge, but diagonally, Loth. V. BANDWIND. tails of cattle, S. B.

[TAILYE, TAILZE, v. and s. V. under TAILE, v.]

To TAILYEVE, v. n. "To reel, shake, jog from one side to another;" Rudd.

Quhen prince Enee persauit by his race,
How that the schip did rok and tailyeré,
For lak of ane gude sterisman on the see;
Himself has than sone hynt the ruler in hand.

Doug. Virgil, 157, 30.

[To TAILYIE, TAILZEE, v. n. To tally, to keep account of, Accts. L. H. Treas., I. 351, Dickson.]

TAILYIE, TAILZIE, TAILZEE, s. [1. A tally; a tale; the gret tailzie, the long hundred of six score; the schort tailzie, the hundred of five score, Accts. L. H. Treas., I. 361, Dickson.]

2. [A cut, a portion.] A tailye of beef, as much as is cut off to be roasted or boiled at one time, S.

His feris has this pray ressaith raith,
And to thare meat addressis it for to graith;
Hynt of the hydys, made the boukis bure,
Rent furth the entrellis, sum into tailyeis schare.

Doug. Virgil, 19, 34.

—On every dish that cuikmen can divyne,
Muttone and beif cut out in telyeis grit,
Ane Erles fair thus can they counterfitt.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 149, st. 16.

Fr. tail-er, Su.-G. tael-ia, Isl. tel-ya, to cut.

To this must be allied O. E. "Telw-en, or twytyn. Abesco. Reseco." Prompt. Parv. "Tewinge, or theytinge," is expl. "Scissulatus." But this is evidently an errat. for Telwinge.

[TAILZOUR, s. A tailor, Accts. L. H. Treas., I. 24, Dickson. O. Fr. tailleour.]

TAINCHELL, s. [A mode of hunting deer. V. TINCILL.]

"Syxteen myle northward from the ile of Coll, lyes ane ile callit Ronin ile, of sixteen myle lang and six in bredthe in the narrowest, ane forest of heigh mountains, and abundance of litle deer in it, quhilk deer will never be slaine downwith, but the principal saitts [snares] man be in the height of the hill, because the deer will be callit upwart ay be the Tainchell, or without tyunchel they will pass upwart perforce." Monroe's Isles, p. 23.

"All the deire of the west pairt of that forrest will be callit [driven] be tainchess to that narrow entrey, and the next day callit west againe, be tainchess throw the said narrow entres, and infinite deer slaine there." Ibid. p. 7.

[Taincheas is evidently a corr. of tainchels : a corr. very prevalent among Highlanders.]

TAING, TYANG, TANG, s. 1. That part of an iron instrument which is driven into the handle; as, "the taing o' a graip," "the taing o' a fow," or pitch-fork, &c., Aberd.; Tang, Clydes., id.

2. The prong of a fork, &c. ibid. V. TANG, s.

Isl. tange is used in this very sense. Dens seu cauda cultri, quo manubrio inditur, seu jungitur intus. G. Andr.

3. A tongue of land, Shetl.

"A taing is a narrow piece of land projecting into the sea, and is always bordered by a flat shore. It appears to have been derived either from a similarity to the law-tings, or from having been actually the site of a circuit-court." Edmonston's Zetl. Isl. i. 139, 140. Norw. Tange, en pnynt of landet, et naess; i.e., "a point of land, a ness" or promontory; Hallager. Isl. tange, isthmus, G. Andr. Tangi angustum, terra angusta in mare procurans, q. Tunga, lingvula; Verel. Ind. Tangi lingula, vel lingva terrae, in mare se exserens, promontorium; Haldorson.

To TAIN, TAYNT, v. a. 1. To convict in course of law.

That schepe, he sayd, that he stall noucht.
And thare-til for to swere an athe,
He sayd, that he wald noucht be latha.
Bot sone he worthyl reide for schame,
The schepe thare bletyd in hys wame.
Swa was he tayntyd schamfully,
And at Saynt Serf askyd mercy.

Wynlowen, v. 12. 1232.

"f. attainted," Gl. It properly signifies, convicted; corresponding to Fr. attaint, L.B. attaint-us, attaint-us, criminis convictus. Attainct, attincta, convictio in actione criminali, aut manifestus cujuslibet criminis reatus; Du Cange.

2. Legally to prove; applied to a thing.

"And quhair it be taintit that thay [ruikis] big, and the birdis be flowin, and the nest be fundin in the treis at Beltane, the treis sall be foirfaltit to the King." Acts Ja. I. 1424, c. 21, Ed. 1566.

In this sense Skene uses attainted.

"And gif it be otherwaies attainted (or proven), he quha is esonyied, and his pledges, salbe amerciat for his noncompearance." 1. Stat. Rob. I. c. 6. s. 3. Attayntum, Lat.

TAINT, s. Proof, conviction.

"That within the burrowis throwout the realme na liggis nor bandis be maid.—And gif ony dois in the contrare, and knowlege and taint may be gottin thair of, thair gudis, that ar fundin giltie thairin to be confiskit to the King, and thair lyffis at the kingis will." Acts Ja. II. 1470, c. 88, Ed. 1566.

"For gif the assisors sall happin to be convict as mensworne in the court, by ane Taynt, that is, be probation of twentie foure loyall men;—they sall tinc and forfalt all thair cattell." Reg. Maj. B. i. c. 14. s. 2. 3.

"Attaint or Taynt, is called the deliverance or probation of 24 leil men, the quhilke may be called an great assise." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Attaynt.

This seems the same with S.B. tint, commonly used in the phrase tint nor tryal, with respect to any thing about which there is no information.

VOL. IV.

Sae sair for Nory she was now in pain;
And Colin too, for he had gane to try
Gin he the lassie thro' the hills might apy;
But tint nor trial, she had gotten nane,
Of her that first, or him that last was gane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 44.

This term occurs in a very old Latin writ.

—Asserens quod summa excedens quinquaginta solidos, debet probari per taynt probationem et non aliam. MS. Reg. Burg. Aberl. A. 1399, Vol. I.

Taynt probation denotes the evidence of twenty-five leil men.

TAINTOUR, TAYNTOUR, s. One who brings legal evidence against another for conviction of some crime.

"That na man haf out of the realme gold bulycone or siluer vnder the payn of escheite tharof, the tane half to the king & the tothir half to the tayntour & the takar." Parl. Ja. II. A. 1434, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 40. Taintour, Ed. 1566. V. TAYNT, v.

TAIP, s. A piece of tapestry.

"Item, ane meikle taip of Turque. Item, vii stikis of tapessarie," &c. Inventories, A. 1539, p. 51.

This is obviously the same with what is previously mentioned, "four grete pece of the tapis of Turque,—fiftene litle tapis of Turque," p. 50.

Fr. tapis, tapestry, hangings.

To TAIR, v. n. To cry as an ass.

"Than the suyne began to quhryne quhen thai herd the asse tair." Compl. S., p. 59.

Said to be "an imitative word," Gl. But it is evidently the same with Teut. tier-en, intentione voce clamare, vociferari.

TAIRD, TERD, s. 1. A term expressive of great contempt, applied both to man and beast, W. Loth. Expl. a "slovenly hash," Lanarks.

Gael. tair, contempt, tairachd, id.; also low life, baseness; tairad, baseness, Shaw.

As an old cow is called "ane auld taird," it might perhaps originally signify meagreness; from S.G. taer-a, or A.-S. taer-an; Teut. teer-en, ter-en, to grow lean, to consume.

2. A gibe, a taunt, a sarcasm; as, "He cast a taird i' my teeth," Loth.; synonym. Sneist.

[TAIRENSIE, s. A fury; violent behaviour, Shetl. V. TAIR, v.]

To TAIRGE, v. a. To rate severely. [Tairgin, a scolding, Clydes.] V. TARGE.

[TAIS, v. a. Takes, Barbour, ii. 146.]

To TAIS, v. a. To poise, to adjust; pret. tasit.

Ane bustuous schaft with that he grippit has,
Ayd incontrare his aduersaris can tait.

Doug. Virgil, 327, 36.

He taisyt the wyr, and leit it fley,
And hyt the fadyr in the ey.

Barbour, v. 623, MS.

Than Turnus smitin full of felony,
Ane bustuous lance, with grundin hede full kene,
That lang quhile tasit he in propir tene,
Lete girl at l'allas.

Doug. Virgil, 334, 11.

[O. Fr. teser, toiser, from Lat. tensus, outstretched.]

P 3

TAIS, TAS, TASSE, s. A bowl, or cup, S. tass.

He merely reassais the remanent tais,
All out he drank, and quhelmit the gold on his face.
Doug. Virgil, 36, 48.

This term occurs in a passage which contains a curious account of the minutiae of politeness in the reign of James V.

"At that tyme ther was no ceremonial reuerens nor stait, quha suld pas befor or behynd, furtht or in at the dur, nor yit quha suld have the dignite to wasche ther handis fyrst in the lasime, nor yit quha suld sit doune fyrst at the tabil. At that tyme the pepil var as reddy to drynk vattir in ther bonet, or in the palmis of ther handis, as in ane glas, or in ane tasse of siluyr." Compl. S. p. 226.

Concluding this, we toome a tas of wyne.

Legend Ep. St. Androis, Poems 16th Cent. II. 308.

Ramsay uses it as signifying "a little dram-cup,"
GL

—Haste ye, gae
And fill him up a tass of usquebae.
Poems, II. 122.

Tass is still used in the South of S.

"And now, Laird, will ye no order me a tass o' brandy?" Guy Mannerings, I. 38.

Fr. tasse; Arm. tas, taez; Biscay, taza; Arab. tas, Pera. Turk. tasse; Alem. tasse, Ital. tazza, Hisp. taça, id. Hence, TASSIE, s. A cup or vessel, S.O.

Go fetch me a cup o' wine,
And fill it in a silver tassie.

Burns, II. 200.

But here's my Jean's health i' the siller-lipped tassie!
I'll part wi' them a' e'er I part wi' my lassie.

Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 94.

We learn from Pallas that tas is the Tartarian name for a cup. Travels, IV. 98.

TAISCH, s. The voice of a person about to die, Gael.; also improperly written Task, q.v.

"Some women—said to him, they had heard two taischa, that is, two voices of persons about to die; and what was remarkable, one of them was an English taischa, which they never heard before." Boswell's Journal, p. 150.

To TAISSE, v. a. [1. To vex, irritate, Banffs.]

2. To examine with such strictness as to puzzle or perplex the respondent; as, "He taisslit me sae wi' his questions, that I didna ken what to say," S.

A.-S. tye-ian, exasperare "to vex, to tease;" Somner.

[3. To toss, disorder, Banffs.]

4. Applied to the action of the wind when boisterous; as, "I was sair taisslit wi' the wind," S.; [syn. tousle.]

[5. To mix, confuse, jumble; with prep. amang or in, to handle overmuch, Clydes., Banffs.]

TAISSE, TEAZLE, s. [1. The act of vexing or teasing, Banffs.]

2. A puzzle; the act of puzzling, S.

3. A state of disorder; the act of disordering, Banffs.]

4. Overmuch handling; followed by prep. amang or in, Clydes., Banffs.

Taislin is also used in the same sense.

5. The effect of a boisterous wind, when the clothes are disordered, and one is scarcely able to keep one's road, S.

I—haist her roughly, and began to say,
I'd got a lump of my ain cleath this day;
Wi' weet and wind sae tyte into my teeth,
That it was like to cut my very breath,
Gin this be courting, well I wat 'tis clear,
I gat na sic a teazle this seven year.

Ross's Helenore, p. 38.

The word is pron. taissle.

6. A severe brush of any kind, S. This is called a sair taissle; also written tassell, tassle, and teasle. [Syn., tussel.]

"It is some comfort, when one has had a sair tassell,—that it is in a fair lady's service, or in the service of a gentleman whilk has a fair leddy, whilk is the same thing." Heart M. Loth., IV. 346.

Though Conscience' gab we try to steek,
It gies ane whiles a tassle.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 88.

The idea might seem borrowed from A.-S. taesl, carduus fallonum, or fuller's thistle, E. teasel, a kind of thistle used in raising the nap upon woollen cloth; from taes-an, to tease.

Taisle might seem to be the same with tussel, used in the sense of struggle, N. and S. of E. (Grose Prov. GL) adopted by P. Pindar. But tussel is synon. with S. Tousle, q. v. which is still used as if quite a different word from taissle. Whether tussel be related to Germ. tusel-n, tundere, percutere, is doubtful.

To TAIST, v. n. To grope; used to express the action of one groping before him with his spear, while wading through a deep trench filled with water.

—Arayit weill in all his ger,
Schot on the dyik, and with his sper
Taistyt, till he 't our woud:
Bot till his throt the watyr stud.

Barbour, IX. 388, MS.

Evidently synon. with Belg. tast-en, to grope, to handle, to feel; Germ. id., also antast-en; Su.-G. tast-a, antast-a, id. Ital. tast-are, Fr. tast-er, tat-er, used in the same sense, are clearly of Goth. origin. Wachter derives the Germ. v. from tasche, Su.-G. tasse, the paw of an animal, which originally signified the hand. Germ. tasche still denotes a clumsy fist. Teut. met den tast gaen, praetentare iter manibus aut pedibus; Kilian.

It confirms this derivation, that Teut. telse, tatse, is rendered, palma pedis feri animalis; and tels-en, palma tangere.

Seren. assigns the same origin to the E. v. to taste. It seems undeniable, indeed, that this v., as used in E., has been transferred from one organ to another; as originally respecting the sense of touch.

Thus indeed the E. v. was anciently used.

Al they were ruharli, that bouel on horse or stole
To touche or to taste him, or taken downe of rode,
Bat thys blinde bachiler bare him through the hert.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 98, a.

[I rede thee let thin hond upon it falle,
And taste it wel, and ston thou shalt it finde.

Chaucer, C. T. 15970.]

TAIST, s. A sample; [a small portion.]
"And send one taist of the wyne to the yerll of Rothas;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

TAISTE, s. The black Guillemot. V. TYSTE.

TAISTRILL, TYSTRILL, s. A gawkish, dirty, thowless sort of woman; often applied to a girl who from carelessness tears her clothes, Roxb.

Probably from Dan. taassar, a silly man or woman, a booby, a looby, taassell, foolish, simple. If the last part of the word is not the mark of a diminutive, it may be traced to ryll-er, to roam, to ramble; q. "one who rambles about in an idle and foolish way."

Tastrill is understood in a different sense in the north of E., being defined by Grose, "a cunning rogue;" Taidrell, by Marshall, "a rascal;" Yorks.

[TAISYT, TASYT, pret. V. TAIS.]

TAIT, TYTE, adj. "Neat, tight," Rudd.
Warton, Hist. E. P.

In lesuris and on levis litill lammes
Full taist and trig socht bletand to thare dammes.
Doug. Virgil, 402. 24.

About her palpis, 'but fere, as thare modyr,
The twa twynys, smal men childer ying,
Sportand ful tyte gan do wrabil and wrang.
Ibid. 266. 1.

Frae fute to fute he kest her to and frae,
Quhys up, quhys down als taist as ony kil.
Henryson, Evergreen, l. 152. st. 25.

It is descriptive of the cruel sport which a cat makes with a mouse, and of her playful motions, before she kills it. The most natural sense is gay frisky, lively, playful; and the idea seems borrowed from the young of animals; Isl. teit-r, pullus animalis, hinnulus; as, a young fawn, a kid, G. Andr.; teit-ur, juven-cus, vel equulus exultans, expl. by Verel. merry and lively as a foal.

It seems to signify nimble, active, in the following passage.

Sa mony estate, for commoun weil sa quhene,
Owre all the gait, sa mony thevis sa taist,
Within this land was never harl nor sene.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 43.

TAIT, s. A small portion. V. TATE.

[To TAIT, v. a. To pluck, pull, or divide in small quantities, West of S.]

To TAIVER, v. n. 1. To wander. Tauren, i.e., taivering. V. DAUREN.

This might be viewed as akin to Isl. tauf, mora, genit. tafar; tef-ia, morari, moram facere; G. Andr.,
p. 234.

2. To talk idly and foolishly, S.; synon.
Haiver.

3. To talk in an incoherent manner, like one delirious, S.

This may be merely a metaph. signification of the same v., as applied to the mind. In the same sense one is said to waver, when incoherent in ideas and discourse.

Allied perhaps to Teut. toover-en, Alem. touber-en, toufer-en, fascinare, incantare; which Lye deduces from Teut. doov-en, Alem. tob-on, dob-en, insanire, delirare: as magical arts seem to derive their name, either from the vain ravings of those who use them, or from the stupor produced in the ignorant. O. E. tase is also used in the sense of delirare. V. Jun. Etym.

Isl. tofr-a, incantare, tofrat-r, incantatus.

TAIVERSUM, adj. Tiresome, fatiguing, S.

TAIVERT, part. adj. 1. Much fatigued; in a state of lassitude, in consequence of hard work, or of a long journey, S. Fortaivert, synon. V. the v.

2. Stupid, confused, senseless, S. O.

"I wouldna trust the hair o' a dog to the judgment
o' that taivert bodie, Gibbie Omit, that gart me pay nine pounds seven shillings and saxpence too for the parliament." The Entail, i. 145.

"Taivert, foolish, half-witted;" Gl. Picken.

3. Stupified with intoxicating liquor, Ayrs.

"Ye wouldna hae me surely, Mr. Nettle, to sit till I'm taivert?—I fin' the wine rinnin in my head already."
Sir A. Wylie, i. 238.

4. Overboiled, Ettr. For., Tweedd.

TAIVERS, s. pl. Tatters; as, boiled to taivers, Fife.

"They don't know how to cook yonder—they have no gout—they boil the meat to taivers, and mak sauce
o' the brute to other dishes." The Steam-Boat, p.
238.

To TAK, v. a. To take, to lease, S.; also, to give; as, "I'll tak you a blow;" "I'll tak
you ower the head wi' my rung," S.

Teut. tack-en, signifies to strike; percutere, laedere,
Kilian.

[To TAK about, v. a. To nurse, take care of, gather in, Banffs.]

[To TAK aff, v. a. To mock, befool, S.]

To TAK apon, v. a. To conduct one's self, to act a part.

Wallace so weill apon him tak that tide,
Throw the gret preys he maid a way full wide.
Wallace, v. 43, MS.

To TAK back one's word. To recall one's promise, to break an engagement, S.

[To TAK doon, v. a. To reduce, emaciate; to humble, make bankrupt, Clydes., Banffs.]

To TAK the fute, v. n. To walk out; a term used of a child when beginning to walk, S.

To TAK the gait, v. n. To set off on a journey, S.

To TAK in, v. a. and n. 1. Applied to a road, equivalent to cutting the road, or getting quickly over it, S.

An' thought that night to their tryst's end to win.
Right cheerfully the road they did tak in,
Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 73.

2. To get up with, to overtake, Aberd.

In this sense Sw. tag-a up is used.

3. To be in a leaky state, to receive water, S.

He lattis his scheip tak in at luif and lie.

Leg. Ep. St. Androis, p. 307.

It is also used actively in the same sense; as, "That boat taks in water," S.

4. To meet; as, "The kirk taks in at twal o'clock," the church meets at twelve, Lanarks.To TAK in about, v. a. To bring one into a state of subjection, or under proper management, S.

It would seem to be borrowed from the domestication of an animal formerly allowed to go at large, or from the breaking in of one that has been unmanageable. It may, however, be borrowed from warfare; as E. to Take in, and Sw. intaga, signify to take a town.

To TAK in hand, v. a. To make prisoner.

This Schyr Jhone in till playn melle,
Throw sowerane hardiment that felle,
Wencussyt thaim sturdely ilkan,
And Schyr Androw in hand has tane.

Barbour, xvi. 518, MS.

To TAK in one's ain hand. To use freedom with, not to be on ceremony with, to make free with; applied both in relation to persons and things, S.

"How will ye answer for this morning's work?" He said, 'To man I can be answerable: and for God I will take him in my own hand.'" Walker's Peden, p. 48.

To TAK in o'er, v. a. Metaph., to take to task, S.[To TAK in wi', v. n. To become intimate with, to associate with, Clydes.][To TAK kepe. To take heed, Barbour, xvii. 61.]To TAK o' or of, v. n. To resemble; as, "He disna tak o' his father, who was a gude worthy man," S.To TAK on, v. a. and n. 1. To buy on credit, to buy to account, S.

Perhaps an ellipsis for, to take on trust; Sw. taga paa credit.

—"To the Right Hon^{ble} the Lieutenant Colonel, &c., of the Earl of Angus's Regiment.—The humble proposals of some honest people in the western shires, to whom it is offered to take on in, and make up that Regiment." Society Contendings, p. 394.

2. Applied to cattle when they are fattening well; as, "Thai stots are fast takin on," S.

3. To begin to get fuddled, S.

4. To enlist as a soldier.

"The drum went through both Aberleens, desiring all gentlemen and soldiers that was willing to serve in defence of our religion,—that they should come to the Laird of Drum younger, and receive good pay; where-upon divers daily took on." Spalding, ii. 165.

To TAK on hand, v. n. 1. To assume an air of importance, to affect state.

Sum part off thaim was in to Irland borne,
That Makfadyan had exile furth before;
King Eduardis man he was sworn of England,
Off rycht law byrth, suppos he tuk on hand.
Wallace, iv. 184, MS.

2. To undertake, to engage in any enterprise.

And quhen the King of England
Saw the Scottis sa tak on hand,
Takand the hard feyld opynly,
And apon fute, he had ferly;
And said, "Quhat! will yone Scottis fycht?"
"Ya sekryly!" said a knycht,—
"It is the mast ferlyfull sycht
That eyre I saw, quhen for to fycht
The Scottis men has tane on hand,
Agayne the mycht of England,
In plane hard feild, to giff batail."

Barbour, xii. 446. 455, MS.

[3. To assert, declare, Barbour, ii. 20.]

O.E. "Tak-yn on honde. Manucapio." Pr. Parv.

To TAK one's self to do any thing. To pledge one's self. "He tuik him to preif," he engaged himself to prove; Aberd. Reg.To TAK one's sell, v. a. 1. To bethink one's self, to recollect one's self, to recollect something which induces a change of conduct, S. It often includes the idea of suddenness.

When hunger now was slaked a little wee,
She taks herself and aff again she'll be:
Shamefu' she was, and skeigh like ony hare,
Nor cou'd she think of sitting langer there;
Weening that ane sae braw and gentle-like,
For us gude ends was making sic a fike.

Ross's Helenore, p. 30.

2. To correct one's language in the act of uttering it, to recall what one has begun to say, S.

To TAK one's word again. To recal what one has said, S.

Though it may be viewed as synon. with the phrase, to Tak back one's Word, it is used rather more generally; and does not necessarily imply breach of promise. It is often ludicrously applied to a north country, or Aberdeen's man, as if he claimed a right to recall his promise. If a native of the north of S. retracts what he has formerly said as to something trivial, as, for example, in eating of a dish which he has at first declined, it is common to remark in a jocular way; "You're a north country man, you may tak your word again."

This, however, has been explained in a more favourable way. The Aberdeen's men, it is said, were so faithful to their word, that, before bills or bonds were much known, when a purchase was made by one of them, he gave his word that the price should be paid on a day fixed. When the day appointed came, the Aberdeen's man paid his money, and took his word again, i.e., [asked no receipt.]

Sw. tag-a igen sina ord, to call back one's words; Widge. The phrase, tag-a sina ord tilbaka, is used in the same sense, analogous to the other mode of expression in S.

For some other senses of the v., which usually occur in the form of the part. pa., V. TANE.

To TAK out. V. TA'EN out.

To TAK to or til one. To apply a reflection or censure to one's self, even when it has no direct application, S.

To TAK up, v. a. 1. To comprehend, to understand, to apprehend the meaning of, S.

"He's a clever lad; you may learn him any thing, he taks you up in a moment."—"I gied him several hints, but he couldna, or woudna, tak me up."—"He taks up a thing before ye have half said it."

"We come now to speak of some more clear and sure mark, by which men may take up their gracious state and interest in Christ." Guthrie's Trial, p. 103.

"A man taking up himself so, cannot but lothe himself for his abominations." Ibid. p. 183.

2. To raise a tune, applied especially to psalmody; as, "He tuke up the psalm in the kirk," he acted as precentor, [or letter-gae], S.

Sw. tag-a up en psalm, to raise a psalm.

To TAK up wi', v. n. To associate with, to get into habits of intimacy, S.

This is nearly allied to E. to take up with, expl. by Johns., "to lodge, to dwell."

To TAK vpone hand, v. n. To presume, to dare.

"That nane of our souerane Lydyis (sic) liegis sould tak vpon hand to schute with half hag, culuering, or pistolate, at deir, ra, wyldie beistis, or wyldie foulis, vnder the pane of deid," &c. Acts Mary, 1551, Ed. 1814, p. 483.

"That nane—hyaris of sic wynis and haueris of tauernis tak vpon hand to huird or hyde ony sic wynis coft be thame in thair housis and priuie placis," &c. Ibid.

To TAK with, or wi', v. a. and n. 1. To allow, to admit; as, "I was not drunk; I'll no tak wi' that," S.

2. To own, to acknowledge for one's own; as "Nabody's taen wi' that buke yet," S.B.

3. To brook, to relish, to be pleased with, &c., the sense depending on the use of an adv. expressing either satisfaction or dislike, conjoined with the v., S.

"How does the laddie like the wark?" "Indeed he had been a dawtit bairn at hame, and he taks unco ill wi'."—"He took very ill wi' at first; but he's beginning to tak better wi' now."

To Take with is used in E., as signifying "to please;" Johns.; the thing being said to take with the person. According to the S. idiom, the idea is inverted.

4. [To be pleased or satisfied with, S.]; as, I didna tak wi' him.

5. To kindle; used with respect to fuel of any kind, when it catches fire, S.

"O what a sight it was to me, the kill took low, and the mill likewise took wi', and baith gied just as ye would say a crackle, and nothing was left but the bare wa's and the steading." Steam-boat, p. 347.

6. To begin to sprout, or to take root. It is said that corn has not tane wi', when it has not sprung up; a tree is said to be beginning to tak wi', when it begins to take root, S.

7. To begin to thrive, after a temporary decay, S.

The phraseology seems elliptical; as the expression, to Tak wi' the Grund, is sometimes used instead of it, S.

8. To give the first indication of having the power of suction. It is said that a pump is going to tak wi', when it is judged by the sound, &c., that it is on the point of beginning to draw up water, S.

TAK, TAKE, s. [1. A lease, &c. V. TACK.]

2. Condition of mind; as it is said of a person, when in a violent passion, "He's in an unco take the day," Roxb.; nearly resembling the use of E. Taking.

[TAKAR, s. A taker, capturer, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 83, Dickson.]

TAK-BANNETS, s. A game in which wads or pledges are deposited on both sides, which are generally bonnets; and the gaining party is that which carries off, one by one, all the wads belonging to that opposed to it, Kinross.

TAKIE, adj. Lasting; applied to victuals, Clydes.

TAK-IN, TAKE-IN, s. A cheat, a deceiver, S.

His goodness ay I never doubt,
He's nae take-in, the kill-man.

Gall. Encycl., p. 298.

TAKIN, s. A pinch; as, a takin o' snuff, q. as much as one takes at once, Aberd.

[TAKIN UP, part. pr. Preparing; as, takin-up fish, preparing them for curing or cooking, Shetl.]

TAK-UP, TAKE-UP, s. The name given to a tuck in female dress, Dumfr., Gall.

The form of the term is also inverted. V. IN-TACK.

Dr. Johns. says of the E. v. to take in, as signifying to cheat, that it is "a low vulgar phrase." But it is a Dan. idiom, and probably very ancient. Tage ind, to inveigle, to draw in, to deceive; generally as implying the use of fair words.

TAKET, s. A small flat-headed nail, S.

"Cork takets of yron, the thousand xl s." Rates, A. 1611. V. TACKET.

TAKIN, TAKEN, s. A token, a mark, a sign, S. pron. taikin.

Among the Grekis mydlit than went we,
Not with our awin takin or deitc.

Doug. Virgil, 25, 30.

To the mair meen taikin, a phrase commonly used, S. B., when one wishes to give a special mark of any thing that is described. Meen may be the same with A.-S. maene, Alem. meen, Su.-G. men, common, public;

q. to give an obvious mark, or one that may be observed by all.

Moes.-G. taikns, A.-S. tacn, Isl. takn, teiku, Su.-G. tekn, Belg. teycken, Germ. zeichen, id.

To TAKIN, v. a. To mark, to distinguish.

"And quhair thair is na goldsmythtis, bot ane in a towne, he sall schaw that wark takinnit with his awin mark to the officiaris of the towne." Acts Ja. II., 1457, c. 73, Edit. 1568.

—Thou takinnit has sa wourthely
With signe tropheal the feild—

Doug. Virgil, 376, 20.

Moes.-G. taikn-jan, A.-S. tacn-an, ostendere, monstrare; Su.-G. tekn-a, A.-S. tacn-ian, Isl. teikn-a, signare, notare.

A.-S. tacn-an, whence E. teach, has been deduced from Sw. te, Isl. ti-a, monstrare. Stiernh. derives it from Moes.-G. ataug-ian, ostendere, comp. of at, ad, and auyo, oculus, q. to exhibit any thing to the eye.

TAKINNAR, TAKYNNAR, s. A portent, a person or thing that portends or prognosticates.

The dreidfull portis sall be schet but fall
Of Janus tempill, the takynnar of battell.

Doug. Virgil, 22, 7.

Thay delfand fand the takynnar of Cartage,
Ane mekill hors heid that was, I wene.

Ibid., 26, 49.

TAKYNNYNG, TAIKNING, s. [Sign; signal.]

On Turnberys snuke he may
Mak a fyr, on a certane day,
That mak takynnyng till ws, that we May thar arywe in sawté.

Barbour, iv. 558, MS.

"Taiknings, are given to forewarn people of the approach of the enemy." Dict. Feud. Law.

TAKYLL, TACKLE, s. An arrow.

Qubirrand smertly furth flew the takyll tyte.

Doug. Virgil, 300, 20.

Ane haistie hensour, callit Harie,

Quha was an archer heynd,

Tilt up ane tackle withouten tary.

Chr. Kirk, st. 10. Chron. S.P., ii. 362.

Takil, Chaucer, tacle, Gower, id. Rudd. derives this from C. B. tacel, sagitta. Bullet mentions Celt. tacelu, orner, tacelau, ornemens. From tacel comes O. Fr. tacle, a shaft or bolt, the feathers of which are not waxed, but glued on. From the same source is takillis; Doug. the tackling of a ship.

Chaucer uses the word in the same sense.

Wel coude he dresse his takel yemanly.

Prol., v. 106.

TALBART, TALBERT, TAVART, s. A loose upper garment, without sleeves.

Cled in his nuris talbart glad and gay,
Romulus sall the pepill ressaue and weild.

Doug. Virgil, 21, 28.

Vnlike the kukkow to the philomene;

Thaire tavartis are not bothe maid of aray.

King's Quair, iii. 37.

Chauc. tabard, Fr. tabarre, Ital. tabarro, C. B. tabar, Ir. tavairt, chlamsa, a long coat, a robe, Teut. tabbaerd, penula.

TALBRONE, TALBERONE, s. A kind of drum.

"That nane of our Souerane Ladyis liegis—cleith thame selfis with wappinnis, or mak sound of trumpet or talberone, or vse culueringis," &c. Acts Mary, 1563, c. 19, Edit. 1568.

O. E. taburn, id., Minot, p. 45.

Thai sailed furth in the Swin,

In a somers tyde,

With trompes and taburns,

And mekill other pride.

Fr. tabourin, a small drum.

[TALD, part. pa. Told, counted, S.]

*TALE, s. Account, estimation. W^t his tale, W^t your tale, &c., are nearly synon. with E. Forsooth, and are always meant to intimate derision, contempt, or some degree of disbelief; as, "He's gaun to tak a big farm, w^t his tale." "Puir silly tawpie, she's gaun to get a gryte laird, w^t her tale," &c. V. TAIL.

It resembles another contemptuous phrase, "Set him, her, or you up!" The resolution of the expression apparently is, "according to his tale," or "account of the matter." A.-S. with is sometimes used in the same sense. With geynde, Secundum naturam, according to nature.

TALE-PIET, s. A term much used by children, to denote a tell-tale, a talebearer, S.

"If I had not held you as so old an acquaintance, this should have gone to my lady's ears, though I should have been called pick-thank and tale-pyet for my pains." The Abbot, i. 139, 140.

"Never mind me, sir—I am no tale-pyet; but there are mair een in the world than mine." Antiq., i. 82.

"It's a wonder to me—that the Laird maks a fool o' himsel, believing a' the clashes that gowks carry through the country.—I'll lay my lugs,—that, before a week gang ower, I'll find out what this talepyet is." Petticoat Tales, i. 237.

"Teylpeyat, or Telpie, a tell-tale; (perhaps as the pie or magpie) one who divulges secrets; spoken chiefly of children;" Yorks., Marshall.

Perhaps from the similarity of a tattler to the magpie, S. piet, that is always chattering; as for the same reason this bird received from the Romans the name of garrulus.

TALESMAN, s. The person who gives any piece of news, S.

Well, man, your father's dead. Aunt, gar me trow, Reply'd the squire, wha tauld sic news to you?
Baith tale and tales-man I to you sall tell.

Ross's Helenore, p. 34.

When one doubts, or seems to doubt, as to the truth of any story, it is common to say, "I'll gie ye baith tale and talesman," S.

TALENT, s. Desire, inclination, purpose.

Quhen thai war boune, to saile, thai went,

The wynd was wele to thair talent;

Thai raysyt saile, and furth thai far.

Barbour, iii. 694, MS.

First prynce Massicus cummys wyth his rout,—

Ane thousand stout men of hye talent

Under him leding, for the batal boun.

Doug. Virgil, 319, 54.

O. Fr. talent, Hisp. Ital. talent-o, L. B. talent-um, animi decretum, voluntas, desiderium, cupiditas. Hence Fr. entant-é, qui aliquid agere cupit. To this is opposed mallalent, mala voluntas. V. Du Cange. O. E. talent, lust, Palsgrau.

TALER, s. State, condition. In better taler, in better condition, S. B.

It is pron. Talor and Tolor in Fife. Any thing is said to be in gude talor, when in a proper state for the purpose in view; as water when heated to a sufficient degree for washing, &c.

Ö. Fr. taillier, state, condition. Espee à hant taillier; sabre; Roquefort.

TALLIATION, s. Adjustment of one thing to another, a tally.

—"Your ellwand would hae been a jimp measure to the sauwendie o' his books and Latin talliations." The Entail, i. 273.

L.B. talliatio, mensurarum adaequatio; Du Cange.

TALLIE AFACE. Cut in angles; applied to precious stones. V. TABLIT A FACE.

TALLIWAP, s. A stroke or blow, Perth.

First Donald king o' Scots the root o' a,—
Then Dugald gritled general o' the north;
Wha gave the Spaniards such a talliwap.

Donald and Flora, p. 61.

The last part of the word seems to be S. wap, a smart blow. Dan. talie signifies a small rope, or the tackle of a ship.

TALLOUN, TALLA, s. Tallow.

"Na talloun could be had furth of the realme, for the eschewing of derth of the samin." Acts Ja. V. 1540, c. 105., Edit. 1566.

To TALLON, v. a. To cover with tallow or pitch, or with a mixture of both; to caulk.

Now fletis the meikle hulk with tallonit keile.

Doug. Virgil, 113, 43.

The talloned burdis kest ane pikky low.

Ibid. 276, 32.

Toon, O. E., id.

"Either he schal hate the toon and love the tother."
Wiclif, Matt. vi.

This word is not only used as a s., but often in our old Acts as a proper adjective.

—And a nothir of the date of the xij day of August—of the tane half of the samyne landis of Nethirsannak." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1489, p. 133. It occurs twice in the same Act.

"The one of two. Tane is a rapid pronunciation of ta ane;" Gl. Wynt. Rudd. views the word as formed from ane with t prefixed, as the Fr. put t before il, when the foregoing v. terminates in a vowel. But the tane, the tother, seem to have been originally that ane, that other. A similar form at least existed in O. E.

Heo nomen here conseil, & the folk of this lond raddle,
That heo bi twene this lond & Scotland schulde a wal reo,
Strong and hegg on eche syde, ther no water nere,
From that on se to that other, that were hem bi twene.

Ross's Helenore, p. 88.

Sw. taga Tael emot, to receive kindly, to give a good reception.

TANE-AWA, s. 1. A decayed child, S.

The name seems to have been formed from the vulgar belief, that the fairies used formerly to carry off, or take away, healthy children, and leave poor puny creatures in their room. V. FARE-FOLKIS.

The Romans had an idea somewhat similar, with respect to certain birds of night, particularly screech-owls; but, according to Ovid, it was doubtful whether they were really birds, or merely assumed this form from the power of witchcraft.

Out of their cradles babes they steal away,
And make defenceless innocents their prey.—
Whether true birds they were, or had that form
From some old ugly witches potent charm.—

Fasti, B. vi. Massey's Transl., p. 303.

They believed, however, that these birds sucked the blood of the infants whom they carried off.

2. A child that exhibits such unnatural symptoms, as to suggest the idea that it has been substituted by the fairies, in the room of the mother's birth, S.

In the use of the term there is an evident metonymy; for it is applied to the substitute of the genuine child supposed to have been taken away.

"Really, gudeman, I begin to hae a notion that he's as auld Espeth Freet, the midwife, ance said to me, a ta'cawse; and I would be nane surprised, that whoever lives to see him dee, will find in the bed a benweod or a windlestrae, instead o' a Christian corpse." The Entail, ii. 34.

This in E. is called a Changeling. It is singular, that there should be the same double use of the E. term as of that used in S., the child carried away being sometimes termed changeling. V. a satisfactory proof of this in Archdeacon Nare's Glossary, in vo.

This term may be more fully illustrated by an extract from a very ingenious and entertaining dissertation on this subject; from which it appears that the creed of superstition, as to elvish power, was carried still farther than has been already mentioned.

"The most formidable attribute of the elves, was their practice of carrying away, and exchanging children; and that of stealing human souls from their bodies. 'A persuasion prevails among the ignorant,' says the author of a MS. history of Moray, 'that, in a consumptive disease, the fairies steal away the soul, and put the soul of a fairy in the room of it.' This belief prevails chiefly along the eastern coast of Scotland, where a practice, apparently of druidical origin, is used to avert the danger. In the increase of the March moon, withes of oak and ivy are cut, and twisted into wreaths or circles, which they preserve till next March. After that period, when persons are consumptive, or children hectic, they cause them to pass thrice through these circles. In other cases the cure was more rough, and at least as dangerous as the disease, as will appear from the following extract.

"There is one thing remarkable in the parish of Saddie (in Inverness-shire), which I think proper to mention. There is a small hill N. W. from the church, commonly called Therdly Hill, or Hill of Therdie, as some term it; on the top of which there is a well, which I had the curiosity to view, because of the several reports concerning it. When children happen to be sick, and languish long in their malady, so that they [are] almost turned skeletons, the common people imagine they are taken away, (at least the substance), by spirits, called fairies, and the shadow left with them; so at a particular season in summer, they leave them all night, themselves watching at a distance, near this well, and this they imagine will either end or mend them; they say many more do recover than do not." Macfarlane's MSS. Minstrelsy Border, ii. 230, 231.

The mode of cure in Orkney is, if possible, still more barbarous. A declining child, who is thence supposed to have been subjected to elvish influence, is hung up in the chimney for some time, over the fire, by the crook. This is supposed to drive away the fairy part from it. This idea strongly resembles that mentioned above, in the quotation from the MS. History of Moray; and must be viewed as another relique of heathenish worship, particularly of that of Moloch, or Saturn, the Thor of the northern nations. There were, it would seem, two ways in which the worshippers of Moloch made their children to pass through the fire to him. One was, by actually consuming them, which, they believed, would ensure the preservation of all the rest of their children, and their own prosperity during life. Their other method was, to make the person pass between two fires, for a sign of consecration. The person who thus dedicated his son, delivered him into the hands of the priests, who had the charge of the fires. They gave back the son into the hands of the father; who himself, having thus obtained permission of the priests, was to lead his son through the flames. Maimonides de Idolatr. V. Ainsworth on Lev., xviii. 21.

We may observe the striking similarity between this and a druidical rite, mentioned vo. BELTANE, according to which there was a consecration by fire.

If the fairies carried off a child, leaving one of their own imps in its place, tradition says that they anxiously waited to see if the bereaved mother would suckle their elvish brood. If she did, her own was irrecoverably lost to her. If she treated it with scorn, refusing to do the duty of a mother, they were forced to restore her own child.

Roos has particularized some of the rites, used at child-birth, as preventives of this calamity.

Then the first hippen to the green was flung,
And unko' wools thereat baith said an' sung.
A burning coal with the hett tangs was ta'en
Frae out the ingle mids, well brunt an' clean;
And thro' the cossy-belly letten fa',
For fear the wean should be ta'en awa.

Helenore, First Edit., p. 6.

Pennant mentions the same superstition as prevalent in Perthshire.

"The notion of second-sight," he says, "still prevails in a few places; as does the belief of Fairies; and children are watched till the christening is over, lest they should be stole, or changed." Tour in S. 1769, p. 115.

"But the power of the fairies was not confined to unchristened children alone; it was supposed frequently to extend to full grown persons, especially such as, in an unlucky hour, were devoted to the devil by the execration of parents, and of masters; or those who were found asleep under a rock, or on a green hill, belonging to the fairies, after sunset; or finally, to those who unwarily joined their orgies." Minstrelsy ub. sup. p. 235.

It is singular, that the Rabbinical writers give an account of the danger to be feared from a she-devil, which has considerable resemblance. She, however, does not exchange, but actually destroys, children.

"This Shee-Divel they call by the name of Lilith. It is taken from the Night, for so the word signifieth first. And it will bee something to you when you remember your self of that ordinarie superstition of the old wives, who dare not intrust a childe in a cradle by it self alone without a candle. You must not think those people know what they do, and yet you may perceive their sillie waies to derive from an original much better, and more considerable then can bee guessed at from their prone and uninstructed waie of performance." Gregorie's Episcopus Puerorum, p. 97.

He ascribes the superstitious idea to a misinterpretation of Job i. 15, And the Sabean fell upon them, &c., which is explained in the Chaldee Paraphrase, Lilith the Queen of Smargad came, &c. This Lilith, in the Gloss. Talmud., is said to be "a kinde of shee-divel which killed children." To defend pregnant women from the power of this adversary, they observe certain enchantments with great solemnity.

"When the great bellid woman's time is com, the father of the familie, or for want of him, som holie man or other (for this is required too) is desired to com to the room where the woman is to lie in; and then and there hee is to draw a circle on the several walls of that place, and upon the doors, both within and without, and moreover also about the bed, &c. And he is to inscribe these words, Adam, Churrah, Chuta, Lilith.—And so the child is thought to bee sufficiently defended." Ibid., p. 97, 98.

The ridiculous superstition, which has crept in from the corruption of Christianity, that children are peculiarly exposed to danger from evil spirits, before being baptised, would almost seem to have been borrowed from that of the Jews, with respect to Lilith; who, according to their traditions, is made to say, "I have power over the male children from the day they are born until the eight day," i.e., the time of their circumcision. Stehlin's Traditions, i. 111.

It may be added, that, as Gregorie mentions it as the superstitious idea in England, that, if a child be left alone in a cradle, a candle should be lighted in the room; the superstition which prevails with some in S., is not less absurd. They use the Bible as a charm, by laying it in the head of the cradle, in order to preserve the infant from the power of evil spirits and witches.

In England, the term Changeling is used in the same sense with our Tane-awea.

There in the stocks of tries, white faies doe dwell,
And span-long elves, that dance about a pool!
With each a little changeling in their armes!

Ben Jonson's Sad Shepherd.

TANE down. 1. Emaciated or enfeebled in consequence of disease; as, "He's sair tane down wi' that host," S.

2. Reduced in temporal circumstances, S.B.

[3. Snubbed, humbled, degraded, Clydes.]

TANE out. Weel tane out, receiving much attention, S. This must be viewed as primarily denoting the attention paid to one in the way of frequent invitations.

TANGS, TANGIS, s. pl. Tongs, S.

The wyff, that he had in his innys,
That with the tangs wael birs his schynnis,
I wald scho droust war in a dam.
He is no dog; he is a lam.

Dunbar upon James Doug, Maitland Poems, p. 92.

"You fand that whar the Highlandman fand the tangs." S. Prov.

This is given by Kelly in an E. form, and expl. thus: "A Highlandman being challenged for stealing a pair of tongs, said he found them; and being asked where? He said, Hard by the fireside. Spoken when boys have picked up something, and pretend they found it." P. 383, 384.

Taings, or Tygangs, as the term is pron. in Aberd., is often used as if it were a noun singular; as, "a taings," i.e., a pair of tongs. This has evidently been the ancient idiom.

"—Twa axis, a wovmill, a borell price xl d., v hukis, a tangis price xl d." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1489, p. 132. V. TANGS.

"Nearer the island, there were many of the smaller seals, or Tang-fish, so named from being supposed to live among the Tang, or larger fuci that grow near the shore." Hibbert's Shetl. Isl., p. 586.

TANGIE, s. A sea-spirit, which, according to the popular belief in Orkney, sometimes assumes the appearance of a small horse, at other times that of an old man.

The name is supposed to originate from Tang, seaweed. The description seems nearly to correspond to that of Kelpie, q. v.

Tangie, I am informed, is the same with the Sea-Trow. This imaginary being is supposed to have his origin from the luminous appearance of the tangle, when it is tossed by the sea.

TANGLE, s. 1. The same with Tang. This name is also given to the stem or stalk of the larger fuci, S.

"The Alga Marina, or sea-Tangle, as some call it, Sea-Ware, is a rod about four, six, eight or ten feet long; having at the end a blade, commonly slit into seven or eight pieces, and about a foot and half in length. It grows on stone, the blade is eat by the vulgar natives." Martin's Western Islands, p. 149.

This seems formed from thawngull, the pl. of Isl. thaung, alga.

2. Used metaph. to denote a person, who although tall, is lank, S.B.

2. Tanners, pl. The small roots of trees, Loth.; synonym. tapouns.

In this sense it seems more nearly allied to Isl. tannari, assulae; laths, chips, splinters; or tein, Sw. teen, surculus; Moes.-G. tainis, virga, virgula; Belg. teen-en, vimina.

TANNERIE, s. A tan-work, S. Fr. id.

[To TANT, v. n. To sicken from eating disagreeable food, Shetl.; perhaps a corr. of S. faut, to faint.]

TANTERLICK, s. A severe stroke, Fife. It is also used in Ayrs.

This term is probably allied to E. Tenter. Hence the E. phrase, to set one upon the tenters. Tanterlick may denote a rough stroke, such as that which is given to cloth when it is extended on the tenter-hooks. In a similar sense, one in a state of painful anxiety is said to be put upon, or to come through, the heckle-pins, S.

TANTONIE BELL. Prob. St. Anthony's bell.

He had to sell the Tantonie bell,
And pardons therein was.

Spec. Godly Songs, p. 6.

"St. Anthony's bell, hung about the necks of animals," Lord Hailes.

Fr. tantan, "the bell that hangs about the neck of a cow," &c., Cotgr. It seems very doubtful, however, if this has any relation to St. Anthony. It seems rather from Fr. tinton-er, tintouin-er, to resound; whence perhaps tingtang, a term often used by children to denote the sound made by the ringing of a bell. The origin is Lat. tintinn-o-are, to ring; whence tintinnabulum, a little bell. C. B. tant, the chord of a musical instrument.

It is possible, however, that the term refers to St. Anthony. For Tanton Fair signifies "St. Anthony's Fair."

Archdeacon Nares has given a curious proof of a similar elision, in pointing out the origin of the E. adj. Tawdry. This, he says, is a vulgar corruption of St. Audrey, or St. Ethelreda. It implies that the things denominated tawdry, "had been bought at the fair of St. Audrey, where gay toys of all sorts were sold." This fair was held in the isle of Ely.

"And does your Honour think—that will do as weel as I were to take my tap in my lap, and slip my ways hame again on my ain errand?" Heart M. Loth., iv. 9.

2. [To set off in haste]; as, "She took her tap in her lap," she went off in a great hurry, Ettr. For.; [syn. "she took hir fit in hir han," Ayrs.]

TAP-COAT, s. A great coat, one that goes uppermost, q. on the top of others, Dumfr.

"He was—weel arrayed; for he had twa tap coats and a plaid on." Blackw. Mag., Jan. 1821, p. 406.

TAP-KNOT, s. A knot or bunch of ribbons, worn as an ornament in a woman's cap or bonnet, S.

And our bride's maidens wer na few,
Wi' tap knots, lug-knots, a' in blew.

Muirland Willie, Herd's Coll., ii. 76.

TAP-PICKLE, s. 1. The uppermost grain in a stalk of oats, S.

Green-coated fairies, filgins' fain,
Jump the solitary glen,
Or drive the ceaseless clacking mill,
On the distant sounding hill,
Grunding their tap-pickle melder.

Donald and Flora, p. 190.

2. It is used by Burns rather in an indelicate sense.

TAP, TAIL, nor MANE. This phrase is used concerning an unintelligible account of any thing; "I dinna ken tap, tail, nor mane o't," S.

"He rambled through the whole 58th chapter of Isaiah; but his sermon had neither top, tail, nor mane, he had not one material sentence." Walker's Passages, p. 62.

It seems to have been borrowed from the different external marks by which a man knows his own horse or cow, by the head, mane, and tail. To some, however, it may seem that the second term should be written main, as denoting the body or main part.

TAP, adj. Excellent. V. TOP.

TAPEE, s. 1. The name given a few years ago to the forepart of the hair when put up with pins, S.

2. A small cushion of hair worn by old women, in what is called the open of the head, for keeping up their hair, Ayrs.

Fr. toupet, Isl. topp-r, crista, vertex vel crines capitia.

TAPER-TAIL, adv. Topsy-turvy, South of S.; [syn. tapsalterie.]

Fowk canna aye get just what they wad hae,
Yet d'ye na think that's ae great luck however?
For war't the contrair but for ha'f a day,
The warl wad a' gang taper-tail thegither.

T. Scott's Poems, p. 365.

Apparently q. tap, i.e., top, o'er tail.

TAPPENIE. A term used in calling a hen, Gall.

"Ye ken the cry of the Galloway dames to their stray hens when the Gypsies light their fires i' the woods, 'Chuckie, chuckie, tappennie,' say I may—our new come neighbours like feathered flesh ower weel." Blackw. Mag., May 1830, p. 163.

Apparently a corr. of tap-hennie, q. tappit-hen.

[TAPPIN, s. A tuft, a crest, S. O.]

[TAPPIT, TAPPITY, adj. Crested; as, a tap-pit-hen, q. v., S.]

TAPSALTEERIE, TAPSIE-TEERIE, adv. Topsy-turvy, Ayrs.

But gie me a canny hour at een,
My arms about my dearie, O;
An' warly cares, an' warly men,
May a' gae tapsalterie, O!

Burns, iii. 283.

Tapsie-teerie is the pron. in Roxb.

Prob., the origin of Topsy-turvy, is, as given by Skinner, Tops in turcs, vertices seu capita in cespice. But although the term ethelturf, or tyrf, occurs in A.-S. in the sense of patrium solum; it does not appear that either A.-S. tyrf, or E. turf, has been commonly used as denoting the ground or soil. Perhaps the latter part of the word is connected with Teut. duera, Franc. derne, A.-S. thweor, Isl. thwor, Su.-G. twæor, Dan. twær, oblique, awry, across. Duarairej, in Belg. still denotes a cross way, Dan. twæreej, id. Thus the phrase might originally be, q. tops twæreej, or tops-al-twæreej, "the heads all the wrong way," turned upside down.

TAP, s. To sell by Tap, understood as signifying to sell by auction or outcry.

"Item, that na commoun cremaris of the toune wee to sell be tap ony hammermans work, nor regrait it agane till wther mens use." Seill of Caus, Edin. 2 May, 1483, MS.

Perhaps it rather signifies to sell by retail; Teut. tapp-en, minutatim vendere, cauponari.

It occurs, perhaps in a similar sense, in the following passage:

"Wyttalis that cumis to this burgh other be see or land, quhilk beis tappit with the land mett, pay the duty of the hand bell." Aberd. Reg., V. 16.

TO TAPE, v. a. To make any thing, although little, go a great way, to use sparingly, S. synon. hain.

Then let us grip our bliss mair sicker,
And tape our heal and sprightly liquor,
Which sober tane, maks wit the quicker,
And sense mair keen.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 378.

Erroneously printed tap, which suggests an idea almost directly the reverse.

"Ye sall hae a' my skill and knowledge to gar the siller gang far—I'll tape it out weel—I ken how to gar the birkies tak short fees, and be glad o' them too." Heart M. Loth., i. 323.

Isl. eg teppr, obstruo, obturo; tept-r, cohibitus, shut up, restrained; tepping, restraint; G. Andr., p. 238. Su.-G. taepp-a, to shut, to stop up, to fill up blanks in a hedge; taeppa, a field hedged on all sides. This etymon receives confirmation from the similar use of hain, which originally signifies, to hedge in, to inclose by a hedge.

TAPEIS, s. Tapestry; Fr. tapis.

—Thy beddis soft, and tapeis fair,
Thy treitting, and gud cheir;

Gif I the treuth wald now declair,
I wait thow hes no peir.

Maitland Poems, p. 257.

Chaucer uses tapiser, for a maker of tapestry.

TAPESSARIE, s. Tapestry; Fr. tapisserie.

"Item, five pece of fyno tapessarie of the historie of Tobie garnest." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 50.

TAPETIS, s. pl. Tapestry.

Amang proude tapetis and mighty riall apparall,
Hir place sche tuke, as was the gise that tyde.

Doug. Virgil, 35, 22.

Teut. tapij, Lat. tapetes.

TAPETLESS, adj. Heedless, foolish. V. under TABETS.

TAPISHT, part. pa. In a lurking state.

The hart, the hind, the fallow deare,
Are tapisht at their rest.

A. Hume, Chron. S. P., iii. 338.

Apparently from Fr. tap-ir, to hide, to keep close;
tapiess-ant, hiding one's self; lurking, squatting.

TAPLOCH, TAWPLOCH, s. "A giddy-brained girl," given as the same with Tatopie, Gall. Enc. Dan. taabelig, foolish. V. TAUPIE.

TAPONE-STAFF, s. The stave, in a barrel, in which the bung-hole is.

"That no barrel be sooner made and blown, but the Coupers Birn be set thereon, on the tapone-staff thereof, in testimony of the sufficiency of the tree." Acta Char. II., 1661, c. 33.

It seems doubtful whether it has received this name from the cork, or plug that is used for filling the bung-hole. This by coopers is called the tap, S. Perhaps originally the tapping-staff, i.e., the stave in which the orifice is made for drawing off liquor.

The term blown refers to the mode of trying whether a cask be tight. A little water is put into it. Then, the head being fixed on, a small hole is bored, by means of which the vessel is filled with as much air as it can contain. The effect is, that, if there be the least chink, the force of air makes the water bubble through it.

TAPOUN, s. A ramification, or long fibre at the root of a plant of a tree, S. B.

I have met with it in print, only as used metaph., with respect to Bishops.

"All here, praised be God, goes according to our prayers, if we would be quit of bishops; about them we are all in perplexity. We trust God will put them down; but the difficulty to get all the tapouns of their roots pulled up, is yet insuperable by the arm of man." Baillie's Lett., i. 241.

Perhaps from Dan. tap, a hollow tube; or Belg. tapp-en, to draw out, as these fibres extend themselves so far.

TAPPIE-TOURIE, s. 1. Any thing raised very high to a point, S.; synon. with Tap-pitourie, Tappie-tourock, Ayrs.

"There was, as Tibby described it, a tappie-tourie of hens in the middle, a hundred weight of black puddings graced one corner, and an enormous ham another." Petticoat Tales, i. 337.

2. The plug of paste which fills the opening in the top of a pie, ibid.

"If I were in your place.—I would gie him the tappie-tourock o' the pyc, and the best leg o' the fat hen." Sir A. Wylie, iii. 151.

TAPPIE-TOUSIE, s. A sort of play among children, S.

In this sport, one taking hold of another by the forelock of his hair, says to him—

"Tappie Tappie tousie, will ye be my man?"

If the other answers in the affirmative, the first says—

"Come to me then, come to me then;"

giving him a smart pull towards him by the lock which he holds in his hand. If the one, who is asked, answers in the negative, the other gives him a push backward, saying—

"Gae frae me then, gae frae me then."

The literal meaning of the terms is obvious. The person asked is called Tappie-tousie, q. dishevelled head, from Tap, and Tousie, q. v. It may be observed, however, that Su.-t. tap, signifies a lock or tuft of hair. Haertapp, floccus capillorum; Ihre, p. 857.

But the thing that principally deserves our attention, is the meaning of this play. Like some other childish sports, it evidently retains a singular vestige of very ancient manners. It indeed represents the mode in which one received another as his bondman.

"The thrille kind of nativitie, or bondage, is, quhen one frie man, to the end he may have the maintenance of one great and potent man, randers himselfe to be his bond-man, in his court, be the haire of his forehead; and gif he thereafter withdrawes himselfe, and flees away fra his maister, or denyes to him his nativitie: his maister may proue him to be his bond-man, be ane assise, before the Justice; challengand him, that he, sic ane day, sic ane yeare, compeired in his court, and there yeikled himselfe to him to be his slaue and bond-man. And quhen any man is adjudged and decerned to be a native or bond-man to any maister; the maister may take him be the nose, and reduce him to his former slavery." Quon. Attach., c. 56, s. 7.

This form, of rendering one's self by the hair of the head, seems to have had a monkish origin. The heathenish rite of consecrating the hair, or shaving the head, was early adopted among Christians, either as an act of pretended devotion, or when a person dedicated himself to some particular saint, or entered into any religious order. Hence it seems to have been adopted as a civil token of servitude. Thus those, who entered into the monastic life, were said capillos ponere, and per capillos se tradere. In the fifth century, Clovis committed himself to St. Germer by the hair of his head; Vit. S. Germer, ap. Carpentier, vo. Capilli. Those, who thus devoted themselves, were called the servants of God, or of any particular saint.

This then being used as a symbol of servitude, we perceive the reason why it came to be viewed as so great an indignity to be laid hold of by the hair. He, who did so, claimed the person as his property. Therefore, to seize, or to drag one by the hair, comprehendere, or trahere per capillos, was accounted an offence equal to that of charging another with falsehood, and even with striking him. The offender, according to the Frisic laws, was fined in two shillings; according to those of Burgundy, also in two; but if both hands were employed, in four. Leg. Fris., ap. Lindenbrog, Tit. 22, s. 64. Leg. Burgund., Tit. 5, s. 4. According to the laws of Saxony, the fine amounted to an hundred and twenty shillings; Leg. Sax., cap. 1, s. 7, ibid. Some other statutes made it punishable by death; Du Cange, col. 243. V. HUSBANIA.

It has been seen, that the custom of laying hold of the forelock most probably originated from a rite early introduced into the Christian Church, of persons devoting themselves to God, or to some saint, by the hair of the head. It, therefore, seemed worthy of inquiry, if antiquity afforded any vestige to the harsh mode of treating these, in this sport, who wish to retain their liberty. It was thought most likely that something analogous might be found in the mode of manumitting a bondman among the ancient Romans. We find, accordingly, that the first thing the master did, in granting manumission, was to whirl his servant around, in gyrum servum agere. This custom is referred to by Persius.

—Hen steriles veri quibus una Quiritem
Virtigo facit. — Sat. v. 75.

Verterit hunc dominus, momento turbinis exit
Marcus Dama. Ibid. 78.

Seneca also mentions the same custom, Ed. 8, and Quintilian, Decl. 312. The reason assigned for this gyration is, that thus the person manumitted was symbolically declared to be at liberty to go whatever way he pleased. Besides this, in the act of turning his servant round, the master gave him a stroke on the face with his hand. Inter vertendum alapa faciem ipsius percutiebat Dominus. Cornut, ad Pers. loc. cit. and Isidor. ix. 4. The consul and poet Claudian speaks of this stroke as given on the forehead.

—Pulsata fronte recedit. iv. 6. 11.

In the push given, in the childish sport of our country, to him who refuses to become the vassal of another, there is an obvious relique of this Roman rite in manumission. V. Pitisc. Lex. vo. Manumissio.

TAPPILOORIE, s. Any thing raised high on a slight or tottering foundation, S.

[Evidently a corr. of tapple o'er, i.e., a thing likely to topple over.]

TAPPIN, s. 1. A tuft, as that on the crown of a bonnet, S.O.

My father's thrown his bonnet in the pot!

—Nought o't but the tappin's to be seen.
Falls of Clyde, p. 108.

Probably a dimin. from tap, the top.

2. The bunch of feathers on the head of a cock or hen, Dumfr.

3. Expl. "head," ibid.

Drink maks the auldest swack and strappen;

Gars care forget the ills that happen—

The blate look spruce—

And e'en the thowless cock their tappin

And craw fu' crouse.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 16.

It seems to be transferred to the head from the tuft of a cock.

TAPPIT, TAPPINT, part. adj. Crested, S. The latter perhaps properly belongs to the south of S.

TAPPIT HEN. 1. A hen with a tuft of feathers on her head, S.

2. A cant phrase, denoting a tin measure containing a quart, so called from the knob on the lid, as being supposed to resemble a crested hen. V. Gl. Sibb.

Weel she loo'd a Hawick gill,
And leugh to see a tappit hen.

Ritson's S. Songs, l. 263.

V. DUBBLE.

3. It has been expl. as still of a larger size.

"Their hostess—appeared with a huge pewter measuring pot, containing at least three English quarts, familiarly denominated a Tappit-hen." Waverley, l. 148.

4. This term denoted a large bottle of claret, holding three Magnums or Scots pints, Aberd.

TAP-ROOTED, adj. Deep-rooted, having one strong stem-like root.

"Clover—being a tap or deep rooted plant, it draws the greatest part of its nourishment from parts of the earth far below the reach of the plough or the horizontal roots of the barley." Maxwell's Sci. Trans., p. 205.

"The longer and stronger both be, the better will the ground be covered and rotted, and the less demand will this tap-rooted plant make upon that part of the earth where the horizontal roots of grain pasture for their food." Ibid. 211.

Tap seems used as denoting the surface of the soil, as if synon. with CRAP, q. v. But the sense is rendered obscure, tap-rooted being given as if it were synon. with deep-rooted.

TAP-SWARM, s. 1. The first swarm which a hive of bees casts off, S.

2. Applied metaphorically to a body of people leaving their former connexion.

"Mrs. Buchan's squad, the tap-swarm of the Relief, after traversing Nithsdale and Galloway, in search of the New Jerusalem, have returned to their former abodes and occupations." Agri. Surv. Ayr., p. 163.

TAPTEE, A state of eager desire. "What a tap-tee he is in!" How eager he is! Lanarks.

Isl. taep-ta, digitis pedum aegre insisti. Perhaps it is merely a corruption of S. tiptae, q. "standing on tiptoe," in a state of eager expectation.

TAPSMAN, s. A servant who has the principal charge, other servants being subjected to his orders; as, "the tapsman of a drove," Dumfr.

TAPTHRAWN, adj. Perverse, obstinate, S. q. having the tap, i.e., top or head distorted; or in allusion to the hair of the head lying in an awkward and unnatural manner, S.

TAPTOO, s. 1. A gaudy ornament on the head, Ayrs.

2. To Put one into a Taptoo, to excite one's wrath, to produce violent passion, ibid.

This, in sense 2. at least, may be merely a corr. of the phrase Tap o' Tow, a top of tow, q. v. It is, however, also pronounced Tiptoo. V. TAPTEE.

TAP-TREE, s. A solid and rounded piece of wood, resembling the shank of a besom, put into the bung-hole of a masking-vat or cask, formerly used for drawing off the liquor; q. "that by which the tree or barrel is tapped," or from tap, a faucet.

"Put a cork or dottle in the under end;—or you may make use of a tap-tree, and then you need not a cork. Let the water stand four hours upon the ashes; then take out your cork, or tap-tree, and have a tub below to receive the lee that comes off." Maxwell's Sel. Trana, p. 284.

- *To TAR, v. a. 1. To besmear with tar. This v. is often used metaph. in the phrase, "A' tarr'd wi' ae stick," all of the same kidney, or all characterised by the same spirit, &c., S.

—"If yon woman ye ca'd sister and you were ae parent's bairns, I was thinking ye might aiblins be tarr'd wi' ae stick." St. Johnstoun, ii. 200.

The allusion is to the bit of wood used as a brush for putting the tar-mark on sheep.

- [2. To tar the fingers to do a thing, to have the greatest difficulty in doing a thing; also, to be very unwilling to do it; generally said regarding wet, dirty work, West of S., Banffs.]

TAR-BUIST, s. The box in which the tar is kept with which sheep are marked, Roxb., Tweedd. V. BUIST.

To TAR, v. n. [Prob., to twitch, to pull about; to tig and tar, to tousle, to pat and pull about.]

To tar and tig, syn grace to thig,
That is a piteous preis.
Therefore bewar, baid the on far,
Sic chafwair for to prys:
To tig and tar, then get the war,
It is ill merchandys.

Balnevis, Evergreen, ii. 199.

I know not if this word bears a sense allied to Isl. taer-a, donare, sumptum facere; Su.-G. id. alere, nutrire; Teut. teer-en, victitari; epulari.

TARANS, s. pl. "Expl. children who have died before baptism;" Gl. Sibb.

"The little spectres called Tarans, or the souls of unbaptised infants, were often seen flitting among the woods and secret places, bewailing in soft voices their hard fate." Pennant's Tour in S., 1769, p. 157.

Gael. taran, the ghost of an unbaptised child, Shaw.

TARDIE, TAIRDIE, adj. Peevish, ill-humoured, sulky and sarcastical, Kinross.

We might view this as originally the same with Teut. taertigh, sour, A.-S. teart, id.; did not the term give some indication of affinity to TAIRN, a gibe, q. v.

TARETATHERS, s. pl. What is torn to shreds; as, "Tam got naething for his fechtin', but his coat into taretathers," Teviotd.; i.e., torn, from tear, and tatters.

TARGAT, TERGET, s. [1. A pendant, tassel, ornamental drop.]

"Item, ane bingar mail lyke ane 'M' with four dyaumonttis, and ane gryt perle."—"Item, ane riche targatt, with thre naikit images, sett all full of dyaumonttis." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 65.

Being conjoined with a kingar or hangar, it might seem to respect the royal armoury, meant rather for ornament than for use. But afterwards it appears that the targat was a sort of ornamental blazon worn in the royal bonnet or hat.

"Item, ane bonnet of velvot with ane targat set with ane gryt tabill dyaumont, tene [ten] plain dyaumonttis in settis of gold, xviii settis of perle," &c. Ibid. p. 67, 68.

"Item, ane targatt of gold with the ymage of our lady, estimat to viii crownis of wecht." Ibid. A. 1516, p. 27.

"Item, ane bonnet of blak velvott with ane tergat of the marnadin, hir tail of dyaumonttis," &c. Ibid. p. 68.

There hang nine targats at Johnie's hat,
And ilk ane worth three hundred pound.

Johnnie Armstrong, Minstrelsy Border, i. 63.

2. A tatter, a shred, S.

Hale interest for my fund can scantily now
Cleed a' my callant's backs, and stap their mou':—
Their duls in targets flaff upo' their backs.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 87.

V. CODROCH.

3. Targets of skate, long slices of this fish dried, Ang. synonym. tags.

Sw. taryad, torn; Isl. taryar, ramenta, chips. But the immediate origin is Su.-G. targ-a, minutis ictibus disscindere, to split by a repetition of light strokes; a frequentative from taer-a, terere. V. Ihre, vo. Sarys. Hence applied to denote a tassel. V. TARGAT s. 2.

To TARGAT, TARGATT, v. a. To ornament, to border with tassels.

"All things mislyked the precheors; they spack baldly against the targatting of thair tails, and against the rest of thair vanity; quhilk they affirmed sould provock God's vengeance, not only against those foolish wemen, bot against the hole realme." Knox's Hist., p. 330.

"Bot fie upon that knave Death, that will come quhiddir we will or not; and quhen he hes laid on his areist, the foull wormes will be busie with this fleach, be it never so fair and so tender: and the silly saull, I fear, sall be so feabill, that it can nyther cary with it gold, garnishing, targatting, pearl, nor precious stoues." Ibid., p. 334.

To TARGE, TAIRGE, v. a. 1. To beat, to strike, Perthis.

A.-S. theroc-an, "percutere, tundere, flagenare verberare; to strike, to knock, to beat, to thump;" Sonner. Teut. dersch-en, Su.-G. troeck a, id.

2. To keep in order, or under discipline, used metaph., S.

"Callum Beg—took this opportunity of discharging the obligation, by mounting guard over the hereditary tailor of Slioch nan Ivor; and, as he expressed himself, targat him tightly till the finishing of the job." Waverley, ii. 236.

3. To rate severely, to reprehend sharply, Roxb.

4. To cross-question, to examine accurately, Loth.

—"Now thinkin' ye might be black-fit, or her secretar', I was just wissin' o' a' things to see ye a wee gliff, that I micht targe ye." Saxon and Gael, i. 161, 163.

[I on the questions targe them tightly.

Burns, The Inventory, iv. 374.]

TAIRGIN, s. Severe examination or reprehension : as, "I'll gie him a tairgin," Roxb.

TARGE, s. Metaph. used in the sense of protection or defence.

"To thief and reaver he was sicker targe, and by the contrary a plain enemy to good men." Pittscottie, p. 43, Edit. 1768.

TARGED, part. adj. Shabby in appearance, tattered, Clydes.

TARICROCKE, TARICROOKE, s. A pitchfork, Shetl.

Isl. terre, porrigos, and krok, uncinus, q. to extend by means of an instrument hooked at the end. [The Shetl. pitchfork so called has the prongs at right angles with the shaft, and is used for gathering and spreading sea-weed as manure. V. Gl. Shetl.]

[TARLE, s. A small weak animal ; a little weak or lazy person, Banffs.]

[To TARLE, v. n. To be lazy, to work in a lazy or slovenly manner ; also, to be weak through illness, ibid. Tarloch is also used.]

TARLOCH, TARLOGH, adj. 1. Weak, peevish ; grumbling, Ayrs.

These senses are given in Gl. Surv. Ayrs., p. 693.

2. Slow at meat, loathing, squeamish, S.

3. Stormy ; as, "a tarlogh day," a rough stormy day, Linlithg.

Gael. doriaghlichte, ungovernable.

TARLOCH, TARLOGH, s. 1. [Anything small, weak, or worthless, Ayrs., Banffs.]; applied to a silly, inactive girl, Aberd.

C. B. torll-a signifies a slattern.

2. A sturdy brawling woman, generally giving the idea of a female tatterdemalion. It also includes that of filth.

It is commonly applied to beggars and the lowest people.

I charge the yit as I have ellis,
Be halle relickis, beidlis and bellis,
Be ormeitis that in desertis dwellis,
Be limitoris and tarlochis.

Philotus, S. P. R., iii. 47.

It is perhaps synon. with limitoris, with which it is conjoined ; and may have some connexion with Ir. and Gael. tarlodhiam, pron. gutturally, to collect, to bring together, to lay hold on.

TAR-LEATHER, s. V. MID-CUPPLE.

TARLIES, s. Lattice of a window, S. tirlers, Fr. treillis.

"Upon the pavement of the said gallerie he laid a fedder beil, and upon the windowes he affixt blak claithes, that his shaddow should not be seen, nor his feit hard quhen he went to and fro, and cuttit ane small hole in the tarlies, quhairby he might visie with his hagbute." Historie of K. James Sext, p. 75.

TARN, s. A mountain lake, S.

Each after each they glanced to sight,
As stars arise upon the night.

They gleamed on many a dusky tarn,
Haunted by the lonely eurn.

Lay of the Last Minstrel, p. 95.

"Tarn, a mountain lake ;" N. ibid.

Dr. Johna. has given this word as meaning "a pool." Grose defines A. Bor. "tarn, a lake or mere pool." North.

It is of Goth. origin ; Isl. tiorn, pl. tiarnir, stagnum, palus, Sw. tiarna synon. with moras ; Verel. ; tiarn, lacus, stagnum, lacuna ; G. Andr., p. 238. Sw. tiarn, "a pool, standing water ;" Wideg.

To TARRAGAT, v. a. To question, S.; evidently abbreviated from E. Interrogate.

[TARRAGATIN, s. Strict examination ; also, the act of examining strictly, S.]

TARRAN, s. A peevish ill-humoured person, Roxb. ; a variety of Tirran.

TARRIE, s. "A terrier-dog ;" Gl. Picken, Ayrs. Renfr. ; probably borrowed from the Fr. mode of pronouncing the latter part of the name of this species. Chien terrier, q. terrié. [It is used also as an adj., as, a tarrie dog.]

As we had naught but wearin' graith,
We clamb the braes like tarries.

Picken's Poems, 1783, p. 177.

To TARROW, v. n. 1. To delay.

This semple counsale, brudir, tak at me ;
And it to cun perqueir se nocht thou tarrow,
Bettir but stryfe to leif allone in le,
Than to be machit with a wicket marrow.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 122.

The S. Prov. seems used in this sense ; "Be still taking and tarrowing ; take what you can get, though not all that is due ;" Kelly, p. 63, i.e., take what is offered, and allow time for what remains. Also, that, "Lang tarrowing takes all the thank away ;" Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 23.

2. To haggle, to hesitate in a bargain.

He that wes wont to beir the barrowis,
Betwixt the baik-hous and the brew-hous,
On twenty shilling now he tarrows,
To ryd the hé gait by the plewis.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 144.

i.e., he hesitates as to the sufficiency of the sum.

Tarrow is still sometimes used as signifying that one murmurs at one's allowance of food, &c., S.

[An' I hae seen their coggie fou,
That yet hae tarrow't at it.

Burns, iii. 98.]

3. To feel reluctance, [to be displeased ; to grumble.]

But she's as weak as very water grown,
And tarrows at the broust that she had brown.

Ross's Helenore, p. 60.

—Nane of us cud find a marrow,

So sally forfairn were we ;

Fouk sud no at any thing tarroie,

Whose chance looked naething to be.

Song, ibid., p. 150.

"To loath, to refuse," Gl. Ross. This is perhaps more strongly expressed than the term admits. Children are said to tarrow at their meat, when they delay taking it, especially from some pettish humour, or do it so slowly that it would seem they felt some degree of reluctance. It is rendered, "take pet," Gl. Ritson. "A tarrowing bairn was never fat ;" S. Prov., Kelly, p. 13.

"He tarrowes early that tarrowes on his kail;" S. Prov. "The Scots, for their first dish have broth (which they call kail) and their flesh-meat, boil'd or roasted, after. Spoken when men complain before they see the utmost that they will get;" Kelly, p. 135. Tarrie and tarrow are used in this sense as synon.

But ye'll repent ye, if his love grow cauld ;—
Like dawted wean that tarries at its meat,
That for some feckless whim will orp and greet.—
The dawted bairn thus takes the pet,
Nor eats tho' hunger crave,
Whimpers and tarrowes at its meat. —

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 76, 77.

"To refuse what we love, from a cross humour;" Gl. ibid.

The prep. of had formerly been used instead of at.
"I am sure it is sin to tarrow of Christ's good meat." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 19.

4. To complain; I darena tarrow, I dare not complain; Clydes.

5. [To be sick and weakly]; applied also to springing corn turned sickly and not advancing, Banffs., Gl. Surv. Moray.

Perhaps from A.-S. teor-ian, ateor-ian, eteor-ian, to fail, to tarry, to desist or give over. Celt. tario, to tarry, Bullet.

* TARRY, adj. 1. Of or belonging to tar, S.; as in E.

2. Applied to those whose hands resemble tar in its adhesive power, light-fingered, S.

"The gipsies hae tarry fingers, and ye would need an ee in your neck to watch them." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 158.

TARRY-BREEKS, s. "A sailor;" S., Gl. Burns; a low word. It is frequently used in a proverbial phrase, intimating that those of the same profession should be exempted from expense by their brethren.

—Tarry-brecks should ay go free.

Dominie Deposed, p. 43.

TARRY-FINGERED, TARRY-HANDIT, adj. Dishonest, disposed to carry off by stealth, S. from tarry, of or belonging to tar, because of its adhesive quality.

Man sets the stamp; but we can tell
He's aften taury-haun'd himsel.

Picken's Poems, i. 65.

"Taury-haun'd, addicted to pilfering;" Gl. ibid.

TARSIE-VERSIE, adj. A term applied to walking backwards, Roxb.

Fr. tergiverser, to flinch, to shrink back.

TARTAN, TARTANE, s. Woollen cloth or silk, checkered, or cross-barred with threads of various colours, S.

Syne schupe thame up, to lowp, ovr leiss,

Twa tabartis of the tartane;

Thay complit nocht quhat thair clowtis wes,—

Quhan sewit thaim on, in certain.

Symnyne & his Bruder, Chron. Sc. Poetry, i. 360.

It would seem, that the ancient Gauls were much attached to parti-coloured garments; and, as their posterity of the lower classes still do, deemed the dress honourable in proportion to the variety of colours. This appears from an old law mentioned by Ohalloran; although we must be allowed to entertain some doubts with respect to the era affixed to it.

"The respect paid to letters, in Ireland, extended to its professors, who were held, in rank and estimation, next to the blood royal; as appears by a sumptuary law passed—about the year of the world 3050, which allows to Ollamhs, or Doctors in different sciences, but one colour less in their garments than to the princes, viz. six; the knights and prime nobility being allowed but five; the Beatachs, or keepers of constant open house for all strangers, four; military subalterns, three; soldiers, two; and artizans and plebeians, one. This custom of many coloured garments, we find to be extremely ancient: thus we read in Genesis, 'Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was the son of his old age, and he made him a coat of many colours.'" Introd. to Hist. and Antiq. of Irel., p. 19, 20.

It would seem, that the bars or stripes of fur, by which the parliamentary robes of peers are still marked, as distinguishing their rank, is a vestige of this ancient custom.

The earliest mention made of tartan, as far as I have observed, is in the reign of James III. in the Acc. of John Bishop of Glasgow, Treasurer of the king, A. 1474.

"Item, fra Will. of Rend, 7 Mail, and deliverit to Caldwell, halve an elne of double tartan, to lyne riding collhrs to the Queen, price . . . 0 8 0."

Borthwick's Brit. Antiq., p. 139.

It was also used "for my Lorde Prince."

"For 4 elne and ane halve of tartane, for a sparwort about his credill, price elne 10s. . . . 2 5 0

—"Ane elne and ane half of blew tartane, to lyne his gowne of a clath of gold. . . . 1 10 0."

Ibid., p. 142, 143.

From its being called blew, it appears probable that the term was not then appropriated to variegated stuffs.

Lord Hailes seems disposed to give the use of tartan a very early origin in our country. Having quoted the Acta Sanctorum, in proof that our good Queen Margaret used her influence to get the inhabitants of S. to wear garments cum diversis coloribus, he adds; "That party-coloured stuff coloured tartan, which has been long a favourite with us, was perhaps introduced into Scotland by Margaret." Annals, i. p. 37, N. A. 1093.

Tartan is worn both by men and women in the Highlands, for that piece of dress called the Plaid. In Angus, and some other Lowland counties, where it is not worn by men, women of the lower, and some even of the middle ranks, still wear a large veil of this stuff, rather of a thin texture, as a covering for the head and shoulders. The Philibeg also, or Kilt, worn by the Highlanders instead of breeches, is generally of Tartan.

Notwithstanding the zeal of Ramsay, in ascribing the highest antiquity to the Plaid under this name, (V. his poem entitled Tartana, or the Plaid); there is no evidence that this word was anciently used in Scotland. It is not Gaelic or Irish. It seems to have been imported, with the manufacture itself from France or Germany. Fr. tiretaine signifies linsey-woolsey, or a kind of it worn by the peasants in France. Teut. tiereteyn, id. vestis lino et lana confecta, pannus linolaneus, vulgo linistima, linostema, burellum; Kilian. Bullet mentions Arn. tyrtenu as of the same meaning with Fr. tiretaine, which he calls a species of droynet, our druggel. L. B. tiretanus occurs in the same sense in ancient MSS. This, according to Du Cange, is pannus lana filoque textus. He quotes the Chartulary of Corbillum, or Nantes, as containing the following article. Item unq fardeaulx de Tiretaine vers doit 11 sols ob. These linsey-woolsey cloths were most probably particoloured. But although this should not have been the case, the word, originally signifying cloth of different materials, when it passed into another country, might, by a natural transition, be used to denote such cloths as contained different colours. Or, although the stuff first used in Scotland, under the name of Tartan, might be merely the Tiretaine of the continent; when the natives of this country imitated the foreign fabric, they might reckon it an improvement to checker the cloth with the most glaring colours. Tiretaine is thus described by Thierry, Le Frere's edition, 1573. De la Tiretaine, Picard du telon, Coenomanis, Du Beinge, Northman. The passage, I suppose, should have been printed thus. De la Tiretaine, Picard Du Telon, Coenomanis; Du Beinge, Northman.; as intimating that this cloth was called Tiretaine in Picardy, Telon in Maine, and Beinge in Normandy.

Gael. braec is the term used to denote what is particoloured. What we call a tartan plaid is Gael. breacan. Perhaps Gallia Braccata may have received its designation from the circumstance of a particoloured dress being worn by its inhabitants, rather than from that of their wearing breeches.

TARTAN, adj. Of or belonging to tartan, S.

O! to see his tartan trouze,
Bonnet blue, and laigh-heel'd shoes!
Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 107.

TARTAN-PURRY, s. "A sort of pudding made of red colewort chopped small, and mixed with oatmeal;" Gl. Shirr. Aberd., p. 37. [Tart-and-Purrie.]

I would have gi'en my half year's fee,
Had Maggy then been jesting me,
And tartan-purrie, meal and bree,
Or butt'ry brose,
Been kilting up her petticoats
Aboon her hose.

Forbes's Domestic Depos'd, p. 35.

V. PURRY.

The last part of the word is evidently Teut. porreye, purreye, jus sive cremor pisorum; Fr. purée, sap, juice, La purée de pois, pease pottage or the liquor of pease. Perhaps the term tartan is prefixed, because the coleworts used are parti-coloured. It may, however, be softened from Teut. taerte-paense, testum, q. soup made in an earthen pot.

[Tart-and-Purrie, porridge made with the water in which cabbage has been boiled," Gl. Orkn. and Shetl.]

A literary friend has suggested, that it may be from Fr. tarte en purée. The French use the phrase, tarte en pomme, to denote a tart made with apples. But whether the other phrase is used for one made with pease-pottage, I cannot say.

TARTAR, s. Apparently used in the same sense with tartan, as denoting chequered cloth.

"Item, a covering of variand purpur tartar, browdin [embroidered] with thrissillis & a unicornie." Inventories, A. 1438, p. 11.

O. Fr. tartaire, however, is expl. Sorte d'étoffe de Tartarie; Roquefort.

To TARTLE at one, v. n. 1. To view a person or thing with hesitation as not recognising the object with certainty, Loth. Perth. "I tartled at him," I could not with certainty recognise him.

2. To boggle, as a horse does, Loth.

3. To hesitate as to a bargain.

"A toom purse makes a tartling merchant;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 17.

4. To hesitate from scrupulosity; denoting an act of the mind.

Some gentlemen, that's apt to tartle,
Some seem two sentences to tartle,—
Contained in this ancient deed.

Cleland's Poems, p. 86.

Perhaps the second line was written, Seem at two sentences, &c.; as the repetition of some mars the sense.

Thir Gentlemen have weasands narrow,
That makes them tartle, flinch, and tarrow.
A medicine I will prescribe,
And paun my thrapple it shall thrive.
Send them a while to other nations,
Whence their veins may have dilatations.
When they return, they'll you request
To have the favour of the Tes.

Ibid., p. 104.

Formed from Ital. tartagliare, to stutter, to stammer, used obliquely. The term may have been imported by some of our early travellers, who had seen the exhibition of the Commedie dell'arte, so long a favourite with the Italians, one of the standing characters of which was named Tartaglia, as representing a stutterer. V. Barretti's Account of Italy, i. 172. 175.

To TARTLE, v. a. To recognise, to observe; as, "He never tartled me," Roxb.

TARTLE, s. The act of hesitation in the recognition of a person or thing, Loth.

TARTUFFISH, adj. Sour, sullen, stubborn, Renfrews.

To TARVEAL, v. a. 1. To fatigue, S. B.

The never a rag we'll be seeking o't;
Gin ye anes begin, ye'll tarveal's night and day,
Sae 'tis vain ony mair to be speaking o't.
Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 134.

2. To plague, to vex; Gl. Sibb.

This seems merely a corr. of Fr. travailler, to labour; to vex, to trouble; Ital. travagliare. This Verel. deduces from Isl. thrael-a, Sw. traal-a, duro labore exerceri, p. 284. Isl. taarfelle, however, signifies illachrymior, G. Andr. to lament, bewail.

It is not improbable that this is originally the same with Torfe, v. n., to pine away, and therefore that it should be traced to the same source.

TARVEAL, adj. Ill-natured, fretful, S.B.

"The vile tarveal sleeth o' a coachman began to yark the peer beasts sae, that you wou'd hae heard the sough o' ilka thudd afore it came down." Journal from London, p. 5.

TARY, s. Delay.

The thickest sop or rout of all the preis,
There as maist tary was, or he wald ceis,
This Laus all to sparpellit and inuadis.
Doug. Virgil, 331, 44.

"The cauf of his tary behind." Aberd. Reg. A. 1548, V. 20.

TARYSUM, adj. Slow, lingering.

Almychty Juno hauand reuth by this
Of hir lang sorow, and tarysum dede, I wys, Hir maide Iris from the heuin has send
The thrawand saul to lous.

Doug. Virgil, 124, 32.

[TARY, TARYE, s. and v. V. under TAR, v.]

To TARY, TARYE, v. a. 1. To distress, to persecute.

In Twlybothy ane il spyryte
A Crystyn man that tyme taryit.
Of that spyryte he wes then
Delyveryd throuch that haly man.

Wyntown, v. 12, 1211.

Sa. G. tary-a, lacerare.

TARY, TARYE, s. Vexation, trouble.

—For folys is to mary,
Fra tyme that bayth thair strenth and nature falis,
And tak ane wyf to bring thameself in tarye.
Mailland Poems, p. 314.

2. To impede, to hold back, to keep at bay ;
[also, to bear, to endure.]

"When they saw the febilnes of thare god, for one take him be the heillis, and dadding his heid to the caleay, left Dagoun without heid or handis, and said,
"Fy apoun the, thou young Sanct Geile, thy father wald have taryed four suche." Knox's Hist., p. 95.

TASCAL MONEY. The money formerly given in the Highlands to those who should discover cattle that had been driven off, and make known the spoilers.

"Besides tracking the cows,—there was another means whereby to recover them ; which was, by sending persons into the country suspected, and by them offering a reward, (which they call Tascal Money) to any one who should discover the cattle, and those who stole them." Burt's Letters, ii. 243.

Perhaps from Gael. taiseall-am, to view, observe, reconnoitre ; Shaw.

[To TASE, v. a. V. TAIS.]

To TASH, v. a. and n. 1. To soil, to tarnish, to injure, S. Fr. tach-er, id.

But now they're threadbare worn,—
They're tashed like, and sair torn,
And clouted sair on ilka knee.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 214.

2. Often used to denote the injury done to character by evil-speaking, S.

3. To upbraid, S. B.

4. To fatigue ; as, to tash dogs, to weary them out in hunting, Roxb.

To TASH about, v. a. To throw any thing carelessly about, so as to injure it, Aberd.

TASH, TACHE, TASHIN, s. 1. A stain, a blemish, S. Tache, Chaucer, a blot, Fr. id.

2. A stain in a metaph. sense ; disgrace, an affront, S.

"Mr. Hog was one from whom the greatest opposition to Prelacy was expected, and therefore a tash must be put on him at this Synod." Wodrow, i. 41.

TASK, s. The angel or spirit of any person,
Ross-shire.

"The ghosts of the dying, called tasks, are said to be heard, their cry being a repetition of the moans of the sick.—The corps follow the tract led by the tasks to the place of interment ; and the early or late completion of the prediction is made to depend on the period of the night at which the task is heard." Statist.

Acc., iii. 380.

Gael. taise, dead bodies, ghosts ; Shaw.

TASKER, TASKAR, s. [A thresher] ; also,
a labourer who receives his wages in kind, according to the quantity of work he performs, who has a fee for a certain task,
Loth.

[A.-S. Therscan, to thresh ; and tasker is a corr. of tarsker or thersker.]

"The taskers are those who are employed in threshing out the corn ; and they receive one boll of every 25, or the twenty-fifth part for their labour ; and this has been their fixed and stated wages, as far back as can be remembered." P. Whittingham, E. Loth.
Statist. Acc., ii. 353.

This word has been long used in our country.

"Gif ather of the saidis parties sall happin to sum-mound ony sic persounis alledgit complices, and speciallie puir and miserabill persounis, sic as plewmen, fischaris, taskaris, cottaris, or uther puir laboraris of the ground, and will not accuse thame thairefter ;—
the partie—sall refund, content and pay to ilk persoun that beis clengit, his expensis," &c. A. 1535, Balfour's Pract., p. 307.

"He that is tasker in ony man's barn, reassaving profit fra him thairfor, may not be witness in his cause." Ibid. p. 377.

"The reaper or schearer cutteth it doune.—The tasker, or the foot of the ox treadeth it out." Ressoning betuix Crosraguell and J. Knox, Prol. ii. b.

Andro Hart, has tasker in his edition of Bruce, where threscher occurs in the [Edin.] MS.

Then sould he come with his two men,
Before that folke sould not him ken.
He sould a mantle haue old and bare,
And a sailie, as he a tasker were.

Bruce, p. 92.

But he has made nonsense of the passage, by reading before that folke, &c. instead of,

Bot, for that men suld nocht him ken,
He suld a mantill haif, &c.—

and by putting a full point after ken.

[The Camb. MS. has taskar in this passage (Barbour,
v. 318). V. Prof. Skeat's Edit.]

"Tasker, a thresher. Norf." Grose.

TASKIT, part. adj. Much fatigued with hard work, S. ; [syn. forjeskit.]

TASKIT-LIKE, adj. Having the appearance of being greatly fatigued, S. B.

Right baugh, believe it as ye will,
Leuks Scotland, taskit-like, an' dull, &c.

Tarras's Poems, p. 133.

TASS, TASSE, TASSIE, s. A cup or goblet.
V. TAIS.

TASSEL. Sair Tassel. V. TAISSE.

TASSES, s. pl. [An errat. for Tassee, a clasp, a fibula.]

Mon in the mantell, that sittis at thi mete,
In pal pured to pay, prodly pight.

The tasses were of topas, that were thereto right.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 2.

"Cups," Pink. V. TATS. [But this is a mistake. So also is bags or purses which Dr. Jamieson suggested. Tasses is an errat. for Tassec, a clasp, a fibula; and the line should run thus;—

The tassec was of topai, that ther to was tighte.

Teut. tatee, a buckle. V. TRES.]

[To TASTE, v. a. To test, to try, Barbour, ix. 388. Mid. E. tasten, taste, id.]

TASTER, s. [A species of sea-fowl.]

Avis marina Taster dicta. Sibb. Scot., p. 22.

It is uncertain what bird is meant; not the Tyste surely, because the author mentions this a few lines below.

TASTIE, adj. 1. Having an agreeable relish, palatable, S.

—Fisher lads gang out wi' lights,
An' horrid liesters,
To gust the gab of gentler wights
Wi' tasty reisters.

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 5.

2. Displaying taste; as applied to dress, &c., S.

TATCH, s. A fringe; a shoulder-knot, Ettr. For., Tweedd.; Fr. attache, "a thing fastened on, or tied unto, another thing;" Cotgr.

To TATCH, v. a. To drive a nail so far only as to give it a slight hold, Aberd.

To TATCH in, v. a. To fix slightly by a nail, ib.

To TATCH thegether, v. a. To join together in a slight manner, by tatching in a nail, as carpenters do, to try their work, ibid.

These are viewed as the original and proper senses of the v.; but it is sometimes used with greater latitude.

Prob. from Tache, the ancient form of E. Tack, a nail with a round head, or Teut. tactee, id. clavus umbellatus.

TATE, TAIT, TEAT, TATTE, s. A small portion of any thing; as a tate of woo, of lint; i.e., of wool, of flax, S.

—Fleas skip to the tate of woo,
Whilk slee Tod Lowrie hads without his moo.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 143.

An' tent them daily, e'en and morn,
Wi' teats o' hay, an' rips o' corn.

Burns, iii. 79.

It is applied to hair, as equivalent to lock, S.

Her hair in taits hung down upon her brow.

Ross's Helenore, p. 22.

—Apoun his chin feill chanos haris gray,
Lairt felterit tatis, with birand ene rede.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 45.

It is used by Skene as denoting a portion, or part divided from another.

"Like as ane forke hes twa graines, this precept hes ane alternative command of twa partes.—Itaque hoc praeceptum est furcatum,—quhilk is divided in twa taits or parts." De Verb. Sign. vo. Furche.

The following is given as a prognostic of approaching bad weather, according to the hereditary creed of the peasantry, in Galloway.

Unto her hovel, dropping through, the sow,
Presagefu' o' the blast, the strae in tates
Right carefully collects.—

Davidson's Seasons, p. 143.

Halderson gives Isl. taeta as signifying, 1. Lanugo, the down which is on herbs; and 2. Minimum quide, synon. with Dan. smule, a crumb. But Tate, or Tait, especially as it denotes a small portion of wool, may have had its origin from the Isl. v. tae, ta, explicare, which is used in a sense nearly connected; tac-a ull, carpere lanam, to pluck, draw out, to tease wool; Dan. tac-er, "to pick wool." Thusa tail might primarily signify, a small quantity of wool plucked from the animal, or drawn out. A.-S. te-on, as well as Moes.-G. link-an, trahere, seems to claim a common source with tac-a, and Su.-G. ti-a, explicare.

Sibb. defines it "lock of hair or wool, commonly matted;" deriving it from A.-S. getead, connexus, unitas. But the term does not necessarily include this idea; as appears from the use of the epithet felterit by the Bishop of Dunkeld. Su.-G. taatte, hodie significat pensum, vel quantum fuso simul imponitur, En lin-taatte, portio lini. Fenn. tutti, lhre. Sw. tott. totte, manipulus lini aut lanae, ab Isl. toc, Sw. to, tod, lanificium, tomentum; Seren. Thus it seems probable, that this word has had its origin from the pastoral life of our ancestors; when their ideas were greatly confined to their flocks, and many of their terms borrowed from these. V. Fk.

TATELOCK, s. A small lock of hair, wool, &c. matted together, Clydes.

TATH, TAITH, TATHING, s. 1. The dung of black cattle, S. tuid, Ang.

"There is a tradition that a priest lived here, who had a right to every seventh acre of Ladifron, and to the tathing (dung as left on the ground) every seventh night." P. Monimail, Fife, Statist. Acc., ii. 204.

Isl. tad, dung, manure; also taidfull, id. q. the falling of the tath.

2. "The luxuriant grass which rises in tufts where the dung of cattle has been deposited," Gl. Sibb. A tuft of such grass is called a tath, S.; [syn. gosk.]

"All grasses, which are remarkably rank and luxuriant, are called tath, by the stock farmers, who distinguish two kinds of it; water tath, proceeding from excess of moisture, and nolt tath, the produce of dung." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 468.

"In the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk," says Jacob, "the lords of manors claimed the privilege of having their tenants' flocks of sheep brought at night upon their own demesne lands, there to be folded for the improvement of the ground: which liberty was called by the name of Tath."

To this source must we trace the A.Bor. term, Tathy-grass, expl. by the intelligent Mr. Brocket, "short grass that has no seed, refuse grass." It has no connexion with the phrase tusfy grass. Grose has given Teathe as signifying "the dung of cattle, North."

Both the v. and verbal noun occur in O.E. "Tathyn londe. Stercoro. Stercoriso.—Tathinge of londe. Stercorizacio. Ruderacio." Prompt. Parv.

Isl. taeta expresses the very same idea: Foenum, lactaminis beneficio proveniens; G. Andr., p. 234.

The term tath had been anciently used in some parts of E. as Suffolk, Norfolk, &c. Dominicum hoc privilegium jaldam liberam vocant forenses: Tenentium servitatem, Sectam fallae: stercoracionem, Iceni Tuth. Spelman, vo. Falka.

To TATH, v. a. and n. 1. To dung; applied to black cattle only, S. taid, Ang.

Isl. ted-ia, stercorare; also, lactare.

Maxwell uses the term with greater latitude, as applicable to horses.

—"The dung of horses is not proper for sandy grounds, being too hot, as may be observed from the grounds they tathe upon in summer; where in place of throwing up a fresh tender grass, as it does on clay grounds, it commonly burns up all under and about it." Sel. Trans., p. 123.

2. To manure a field by laying cattle on it, S.

"It has—been in pasture these twelve years.—It is well tathed." Maxw. ut sup., p. 28.

"The outfield was kept five years in natural grass; and, after being tathed by the farmers cattle, who were folded or penned in it, during the summer, it bore 5 successive crops of oats." P. Keith-Hall, Aberd. Statist. Acc., ii. 533.

TATH-FAULD, TATH-FAUD, s. A fold in which cattle are shut up during night, to manure the ground with their dung, S.

TATHING, s. The act of manuring a field, by making the cattle lie on it, S.

"After a tathing, by allowing to lie upon the field at night, and after milking at noon, two or three crops of oats are taken." P. Kilchrenan, Argyles. Statist. Acc., vi. 268.

TATHT, s. The same with Tath, the dung of black cattle.

"The saidis personis sall content & pay—for the wanting of the tatht & fulye of the said nolt & scheip." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1492, p. 289.

TATHIL, s. A table, Fife; apparently corr. from Taffil, q. v.

TATHIS, s. pl. Gawan and Gol., iii. 21.

Thai gird on tua grete horse, on grund quhil thai grane;

The trow helmys, and traist, in tathis thai ta.

As it corresponds to the following line,

Their speris in the feild in fendris gart ga;

it may signify splinters, very small segments: Isl. taet-a, lacerare, tet-r, toet-r, shreds, tatters.

TATSHIE, adj. Dressed in a slovenly manner, Roxb.; allied perhaps to Isl. tet-ur, a torn garment, lacerare vestis, and taet-a, lacerare; Haldorson.

[To TATTER, v. a. To tear, to rend, S.]

TATTER-WALLOPS, s. pl. Tatters, rags in a fluttering state, S.

[To TATTER-WALLOP, v. n. To hang in rags, Banffs.]

TATTREL, s. A rag, Roxb.

The wind gars a' thy tattrels wallop,
An' now an' then thou's ay to haul up,
Wi' tenty care.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 106, 106.

A diminutive either from E. tatter, or from Isl. tetr, Goth. tottr, id.

TATTY, TATY, TAWTY, TATTIT, TAWTED, adj. 1. Matted, disordered by being twisted, or as it were baked together; a term often applied to the hair, when it has been long uncombed, S.

"The hair of thaim is lang and tattie, nothir like the woll of scheip nor gait." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 13.

Nae tawted tyke, tho' e'er sae duddie,
But he wad stan't, as glad to see him.

Burns, iii. 2.

—This ilk strang Aventyne,
Walkis on fute, his body wynplit in
Ane felloun bustuous and grete lyoun skyn,
Terribil and rouch with lokkerand tatty harris.

Doug. Virgil, 232, 2.

"The hare of his berde wes lang and taty, and the hare of his heide maid his face elrago and wilde." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 140. Promissa barba, Lat.

It is most probable that the adj. should be viewed as formed from Tate, Tait, &c., used to denote a lock of hair, a small portion of wool, &c. Isl. taeta, lanugo.

2. Rough and shaggy, without conveying the idea of being matted; as, "a tatty dog," S.

Perhaps rather allied to Isl. tuatt-a, to tease wool. V. Seren. vo. Teaze.

TAUCH (gutt.), s. A term used to denote the threads of large ropes, Clydes.

Isl. tang, fibra; funis; Su.-G. toga, trahere.

TAUCH, TAUCHT, TAUGH, TAULCH, TAWCHT, s. Tallow, S.

—"Frieli forgives him—for the transporting—furth of this realme, at sundry times, tallow, molten taucht, or other forbidden goods," &c. Martine's Reliq., D. Andr., p. 95.

"It is ordanit that na taulch be had out of the realme, vnder the pane of escheit of it to the king." Acts Ja. I. 1424, c. 35, Edit. 1566.

This is properly the name given to the article by tradesmen, before it is melted. After this operation it receives the name of tallow, S.

"Resolved, 1st, That anciently, when Taugh, or Rough Fat, was sold by Tron weight, it was then of very little value in proportion to its worth now.—2dly, That the standard weight for selling the carcasses of Black Cattle and Sheep by is Dutch; and Taugh was sold by Tron weight, merely to make allowance for the garbage or refuse, which was unavoidably mixed with it in slaughtering the cattle and sheep." Edin. Even. Courant, Oct. 5, 1805.

It is written tauch, in a foolish Envoy of Dunb. Everg. ii. 60, st. 25.

TAUCHEY, adj. Greasy, clammy, S.

TAUCHEY-FACED, adj. Greasy-faced, Clydes.

TAUCHT, pret. v. Gave, delivered, committed.

He taucht him siluer to dispend,
And syne gaiff him gud day,
And had him pass furth on his way.

Barbour, ii. 130, MS.

Bonnok on this wise, with his wayne,
The pele tuk, and the men has slayne,
Syne taucht it till the King in hy,
That him rewardyt worthely.

Ibid., i. 253, MS.

TAUDY, TOWDY, s. A term used to denote a child, Aberd. Tedie, Todie, Ang.

Hence taudy fee, Forb. the fine paid for having a child in bastardy, and for avoiding a public profession of repentance; in some places called the cullie-stool-mail.

But yet nor kirk nor consterie,
Quo' they, can ask the taudy fee. —
For tarry-brecks should ay go free,
And he's the clerk.

Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 43.

Towdy, however, also signifies, podex; as in Gl. Everg.

TAUIK, s. Conversation, talk; Aberd. Reg.

TAULCH, TAUGH, s. Tallow, S. V. TAUCH.

[TAULD, TALD, pret. Told, S.]

TAUPIE, TAWPIE, s. A foolish woman; generally as implying the idea of inaction and slovenliness, S. V. SMEERLESS.

"Pottage," quoth Hab, "ye senseless taupie!
"Think ye this youth's a gilly-gawpy?" —

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 525.

"She formally rebuked Eppie for an idle taupie, for not carrying the gentleman's things to his room." St. Ronan, i. 40.

"It's to be a mortification for thae miserable, unfortunate men, that are married to taupies and haverels that spend a' their substance for them." Inheritance, iii. 29.

Su.-G. tapig, simple, silly, foolish. Germ. tapp-en, to fumble, tappisch, clumsy.

Perhaps we have the word in a more primitive form in Dan. taabe, a fool, a sot, a tony, a simpleton; whence the compound taabegaas, a foolish, silly, adle-headed woman; Wolff. Taabelig, stolidus, stultus; taabeligen, incaute, stolidus, stultus; taabelighed, stultitia, simplicitas; Baden.

The latter part of Hobby-tobby may claim the same origin; as the word has a similar signification.

TAUPIET, part. adj. Foolish, S.

TAWPY, adj. Foolish and slovenly, S.

"'Oh Jean, Jean,' said he, in what was meant for a whisper, 'what sort of a niger will my Lord think me, comin' to his table wi' my tawpy dochter in her auld gown.'" Saxon and Gael, i. 46.

"Poor genty Bell!—I doubt—she's our thin-skinned to thole long the needles and prins of Miss Mally Trimming's short temper, and what's far waur, the tawpy taunts of her pridefu' customers." The Entail, i. 123, 124.

[TO TAUTHER, TAUTHEREEZE, v. a. To abuse by dragging hither and thither, Banffs.]

[TAUTHER, TAUTHERIN, s. Abuse, or the act of abusing as above, ibid.]

TAVART, s. A short coat, made without sleeves. V. TALBART.

TAVERNRY, s. Expenses in a tavern.

"Some set caution to remove from the town, after they had counted and reckoned for their tavernry." Spalding, i. 320.

TO TAW, TAWEN, v. a. and n. 1. To pull, to lay hold of, to tumble about; Gl. Sibb. To spoil by frequent handling, Berwicks.

—Ilka coof wha yet has tried it,
Has loos'd the knots that sicker tied it,
An' held it right:
They've tawen't sae, till now they've made it
An unco sight.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 89.

2. To suck greedily and with continuance; as a hungry child at the breast, Roxb.

Allied perhaps to Isl. teig-r, a draught, haustus, amystis, —teig-a, haurire; or Su.-G. toy-a, O. Teut. toghen, to draw.

3. To make tough by kneading; as, Be sure you taw the leaven weel; also, to work like mortar, either with the hand or with an instrument, Ang.

Teut. touw-en, depsero.

TAW (pron. Tyaaw), TAWAN, s. 1. Difficulty, much ado, Aberd.

2. Hesitation, reluctance, ibid. To do any thing with a tawan, to do it reluctantly, Ang.

Hence the Prov. phrase; "He callit me sometimes Provost, and sometimes my Lovl; but it was ay with a tawan." Perhaps allied to the last v. or Su.-G. tog-a, toi-a, togn-a, Isl. teig-ia, Moes-G. tiuh-an, to draw; if not to Isl. tau, mora, tef-ia, morari.

TAWBERN, TAWBURN, s. The tabour or tabret.

—The quhissil renderis soundis sere.

With tympanys, tawbernis, ye war wount to here.
Doug. Virgil, 299, 44.

Tawbunys, MS.
V. TALBRONE.

TAWCHT, s. Tallow. "Scheip tawcht & nolt tawcht. Tawcht candill." Aberd. Reg, V. 21. V. TAUCH.

TAWREAL, s. "Fatigue; perhaps from travail;" Gl. Shirr., also Gl. Sibb.

This word is prob. an errat. for Tarweal. V. TAR-VEAL, v.

[TO TAWEN. V. TAW, v.]

TAWEROINE, s. A tavern, Aberd. Reg., A. 1543, V. 18.

TAWIE, adj. Tame, tractable; "that allows itself peaceably to be handled; spoken of a horse or cow;" Gl. Burns.

—Ye ne'er was donsie,
But hamely, tawie, quiet, an' cannie.
Burns, lii. 141.

—Tho' bauld whan at hame,
He fand, whan afeel' he was tawie an' tame.
Picken's Poems, ii. 134.

Allied perhaps to Isl. taeg-iaa, Su.-G. taag-as, trahi, tog-a, trahere, ducere; q. allowing itself to be led; or teg-ia, Isl. tey-a, allicere, as being easily enticed or prevailed with.

TAWIS, TAWES, TAWS, s. 1. A whip, a lash. [Taw, the point of a whip, S.]

As sum tyme scientis the round top of the tre,
Hit with the twynit quhip dois quhirle we se,

Quham childer driuis biass at thare play
About the clois and vods hallis al day ;
Sche smytin with the tawis dois rebound,
And rynnys about about in cirkil round.

Doug. Virgil, 220, 7.

Rudd. derives it from E. taw, A.-S. taw-ian, coria subigere, Belg. ton-ven. But it is more allied to Isl. taug, tag, vimen, lorum, juncus. It is evidently a pl. a. q. tagis. Taw is still used in the sing. for the point of a whip.

2. The ferula used by a schoolmaster, S. tawse.

Syne be content to quite the cause,
And in thy teeth bring me the tawes,
With becks my bidding to abide.

Montgomery, Watson's Coll., lii. 3.

"Never use the tawes when a gloom can do the turn ;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 57.

3. Metaph. the instrument of correction, of whatever kind, S.

-- Now its tell'd him that the tawes
Was handled by revengeful Midge.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 179.

"If we shall confederate with these, and give them places of trust and office with us, whom he has so eminently appeared against, we cannot expect but he will whip us with tawes of our own making, since we will not follow his method." Society Contendings, p. 71.

Ir. and Gael. tas, a whip, scourge, ferula ; but there is no similar word in C. B. Pers. taasia, taasian, a lash or thong. [A.-S. tawian, to scourge.]

To TAWS, TAZ, v. a. "To whip, scourge, be-labour;" Gl. Shirr., S. B.

TAWM, s. A fit of rage ; a cross or sullen humour, especially as including the idea, that one cannot be managed, when under its influence, S.

Lancash. "welter taums, sick fits, water qualms ;" Bobbins.

Gael. taom, a fit of sickness, madness, or passion ; taomach, subject to fits ; A. Bor. to taum, signifies to swoon ; Grosse.

TAWNEY, s. The vulgar name for a mulatto, S. ; obviously from the complexion.

TAWNLE, TAANLE, s. 1. A large fire, kindled at night about Midsummer, especially at the time of Beltein, S. O. synon. bleize, banefire.

"The custom of kindling large fires or Taanles, at Midsummer, was formerly common in Scotland, as in other countries, and to this day is continued all along the strath of Clyde. On some nights a dozen or more of them may be seen at one view. They are mostly kindled on rising ground, that they may be seen at a greater distance." Gl. Sibb. vo. Taanle.

"An ancient practice still continues in this parish and neighbourhood, of kindling a large fire, or taunle as it is usually termed, of wood, upon some eminence, and making merry around it, upon the eve of the Wednesday of Marymass fair in Irvine. As most fair days in this country were formerly Popish holy days, and their eves were usually spent in religious ceremonies and diversions, it has been supposed, that taunles were first lighted up by our catholic fathers, though some derive their origin from the druidical times." P. Dundonald, Ayrs. Statist. Acc., vii. 622.

"To this day the custom of making great fires, Taanles, or Bleazes, about the beginning of summer, or Beltein time, as it is commonly expressed, is continued all along the strath of Clyde. On some nights a dozen or more of these fires may be seen at one view. They are mostly kindled on rising ground, that they may be seen at a greater distance. They are not, however, attended now with any superstitious rite ; but only in compliance with an old custom, the original meaning of which is not generally known by the commonality." Ure's Rutherg., p. 100, N.

2. Used to denote a large fire in general, Renfr.

Now lassies start, their fires to kin'le,
An' load the chimly wi' a tanle
O' bleezin' coals and cin'ers.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 81.

Su.-G. taend-a, Moes.-G. tand-ian, A.-S. tend-an, tyr-an, to kindle ; Gael. teine, a fire. It has been conjectured, that taanle might be merely Beltein inverted, q. Tein-bel. According to the system of the Welsh kingdom of Strathclyd, we might suppose that the ancient Britons had left this word in the West of S. from C. B. taulhueth, incendium, a burning flame, Lhuud ; also, rogus, Davies. Tanial, to set on fire, taulhueth, a great blazing fire : tanlli, a fire glow ; Owen. Ir. teineal signifies touchwood, ignarium. V. BELTEIN.

TAWPY, TAWPA, s. A foolish woman. V. TAUPIE.

TAWRDS, s. The ferula, Aberd.

This might seem to be a singular variety or corr. of Tawis, Tawes, id. But most probably it has a different origin. For C. B. tar-o, tar-uc, signifies ferire, percutere, Boxhorn ; to strike, to hit, tarawol, impulsio.

TAWSY, s. A cup or bowl. Siller tawsy, silver bowl, Evergreen, ii. 20. V. TAIS.

[To TAWT, TAUT, v. a. To dash or drag to the ground ; to abuse by dashing or dragging, Banff.]

[TAWT, TAUT, s. A sudden and heavy dash ; also, abuse by dragging about, ibid.]

[TAWTIT, adj. Dashed or dragged about, ibid.]

TAWTIE, adj. Shaggy.

He had an ill-faur't tawtie face.

Towser, Tannahill's Poems, p. 124.

V. TATTY.

TAWTIE, TATIE, s. The vulgar name for a potatoe, S. "Tawties, potatoes ;" Gl. Picken. "Tatee, a potatoe ;" Gl. Brockett.

"I like spades better ; they're handier for any kind o' work, haud awa' frae mucking a byre or holling tawies." Redmond, ii. 126.

TAWTIE-BOGLE, s. A scare-crow, S.

TAXATIVE, adj. Having the power of deduction from the force of an argument, or plea, as enfeebling it.

"Where it allows them to work in such and such work, which fell not naturally and properly under the subject-matter of their own occupation, the same is so far from being taxative, that it is demonstrative and in their favours, and is an evident ampliation—of their liberty," &c. Fount. Dec. Suppl., iii. 67.

TAXATOUR, s. An assessor, one who apportions a tax according to the supposed ability of individuals.

"That ilk bischop in ilk denry of his diocise gar his official and his dene summonde all the tenandis and frehaldaris befor him, and cheiss taxatouris," &c. Parl. Ja. I., A. 1424, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 5.

L. B. taxator, qui taxam imponit pro uniuscujusque facultate; Du Cange.

TAXED-WARD, TAXT-WARD, s. A forensic term, denoting the wardship of a minor, in which a limited sum is accepted in lieu of the whole casualties.

"The casualty of ward entitled the superior, during the heir's minority, to the whole profits of the ward-fee which formerly arose to the deceased vassal, either from the natural product of the ground, or from the rent payable by tenants.—But if the ward was taxed, the minor retained the possession, and the superior had nothing to demand but the yearly taxed duty." Ersk. Inst., B. ii. T. 5, § 5.

"That part of the lands holding black or simple-ward, and part taxed-ward, the Lords put eighteen years as the value of the simple-ward, and twenty for the taxed." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 788.

"Taxt-ward, is when the superior, instead of the mails and duties due to him in ward-holding, is content to accept aliquid quota, or annual prestation." Dict. Feud. Law.

TAXT, s. A tax, an impost.

"To sett the said taxt equalie, euery man efter his substance & faculty," &c. Aberd. Reg. V. 16.

The word occurs in this odd form very frequently in our old acts. It appears as early as the reign of James IV.

"That lettrez incontinent be writtin to thaim to raise, bryng in, and pay the said taxt to a schort day," &c. Acts Ja. IV., A. 1489, Ed. 1814, p. 218.

Probably formed in this manner, as an abbrev. of taxat-io.

TAY, TAE, s. A toe, S.

—In fere
Followit Elymus, quham to held euer nere,
Diores, quhiddelrand at his bak fute hate,
His tayis choppand on his hele all the gate.
Doug. Virgil, 138, 27.

Tip-tais, tip-toes, Ibid., 305, 2.
A.-S. ta, Germ. zehe, Belg. teen.

To TAY, v. a. Perhaps, to lead; A.-S. te-on, ducere.

"April 1683, at the Largs, in the west of Scotland, a man at his plough knocks down his servant man, taying his horse." Law's Memorials, p. 245.

[TAYNE, part. pa. Taken, Barbour, iv. 51. V. TANE.]

[To TAYNT, v. a. To convict in course of law. V. TAINT.]

[TAYNTOUR, s. One who brings legal evidence against another for conviction of some crime. V. under TAINT.]

To TAZ, v. a. To whip, S. V. under TAWIS.

TAZIE, s. A romping foolish girl, Roxb. Hailick, synon.

Had Cupid ne'er a dart to spare
That day, on you?
Sure, if he did, ye'd no be lazy,
For poets are in love right crazy,
An' up Parnassus, wi' a taxie,
Ye'll leg, an' lean.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 133.

Dan. taasse, a woman; taasse-e, to play the fool.

[TCHEIR, TCHYRE, s. A chair, Lyndsay, Thrie Estatis, l. 1959.]

TCHICK, interj. 1. A sound produced by the pressure of the tongue on the roof of the mouth, used for quickening a dull horse, S.

2. An expression of surprise or of contempt, S.
—"Summing up the whole with a provoking wink, and such an interjectional tchick as men quicken a dull horse with, Petit-André drew off to the other side of the path, and left the youth to digest the taunts he had treated him with, as his proud Scotch stomach best might." Q. Durward, ii. 92.

[To TE, v. a. To tie, Barbour, xv. 282. A.-S. tigan, tigian.]

TEAGIE, s. A name given to a cow. V. TAIGIE.

TEAK, s. An otter, Shetl.

Isl. Su.-G. tik, canicula. The name of a small dog may have been transferred to this animal which so nearly resembles it.

TEA-KITCHEN, s. A tea-urn or vase, S. V. KITCHEN.

To TEAL, TILL, v. a. To entice, to wheedle, to inveigle by flattery; generally, to teal on, or to teal up, Ang.

With Penny may men wemen till,
Be thai neuer so strange of will,
So oft may it be sene;
Lang with him will thai noght chide.

Sir Penny, Chron. S. P., i. 140, st. 5.

It also occurs in the Old Legend of King Estmere.

Nowe stay thy harpe, thou proud harper,
Nowe stay thy harpe, I say;
For an thou playest as thou beginnest,
Thou'lt till my bride away.

Percy's Reliques, i. 59.

Su.-G. tael-ja, pellicere, decipere; Isl. tael-a, decipere, circumvenire, synon. with Sw. beswik-a, Vercl. Hence taeld-ur, deceptus, circumventus. Miok taeldr oc swikinn, id.

Tulle, to allure, used by Chaucer, is radically the same.

With empty hand, men may na haikes tulle.
Reves T. v. 4132.

It also occurs in the form of Tole.

No goblin, woodgoll, Fairy, Elfe, or Fiend,
Satyre or other power that haunts the groves,
Shall hurt my body, or by vain illusion
Draw me to wander after idle fires,
Or voices calling me in deal of night,

To make me follow and so tole me on
Through mire and standing pools to find my ruin.
Beaumont's Faithful Shepherdess, p. 792.

It seems to be the same word which R. Brunne uses in a neut. sense, p. 123.

In alle manere cause he sought the right in skille,
To gile no to fraude wild he neuer tille.

Junius views this as allied to A.-S. betilldon, used by King Alfred, in rendering the phrase, introducatus est, Bed. iv. 26. Add. Jun. Etym. But this etymon is doubtful.

TEAL, TEIL, s. "A busy-body; a mean fellow;" Gl. Tarr., Buchan.

An' honest heart an' conscience leal
Will langer stan' the test,
Than ony peevish near-gaun teal
Wi' a' his girmel's grist.

Tarras's Poems, p. 35.

As denoting a busy-body, it seems connected with Su.-G. tael, dolus; Isl. taal, dolus malus, item fucna, res fucata; Germ. teil, fraus, fallacia, teil-en, fallere. We may add C.B. teyll, dolus, fraus; Boxhorn.

TEALER, s. Or, a tealer on, one who entices, Ang.

[TEALY, TEELIE, adj. Encouraging, enticing, Shetl.]

*To TEAR, v. n. To labour stoutly, to work forcibly, Aberd.

TEARIN', part. adj. Active, energetic; as, "a tearin' worker," a "tearin' throwgain fallow," Roxb.

This may be merely an oblique application of the E. v. to Tear, as denoting activity approaching to violence. But perhaps it is allied to Teut. tier-en, tumultuari, perturbare. G. Andr., however, expl. Isl. ey terre, exerto.

TEASICK, s. A consumption, Montgomerie, V. FEYK. E. Phthysick, id. Gr. φθυσίς.

TEAZ, s. The prop on which a golf-ball is placed when first struck off; synon. Tee. Teaz is most probably S. B., perhaps originally the plural of Tee.

"Baculus, Pila clavaria, a goulfe-ball.—Statumen, the Teaz." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 37, 38.

To TEAZ, v. a. To prop a golf-ball.

"Statumina pilam arena, Teaz your ball on the sand." Ibid.

In this curious Vocabulary, which contains many antiquated words, are some others scarcely to be met with elsewhere, under the same article, (Baculus), as applicable to this game: Goat, fovea; Goated, immissa in foveam; Buncard-club, baculus ferreus; Wippen, baculi filum.

To TEAZLE, v. a. To teaze, to vex, Loth.

TEAZLE, s. A severe brush. V. TAISSLE.

TEBBITS, s. pl. Sensation. V. TABBETS.

TECET, s. A ticket. "To subscrif a tecet;" Aberd. Reg.

TECHEMENT, s. Instruction.

VOL. IV.

ingynis, mair able to leir than I wes of to teche." Ninian Winyet's Third Tractat, Keith's Hist. App., p. 213, 214.

TEDD, adj. Ravelled, entangled, S. B.

Su.-G. tudd-a, intricare.

TEDDER, TETHER, s. A rope with which a horse is tied at pasture, E.

I mention this E. word merely in reference to a common S. Prov. "He wants only a hair to make a teldder o'"; applied with respect to those who seek for some ground of complaint or accusation, and fix on any thing however trivial.

"Since that national defection of taking that bundle of unhappy oaths,—the swearers have sought but a hair to make a tether of, against that small handful of non-swearers." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 65.

Johns. mentions Dutch [properly Fris.] tudter, Isl. tindt, id. The latter is probably an error of the press for tindr. In Su.-G. it is tindur. Lye gives Ir. tead, a rope, as the origin; Ihre adds C. B. tidaw, dida, to bind, whence, he says, E. tie. Serenius refers also to Sw. taat, funiculus. It is obvious, that here the radical idea is that of tying or binding.

As we call the stake to which the rope is tied, the tether-stake, this exactly corresponds to Su.-G. tindur-stake, palus, cui vinculum annectitur, Ihre.

To TEDDER, TETHER, v. a. 1. To bind by a stake at pasture, S. I have not met with any example of the use of the v. in E.

Isl. tiodr-a, Su.-G. tindr-a, pecus hoc modo alligare.

2. To be entangled in an argument.

"Heir Johne Knox, be his awin sentence aganis utheris, is fast tedderit in the girm." N. Winyet's Questionis, Keith's Hist. App., p. 238.

TEDISUM, adj. Tedious, S. B. Teidsome, Roxb.

"'It was an unco pleasant show,' said the good natured Mrs. Blower, 'only it was a pity it was soe tedioussome.'" St. Ronan, i. 238.

A corr. from E. Tedious, but allied to Teut. tijd, A.-S. tid, tempus, and the affix sum, as applicable to what requires time.

TEE, s. 1. A mark set up in playing at coits, pennystane, &c., S. B.

Isl. ti-a, demonstrare, q. as pointing out the place; Teut. tijh-en, indicare.

2. The nodule of earth, from which a ball is struck off at the hole; a term in golfing, S.

Driving their baws frae whins or tee,
There's no nae gowder to be seen.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 205.

V. Goff, a Poem, p. 32.

3. The mark made in the ice, in the amusement of curling, towards which the stones are pushed, S. Syn. Cock, q. v. This is generally a cross surrounded by a circle.

Clim o' the Clough on seeing that,
Sten'd forth an' frae his knee
A slow shot drew, wi' muckle care,
Which settled on the tee.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 167.

4. To a tee, to a tittle, exactly, S.

William M'Nish, a taylor slee—
Took but as vizzy wi' his eie;
The bullet flies
Clean thro' the target to a tee,
And wons the prize.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 52.

If we understand it as given above, it seems to claim connexion with S. Tee, a mark. Thus, to a tee, would signify, "reaching the mark." V. Tee, Dict. This is the same with A. Bor. Tiv-a-Tee, "just the thing," Gl. Brockett; for he expl. tiv as signifying to. V. also Grose.

In Loth. it is also called the Tozee. This is most probably from Teut. toe-sie-n, prospicere, capessere oculus, cavere, q. the object which the player steadily keeps in his eye, the mark. Hence toe-sicht, observatio, cautio. The Belg. orthography retains a still nearer resemblance, toe-zie-n, to have regard to, to take heed. This may be viewed as confirming what has formerly been said, as to the probability of our having borrowed this game from the Low Countries. V. CURLING AND TRAZ.

To TEE, v. a. [To set or place in position.]

To tee a ball, to raise it a little on a nodule of earth, at the same time giving it the proper direction, S.

"That's a tee'd ba'"; Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 64.

"All that is managed for ye like a tee'd ball, (my father sometimes draws his similies from his own favourite game of golf.)" Redgauntlet, i. 302.

[TEE, s. Pl. tees, teis, iron holdfasts, in shape like the letter T, suspended from a horse's collar for attachment to the shafts of a vehicle, or for connecting the bit and bridle; also, the ropes by which a sailyard is suspended, Gl. Accts. L. H. Treas., I. Dickson.]

[TEE, s. The thigh, Shetl.]

TEE, adv. Too, also. Aberd., Cumb.

[TEE-NAME, s. A name added to a person's surname, Banffs.]

To TEEDLE, v. n. To sing without words, to hum a tune, Gall.

"Teedling, singing a tune without accompanying it with the words;" Gall. Enc., p. 444.

Ye's no be bidden work a turn,
At ony time to spin, Matam,
But rock your weeane in a scull
And teedle Heelan sing, Matam.

Old Edit. of Hail awa frae me Donald.

This may have been originally the same with E. Teedle, to handle lightly, applied to fiddling. It is only a variety of Deedle, q. v.

TEEDY, adj. Peevish, cross-humoured, Berw.

Isl. teidr, signifies torvus et minax; G. Andr. But perhaps the S. term is formed from Tid, as denoting a gust of passion or ill humour.

[TEELIE, adj. Enticing. V. under TEAL.]

To TEEM, v. a. and n. 1. To pour out, S. B., Ayr.

—Flowers in plenty crown'd ilk burn that teems
Its siller dribble wimplin' thro' the fields.

Picken's Poems, iii. 57.

2. To rain heavily, Dumfr.

It is to be observed, however, that in Ettr. For. and Tweedd. Teem and Tume are used in different senses. To Teem signifies to pour, to pour out; to Toom, or Tume, to empty. Teem is used in Annan-dale, as signifying to empty by pouring. There, "teeming and raining" is a common expression. In the same manner Teem and Toom or Tuam, are distinguished. A. Bor. Teem, to pour out of one vessel into another; as, "Teem out the tea, hinny." Toom denotes what is empty, as, "a toom purse,"—"a tuam cart;" Gl. Brockett.

[3. To teem on, to do any thing with great energy; also to beat severely, Banffs.]

[TEEM, s. 1. A heavy or long continued fall of rain, Clydes.

2. A teem on, a severe beating, Banffs.]

TEEMS, s. A fine sieve, used for sifting or dressing flour for pastry, &c., Roxb.

"Temse, a small sieve; from the French tamise, Ital. tamiso. Whence comes the word tamise-bread; i.e., bread, the meal of which has been made fine by temsing or sifting out the bran. North." Grose.

Fr. tamise denotes a searce, bolter, or strainer; tamisé, searced or bouted. Teut. tems, temst, cribrum, L.B. tamig-inm; Mod. Sax. teemiss. Menage deduces the Fr. word from Arm. tambea, id.

[TEEN, s. A tune; so pron. in Aberd. Banffs., &c.]

TEEN. Used as if it signified evening, S.

Wow, Jamie! man, but I'd be keen
Wi' canty lads like you, a wheen,
To spen' a winter Fursday teen.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 98.

This, however, cannot be properly viewed as a word. For it is merely the abbreviation of at e'en, i.e., "in the evening." Thus Fursday teen is merely "Thursday at even."

THE 'TEEN. This evening, S.

—"But thinks I, chaps, ye're aff your eggs for ance, gif ye ettle to come on us the 'teen at unawares." Saint Patrick, i. 168.

To TEEN, v. a. To provoke. V. TEYNE.

TEENGE, s. A colic in horses, S. perhaps corr. from E. twinge.

TEEP, s. A ram; the northern pron. of Tup.

TEEPIT, part. pa. Stinted in allowances, Lanarks.; evidently the same with Taipit. V. TAPE.

TEEPLE, s. A slight touch or stroke, Aberd.

To TEEPLE, v. a. To touch, or to strike lightly, ib.

This may be a dimin. from the E. v. to Tip, id. Seren. and Widg. give Sw. tipp-a as used in the same sense, leviter tangere; "to tap, to tip," to strike gently, to touch lightly.

TEERIBUS AND TEERIODIN. The war-cry of the town of Hawick. This, according to tradition, was that of the band which went from Hawick to the battle of Flodden; and it is still shouted by the inhabitants of the borough, when they annually ride the marches.

This phrase is of high antiquity. Prob., it has been retained from the age of the Saxons, or borrowed from the Danes of the neighbouring districts of Northumberland, who have left many words on the border. A.-S. Tyr, Isl. and Dan. Tir, denotes one of the deities of the Goths; according to some, the son of Odin. The first word might make tolerably good A.-S.; Tyr hæbbe us, "May Tyr have us in his keeping!" The other seems to conjoin the names of Tyr and Odin, as supplicating their conjoint aid.

TEES, s. pl. [Fastenings, buckles. V. TEE.]

The tees of the saddle down yeed,
Or else he had born down his steed.

Sir Egeir, p. 48.

It seems uncertain, whether this be the same with teis, Doug. strings, cords; or allied to Teut. tatse, a buckle. The former is more probable.

TEES. This is mentioned among a list of articles used in incantation.

—Palme crocis, and knottis of strease,

The paring of a preistis auld tees.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems 16th Cent., p. 318.

Perhaps for tacs, toes, i.e., the nails or corns on his toes; as strease for stracs, straws.

TEESIE, s. A gust of passion, Fife.

[TEESIT, s.] The line first shot from a herring boat; also, the man whose line is first shot, Banffs.]

[TEET, s.] The smallest sound or word, ibid.

To TEET, v. n. To peer, to peep out. V. TETE.

TEET, s. A stolen glance, S.; Keek synonym.

"I saw Eppie stealin' a teet at him, an' tryin' to hodie the blink that bruindit in her e'e." Campbell, i. 331.

TEET-BO, s. Bo-peep, S. Gl. Shirr. synonym. Keek-bo. V. under TETE.

• TEETH, s. The fragment of a rainbow appearing on the horizon; when seen in the North or East, viewed as indicating bad weather, Banffs., Aberd.

This is also denominated an angry tooth.

It is supposed that this is merely E. tooth provincially pronounced. Isl. tel-r, however, denotes any thing very small, a remnant, that which is rent; and taet-a signifies dilanire, lacerare. It may be added, that because of its broken appearance it is elsewhere called a Stump.

To TEETH, TEETHE, v. a. and n. [1. To face, to venture, S.; to teeth out, to venture out of doors, Banffs.]

2. To teeth with lime, to build a wall, either dry or with clay in the inside, using a little lime between the layers of stones towards the outside, S. q. to indent.

"The fences are partly stone walls teethed with lime, partly ditches with thorn hedges on the top." P. Carnock, Fife, Statist. Acc., xi. 482.

3. To teethe upon, to make an impression upon, Aberd.; most probably from the use of the teeth in fastening on food.

[TEETHIN'-BANNOCK, s.] An oatmeal cake specially made for a child beginning to teeth, Banffs.]

TEETHRIFE, adj. Palatable, Teviotdale. Moufrachty synonym. Angus; Toothsome, E.

Compounded like S. Salerife, Wankrife, &c., but rather improperly, because rife denotes frequency or abundance, A.-S. ryf, frequens.

TEETHY, TEETHIE, adj. Crabbed, ill-natured, S. A. Bor. A teethy answer, a tart reply.

The term conveys the same idea as when it is said that a man shows his teeth.

TEETICK, s. The Tit-lark, Shetl.

"Alauda Pratensis, (Lin. syst.) Teetick, Tit-lark.—This bird builds its nest in holes and shelves of rocks." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 236.

Teut. nijle and tijken denote any small bird; Isl. tila, fringilla montana.

TEETLE, s. The old mode of pronouncing the E. word Title, S., i.e., right.

"I hae brought the teetles o' the property in my pouch." The Entail, l. 145.

[TEEVERIE, s.] Theft, Shetl.]

TEEVOO, s. A male flirt, Gall. Enc.

TEEWHOAP, s. The Lapwing, Orkn.

"The Teewhoap, (tringa vanellus, Lin. Syst.) which, from the sound it utters, has the name of the teewhoap here, comes early in the spring." Barry's Orkney, p. 307. V. PEEWEIF and TEQUHEIT.

TEHEE, s. A loud laugh. He got up with a tehee, S.

It is frequently used as an interj., expressive of loud laughter.

Te hee, quoth Jennie, teet, I see you.

Watson's Coll., iii. 47.

Tam got the wyte, and I gae the tehee.

Ross's Helenore, p. 64.

Either from the sound; or allied to Su.-G. hi-a, la-dere, Isl. ridere.

Ti-he is used as a v. in O. E.

"And the wenches they do see geere and ti-he at him—well, should they doe so much to me, I'd forswear them all." Ben Jonson's Works, l. 13.

To TEHEE, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed way, Ayrs. Synonym. to Tigher.

"The goat was tee-heeing, the fool was at his merriment;" Gall. Enc.

The mingled scene was weel worth seeing;

Big bonafires here—there, boys tee-heeing.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 95.

"Tee-heeing—Giggling," Gl. ibid.

Tehee, as a s., is used in like manner to denote a suppressed laugh, Ayrs.

[TEICHEOUR, s. A teacher, instructor, Lyndsay. Thrie Estaitis, l. 3889.]

TEICHEMENT, s. Instruction, Aberd. Reg. V. TECEMENT.

To TEICHER, TICHER, (gutt.) 1. To distil almost imperceptibly. When the skin is slightly cut, it is said to teicher and bluid, when the quantity of blood effused is scarcely sufficient to form a drop, South of S.

2. Used to express the appearance of a fretted sore, Roxb.

O.T. tijgh-en, indicare.—Hence,

TEICHER, s. A very small drop.

At every pyllis poynt and cornes croppis
The teicheris stude, as lemand beriall droppis,
And on the halesum herbis, clene but wedis,
Like cristall knoppis or small siluer bedis.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 449, 30.

"Drops of dew, f. a Fr. tacher, to spot; tacheture, a spot, speckle or mark." Rudd.

It seems rather to signify dots, small spots; in which sense S. ticker is still used, a dimin. from Tick, id. q. v.

TEIDSOME, adj. Tedious. V. TEDISUM.

TEIGHT, part. pa. Fatigued, Lanarks.

Isl. teg-ia, signifies distendere; at tegia ræcluna, to lengthen or draw out a discourse so as to make it tiresome.

TEIL, s. A busy-body, a mean fellow, S. B.

Evidently from the same source with Teal, Till, to wheedle. V. TEAL, s.

To TEIL, v. a. To cultivate the soil, S., to till, E.

"We—be the tennor hereof grantis and gevis license to thame and thair successors to ryfe out breke and teil yeirlie ane thousand acres of thair common landis of our said burgh." Chart. Ja. V. to the Burgh of Selkirk, ap. Minstrelsy Border, i. 264.

As Mr. Tooke has derived the E. v. from A.-S. til-ian, to raise, to lift up; observing, that "to till the ground is, to raise it, to turn it up," (Divers. Purley, ii. 69.) one might suppose that this derivation were greatly confirmed by the synon. expressions, ryfe out and breke, here used. But unfortunately, there is no evidence that the A.-S. v. was ever used in this sense. It signifies to prepare, to procure; to labour, to cultivate; to toil; to compute, to assign. V. Lye and Somner. Isl. till-a indeed signifies to lift up; attollere, leviter, figere. But I do not find that it is ever used to denote the cultivation of the soil. Nor does Teut. till-en, tollere, admit of this sense.

TEIND, TEYND, TEND, s. 1. Tithe, S.; pl. teindis.

—"That the ministeris and reidaris aucht and suld pay no teynd for thair gleibis and kirklandis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 612.

"That na man let thaim to sett thair landis, and teindis, vnder the pane that may follow be spiritual law or temporall." Acts Ja. I. 1424, c. 1, Edit. 1566.

Fra the Kyrk the tendis then

He reft wyth mycht, and gawe his men.

Wynntown, iv. 4. 17.

Moes.-G. taihund, the tenth part, (whence taihundondai, tithes), Su.-G. tiende, anc. tiund, Belg. teind, id. Hence Isl. tiund-a, Sw. tind-a, tiend-a, Belg. tiend-en, decimare.

2. The tenth time.

For ony trefy may tyd I tell the teynd,
I will nocht turn myn entent, for all this world brend.
Gawan and Gol., iv. 7.

Perhaps, "I tell thee for the tenth time;" or, "I tell thee the enquirer;" A.-S. teond, a demandant; also, an accuser.

To TEIND, TEYND, v. a. To tithe, S.

The hirdis teindit all the corne.

Spec. Godly Songs, p. 19.

V. also Acts Ja. VI., 1579, c. 73.

"That all personis havand title or takkis to ony teyndschaves, &c. sall pass or send and caus teynd the saidis coirnis ay, as the same is rady, within aucht dayis efter the shering thairrof." Acts Ja. VI., 1579, Ed. 1814, p. 139.

TEINDFREE, TEYNDFREE, adj. Exempted from paying tithes, S.

"Act declairing summes Grasse, gevin to the Ministeris for thair gleibis, to be teyndfree." Acts Ja. VI., 1621, Edit. 1814, p. 612, Tit.

TEIND-MASTER, s. One who has a legal right to lift tithes.

"Teind-masters, are these who have right to Teinds." Dict. Feud. Law.

TEIND-SHEAF, s. A sheaf, payable as tithe, S.

—"Teind-schavis, and utheris teindis, frutis, rentis, proventis," &c. Sedt. Counc. A. 1562-3. V. TELISMEN.

TEIND-WHEAT, s. Wheat received as tithe, S.

"Item, money of teinds, 241 l. 6s. 8d. Teind-wheat, 11. b. Bear, 14 c. 6, b. Meal, 25 c. 5, b." List of Bishopricks, Keith's Hist. App., p. 181.

—"The teind-sheaves and vicarage thairrof demittit in favours of the said Thomas Fraser of Stretchin." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vol. V., 153.

To TEIND, TYNDE, TINE, v. a. To kindle, S.

"Candle-teening, candle-lighting; Westmorel. To teen and doubt the candle, to light and put out the candle;" Gl. Grose.

"Ne me teendilith not a lanterne, and puttith it undir a bushel." Wiclif, Matt. v.

A.-S. tend-an, tynd-an, Moes.-G. tand-jan, intand-jan, Su.-G. taend-a, Isl. tendr-a, accendere. Wachter traces the Goth. terms to Celt. tan, fire, Gael. teyn, Ir. tinning: and undoubtedly the affinity is very obvious. He observes, that to the same family belong tunder, tinder, Isl. tin, tinna, a flint, tindr-a, to emit sparks tinn-a, to shine forth, tungr, a star, the moon, Germ. tannen baum, the pine, q. a tree which easily catches fire; and A.-S. tender, tyndre, Isl. tundur, E. tinder, q. something that kindles easily. V. BELTEIN.

TEIND, TYND, TINE, s. 1. A spark of fire, S. B.

2. A spark at the side of the wick of a candle, synon. spender, waster. There's a teind at the candle; i.e., It is about to run down, S. B. V. the v.

TELELAND, s. Arable land; q. that which has been tilled.

—"And fra thence merkand nor-west our a moss to the nerrast teleland of Ardrgrane," &c. Merchess of Bp.
Brynnis, 1437, Chart. Aberd. F. 14, M'Farl. MSS.

TELSMAN, s. A husbandman, a farmer.

—"Ordanis letteris to be direct to her Hienesses officiaris—chargeing thame to—command—all and sindrie parochinaris, takkismen, telismen, fewaris, rentarlaris, possessouris, and utheris intronettouris with qubatsumevir teind-schavis, &c.—that nane of thame

[*To TELL, v. a. To speak; tell on, speak out, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 2158.]

TELLIN', s. [Advice, instruction, reproof.]
To Tak Tellin'. 1. To need to be frequently reminded of what ought to be done; as,

"She's a clever servant in a house, but she taks tellin'," S.

2. To listen to advice, admonition, or warning; as, "He wadna tak tellin'," he would not be advised, S. A.

TELLIN', adj. Well or good for, beneficial to; as, "It was tellin' him that he did as ye did;" "It had been muckle tellin' ye that ye had bidden at hame;" i.e., it was, or it had been, to his or your advantage,
&c., S.

"Raymondsholm is blithe aneuch for me, and it wad hae been telling some that are now safe frae skaith gin it had never been blither." Corspatrick, ii. 8.

[This idiom represents the impers. form of the v.
tell with the meaning to take effect, to produce the desired or the best result; as in the remark regarding a piece of good writing, "Every line tells." It would be tellin him, if, etc., etc., i.e., it would produce the best result for him, if, etc., etc.] A.-S. teala, taela, and te-la signify, bene, recte, probe. Taela don, benefacere; "to do good unto, to benefit:" teala
beon, bene esse; teala micel faec, bene longum tempus;
tehu micle handfulle, a good, great, or large hand-full, Somner. This term is also used as a s. the sense of Lat. bonum. V. Benson. It may indeed be viewed as an adj. in the following phrase; "They shall lay hands on the sick, and heom bið teala, and they shall recover," or "be well;" Mar. 16. 18.
Hence, unteala male, as in Joh. 18. 23.

TELLYEVIE, s. A violent or perverse humour.

Scho will sail all the winter nicht,
And nevir tak a tellyerie.

Sample, Evergreen, l. 67.

Apparently the same with S. tirricie, q. v. or perhaps from Fr. taluer, to slope, to take an oblique direction.

TELYIE, s. A piece of butcher meat. V.
TAILYIE.

[TEMBA, s. The moment, exact time; to

Mr. Scott is certainly right. The idea is, to entice forward. For the Goth. words, allied to E. tame, imply not only the use of force, but occasionally of gentle and persuasive means. Isl. tem-ia, as-suefacere.

TEMERARITE, TEMERARITIE, s. Rash-ness in judgment.

"Gif it be fundin that the first assise acqwite the of that temerarite to be punist eftir the forme of the auld law contentit in the buk of Regiam Maiestatem." Acts

Ja. III., 1475, Ed. 1814, p. 112. Temerartie, Ed. 1566.
From Fr. tameraire, rash.

TEMMING, s. A kind of woollen cloth. V. TIMMING.

TEMPER-PIN, s. 1. The wooden pin used for tempering or regulating the motion of a spinning wheel, S.

My spinning-wheel is auld and stiff,—
To keep the temper pin in tiff,
Employs aft my hand, Sir.

Ritson's S. Songs, l. 175.

[2. Applied to one's temper or disposition; as, "She's lost her temper-pin," she has fallen into a sulky or angry mood, Clydes., Banffs.]

TEMPERALL, s. A temporal; "a coate-armour," Cotgr. O. Fr. temporalle.

And syne hing up above my sepulture—
My baner, basnet, with my temperall,
As bene the use of feistis funerall.

Lyndsay, Sq. Meldrum, l. 1789.]

TEMPLARIE, s. A foundation originally belonging to the Knights Templars; also called Temple Lands, S.

"His hienes can nocht vnderstand quhat cours to follow out auent the premisses—without his Maiestie—haue the sicht of the rentailis of all bischoiprikis, abbacies, prioris, provestries, personages, vicarages, alterages, chaipplanries, templaries, and vtheris benefices, and of all masondewis and hospitallis within this realme—and of all infestmentis—auent quhatsumeir kirklandis, tempillandis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 564.

TENANT-STED, adj. Occupied by a tenant.

"Kerse being broken, the rest of the rooms were lying waste, and this was only tenant-sted; and as Kerse himself was personally liable, so must his tenant be." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 793.

The latter part of the word may be traced either to A.-S. sted, locus, or to Teut. staed-en, in statu collocare.

TENCHES, TENCHIS, s. pl. Taunts, reproaches; S. flyting.

The rial stile, clepit Heroicall,
Full of wourship and nobilnes ouer all,
Suld be compil't, but tenchis or vnde wourde,
Kepand honest wise sportis, quhare euer thay bourde,
All lous langage and lichtnes lattand be;
Observed bewtie, sentence, and grauité.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 271, 31.

"Fr. tenc-er, tanc-er, tanc-er, to chide, scold, taunt; tanson, a chiding, scolding, brawling with;" Rudd. Tenceresse, grumbling, Rom. de la Rose.

Tance and tence are also used in O. Fr. in the sense of querelle, debat, Dict. Trev. Tanson was applied also to a species of verse, in which poets seem to have carried on a sort of scolding-match.

"The evidences of the poetical talent, which had hitherto occurred in France, consisted of romances, tales and love-songs, tansons, or pleas in verse, and serentes, or the overflows of a satirical humour." Godwin's Life of Chaucer, i. 351.

He here speaks of the period preceding the age of Loria, who wrote the Roman de la Rose.

Tenson. Vieux terme de Poesie Française, qui s'est dit de certains ouvrages des Trouveres ou Troubadours—Ils contenoient des disputes d'amours, lesquelles estoient jugées par des Seigneurs et Dames qui s'assembloient à Pierrefeu et a Romana, dont les résolutions s'appelloient Amets d'Amours. On trouve encore de jolis Tensons dans les vieux Poètes Provençaux. Dict. Trev.

The Fr. tenson most probably first suggested to our poets that singular species of writing to which they have given the designation of Flyting; as, The Flyting of Dunbar and Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 47. The Flyting of Pollicart and Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. It even descended so far as to assume the title of The Soular and Tailior's Flyting, Evergreen, i. 190, st. 1. V. also Contents of the Vol.

Fr. tenson had its origin from L.B. intentio, a controversy. V. INTENT.

TEND, adj. The tenth.

—The tend of this Gregore
The second, quham of yhe herd befor,
The nynd of this curst Emperowre
Leo, that lywyd in fals erreure,
Oure the Scottis the Kyng Ewan,
Wyth the Peychtis, regnyd than,
In-til the kynryk of Scotland.

Wyntoun, vi. l. 3.

V. TEND.

To TEND, v. a. and n. To aim at; to intend, S. V. TENT.

"His Grace tendis on na aort, to moue or do any thing, bot that he may iustlie be the aulse of the thre Estatis." Acts James V. 1535, c. 38, Edit. 1563.

"Ane grete pairt of thame, thaire folkis and frenndis, tending to convoy his grace to Edinburgh,—Waltir Scott of Braxhame knyght, with ane greite multitude of brokin mene, lychtit in his hienes gait, arayit in forme of batale, tending to haue put handis in his persoun," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 312.

"My lordis of consale, this is the answer that I Archibalde erle of Anguss makis to the quenis grace. In the first, quhar echo desiris surtie of me of bodelie harme, My lordis, I traist it is nocht vnknawin to all your L^{ties} that I neuir as yit did hire grace any harme in hire persoun nor neuer tendis to do." Acts Ja. V., 1523, Ed. 1814, p. 293.

"Quhilk infestment we tend, Godwilling, at our next parliament to renew." Ibid., 1592, p. 620.

It may, however, be understood as signifying "attempt;" from Fr. tendre, "to endeavour, goe about, labour to get or come by;" Cotgr.

Fr. tend-re, id.

TENDALE KNYFF. Some kind of knife.

—"Twa beltis, a tendale knyff, a hors came [comb], & byrnyng irne," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1492, p. 282.

Probably a local designation. Shall we suppose that knives, celebrated for their temper, had been formerly made somewhere in the dale or valley of Tyne in England? It might, however, be the maker's name, like Jockteleg.

* TENDER, adj. 1. Delicate, weakly, ailing, S.

"Mr. Henderson is much tenderer than he wont." Baillie's Lett., ii. 139.

"As, Pope was a tenderman.—By delicate, the Scots mean sickly, and the English beautiful or pleasing. These senses of the words, tender and delicate, the Scots seem to have taken from the French, who make use of delicat in the same sense as foible, weak or feeble; and tendre for douillet, unable to bear any hardship." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 108, 109.

"The haill other bishops, except the archbishop of Glasgow, who was old and tender, keeping his bed, and Mr. John Abernethy, bishop of Caithness, and the bishop of Dunkeld, who had disclaimed episcopacy,—were forced to flee into England for their safety and protection." Spalding, i. 130.

Fr. tendre, "nice, nesh, puling, delicate;" Cotgr.

2. Circumspect, avoiding all appearance of evil, S.; having a scrupulous mind, S.

"I never was a separatist, nor for quarrelling with tender souls about mint, cummin, or other the lesser tithes." Heart M. Loth., ii. 178.

3. Dear, beloved.

—"His hienes has diuers tyme writtin & maid supplicacioun both to our haly fader & his predecessouris for the promocioun of his tendir clerk & consalour maister Alex. Inglis, dene & elect of the bischoprik of Dunkeld to the bischopric of the samyn," &c. Acts Ja. III., 1485, Ed. 1814, p. 171.

Fr. tendre is often used to denote warmth of friendship. As a s. it signifies love, a tenderness for one.

4. Nearly related.

"The king of England, thinkand he had no man so sib or tender to him as the king of Scotland his sister sone, &c., thairfor he desired effectuouslie to speak with the king of Scotland." Pitcottie's Chron., p. 381.

This seems an ellipsis for Tender of Blude, q. v.

TENDIR OF BLUDE. Nearly related, standing in near consanguinity.

"In the mene tyme scho prayis hir said guid Sister to consider how moderatlie hir Majestie hes usit hir self in a cais quhairin for mony respectis scho had guid occasion to haif medlit mair earnestlie, that is in the cais of hir modir in law the Lady Margaret Countess of Lennox, being alsua sa tendir of blude to hir Majestie, quhome being inducit be hir exempill, scho doi- maist earnestlie and effectuouslie request hir guid Sister to relief furth of captivitie, as alawa to restoir hir to hir landis, possessionis, libertie and formar favour." Answ. Q. Mary to Mr. Thomworth, Keith's Hist. App. p. 103.

"Lodovick, Duke of Lennox—came to Scotland after the death of his father,—being then of the age of nyne yeirs; whom king James receaved glaidlie and honorablie, as one who was so tender of kinred and blood to him." Gordon's Hist. Earls of Sutherl., p. 125.

An oblique sense, founded on the use of Fr. tendre, as denoting that tenderness of affection which subsists between friends, and ought to be extended to those connected by blood.

To TENDER, v. a. To make delicate, Roxb.

"The quality of the food in the autumnal quarter has a more immediate influence in tendering their constitution, than at any other period." Ess. Highl. Soc., iii. 467.

TENDERLY, adj. Having the warm regard of kindred.

"Knawing the proximitie of blude standand betuix us, our said Sone, and our derrest brother James Erle of Murray;—And hauand experience of the naturall affection and tenderly lufe he hes in all tymes borne," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 13.

TENDERNESS, s. Scrupulosity in religious matters, S.

"Myaell am not clear to trinquet and traffic wi' courts o' justice, as they are now constituted; I have a tenderness and scruple in my mind anent them." Heart M. Loth., ii. 166.

TENE, TEYNE, s. 1. Anger, rage, S.

And quhen the King his folk has sene
Begyn to faile, for propyr tene,
Hys assenyhe gan he cry,
And in the stour sa hardly
He ruschyt, that all the semble schuk.

Barbour, ii. 377, MS.

Now sail thou de, and with that word in tene,
The auld trymblyng towart the altare he drew,
That in the hate blude of his sou sched new

Doug. Virgil, 67, 21.

2. Sorrow, vexation, S.

"Cess, men," he said, "this is a butlass payne;
"We can nocht now chewyss hir lyff agayne."
Wness a word he mycht bryng out for tene;
The bailfull ters byrst braithly fra hys eyne.

Wallace, vi. 208, MS.

Thus it is used by R. Brunne, p. 37.

That was all forwondred, for his dede com tene.

It occurs so late as the time of Shakspeare. Thus in his Richard III.

Eighty odd yeirs of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

A.-S. teon, trona, injuria, irritatio. Tene is used by Chaucer and Gower in the sense of grief.

TENE, TEYNE, adj. Mad with rage; teen, angry, A. Bor.

Toward the burl he bowed as he war tene.

Wallace, ii. 335, MS.

Than wox I tene, that I tuke to sic ane truffuris tent.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, h. 23.

To TENE, TEYNE, TEEN, v. a. To vex, to fret, to irritate.

"The Kingis Grace, James the Fifth, being on ane certane time accompanyit with ane—greit menyne of Bischoppis, Abbottis, & Preatis standing about, he quicklie and prettillie inuentit ane prettie trik to tene them." H. Charteris' Pref. to Lyndsay's Warkis, A. ii. 6.

The holy headband seems not to attyre
The head of him who in his furious yre,
Prefers the pain of those, that have him teend,
Before the health and safety of one freend.

Hudson's Judith, p. 34.

"Fair gentle cummer," than said scho,
"All is to tene him that I do."

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 114.

This v. occurs in O. E. "Ten-yn, wrothyn, or ert-yn. Irrito." Prompt. Parv. The s. is thus given; "Tene or disece, Angustia."

A.-S. teon-an, Belg. ten-en, teen-en, tan-en, irritare, Gr. ten-eobai, id.

TENEFULL, TEYNFULL, adj. Wrathful.

Cum teynfull tyrannis trinling with your trayne.

Adhortatioun to all Estates, Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592.

TENE-WARYIT, part. adj. "Oppressed with affliction;" Gl. Sibb. V. TEYNE, s.

TENEMENT, s. 1. A house; often denoting a building which includes several separate dwellings; as a tenement of houses, S. L.B. tenement-um, Rudd.

"Anent the—accione movit betuix Johnne Bully—on the ta part & Isabell Bully—on the tother part for brekin vp of durris & lokis of a tenement lyand in Leithe wynde, & for wrangwiss occupacioun of the said tenement, & occupiit be the said Isabell on the behalf of hir dochtir," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1479, p. 42.

2. A building which includes several separate dwellings; as, a tenement of houses, S.

It seems to be used in this sense in the following passage, where mention is made of males and tennandis in the plural.

"The accioun—tuiching a land & tenement liand in the burgh of Edinburgh—is it to be decidit, determinit, & finally endit be the hale body of the parliament.— And orlanis that the malis of the said land & tenandis remain as thai did of before." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1479, p. 43.

"That he sall put his said sone in the fee of the remanent of all the said land & tenement, bath bak land & foreland." Ibid. A. 1491, p. 200.

TENENDAS. "That clause of a charter which expresses what way and manner the lands are to be holden of the superior;" Dict. Feud. Law.

TEN-HOURS, s. Ten o'clock, S. V. HOURS.

TEN-HOURS-BITE, s. "A slight feed to the horses while in the yoke in the forenoon," S. O. Gl. Burns; [also called ten-hours.]

TENNANDRIE, TENANTRY, s. 1. The tenants on an estate, or those who pay rent, viewed collectively, S.

"Our souerane lord hes—gevin to Schir Robert Carncoras—the warle and mariage of the Erle of Cassilis, the compositiounis of the tenandriis of Anguss," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1528, Ed. 1814, p. 328.

2. The possessions held by tenants.

—"Advocatioun and donatioun of kirkis, tenentis, tenandriis, particulis, pendiculis, annexis, connexis, and pertinentis tharof." Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 376.

Du Cange gives the term, occurring in the phrase, Cum tenandriis et libere tenentibus, (Stat. Rob. III. c. 4. § 3), as Tenandrius, in the nominative. I rather supposed that it is Tenandria; as the word appears in a Charter of William Justice General of England, quoted by Skene, Verb. Sign., where it signifies a village.

Du Cange also thinks that Tenanceriis should be read, instead of Tenandriis, from Fr. tenancier, tenens. But he has himself given another L.B. term which it far more nearly resembles. This is Tenentiarius, which he explains as synon. with Tenementarius; idem qui tenens, maniceps, feudatarius. Were not the word of Lat. origin, the termination might be viewed as having the same sense, and as radically the same, with Rie, Rg, q. v.

[TENOR, s. The cross bar between the legs of a chair, Shetl.]

To TENT, v. a. To stretch out, to extend.

The army al thay mycht se at ane sycht,
Wyth tentis tentit strekand to the plane.
Doug. Virgil, 264, 50.

Fr. tend-re, to extend; Lat. tend-ere, to pitch a tent.

TENT, s. Care, notice, attention. 1. To tak tent, to take care, to be attentive, S.

—The Lord off Douglas alsua,
With thair mengue, gud tent suld ta.
Quhill off thaim had of help myster,
And help with thaim that with hym wer.
Barbour, xi. 451, MS.

Dawnus son Turnus, in the nynte tak tent,
Segis new Troye, Eneas tho absent.

Doug. Virgil; Contentes, 12. 45.

The pl. is sometimes used.

The prince Eneas on this wyse allane
The fattis of goddis, and rasis mony ane
Rehersing schew, and sundry strange ventis,
The Quene and all the Tyrianis takand tentis.
Doug. Virgil, 92, 44.

The phrase corresponds to Fr. faire attention.

"A story is told of an English Lady, who consulted a physician from Scotland, and being desired by him to tak tent, understood that tent wine, was prescribed her, which she took accordingly. It is not said what was the consequence of the mistaken prescription; but as that species of wine is far from being a specific for every disorder, this is a phrase, which, by the faculty at least, ought to be carefully avoided." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 19.

[During the prevalence of influenza in a certain district of England, the local Doctor, a Scotchman, directed his patients "just to tak broch an' tent," and the prescription proved highly satisfactory.]

2. To tak tent to, to take care of, to exercise concern about a person or thing, S.

To say the salmes fast she bigan,
And toke no tent unto no man.

Yvaine, ver. 890. E. M. R.

Remane I here, I am bot perischit,
For thair is few to me that takis tent,
That garris me ga sa raggit, reuin, and rent.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 254.

R. Brunne uses a similar phrase, p. 220.

I rede thou gyue gode tent, & chastise thaim sone,
For thaim ye may be schent, for vengeance is granted bone.

This phrase occurs in B. Jonson's Sad Shepherd, as belonging to the North of E.

See, yee tak tent to this, and ken your mother.

3. To tak tent of, to beware of, to be on one's guard against, S.

I redd yon, good folks, tak tent of me.
Herd's Collection, ii. 29.

To TENT, v. n. To attend, to observe attentively, generally with the prep to.

Spynagros than spekis; said, Lordingis in le,
I rede you tent treuly to my teching.
Gawran and Gol., ii. 3.

It is sometimes used without the prep.

These lurdanes came just in my sight,
As I was tenting Chloe.
Ramsay's Works, i. 119.

Abbrev. from Fr. attend-re, or Lat. attend-ere.

Tent, how the Caledonians, lang supine,
Begin, mair wise, to open baith their een.
Ramsay's Poems, i. 50.

Palsgrave gives this phrase; "I tente to my busynesse, I take hede to the thinges I have in hande;" B. iii. F. 388, a.

To TENT, v. a. 1. To observe, to remark, S.

The neighbours a' tent this as well as I.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 75.

Think ye, are we less blest than they,
Wha scarcely tent us in their way,
As hardly worth their while!

Burns, iii. 157.

2. To regard, to put a value on, S.

And nane her smiles will tent,
Soon as her face looks sulid.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 76.

A. Bor. to tent, i.e., to tend, or look to; Ray.

3. To watch over, to take particular care of, S.; to Tent, E.

To Nory he was aye a tenty beel'd;
Wad help her up, whan she wad chance to fa';—
And be as tenty to bear off all harms,
As ever hen upo' the mudden head
Wad tent her chackins frae the greely glaid.
Ross's Helenore, p. 13, 14.

It is used, as v. n., to denote the care of a flock.

When they were able now to herd the ewes,—
They yee'd together thro' the heights and hows;
Whileoms they tented, and sometimes they play'd.
Ibid. p. 14.

TENT, adj. 1. Watchful, attentive, Galloway.

Weel kilted, frae a breckan buss
Up start'd Rosy Dougan,
As tent as if she had been a puss,
An' ilk yaul chiel a grewlun'.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 90.

2. Intent, keen, Galloway.

Up cam Tam Tell an' Sutor Sam,
High cap'ring frae the vennal,
As tent upo' the aftergame,
As bounds loos'd frae a kennel.

Ibid. p. 77.

TENTIE, TENTY, adj. 1. Attentive, S. Fr. attentif.

Be wyse, and tentie, in thy governing.
Maitland Poems, p. 276.

2. Cautious, careful, S.

To Nory he was aye a tenty beel'd, &c.
Ross's Helenore, p. 13, 14.

V. TENT, v. a.

—Triumphant our the ground,
They bore him tenty.
Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 53.

Here the adj. seems to be used adverbially.

TENTILY, adv. Carefully, S.

Back with the haleseme giras in haste she hy'd,
And tentily unto the sair apply'd.
Ross's Helenore, p. 15, 16.

[TENTIUELY, adv. Attentively, Barbour, i. 613, Herd's Edit.]

TENTLESS, adj. Inattentive, heedless, S.

I'll wander on, with tentless heed,
How never-halting moments speed,
Till fate shall snap the brittle thread.
Burns, iii. 87.

• TENT, s. A square pulpit of wood, erected in the fields, and supported by four posts, which rest on the ground, rising three or four feet from it; with a trap leading up to the door, and a projection in front, which is meant to protect the speaker from the sun and rain, as well as to serve for a sounding-board, S.

Tent-preaching has been long in use in S., occasionally at least from the year 1630. V. Livingston's Life, 4to, 1727, p. 9. It may have been used in an earlier age; but it became customary, in consequence of the multitudes, who assembled from different and often remote places, to attend the dispensation of the Supper, all of whom it was impossible to accommodate within doors. A still more severe necessity confirmed the practice; when, during the tyranny of Charles II. and his brother

James, the churches were shut against all who would not comply with episcopacy, or make such concessions as appeared to them to involve an acknowledgment of the king's supremacy in all matters ecclesiastical, as well as civil.

We need scarcely wonder, then, that Scottish Presbyterians, especially those residing in the country, should still feel some degree of partiality to tent-preaching. The practice is now, indeed, almost entirely disused about cities and towns; but it is still retained in many country parishes, on the Lord's day at least, where no church would suffice to accommodate all who attend divine service.

That such meetings have been by many abused, especially since the morals of our country have become more relaxed, cannot well be doubted. But the poem in which the term is used—

(But, Hark! the tent has chang'd its voice, &c.

Burns, iii. 33.)

is by no means to be viewed as a just picture of the deportment of the great body of the Scots on such occasions. Great as is the force of genius it displays, it must be evident that the chief design of the writer was to hold up all such meetings to ridicule: and, perhaps, it may be justly affirmed, that this and some other poems, written in a similar spirit by the same infatuated author, have done as much to release the minds of many of his countrymen, of the lower classes especially, from all the ties of religion, as any thing that ever proceeded from the unhallowed pen of Tom Paine. He evidently confines all the attendants at the Holy Fair to three classes; the votaries of Fan, of Superstition, and of Hypocrisy. He avows himself as belonging to the first; as attending on the most solemn ordinance of our holy religion for no other purpose but sport. The rest of the assembly consisted, in his charitable judgment, solely of those who, if not ardent hypocrites, were under the dominion of gross Superstition. Can we believe that the same man penned this, and the beautiful poem entitled, The Cottar's Saturday Night?

TEPATE, s. Some pieces of dress anciently worn by men; obviously the same with E. Tippet.

"And alsua the said William saie restor to the [said] Robt his belt, his knyfe, his hate, [i.e. hat], and his tepate, that he spulyit fra him, as was clerly previt before the said lordis." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1478, p. 16.

The person spoken of might be a religious man; as a long scarf worn by Doctors of Divinity, and the chaplains of noblemen, over their gowns, was called a tippet. V. Phillips. In L. R. this was denominated Epitogium, also Tipet-um. Hence, in the Council of London, A. 1342, it is mentioned as one of the abuses in the dress of the clergy; Ac caputii cum tipetis mirae longitudinis. Du Cange views this as the same with Fr. loupvet, apex, qui caputiu imminet. As, however, the caputium denoted not only a large cap or hood, but a sort of cloak, this idea is doubtful. In some instances the tippet was worn on the head, even by laymen. Thus Chaucer describes his Reve;

On holy dayes beforen hire wold he go
With his tippet ybounde about his hed.

Reve's Tale, v. 3951.

Lye defines the A.-S. word in a very indefinite manner; taeppt, vestimentum superius quoddam. Aelfric renders Sipla, by the A.-S. phrase an healf hrak taeppt, p. 60. Shall we suppose that the term was borrowed from taeppt, tapestry, as being a piece of ornamental dress, and perhaps originally sewed?

Fraunces expl. O. E. Typet, by Liripipium. Prompt. Parv. Du Cange renders the latter Epomis,—longa fascia, vel cauda caputii. It would seem to have been a hood, with a sort of skirt hanging over the shoulders, pointed at the top, and tasselled somewhat like a fool's cap.

TEPPIT, s. Feeling, sensation, Fife.

TEPPITLESS, adj. 1. Insensible, benumbed so that no impression can be made, ibid.

2. Applied to the mind; as, "The laddie's gane teppitless;" Loth. V. TABETS.

TER, s. Tar. O. E. "Tere. Pisargra. Colofonia—Terryn with terr. Colofoniso, Pisaigro." Prompt. Parv.

And pyk, and ter, als haiff thai tane;
And lynt, and herdis, and brynstane.

Barbour, xvii. 611. MS.

Teut. terre, Su.-G. tiera, A.-S. tare, id. The origin, according to Seren., in Sw. toere, lyre, taeda; lignum pinnue, ex quo hoc liquamen coquitur.

TERCE, s. "A liferent competent by law to widows who have not accepted of a special provision, of the third of the heritable subjects in which their husbands died infest." Erskine's Instit. B. 2. Tit. 9. s. 44. Lat. tert-ia, Fr. tiers.

The widow is hence styled the tercer, ibid.

TERCER, TIERCER, s. A widow who is legally entitled to the third part of her deceased husband's property; a term still commonly used in our courts of law, S.

"The Schiref of the schire—aucht and sould divide equally the tierce of the saidis landis fra the twa part thairrof; that is to say, ane rig to the Lady tiercer, and twa riggis to the superiour, or his donatour," &c. Balfour's Practicks, p. 108.

TERCIAN, s. A cask. "Twa wyne terci-ans, price viij s." Aberd. Reg., V. 16. V. TERTIAM.

TERE.

Eschames of our sleuth and cowardise,
Seand thir gentilis and thir paganis auld
Ensew virtue, and eschew euery vice,
And for sa schorte renowne warren so bald,
To sustene were and panis tere vntald.

Doug. Virgil, Frol. 358, 8.

"To bear, undergo, to digest," Rudd. Sibb. views it as the same with deir, injury. Perhaps it may be viewed as an adj., allied to, or the same with Teir, q. v.

It may be observed, that Isl. tor denotes difficulty in accomplishing any thing. Torfaera, a difficult way; torkaend, hard to be known.

It is not improbable that tere may denote expence; thus tere vntald would signify, unspeakable expence. Teut. teer, sumptus.

TERE, adj. Tender, delicate.

In describing the dresses of the courtiers of Venus, the poet mentions—

Satine figures champit with flouris and bewis,
Damisfluere tere pyle, quhairon thair lysis
Peirle, Orphany quhilk euerie stait renewis.

Palace of Honour, l. 46.

This seems to mean the tender or delicate pile of flowered damask; Teut. tere, tener, delicatus.

[TEREPOILE, TERPOILE, adj.] Applied to velvet of a superior quality; prob. the kind known as velvet upon velvet, in which the pattern was formed by pile upon pile.

"Item, the xxth da Januar [1488], v elne & a half of tere-poile veluus, for a half lang gowne to the King, price of the elne iij li. x s., &c." Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 135, Dickson.]

TERGAT, s. A blazon. V. TARGAT.

[TERIS, s. pl.] Tears, Barbour, iii. 348.]

TERLISS, s. A lattice or grate, S. V. TIRLESS.

TERLYST, TIRLLYST, part. pa. Grated, latticed.

A fell loun the King has gert be brocht
Within a barrace, for gret harm that he wrocht,
Terlyst in yrn, na mar power him gaiff;
Off wodness he excedyt all the laiff.

Wallace, xi. 197, MS.

Ferlyst, Edit. Perth.

—The full mone wyth beames brycht,
In throw the tirlest wyndo schane by nycht.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 37.

Fr. treillis, a grated frame; treill-er, to grate or lattice, to compass or hold in with cross bars or latticed frames; Cotgr.

TERMAGANT, s. The Ptarmigan, Gl. Sibb.

TERMIN. "It will last termin life," it will last for ever, Loth.; O. Fr. termine, terme, temps.

TERNE, TERNED, adj. Fierce, wrathful, choleric.

Thoch ye be kene, and inconstant, and cruel in mynd;
Thoch ye as tygaris be terne, be tretabil in luif.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 54.

"The moderator, a most grave and wise man, yet naturally somewhat terned, took me up a little accurately, shewing I might draw the question so strait as I pleased, yet he had not stated it so." Baillie's Lett., i. 134.

Belg. toornig, wrathful, toorn, anger, Su.-G. foertorn-a, to irritate.

TERNYTE, TARNTY, s. Corr. of Trinity.

Til the Fest of the Terynté

He grawatyd thame trewyd for to be.

Wyntonon, vii. 8. 99.

Hence th: corr. Tarnty Market, Ang. the name still given to a fair held at Brechin, at the time when this feast was celebrated during Popery. [This corr. prevails in E. of Perth., Forfar, Mearns & Aberd.]

[TERREM, s.] A long small gut of the sheep, with which the posh is strung: bands for a spinning wheel are made from it, Shetl.; S. thairm, Isl. thærmr.

TERRETOR, s. Territory, Aberd. Reg.

[TERRIE, s.] A kind of loft or shelf in the roof of a house, Shetl.]

TERSAILL, s. The third part of a pipe, a tierce. "Tersaill of wyne;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. Fr. tercière, id.

TERSE, s. A debate, a dispute, S.B.

To TERSE, v. n. To debate, to contend, S.B.

Allied perhaps to Teut. tert-en, trols-en, irritare, instigare, provocare verbis ferocibus.

TERSEL, s. Prob., husband.

Foul Flirdon, Wansucked Tersel of a Tade,

Thy meiter mismade hath lousily lucked.

Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 5.

It may perhaps signify brood, as a deriv. from A.-S. teors, Teut. teers, membrum virile.

It has been suggested that as the male of a falcon is called a Tersel, tersel of a tade may be q. the husband of a toad.

TERTIAM, s. A cask containing the third part of a butt or pipe of wine; E. terce.

"Twa vynes tertiamis." Aberd. Reg., A. 1538, V. 16.

The term might seem borrowed from the use of it in our old Lat. institutes. Non habent mensuras, videlicet, quartam, pintam, tertiam, &c. Iter. Camerar. c. 10, § 5.

[* TERTIAN, s. A student of third session, S. Lat. tertianus, tertius, the third.]

To TERTLE, v. a. To take notice of; as, "He never tertled me," he took no notice of me, Roxb. V. TARTLE.

TESLETTIS, s. pl. Armour for covering the thighs.

"That euerie erle be armit and furnist with corselet of pruiif, heid peaces, vanbraces, teslettis, and ano Spanische pik." Acts Ja. VI., 1598, Ed. 1814, p. 169.

"Taces or Tassers, an armour for the thighs;" Phillips. The Corselet, Grose informs us, when said to be "furnished or complete, included the head-piece and gorgett, the back and breast, with skirts of iron called tasses or tassels covering the thighs, as may be seen in the figures representing the exercise of the pike.—Tassels, or skirts, hooked on to the front of the cuirass, were—used by the infantry." Ancient Armour, p. 251. 253.

Teslet may be viewed as either a diminutive from tass, or as an error for tesset. Fr. Tasseles de Corcelet, partie d'une armure depuis la ceinture jusqu' aux genoux; Roquefort Gl. Rom. Tassette, "the skirt of a garment, and the tasse of an armour, in which sense it is commonly used plurally;" Cotgr.

TESMENT, s. 1. A latter will, S.B.; corr. from Testament. To mak one's tesment in a raip, (i.e., a rope,) to be hanged.

To think to lead my life wi' sic an ape,
I'd rather mak my tesment in a raip.

Ross's Helenore, p. 36.

2. The thing bequeathed, a legacy, Aberd.

[To TESMENT, v. a. To leave by will, Bauffs.]

To TEST, v. a. To put to trial, Ayrs.

"I do not think that honest folks in a far off country parish should—meddle with the things that pertain to government, the more especially, as it is well known, that there is as much falsehood as truth in newspapers, and they have not the means of testing the statements." Blackw. Mag., Sept. 1820, p. 591.

TESTAMENT, s. Apparently another name for the S. coin called a Testoon.

"Grantis commissioun to the said counsell or the maist part of thame to tak ordour how the xxx, xx, and x s. pcecia, with the testamentis, be haldin within the realme, and not transportit furth thairroff." Acts Ja. VI., 1578, Ed. 1814, p. 108.

TESTANE, s. Apparently the same with Testoon, q. v.

"Ordanis the Inglis testane to haue cours heireftir within this realme vpoun the pryce of viij s." Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 527.

"Ane testane worth v sh." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

TESTEFIE, s. A testimony.

"That betuix and the said day—they may ather be thame selfis or vtheris—produce sic testefies of thair antiquiteis as may informe the saidis commissioneris." Acts Ja. VI., 1600, Ed. 1814, p. 246.

TESTIFICATE, s. 1. A certificate of character in writing, in consequence of which a person has liberty to pass from one place to another.

"The said commissioners are hereby ordained to deliver to every such person a testificate;—which testificate is to serve as a free pass to all who have the same," &c. Crookshank's Hist., ii. 236.

2. The attestation given by a Kirk-Session, of the moral character of a church-member, when about to leave the district, S. This is also called a Testimonial, which is the term used in the Acts of the Church.

TESTIT, part. adj. Testamentary, given by will.

—"He allegeit it wes testit gudis, & he intromettit tharwith as executour." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1494, p. 208.

TESTOON, TESTONE, s. A Scottish silver coin, varying in value.

"There is no mention of these coins in the Scottish statutes before the beginning of James VI.'s time, which the French and English call testoons for their having the king's head stamped on them; but Nicolson is of opinion that their name was common enough in the time of queen Mary, mother of James VI. Certainly Fr. Blancius expressly calls some of the coins of Francis II. of France, and Mary of Scotland, his wife, testoons. Their value in England was always the same as shillings, but among the Scots, at first they were five shillings, and then raised to a higher value." Introd. to Anderson's Diplom., p. 131.

The silver coin, weighing about 92 grains Troy, with Mary's Head, 1562, is generally denominated her testoon. V. Cardonnel's Numism., p. 99. O. Fr. teste, a head. Teston. Capitatus nummus. On les appelliot testons à cause de la tête du Roi, qui y estoit représentée. Dict. Trev.

The term had been so common as to give birth to a Proverb.

"You will never make a Mark of your Testan by that bargain."—"The bargain is so bad that you will not gain by it." Kelly, p. 384.

It would appear that Kelly here gives the vulgar pronunciation, as authorised by ancient use. V. TESTANE. He explains Testan "a groat." This Prov. resembles another; "You'll never mak your Plack a Bawbee by that," S.

TESTOR, s. The cover of a bed, E. Tester.

"Where's the—beds of state, twilts, panls and testors, naperly and broidered work?" Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 296.

O. Fr. testiere, any kind of head-piece, from teste, now titte, the head. L. B. testerium, testrum, and testur-a, lecti supernum tegmen; Du Cange.

To TETE, TEET, v. a. 1. To send forth as if by stealth; to cause to peep out.

The rois knoppis, teland furth thare hede
Gan chyd, and kyth thare vernale lippis red.

Doug. Virgil, prol. 401. 18.

2. As a v. n., to peep out, to look in a sly or prying way; often as implying the idea that this is done clandestinely, S. pron. teet; synon. keik.

"They say Scot. He is teeting out at the window, i.e., he steals a glance or hasty view through the window;" Rudd.

But I can teet, an' hitch about,
And melt them ere they wit.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 36.

Toote is used in the same sense by Patten.

"I harde the Erll hymself say, that he neuer sent the same to my Lordes Grace, but George Douglas in his name: and this by him deuised, not so specially for any challenge sake, as for that the messenger should mayntein by mouth his talke to my Lordes Grace, whyle his eye wear rolling to toote & prie vpon the state of our campe, & whyther we wear pakkyng or no (as indeede the fellowe had a very good countenance to make a spie.)" Somersets Expedition, p. 53.

Toten is used by a very old E. writer, as signifying to spy.

Whow myght thou in thy brothers eigne a bare mote loken,
And in thyn owen eigne nought a beme tolen?

Perce Ploughmanes Crede, B. iij. b.

O. E. "Totehyll hye place of lokyng. Conspicillum." The same term also denoted a theatre. "Totehyll. Specula. Amphitheatrum. Teatrum." Prompt. Parv. "Toutyngye hoole to loken out at in a walle or wyndowe. Conspicillum. Scopelon." Huloet.

Su.-G. titt-a, inspicere. Ihre explains this word almost in the same terms with Rudd. Per transennam veluti videre, ad solent curiosi ant post tegmina latentes. This idea of "lurking behind a covert," very frequently enters into the sense in which we use our S. term. There had undoubtedly been a cognate word in O. E., as Skinner renders toteth, looketh; supposing that it is allied to Lat. tue-or, tui-tus. Ihre adopts the idea as to titt-a. Hence, TEET-BO, s. 1. Bo-peep, S.

But she maun e'en be glad to look,
An' play teet-bo frae nook to nook.

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 113.

2. Used metaph. to denote inconstancy, or infidelity.

By teet-bo friends, an' nae a few,
I've rough been guidit.

Morison's Poems, p. 95.

TETH, s. Temper, disposition. Ill-teeth'd, ill-humoured, having a bad temper, Fife.

Allied perhaps to A.-S. tyht, instructio, teing, disciplina, or Isl. tidt indeclin. Mierer titt um; huic rei studes; Verel.

[To TETHER, TEDDER, v. a. To unite, marry; as, tether'd to a taupie, Clydes; also, to fasten, to moor, Aberd.

Wi' atry face he ey'd
The Trojan shore, an' a' the barks,
That tether'd fast did ly
Along the coast.—

Ajax's Speech, Poems in Buch. Dial.

[TETHER, TEDDER, s. Bounds, means, resources; as, "He's at the end o' his tether, his means are exhausted; also, whatever binds, limits, or restricts, S. V. TEDDER.]

[TETHER-CHACK, s. The pin of iron or wood affixed to a tether, and by which it is secured to the ground, Banffs; syn. tether-stake.]

TETHERFACED, adj. Having an ill-natured aspect, S.

Allied perhaps to Isl. teit-a, rostrum beluinum; whence teist-r, torvus et minax.

TETTIE, adj. Having a bad temper; Roxb.; the same with Titty, q. v.

TETUZ, s. 1. "Any thing tender;" Gall. Enc.

2. "A delicate person;" ibid.

Allied perhaps to Isl. teit-r, pullus animalis; tita, res tenera, tenerrima, whence tituleg-r, tener. Shall we add taeta, minimum quid?

TEUCH, TEUGH, TEWCH, adj. 1. Tough, not easily broken, S. Teich, Yorks.

Amiddis ane rank tre lurkis a golden beuch,
With aureate leuis, and flexibil twistis teuch.

Doug. Virgil, 167, 42.

A.-S. toh, id. from Moes.-G. tioh-an, ducere, vel pertrahi; q. any thing that may be drawn out or extended.

2. Tedious, lengthened out, not soon coming to a close.

It occurs in an old adage;

The Spring e'ennings are lang and teuch.

3. Not frank or easy, dry as to manner, stiff in conversation, S.

About me freindis anew I gatt,
Rycht blythlie on me thay leuch;
But now they mak it wondir teuch.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 185.

In this sense tough is used by Palsgrave. "I make it tough, I make it coye, as maydens do, or persons that be strange if they be asked a questyon;" B. iii. F. 292, a.

4. Pertinacious. A teuch debate, one in which the disputants, on both sides, adhere obstinately to their arguments, S.

Baillie uses tough in this sense.

"Here arose the toughest dispute we had in all the Assembly." Letters, i. 93.

A teuch battle, one keenly contested, S.

At Loncarty they fought fu' teuch.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 12.

Isl. erig-er, synonym with A.-S. toh, denotes a man who is tenacious of his purpose. Their coro seiger a sit mal; caussam suam tenaciter defendebant; Ol. Tryggv. S., p. i. 140.

5. To make any thing teuch, to do it reluctantly.

Schir, say for thi self, thow seis thow art schent,
It may nocht mend the ane myte to mak it sa teugh.
Gawan and Goll., iv. 6.

TEUCH, s. A draught, a pull of any liquor, S.

This word is entirely Gothic. Su.-G. tog, notat haustum, potantium ductum. [Syn. waucht. V. TEUG, v.] Drack ut then dryck i en tog. Uno haustu potum illum hausit; i.e., S., "He drank out that drink at ae teuch." Hist. Alex. Magn., ap. Ihre.

This learned writer gives it as derived from tog-a, trahere, ducere, as E. draught from draw. Ihre adds; Nos etiam toga gaa usurpamus de impigre bibentibus. Belg. teug; toge, id. Kilian gives toghe, teughe, haustus, as synonym with dronck.

Isl. teig-a. Eg teig, haurio, haustum sumo; teig-r, haustus. Ir. and Gael. deoch, a draught, a pull of drink, would seem to have had a common source.

TEUCHIT (gutt.), s. The lapwing, S.

The timid teuchit slouch'd its crest,
And cuttled closer to its nest;
The watchfu' male flaff'd i' the gale,
Wi' eerie screech and plaintive wail;
Now soar'd aloft, now scuff'd the ground,
And wheel'd in mony an antic round.

John o' Arnha', Montrose, 1818, p. 63.

"Tewset, a lapwing, North." Tuft, id. Grose. Here the guttural sound has been changed into the labial, like E. Laugh. Perhaps E. Tirwit, (Ainsworth,) Tirchit, a lapwing (Kersey), is a corr. of Teuchit.

TEUCHIT-STORM, s. The gale, in the reckoning of the vulgar, conjoined with the arrival of the Green Plover, S. V. TUQUHEIT.

To HUNT THE TEUCHIT. To be engaged in any frivolous and fruitless pursuit; a proverbial phrase, S. B.; equivalent to hunting the Gowk. It probably alludes to the artful means employed by the lapwing, for misleading those who seek for her nest in order to carry off her young.

'Tis strange what makes kirk-fouks so stupit,—
Far better for them hunt the teuchit,
Or teach their schools.

Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 41.

TEUD, s. A tooth, Fife. Teudle, the tooth of a rake or harrow, ibid.

Gael. deud, "a set of teeth, a jaw," has some resemblance.

To TEUDLE, v. a. To insert teeth. To teudle a heuk, to renovate the teeth of a reaping-hook, ibid.

[TEUDLESS, adj. Toothless, ibid.]

TEUG, TUG, s. A rope. It is particularly applied to a halter, Loth.; [syn. tow.]

Su.-G. tog, a rope, Isl. tog, taug, id. from tog-a, ducere.

G. Andr. defines Taug, fibra, lorum, vimen, nervulus, juncus; a teige, distendo, tendo, distraho. This exactly corresponds with the sense given under Tug.

[To TEUG, v. a. To pull, draw, tug, Clydes.]

[TEUGS, s. pl. 1. The thighs of a pair of breeches, Shetl.]

2. Trousers; also, clothes, Clydes. E. togs.]

TEUK, TUIK, TOOK, s. A bye-taste. That meal has a teuk, it has a disagreeable taste; as, "This maun be sea-borne meal; it has a vile muisty teuk." When meal is made from corn that has been heated in the stack, the peculiar taste is denominated the het tuik; Lanarks., Loth., Roxb.

Allied perhaps to Teut. tuck, a touch, from tuck-en, tangere; as it is said in E. of meat which is in a slight degree tainted, that it is toucht a little.

TEUKIN, adj. 1. Quarrelsome, troublesome, S. B.

2. Variable; applied to the wind when still shifting, and seeming to blow from more points than one at a time, South of S.

Belg. tuk, "sly, cunning, fraudulent."

Allied perhaps to Teut. tuck, fraus, fallacia, insidiae, machinatio; Isl. tulk-a, pellicere.

[To TEUT-MEUT, v. n. To whisper, to speak in a muttering or suppressed manner; to talk confidentially, Banffs.]

[TEUT-MEUT, s. A low, suppressed, or muttered talk; a confidential story, ibid.]

[TEUT-MEUT, adv. In a confidential or suppressed manner, ibid.]

To TEVVEL, v. a. To confuse, to put into a disorderly state, Dumfr.

Both this and the v. Tuffle, are used in Dumfr.; tervel, however, it is said, in a stronger sense than tuffle. I am inclined, notwithstanding, to view them as radically the same. V. TUFFLE.

To TEW, v. a. 1. To fatigue, to overpower. Sair tew'd, much fatigued. It is often used in regard to sickness; as signifying that one is much tossed, or, as vulgarly expressed, tostit, by it, Dumfr.; Foryaw'd synonym.

Mactaggart gives Tue as well as Tued, in this sense. But he views the latter as more forcible than the former. "Tue, fatigued; Tued, fatigued out."

2. To overdo, to make tough. Meat is said to be tewed, when roasted with so slow a fire that it becomes tough, S. O. V. TAAVE and TAW, v. i.

It would seem that "to Tew, to work as mortar, Yorks.," (Marshall), is to be viewed as the same.

To TEW, v. n. 1. To be eagerly employed about any thing, S.

2. To toil, to work constantly, Ettr. For.; to struggle, to strive, Dumfr. "To Tew, to work hard; also to taize [tease], North." Grose. Marshall expl. Tew, "to agitate and fatigue by violent exercise;" Yorks.

3. Grain is said to tew, when it becomes damp, and acquires a bad taste, S. B.

Su.-G. taef, odor, taef-a, gustare; Isl. thef-ur, odor, plerumque ingratus, thef-a, odorari, item, foetere, Arm. taf-a, taf-a, gustare.

TEW, pret. of the v. to Tiaue, expl. "to amble."

He plumpit i' the scuttal
Owre's lugs that night.
He tew, an' peghin stytert hame,
Well soupt' wi' the peel.

Tarras's Poems, p. 69.

It seems to denote his awkward motion in struggling to get out of the pool. Allied perhaps to Isl. teig-ia, extendere, protendere, Verel.; distraho, distendo, in longum latumque extendo; teig-r, nisus laboris, G. Andr. Tew seems to belong to the v. of which Taavin is the part. pr., expl. "wrestling, tumbling." V. TIawe.

- TEW, s. 1. [Struggle, difficulty, hardship.] This term is always conjoined with an adj.; as, sair tews, great difficulties, Border. It exactly corresponds with the phrase used in the north of E. "Sare tues, great difficulty in accomplishing any thing;" Gl. Brockett.

Mr. Brockett gives A. Bor. "Tur, to labour long and patiently, to fatigue by repeated or continued exertion;" adding that Fr. tuer, "originally to kill," is "used also for, to fatigue or weary. Il se tue, he wearies himself; or, in North country language, he tues himself. Tuing on, toiling away;" Gl.

Tuer, as the Fathers de Trevoux remark, is indeed used hyperbolically for Labore vel negotiis obrui; and this deduction is very ingenious. But it is not probable that this figurative sense of the word could be diffused even among the vulgar in Britain. A Teutonic source had previously occurred to me, which I am still inclined to prefer. Teut. touwe-en, premere, pressare, agitare, subigere; Kilian. This v. in Alem. assumes the various forms of doue-en, domare, duoh-en, duw-an, and bethuwo-an, premere, suppressere. It seems doubtful, indeed, whether we should not trace Tew to A.-S. teog-an, teo-a, to tug, trahere. It is used with the prep. on, in reference to the leading forward of an army, where our phrase might often be applied with considerable propriety. Teog-an, or Teo-n on, ducere exercitum in. Teak on, duxit copias. Teoh is also used as the pret.

2. A bad taste, especially that occasioned by dampness, S. B.
3. Iron hardened with a piece of cast iron.
V. LEW [TEW]ARNE BORE.

TEWEL, s. 1. A tool of any kind. This is the pronunciation of Shetl., and, indeed, of the North of S. in general.

2. Sometimes applied to a ship, Shetl.
3. Pl. tewellis, tools; applied to military furniture.

The teind of his tewellis to tell war full teir.
Rauf Coillyear, B. iij. b.

[To TEY, v. a. To tie, Barbour, xv. 282.]

To TEYM, TEME, v. a. To empty; teem, S. B. V. TEEM.

Mony off hors to the ground doun thair cast,
Saidlys thair teym off hors, bot maistris thar.
Wallace, viii. 213, MS.

Than young men walit, besy here and thare,
And eik preistis of Hercules altare,
The roistit bullis fleuche set by and by,
The bakin brede of basketis temys in hie.

Doug. Virgil, 247, 5.

[TEYND, adj. and s. Tenth. V. TEIND.]

TEYNDFRIE, adj. Exempt from tithes. V. under TEIND.]

[TEYNE, s. and v. V. TENE.]

[TEYNFULL, adj. Wrathful. V. under TENE.]

THA, THAE, THAY, THEY, pron. These, those; all pron. in the same manner.

And the fyrst buke of tha
Ball trete fra the begynnnyng
Of the warlike.

Wyntown, i. 2. 6.

Sa tha sam folk he send to the depfurd,
Gert set the ground with scharp spykis off burd.
Wallace, x. 41, MS.

And were not his expert mait Sibylla

Ibid. 6. 54.

A.-S. thæge, illi.

A.-S. sume thæge, quidam illorum. It must be acknowledged, however, that it more nearly approaches the form of Isl. thaa, the accusative plural of theyr, illi. This bears a striking resemblance to tha, used by our ancient writers.

It is singular that as we have in S. two peculiar terms which are often used in the same sense, thir and thai, the first corresponds to the Isl. nominative pl. theyr, and the second to the accusative.

It is observed, vo. THIR, that thir and thai are generally opposed, like these and those. Indeed, in colloquial discourse thir denotes the nearest objects, as equivalent to E. these; and thai, objects more distant, corresponding with E. those.

THACK, s. Thatch. V. THAK.

THACKER, s. A thatcher, S.

The thacker said to his man,
Let us raise this ladder, if we can.

Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 68.

"In the dry weather, after the seed-time hire two-three thackers to mend the thack on the roofs of such of the cottars' houses as stand in need of mending." Blackw. Mag. Oct. 1820, p. 14.

O. E. id. "Thacker, coureur de chaume;" Palsgr. B. iii. F. 69, b. Fraunces gives it in the form of "Thakdar. Sarcitector." Prompt. Parv.

THACK-GATE, s. The sloping edge of the gable-tops of a house, when the thatch covers them; in contradistinction from the Wind-skews that are raised higher than the thatch, Roxb.

THACKLESS, adj. 1. Unroofed, without thatch, S.

Some lass maun gae wi' a kilted sark,
Some priest maun preach in a thackless kirk.
Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 284.

2. Metaph. uncovered, without a hat.

Want minds them on a thackless scaup,
Wi' a their pouches bare.

Tarras's Poems, p. 17.

"Clothing, necessities;" Gl. Burns. But this is only the idea suggested. The phrase itself has a more general sense.

THACK-STONE, s. Stone fit for covering houses.
Ja. VI. P. 23, c. 26. V. SKAILLIE.

THAFTS, s. pl. The benches of a boat, on which the rowers sit, S.

Belg. doften, id. Isl. thopte, trabs seu sedile in navi;
G. Andr., p. 266. Thotta, transtrae; Verel.

THAI, THAY, pron. 1. Pl. of he or she.

Thai stuffit helmys in by,
Breist plait, and birny,
Thay renkis maid reddy
All geir that myght gane.

Gowan and Gol, iii. 7.

[2. Those; as, of thai thre men, Barbour, vii. 212; this is a dative form still common.]

Johns. gives A.-S. thi as the origin of E. they. But hi is the A.-S. word. This seems from thaege, like the pron. tha, thay.

[THAIM-SELWYN, pron. Themselves, Barbour, i. 502.]

THAIN, adj. Not sufficiently roasted or boiled, S. V. THANE.

THAINS, s. pl. V. RAYEN.

THAIR, THAR, v. impers. Used as expressive of necessity; generally with the negative affixed; as, "Ye thair n' fash," you need not put yourself to the trouble, Dumfr.

Obviously from the same origin with Tharf, q. v. the r being thrown off for softening the sound.

THAIR. Used in composition like E. there.

There, in comp. (S. thair, thar,) seems to be originally the genit., dat. and abl. of the A.-S. article, thaere, there, corresponding to Gr. της, την, τη. V. Hickes. Gramm. A.-S., p. 7. According to this idea, Lye expl. A.-S. Thaer-to, ad eum, eam, id.; Fraeter eum, eam, id.; Thaer-after, post hoc, haec, vel ea, postea; Thaer-of, de vel ex eo, ea, iis; Thaer-inne, in eo, ea, iis. I am much inclined to think that A.-S. thaer, ibi, in that place, was originally the genit. or abl. of the article; as Lat. illuc, and istic have been formed from ille, iste.

THAIRANENT, THAIRATTOUR, adv. Concerning, concerning that.

"Being cairfull that the samye be cleired to the leidges, and thay be put in ane certaintie thairanent

—the saids Lordis finds and declaris," &c. Acts Sederunt, 29th January 1650.

"And gif he dois any thing thairattour, furthwith to arrest his persoun & send him to the kingis ward." Parl. Ja. II.. A. 1547, Acts Ed. 1814, c. 25.

Than spak the King, your conclusion is quaint,
And thairattour ye mak to us a plaint.

Priests Peblis, S. P. R., i. 14.

THAIRBEFOR, THARBEFOR, adv. Before that time.

He had in Fraunce bene thar befor
With hys modyr, dame Ysabell.

Barbour, xix. 260, MS.

THAIRBEN, THERE-BEN, adv. In an inner apartment of a house; as thairbut respects an outer apartment, S.

"For the removing of that impediment of proceeding in the Utter-house (that the procurator is thair ben) it is appointit be the saidis Lordis that thair sál be fifteen advocatis nominat; quha sál be appointit for the Inner-house." Acts Sederunt, 11th January, 1604.

"Hout I," quoth she, "ye may well ken,
'Tis ill brought but that's no there ben."

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 525.

One might almost suppose that Ramsay had borrowed this from Rolan!.

—I wot right well ye ken,

For to bring but its ill that's not there-ben.

Seaven Sages; To the Reader.

Sometimes the-ben. Bare the-ben, having little provision in the inner part of the house, or spence.

Sair are we nidded, that is what ye ken,

And but for her, we had been bare the-ben.

Ross's Helenore, p. 51.

The butt is used in the same way.

In caice the judge will not permit,

That you come ben, byde still the butt.

P. Many's Truth's Travels, Pennecuik's

Poems, 1715, p. 106.

Tout daer-binnen, intro, intus. Belg. daar-buyten, without that place, Sewel.

It is used in another expressive proverb, S.

"He is well boden there benn,

Who will neither borrow nor lend."

Lend, pron. q. len, S.

"A man must be well furnished indeed, who needs not borrow, and will not lend." Kelly, p. 150.

THAIRBY, THARE-BY, adv. 1. Thereabout, used with respect to place.

—Ane, on the wall that lay,

Besid him till his fere gan say,

"This man thinkis to mak gud cher,"

(And nemyt ane husband tharby ner.)

Barbour, i. 387.

2. Thereabout, as to time, S.

A thousand and thre hundyr yere

Nynty and five or thare-by nere,

Robert the Keth, a mychty man

Be lynage, and apperand than

For to be a Lord of mycht,——

In Fermartine at Fivv

Asseit his awnt, a gud lady.

Wyntown, ix. 16. 2.

"Upon Tuesday the 18th of August or thereby general Lealy raised his army frae Chelsea wood beside Dunse, and passed over the Tweed that samen day." Spalding, i. 253.

3. Used also with respect to number or quality, S.

"Friday the fourt of Maii, the ducke and his son Claude come to this toun, to the number of ane hundred hors, and threescore hacquebutteris or therby, and lyghted at the castell gate." Bannatyne's Journal, p. 144.

"That the said Thomas Roresoune of Barlarroch lies committit and done treassoune—in his fals, audacious, and vniust forgeing, adulterating, and cunyeing of our souerane lordis money, to the forme of half mark and fourtie penny pecis, to the sowme of twa thousand markis or thairbye; and that in the place of Lochmabarie [Lochmabane] within the schirefdome of Wigtoun." Acts Ja. VI., 1581, Ed. 1814, p. 206.

4. As respecting size or quantity, S.

"He—gat a piece of fine lint of half a faldome, or thareby, fra ane of the suddartins." Anderson's Coll., ii. 170.

Belg. daerbey, ad hoc, ad haec, penes, prope, Skinner, vo. There.

THAIR-DOWN, THER DOWN, adv. Downwards, in that place below, S.

And throw the wall he maid, with his botkin
A lytil hole richt prevelie maid he,
That all theyr deid thair-down he mycht weill se.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 71.

His soverain Lord, let neir this sinful sot
Do schame frae hame unto your nation;
Let neir again sic ane be call'd a Scot,
A rotten crok, louse of the dok ther down.
Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 72.

THAIR-EAST, THERE EAST, adj. In the east; also, towards the east, S.

"Clydesdale was somewhat suspected in their affection to the cause, especially the Marquisses of Hamilton and Douglass appearing against us; wherefore the Tables there east thought they should not conjoin, but divided them in four." Baillie's Lett., i. 164.

THAIRFRA, THEREFRAE, adv. From that place, therefrom, S.

"Thir lordis—assemblit at Edinburgh, and thairfra went with the kingis grace to Meggat land." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 341.

"Upon Friday the 26th of August [1638] some friends lifted the marquis' corpse upon a litter frae the chapel of Strathboggie to the kirk of Belly, and upon the morn at night is likewise carri'd therefrae to his own lodging in Elgin,—and upon the 30th of August his corps were lifted therefrae, having above the coffin a rich mortcloth of black velvet, whereon was wrought two white crosses." Spalding, i. 53.

THAIRFURTH, adv. In the open air, S.

He punyst theiffis, reuers & othir criminabyll personis with sic senerite and justice, that the bestiall & gudis lay thairfurth but ony trubill." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 17, b. Sub dio asservabantur; Boeth.

THAIRIN, THEREIN, adv. At home, within doors, S.

"Besay Chisholm—Heh! Are ye therein?" Perils of Man, iii. 202.

THAIRINTILL, THEREINTILL, adv. Therein.

"All bands and actis of caution to be taen and resawed in suspensiounes heirefter, shall bear this clause insert thairintill." Act Sederunt, 29th January, 1650. V. INTIL.

"The earl, seeing he—could not get them overcome and sublued without an lieutenantry—which the king graciously granted to him for some years, and to sit, cognosce, and decern upon some capital points allenarly, specially set down thereintill." Spalding, i. 5.

THAIROUR, THAR OUR, adv. On the other side, in relation to a river.

Bathe hors and men into the wattr fell,
The harly Scottis, that wald na langar duell,
Set on the laiff with strakis sad and sar:
Off thaim thar our, as than sowert thair war.

Wallace, vii. 1187, MS.

Thereover, Edit. 1648.

THAIROWT, THAROUT, adv. Without, as denoting exclusion from a place, S.

The yett he wor, quhill cummin was all the rout,
Of Inglys and Scottis, he held na man tharout.

Wallace, iv. 433, MS.

Is this fair Lady Chestety?
I think it war a grit pitie
That ye could be thairout.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 51.

To lie thairout; to lie in the open air during night, S.
Teut. daer-ut, is used in a different sense, signifying ex eo, inde, thence.

THAIRTILL, THERTYLL, adv. Thereto.

Nor mysknaw not the concliousness of vs
Latyne pepyll and folkis of Saturnus,
Vnconstrenyt, not be law bound thertyll.

Doug. Virgil, 212, 21.

THARETHROW, adv. By that means, thence.

"And tharethrow we ar gritumlie and enormlie hurt." Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 358. V. EXORMLIE.

Teut. daer-dent, illac, illinc, istinc, is formed in the same manner.

THAIR UP, adv. Out of bed.

"I haue walkit laiter thair up then I wald haue done, gif it had not bene to draw sum thing out of him, quihilk this beirer will schaw yow, quihilk is the fairest commoditie, that can be offerit to excuse your affairis." Lett. Buchanan, Detect. Q. Mary, H., 3. b. Jay veillé plus tard la haut que je n'eusse fait, &c., Fr. copy.

THAIRM, THERM, THAIRN, s. 1. Used in relation to the belly or gut of man, S.

"He that has a wide therm, had never a long arm." S. Prov. "Gluttonous people will not be liberal of their meat." Kelly, p. 137.

"A wide thairm has seldom a long arm," Loth. This is obviously the primary and literal sense of the word.

2. Intestines twisted, like E. Tharm, especially catgut, S.

Oh, had M'Lachlan thairm-inspiring sage.
Burns, vol. iii. 59.

E. tharm seems to be restricted to the intestines as in a prepared state. "Intestines twisted for several uses," Johns.

The O. E. word has been used both for the entrails in their natural state, and when prepared as a dish. "Tharme. Sumen. Viscus." Prompt. Parv.

We learn from Skinner, that in Lincoln. the term denotes the intestines as cleansed for being stuffed with pudding, &c. In S. it is chiefly used in its primitive sense.

[Aboon them a' ye tak your place
Painch, tripe, or thairm.
Burns, Vol. iii. 217.]

A.-S. thearm, intestinum, "an entrail, or inward part, either of man or any living thing, a gut, a bowell;" Somner. Alem. and Isl. tharm, Su.-G. tarm, Tent. darm, id. G. Andr. gives it in pl. tharmar. This is expl. by Halderson of the small guts; Intestina tenuia, ilia.

THAIRM-BAND, s. A string or cord of catgut for turning a spinning-wheel, S.

THAK, s. 1. Thatch; the covering of a roof when made of straw, rushes, heath, &c. Thack, S. Yorks.

Sum graithis first the thak and rufe of tre,
And sum about deluis the fousy depe.
Doug. Virgil, 26, 17.

Thack and rape, the covering of a stack, S.
—The stacks get on their winter-hap,
And thack and rape secure the toil-worn crap.
Burns, iii. 51.

In thack an' rape, in order, as denoting what is completely secured or perfectly well regulated.

—"If it's your honour, we'll a' be as right and tight as thack and rape can make us." Guy Mannering, iii. 202.

"He kens weel enough wha feeds him and cleeds him, and keeps a' tight thack and rape when his coble is jowing awa' in the Firth, poor fallow." Antiq., ii. 281.

"Thack and rape, commonly used in allusion to the stacks in the barn-yard, after they are thatched-in for the winter; so that under thack and rape means snug and comfortable;" Gl. Antiq.

2. The roof or covering of a house, whatever be the materials of which it is made.

"Johne Betoune of Creich—protestit that sen he has the keping of the palice of Falkland, and the samyn is rivin, the thak therof is brokin, and will tak gret skaith without it be hastelie remedit, therefore to causs the falsis be mendit," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1525, Ed. 1814, p. 296.

This cannot be understood of thatch in the common sense. The covering must have been stone, or slate, if not lead.

It is indeed expressly used to denote a roof of slate. "The sklath thak haddis owt na rane." Aberd. Reg. Cent 16.

To THAK, THACK, v. a. To thatch, S. O. E. id. "I thacke a house." Palsgrau.

Out of aw thack and raip, a proverbial phrase, applied to one who acts quite in a disorderly way; q. resembling thatch so loosed by the wind, that the rope has no hold of it.

S. thac, theac, Isl. thak, Su.-G. tak, Alem. theki, Germ. dach, Lat. tectum, a roof or covering for a house. V. THEIK, v.

O.E. id. "Thak. Tegmen. Sarcitectum." Prompt. Parv. "Thacke of a house, [Fr.] chaume;" Palsgr. B. iii. F. 69, b.

THAK-BURD, s. The thatch-board, the roof.

—Fyr all cler
Sone throw the thak burd kan apper.
Barbour, iv. 126, MS.

THAN, adv. Then, at that time, S.

Than gaddryt he rycht hastily
Thaim that he mowcht of his menyne.
Barbour, xvi. 370, MS.

VOL. IV.

Bot than the trumpettis werely blastis aboundis,
Wyth terribyl brag of brasin bludy soundis.
Doug. Virgil, 294, 54.

Be than, by that time; Or than, before that time. V. BE THAN.

The S. word retains the orthography of the venerable Bishop of the Moeso-Goths; than, tum, tunc. Than and haita im; "Then I will profess unto them." Matt. vii. 23.

THAN, OR THAN, conj. Else, elsewhere, S. B.

This seems an oblique use of the same word as signifying tunc, tum, then; as, "Come hame sune, or than I'll be angry;" i.e., If you do not return soon, my displeasure will be the consequence.

THANE, THAYNE, s. A title of honour, used among the ancient Scots, which seems gradually to have declined in its signification.

Quhen Makbeth, Fynlayk thus wes slane,
Of Fyfe Makduff that tyme the Thane
For his trawaille and his bowntè
At Malcolme as Kyng askyd thire thre.
Wyntoun, vi. 19. 2.

And that wemen than thowcht he Thre werd systrys mast lyk to be.
The fyrst he harl say gangand by,
"Lo, yhondyr the Thayne of Crumbawchty."
The tothir woman sayd agayne,
"Of Morave yhondyre I se the Thayne."
Ibid. 18. 23.

Although it occurs in our history before the reign of Malcolm Canmore, it has been supposed that it was introduced by this prince, for his attachment to A.-S. manners, as he had been educated in the English court; Notes to Sibb. Fife, p. 224. But it is more probable, that it was borrowed from the A.-S. in an earlier reign, as in this it seems to have given place to the title of Earl; Lord Hailes' Annals, i. 27.

This, as taking place of Murmor, appears to have been the highest title of honour known in S., before the reign of Malcolm Canmore. Afterwards, that of Earl was probably reckoned more honourable, as having obtained a more determinate sense in England after the Norman conquest. For, according to Spelman, (vo. Eorla) Erle seems rather to have denoted a Duke than a Count.

It has been supposed, that there were Earls in S. even before the time of Malcolm II. Dalyell's Fragments, Desultory Reflections, p. 37. Torfaeus says; Fuit quidam Comes in Scotia Melbrigdus, Hist. Orcad. circ. A. 860. Lib. i. c. 4. According to Sturlison, "Earl Sigurd killed Melbrigd, called Tonn, a Scottish Earl." Sigurdur Iarl drap Melbrigda Tonn, Iarl. Skotskan; Heimskringla, V. i. 99. Torfaeus also mentions Dungad Comes Catenesiae, A. 875. He is called Dungadr iarl af Katanes; Orkneyinga S. p. 4. We also read of Erp, the son of Meldun, a certain Earl from Scotland; Melduni cujusdam comitis è Scotia, about 870, Hist. Orcad. Lib. i. c. 5, of Earls Hund and Melanar, the kinsman of Malcolm, who afterwards came to the throne, A. 993. Ibid. c. 10. And Mr. Dalyell also refers to Adils and Hring, A. 985, who both receive the name of Iarl; Egill, Skalla-grim S. But there is no evidence that they resided in Scotland. They are called two brothers who presided over Bretlandi, the land of the Britons; and are said to have been, skatigildir undir Adalstein konung, tributaries to Athelstan King of England. V. Johnstone, Antiq. Celto-Scand., p. 33, comp. with pp. 41, 42. Mention is made, in Niala Saga, of an Earl Melkolf, i.e., Malcolm, who seems to have resided on the Border, in a place called Whitsburg, near Berwick. V. Johnstone, p. 142.

In the same work Makbeth Comes, 952 is also mentioned; and Finleikus Comes Scotorum, 985. Ol Tryggvason S. It is added, that, "if we might credit Torfaeus,—Malcolm Mackenneth was in use to create Earls;" and that "there is an earlier account of the creation of an Earl;" for Skuli, the brother of Liot, having gone into Scotland, was there dignified with the name of Earl by the Scottish king. V. Ol. Tryggvason S. Johnstone, p. 118.

Mr. Dalryell has justly observed, that "great latitude must be given to the imperfect accounts Torfaeus and the writers of the Sagas might obtain." When they use the term, it is highly probable, that it is meant to express the dignity of Thane; as the latter designation, although of Gothic origin, does not appear to have been used, among the Scandinavians, as so honourable a term, or in so definite a sense.

It is probable, that some were created, by our kings, earls in Caithness, before the term was more generally used. As this country had been long in the possession of the Norwegians, and governed by those who had been honoured with this title by the kings of Norway, their successors in power, who adhered to the Scottish crown, might view it as more honourable than Thane.

It seems evident that this name, as used in the instances referred to, was not merely honorary, but descriptive of office. For no sooner was Skuli, above mentioned, made an Earl, than he raised forces in Caithness, and led them into the islands; Antiq. Celto-Scand., p. 118. The same thing was done by Moddan, after he had been made an Earl by a Scottish king, called Karl by the Norwegian writers; Orkneyinga, S., p. 31. Whether such a king ever existed or not, is not material. These passages shew, that they understood the title as conferring at least territorial authority.

It is probable that Thane was at first synon. with Lat. Comes, as expressive of an honour arising from office. He, who enjoyed this title, seems to have presided in a county, and sometimes in a province. Macduff, as Thane of Fife, must have had an extensive jurisdiction.

It may also be supposed, that he had a partial command in the army, at least of the forces in his own district. Spelman accordingly observes, that Thane, among the ancient Scots, is equivalent to Toech; and Gael. Toichich signifies the General, or Leader of the van. This interpretation, as Dr. Macpherson observes, is confirmed by the name of a considerable family in the Highlands of Scotland,—the clan of M'Intosh, who say, that they derive their pedigree from the illustrious Macduff, once Thane, and afterwards Earl of Fife. Macduff in consideration of his services to Malcolm Canmore, obtained a grant, which gave him and his heirs a right of leading the van of the royal army on every important occasion. The chieftain of the clan, that is descended from this great Earl, is stiled Mac in Toichich, that is to say, "the Son of the General." Crit. Diss. 13.

The Thane, according to Boece, collected the king's revenues; Fol. 20, a. Fordun, speaking of an Abthane, says that, "under the king, he was the superior of those who were bound to give an annual account of their farms and rents due to the king. For," he adds, "the Abthane had to reckon the royal revenues, as discharging the office of a Steward or Chamberlain." Lib. iv. c. 43.

Thane, according to Mr. Pinkerton, is equivalent to Murmur; (Enquiry, ii. 193) which seems to have been the highest title anciently given to a subject. To this, we imagine, the A.-S. term succeeded. It is worthy of observation, that Thane and Mair, in their primary sense, conveyed the same idea; both signifying a servant.

As Thane succeeded to Mair in its composite form (Murmur), it is hence probable, that there has been some foundation for the assertion of Buchanan and other writers, that the Thane not only administered justice, but collected the King's revenues in a county or district. For Gael. maor is also expl. steward. V. MAIR.

It has been supposed, that the Thane "did not transmit his honours to his posterity;" Notes Sibb. Fife, p. 225. This is not quite consistent with what is said, in the page immediately preceding, that the extract from the Book of Paisley represents Macduff asking the privileges referred to, for himself and his successors, Thanes of Fife. This extract evidently supposes indeed, that, in this family at least, the honour was hereditary. Petit a rege Malcolmo, primum, quod ipso et successoribus, Thani de Fyf, regem tempore sui coronationis in sede regia locaret. Ap. Sibb. Fife, p. 212.

From some ancient charters, it appears that thanages were hereditary. In one granted by David II., it is said; "Although we have infeoffed Walter de Lealy, Knight, in the Thanage of Abirkyrdore, in the sheriffdom of Banff, and in the Thanages of Kyn-carlyn; nevertheless, because perchance the heirs of the Thanes who anciently held the said Thanages in fee farm, may be able to recover the said Thanages, to be held as their predecessors held them; we have granted, that if the said heirs, or any one of them, should recover the said Thanages, or any one of them, our said cousin and his heirs shall have the services of the said heirs or heir of the said Thanes or Thane, and the few farms anciently due from the foresaid Thanages." Robertson's Index of Charters, p. 87, No. 220. V. also p. 96, No. 315; p. 121, No. 72; p. 133, N. 13.

It may be added, that the title of Earl of Fife, which succeeded to that of Thane of Fife, and which seems to have included all the honours connected with the latter, was given by David Bruce to Sir Thomas Biset, and his heirs male by Isabella de Fyf; whom failing, the whole earldom was to return to the King and his heirs. Ibid. p. 74. No. 62.

Sometimes this honour was conferred only for life. Thus, the moiety of the Thanage of Fermartine, in the shire of Aberdeen, is given by David Bruce to the Earl of Sutherland, and his male heirs, "which had formerly been given to him only during the term of his life." Ibid. p. 81, No. 157.

The last Thane said to be mentioned is William Thane of Caldor; Cart. Morav. fol. 98. V. Hailes' Annals, i. 27, N.

It perhaps deserves notice, that all the thanedoms specified, in the Index of Charters, are to the north of Forth, and seem to have been situated within the limits of the Pictish kingdom, in the counties of Cromarty, Banff, Aberdeen, Kincardine, Forfar, Fife, and in the lower parts of Perthshire. Shall we view this as proof, that the designation never extended to that part of the country which was inhabited by the Celts?

Abthane has been considered as a title expressive of still higher dignity, and explained as equivalent to that of High Steward of Scotland; Buchanan, Hist. vii. 19. This title, it has been conjectured, has found a place in our history, merely in consequence of a mistake of Fordun, who perhaps unwilling to admit that an Abbot was married, or misled by the contractions common in MSS., has substituted Abthane of Dull, for Abbat of Dunkeldyn. V. Pink. Enquiry, ii. 193. Notes of Wynt. ii. 467. But Mr. Pinkerton seems to go too far, when he says; "Who ever heard of an Abthane?" The modest remark made by Mr. Macpherson supplies an answer to this query. "The nature and antiquity of this office is unknown to me; but that there was such an office, and that it remained for ages after this time, is unquestionable. David II. granted to Donald Macnayre the lands of Easter Fossache with the Abthanrie of Dull in Perthshire. [Roll, D. 2. K. 22, in MS. Harl. 4609.] The Bailerie of Abthane of Dull, and the lands of the Abthane of Kinghorn, occur in other grants in the same MS. in Roll D. 2. F." V. Robertson's Index, p. 46, No. 46. 50.

Mr. Pinkerton seems inclined to think, that Abthane is q. Abbot-Thane, a title given to a Thane who was also an Abbot, and corresponding to Abbas Comes expl. by Du Cange, as denoting a laic count of whom an abbey was given in commendam. But, whatever be the origin of the particle prefixed, it seems to have signified an inferior dignity.

This idea is confirmed by finding the abthanrio of Monifeith, certainly a small territory, perhaps not extending so far as the modern parish of this name in Angus, mentioned in the Chartulary of Aberbrothick.

—Michael de Monifuth Dompnus Abathanie ejusdem, Salutem eternam in Dno. Noverit universitas vestra, me et heredes meos teneri, et tenore presencium firmiter obligari, Dno Abbati de Abbr. qui pro tempore fuerit, et ejusdem loci Conventui, in sex solidos et octo denarios bonorum legalium sterlingorum, pro tofto et crofto que ab eis ad feodifirmam teneo in territorio predicto Abathanie de Monifoth solvendis eisdem, &c. Fol. 11, b.

The title of Thane, as has been formerly observed, seems gradually to have sunk in its meaning. It may not perhaps be viewed as a sufficient proof of this, that, according to our old laws, the Cro of an Earl's son was equal to that of a Thane; Reg. Maj. Lib. iv., c. 38, s. 2. In the Statutes of Alexander II., however, the Thane is ranked, not only as inferior to a Baron, but apparently as on a level with a Knight.

"Touching all others quha remains from the hoist, that is, of lands pertaining to Bishops, Abbats, Earles, Barones, Knights, Thanes, quha halde of the King: the king allanerlie sall have the vnlaw:—Bot the king sall have onlie the ane halfe thereof: and the Thane, or Knight, ane other half." Stat. Alex. II., c. 15, s. 2.

It affords further evidence of this, that, whereas, in the more early periods of our history, a Thanedom seems to have been as extensive as a sheriffdom, in the reign of Robert Bruce, and of his son David, we find several Thanedoms within one county; as the Thanedom of Aberbothnot, of Cowie, of Aberlachwich, of Morphis, of Duris, of Newdoskis, &c., in the sheriffdom of Kincardine. V. Robertson's Index of Charters, p. 17, No. 55, 56, p. 18, No. 59, p. 23, No. 4, p. 32, No. 14, p. 33, No. 37.

It appears, indeed, that some of the more ancient Thanedoms were as extensive as what are now called counties, including all the extent of jurisdiction originally given to Comites or Earls. This is evident, not only from the Thanedom of Fife, but from that ascribed to Macbeth. He, as has been seen, is called by Wyntown, Thayne of Crumbarchty, i.e., Cromarty. Now, this was a sheriffdom as early at least as the reign of Robert Bruce. Robertson's Index, p. 2, No. 50. In this reign also, the Thandome of Alith (Alyth) gave designation to a sheriffdom. Ibid. p. 4, No. 38.

In some instances, the term Thandome is used as synon. with Barony. Thus, the "baronies of Kincardin, and Aberluthnok, and Fettercardin, vic. Kincardin, (Ibid. p. 63, No. 53.) are called "the thandome of Kincardine, Abercouthnot, [in both places for Aberluthnot] Fetherkern;" Ibid. p. 65, No. 15, Chart. David II. At first view it might seem that the thandome, as mentioned in the singular, included these three baronies. But we find the phrase, thanagiorum de Kincardyn, Abirlouthnot, et Fetherkern, in vic de Kincardyn; Ibid. p. 89, No. 242.

According to the A.-S. laws, as Cowel has remarked after Spelman, some, distinguished by this title, were called Thani Majores and Thani Regis; while those who served under them, as they did under the King, were denominated Thani minores, or the lesser Thanes. The term, as used in the laws of Alex. II., seems nearly to correspond to the latter.

In its original use, indeed, in other languages, it was quite indefinite. A.-S. theyn, thegn, in its primary sense, denotes a servant. Thus thecowae oðthe frige signifies a slave as distinguished from a freeman; Leg. Inae, c. 11. Hence it was transferred to a military servant; and, from the dignity attached to an important trust in war, it seems at length to have been used to signify a grandee, one who enjoyed the privilege of being near the person of the King, or of representing him in the exercise of authority. The person, who was thus distinguished, was designed cynnynges theyn; Thanus regius, satrapa, optimas, dynasta, baro. One of an inferior rank was called medmera theyn, mediocris vel inferior Thanus; "a Thane or nobleman of a lower degree, as that at this day of a Baronet;" Somner. Woruld-theyn signified a secular Thane; maesse-theyn, a spiritual Thane or priest.

Germ. degen has a similar variety of significations; servus; civis, et quilibet subditus; dominus, sed superiori domino (Principi vel Regi) obnoxius; miles, ab infima ad supremam conditionem; vir fortis; sensus a milite ad omnes strenuos tractus. Franc. thegn signified not only a common soldier, but a general. V. Wachter.

Dan. degn, diagn, now written lagn, was used nearly with the same latitude as the Germ. word Worm. Monum. Dan. p. 264—267. Schilter seems to give the original sense. For he observes, that Alem. thegan properly signifies a man; hence theganliche, viriliter, manfully. "By and by," he says, "it came to be used to denote the peculiar state of those subject to the power of others, as soldiers, and servants." He derives it from diuk-en, progre, proficere, cre, prodesse; vo. Dinken, p. 230.

In the celebrated Death-Song of Regner Lodbrog, v. 23, this phrase occurs; Hrokke ei degn fyrir degne; Man yields not to man; literally thane—to thane. Spelman, although he explains thegan, vir fortis, mentions lesse thegen as used in the Laws of Canute, MS., in the sense of, mediocris homo. OL Wormius seems to think that the office of Decanus, (mentioned by Vegetius, Lib. 2. c. 13.) who presided over ten soldiers, might originate from this Gothic term.

It appears that Alem. thegan denoted a servant, prior to its use as signifying a grandee. For an epithet was prefixed to determine its signification. Hence edilthegan, literally, a noble servant. It is evident, indeed, that thegan was anciently synon. with stalk, knab, and knecht; all signifying a servant. Hence Lindenbrog, vo. Adelscale, expl. this term as equivalent to Germ. edelknab; adding, that they were formerly denominated edildeg. Adelknecht was used in a similar sense in Denmark. Monum. ubi sup. In Isl., thegn is equivalent to Lord. Thiagn oc thrael, dominus et servus; Verel. To the same source Dannmar, a Su.-G. title of honour has been traced. V. Ihre in vo. But this is doubtful; as thaegn in that language corresponds to A.-S. thegn.

["A.-S. thegen, thegn, often thén, (by contraction) a thane; Grein, ii. 573. The lit. sense is 'mature' or grown up; and the etymology is from thiyn, pp. of thihan, to grow up, be strong, avail, a verb which is commoner in the by-form theón, with pp. thogen." Prof. Skeat's Etym. Dict., p. 634.]

It may also deserve attention, that the oldest Francic or Theotisc writers give the word under consideration, not only the same signification, but nearly the same form as in A.-S. Otfried, who wrote in the ninth century, in various instances uses thegan for famulus, or miles.

As it has been already remarked, that it was applied to a military servant, perhaps in this sense it primarily denoted those who sustained this character without any distinction. For in the A.-S. version we find it used for soldiers in general; even those who were subject to a centurion. Ic com man under anwealde gese, and ic hebbe thegnas under me ; "I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me ;" Matt., 8, 9. In the parallel passage, Luke, 7, 8, the term is compan, warriors, whence S. Kemper, one who strives with another. In Gr. the word is the same in both places, σπαρταίρας.

Shaw views Gael. Tanaiste, "lord, dynast, governor," as equivalent to Thane. Dr. Macpherson indeed apprehends, that it is an ancient Gael. word, signifying "the second person or second thing." In proof of this he observes, that "before the conquest of Ireland by Henry the second, the title of Tanist became obsolete." Crit. Diss. 13. It appears, however, that it continued to be used so late as the year 1594. V. Ware's Antiq., p. 71. From the similarity of the terms, and from the sameness of signification, it is far more probable, that Tanist was formed from Thane, or was imported into Ireland by the Belgae. In confirmation of this, it may be observed, that there is no evidence of the existence of any Celtic root, from which Tanist can reasonably be deduced. Rev. Mr. Todd, has thrown out the same idea, in his Illustrations of Spenser, vol. viii. 308.

THANEDOM, THAYNDOM, THANAGE, s. The extent of the jurisdiction of a Thane.

Some estryre that in hys yhowthad
Of thyr Thayndoms he Thayne was made.
Wyntoun, vi. 18. 28.

"—Hugonis de Ross, of the Thanage of Glendouachy in Bamfe;"—"Hugonis Barclay, of the Thanage of Balhelvie." Robertson's Index of Charters, p. 2, No. 45. 48. V. THANE.

THANE, s. Apparently, a fane.

—Faill turretis men nicht find,
And goldin thanis waifand with the wind.
Palace of Honour, iii. 16.

This interpretation is confirmed by the use of the term obviously in the same sense.

"Both these isles had battalines, and buttrages round about them, with cross thanes of iron on the top of each of them." Orem's Chanoury Aberd., p. 62.

Cross-thane is also used as a composite word.

"The two lesser steeples have both cross-thanes of iron upon their tops." Ibid. p. 60.

L.B. ten-a, or ten-ia, denotes the extremity of the garland, or ribbons of different colours, which hang down from a crown or chaplet. V. Du Cange.

THANE, THAIN, adj. 1. Not sufficiently roasted or boiled, rare ; a term applied to meat, S.

"The meat is thain ; raw, little done." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 109.

2. Moist, applied to meal, &c., when in a damp state, Lanarks., Loth. "I dinna like thain meal ;" i.e., made of oats that have not been much dried on the kiln.

A. Bor. thone, thony ; mea sententia, q. "thawn ; damp, moist ;" Ray. The words are also common in Lincoln. V. Skinner. Grose gives the extract so incorrectly as to be unintelligible.

A.-S. than, moist, humid ; as meat of this description retains more of the natural juices ; thaen-ian, to moisten.

• THANKFUL, adj. 1. Used in the sense of thankful, praiseworthy.

—"His grace thinkis that he will nocht be vnremembrand and vngrate for the gude and thankfull service done to him be his saidis erlis, lordis, baronis, and liegis of all degreis," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 363.

A.-S. thane-full not only signifies gratiarum plenus, but gratus, apparently in the same sense as here, as denoting what is acceptable.

2. Denoting what ought to be sustained as sufficient and legal.

—"Aught dayes after the compleit schering of ilk sort of cornis being owtrun, that it salbe lesome to the awners, at the saidis aucht dayes end, to mak requisitioun vpoun vther aucht dayes, to mak thame thankfull teynding at the expyryng of the saidis last aucht dayes,—that it salbe lauchfull to the awners of the saidis cornes to teynd and stak the same thame selfis." Acts Ja. VI., 1612, Ed. 1814, p. 472.

"To dare.—He will not dare (be able) to go far ;" Gl. Trist. It seems rather to signify, to need, to have occasion, to find it necessary. A.-S. thearf-an, carere, indigere, opus habere ; Moes.-G. tharf-an, thaurb-an, necesse habere, Alem. tharf-an, tharb-en, Isl. thurf-a, [tharf], Su.-G. tarfio-a, id.

Rauf Coilyear, C. j. b.

Thar is used in the same sense by Chaucer.

• THAT, pron. Often improperly used instead of This, S.

"He and his army saw a vision in the heavens, with that motto upon it, 'In Christ ye shall overcome.'" Walker's Peden, p. 84.

THAT, adv. or conj. 1. So, to such a degree ; as, "Is he that frail that he canna rise ?" Is he so frail that he cannot get out of bed ? S.

2. Often used nearly in the same sense with E. very, but understood as rather weaker.

Ye think my muse nae that ill-faurd,
Seil o' your face !
Skinner's Misc. Poetry, p. 109.

"Evan Dhu Maccombich—declared his intention to set off immediately in pursuit of the cattle, which he pronounced to be 'no that far off ;—they have broken the bone,' he observed, 'but have had no time to suck the marrow.'" Waverley, i. 236. V. CURNY.

It almost invariably has the negative preceding ; as, "Nae that ill," not very bad. "Nae that weat," not very wet. It has been remarked, that it answers exactly to Lat. ita ; as, "Nae that mony." Non ita multi, Cic. It would seem to have originated as a comparative mode of speaking, and as expressive of a reply to something previously asserted, or to a question proposed; as if it were equivalent to the particle So, q. "Not so bad as you seem to think," "Not so wet as it was last night."

3. It sometimes serves, like E. So or Such, although not so intensively, to return the sense of a word or sentence going before; as, "He was ance a thief, and he'll aye be that," S.

Tarras's Poems, p. 66.

I winna be married the year,
Suppose I were courted by twenty.

Song, Patie's Wedding.

The Scottish idiom is, in this instance, formed in a different manner from that of the English. To, although the idea is the same in to-day, continued from A.-S. to daeg, is undoubtedly the prep. in the sense of Lat. ad, q. on this day, or during its lapse. The may be viewed as the Norm. Sax. relative, which is used in the same form in all the cases. It seems here to have the use of a demonstrative, as equivalent to this. The day, accordingly, resembles Lat. hodie, q. hoc die, on, or during this day.

[The is more probably A.-S. thy, instrumental and ablative case of the def. article.]

THEDE, s. 1. A nation, a people.

—Ye are thre in this thede thrivand oft in thrang;
War al your strenthis in ane,
In his grippis and ye gane,
He wald ourcum you ilk ane.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 3.

i.e., "Ye are three persons, belonging to this nation, often prosperous in the heat of battle."

A.-S. theod, gens, populus.

It seems used in this sense by R. Brunne :—

Tille Adelwolf gaf he Westex, hede of alle the thede, Lordschip ouer all the londes bituex Douer & Tuede.

p. 18.

2. A region, a province.

Sen hail our doughty elderis has bene endurand,
Thrivandly in this thede, unchargit as thril,
If I for obesance, or boist, to bondage me bynde,
I war wourthy to be
Hingit heigh on ane tre,
That ilk creature might se
To waif with the wynd.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 10.

It might bear this sense in the passage quoted, sense 1. In the same poem i. 14 instead of—

All the wyis in welth he weildis in weid
Sall halely be at your will, all that is his;

it ought to be, according to Edit. 1508—

—weildis in theid—

i.e., "all the wealthy wights which he rules in the nation or province."

The same idea is thus expressed in the following stanza :—

Of all the wyis, and welth, I weild in this steid.

i.e., place; A.-S. stede, locus, folcstede, populi statio. Perhaps in welth, in the first passage, should be read, and welth, as here. Thus persons are distinguished from property.

With alle thing Y say,
That pende to marchandia,
In lede;

Thai ferdlen of this wise,
Intil Yrlond thede.

Sir Tristrem, p. 85.

This, misquoted in Gl. as p. 95, is viewed as "apparently a contraction for they gele." But it certainly signifies Ireland country. They gele would be an obvious tautology, being anticipated by ferden, fared.

Isl. Su. -G. thiod, thiud, thyd, thiaud, thiot, populus; Moca. -G. thinda, Alem. thiot, thiota, thiade, pl. thied; Germ. deut, Ir. tuath, id.

Hence Junius and Ihre derive the L. B. term, diaeta, diet, used by the Germ. to denote a public convention; although this may perhaps be from dies, the day fixed for meeting. Hence also Theotisc, gentiles; the name given by the Franks or Alemans to all the people of their nation; A.-S. getheole, vernacular language; Franc. bithiot-en, Belg. beduyd-en, to interpret, Isl. thyd-en, to explain.

A.-S. theod signifies not only gens, but provincia. East-Seaxna theod, Orientalium Saxonum provincia; Myrcna theod, Merciorum provincia.

3. It seems to be used in the sense of species, kind.

Fiftene yere he gan hem fede,

Of ich maner of glewe;
And everich playing thede,

Sir Tristrem, p. 22.

Playing thede appears to signify "kind," or "manner of play," i.e., game. V. THEW.

THEEDLE, s. The name, in the county of Kinross, for the stick with which porridge is stirred; also called the Parrich-stick, Synon. Theivil, and S. O. Spurtil.

I know not whether we should view this as corr. from the more general name Theivil; or as allied to Isl. thiud-a, liquefacio congelata: as the design of the constant stirring is to prevent the meal from becoming knotted, or to break the knots that may have been formed.

They mummelt "Crowdy for the devil."

Beattie's John o' Arnha, p. 35.

Grose and Marshall mention thaavle, a pot-stick. Norw. tull, tyl, the staff with which butter is churned; Hallager. It is not improbable that Theivil and E. Dibble are radically the same; especially as A. Bor. thivel is not only rendered, "a stick to stir a pot," but "also a dibble, a setting-stick." Grose. Nothing satisfactory has been offered, however, as to the origin of the term Dibble. V. Todd's Johns. Skinner refers to Teut. dipfel, punctum. But I can find no vestige of such a word. Mr. Brockett gives the etymon which I had conjecturally offered; A.-S. thysel, "a stem or stalk." "Frutex, stripe; a shrubb;" Sommer.

THEIVIL-ILL, s. A pain in the side, S. Theivil-shot, Ang.

It most probably received its name, from the idea that it is owing to the stomach being overcharged with that food which is prepared by means of the theivil. I have heard a supposition, that it is thus denominated, because confined to a particular spot, as if one had received a stroke on it by a theivil, or some similar instrument.

A. Bor. thible, thivel, a stick to stir a pot; Ray. A.-S. thysel, a shrub? q. a slender piece of wood.

THEME, THAME, s. 1. A serf, a bond-servant or slave born on, and attached to, the soil.

The Kyng than of his cownsale
Made this delyverans thare fynale;
That Erlidwme to be delt in twa
Partis, and the tane of tha
Wyth the Themys assygnyd he Til Walter Stewart: the lave to be Made als gud in all profyt;
Schyre Willame Comyn til hawe that gwyt.
Wyntown, vii. 10. 449, MS.

2. The right, granted to a baron, of holding servants, in such a state of bondage, that he might sell them, their children and goods.

"Theme—is power to have seruandes and slaues, quhilk ar called nativi, bondi, villani, and all Barones infest with Theme, hes the same power. For vnto them all their bondmen, their barnes, gudes, and geare properly perteinis, awa that they may dispoone thereupon at their pleasure." Skene, Verb. Sign. in vo.

A.-S. team, offspring. Proinde, apud forenses, Sequela, i.e., familia natorum bondorum et Villanorum maneiro pertinentium: necnon jus habendi istam sequelam, ubicunque inventi fuerunt in Anglia. For the term has been borrowed from the E. law; as it has been adopted, into this, from the A.-S. Team is the word used in a charter of Edw. the Confessor, and in the Sax. Chronicle; Toll and Team. V. Lye, vo. Toll.

Perhaps we should rather deduce it from Isl. thi-a, in servitutum reducere; whence thion, servus.

This is sometimes written Thane. V. VERT.

[THEMSELLS, THEMSELL, THEM-SELWYNE, pron. Themselves, Barbour, xiii. 234.]

THEN, conj. Than, S.

THEN-A-DAYS, adv. In former times, S. B.; like E. Nowadays.

But then was then, my lad, and now is now,
'Bout then-a-days, we'd seldom me: with cross,
Nor kent the ill of coners, or of loss.

Ross's Helenore, p. 92.

THE NOW, I' THE NOW. Just now, at present, S.

"You look down the now, and I see you doubt what I'm saying." Reg. Dalton, iii. 212.

"Though we are a' very couthy the now, naebodie can tell how long it will last." Petticoat Tales, i. 267.

"You needna lift the siller, or say ony thing about it, 'cause Charlotte doesna need her part i' the now, an George is but thoughtless, an' coudna guide his very weel." Glenfergus, iii. 251.

Now is here used as if it were a noun. The idiom resembles that of Gr. αὐτὸ νῦν, Luke, i. 48, which is retained in Moes. G. fram himma nu; both signifying, as rendered by Junius, ab hoc tempore; himma being the accusative of the pronoun signifying this.

[THE QUHETHIR, conj. However, and yet, nevertheless, Barbour, i. 332.]

THEREAWAY, THEREAWA, adv. 1. About that quarter, thereabout; Out o' thereaway, from about that quarter, S. Synon. Thairby. The term is used indefinitely, when it is not meant to specify the particular spot.

"The three miles diminished into 'like a mile and a bittock,' then extended themselves into 'four miles or there awa.'" Guy Mannering, i. 6.

"D'ye think we dinna kea the road to England as weel as our fathers before us? All evil comes out o' thereaway." Tales of my Landlord, i. 154.

2. That way, to that purpose.

"It is the way that God had contrived for saving of sinners by Jesus Christ,—as he hath held forth in the ordinances, confirming the same by many mighty works in scripture tending there away."—Guthrie's Trial, p. 210.

3. As far as that, to that distance; often There-and-away, Aberd.

THERE-BEN, adv. In the inner apartment. V. THAIRBEN.

THEREFRAE, adv. Therefrom. V. THAIRFRA.

THEREIN, adv. Within doors. V. THAIRIN.

THEREOUT, adv. Without, a-field. V. THAIROWT.

THERM, THARME, s. V. THAIRM.

THERNA, THURRNA. Modes of expression, equivalent to "need not," or "should not;" as, "You thurtna stop," you should not stay, Dumf.

The proper sense is that first given, "need not," or "have no occasion;" and it claims the same origin with Tharf, used in Sir Tristrem, from A.-S. thearf-an, carere, indigere, or rather from the same v. in the form of thurf-an, id. Ne ic ne thurfe her seccan, Neque ego non opus habeam hic haurire; Jon. 4. 15. This is the same phrase, only inverted, thurftna being used for A.-S. ne thurfe; or as it would be in the second person, ne thurft. For this form appears under Thearf-an, to which Therna is more immediately allied. Ne thearft thu, or Thu ne thearft; Non necesse habes tu, Caedm. V. THARF and THARTH.

THESAURE, THESSAURE, s. A treasure; Lat. thesaur-us.

"All hurdis and thesauris that ar hid under the yeird, or aboue the yeird, quhair of the lord and awner is not knawin, the samin aucht and sould pertene to the King as eschete." Balfour's Pract., p. 553.

"That thairfore the Justis clerkis in taking of all inditmentis, specially within the schirefdoum of Louthiane, Fiff, and utheris placis quhare the King haid maist residence, of the stolaris, concelaris, of the said gold or thesaure, or arte or parte tharof," &c. Inventories, A. 1494, p. 17.

"The jewels, diamonds, and hail thesaure of S. Geils is given to the Dean of Guild to be furth coming when called for." Acts of Guildry, Edin. 1555, p. 13.

THESAURARE, s. Treasurer; the term invariably used in our old statutes and writings.

"The Thesaurare takand allowance in his comptis of ony ordinarie pertening to the King, or his Officeris sould be compellit to pay sa mekle as he hes tane allowance of." 1532, Balfour's Practicks, p. 135.

O. Fr. thesaurier, id. But this word, like many others in our old laws, may be immediately from L. B. thesaurar-ius.

THESAURARIE, s. Treasury.

"And to be senators, &c. to decyde all and quhatsum-euir suspensionis of his hienes propirtie, thesaurarie, or collectorie, rasit or to be rasit be quhatsum-euir person or personis." Acts Ja. VI., 1593, Ed. 1814, p. 27.

THESELF, pron. Itself. V. SELF, SELFF.

THESTREEN, s. Yesternight, Lanarks.; either a provincial corr. of Yestreen, id., or q. the yestreen.

"It was in a cauld blaie hairst day, at dayligann, I mind it weel, as weel as I mind thestreen." Edin. Mag., Dec. 1810, p. 503.

THETIS, THETES, s. pl. 1. The ropes or traces, by means of which horses draw in a carriage, plough or harrow, S.

The bodyis of Rutulianis here and thare
They did persane, and by the coist alquhare
The caris stand with lymouris bendit strek,
The men liggung the hames about thare nek,
Or than amangis the quhelis and the thetis,
All samyn lay thare armour, wyne, and metis.

Doug. Virgil, 287, 7.

[2. The term is often used metaph., in the sense of liking, regard, inclination for, or sympathy with, implying the idea of being drawn to a thing; as, "I hae nae thete o' that," I don't like that, I have not a good opinion of it, Clydes., Perth.]

3. Out of thete, is a phrase applied to one who is rusted, as to any art or science, from want of practice, Aberd.

4. [Out of thetes, out of order, reason or bounds.] One is said to be quite out of thetes, when one's conduct or language is quite disorderly, like that of a horse that has broke loose from its harness, S.

"Hence the ordinary expression in Scotland, Ye are out of theet, i.e., ye are extravagant or in the wrong;" Radd.

"Mr. H. E. that worthy good man, who had his own share of the sufferings of that time both in prison and otherwise, yet had his feet so far out of the theats, and so far from taking part with Mr. Cargill and him [Mr. Richard Cameron] in the indispensable duty of that day, that he studied a sermon to preach against him." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 48.

It appears from Sibb. that in some places, perhaps S. A., this is corr. pron. Feets.

Isl. thatt-r, a thread, cord, or small rope. The term is also used for a narration, q. the thread or connexion of a discourse. This has some analogy to the metaph. sense mentioned above. Pars historiae, narratio; propre filum vel funis tenuior, ex quo funis crassior conficitur; Gl. Kristnis.

THEVIS-NEK, THEUIS-NEK, s. An imitative term, formed to express the cry of the lapwing.

The tuquheit, and the gukkit gouk,— Rwischit bayth to the baird, and ruggit his hare;

Callit him thris thevis nek, to throw in a widdie.
Houlate, S. P. Repr., iii. 181.

Here the term is used as an equivoque, in reference to the neck of a thief.

"The tuchchitis cryit thevis nek, quhen the pieltis clattrit." Compl. S., p. 60.

This is misprinted Theuenek, Gl. Compl.

THEW, s. Custom, manner, quality.

Wilyhame Wyschard of Saynet Andrewys
Byschape, wertus, and of gud thewys,

Wys, honest, and awenand,
Til God and men in all plesand
Deyd, ———

Wyntonon, vii. 10. 292.

O Troiane prynce, I lawly the besseik,
Be thyne awne vertuis, and thy thewis meik.

Doug. Virgil, 339, 26.

A.-S. theaw, mos, modus. Hence (says Lye) A. Bor. thew'd, docilis; towardly, Grose. Seren. gives Sw. thooielse in the sense of quality, which seems to acknowledge the same origin. A.-S. theaw, mos, and theow, servus, can scarcely be viewed as radically different; especially as the word, signifying a servant, is sometimes written theaw. Both, I suspect, must be traced to Isl. thia, thiaa, humiliare, duriter tractare, subigere: as a servant is one brought into a state of subjection; and what are manners, but the habits learned in consequence of instruction, restraint, and chastisement? It is highly probable, indeed, that the term thede, as primarily signifying a nation, A.-S. theod is from the same source, q. a body of men brought into a state of subjection. It may be viewed as a proof of this, that the v. theod-an, formed from theod, signifies to serve. Ich him geornlicor theodde; Ego illis impensius servire curavi; Bed. 516, 9, and Theoden denotes a king, q. one who subjects others, or causes them to serve. Isl. thiod, populus; God thiod, bonus populus, i.e., cives et fideles subditi. Thiad-ur, servitute oppressus, thyda, mansuetudo, obsequium; Verel.

THEWIT, part. pa. Disciplined, regulated.

Weill thewit, having a proper deportment.

Thair was na wicht that gat a sicht eschewit,
War he never sa constant, or weill thewit,
Na he was woundit, and him hir seruant grantis.

Palace of Honour, i. 38.

The term seems to denote that self-command which a knight, or one regularly bred to arms, ought to have over himself. One of the senses of A.-S. theaw is, institutum. V. the s.

THEWLES, THOWLESS, THIEVELESS, adj. 1. Unprofitable, bootless.

Lat vs in ryot leif, in sport and gam,
In Venus court, sen born thareto I am,
My tyme wel sall I spend: wenyis thou not so?
Bot all your solace sall returne in gram,
Sic thewles lustis in bittir pane and wo.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 96, 24.

Thowles seems formerly to have been used nearly in the sense of mod. dissipated, or profligate.

He wes thowles, and had in wown
By hys wyf oft-syis to ly
Othir syndry women by.

Wyntonon, viii. 24. 166.

Welle waxyn wp that tyme he wes,
And thowles than, for his yowthbed
To that nature wald hym lede:
Justyng, dawnsyng, and playng
He luwyd welle, for he wes yhyng.

Ibid., 38. 291.

2. Inactive, remiss, S. pron. thowless.

How worthless is a poor and haughty drone,
Wha thowless stands a lazy looker-on!

Ramsay's Works, i. 55.

—Fortune ay favours the active and bauld,
But ruins the wooer that's thowless and cauld.

Herd's Coll., ii. 113.

From A.-S. theow, a servant, or theow-ian, to serve, and the privative particle les, less; q. what does no service.

Sibb. justly gives thieveless as synon. A thieveless excuse, one that is not satisfactory, q. does not serve the purpose. He came on a thieveless errand, S.; "He pretended to have business about which he was not in earnest."

3. "Cold, forbidding;" S. Gl. Sibb.

It chanc'd his new-come neebor took his ee,
And e'en a vex'd and angry heart had he!
Wi' thieveless sneer to see his modish mien,
He down the water gies him this guiddeen.
Burns, lll. 54.

"Thieveless, cold, dry, spited;" Gl. Shirr.

To look thieveless to one, to give one a cold reception, S.O.

4. Hence transferred to a cold, bleak day. It's a thieveless morning, is a phrase used in this sense by old people, Renfrews.

Thieveless is applied to weather in a sort of intermediate or uncertain state. Thus, a thieveless day is one that has no decided character, neither properly good nor bad.

5. Insipid, as applied to mind; destitute of taste; feeble, S.

A saul with sic a thowless flame,
Is sure a silly sot ane.

Ramsay's Works, i. 118.

For thowless age, wi' wrinklet brow,—
Mac need the aid I gae to you,
When strang an' young.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 47.

6. Shy, reserved, Renfrews.

It is used indeed to denote frigidity or insipidity of manner, but evidently as including the primary idea; being applied to one who appears unfit for action, S.

THEWTILL, THEWITTEL, s. A large knife, or one that may serve as a dagger.

Ane Ersche mantill it war thi kynd to wer,
A Scotts thewtill wндыr thail belt to ber.

Wallace, i. 218, MS.

E. and S. whittle, a knife; A.-S. hwitel; Chauc. and A. Bor. thwite, cultello resecare, A.-S. thwīt-an, thwēot-an, id.

THEYRS, s. pl. "Tiers or yard-arms of a vessel;" Gl. Compl.

"Ane and al, heisau, heisau. Now mak fast the theyrs." Compl. S., p. 63.

I find no such word as tiers. Kersey has ties.

THIBACK, s. Denoting a stroke or blow, S.

Isl. thiappa is expl. conculcare; also, comprimere.

*THICK, adj. 1. Intimate, familiar, S., also cant E. Grose's Class. Dict. Great or grit, thrang, synon. V. PACK.

Nae twa were ever seen mair thick,
Than brawny and the bill;
An' when she hameward took her way,
He saw her o'er the hill.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 49.

[Nae doubt but they were fain o' ither,
An' unco pack an' thick thegither.

Burns, vol. iii. 5.]

2. With the prep. ouer or over preceding, used to denote criminal intimacy between persons of different sexes, ouer thick, S.; synon. Ouer thrang.

"She had fa'en a wee ouer thick wi' a cousin o' her ain that her father had some ill-will to; and sae it was that after she had been married to Sir Richard jump four months,—ye'll no hinder her gieing them a present o' a bonny knave bairn." Antiquary, ii. 242.

VOL. IV.

3. Used in relation to consanguinity, S.

"Ye ken his was sib to mine by the father's side, and blood's thicker than water ony day." Entail, i. 12.

This is a proverbial phrase, intimating that a man feels more affection to his own kindred, than to those to whom he is nowise related.

4. Thick and thin. To follow one through thick and thin, to adhere to one in all hazards, S.

"Auld Dougal—had followed Sir Robert through gude and ill, thick and thin, pool and stream," &c. Redgauntlet, i. 223.

To MAK THICK wi', to ingratiate one's self with, Clydes.

[THIDDIR, adv. Thither, Barbour, i. 592.]

[THIDDIRWART, THIDDIRWARD, adv. Thitherwards, thither, Barbour, i. 411.]

THIEF, s. Often used, when there is no charge of dishonesty, with a vituperative adj., exactly in the sense of E. Hussy; as, "She's an ill-faur'd thief," S.

THIEF-LIKE, adj. 1. Having the appearance of a blackguard; affording grounds of an unfavourable impression as to actual conduct or design; "If ye binna thief, binna thief-like," S. Prov.

2. Plain, hard-looking, ugly, S.

3. Unbecoming, not handsome; applied to dress; as, "That's a thief-like mutch ye've on," S.

In the comparative there is, for the sake of the sound, a constant anomaly, of which I do not recollect any other instance. It occurs in two proverbial phrases very commonly used; "The thief-like the better soldier." "The aulder the thief-like;" or, "Ye're like the swine, the aulder ye grow, ye're ay the thief-like," S.

THIFTBUTE, s. "The crime of taking money or goods from a thief to shelter him from justice;" Bell's Law Dict.

"(If this complenar, efter that he haue attachit this thief, or deliuerit him,—wald concord with the said thief and tak thiftbute, and put him fra the law, in that caice he sall vnderly the law, and be accusit thairfor as principall thief or reuar." Acts Ja. V., 1515, Ed. 1814, p. 232. V. BOTE.

THIFTDOME, THIEFTDOME, s. The commission of theft, an act of stealing.

"That nouthor lord of regalitie, schiref, barrone, na vthers sell ony theif, or fyne with him of thiftdome done, na to be done," &c. Acts Ja. I., 1536, c. 154. Ed. 1566. Thieftdome, Skene and Glendook. In Ed. 1814, thift; perhaps by oversight of some transcriber, who had supposed, from the word done immediately following, that dome in thiftlome was by mistake for done, and therefore unnecessary.

W 3

A.-S. thyfth, thiefthe, furtum, and dom, status, conditio.

THITEOUS, adj. Dishonest, thievish.

—"To proceid and minister iustice vpon all the saidis strang and idill beggaris, vagaboundis, thevis and sornaris, or thair resettaris and pairtakaris in thair thifteous and wicked deidis." Acts Ja. VI., 1593, Ed. 1814, p. 43.

THIFTOUSLY, adv. By theft. "Thiftously stoune & tane," &c. Aberd. Reg. A. 1538.

THIEVELESS, adj. V. THEWLES.

To THIG, THIGG, v. a. 1. To ask, to beg.

His fyrst norryss, of the Newtown of Ayre,
Till him scho come, quhilk was full will of reid,
And thyggyt leiff away with him to sayre.
Wallace, ii. 259, MS.

Grete goddis mot the Grekis recompens,
Gif I may thig aue ungence but offens.
Doug. Virgil, 182, 37.

To tar and tig, syne grace to thig,
That is a pityous preis.

Evergreen, ii. 199.

V. TAR, v.

"So we perceive that England never forgot their old quarrels upon small or no regard, when they saw an apparent advantage to have been masters; and, by the contrary, they were fain to thigg and cry for peace and good-will of Scottish-men, when there was unity and concord amongst the nobles living under subjection and obedience of a manly Prince." Pitcottie, p. 56.

Alem. thig-en, dich-en, petere; thigi, digi, dichi, preces. Gote thigiti, they prayed God. V. Schilter vo. Diche. Su.-G. tigg-a, petere.

2. To go about, receiving supply, not in the way of common mendicants, but rather as giving others an opportunity of manifesting their liberality, S.

"It is used properly for a more civil way of seeking supply, usual enough in the Highlands and North of Scotland, where new married persons have no great stock, or others low in their fortune, bring carts and horses with them to the houses of their relations, and receive from them corn, meal, wool, or what else they can get;" Rudd.

"Better a *thigg*ing mother than a riding father," S. Prov. Kelly, p. 66. He expl. it by another; "Better the mother with the poke, than the father with the sack;" observing that "both these signify, that the mother, though in a low condition, will be more kindly to, and more careful of, orphans, than the father can be, though in a better."

He that borrows and bigs,
Makes feasts and thigs,
Drinks and is not dry;
These three are not thrifty.

Fergusson's S. Prov., p. 13.

The father buys, the son bigs,
The grandchild sells, and his son thiggs.

"A proverb much used in Lowthian, where estates stay not long in one family; but hardly heard of in the rest of the nation." Kelly, p. 312.

Had Kelly lived a little later, he would have seen no reason for the restriction of the proverb to Lothian. The same account is given by an English writer, although rather in plainer terms.

"At a young Highlander's first setting up for himself, if he be of any consideration, he goes about among his near relations and friends, and from one he begs a cow, from another a sheep; a third gives him seed to sow his land, and so on, till he has procured for himself a tolerable stock for a beginner. This they call *Thigg*ing." Burt's Letters, ii. 209.

It seems uncertain, whether this, or the preceding, be the primary sense. Although the Alem. v. signifies to ask, A.-S. thig-an, thig-can, thig-ian, is rendered accipere, sumere, sc. cibum; having properly a relation to food. Isl. thygg-ia very nearly approaches the common sense of the term in S. Gratis accipere, dono auferre; from thaa, id. Hence G. Andr. derives thack-a, q. thayk-a, to thank; and the derivation is certainly natural; for that only, which is received as a gift, can properly be matter of thankfulness.

3. To beg, to act the part of a common mendicant, S.

It is probably in this sense that the term is used by Henrysone.

For Goddis aw, how dar thou tak on hand,
And thou in berne and byre so bene and big,
To put him fra his tak, and gar him thig!

Bannatyne Poems, p. 120.

This is the most common sense of the Su.-G. v. tigg-a, petere, proprie usurpatur de mendicantium precibus; lhre. V. the s.

4. To borrow; used improperly.

Some other chiel may daffly sing,—
And blaw ye up with windy fancies,
That he has thigit frae romances.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 144.

THIGGAR, THIGGER, THIGSTER, s. 1. One who draws on others for subsistence in a genteel sort of way, S.

"Thiggers—are those who beg in a genteel way; who have their houses they call at in certain seasons and get corn, and other little things;" Gall. Enc.

"Thigsters are a sort of gentle beggars." Dict. Feud. Law.

2. A beggar, a common mendicant.

"The King hes statute—that na Thiggarin be tholit to beg, nouthor to burgh nor to landwart, betuix xliii and Lxx yeiris, bot thay be sene be the counsall of the townis or of the land, that thay may not win thair leuing vther wayis. And thay that sal be tholit to beg, sall haue a certane takin on thame, to landwart of the Schiref, and in the burrowis thay sall haue takin of the Alderman or of the Baillies." Acts Ja. I., 1424, c. 27. Edit. 1566.

Su.-G. teggare, id.

THIGGING, s. 1. The act of collecting, as described, S.

The term had been used in this sense also in O. E. "Thigginge or begging. Mendicacio." Prompt. Parv.

2. The quantity of grain, &c. collected in this manner, Perth.

THIGSTER, s. Same with *Thigg*ar, q. v.

THIGHT, adj. Close, so as not to admit water, Orkn.

Either as allied to Isl. thyck, in neut. *thyck*t, crassus, or thieth-a, densari; or as the same with E. Tight.

THILSE, adv. Else, otherwise, Buchan.

It is used in Tarras's Poems, p. 58, but misprinted thise. This seems a contr. for the else.

THIMBER, adj. Given as not understood by Ritson.

—There I spy'd a wee wee man,
And he was the least that ere I saw.
His legs were scarce a shathmout's length,
And thick and thimber was his thighs;
Between his brows there was a span,
And between his shoulders there was three.
Ritson's S. Songs, li. 139.

It seems to signify gross, heavy, cumbrous, or perhaps swollen; Isl. thunber, gravis, portatu molestus, from thungi, onus, and ber-a, ferre, portare; q. what is difficult to carry. Thumb-a, inflate; thember upp, turgescit, inflatur.

THINARE, s. [Prob., advocate, intercessor.]

—Swete Ysonde thinare,
Thou preys the king for me.

Sir Tristrem, p. 119.

Probably, an intercessor, A.-S. thingere, id. from thing-ian, to intercede, to manage one's thing, cause or business; or to do so in a thing, i.e., a court or convention. V. THING.

THINE, THYNE, adv. Thence; often with fra, from, prefixed.

For fra thyne wp wes grewouser
To climb wp, no be neth befer.

Barbour, x. 636, MS.

i.e., by far more troublesome or difficult.

—“And fra thyne vp Barnegleis to the Righeidis, and fra thyne down Irving burne to Ask,” &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1609, Ed. 1814, p. 445.

A.-S. thanon, inde, illinc; or perhaps from Su.-G. then, this, with the prep. prefixed.

THINE-FURTH, adv. Thenceforward.

And til Cumnokys Kyrk brought he
This Schyr Dowgald to mak fewtè
To the wardane : and Gallway
Fra thine-furth held the Scottis fay.

Wyntown, viii. 42, 174.

A.-S. thanon furth, deinceps, deinde, de caetero.

THING, s. 1. Affairs of state.

And gyff it hapynt Robert the King
To pass to God, quhill thai war ying,
The gude Erle off Murreff, Thomas,
And the Lord alsua off Dowglas,
Suld haf thaim into gouernyng,
Quhill thai had wyt to ster thair thing,
And than the Lordschip suld thai ta.

Barbour, xx. 142, MS.

Not ring, or reigne, as in Edit. Pink. and others.
Ster thair thing is, manage their affairs of state.

2. A meeting, or convention, concerning public affairs, Shetl.

Chanslar, schaw furth quhat ye desyr off me.
The Chanslar, said, The most caus of this thing,
To procur peess I am send fra our King,
With the gret seill, and voice off hys parliament,
Quhat I bynd her our barnage sall consent.

Wallace, vi. 904, MS.

Not understanding thing in this sense, Editors have reckoned it necessary to substitute another word for caus, i.e., cause; as in Edit. 1648;

The chancellor said, The most part of this thing,
To procure peace, I am sent from the King.

Isl. thing, Su.-G. ting, a meeting of the citizens called for consultation concerning public affairs: also used for the forum, the place of meeting or judgment. Hence Thingroll-r, the plain of convention, (which has been viewed as the origin of the name of Dingwall in the county of Ross); Thingstod, the place of meeting; Althing, an universal convention.

There is a parish of this name in Shetland, the signification of which confirms the etymon given of Dingwall.

“Tingwall—is said to derive its name from a small island, in a water called the Loch of Tingwall, and joined to the nearest shore by the remains of a stone wall. In this island, the courts of law are said to have been anciently held, and to this day it is called the Law-Taing.” Stat. Acc. xxi. 274. It is more properly written Law-ting; Neill's Tour, p. 89.

The etymon given of Tingwall, Stat. Acc. ubi sup. rather opposes the preceding account. For it is said, that “Taing, in the language of that country, signifies a point of land stretching out into the water.”

Brand gives the fullest account of this court, and also the most natural etymon of the name of the parish.

“It was in this parish, in a small holm, within a lake nigh to this church, where the principal Feud, or judge of the country, used to sit and give judgment, hence the holm to this day is called the Law-Ting (from which probably the parish of Tingwall had its name.) We go into this holm by stepping stones, where three or four great stones are to be seen, upon which the judge, clerk, and other officers of the court did sit. All the country concerned to be there stood at some distance from the holm on the side of the loch, and when any of their causes was to be judged or determined, or the judge found it necessary that any person should compare before him, he was called upon by the officer, and went in by these stepping stones, who when heard returned the same way he came.” Descr. of Zetland, p. 121, 122.

In the Orkney Islands, the Law-ting, or the “Supreme Court, in which business of the utmost importance was transacted,” continued till the time of the Commonwealth. V. Barry's Orkney, p. 217.

It is thought that Ting, as denoting a convention, is derived from Su.-G. ting-a, to speak, Alem. ding-an; because they anciently met in their public assemblies for conference, and in this manner settled their business. This etymon is supported by analogy. Moes.-G. mathls signifies forum, from mathl-ian, to speak. In the Laws of the Lombards, the place of public meeting is called the Mall, from Goth. mal, discourse. Among the ancient Germ. Sprache also denoted such a convention; from sprach-en, to converse; as Fr. Parlement is from part-er, to speak. V. Ting, Ihre.

* THING, s. 1. As conjoined with ain, applied to a person; denoting property or exclusive interest in the object referred to, as well as tender affection, S.

An thou wer't my ain thing,
I would lue thee, I would lue thee;
An thou wert my ain thing,
How dearly would I lue thee.

Herd's Coll. i. 17.

V. AIN.

2. With the preceding, it denotes approbation; as, “Aye, that's the thing,” but with the negative particle it denotes disapprobation; as, “That's no the thing,” “I doubt he's no the thing,” I fear he is not what he pretends to be, S.

3. The thing is often put before the relative, instead of that or those; as, “Send me mair bukes; I've read the thing that I hae,” Aberd.

[4. Thing is also used in the sense of affair, state of affairs; result, conclusion; as, “A bonnie thing, that I man pay for't a'. Na, na!” Clydes.]

THINGS, pl. 1. He's nae great, or gryte things, a phrase often used concerning a person, as intimating that one has no favourable opinion of his character, when it is not meant to specify particulars, S.

"I suspect he's just a feather out of the same bird. His father was nae great things, and his mother is but a vain ignorant woman." Writer's Clerk, ii. 125.

2. Applied also to things, as intimating that they are not much to be accounted of, S.; synon. with the phrase, Naething to mak a sang o'.

"My hospitality," said the farmer, "is nae gryte things in itself; and it was gi'en without ony thought o' a return, just as nae doot you wad hae done to me in the same tacking." Modern Athens, p. 110.

This phrase, as used in sense 1, is exactly analogous to the low E. phrase, No great shakes. The word thing is indeed used in E. of persons in contempt. But I cannot account for the anomaly of the use of the pl., unless it should be supposed that the expression is elliptical, as equivalent to that, "No great things can be expected from him."

* To THINK, v. n. "To wonder; used only in the end of a clause;" as, "Fat's that, I think," S. B.

As thus used, it expresses merely hesitation, or pondering in one's mind; analogous to the use of A.-S. thinc-an concipere, consultare; thenc-an, ratiocinari, considerare. It is used to denote reasoning, Luke, 5. 22. Hiraet thence ye on courrum Acortum, as in our version, "What reason ye in your hearts!"

To THINK LANG. To become weary, to feel ennui, S.

But gin ye like to ware the time, then ye
How a' the matter stood, shall vively see;
'Twill maybe keep us baith frae thinking lang.
Ross's Helenore, p. 69.

To THINK SHAME. To feel abashed, to have a sense of shame, S. This idiom seems pretty ancient.

Bot ane thing hane I hecht sickerly,
That nane sal cum about hir, Sir, bot I.
The virgine is bot yong, and think[s] shame;
And is full laith to cum in ane ill name.
Priests of Peblis, S. P. Repr., i. 32.

She perceived that I thought shame;
She asked not what was my name.
Sir Egit, v. 304.

Or, need this day think shame compar'd
Wi' auld lang syne?
Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 58.

[This phrase is often intensified in meaning; as, to think black shame, to think muckle black shame, to think black burnin' shame, Clydes.]

THIR, pron. pl. These, S. thur, Cumb. Picken has therefore justly remarked that thir is "used only when objects are near."

Be thir qnheyne, that sa worthily
Waue sik a king, and sa mychty,
Ye may weill be ensampill se,
That na man suld disparity be.

Barbour, iii. 249, MS.
i.e., "these few."

And all the Lordis that thar war
To thir twa wardanys athis swar.
Ibid. xx. 146, MS.

—Thir hertis in herdis coud hove.
Houlate, i. 2.

Isl. theyr, illi, thaer illao. V. Runolf. Ion. Isl. Vocab. The learned Hickes has demonstrated, that these might be rendered not less properly by Lat. hi, E. these.

Sibb. observes, that in some cases there seems no correspondent English word; as, "Thir shillings (which I hold concealed in my hand) are better than these upon the table." A Scotsman would say, "than thai." For thir and thai are generally opposed, like these and those; although they seem properly to have both the same meaning.

To THIRL, THIRLE, THYRL, v. a. and n. 1.
To perforate, to bore, to drill, S.

Besides your targe, in battle keen
But little danger tholes,
While mine wi' mony a thudd is clow'd,
An' thirl'd sair wi' holes.
Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 12.

2. To pierce, to penetrate.

Bot yhit the lele Scottis men,
That in that feld ware feychtand then,
To-gyddyr stw'd sa fermly
Strykand before thame inanlykly,
Swa that nane thare *thyr*l thame mycht.
Wyntown, viii. 15. 31.

The bustuous strake throw al the armour thrang,
That styntit na thing at the fyne hawbrek,
Quhil thorow the coist thirlit the dedely prik.
Doug. Virgil, 334, 23.

Thryis the holkit craggis herd we yell,
Quhare as the swelth and the rokkis thirlit.
Ibid., 87, 28.

3. To pierce, to wound, metaph.

— My thirlit heart dois bleid,
My pains dois exceed. —
Throw langour of my sweet, so thirlit is my spreit.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 203.
Lord Hailes expl. this, "bound, engaged;" misled by the common use of the word, S. as denoting the obligation of a tenant to bring his grain to a certain mill. V. THIRL, v. 4.

4. To thrill, to cause to vibrate, S.

There was ae sang, among the rest,
It thirl'd the heart-strings thro' the breast,
A' to the life.
Burns, iii. 236.

5. To pass with a tingling sensation, S. dirle, and dinle, synon.

And then he speaks with sic a taking art,
His words they thirle like music thro' my heart.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 79.
Thro' ilka limb and lith the terror thirl'd,
At every time the dowie monster skirl'd.
Ross's Helenore, p. 24.

A.-S. thirl-ian, perforare; whence E. thrill and drill.
Su.-G. trill-a, Teut. trill-en, drillen, id.

THIRL-HOLE, s. The hole into which the coulter of a plough is inserted, Lanarks.

THIRLING, part. adj. Piercingly cold, S. B.

To THIRL, v. a. To furl.

"Tak in your top salis, and thirl them." Compl. S., p. 64.

This at first view might seem a corr. of the E. word. But it is rather allied to Teut. drill-en, trill-en, gyrare, rotare, volvere, conglomerare.

To THIRL, THIRLL, v. a. 1. To enslave, to thrall.

"Ye sal noch alanerly be iniurit be euil vordis, bot als ye sal be violently strykkyn in your bodeis, quharfor ye sal lyf in mair thirlage nor brutal bestis, quhilkis ar thirlit of natura." Compl. S., p. 144.

"Thay nicht outhir thirll the Scottis to maist vile seruytude, or ellis expell thaym (gyf thay plesit) out of Albioun." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 76, a.

Thus four times thirlit and overharld,
You're the great refuse of all the warld.

Rob. III's Anno. to Henry IV., Watson's Coll., ii. 6.
From A.-S. Isl. thrael, Su.-G. trael, a bondservant. According to the ingenious Editor of Spec. Eng. Poetry, i. 20, the name of a slave is from thirl-ian, to bore. He accordingly quotes that passage concerning a servant, Exod. xxi. 6, from the A.-S. version; "He shall also bring him to the door," or "to the door-post," and thirlie his eare mid anum aele, "and bore his ear through with an awl;" adding that this custom was "retained by our forefathers, and executed on their slaves at the church door."

If this custom can be authenticated, it must greatly confirm the etymon given. Yet one difficulty would still remain; that, although Isl. thrael, thraela, Dan. trael, and Su.-G. træll, signify a bondservant, there is no similar term in these languages, signifying to bore, except Su.-G. drill-a.

Thre, with less probability, derives Su.-G. trael, a bondservant, from A.-S. thre-an, to correct, to chasten; observing, that the term properly denotes a slave that is wont to be beaten, or that wretched race of men who seem born for stripes. Su.-G. annodag also signified a slave; with this difference, however, according to the same learned writer, that it strictly denoted one who had been made captive in war, or otherwise subjected, whereas trael was the designation of one born a slave.

2. To bind or subject to; as when a person lays himself, or is laid, under a necessity of acting in any particular way, or when a thing is bound by some fixed law. S. I'll no thirl myself, or be thirled, to ony tradesman; i.e., I will not confine my custom to him, as if I were bound to do it.

"All thingis (quhilkis ar comprehendit within the speir of the mone) ar sa thirlit to deith and alteration, that thai ar othir consumit afore us, or ellis we afore thame." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 1.

"Na Mailman, or Fermour, may thirle his Lord of his frie tenement." Baron Courts, c. 48.

3. To bind, by the terms of a lease, or otherwise, to grind at a certain mill, S.

"Thirlage is constituted by writing, either directly or indirectly. It may be constituted directly, first, by the proprietor thirling his tenants to his own mill by an act or regulation of his own court." Erskine's Instit., B. ii., Tit. 9, s. 21.

THIRL, s. The term used to denote those lands, the tenants of which are bound to bring all their grain to a certain mill, S.; properly, the jurisdiction attached to a mill.

"That the building a mill within his thirle could be interpreted to be done with no other design but in aemulationem vicini." Fountainhall, i. 276.

"The astricted lands are called the thirl, or the sucken." Erskine's Instit., B. ii., Tit. 9, s. 20. V. SUCKEN.

THIRLAGE, s. 1. Thralldom, in a general sense.

This mysfortoun is myne of auld thirlage,
As therto detbund in my wrechit age.

Doug. Virgil, 366, 23.

2. Servitude to a particular mill, S.

"That servitude by which lands are astricted or thirled to a particular mill, to which the possessors must carry the grain of the growth of the astricted lands to be grinded, for the payment of such duties as are either expressed or implied in the constitution of the right." Erskine, ubi sup. s. 18.

3. Used in regard to the mortgaging of property or rents.

"The said vmquhile Erll of Mar—not only spendit and debursit all and quhatsumeur rentis, rowmea, & vtheris profitis micht be brocht in pertaine to his Maiestie, other in propertie or casualltie, besydis the thirlage of his awin leving, & the rentis of his proper dependance for the advancement of our souerane Lordis seruice; but alsua oftymes baith day and nicht exponit his awin body and lyff," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1578, Ed. 1814, p. 100.

THIRLDOME, s. Thralldom.

Na he, that ay hass levyt fre,
May noch knaw weill the propyrté
The angyr, na the wrechyt dome,
That is cowplyt to foule thyrldome.

Barbour, i. 236, MS.

Threldome, ibid. v. 265.

THIRLE-MULTER, s. The duty to be paid by thirlage for grinding.

"His Maiestie—dissolvit fra the Crown—the said burgh of Abirdene, with all and sindrie thair landis, forrestis, woddis, watteris, salmond fischeingis vpon Dee and Done, milnes, thirle multeris, castellis, medowis, hillis, linkes, heavines, poirtis, blokhous, bulwarkis, anchorages, small customes, Bell Customes, Trone wechtis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1617, Ed. 1814, p. 579.

This corresponds with the legal Lat. phrase cum astrictis multuris. V. Ersk. Inst., B. ii., Tit. 9, § 22.

THIRLESTANE-GRASS, s. Saxifrage.

"Saxifraga, thirlestane grass." Wedderb. Voc., p. 18.

The Sw. name corresponds; sten-bræcka.

[THISTLE-COCK, s. The common bunting, [Emberiza miliaria], Shetl.]

[THIVEL, THEEVIL, s. A porridge-stick. S.; synon. spurtle. V. THEIVIL.]

THO, adv. Then, at that time.

Ane wattry cloud blak and dirk but dout,
Can ouer thare hedis tho appere ful richt.

Doug. Virgil, 127, 35.

This word occurs very frequently in the same sense in Chaucer and Gower. It is also used by Langland, in the following passage, which contains some genuine strokes of poetry.

Consummatum est, quod Christe, and coinseth for to swonne,

Pitiously and pale as a prisoner doth that dieth;

The Lord of life & of light tho laied his eies together;

The day for dread withdrew, & darck became the sunne;

The wall waggel and clefte, & all the world quaued ;
Dead men for that dine came out of depe graues,
And tolde why that tempest so longe time endured.
"For a bitter battel," the dead boily saide,
"Life & deth in this darknes, here one forlooth the other :
"Shal no wight wit witterly, who shal haue maistrise
"Er Sondag about sunne rising ;" & sanke with that to theearth. P. Ploughman, Fol. 97, b.

Quaueith, quaketh, A.-S. cicau-an. A.-S. Isl. tha, Exmore tho, "then, at that time ;" Grose.

THO, pron. pl. These.

— Defend I suld be one of tho,
Quhilk of their feid and malice never ho.

Palice of Honour, li. 25.

A catchpole came forth, & craggel both the legges,
And the armes after, of either of tho theues.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 98, a.

Moes.-G. tho, nom. and acc. pl. of the article. In A.-S. it is tha. Tho, however, seems synon. with Thai, q. v.

[THOCH-BANE, s. V. THOUGHT-BANE.]

THOCHT, THOUGHT, conj. Though, al- though.

The Inglisshmen, thocht thar chyftayn was slayne,
Bauldly thai baid, as men mekill of mayn.

Wallace, iii. 191, MS.

— He wes blyth of that tithing,
And for dispyte bad draw and hing
All the prisoneris, thought thai war ma.

Barbour, li. 456, MS.

As out of mynd myne armour on I thrast,
Thought be na resoun persauie I mycht but fale,
Quhat than the force of armes could auale.

Doug. Virgil, 49, 36.

V. ALLTHOCHT.

THOCHT, s. 1. A very little of any thing, Tweedd.; synon. Kennin ; [dimin. thochtie.]

2. A moment. V. THOUGHT.

THOCHTY, adj. 1. Thoughtful.

— He past a-pon a day
In-til huintyng hym til play
Wyth honest curt and company
Of hys gamyn all thochty.

Wynntown, vi. 16, 14.

2. Given to reflection, attentive, S.

"Philip considers my uncle as particularly under my charge, as Fanny is two years younger than I am, and not so thoughty, as Philip says." Petticoat Tales, ii.
110.

THOF, conj. Although, Loth.

Thof to the weet my ripen'd aits had fawn,
Or shake-winds owr my rigs wi' pith had blawn,
To this I cou'd hae said, "I carena by."

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 6.

V. ALLTHOCHT.

THOILL, TOLL, s. One of the ancient privi- leges of barons, usually mentioned in charters.

"Barons hauand liberties, with sock, sak, theme, thoill, infang-theif, and out-fang-theif, may doe justice in their court, vpon ane man, taken within their fredome, saised with manifest thift." Quon. Attach.
c. 100. s. 1. Toll and thame, Reg. Maj. B. i. c. 4. s.
2.

According to Skene, it is an immunity from payment of custom in buying.

"He quha is infest with Toll, is custome free, and pays na custome.—All Earles, Barrones, Knights, vassalles, life-renters, Free-holders, and al quha has landes nomine elemosynae, suld be quite and free fra payment of Toll and custom within burgh ; in bying meate and claith, and vther necessair things to their awin proper vse. But gif ony of them be commoun merchandis, they suld paye tholl and custome ; albeit they haue als great libertie as Barronnes." De Verb.
Sign. vo. Toll.

In this sense it was also used in E. V. Cowel, vo. Toll. But Spelman defines it to be "the liberty of buying or selling on one's own lands." It occurs indeed in both senses in the A.-S. laws ; although most frequently in the latter. V. Lye, vo.
Toll. L. B. tholonium, telonium.

To THOLE, THOILL, v. a. and n. 1. To bear, to undergo, to suffer, S. A. Bor. Chauc.

—The King, and his company,
That war it c. na ma,
Fra thai had send thar horsis thaim fra,
Wandryt emang the hey montanyis,

Doug. Virgil, 79, 52.

A.-S. thol-ian, Moes.-G. thul-an, Alem. thol-en, Isl.
thol-a, Su.-G. tol-a, Germ. Belg. duld-en, pati, ferro.

Ihre thinks that the ancient Latins had used tol-o or tul-o, in the same sense. This he infers from the use of tuli, the pret. of fer-o, which is employed to express the bearing of hardships ; and also from toler-o, which he considers as derived from tol-o, in the same manner as gener-o, from the obsolete gen-o. He also refers to
Gr. tal-aw, suffero, perpetior, &c., tal-aop, miser.

2. To bear with, not to oppose.

"Quha brekis this command?—Thai that tholis nocht thair father and mother, suppose thai do thame iniuriis and be cummersum." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 46, b.

3. To bear patiently, to endure ; to be patient under suffering, S.

Son of the goddess, lat vs follow that way
Bakwart or sordwart quhiddir our fatis driue :
Quhat euir betid, this is na bute to strue :
Al chance of fortoun tholand ouercummin is.

Doug. Virgil, 151, 34.

"Happy is the man that tholis trubil, for quhen he is preuit & knawin, he sall resait the croune of lyfe, quhilk God hais promissit till thame that luffis him."
Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 27, a.

"You must [maun] thole, or flit many [mony] a hole," S. Prov. "You must bear the inconveniencies of the state or condition in which you are, or change, and perhaps for the worse." Kelly, p. 381.

A.-S. thol-ian, Moes.-G. thul-an, tolerare. A.-S. Sica

How long shall I suffer, or exercise patience with, you ?
Mar. ix. 19. Su.-G. tol-a, patienter ferre. Moes.-G.
thuldaina, A.-S. tholemodnesse, Isl. thol, patientia,
Su.-G. tolig, patiens.

4. To restrain one's self, to exercise self-com- mand ; as a v. n.

Had Bruce past by but baid to Sanct Jhonstoun,
Be haill assent he had resawyt the croun ;
On Cumyn syn he mycht haif done the law.
He couth nocht thoill fra tym that he him saw.

Wallace, x. 1162, MS.

5. To tolerate, in relation to one accounted a heretic.

"For if I thoill him, I will be accusit for all thame that he corruptis and infectis in Heresie." Memorand. Archbishop of St. Androis, Knox's Hist., p. 103.
Su.-G. tol-a, to tolerate, Seren.

6. To exempt from military execution, on certain terms.

The King gert men of gret noblay
Ryd in till Ingland for to prey :
That broucht owt gret pleute of fe :
And sum contreis tholyt he,
For wittail, that in gret foyssoun
He gert bring smertly to the toun.
Barbour, xvii. 228, MS.
And with some countries treices looke he.
Edit. 1620.

7. To permit, to allow, S.

Yeit glaid wes he that he had chapyt swa,
Bot for his men gret murnyng can he ma ;
Flayt by him self to the Makar off buffe,
Quhy he sufferyt he suld sic paynys pruff.
He wyst nocht weill gif it wes Goddis will,
Rycht or wrang his fortoun to fullill :
Hade he plesid God, he trowit it nycht nocht be,
He suld him thoill in sic perplexité.
Wallace, v. 234, MS.

Thoill is evidently used as synon. with suffer, v. 230, as denoting permission. V. also viii. 43.

Faint-hearted wights, wha dully stood afar,
Tholling your reason great attempts to mar.—
Ramsay's Poems, i. 325.

8. To wait ; to expect.

This seems to be the sense in the following passage :
"We suld nocht prescriue to God any special tyme to heir our prayer, bot paciently commit all to God baith the maner of our helping and the tyme, according as the Prophet commandis in the Psalme, sayand : Expecta Dominum, viriliter age, confortetur cor tuum, et sustine Dominum. Wait apon our Lord, do all thi deidis stoutly, lat thi hart be of gud comfort, and thole our Lord to wyrk all thingis to his pleasure." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 46, b.

Thole a wee, wait a little ; A. Bor. Thole a while ; corresponding to Su.-G. tola tiden, tempus expectare. The idea plainly is, "Exercise patience for a short time." Su.-G. gifwa sig tol, to be patient of delay.

9. [To undergo, to be subjected to] ; as, To thole the law, to be subjected to a legal trial.

"It is—forbidden, that any man, that is officiar of any countrie, or any man, that indictis ane vther for any actioun, be on hys assyse, that sall thole the law, vnder the pane of ten pund to the king." Acts Ja. I. 1424, c. 56, Edit. 1566.

Sometimes it is called tholing an assise.

"The Lordis, that was in the summondis of forfaltre,—war—thair to thoall an assyze, according to thair dittay." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 235. V. Bos, adj.

10. To require, to stand in need of ; as, He wad thole a mends, he would require to be reformed, or require a change to the better, S.

This v., with the addition of certain prepositions used rather adverbially, signifies to admit of the state which the preposition expresses, as in the following instances :—

To THOLE aff. 1. To admit of a part being taken off, to bear the ademption of, Aberd.

2. To account one's self sufficiently warm, without some particular part of dress, ibid.

To THOLE on. To admit of any thing being put on or laid on, ibid.

To THOLE to. 1. To admit the addition of, ib.

2. To admit of the door, &c., being shut, ib.

THOLANCE, s. Sufferance, toleration.

"And suppose the said Abbot and Convent dois wa favor in the sayyng of the said anwellis bathe alde and new, of thar gracious tholance and prestance, I, my ayrs, executors, and assignais, obliis us, as said is, nevir to mak question nor impediment to the payment of the said anwellis that ar hy runnyn, na yit of yeris or termis that ar for to cum," &c. Chart. Aberbroth. F. 68, (Macfarl.) A. 1470.

Prestance is evidently the Fr. term, signifying nobleness, worthiness ; Cotgr.

—"Charging him to tak ane inquisicioun—how the said twa acris of land has bene broukit & possedit thir fyfty yeris by gane, & be quham, & gif the said chapelane, or his predecessouris occupijt the said acris in ony tymo, and quethir as malaris [rent-payers], or tholance, or propirte to the chapellanery." Act. Dom. Conc. A. 1479, p. 39.

—"Hed ony richt to the said tak bot allanerly off tholance." Brechine Reg., Fol. 92.

THOLEABLE, adj. Tolerable, what may be suffered, S. ; tholesum, Fife.

THOLMUDE, THOILMUDE, adj. Patient.

In vane that name thou beris, I dare say,
Gif thou sa *thoilmu*de sufferis lede away
Sa grete ane price but derene or batell.

Doug. Virgil, 140. 35.

"Scot. Bor. say tholemoody, i.e., patient." Rudd. A.-S. thole-mot, tholmot, tholmoda, patiens animi. This term is also used in Berwickshire and Roxb.

[THOLYT, pret. Errat. for Treuyt, treated, made terms, Barbour, xvii. 228, Edin. MS.]

THOLE-PIN, s. The thowl in a boat, Ayrs.

"The boatmen rattled their oars between the thole-pins." Spaewife, i. 183. V. THOWEL.

THOLNIE, s. Toll, duty.

—"With all—multurs, frie ports or harberies, tholnies and vthers," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, Vol. V., 97.

O. Fr. tolin, the duty payable for the right of exposing goods to sale ; L. B. tholne-um, id., Lat. telonium, the place of receiving custom.

THOMICOM THRAMUNUD. A gift to ecclesiastical persons, apparently at the celebration of funerals.

Habeunt et quartam partem obventionum qui in communi conferuntur Killeis—ab hiis qui ibidem sepulturam eligerint, et partem que eos contingit de communi elemosina que dicitur Sauchbarian, et partem que eos contingit de beneficio quod dicitur Thomicom thramunud, libere et quiete, juxta quod ab antiquis temporibus retro usque ad hec tempora habuerint. Cartular. Aberdon., Fol. 5. (Macfarlane, p. 13.)

In the copy of the Register of St. Andrews, it is Thomneom tharmund, p. 439.

THON, pron. demonstr. Yonder, Loth. yon, S. the accus. of the article, A.-S.

“‘Hooss!’ repeated the driver; ‘ca ye thon a hooss?’ thon’s gude Glenferu castle.” Marriage, i. 18.

It is also used, S. B.

Leuk down the gate, what squabble’s thon,
That ca’s the thrang’s attention!

Tarras’s Poems, p. 96.

Thon is generally viewed as a provincial corr. of Yon, Yond. But notwithstanding the similarity of application, they have not the slightest affinity; Yon being from A.-S. geond. With thon, Contra id. Here it has simply the force of that; and is used as if a pronoun. In another instance it appears merely as the article; and even without that force of demonstration with which it is used in S. With thone pytt, Juxta puteum, Gen. 29. 2. With thone munt; Juxta montem, Numb. 20. 22. The royal translator of Bode seems to use it more emphatically than in any other instance I have met with. lc Beda sende gredan thone leofestan Cyninge; Ego Beda salutem mitto delectissimo Regi. Praef. ad Hist. Eccles.

Moes.-G. thana, id. or from Su.-G. then, anciently thoen, ille, iste.

THOR, s. “Durance, confinement. Swed. thor, carcer;” Gl. Sibb.

THORLE, s. The fly of a spinning-rock. Roxb.; synonym with Whorle.

Isl. thirill, rudicula capitata versatilis, Haldorson; thyrill, Sw. torrell, verticillum quo lacticinia agitantur; Soren. Hallager gives Norw. torl as denoting “the stick wherewith butter is churned;” vo. Tull. A.-S. thwiril, bacillus quo agitur coaguluni, Lye; thwyrl, “a churn-staffe; also, a flail, a scourge-stick, a swingell;” Somner.

THORLE-PIPPIN, s. A species of apple, in form resembling a whorle, ibid.

THORNY-BACK, s. The Thornback, a skate with recurved spines, Frith of Forth.

“Rais clavata. Thornback; Thorny-back.” Neill’s List of Fishes, p. 23.

THOROUGH. To be thorough, to be sane, or sound in mind, Teviotd.

Apparently an ellipsis for “thoroughly in his mind.”

THOROW-GO-NIMBLE, s. An old term for the diarrhoea, S. A. Bor. id., Brockett.

THORROWS, s. pl. [Crosses, troubles.]

Gret sorrows and thorrows
Ill companie procuris:
Forese than, with me than,
This trouble that induris.

Burel, Watson’s Coll., ii. 49.

Apparently troubles, q. throws, from A.-S. throw-ian, pati; the word being lengthened for the sake of the measure.

To THORTER, v. a. 1. To oppose, to thwart, S.

—“Their willingness to suppress the growth of these enormities hath been ever thortered and impeded by too many advocations of these matters granted by you, whereby they were discharged of all further proceeding.” Letter Ja. VI. Calderwood, p. 581. V. THORTOUR, adj.

2. To cross the furrow in ploughing, South of S.

3. To harrow the ridges in a field across the direction of the ridges, Clydes. V. To Endlang.

4. To go backwards and forwards on any thing, in the way of doing one’s work completely; as in sewing, when a person sews a piece of cloth first one way, then another, S.; q. to go athwart, or transversely.

5. Metaph. applied to an argument. He thortour’d it weel, he sifted it thoroughly, he tried it backwards and forwards, Aug.

To THORTER-THROW, v. a. To pass an object backwards and forwards, Roxb.

THORTER, prep. Across, athwart, S.

—“Whilkis haill landis—ar limitat—as followes; To wit, beginnand at the watter of Tarras—to Rowanburne and thorter Ingreis yeattis to the fute of Magilwod,” &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1609, Ed. 1814, p. 443.

THORTER-ILL, THWARTER-ILL, s. A kind of palsy to which sheep are subject, Tweedd.

“3d, Palsy, called trembling or thorter ill, to which those fed on certain lands are peculiarly subject.” P. Linton, Tweedd. Statist. Acc., i. 138.

“Trembling, Thwarter, or Leaping ill. These three appellations, of which the last is most common in Annandale, and the first in Selkirkshire and to the eastward, are now used as synonymous.”

“The animal—continues leaping frequently during the day, and the neck is frequently stiff, and turned to one side.” Prize Essays Highl. Soc. S., iii. 385, 390.

The disease seems to receive its name from this distortion of the neck.

THORTER-KNOT, s. Expl. “the knarry end of a branch,” Moray.

“If—you were to look through an elf-bore in wood, where a thorter-knot—has been taken out,—you may see the elf-bull,” &c. Northern Antiq., p. 404.

THORTER-OWER, prep. Across; a pleonastic term, Roxb.

THORTOUR, THUORTOUR, adj. Cross, transverse, laid across.

A cleuch thar was, qubaroff a strenth thair maid
With thuortour treis, bauldly thair abaid.

Wallace, iv. 540, MS.

It is the same term that is used in Berksh. “A thurt over fellow: a cross-grained or ill-tempered fellow;” Grose.

THORTOUR, s. Opposition, resistance, S.

“The Romanis hes experience aboue ingyne of man in cheualry. Sa agill of thair bodyis, that thay may dant all thortour and diffiicill gatis. Swift of rynk, and redly to euery kynd of jeopardé.” Bellend. Cron. Fol. 27, a.

“The third thorture and debate he had was with the Provost, bailies and Councill of the town about their ministry.” Mr. James Melville’s MS. Mem., p. 85.

THORTRON, adj. Having a transverse direction.

Thortron burnis in monthis hie
Sall stop na heid roume, thoch thay be.
Balfour's Pract., p. 439.

V. BORD.

I know not whether the unusual termination is formed from Run, v., q. running cross.

Su.-G. twert officer, transverse; from twert, adv. twæter, transverse, and officer, over, softened into our, S. Dan. twertover, transversely. A.-S. thwedor, thwyr, thwyr, Belg. duara, duers, Isl. ticer, transversus, opposite, E. thwart.

THORTYRLAND, s. Land lying across or beyond a given place.

"To remoif, red, & flit out of the said inland thortyrland, yard, & forentres." Aberd. Reg. A. 1535, V. 15.

This seems to be a denomination of land lying across, in relation perhaps to the house attached to it.

Thortir hous is a phrase which occurs in the same volume, apparently used in a similar sense.

[THOUCH, THOUGHT, conj. Though, although, Barbour, iii. 201, i. 264.]

[THOUGHT, pret. Hym thought, it seemed to him, it struck him, Barbour iv. 618. V. THOCHT.]

THOUGHT, THOUGHTY, s. 1. In a thought, in a moment, as respecting time, S.

"Gie me a thought of time to it, I can do as gude a day's darg as ever I did in my life." Monastery, i. 189.

"The bird, wha was at the hyre a thoughtie afore us, cam rinnan back, cryan' that a lang white woman wouldna let her in." Edin. Mag. Dec. 1818, p. 503.

2. At a little distance, in respect of place, S.B.

Upon his bow he lean'd his milk white hand,
A bonny boy a thoughty aff did stand.

Ross's Helenore, p. 68.

3. A small quantity of any thing, Ang., Aberd.

4. In some degree, somewhat, S.

"I—resolved to travel by land, though it was a thought more expensive." The Steam-Boat, p. 153.

"Ye needna say mickle to ane whose heart is e'en the sairer that she has been a thought to blame." St. Ronan, ii. 22.

Thochtie, id. Aberd.; as, "Ye're a thochtie wrang; a thochtie better; a thochtie bigger," &c.

5. A wee thought, in a small degree, S.

"Whist, whist, man!—Ducholly is a wee thought thin-skinned in matters of military precession." Tournay, p. 13.

THOUGHT-BANE, THOCHT-BANE, s. The merrythought of a fowl, Aberd.; evidently an abbreviation of the E. name. V. BRIL.

THOUM, THOWME, s. The thumb; pron. q. thoom, S.

"Anent the haling [healing] of his thoume," &c. Aberd. Reg. V. 25.

[To THOUM, v. a. To feel with the thumb; also, to mark with the thumb, as in holding a book, S.]

VOL. IV.

THOUM-RAPE, s. A sort of rope made by twisting straw on the thumb, S.

They wha canna make a thoum-rape
O thretty thraws and three,
Is as worth thar mett [meat], I wot,
Nor yet their penny fee.

Auld Say, Gall. Enc.

THOUM-STOUL, THUM-STOULE, s. A covering for the thumb. V. THUM-STEIL.

THOUM-SYME, s. "An instrument for twisting ropes;" given as synon. with Thru-crook; Gall. Encyc.

The last syllable is probably allied to Isl. suicim-a, circumire, circumferri, suicim, levis motio, or suim, vertigo; q. "the instrument which, in the operation of twisting, is whirled round by the thumb."

To THOUT, v. n. To sob, S.B. Gl. Shirr.

This seems radically the same with THUD, q.v. V. also THAUT.

THOUT, s. A sob, S.B.

—Judge gin her heart was sair;
Out at her mou' it just was like to bout
Intil her lap, at ilka ither thout.

Ross's Helenore, p. 23.

[THOW, adv. When, Barbour, xi. 31 (rubric), Camb. MS. A.-S. thá, when.]

To THOW, v. a. To address in the singular number, as a token of contempt.

This v. is used by Shakspeare in the same sense. I take notice of it, therefore, merely to observe that it had been early used in S.

Wallace answer'd, said, "Thow art in the wrang."

"Quham thowis thow, Scot? in faith thow serwis a blaw."
Till him he ran, and out a suerd can draw.

Wallace, i. 393, MS.

Dowis, Ed. Perth; evidently an error of the transcriber for thowis. The sense is preserved in Ed. 1648.

Whom thoust thou, Scot?—
Corresponds to Fr. tutoy-er.

To THOW, v. n. 1. To thaw, S.

2. Used actively; to remove the rigour produced by cold, S.

I—beekt him brawly at my ingle,
Dighted his face, his handies thow'd.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 145.

Steeve, in his plaid, ilk haun he rows,
An', wi his breath, the cranreuch thows;
Till suce ilk dinolin finger glows.

Picken's Poems, i. 77.

THOW, THOWE, s. Thaw, S.

When thowes dissolve the snawy hoord,
Then Water-kelpies haunt the foord,
By your direction.

Burns, iii. 73.

"Nothing contributes more than a course of changeable weather from one extreme to another, to waste sheep; and nothing is more difficult to guard against, which has given rise to the proverb,

Mony a frost, mony a thow,
Soon maks mony a rotten ewe."

Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 473.

Thowe is the ancient form of the word in E. "Thowe of snowe or other lyke. Resolutio. Liquefactio. Degelatio.—Thow-en or meltyn as snowe or frost. Resoluit. Soluit. Degelat." Prompt. Parv.

X 3

THOW-HOLE, s. "A name for the South;" as, "the wind generally blows out of this quarter" in the time of a thaw, Gall. Enc.

The mermaids can ough thole,
But frost out of the thow-hole.

Auld Superstitious Say. Ibid.

SMORE THOW. This term is applied to a heavy snow, accompanied with a strong wind, which, as it were, threatens to smore, smother, or suffocate one, Ang.

THOWEL, THOLE, s. The nitch or hollow in which the oar of a boat acts, Loth.; [syn. rollock, E. rowlock.]

Thowl is E. and denotes a piece of wood by which the oar is kept steady in rowing. V. Johns.

Su.-G. tull, aartull, id. Isl. tholl-r, arboris species; also palus, a stake. [V. THOLE-PIN.]

THOWLESS, adj. Inactive. V. THEWLES.

THOWLESNES, THOWLYSNES, s. Inactivity, or evil habits; literally, unfitness for service.

Hys dochteris he kend to weve and spyn,
As pure wemen thare met to wyn,
That thail suld noucht for ydilnes
Fall in-til iwyl thowlysnas.

Wyntown, vi. 3. 74.

This is printed thowlesnes, Barbour, i. 333, expl. thoughtlessness, Gl. But the word in MS. is thowlesnes.

—Soue to Parys can he ga,
And levyt thar full sympyll,
And quethir he glaid was and joly;
And til swyll thowlesnes he yeld,
As the cours askis off yowtheid!

V. THEWLES.

THOWRROURIS, s. pl. Wallace, iii. 103, most probably, by mistake of some copyist, for skorrouwis.

The worthi Scottis maid thar no soiorning,
—Send twa thowrrouwis to wesay weyll the playne.

THRA, THRO, adj. 1. Eager, earnest.

Rohand was full thra,
Of Tristrem for to fraim.

Sir Tristrem, p. 37, st. 56.

His frendis moyyd the Kyng of Frawns
For this Willame to mak instawns
And thra prayere to the Pape,
This Willame that he wald mak Byschape
Of Saynet Andrewis se wacand.

Wyntown, vii. 38, 235.

i.e., eager to ask of him.

Lo here the boundis, lo here Hesperia,
Quhilk thou to seik in werefare was sa thra.

Doug. Virgil, 422, 10.

2. Brave, courageous; like E. keen.

Wallace with him had fourty archarys thra,
The laiff was speris, full nobill in a neid,
On thair enemys thair bykkir with gud speid.

Wallace, ix. 844, MS.

Thus the batayl bigan,
Witeth wele it was so,
Bituene the Douk Morgan,
And Rouland that was thro.

Sir Tristrem, p. 11, st. 4.

3. Obstinate, pertinacious.

Bot thair mycht na counsaill awaile,
He wald algaht hav bataile,

And quhen thair saw he wes sa thru
To fycht, thair said, "Ye nua well ga
To fycht with yone great company.
Bot we acyugt ws wtirely
That nane of ws will stand to fycht."

Barbour, xviii. 71, MS.

This may also be the sense of the term in the following passage:—

Like as twa bustuous bullis by and by,— Quhen thay assemblill in austerne batall thra,
With front to front and horn for horne attanis
Ruschaud togidkir with crones and fereful granis.—

Doug. Virgil, 437, 47.

4. Opposite, reluctant, averse.

Anone the catall, quhilk fauourit langere
The beist ouercumin as thare chief and here,
Now thame subdewis vndir his warde in hie,
Quhilk has the ouerhand, wynnyng and maistry,
And of fre wil, al thoct thare myndis be thra,
Assentis him til obey—

Doug. Virgil, 454, 2.

Isl. thra, pertinacia, thraa-r, thra, thraut, pertinax, assiduus; Su.-G. traa, id. tra, sese alicui opponere, resistere.

THRA, s. 1. Eagerness, keenness.

Our men on him thrang forward in to thra,
Maid through his ost feill sloppis to the fra.
Wallace, viii. 237, MS.

2. Debate, contention.

So thoctis thretis in thra our breistis ouerthort,
Baleful besynes bayth blis and blythnes gan boist.
Doug. Virgil, 238, a. 23.

V. the adj.

THRA, THRAW, THRALY, adv. Eagerly.

The berne bounit to the burgh, with ane blith cheir,
Fand the yettis unclosit, and thrang in full thra.

Gawan and Gol., i. 5.

i.e., pressed in full eagerly.

—The batellis so brym, brathly and blicht,
Were jonit thraly in thrang, mony thowsand.

Houlate, ii. 14.

Thay pingil thraly quha mycht forrest be,
Wyth doure myndis, vnto the wallis hie.

Doug. Virgil, 431, 34.

Thraw seems used in the same sense, if it be not the adj.

Bot lo ane sworl of fyre blesis vp thraw;
Lemand toward the lift the flam he saw.

Ibid. 435, 38.

THRAE, adj. Backward, reluctant to do any thing, Perth. V. THRA.

THRAE, prep. From, Tweedd. This must undoubtedly be viewed as a local corruption of S. Frae, id.

THRAFF, adj. Thraff drink, E. of Fife.

THRAFTLY, adv. In a chiding or surly manner.

"The ambassadours past out of Scotland, in this manner as I have shewn you, to London to King Hary, where they were but thrafftly received of the King and council of England at that time." Pitscottie, p. 171.

A.-S. thraf-ian, increpare, thrafung, increpatio, "a chiding, reproving, or blaming;" Somner.

The A.-S. v. seems to have the same origin with THRA, q. v.

THRAIF, THRAVE, THREAVE, s. 1. Twenty-four sheaves of corn, including two stooks, or shocks, S. A. Bor. Glouc.

"A farmer who rented 60, 80, or 100 acres, was sometimes under the necessity of buying meal for his family in the summer season: Nor will this appear wonderful, when it is considered that 15 bolls of bear have of late years been produced on the same field, where 50 thraiv [i. e. thraves] (1200 sheaves) formerly grew, which the owner said 'he would give for 50 bear bannocks (barley cakes).'" P. Caputh, Perth. Statist. Acc., ix. 449, N.

"The produce of this farm, which in the year 1780 was only 900 thraves, amounted to 2700 thraves in the year 1790." P. Turriiff, Aberd. Statist. Acc., xvii. 406.

"Anent the wrangwiss spoliation of a stak of ait, extending to ii c and thre score of thraivis of fothir [fodder], as was alleget;—the lordis auditoris decretis," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1478, p. 60.

—"The sailis Cristiane—sall content & paye to the sail Johnne xxij h. of ait, & xl thruif of fothir, or ellis the avale of thaim." Ibid.

It is sometimes written Thri-re.

"I have thrashed a few thrires in the minister's barn, prime oats they were, for the glebe had been seven years in lea." Lights and Shadows, p. 214.

2. A multitude, a considerable number, S.

Unwourthy I, among the laif,
Ane kirk dois craft, and nane can have;
Sum with ane thruif playis passage plane,
Quhilk to considder is ane pane.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 117.

—In came visitants a threave,
To entertain them she man leave
Her looking-glass.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 463.

Su.-G. trafice, a heap of any kind, acervus segetum, lignorum aliarumque rerum. In one part of Sw. it has precisely the sense of our thraive. Smolan-do-Goth. en trafice saad, strues segetum viginti quatour, fascibus constans; Seren. Isl. trafice, a heap of corn cut down. C. B. trafa, drefa, id. L. B. trava, trava bladi, acervus frumenti. Thre has remarked on this word, that, among the ancient Goths straba was used to denote that heap of spoils, or trophy, which was erected in honour of a deceased warrior.

THREAVER, s. One who in harvest is paid according to the number of thraves he cuts down, S.B.

"While a reaper cuts, in the usual hasty manner of a feed shearer, at the rate of nine thraves a-day, a threaver will, with less labour to himself, cut ten thraves in the same time." Agr. Surv. Kincard., p. 264.

THREAVING, s. The mode of payment mentioned above, S.B.

"Threaving. This consists in paying each reaper individually according to his daily work, ascertained by the number of thraves, of two stooks each, and every stook twelve sheaves, and each sheaf at the band to fill a fork ten inches wide between the prongs. The price commonly given is four-pence the threave." Ibid.

TO THRAIN, v. n.

This may have been formed from the part. pr. thraegende, or the gerund thraegenne of A.-S. thraegan, thraean, corripere, reprehendere; or may be immediately allied to Su.-G. traegen, assiduus, pertinax, from trac, desiderium, Isl. thra, pertinacia, i thra, obstinate.

To THRAIP, v. n. [1. To assert, asseverate; to reiterate, S. V. THREPE.

2. To strive, contend; hence, to succeed, to profit by, Clydes., Loth.]

The smith swair be rude and raip,

Intill a gallowis mot I gaip,

Gif I ten dayis wan pennies thre,

For with that craft I can nocht thraip.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 33.

[THRAIP-KNOT, s. An assertion without foundation, to bring out the truth of what one suspects, or to prevent the doing of a thing one dreads will be done, Banffs.]

To THRALL, THRILL, v. a. 1. To enslave.

2. To subject to any sort of servitude; applied to heritable property; an old forensic term.

"That the said Robert sall nocht revoke nor again call the said procuratour quhil it be vrit & hafe effect; nor in the mene tyme quhil it be vrit sall be na maner of way thrill the landis, bot deliuer thaim fre as said is." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1480, p. 70.

It is obviously the same with the v. to Thirl.

THRALL, adj. Enslaved, completely subjected to. This word has been introduced as an O.E. word by Mr. Todd. It was also used in S.

"Persuading alsua the Quene sa thrall, and swa blindlie affectionat to the private appetyte of that tyrane," &c. Anderson's Coll., ii. 222.

To THRAM, v. n. To thrive, Aberd. Moray, Gl. Ross.

Sae, while we honest means pursue,
Well mat thou thram, for sin thou's been so free,
I for a whyllie yet sal lat thee be.

Ross's Helenore, p. 21.

We yet may chance to thram:
Nor ferly, tho' sapersly
The blessings now are gien.

Shirreff's Poems, p. 360.

Isl. thre-ast, invalescere, incrementum capere; thraan, throtte, incrementum ac vires viriles.

To THRAMLE, THRAMMLE aff, v. a. To wind, Buchan.

Fu' fast she's ca'd the rim about,
An' thraml't aff wi' awfu' rowt;
For friendship gae her oil.

Tarras's Poems, p. 112.

"Thramml't, winded, reeled;," Gl. ibid. Here the term is used figuratively. Can this have any affinity to the E. v. to Thrum, to twist; or Isl. thraum, the extremity of any thing?

THRAMMEL, s. Meal and Thrammel, properly a little meal put into the mouth of a sack, at a mill, having a small quantity of water or ale poured in, and stirred about. At times it is made up in the form of a bannock, and roasted in the ashes, Banffs.

In haf an hour he's get his mess—

O' meal an' thrammel.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 25.

Apparently a compound word, from Su.-G. Isl. thra, desiderium, also used to denote a failure of strength, and miol, meal itself, or maal, a meal; q, a portion taken for satisfying the present cravings of nature, by one who, being from home, has not had a regular diet.

THRAMEL, s. The rope which forms part of an ox's binding, fastened at one end to the bakie, or stake, at the other to the sele, or yoke, which goes round the neck, having a swivel at the end which joins the sele; Mearns, Aberd., Banffs., Moray.

Evidently of Goth. origin. Isl. thrimill signifies a knot.

THRANG, pret. and part. pa. Pressed. V. THRING.

To THRANG, v. a. and n. 1. To throng, to crowd, to rush in a crowd, S.

The hurly-burly thrangs, ding-dang,
Wi' fock o' ilka station.

Tarras's Poems, p. 93.

As they're thus cracking, a' the house thrangs out,
Gouping and gazing at this new come rout.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 92.

A. Bor. "Thrang, v. to press, to thrust, to squeeze;" Gl. Brockett.

Su. traung-a, to crowd, A.-S. thring-an, to press, from Moes.-G. threih-an, id.

2. To crowd towards a place; as, They are thrangin to the kirk; they are going to church in crowds, S.

THRANG, adj. 1. Crowded, S. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 109.

Belg. gedrang, id. Isl. thraung-ur, Su.-G. traang, arctus, angustus.

2. Intimate, familiar, S. thick, grit, synon.

Fu' tyr'd he seem'd, yet back wi' me wou'd gang,
Syne hame we scour'd fu' cheery and fu' thrang.

Morison's Poems, p. 136.

"They are very thrang, for intimate together, is a very common Scotticism." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 109. V. GILL-WHEEF.

3. Busy, busily employed; sometimes applied to the objects engaged; as, "We're thrang wi' wark;"—we're thrang shearing; thrang washing;—thrang e'en now wi' the hairst," S.

"Ay thrang, little thing doing, soling the minister's hose," S. Prov.; apparently spoken of those who are busy in doing little.

The prep. at is sometimes used.

As they were at this dibber-derry thrang.

And Bylby still complaining of her wrang,
Jean, who had seen her coming o'er the moor,
Supposing't Nory, slips in at the door.

Ross's Helenore, p. 81.

A. Bor. "Thrang, a. much engaged, busily employed;" Gl. Brockett.

4. Applied to the time or season of busy engagement, S.

"This is the first day that you are to take the place of your worthy mother in attending to the public. It will be hard for you to fill her place, especially on sic a thrang day as this." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 69.

5. Transferred to the engagement, or work itself, S.

The E. form is sometimes given to the term, while the S. sense is retained.

"The general calling of Christianity is a very throng task, wherein a man needs never want an opportunity of doing service to God." Hutcheson on John xii. 1, p. 150.

THRANG, s. 1. A throng, a crowd, S.

Wi' some surprise the Squire behads the thrang,
An' speers gin a' did to ae house belang.

Ross's Helenore, First Ed., p. 92, 93.

With great hamstram they thrimled thro' the thrang.
Ibid. p. 86.

A. Bor. "Thrang, s. a crowd, a throng; pure Saxon;" Gl. Brockett.

2. Constant employment, S.; pressure of business, S.

"Ye canna get leave to thrive for thrang;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 81.

3. Straits, a state of hardship or oppression.

The nobill men, that ar off Scottis kind,
Thar petous dede ye kepe in to your mynd,
And wa rawenge, quhen we ar set in thrang.

Wallace, vii. 237, MS.

Editors, not understanding the sense, have changed the word to throng. It is A.-S. thrang, turba, or Isl. thraeng, angusta, used metaph. Su.-G. traang-maal, necessitas.

4. Intimacy, S. B.

It sets them well into our thrang to spy:
They'd better whisht, reed I sul' raise a fry.

Ross's Helenore, p. 18.

5. Bustle, confusion, S. B.

Bydby—they call her, bargains tough and sair,
That Lindy there sud by his promise bide.—
And now your honour's heard what makes the thrang.
Ibid. p. 101.

THRANG, pret. Rushed.

Thurgill thrang till a club,
So fers he flaw in a dub.

Colkelbie Sow, F. 1. v. 219.

A.-S. thrang, irruit, from thring-ian, irruere; Isl. threng-ia, urgere; Dan. traeng-er, id.

THRANGERIE, s. A bustle, Ayrs.

"It'll be a grand ploy to my mother—for ye ken she has such a heart for a thrangerie butt and ben, that, rather than want wark, she'll mak a baby of the beetle, and dance till't." The Entail, ii., 29.

THRANGITY, s. The state of being throng, Fife.

THRAPPLE, s. The windpipe; [also, the throat], S.

"Thrapple, the windpipe of any animal.—They still retain it in the Scottish dialect; we say rather throttlet;" Johns. Dict. V. THROPILL.

To THRAPPLE, v. a. 1. To throttle or strangle, S. Thropple, A. Bor. V. THROP-PILL.

An' lusty thuds were dealt about,
An' some were maistly thrappl't
Wi' gripe, that night.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 136.

"We'ee no hac a lamb-cloot on a' the Caulside o' Dunacore, if we thrapple the gudeman o' the flock." Blackw. Mag., May 1620, p. 159.

To THRAPPLE up, v. a. To devour in eating, . to gobble up, Ang.

2. To entangle with cords, Berwicks.

Perhaps it has been originally applied to an animal captured by throwing ropes about its neck or throat. V. the v. THRAPPLE.

THRASH, s. A rush, Loth., Ayrs.

Whiles, whan I gade owre the burn,
'Yont the green, an' thro' the thrashes,
I hae lain an' heard her sing,
An' to hear how glib she gashes.
Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 155.

V. THRUSH.

To THRATCH, v. n. To gasp convulsively, as one does in the agonies of death, S. B.; to draucht, synon.

Graen in mortal agony,
Their steels were thratchin near.
Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 245.

If I but grip you by the collar,
I'll gar you gape, and glour, and gollar,
An' thratch an' thraw for want o' breath—
Ae squeeze o' that wad be your death.
Beattie's John o' Arnha', p. 28.

Isl. thryte, certo, fatigo, laboro; thraute, labor; Su.-G. trot, fatigatus, troti-a, fatigare.

Isl. thriotska, defectus, Verel.; thruska, mulier laboriosa, apparently, a woman in labour, from thrusk-a, strepere, thrusk, strepitus. Or Thratch may have originated by means of a slight transposition from A.-S. thraest-an, torquere; which is perhaps a frequentative from threag-en, thre-an, or thraic-an, also signifying torquere. From thraest-an is formed thraest-nesse, tormentum.

THRATCH, s. The oppressed and violent respiration of one in the last agonies, S. B.

Dead-trach occurs in this sense, evidently an errat. for dead-thratch.

"That same deceitfull illusion—having, by slow degrees, mounted to so monstrous an height, is now, agayne, near the dead-trach, to the Devil's great displeasure." Forbes's Eubulus, p. 107.

THRAVE, s. Twenty-four sheaves. V. THRAIF.

[To THRAVE, THRAVER. V. under THRAIF.]

To THRAW, v. a. To cast, to throw.

—With how grete thud in the melle,
Ane lance towartis his aduersaris thrawis he.
Doug. Virgil, 371, 38.

A.-S. thraw-an, jacere.

THRAW, s. [A throw; i.e.,] a short space of time, a little while, a trice.

Throw help thareof he chasis the wyndis awa,
And trubly cloudis diuidis in ane thraw.
Doug. Virgil, 108, 21.

O.E. throw, Rom. Cueur de Lyon. By throwes, by turns.

By throwes eche of them it hadda.
Gower's Conf. Am. Fol. 10.

"Throwe or lytyll whyle. Momentum. Morula." Prompt. Parv.

A.-S. thrah, Isl. thrange, cursum, decursus temporis, tempus continuum; from Moes.-G. thray-jan, currere. The A.-S. term is used indefinitely. Summe thraye, in quoddam tempus; lange thraye, in longum tempus. It seems to have been originally used by our writers, in a similar manner; the duration being determined by the epithet.

—For it is best
Thy wery ene thou priuely withdrew
From langsum labour, and slepe ane lille thraw.
Doug. Virgil, 156, 44.

[THRAWING, s. Throwing, Barbour, xiii. 156, Camb. MS.]

To THRAW, v. a. and n. 1. To wreath, to twist, S.

"Thraw the wand, while it's green;" Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 30.

Thraw is used in the same sense. V. TITUPP.

2. To wrench, to sprain, S. V. Gl. Shirr. I've thrawn my kute, I've sprained my ankle.

3. To distort, to wrest.

"Sum factius, and curious men techeis the scripture to be iuge, quha vnder the pretence of the auancement and libertie of the Euangell, hea euir socht the libertie of thare flesche, furthsetting of thare erroris, auancement of thare awin gloire, curiosite and opinioun, wrest-and and thrawing the scripture, contrare the godlie menyng of the samyn, to be the scheild and buklare to thair lustes, and heresiis." Kennedy, Commendatar of Croisraguel, p. 6.

4. To twist from agony, Ang.

—I'll gar you gape, and glour, and gollar,
An' thratch an' thraw for want o' breath, &c.
John o' Arnha', p. 28.

V. THRATCH, v.

5. To cast, to warp, S.

6. To oppose, to resist. V. THRAWIN. To carry any measure by a strong hand, S.

"The Lordis perceaving that, come vnto hir with dissimulatcountenance, with reuerentand fairespeeches, and said, that thair intentionns were nawayes to thraw hir; and thairfoir immediatlye wald repone hir with freedome to hir awin palace of Halyrudhous, to doe as shoe list." Historie James Sext, p. 21.

7. To thraw the mou', literally, to distort the face; metaph. to express dissatisfaction, Roxb.

"Ye shouldna repine, goodman, Ye're something ill for thrawing your mon' at Providence now and then." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 312.

8. To thraw out, to extort, to obtain by violence.

"When hee hath thrawne all these good turnes out of them, whereof they haue noc wite, because they doe it for ane vther end, hee maketh ilkane of them to be hangmen to vther." Bruce's Eleven Serm., R. 1. b.

A.-S. thraw-ian, torquere; threag-an, thre-an, torquere, vexare.

9. To thraw with, to contend, to be in bad humour with.

"He caused the duke to thraw with him, till he gawe over certain benefices to give unto his friends." Pitscottie, p. 194, Ed. 1768.

THRAW, s. [1. A twist, wrench, sprain; also, the act of twisting, S.]

2. A pang, an agony. The dede thrawis, the agonies of death, S.

Down duschit the beist dede on the land can ly,
Spreuland and flychterand in the dede thrawis.
Doug. Virgil, 143, 51.

Isl. thra, aegritudo; Su.-G. trange, dolor, moestitia;
A.-S. threa, poena, inflictio; threow-an, agonizare.

3. Anger, ill humour, S.

Lasses were kiss'd frae lug to lug,
Nor seem'd to tak it ill,

Wi' thraw that day.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 93.

This is evidently the same with THRA, s. q. v.

When ankl Lucky Nature dividit her gear,
She gied to her bairns braw lairships to rear;
But unto Miss Scotia, just out of a thraw,
She gave a bleak wilderness, barren and raw.

Train's Mountain Muse, p. 113.

4. One turn of the hand in twisting any thing, S.

—"Thretty thraes and threes" are, in a traditionary rhythm, represented as necessary for making a straw-rope. V. THOM-RAPE.

THRAW in the belly. Belly-ache, gripes.

"Tormen alvi, a thraw in the bellie." Wedder. Vocab., p. 19.

THRAWART, THRAWARD, adj. 1. Froward, perverse.

This Eneas, wyth hydduous barganyng,
In Itale thrawart pepill sall down thing.
Doug. Virgil, 21, 10.

Syne said he, Son, thou irkit ar all gatis
By the contrarius thrawart Troiane fatis.
Ibid. 73, 33.

"Be not outrageous, nor thraward vpon the woman, but teach her with meekenes." H. Balnaeus's Conf. Faith, p. 230.

2. Backward, reluctant, S.

"The owners and workmen were very thrawart to do any service either for themselves or us." Baillie's Lett., i. 209.

THRAWART, prep. Athwart, across.

The schippis steuyn thrawart hir went can wryth,
And turnit hir braid syde to the wallis swyth.
Doug. Virgil, 16, 23.

V. preceding word.

THRAWART-LIKE, adj. Having the appearance of crossness; or of great reluctance, S.

But ugly as she was there was no cure,
But I maun kiss her, cause I was the wooer.
—But I assure you I look'd wondrous blate;
And very thrawart-like I yeed in by.

Ross's Helenore, p. 36.

THRAWARTNES, THRAWARDNESSE, s. Perverseness, S.

"Bot insted of thankfull hartis and gude obedience, hir Hienes clemency is comounly abusit and recompansit with thrawartnes and ingratitude." Procl. Q. Mary, 1567, Keith's Hist. p. 397.

Remoue from mee thrawartnesse,
Als well in mynde, as into deid.

Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. 70.

THRAW-CRUK, s. An instrument for twisting ropes of straw, hair, &c., S.

—Ane thraw-cruk to twyne ane tether.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 160, st. 2.

Named from its hooked form. Su.-G. krook, quicquid aduncum vel incurvum est; Belg. krook, Fr. croc, E. crook, C.B. crueca, curvus. Thraw, to twist. V. the v.

THRAWEN-DAYS, s. A "name for a petted child; sometimes auld thrawen-daves," Gall. Enc.; transferred perhaps to the child itself from the circumstance of his being occasionally actuated by a perverse humour for a whole day, whence it might be said; "This is ane o' his thrawn days."

THRAWIN, THRAWN, part. adj. Distorted, having the appearance of ill-humour; applied to the countenance, S. thrawin.

Alecto hir thrawin vissage did away,
All furious membris laid apart and array.

Doug. Virgil, 221, 32.

2. Cross-grained, of a perverse temper, S. V. THRAW, v.

"I'll be as thrawn's you, though you were as thrawn's the woody." Donald and Flora, p. 13. This is a proverbial phrase, S.

"In his ear rung the merry notes which she sang, as he strode away in offended dignity, and half thought that the thrawn lassie wished to wyle him back again." Tournay, p. 278.

3. Expressive of anger or ill-humour, S.

"A thrawin question should have a thrawart answer;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 16.

Isl. thra, Su.-G. traegen, perversus, obstinatus.

THRAWIN - MOWIT, THRAWN - MOU'T, adj. Twisted in the mouth.

"Ane moyane of fonte thrawin mowit, without armes, maid be Hanis Cochrane," &c. Inventories, A. 1578, p. 249.

THRAWINNESS, s. Perverseness, obstinacy, S. [THRAWN, adj. Same with Thrawin, q. v.]

THRAWN-GABBIT, adj. Peevish, ill-tempered, Roxb.; from the addition of Gab to Thrawn, q. expressing ill humour by the distortion of the mouth.

THRAWN-MUGGENT, adj. Having a perverse disposition, Ang. V. ILL-MUGGENT.

THRAWYNLYE, adv. In a manner expressive of ill-humour.

With bludy ene rolling ful thrawynlye,
Of and rycht schrewittly wald she clepe and cryve.
Doug. Virgil, 220, 49.

THRAW, s. Prob., favour, good graces.

The Kyng hym self Latinus, the great here,
Quhisperis and musis, and is in manere fere,
Quham he sal cheis, or call vnto hys thraw
To be his doachteris spous, and son in law.

Doug. Virgil, 435, 10.

Probably favour, good graces, Su.-G. traa, anc. thra, desiderium. Jutta hon fck swa myekin thraa; Jutta tanto desiderio (sororem videndi) tenebatur. Chron. Rhyth. p. 36 ap. Ibre. Su.-G. Isl. tra, desiderare.

THRAW, adv. Eagerly; or adj., eager. V. THRA, adv.

To THRAW up, v. n. To grow up hastily, to make rapid increase in stature; especially applied to young people, Loth.

This must have been originally the same with Isl. thro-a, crescere facio, augeo, and thro-ast, incrementum sumo; whence throun and throtte, incrementum ac vires viriles. G. Andr., p. 268. Thrang-a, diu vigeo; ibid., p. 267. Su.-G. trifia-as, and E. thrive, certainly belong to the same family.

THRAWIN, THRAWYNLYE. V. under THRAW.

THRAW-MOUSE, s. The shrew-mouse, Sorex araneus, Linn., Mearns.

It is thus denominated q. "distorting mouse," from the belief of its having the power to thraw or distort animals by running over them. "Hence," says an intelligent correspondent, "the English have called it shrewmouse, and the Danes skoumuzz, from the same belief."

Skinner deduces the name from Tent. be.schrey-en, fascinare, "because those who are bitten by this little animal, are affected with such violent symptoms as would indicate the influence of witchcraft." Phillips, or Kersey, carries the matter still farther, observing that the shrewmouse is "very mischievous to cattel;" for "going over a beast's back" it "will make it lame in the chine." These three writers, as well as Junius and Lye, agree in tracing the E. designation for a vixen to this venomous animal.

THRAWS-SPANG, s. A rod of iron attached by the one end to the beam of the plough, immediately before the insertion of the handle, and having the other end fastened to that part of the plough which descends perpendicularly downwards to the merkie-pin, Orkn. The use of the thraws-spang is to prevent the plough from being straightened by the draught.

THREAD O' BLUE, A phrase applied to any thing in writing or conversation that is smutty, Gall. Enc.; q. a thread not corresponding in colour with the rest of the web. [In some districts blue thread is a cant name for whisky.]

THREAVING, and THREAYER. V. under THRAIF, s.

THREEFAULD, adj. Threefold, S.

THICK and THREEFAULD. A phrase applied when a number of objects follow each other in close succession; as, "Ills come thick and three-fauld on him," misfortunes befall him in close succession, S.

"Saints, after long sparing, may expect their trials will come thick and threefold upon them, and that their being laid under one trial will not be a shelter to hide them from another." Hutcheson on John, 16. 4.

THREE-GIRR'D, adj. Surrounded with three hoops, S.

I wadna gie my three-girr'd cap
For e'er a queene on Bogie.

Burns, Cromek's Reliques, p. 247.

V. GIRR.

THREE-NEUKIT, adj. Triangular, as Four-neukit signifies square, S.

THREESUM, THRESUM, adj. Three together, three in conjunction, S. threesum. V. SUM, term.

THREE-TAED, adj. "Having three prongs," S., Gl. Burns. V. TAE.

THREEP, s. and v. V. THREPE.

THREEPLE, adj. Triple, Aberd. This must be a corr. either of the E. word, or of A.-S. thriefeald, triplex.

THREPTREE, s. The large beam which is immediately connected with the plough, Clydes.

Isl. threp, abacus, absessus; threif-a, contractare, tangere.

THREFT, adj. Reluctant; perverse, Loth.

From A.-S. thraf-ian, increpare, to chide, to reprove. V. THRAFTLY.

This is probably the same with A.-Bor. tharf. "Tharfand Threa, unwilling," Grose. Threa must be viewed as merely a variety of our Thra, sense 3, obstinate.

THREISHIN, s. Expl. "courting," S.B.

But this must be the same with TREESHIN, q. v.

THIRELL MULTURE. Multure due at a miln by thirlage. V. THRILL, adj.

THIRENE, s. A traditionary and vulgar adage or assertion, often implying the idea of superstition, Perth.; synon. with Rane, Tronie, and nearly so with Freit.

Isl. druu-r signifies rumor, fama. Prob., Threne is a proverbial corruption of Rane, if not of Tronie, q. v.

To THREPE, THREIP, v. n. 1. To aver with pertinacity. It properly denotes continued assertion, in reply to denial, S. A. Bor. threap.

—Sum wald swear, that I the text haue waryit,
Or that I haue this volume quite myscaurit,
Or threpe planellie, I come neere hand it.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 12. 2

It is also used actively, S.

—Wald God I had thare eris to pull,
Misknawis the crede, and threpis vthir forways.
Ibid. Prol. 66, 25.

A.-S. threap-ian, redarguere.

"I threpe a mater vpon onc, I beare one in hande that he hath doone or said a thing a mysse.—This terme is—farre northern. He wold threpe vpon me that I haue his penne." Palagr. B. iii. F. 389, a. Dr. Johns. mentions Threap as "a country word."

2. To contend, to quarrel.

Na thank me not our airle for dreid that we threip.
Rauf Coilyear, A. ij. a.

3. To urge with pertinacity, South of S.

"But the poor simple bairn himsel, that had nae mair knowledge of the wickedness of human nature than a calf has of a flesher's gully, he threapit to see the auld hardenod blood-shedder, and trysted wi' him to meet wi' some of the gang—the noist day," &c. St. Ronan, ii. 20.

THREPE, THREAP, s. A vehement or pertinacious affirmation, S.

Say thai nocht, I haue myne honeste degraid,
And at my self to schut ane but has maid?
Nane vthir thing in threpe here wrocht haue I,
Bot feneyete fablis of ydolatri,
With sic myscheif as aucht necht named be.
Doug. Virgil, 481, 33.

'Bout onie threap when he and I fell out,
That was the road that he was for, no doubt.
Ross's Helenore, p. 34.

To KEEP one's THREEP, to continue pertinaciously in any assertion or course, S.

"I would hardly," said the Marquis, "consent to your throwing away your birthright in this manner, were I not perfectly confident, that Lady Ashton—will, as Scotchmen say, keep her threep; and that her husband dares not contradict her." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 323.

2. Expl. "contest."

"Between thirteen and thrice three the threep shall be ended."

"Before 1322, when the infant king shall have completed his 10th year, the victorious regent shall subdue the English [Saxons], and then the contest [threep] between the two nations shall cease." Lord Hailes' Remarks on the Hist. of Scot., p. 104.

3. Applied to traditional superstition, Roxb., Dumfr.

"But they stick to it, that they'll be streekit, and hae an auld wife when they're dying to rhyme ower prayers, and ballants, and charms, as they ca' them, rather than they'll hae a minister to come and pray wi' them—that's an auld threep o' theirs." Guy Mannerling, iii. 110.

"An auld threep, a superstition obstinately persisted in of old;" Gl. Antiq.

[THRESUM, adj. V. THRESUM.]

THRESHWALD, s. Threshold.

Tho to the dar threshwald cummin ar thay.
Doug. Virgil, 164, 7.

THRESHWART, THRESHWORT, s. The name given to the threshold, Fife.

The threshwart is distinguished from the dore-stane, the former denoting the sill or piece of wood, above the dore-stane, in old houses, on which the door shut, as it was also meant for throwing off the rain.

A.-S. threscwald, threscwald; from thresc-an, ferio, and wald, lignum, i.e., the wood which one strikes with one's feet at entering or going out of a house. Su.-G. trooskel, Dan. taerskel, Isl. throskullur, id.

Thre derives the term, in the various forms which it has assumed, from Su.-G. trod-a, to tread, and syll, the timber or stone at the foot of the door, E. sill.

THRETE, s. 1. A throng, a crowd.

Thus said sche, and with sic sembland as might be,
Him towart hir has brocht but ony threle,
And set the auld down in the haly sette.
Doug. Virgil, 56, 37.

2. In thretis, in pairs, in couples.

—Enee,
King Murranus, of ancestry mayst lie, —
Furth of his carte has smittin qwyte away,
And bet him down vnto the end wyndflaucht,
Wyth ane gret rouk and quhirland stane ouer raucht;
That this Murranus, the renis and the thetis,
Quharewith his stedlis yokkit war in thretis,
Vnder the quhelis has do weltit down.

Doug. Virgil, 429, 35.

"Rather perhaps the same with thetes, traces;" Sibb. But there is no good reason for this conjecture.

3. In threte, in haste, eagerly.

Sum vthir perordour caldronis gan vpset,
And skatterit endlangis the grene the colis bet,
Vnder the spetis swakkis the roste in threte.
Doug. Virgil, 130, 46.

The rynnnyng hound dois hym assale in threte,
Baith with swift rais, and with his questis grete.
Ibid. 439, 24.

A.-S. threat, caterva, coctus, chorus; on threate, in choro; threatmnelum, catervatim. In sense 3, however, as signifying eagerly, it may be allied to Isl. thraeta, threyte, contendo, certo, laboro; or thraa, thraat, assiduus, pervicax.

To THRETE, v. n. To crowd, to press.

So thoctis thretis in thra our breistis ouerthort,
Baleful besynes bayth blis and blythnes gan hoist.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, a. 23.

A.-S. threat-an, urgere, angariare. This is the primary sense of the v. from which E. threaten is derived.

THRETTENE, adj. Thirteen, Wyntown, S. thretteen.

"Twopence halfpenny British," N.

THREW, pret. v. Struck.

That staff he had, hewy and forgyt new,
With it Wallace wpon the bede him threw.
Wallace, iv. 252, MS.

The nearest affinity I have observed is in Su.-G. torfo-a, to strike (icere, verberare; Ibra.) The term is changed to dreu, Edit. 1648.

THRID, adj. Third, S.

Off thar cowyne the thrid had thai. —
The thrid with full gret hy with this
Rycht till the bra syd he yeid,
And stert be hynd hym on hys sted.

Barbour, iii. 102, 126, MS.

A.-S. thridla, Isl. thridic, id. Hence, in the Elda, Odin is called Thridi, as being third in rank among the deities of the ancient Goths. V. G. Andr.

THRID, s. The third part, S.

"The said Vmfra has rezone to the thrid, ordanis that the schiref—deliuer the said Vmfra & his tenandis ane evinly thrid, tharof." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1478, p. 32.

"The King may set in tak to quhome he pleisis, the teindis, landis, mailis, fermis, and dewteis of landis assumit in the thriddis of benefices, swa lang as the samin remains with his Hienes be ressoun of assumption." Balfour's Pract., p. 143.

THRID AND TEIN. "A method of letting arable ground for the third and tenth, or two-fifths of the produce;" Roxb. Gl. Sibb.

Tein is a corr. of Teind, a tithe.

To THRID, v. a. To divide into three parts.

"And quhen the wardane rydis, or ony vther chiftane, and with him greit fellowship or small, that nane gang away with na manner of gude quhill it be thriddit, and partit befor the chiftane, as vse and custume is of the Merchis vnder the pane of tresoun, and to be hangit and drawin, and his gudis escheit." Acta James II. 1445, c. 57, Edit. 1566, c. 52, Murray.

THRIEST, s. Constraint.

"He will not give an inch of his Will, for a span of his Thriest;" S. Prov.; "spoken of wilful and obstinate people, who will not comply with your most advantageous proposals, if contrary to their perverse humours." Kelly, p. 150, 151.

It properly signifies that a little that goes with one's own inclination, seems preferable to a great deal, or what is in itself far better, if forced on one. It is undoubtedly the same with Thrid, q.v.

THRIEVE, s. Twenty-four sheaves of corn. V. THRAIF.

THRIFE, s. Prosperity; like E. Thrift.

"It hes pleisit his maist excellent Maiestie, acknowledgeing the vnspeikable favour,—bot hardlie expected coniunctioun of twa sa ancient and lang discordent kingdomes, maist earnestlie to desyre ane establishit continuance of the samyn, that, they may be sa inseparable conjoint, as all eftir cumming ages sould find the sweitnes of the thrift, peace, wealth, and felicitie, quhill by the perfyte accomplisment thairof, may continew to the worldis end." THRILWALL, s. The name by which the wall, between Scotland and England, erected by Severus, was called in the time of Wyntown.

A wall thare-eftry ordanyt thai
For to be made betwene Scotland
And thame, swa that it mycht wythstand
Thare says, that thame swa skaythit had;
And of comon cost thai maid;
And ybit men callys it Thrilwall.

Wyntown, v. 10. 579.

Fordun gives it the same name. Scotch. Lib. ii. c. 7. He elsewhere calls it Thirlitwall, observing that it was thus denominated on account of the gaps made in it, here and there, by the Scots and Picts, that they might have free issue and entry. Latine Murus perforatus, Ibid. Lib. iii. c. 10.

To THRIMLE, THIRMBLE, THURMBLE, v. a.

1. To press, to squeeze.

I saw my selfe, quhem grufelings amid his case
Twa bodies of our sort he tuke and raife,
And intil his hiddous hand thame thrimblit and wrang,
And on the stanis out thar harnis dang.

Doug. Virgil, 89, 28.

V. r. n.

2. To handle, Galloway, Dumfr., Ettr. For.

An' taylors, fain the gear to thrimble
Of coward coofs,
Made powder measures of their thimbles
To sca'd their loofs.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 36.

To THRIMLE, THIRMMEL, THURMBLE, v. n.

1. To press into, or through, with difficulty and eagerness, S., applied both to a crowd collectively, and to an individual pressing into a crowd, S. B.

Y 3

For quhen the feirs Achil persawit sare,
Chasand affrayit Troianis here and thare,
The grette routis to the wallis thrimland,
To fore his face half dede for fore trimland.—

Doug. Virgil, 155, 12.

Peter, who was ever maist sudden, sayis: "Thou art thrimbled and thrust be the multitude, and yet thou speiris quha hes twichted thee." Bruce's Serm. Sacr. J., 5. a.

2. To wrestle, to fumble, S. B. Gl. Shirr.

This seems the meaning of thrimble as used by Adamson.

Then on the plain we caprel'd wonder fast:—
With kind embracements did we thurst and thrimble,
(For in these days I was exceeding nimble.)

Mus's Threnodie, p. 23.

Isl. eg thrum, certo, pugno; G. Andr.

A. Box. "thrimple, to fumble;" Grose.

To THRIMP, v. a. To press. V. THRUMP.

To THRING, v. a. To press, to thrust;
Chaucer, thringe, part. pa. thrung.

The rumour is, doun thrung vnder this mont
Encladus body with thunder lya half bront.

Doug. Virgil, 87, 52.

V. DOUNTHRING.

I sawe also, that quhere sum were slangin,
Be quhiryng of the quhele, vnto the ground,
Full sudaynly scho hath vp ythrungin,
And set theme on agane full sauf and sound.

King's Quair, v. 14.

"Thrown up;" N. Tytler. But it strictly signifies, thrust up.

"So it was in the beginning heere among vs after the reformation, when papistrie was put away; it was a wonder to see how men and women did thring in, and were glad to indure great labour, and suffer afflictions for the Religion." Rollock on 1 Theas., p. 30.

A.-S. thring-an, urgere, premere, Isl. thringia, Su.-G. traeng-a, Belg. dring-en, id. from Su.-G. traeng, strait, narrow. Thre views Moes.-G. thraik-an, arcuare, premere, as proclaiming the antiquity of the word. Hence thraik-ande vige, narrow way, Matt., vii. 14. The v. Dring, q. v. is evidently from the same fountain.

To THRING, v. n. To press on, or forward;
pret. thrang,

Thal—war thringand, in gret foyssoun,
Rycht to the yat a fyr to ma.

Barbour, xvii. 758, MS.

All folkis enouroun did to the colstis thring.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 2.

The berne bounit to the burgh, with ane blith cheir,
Fand the yettis uncloist, and thrang in fell thra.

Gawan and Ool, i. 5.

THRINTER, s. A sheep of three years old,
Lanarks.; q. three winters. V. THRUNTER.

THRISSEL-COCK, s. The Missel-thrush or Shrike, Turdus viscivorus, Gesner; the Throstle-cock of the North of England.

"Serinus Gesneri. An qui nostratibus Thrissele-cock dicitur?" Sibb. Prodr. P. II. Lib. 3, p. 18.

This is the largest species of thrush; and the one whose song is first heard, generally in the beginning of February.

THRISSELL, THRISLE, s. The thistle, an herb, S.

Cursit and barren the eirth salbe
Quhair euir thow gois, till that thow die:
But laubour it sall beir na corne,
Bot thriassil, nettill, breir, and thorne.

Lindsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 30.

Thocht thou hes slane the heuenlie flour of France,
Quhilk impit was into the Thriassil kene,
Quhairin all Scotland saw their hail plesance;—
Thocht rute be pullit from the leuis grene,
The smell of it sall in despite of thé,
Keip ay twa realmis in peice and amitie.

Ibid., p. 296.

"May yee gather grapes of thornes, or figges of thriassil? no, no, it is contrary thare nature." H. Balnanes's Conf. Faith, p. 132.

This is the national Badge in the arms of S.

Then callit scho all floyris that grew on feild,
Discryving all their fassious and effeirs;
Upon the awful thriassil scho beheld,
And saw him keipit with a busche of speiris:
Considering him so able for the weiris,
A radins crown of rubies scho him gaif,
And said, In feild go furth, and fend the laif.

Dunbar's Thistle and Rose, Bannatyne Poems, p. 5.

It is not easy to determine the particular species of thistle which should be viewed as the Scottish emblem. Most probably it is the Spear thistle, carduus lanceolatus Linn., which is a wide-spreading elegant plant, very common in Scotland, and which accords well with Buchanan's celebrated inscription, Nemo me impune lacesset.—The Milk thistle, or Our Lady's thistle, Cardus Marianna, has been preferred by some. It grows on the banks of Stirling Castle, and about Fort William; but Lightfoot, in his Flora, denies that it is indigenous to Scotland, never being found but in the neighbourhood of cultivation. Besides, the finely variegated leaves of the Milk thistle would not probably have escaped the praises of Dunbar and others.

This seems to be the Scots thistle referred to by Dr. Garnet who, when describing the castle of Dumbarton says—"The true Scotch thistle, a rare plant, having its light green leaves variegated with white, grows in considerable quantity about the bottom of the rock, and sparingly even on the very top." Tour through the Highlands, &c., vol. i., p. 14. Others give the preference to the lofty Cotton thistle, Onopordon Acanthium, which grows on calcareous soils, by our sea-shores, to the height of 10 or 12 feet. But it is destitute of the formidable spines of the two former.

This name, with the r, does not seem to occur in any other dialect. It may, however, be supposed that this was its ancient form among the Goths, as the linnet, which Lat. is called carduelis from carduus, because it feeds among thistles, is in Isl. denominated thostr. V. G. Andr.

THRISSLY, adj. Testy, crabbed, S. B.; or
Isl. treisk-v, difficilis, obstinatus, treysleyke, pertinacia.

This at first view might seem a metaph. term formed from thriassil, a thistle, to which our national motto, referred to above, is certainly applicable. But perhaps it is rather allied to Germ. vertriebslich, fretful, uncivil, rude, &c., or A.-S. thriellece, bold, daring.

THRIST, s. Thirst. To THRIST, v. n. To thirst, S.

"Lang process of time vincussis thame be hungir and thrist." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 431.

Hunger and thrist in steed of meit and drink.—

Lindsay's Dreame.

V. TAID, s.

Chaucer uses thrust in the same sense.

"Who shall then yeve me a contrarious drinke to staunch the thrust of my blissfull bitterness?" Test. of Love, p. 483, Urry.

THRISTER, s. One who thirsts for.

"The earle Douglas wold not obey command,—be reasonn the king was but—an bloody murtherar of his awin blood,—ane fals yngodlie thrister of innocent blood," &c. Pitscottie's Cron., p. 109.

THRISTINESS, s. Thirst, S.

THRISTY, adj. Thirsty, S.

Too oft my thirsty throat to cool,
I went to visit the punch bowl,
Which makes me now wear reddish wool
Instead of black.

Dominie Depos'd, p. 46.

"A. Bor. thrusty, thirsty, a word used by Chaucer;" Gl. Brockett.

It occurs in the following passage:—

My soul for anguis is now ful thrusty,
I faint, I faint right sore, for hevines.
Lament. M. Magdaleine, v. 708.

To THRIST, v. a. 1. To thrust.

Thare havis al war towkit vp on thare croun,
That bayth with how and helme was thristit down.
Doug. Virgil, 146, 18.

2. To oppress, to vex.

Bot I sall schaw thé, sen sic thocthis the thristis,
And here declare of destanyis the secreta.
Doug. Virgil, 21, 6.

It was also used in E.

Thei schoued, thei thrist, thei stode o strut.
R. Brunne, App. to Pref. exciv.
Isl. thrist-a, thrist-a, trudere, premere.

THRIST, s. 1. Difficulty, pressure.

Withdrowe the from na perrellis, nor hard thrist,
Bot euir enforce mare stranglie to resist
Agane dangeris, than fortoun sufferis thé.
Doug. Virgil, 166, 8.

2. A push, Roxb.

3. The action of the jaws in squeezing the juice from a quid of tobacco, ibid.

—What pleasure's found,
Whiles as thou dries the tither thrist,
And wamble round.

Addr. to Tobacco, A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 101.

[THRISTING, s. Thrusting, Barbour, xiii. 156, Camb. MS.]

To THRIST, v. u. To spin; often, to thrist a thread, S. B.

A.-S. throest-an, to wreath, to twist.

To THRIST, v. a. To trust, to give on credit.

"Browaters, Fleshers, and Baikers, sall lenne (and thrist) to their neighbours aill, flesh, and bread, as lang as they buy fra them. And gif they pay not, they are not halden to lenne (or thrist) any mair."
Burrow Lawes, c. 130.

From the same origin with E. trust. Su.-G. tro, id.

[THRISTILL, s. A throstle. V. THRISSELCOCK.]

[THRISYLL, s. A thistle. V. THRISILL.]

[THRIVVER, s. One who cuts grain with a sickle, Banffs.]

THRO, adj. Eager, &c. V. THRA.

THROCH, THROUCHE, THRUCH, (gutt.) s.

1. A sheet of paper.

"At this time David Beaton Cardinal of Scotland, standing in presence of the King, seeing him begin to fail of his strength and natural speech, held a throck of paper to his Grace, and caused him to subscribe the same; wherein the said Cardinal wrote what pleased him for his own particular well, thinking to have authority and preheminance in the government of the country." Pitscottie, p. 177.

"We command you to mak an act,—that all letteris [issued from the Signet] that containis mair nor ane throuche of paper, that everie battering, and end of the throuche, sall subscrit be him;" i.e., by the keeper of the Signet. Act Sederunt, 21st December, 1590.

Either from A.-S. throc, a table, because of its flat form; or Dan. trykk-er, to print, whence tryk-papier, printing paper. A throuche might originally signify as much paper as was laid in the press at once, to receive the impression; Belg. drucke, impressio, character.

2. Used metaph. for a small literary work; as we now say, a sheet.

To quhome suld I my rurall veir direct,
Bot unto him that can thame weill correct,
Befoir quhome suld this matter ga to licht,
Bot to ane faithfull godly christin Knicht,
To quhome can I this lytill throuch propyne,
But unto ane of excellent ingyne!

Lament, Lady Scotland, Dedic.

THROCH-AND-THROUGH, adv. Completely through, Aberd. This is the pron. of the phrase as still retained, S. B. V. THROUGH, prep.

To THROCK, v. a. To throng, Tweedd.

THROCK, s. A crowd, a throng, ibid.

Isl. throk-a, urgere; throk, urisio, G. Andr. It also appears in the form of thryck-ia, (premere), Dan. trykk-e, id.

THROLL, s. A hole, a gap. O. E. thurl.

And eik forgane the broken brow of the mont
Ane horribill caue with brade and large front,
Thare may be sene ane throll, or aynding stede,
Of terribill Pluto fauler of hel and dede,
Ane rift or swelth so grislie for to se;
To Acheron ruin down.

Doug. Virgil, 227, 41.

"Properly, a hole made by drilling or boring;" Gl. Sibb. A.-S. thyrel, foramen.

THROPILL, s. 1. The windpipe, the throttle, S. thrapple, q. v.

—And hyt the formast in the hals,
Till thropill and wesand yeid in il
And he down till the enl gan ga.

Barbour, vii. 584, MS.

2. Used improperly for the throat, S. V. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 129.

A.-S. throt-boll, id. from throt, the throat, and bolla, a bowl or vessel, q. the throat-bowl.

Johns. mentions thrapple in his Dictionary; but he gives it as a S. word. Both it and E. throttle are from the same origin. While the E. lay the emphasis on the t in throt, we convert the t and b into pp. Thropple is used Yorks. in the same sense; Ray.

THROOK, s. An instrument for twining ropes; synon. with Thraw-cruk and Wyle, Gall.

"Throok, the wyle, the thraw-crook, the twister;" Gall. Enc., p. 446.

From A.-S. threagan, torquere; or Isl. throk-a, thrag-a, premere, urgere, throk, thrugan, vis, coactio.

THROOSH, pret. of the v. to Thresh, Ettr. For.; pron. q. thruish, (Gr. v.)

To THROSTLE, v. n. Prob., to warble, pipe.

Thou hot-fac'd sun! who cheers the drooping world,
And gars the buntlins throstle, by the pow'r,
Look laughing frae thy sky—and with thy heat
Temper the scatter'd clouds, and soulder all
Into the perfect year.—

Davidson's Seasons, p. 8.

Meaning doubtful. If it signify to warble, it may be from Isl. thrust-a, strepere; C. B. trust, noise, trustyll, what makes a din or murmur; if to thrive, we might trace it to Isl. throstk-az, maturescere.

THROUGH, s. [Errat. for Throuth, as in MS.; evidently for Trouth, truth.]

—Men said he chesyt had
A spyryt, that him ansuer made,
Off things that he wald inquer.
Bot he fulyt, for owtyne wer,
That gaiff through till that creatur.
For feyndys ar off sic natur,
That thai to mankiud has inwy.

Barbour, iv. 223, MS.

In Edit. 1620, the word traist is used.

[This is a mis-reading of the Edin. MS., which has throuth,—a mistake, or a corr. of the scribe for trouth. The Camb. MS. has treuth.]

THROUGH, THROCH, (gutt.), prep. and adv.
Through, S. Through and through, S. thoroughly, fully.

—How grislie and how grete I you sane,
Lurkis Polyphemus yymmand his beistis rouch,
And all thare pappis melkis through and through.
Doug. Virgil, 90, 4.

THROUCH, THRUCH, adj. Active, expeditious; as, a through wife, an active woman, S. B. from the prep.

To THROUCH, THROUGH, (gutt.), v. a. 1. To carry through.

"In our Assembly, thanks to God, we have throughed not only our presbyteries, but also our synods provincial and national." Baillie's Lett., ii. 63. Throughing, i. 53.

2. To pierce through, to penetrate.

"Declares, that both cats were dead in my apprehension, and was throught with my durk, yet not one drop of blood came from them." Law's Mem. Pref. cii.

To THROUCH, THROUGH, v. n. To go on, literally; To mak to through, to make good, S.

Now haud ye there, for ye have said enough,
And muckle mair than ye can mak to through.
Burns, iii. 58.

Through is sometimes used as an adj.

"They were through and satisfied in their own judgments for the truth,—and rather confirmed farther therinto, nor any wayes moved to the contrary, for ought that had been spoken." Mr. James Melville's MS. Mem., p. 334, q. thoroughly satisfied.

THROUGH-ART, THROUGH-ART, s. Used perhaps as equivalent to Boal, a small aperture.

"We'll strike through a through-art, an it were but to see a seek [sick] beast." H. Blyd's Contract. V. SHRIQ.

It may perhaps have originally signified a loophole; from the v. to Airt, to take aim, q. an aperture or place struck through for airing.

THROUGH-BAN', THROUGH-BAND, THROUGH-BAN', s. A stone which goes the whole breadth of a wall, Galloway.

"It is essential to the durability of a dyke, that each individual stone be laid on a proper bed, that the stones frequently overlap one another, to break, as they term it, but more properly to bind and connect the joints along the two rows forming the double; and likewise, that the two sides will be well bound together by long stones laid across, termed through-bands." Agr. Surv. Galloway, p. 88.

"It is a much better plan, where a considerable proportion of the stones are large, to build snecks of single dyke, at intervals of three yards, or else to increase the number of through-bands in every part of the double dyke." Ibid., p. 85.

"Through-bands, the long stones which bind dykes;" Gall. Enc.

THROUGH-BEARIN', THROUGH-BEARIN', s. 1. A livelihood, the means of sustenance, S.

[2. Means of extricating from a difficulty, or, of doing some difficult work, Banffs.]

[THROUGH-THE-BOWS, s. A strict examination; also, a severe scolding, Banffs.]

THROUCHE-FAIR, adj. Of or belonging to a thoroughfare.

"To mak prisonis, stokkis, and ernes, nocht onlie at the heid burgh, bot also at the principall throuche fair townis and parochie kirkis," &c. Acts Ja. VI. 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 576.

THROUGH-GAAN, THROUGA'IN, THROWGAUN, part. adj. 1. Active, pushing, S.; q. "going through" any business.

"She seems to be a plump and jocose little woman; gleg, blythe, and throwgaun for her years." Blackw. Mag., Dec. 1820, p. 265.

"Betty Lashaw—was an active through-going woman, and wonderfu' usefu' to many of the cotters' wives at their lying-in." Ann. of the Par., p. 30.

A throw-gaun man is one whom slight obstacles will not impede.

"It is said that one who reflects little, but dashes away, is a through-gaun person;" Gall. Enc. But while it denotes promptitude and steadiness, in operation, it does not necessarily imply the idea of precipitation.

2. Prodigal, wasting property, Clydes.

A.-S. thurh-gan, ire per, permeare; used in a metaph. sense.

THROUGH-GAAN, THROUGH-GAUN, s. 1. [A severe examination, Banffs.]

2. A severe philippic, entering into all the minutiae of one's conduct, S.

—"The folk that wore again him, gae him sic an awfu' through-gytn about his rinnin awa, and about a' the ill he had ever dune or said for a' the forepart o' his life, that Patie says, he looked mair like aue dead than living." Rob Roy, ii. 16.

THROUGH-GANG, THROWGANG, s. 1. A thoroughfare, a passage, S.

By the quhilk slop the place within apperis,
The wyde wallis wox patent all in feris
Of Priamus and ancient Kingis of Troy,
Secret throwgangis ar schawin wont to be koy.
Doug. Virgil, 65, 11.

—"Hes wrangously occupyt ane throwgang & entres of ane yett." Abern. Reg., A. 1538, V. 16.

"Ane throwgane of ane gait," i.e., of a road. Ibid., Cent. 16.

It is sometimes used as an adj.

A throwgang close is an open passage, by which one may go from one street to another, as opposed to a blind alley, S.

Belg. doorgang, a passage.

[2. Labour, difficulty; energy, Banffs., Clydes.]

THROUGH-GANGING, part. adj. Active, having a great deal of action; a term used by jockies, S.

"Ye're a gentleman, sir; and should ken a horse's points; ye see that through-ganging thing that Balma-whapple's on; I solded her till him." Waverley, ii. 246.

[THROUGH-IAN', THROUGH-IAN's, adv. Under, consideration, or under examination, Clydes.]

THROUGH-ITHER, THROUGH OTHER, THROW ITH, adv. Confusedly, promiscuously, S. throuther. [Also used as an adj., implying rash, reckless, rattling; as, "She's a wild, throwither lassie," Clydes.]

"The King, being some part dejected in so great a variance, gathered an army of all kind of people through other, without any order, and sent them forth to repress the proudness of the commons." Pitscottie, p. 28.

For Nory's heart began to cool full fast,
Whan she fand things had taken sic a cast,
And sae throw ither warpl'd were, that she Began to dread atweesh them what might be.

Ross's Helenore, p. 86.

[THROUGH-ITHERNESS, s. Want of plan, confusion, Banffs., Clydes.]

THROUCHLIE, adv. Thoroughly.

—"And for sindrie vtheris sene and profitable causis, digestlie considerit, throuclie advysit and concludit be his Maistie,—have thairfoir ratefeit," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1606, Ed. 1814, p. 312.

[THROUGH-OUT, THROU-OUT, prep. and adv. Throughout, Barbour, xi. 392.]

THROUGHPUT, s. Activity, expedition in doing any thing. Throughput of wark, S. B. pron. throupit, from through and put.

[THROUGH-PITTIN', THROW-PITTIN', adj. Energetic, clever, Clydes.]

THROUGH-PITTIN', s. 1. A bare sustenance, S.; as much as puts one through.

2. A rough handling, Upp. Clydes.

THROUGH-STONE, s. 1. A stone which goes through a wall, S. O. Through-band, synon.

"I have built about thirty-rood of stone-dike five feet high, with two rows of through stones, connecting Saunders Mill's garden-wall with the fence about the Fir Belt." Lights and Shadows, p. 215.

[2. A flat tombstone. V. TRUCH-STANE.]

THROU'THER, adj. 1. Confused in regard to mind or manner; as, "He's but a throuther kind o' chiel," S.

2. Used as denoting that confusion which flows from distemper, S.

Weel, tho' he was so saully throu'ther,
Since than he ne'er leuk'd o'er his shoulther."

Picken's Poems, i. 62.

THROUGH THE NEEDLE EE. The name of a game among young people, in which two of them form an arch with both their hands, having the fingers interlaced. The rest, who hold each other by the skirts, following in a line, attempt to pass under the arch. The first, who is called the king, is sometimes laid hold of by those who form the arch, each letting fall one of his arms like a portcullis for inclosing the passenger. But more generally the king is suffered to pass, the attempt being reserved for the last, who, if seized, is called the prisoner. As soon as he is made captive, he takes the place of one of those who formed the arch, and who afterwards stands by his side. The play is continued till they are all taken in succession; South of S.

It is differently played in Mearns, Aberd., and some other counties; according to the account which has been kindly furnished by an intelligent friend.

A number of boys stand with joined hands in a semicircle, and the boy at one end of the link addresses the boy at the other end, calling him by his name in the following rhyme:—

A.—B.—if ye were mine,
I wad feed you wi' claret wine.
Claret wine is gude and fine;
Through the needle-ee, boys.

The boy to whom this is addressed makes room between himself and his next neighbour; as they raise and extend their arms, to allow the opposite boy to run through the opening, followed by all the other boys still linked to each other. If in running through, the link should be broken, the two boys who are the cause, suffer some punishment.

"Often, in the blithe summer nights, when other weans were leaping wi' gladness at Through-the-Needle-ee,—I yearned to steal some holy Abbot's purse, to buy mysel' a wee singing sister or a brother." Spawfife, i. 123.

It seems to have an obvious relation to the consequence of successful warfare, when captives were made to pass under the yoke.

Their bauldest thoughts a hank'ring swither
To stan' or rin,
Till skelp—a shot they're aff, a' throwther,
To save their skin.

Barns, ill. 26.

Colonel Monro gives this phraseology in a kind of English form, putting the second term in the plural. — "The enemy storming the walles, the defenders for want of powder, threw sand in their enemies eyes, knocking them downe with the butts of muskets, having beene divers times pell-mel through others." Monro's Exped., p. 11.

To THROW, v. a. To twist; to wrench, the same with Thrauc, q. v.

THROWE, THROU, prep. 1. By; not merely signifying "by means of," as sometimes in E. but denoting a personal agent, one acting officially.

"That ilk aulderman and bailyeis of burrowys call befor thame the burgessia, and ger cheiss leic and trewe men in maner as is befor saide, takande with thame the curate of the towne chargit be the gret aithe throuce the bischope." Acts Ja. I., A. 1424, Ed. 1814, p. 5.

2. By authority of.

"It is decretyt throu the hail parliament, & for-bodyn be oure souerane lorde the king, that ony legis [leagues] or bandis be maid amangis his liegis in the realme." Parl. Ja. I., 1425, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 7.

THRUCH-STANE, THROUGH-STONE, s. A flat grave-stone, Loth. Ayr.

Throch of ston occurs in the same sense, O.E.

Aylwart hihte thilke abbot;
As me wolde him nymen up,
Ant leggen in a throch of ston,
He founden him both fleys ant bon
Al so hol, ant al so sound,
Ase he was leyd furst in ground.
Chron. Engl. Ritson's E. M. R., ii. 301.

Satchels uses the term.

My guid-sir Satchels, I heard him declare,
There was nine lairds of Buccleugh buried there;
But now with rubbish and earth it's filled up so high,
That no man can the through-stones see;
But nine tomb-stones he saw with both his eyne.

Hist. Name of Scot., p. 41.

"At Edinburgh, the 3rd day of December, 1701; the same day the council being informed, that the through stone of the deceased George Buchanan lyes sunk under the ground of the Grey-friars; therefore, they appoint the chamberlain to raise the same, and clear the inscription thereupon, so as the same may be legible." Chalmers' Life of Ruddiman, p. 349.

A.-S. thruh, thurh, thuruc, sarcophagus, a grave, a coffin. Isl. thro, id. Sidann var hoguin ny stein thro, oc logdr i likami Ynguars; Postea novus locus saxeus factus est, cui inditum est corpus mortui Ynguars; S. "Syne was hewn a new stane-thruich, and Ynguars licame was laid in it." Ynguars Sag., p. 45. Ihre, vo. Trog.

Silfrthro, a silver chest in which the reliques of Martyrs were kept; Verel. In an old Alem. Gloss. quoted by Wachter, a sarcophagus is denominated steininer druho, which approaches nearly to our thruich-stane. Wachter derives it from Germ. trieg-en, to cover for the purpose of preserving. He expl. truhe, receptaculum clausum, sive arca sit, sive locus.

L. B. truc-a, denotes a coffin. Sepulchrum—fabri-cavit;—similiter Trucam etiam, in qua sepeliri debuit, cum vestibus funeralibus ibidem impositis. Eberhard. A. 1296, ap. Du Cange.

It has been supposed, but apparently without sufficient ground, that our term has some affinity with A.-S. thurh, through, and with dure, door. Ihre conjectures, that there has been an ancient Celtic or Scythic word, denoting any thing hollow or perforated; and that not only Su.-G. troy, a trough, but A.-S. thruh, sarcophagus, is allied to it.

The word thruh may have been originally used to signify a grave or coffin promiscuously; especially as in former ages, in this country, a grave was properly composed of four stones set on end. The cover, laid on these, seems to have been called the thruh-stane. Perhaps the form of a grave, or of such a coffin, gave rise to the name; from its resemblance to a trough. The hold of a ship may in like manner have been denominated a thurrock, from its hollow form. This term is used by Chaucer.

Thurrok is rendered by Tyrwhitt, "the hold of a ship." But he seems to have misapprehended the meaning of the word. For Fraunce says: "Thurrok of a shyp. Sentina." Prompt. Parv. Now in Ort. Vocab., of Sentina it is said, Est locus fetidus in navi, cui flaunt aque: and the term is expl. by Cooper, "A sinke; jakes; the pompe of a ship."

The correspondent term to Thruh-stane in O. E. is "Throice or throic-stone of a buryng. Sarcophagus." Prompt. Parv. A. Bor. "Thruf-stone, a tomb stone;" Gl. Brockett. This is evidently the same word, with the substitution of the labial for the ancient guttural sound.

To THURM, v. n. To pur as a cat, Lanarks.; A. Bor., id. Grose.

Sw. dramm-a, mutum sonum edere; Seren.

[THURM, s. Close and loving intercourse; as, "The twa hae an unco thrum thegither," Clydes., Banffs.

Like friendly cats rubbing and purring with each other.]

THRUMMER, s. A contemptible musician, Lanarks.; an itinerant minstrel, Roxb.

From the E. v. to Thrum, which seems formed from A.-S. thearm, intestinum; the strings of various instruments being made of tharm, or the gut of animals.

* [THURM, s. 1. A tangled mass; applied to thread, yarn, &c., Clydes., Banffs.

2. An untidy piece of dress; also applied to an article of dress put aside carelessly, ibid.

3. A senseless foolish whim; a fit of ill-humour; synon. taum, Clydes.

Isl. thröm, Dut. drum, a thrum.]

[To THURM, v. a. and n. 1. To tangle, warp, also, to fold or put aside carelessly, ibid.

2. To act on a foolish whim; to become sulky or ill-humoured; as, "Ye jist thrum an' thraw a' day," ibid.

3. To search for anything in a careless or confused manner, ibid.

4. To trifle with a thing, to handle it overmuch; also, to twirl the fingers in a shy, awkward manner, Banffs.]

[To THRMIL, v. n. To handle overmuch; to fumble, Banffs. V. THRMILE.]

[THRMY, s. A short thread, an end, Perth., Aberd.]

THRMY-TAIL'D, adj. A contemptuous epithet applied to women who wear fringed gowns or petticoats, Ang. From E. Thrum.

Since Lammas I'm now gaing thirty an' twa,
An' never a dud sark had I yet greyt or sma';
An' what war am I, I'm as warin an' as bra'
As thrummy-tail'd Meg that's a spinner o't.

Ross's Rock and Wee Pickle Tow.

To THRUMP, v. a. 1. To press, Upp. Clydes.; also pron. Thrimp.

2. To press, as in a crowd; as, "I was thrumpt up," ibid.

3. To push; especially applied to school-boys, when they push all before them from the one end of a form to another, ibid., Roxb.

The term in Upp. Clydes., is distinguished from the v. to Chirt, which implies that the pressure is from each end of the form towards the middle of it.

THRUMP, s. The act of pushing in this manner, ib.

Teut. drumm-en, Flandr. dromm-en, premere, pressare, protudere; A.-S. thrym, multitudo, turba.

THRUNLAND, part. pr. "Rolling, tumbling about; q. trundling." Gl. Sibb.

Thair wes not ane of thame that day
Wald do ane utheris biddin.
Thairby lay thre and threttie sum
Thrunland in a midding
Off draf.

Pebis to the Play, st. 14.

A.-S. tryndyled, orbiculatus.

THRUNTER, s. A ewe in her fourth year, Roxb.; synon. Frunter, q. v.

A.-S. thri-winter, thry-wintre, trinus, triennis, "of three yeares old;" Somner. An thri-wintre hrythyr, triennis vitula; thri-wintre ramm, triennis aries, Lye.

To THRUS, THRUSCH, v. n. 1. To fall, or come down, with a rushing or crashing noise.

Adam Wallace, the ayr off Ricardtoun,
Straik ane Bewmound, a squier of renoun,
On the pyssan, with his hand burnyst bar,
The thrusande blaid his halas in sonder schar.

Wallace, iii. 190, MS.

Hand should perhaps be brand.

2. To cleave with a crashing noise, used actively.

Awkward the bak than Wallace can him ta,
With his gud suerd that was off burnyst steill;
His body in twa it thruschyt euirilkdeill.

Wallace, xi. 252, MS.

This is merely an oblique sense. In Gl. Perth. Edit. it is rendered burnished. The Editor has been probably misled by the boldness of some former Editor, who has inserted this word in the text.

The birnucht blade his halse in sunder share.

Isl. thrusk-a, strepere; G. Andr., p. 269. There seems to be no reason to doubt that this is radically the same with Moes.-G. drins-an, cadere; draus-jan, ex alto deorsum praecipitare: whence draus, a fall, ruin; Teut. drusch-en, strepere, impetere, stridere, fremere; and drusch, impetus, strepitus. Junius has observed, that Belg. ge-drusch, signifies a great noise, or more properly, a prodigious crash of any great mass suddenly broken and falling; Immanis fragor magnae alicujus molis ex improvise disruptae ac procidentis. Gl. Goth. The Goth. word, however varied in different dialects, has primarily signified the act of rushing or falling, and hence been secondarily used to denote the noise produced by a fall or disruption. Ihre views Moes.-G. drins-a, as having the same origin with Su.-G. rus-a, to rush; d being prefixed.

THRUSCHIT, part. pa. Thrust, forcibly pressed.

"And thaireftir the deponar pat his left hand over his majesteis leaft schukler, and pullit vp the brod of the windo, quhairvnto the said Mr. Alexander had thruschit his majesteis heid and schulderis." Acts Ja. VI., 1600, Ed. 1814, p. 206.

Isl. thrust-a, trudere.

THRUSH, THRUSH-BUSH, s. The rush; Loth. thrash.

—Lately in the Borders
Where there was nought but theft and murders,
Rapine, cheating, and resetting,
Slight of hand fortunes getting,
Their designation as ye ken
Was all along, the taking men.
Now rebels prevails more with words
Then Drawgoons does with guns and swords,
So that their bare preaching now
Makes the thrush-bush keep the cow,
Better then Scots or English kings
Could do by kiltin them with strings.

Cleland's Poems, p. 30.

THRY, adj. 1. Cross, perverse, S. B.

Among ill hands yoursell as well as I
It seems has fallen, our fortune's been but thry.

Ross's Helene, p. 48.

2. Reluctant, S. B.

—She now was mair nar fain,
That kind gueest luck had latten him till his ain,
Afore mishap had forc'd him to comply
Unto a match to which he was sae thry.

Ibid. p. 93.

This seems radically the same with THRA, q. v.

[To THRYFT, v. n. V. under THRIFE.]

To THRYFT, v. n. To thrive, Dunbar.

Isl. thref-as, Su.-G. thrice-as, id.

THRYFT, s. Prosperity.

Wythin this place, in al plesour and thryft
Are hale the pissance quhilkis in iust battell
Slane in defence of thare kynd cuntre fell.

Doug. Virgil, 183, 15.

Isl. thrif, nutritio, Su.-G. tresnad, vigor. V. the v.

To THRYLL, v. a. To enslave, to enthrall.

"Quhat othir thyng desyre thay, bot to sit down in our landis, castellis, and townis, and outthir to thryll us to maist schamefull seruitude, or ellis, to banis the maist nobyll and vailyeant men amang us?" Bellend. Cron. Fol. 24. b.

This is equivalent to thirl. For a little downward, it is said ;

"Behald the Gallis your nyctbouris, quhilkis (as sone as thay war vincust be Romanis) war thirlit to perpetuall seruytude." V. THIRL and THRALL.

[THRYLDOME, THRYLLAGE, s. V. under THRILL.]

THRYNFALD, adj. Threefold.

To me he galf ane thik clowtit habirihone,
Ane thrynfald hawbrek was all gold begone.

Doug. Virgil, 83, 51.

A.-S. thrynen, Isl. threaner, triuus; from Moes.-G. thrina, three.

[To THRYNG, v. a. V. THRING.]

THRYST, s. An engagement, Gall.

"Thryst, a promise to do any thing, a kind of vow ; to set a thryst, to make a promise to perform something at a certain place and time;" Gall. Enc., p. 447.

This must be traced to Thrid, v., to trust; or viewed as merely a provincial variety of Tryst.

THUA, adj. Two; Aberd. Reg.

THUD, s. 1. The forcible impression made by a tempestuous wind; as including the idea of the loud, but intermitting, noise caused by it, S.

Small birdis flokand throw thik ronnyis thrang
In chirmynge, and with cheping changit thare sang,
Sekand hillis and hirnyis thame to hyde
Fra ferefull thuddis of the tempestuus tyde.

Doug. Virgil, 201, 22.

Tyde, i.e., season.

About the trie ruts thir twa ran ;
Yit all in vaine, na thing thay wan,
Bot did thole mony thud :
For cauld thay wer discomfeist clene,
The schowrs wer sa seueir.

Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 22.

Thus it is commonly said, The wind comes in thuds, when it comes in gusts; and especially when it strikes on any body that conveys the sound, as a door, &c., S. It sometimes implies the idea of that velocity of motion which distinguishes a stormy wind.

Before thame all furth boltis with ane bend
Nisus ane fer way, stert mare spedely
Than thud of weddir, or thundir in the sky.

Doug. Virgil, 133, 21.

Quanta turbine, Virg.

2. Impetus, resembling that of a tempestuous wind.

Beleif me as expert, how stout and wicht
He is outhir in battall place or feild,
And how sterlie he raises vp his scheild,
Or with how grete thud in the melle
Ane lance towartis his aduersaris thraxis he.

Doug. Virgil, 371, 37.

Quo turbine, Virg.

3. Transferred to any loud noise, as that of thunder, cannons, &c.

Nenir sa swiffle quidderand the stane flaw,
Swakkit from the ingyne vnto the wall,
Nor fulderis dynt that causis touris fall,
With sic ane runyill come bratland on sa fast,
Lyk the blak thud of awfull thundris blast.

Doug. Virgil, 446, 50.

Renew your roaring rage and eagre ire,
Inflam'd with fearful thundring thuds of fire.

Potwart, Watson's Coll., iii. 23.

Hir voice sa rank, with reuthful reir againe,
Most lyik the thundring thuds of canoun din,
Affrayit me.—

Maitland Poems, p. 246.

A. Bur. "Thud, the noise of a fall, a stroke causing a blunt and hollow sound;" Gl. Brockett.

4. A stroke, causing a blunt and hollow sound; as resembling that made by the wind, S.

From Jupiter the wyld fyre down sche flang
Furth of the cloudis, distrois thare schyppis all,
Querquhelmit the sey with mony wyndy wall,
Aiac peirsit gaspand and furth damand smoke
Sche with ane thud stikkit on ane scharpe rok.

Doug. Virgil, 14, 29.

V. RUTHER.

Sometimes it merely signifies a blow with the fist, S.B.

Nor can she please him in his barlie mood ;
He cocks his hand, and gi's his wife a thud.

Morison's Poems, p. 151.

An' lusty thuds were dealt about,
An' some were maistly thrappit
Wi' grips that night.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 136.

5. Used in a moral sense, as denoting the violent assaults of temptation.

"Brethern, all this worlde is full of tentations : the diuell blowes, and all his impes are euer blowing and raising a storme : it is a stormie world, and all the thuds light on the sillie creature." Rollock on 1 Thea., p. 121.

Isl. thyt-r, fremitus venti proruentia, exactly corresponds with sense 1. V. Haldorson.

It is surprising that Rudd. should view this word as formed from the sound. We have seen that Doug. uses it as giving the sense of Lat. turbo. Now, A.-S. thoden conveys this very idea : "Turbo, noise, din, a whirlwind;" Somner. This must certainly be traced to Isl. thyt, thaut, ad thiot-a, cum sonitu transvolo; thyt-r, sonitus; G. Andr., p. 266. Germ. dud-en, sonare, seems radically the same. Ir. dud, a noise in the ear.

To THUD, v. n. 1. To rush with a hollow sound, S.

—The blastis wyth thare bustuous sonne,
Fra mont Elone in Trace cummys thuddand doun
On the depe sey Egeane fast at hand,
Chassand the flude and wallis to athir land.

Doug. Virgil, 422, 20.

V. RUDDY.

Quhais thundering, with wondering,
I harl up throw the air,
Throw cluds so he thuds so,
And flew I wist not quhair.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 17.

2. To move with velocity; a metaph. borrowed from the wind, S.

"Scot. we also use it as a verb; as, He thudded away, i.e., went away very swiftly;" Rudd. V. the s.

To THUD, v. a. 1. To beat, to strike, S.

"I'll thud you, i.e., I'll beat you;" Rudd.

2. To drive with impetuosity, S.

—Boreas nae mair thuds
Hail, snaw, and sleet, frae blacken'd clouds.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 418.

To THUD, v. a. To wheedle, to flatter, Loth.

Corr. perhaps from C. B. kud-o, to wheedle.

THUD, s. The act of wheedling or flattering, ib.

THULMARD, s. A polecat; in some places thumart, S. V. FOWMARTE.

"By the way his dog caught a thulmard.—When they were all at prayer, the evil spirit beat them with the dead thulmard, and threw it before them." Relation of an Apparition, &c. Law's Memor. App., p. 274.

• THUMB, s.

From the variety of proverbial phrases in which the thumb is introduced, it appears to have been accounted by our ancestors a very important member. It is spoken of, indeed, as if it had been the chief instrument of operation, or at least the special symbol of power.

Hence, of any thing supposed to be a vain attempt, it is said, Ye needna fash your Thoun, S.

In the same sense another proverbial saying is used, in relation to any thing viewed as not attainable by the person who is addressed; That's aboon your Thoun, S.

Then Lindy to stand up began to try;
But, by your favour, that's aboon his thumb,
For he fell arselins back upon his bum.

Ross's Helenore, p. 43.

RULE OF THUMB, RULE OF THOUM. To do a thing by Rule of Thoun, to do it nearly in the way of guesswork, or at hap-hazard, S.

"No rule so good as Rule of Thumb, if it hit," S. Prov.; "spoken when a thing falls out to be right, which we did at a venture." Kelly, p. 257.

The allusion seems to be to the measurement of cloth by the thumb, when one has no regular measure at hand, or is too indolent to seek for it. V. RULE-O'-ER-THOUM.

TO CLAP or PUT the THOUM ON any thing. To conceal it carefully; as, Clap your thoun on that, keep it secret; I mention that to you in confidence, S.

"To bend or bow down the thumbes, when wee give assent unto a thing, or doe favour any person, is so usual, that it is grown into a proverbiall speech, to bid a man put down his thumb in token of approbation." Pliny's Nat. Hist., B. xxviii., c. 2.

TO LEAVE one TO WHISTLE ON one's THUMB. To leave one in a state of complete disappointment, to give one the slip, so that he has got nothing to do as to what his mind is principally engaged about, S.

"If you'll be guided by me, I'll carry you to a wee bit corner in the Pleasance,—and sae we'll leave Mr. Sharpitlaw to whistle on his thumb." Heart M. Loth., ii. 130. V. THOUM.

TO THUMB, THOUM, v. a. To prepare any thing by applying the thumbs to it; a vulgar mode of making a thing clean, S.

—Honest Jean brings forward, in a clap,
The green horn cutties rattling in her lap;
And frae them wyl'd the sleekest that was there,
And thumb'd it round, and gave it to the Squire.

Ross's Helenore, p. 116.

THUMBIKINS, s. pl. An instrument of torture, applied as a screw to the thumbs, S.

VOL. IV.

"A respectable gentleman in the town, a relation of the celebrated Principal Carstairs, has in his possession the identical thumbikins, with which the Principal was severely tortured.—The story of the thumbikens is, that Carstairs asked, and obtained them in a present from his tormentors. 'I have heard, Principal,' said King William to him the first time he waited on his Majesty, 'that you were tortured with something they call thumbikins; Pray what sort of instrument of torture is it?' 'I will shew it you,' replied Carstairs, 'the next time I have the honour to wait on your Majesty.' The Principal was as good as his word. 'I must try them,' said the King; 'I must put in my thumbs here,—now, Principal, turn the screw.'—'O not so gently—another turn—another—Stop! stop! no more—another turn, I'm afraid, would make me confess any thing.' P. Greenock, Statist. Acc. v. 583.

This mode of torture was practised on the persecuted Presbyterians, during the reign of Charles II. Whether the merciful rulers of that period borrowed the idea from the Spaniards, I cannot say. But it has been generally asserted, that part of the cargo of the Invincible Armada, was a large assortment of thumbikins, which it was meant should be employed as powerful arguments for convincing the heretics.

"Spence is again tortured, and his thumbs crushed with thumbikins. It is a new invention used among the Coliers when transgressors; and discovered by General Dalziel and Drummond, they having seen them used in Muscovy." Fountain., i. 300.

THUMBLES, s. pl. Round-leaved Bell-flowers, S. Campanula rotundifolia, Linn. V. WITCH-BELLS.

[So called from the likeness of the flowers to the thimbles.]

THUMB-LICKING, s. An ancient mode of confirming a bargain, S.

"Another symbol was anciently used in proof that a sale was perfected, which continues to this day in bargains of lesser importance among the lower rank of people, the parties licking and joining of thumbs: and decrees are yet extant in our records, prior to the institution of the college of justice, sustaining sales upon summonses of thumb-licking, upon this medium. That the parties had licked thumbs at finishing the bargain." Erskine's Inst. B. iii. T. 3, s. 5.

The same form is retained among the vulgar in the Highlands; an imprecation against the defaulter being generally added to the symbol.

—"In a bargain between two Highlanders, each of them wets the ball of his thumb with his mouth, and then joining them together, it is esteemed a very binding act." Burt's Letters, ii. 222.

That trait of ancient manners in the Hebrides, mentioned by Martin, claims a common origin.

"Their antient leagues of friendship," he says, "were ratify'd by drinking a drop of each other's blood, which was commonly drawn out of the little finger. This was religiously observ'd as a sacred bond, and if any person after such an alliance happen'd to violate the same, he was from that time reputed unworthy of all honest men's conversation." Martin's West. Isl., p. 109.

There is evidently an allusion to this mode of entering into engagements, in the S. Song.—

There's my thumb, I'll ne'er beguile thee.

Ramsay's Warkie, ii. 263.

This custom, although it now appears ridiculous and childish, bears indubitable marks of great antiquity. We learn from Tacitus, that it existed among the Iberi-ans, a people who inhabited the country now called Georgia. His language seems also to apply to their neighbours the Armenians. "It was customary," he says, "with these kings, in concluding a peace, or striking an alliance, to join their right hands, and bind their thumbs together, and draw them hard with a running knot. Immediately when the blood had diffused itself to the extremities, it was let out by a slight prick, and mutually licked by the contracting parties. Their covenant was henceforth deemed sacred, as being ratified by each other's blood." V. Tacit. Ann. Lib. xii. Anc. Univ. Hist., ix. 516.

Hence it has been supposed by some interpreters, that Adonibezek might excuse his cruelty, in cutting off the thumbs of threescore kings, by pretending that he thus punished their treachery in breaking the covenant that had been confirmed by this symbol. V. Pol. Synops. in Jud. i. 7.

This custom might be introduced into our country by the Goths, as the Iberi appear to have been a Scythian nation. Anc. Univ. Hist., vi. 57, x. 138.

That the Goths were not strangers to it, appears by the definition which Ihre gives of Su.-G. Topp. Formula digito micantium, et veteri more pollice pollicis opposito, consensum indicantium. Hence, it would seem Germ. doppe is used as an invitation to strike a bargain. Wachter thinks that it may be viewed as the imperat. of duppen, percutere. Ihre also mentions Fr. topper, convenire, oblatas condiciones acceptare.

This custom existed even among the later Goths; with this difference only, that, in entering into their covenant, they drew the blood from the palms of their hands. Var theta sidan bundit fastmaelum their rokulu sier blot; i lofum, (S. lues), oc geygu under jardarnen, &c. Formatum deinde hoc fedus sanguinis e volis educatione, et eundo sub cespitibus, (V. de hoc ritu Arngrimi Jonae Crymogæen, p. 101. seq.) addito jurejurando, fore, ut qui superstes esset, occisi sodalis mortem vindicaret. Historia Thorstani Wik, S. c. 21, ap. Ihre vo. Fosterbroder, p. 527.

It seems that some such custom prevailed among the Burgundians. For a noble lord, of this country, A. 1242, gave investiture to a Prior per pollicem dextram. The same custom was observed in Dauphiné. V. Du Cange, vo. Investitura, col. 1531.

It would appear that there had been a similar custom among the inhabitants of the Netherlands. I cannot, at least, otherwise form any idea of the reference of an ancient Teut. phrase mentioned by Kilian; Boesen het duymken, Basiare pollicem alterius.

The custom is well known on the continent of India; and, although there is no certainty of its use among the Hindoos, a gentleman, long resident in that country, states that he has often observed the Moors, when concluding a bargain, do it in the very same manner as the vulgar in Scotland, by licking their thumbs.

Something of a similar kind prevailed among the Romans. According to Pierius, the hand being stretched out, the thumb, bent downward, was held by them a symbol of the confirmation of peace. He quotes Quintilian as his authority. Ait, Qui gestus in statu pacificatorum esse solet, qui inclinato in humerum dextrum capite, brachio ab aure praetenso, manum inflexo pollice extendit. Hieroglyphic. Lib. xxxvi. Tit. Pacificatio; Fol. 260. V. also Plin. Hist. Nat. Lib., xxviii. c. 2.

Lat. pollic-eri, to promise, to engage, has been viewed as comp. of per and liceor, for pollic-eri; as properly signifying, to offer and promise a price for merchandize. But it is not improbable, that the r. had been formed from poller, -ici, the thumb. This member being used among the Romans, in latter times, as a symbol of the ratification of peace, it may be conjectured, that, in an earlier period, they had some custom more analogous to that of the Iberians, which gave rise to the term used to denote a promise or engagement, although the original reason of the designation was afterwards lost.

Wachter throws out the same idea. Having derived Germ. zusagen, to promise, from zu, copulative, and sayen, to say, because promises, according to ancient manners, were made by pledging the hand; he adds, Forte etiam Latinis a pressione pollicis dicitur Polliceri. Prolegom. Sect. v. vo. Zu.

The shedding of blood, in entering into covenants, has, in various modes, been practised among many nations. Lucian gives an account of the custom of the Scythians, the same people with the Goths, in this respect. "The happy chosen friends enter into a solemn oath and covenant, that they will live with, and, if occasion calls for, die for each other: and thus it is performed; each cuts his finger, and drops the blood into a bowl; they then dip the points of their swords in the blood, and both drink together of it, after which nothing can dissolve the band;" Toxaris. V. also Herodot. Melpom., iv. 70. Brotier (in his Notes on Tacit. ubi sup.) refers to Herodot. Thal., iii. 8, in proof of the existence of a similar custom among the Arabs. He seems disposed to trace these observances, among the heathen, to the very ancient and divinely instituted rite of confirming covenants by sacrifice. For he quotes Gen. xv. 3, and Ezek. xxxiv. 18, observing, that the Scripture exhibits a similar use of blood, although one more consistent with humanity.

The passage referred to by Brotier, in Thalia, is the following:

"These are the ceremonies which the Arabians observe when they make alliances, of which no people in the world are more tenacious. On these occasions some one connected with both parties stands betwixt them, and with a sharp stone opens a vein of the hand, near the middle finger, of those who are about to contract. He then takes a piece of the vest of each person, and dips it in their blood, with which he stains several stones purposely placed in the midst of the assembly, invoking during the process Bacchus and Urania. When this is finished, he who solicits the compact to be made, pledges his friends for the sincerity of the engagements to the stranger or citizen, or whoever it may happen to be; and all of them conceive an indispensable necessity of performing what they promise." Thalia, c. 8.

It does not appear certain whether Herodotus speaks of the Lydians, or of the Medes, in the following passage:

"The ceremony of confirming alliances is the same in this nation as in Greece, with this addition, that both parties wound themselves in the arm, and mutually lick the blood." Clio, c. 74.

This custom has reached even as far as the kingdom of Siam. "If the Siamese wish to vow an eternal friendship, they make an incision in some part of the body, till the blood appears, which they afterwards reciprocally drink. In this manner the ancient Scythians and Babylonians ratified alliances; and almost all the modern nations of the East observe the same custom." Civil and Natural History of Siam. V. Beloe's Herodotus, i. 79, N.

THUMB-STIL, THUM-STEIL, s. "A covering for the thumb, as, the finger of a glove;" Roxb., Gl. Sibb.; Thoum-stule, id. Lanarks.

In E. thumbstal denotes "a sheath of leather to put on the thumb." The change of the vowel, in different counties, creates a difficulty as to the etymon. But it is most probably from A.-S. stacl, Su.-G. stalle, locus, Teut. stelle, locus tutus; q. a place or station for a thumb or finger. Steel is the pron. of Angus as well as of the South of S.

THUMMERT, s. A term to denote a person of a singular and awkward appearance, Ayrs.

—"There never was surely a droller like thummert o' a creature seen entering a biggit land." Sir A. Wylie, i. 74.

A provincial corruption of S. Foimarte, a polecat.

[THUMP, s. A large piece or portion.]

THUMPER, s. 1. A large individual of any species; as a thumper of a trout, S.

The term seems to receive this application from the forcibleness of motion manifested.

2. Any thing large, S. Of a gross and obvious falsehood it is often said, "That is a thumper!"

THUMPIN', adj. 1. Large, in a general sense, S.

"One wished them thumpin luck and fat weans." Edin. Month. Mag., June 1817, p. 241.

Now thumpin luck, an' skill befa' ye,
My bard, sae I'se mak free to ca' ye.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 98.

2. Large, as including the idea of stoutness, S.

"Thumping, great, huge. A thumping boy, a large child, Exm. and different counties;" Grose. It is used in the same manner in S. Mr. Brockett gives the word as bearing this sense, A. Bor.

THUNDERBOLT, s. 1. The name given by the vulgar to a stone hatchet, apparently used before the introduction of iron, such as is otherwise called a stone celt, S., Orkn., Shetl. This instrument is often made of a species of serpent stone.

"Triangular polished stones of green porphyry, of different sizes, have been found repeatedly in many parts of the country. I have seen them from ten to fourteen inches long, and from four to seven inches broad: The people call them thunderbolts.—They are polished, and taper to a point." Edmonston's Zetl. Isl., i. 120-1.

"On a shelf were disposed, in great order, several of those curious stone axes, formed of green granite, which are often found in these islands, where they are called thunderbolts by the common people, who usually preserve them as a charm of security against the effects of lightning." The Pirate, iii. 4.

[2. The belemnite, a dart-shaped fossil, which formed the internal shell of a kind of Sepia, or cuttle-fish, that abounded in the secondary formations.

"I was told—where curiously-shaped stones, somewhat like the heads of boarding pikes, were occasionally found; and that, in his father's days, the country people called them thunderbolts."

Hugh Miller's Old Red Sandstone.]

THUNNER, s. The vulgar pronunciation of thunder, S. Thunner, id. A. Bor.

[THUNNER AN' LICHTENIN. Lung-wort; Pulmonaria officinalis, Linn., Banffs.]

THUNNER-SPEAL, s. "A thin board with a string in the end; when whirled round in the air, it causes a thundering sound;" Gall. Enc.

THUNNERIN, adj. An epithet applied to drought. A thunnerin drouth, a strong drought, S. B., apparently expressing that which is viewed as the effect of fire in the air, or lightning.

THUORT, THUORTOUR. V. THORTOUR.

THURCH. [A misreading of Thurth in Edin. MS. which is evidently an error for Thurt, need, q. v.]

Bot his hart, that wes stout and hey,
Consaillyt hym allane to bil,
And kepe thaim at the furd syl;
And defend weill the wpcummyng;
Sen he wes warnyst off arnyng,
That he thar arowys thurch noch dreil.

Barbour, vi. 121, MS.

[Regarding the various readings, &c., V. Prof. Skeat's Edit., p. 133.]

THURST, pret. [Might, could: but prob. a mistake for Thurst, need.]

For scho wes syne the best lady,
And the fayrest, that men thurst se.

Barbour, xx. 107, MS.

This seems to signify could, as allied to Su.-G. troest-a, valere, posse.

Han troeste ey mera ther soerwaerfa.

Chron. Rhythm., ap. Ibra.

i.e., there he could accomplish no other thing. The v. primarily signifies to dare.

THURST, THURT, v. impers. Needed; as, "Ye thurstn," Ye needed not, Dumfr.

This is a pret. formed from Tharf, or perhaps that of A.-S. tharfian, to need. V. THARF. In the same sense might the term be rendered as used by Barbour. V. under last word.

[THURTH. An errat. for Thurt in Edin. MS. of Barbour, which Dr. Jamieson printed Thurch, q. v.]

THUS-GATE, THUS-GATIS, adv. In this manner.

The justyng thus-gate endyt is,
And athyr part went hame wyth pris.

Wynston, viii. 36. 1

V. GAT.

THWANKIN', part. adj. A term applied to clouds which mix together in thick and gloomy succession, Ayrs.

Isl. thwing-a, Alem. thwing-an, Su.-G. twing-a, co-gere; Isl. thwingan, Dan. twang, coercion, coercion, pressing. Thwankin' assumes a frequentative form. Thus thwankin-cluds are, "clouds continuing to press on each other."

THWARTER-ILL. V. THORTER-ILL.

THWAYNG, s. A thong, S. whang.

A rone skyne tuk he thare-of ayne
And schayre a thwayng all at laysera.
Wynntoun, viii. 32. 51.

A-S. thwang, Isl. thwing, id.

To THWRICKEN, v. n. To choke from the influence of thick smouldering smoke, Teviotd.

"Whirkened, choaked, strangled; North." Grose.
Ray gives the same sense.

The root seems to be Isl. querk, jugulum, the throat, whence kyrk-ia, suffocare.

[THWS, adv. Thus, Barbour, ii. 508.]

[THYN, adv. Thinly, ibid., iv. 685.]

[THYNE, adv. Thence, Lyndsay, Exper. and Court., l. 1770.]

[To THYNK, v. a. To purpose, Barbour, i. 33.]

[To THYRL, v. a. To pierce. V. THIRL, THRILL.]

[THYRLDOME, s. Thralldom, Barbour, i.
236. V. under THIRL.]

To TIAWE, v. n. Expl. "to amble;" Gl.
Tarr.

When the cattle tiawe, an' blinter
To the loch for drink at noon;
Spottie keen, a neesbor's collie,
Through a moss cam rinnin hame, &c.
Tarras's Poems, p. 56.

V. TEW, pret.

TIBBE, TIBBIE, corruptions of the name
Isabel, S.

Tibbie Fowler o' the glen.—Old Song.

"Tibbe, the familiar name of Isabel; and so in O.
English;" Gl. Lynda.

TIBBET, s. One length of hair, in a fishing-line, twisted, a link, Fife; synon. Snood.
V. TIPPET.

TIBRIC, TIBRICK, s. A name given to the young of the Coal-fish, Orkn.

"These boats sometimes go to sea, for the purpose of fishing cod, cooths, and tibrics, which are the small or young cooths.—The time of fishing the young cooths or tibricks begins about the middle of August." P. Westray, Statist. Acc., xvi. 261.

Were it not that there are no Gael. words found in Orkn., this might seem a corr. of Doubreck, q. v., a name given to the sparring or smelt.

TICHEL, TICHIL, (gutt.), s. 1. A number, Ettr. For.

"There was a tichel o' wallydraggle tup hoggs rin-ning after her, an' plaguing her, till I was just grieved for the poor beast." Perils of Man, i. 246.

It is always used as a term of contempt, applied to a low troop of followers.

"I would be right wae to see my queen turned into a—doe, or a hare, or a she-fox, and a tichel o' tikes set after her to tear her a' to tareleathers." Ibid. iii. 407.

Perhaps q. a line or series; Isl. tigill, funiculus. As, however, it respects followers, it may be allied to Gael.
taoghal, a frequenting, or teaghalach, a family.

2. It appears to be the same word which is used to denote any article kept secretly,
Upp. Clydes.

In the second sense, it would seem more nearly allied to Su.-G. tig-a, Isl. theg-ia, tacere, silere, thoegiel, taciturnus. We could not trace this to a Celt. origin, without supposing a considerable change. C.B. dirgel signifies secret, a secret place; Ir. Gael. coighill, id.

TICHER, s. A small fiery pimple, Gall.
Enc. V. TICKER.

To TICHER (gutt.), v. n. To laugh clandestinely, Ayrs.

It might be supposed that this were allied to Su.-G.
tig-a, silere, as the person wishes to avoid making any noise with his mouth; or C. B. tech-u, to lurk, to lie hidden, techor, a sculker.

[To TICHER, v. n. To ooze out. V.
TIGHER.]

To TICHLE (gutt.), v. n. 1. To join hands; a term used in various games of children, in which every one takes hold of the hand of his neighbour, when their object is, either to form a circle, or to extend like a chain,
Fife.

2. It is applied to any thing that is attached to another, whether from design or by accident, ibid.

Isl. tigill, funiculus.

To TIGHT, v. a. To make close, S.; [also,
to stretch, to tighten, Clydes.]

"The said barrells to be well tichted and double girthed before the transporting thairof to forrane nations." Acts Cha. II., Ed. 1814, VII. 230.
Belg. dicht, Su.-G. taet, tight.

[To TIGHT up, v. a. To put in order; syn.
to red up, Clydes., Banffs.]

TIGHT, pret. Tied. V. TIGHT.

[TIGHT, adj. Well-formed, neat, ibid. V.
TIGHT.]

TICK, s. Upon tick, in a state of activity,
Aberd.

Whether this phrase be a corrupt deviation from the sense in which it is used in E., or connected with Tick, as denoting the chicking of a watch, or any similar motion; or borrowed from Fr. au tiquet, in a state of extremity, in which one often strains every nerve;—I cannot presume to determine.

[TICK, s. A game, allied to burry, Aberd.
E. tag.]

TICK, TICKER, s. 1. A dot of any kind.
The tick above an I, the dot above the letter
I, S.

Teut. tick, punctus.

2. A very small spot on the skin, S. B.

Hence perhaps freckles are called fernietickles, q. tickers, as resembling the dots on the herb called a fern. V. TEICHER.

To TICK, v. n. To click, as a watch, S.

Belg. tikk-en, als een uurwerk, id.

An' when she heard the Dead-watch tick,

She raving wild did say,

"I am thy murderer, my child,

I see thee, come away."

Train's Poetical Reveries, p. 94.

TICK, s. Beat, as of a watch; thus, "Foo [how] mony ticks does a watch gie in a minute?" S. B. Belg. ge-tik, clicking.

TICKING, s. Clicking. "Ticking, the noise of a watch;" S., Gall. Enc.

TICKET, s. A pat, a slight stroke with the hand, or with any instrument, S.

Belg. tik, a pat, a touch; tikk-en, to pat, to touch slightly; Moes-G. tek-an, to touch.

This term is frequently used to denote a smart stroke. Hence,

To GET one's TICKETS. 1. To be subjected to a scolding match, Fife.

2. To get a drubbing, ibid.

To TICKLE, v. a. To puzzle, to gravel, Aberd.

No other etymon appears in the E. Dictionary than Lat. titill-are. As all the other northern dialects, as well as the A.-S. exhibit the word in the same form with S. Kittle, it seems more natural to view the E. v. as a transposition. Skinner has remarked that Kittle is retained in Lincoln. V. KITTLE, v.

TICKLER, s. Anything puzzling, ibid.

TICKLY, adj. Puzzling, difficult, ibid.

TICKLES, s. pl. Spectacles; Banffs.; apparently a mere abbreviation.

TICKLE-TAILS, s. V. NEEDLE-E'E.

[TICKSIE, s. A quarrel, a dispute, Shetl. V. TICK.]

[TICK-TACK-TO, s. A game played by children on a slate, with a piece of slate-pencil, S.]

TID, s. 1. Proper time, season, S.

2. The condition which any soil is in for the purpose of agriculture; as, "The grund's no in tid," Loth.

3. Metaph. as denoting humour, whether in a good or in a bad sense, S. Thus it is used, I'm just in the tid, &c.

"Tid, inclination; the inspiration [of genius, I suppose], of small duration;" Gall. Encycl.

What pleasure matrimony brings

To counterbalance a' its stings.

To pay for a' their plaids and gowns,—

To hide their faults and keep their tid,

And, when they're ill, to ca' them gude.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 11.

—True it is that they may mell you,—

Or tak the tid an' outright fell you.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 170.

It is also applied to brute animals.

Tak tent case Crummy tak her wonted tid,
And ca' the laiglen's treasure on the ground.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 58.

A.-S. Su.-G. tid, time, season. V. TYTE, ade.

TID, TYD, v. impers. Happened. Chauc. id. E. betid.

Perauntere of Priamus wald ye spero

How tid the chance, his fate gif ye list here.

Doug. Virgil, 56, 6.

For ony treti may tyd, I tell the the teynd,

I will nocht turn myn entent, for all this world brend.

Gawan and Gol., iv. 7.

A.-S. tid-an, Su.-G. tid-a, contingere.

These verbs are undoubtedly formed from tid, tempus, as primarily denoting the time when any thing takes place.

To TID, v. a. To time, to choose the proper season. The aitseed has been weil tidid; The proper season for sowing oats has been taken, S. V. the s.

To TAK THE TID. To be seized with a perverse or ungovernable humour, S. B.

TID-AND-QUID. A term used by old farmers to denote a farm in a state of thriving rotation, Fife; as, "He has tid-and-quid, and fu' bien."

It would appear that this phraseology is very ancient.

Su.-G. tid denotes, not only time, season, but is also applied to the increase of the field; Suaar tid, difficultis annona; Ihre. Quid may refer to the increase of the stall, or to the thriving of cattle on a farm; from Isl. kvid-r, quid-r, venter, also uterus; Su.-G. qued, A.-S. cwidd, id. Thus one might be said to "have tid-and-quid," who was in a thriving way both as to grain and cattle.

TIDDIE, adj. 1. Cross in temper, Loth., Tweedd.

2. Applied to land, which is of such a quality that it is difficult to catch the proper season for ploughing, ibid.

[TIDDER. The other, Shetl.]

[TIDIE, adj. Neat, clean, well-dressed. V. TYDY.]

TIDILY, adv. Neatly, trimly, S.

TIDINESS, s. Neatness, especially in the mode of dressing, S.

TIE, s. A trick, a deception, Fife.

Probably allied to Isl. teig-ia, teig-ia, lactare, allicere; synon. Dan. lokk-e, to entice, to decoy, to draw in. V. Halderson and Wolff. Verelius gives the same word in the form of tey-a.

To TIE one's HAIR WITHOUT A WHANG. To deceive one; a cant phrase, Fife.

[To TIEL, v. n. To sail fast, Shetl.]

TIEND-FREE, adj. Exempted from the payment of tithes, S.

[To TIEPER, v. a. and n. To taper to a point, Shetl.]

[TIEPERT, TIEPERIT, adj. Tapered, ibid.]

To TIFF, TYIFF, v. a. To reject anything from the lips, Aberd.; perhaps originally the same with E. Tiff, v., a low word signifying, "to be in a pet."

The sense given might suggest Su.-G. toefio-a, Isl. tef-ia, retardare, impedire. But see Tift, a. 3, below.

TIFT, s. 1. Condition, plight, humour, S. tid, synon. In tift, in proper capacity for doing any thing.

"The soldiers owned that the country men behaved themselves with the utmost bravery, and very few of them who engaged, escaped, being overpowered by numbers, and the King's horse being in good tift." Wodrow's Hist., ii. 140.

To sing or dance, I'm now in proper tift:
My birn, O Bess, has got an unco tift.

Shirres' Poems, p. 84.

"A poet's muse is in tift when she sings well; corn also is in tift when it is dry, viz., in tift to lead." Gall. Enc.

"Tift, to be in good order;" Gl. Westmorel.

Isl. tif-a, tyf-a, praeceps ire; G. Andr., p. 237, 239. Hence it might be used to denote eagerness to engage in any business.

2. [Time, period]; used as expressive of tediousness; at least of considerable duration. A lang tift, a long discourse, S.

Isl. tef-ia, Su.-G. toefio-a, to delay, morari, moram facere. Hence tof, mora; lang tof, a long delay.

3. The act of quarrelling, Loth. tiff, E.

4. It sometimes signifies the act of struggling in a wanton or dallying way, Loth. synon. with tousling.

5. Used to denote the action of the wind.

Four and twenty siller bells
Were a' tyed till his mane,
And at as tift of the norland wind,
They tinkled ane by ane.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 190.

The phrase, a tift of wind, is properly used only in relation to wind when it stirs, or lifts up in the air, dust, straw, &c.

To TIFT, v. a. 1. To put in order, S. B.

The fidler tifted ilka string.

Morison's Poems, p. 25.

[2. To beat, like a pulse, Shetl.; tiftin, beating like the pulse, ibid.

3. To hinder, delay, struggle against, Clydes.

4. To scold, to rate, ibid.]

TIFTER, s. [1. A time of stormy weather; also, exposure to it, Banffs.

2. A fit of bad temper, a quarrel, ibid.]

3. A quandary; as, "He's in an unco tifter the day," Roxb.

Formed perhaps from Tift, sense 5, as denoting the action of the wind.

TIFTY, adj. [1. Moody, changeable, given to fits of ill-temper, Clydes.]

2. Quarrelsome, [ill-natured, S.]

Then up spake ane, a maid forlorn,
Wi' souple tongue and tifty;
It kythed by her runkl'd horn,
Her years had number'd fifty.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 16.

A. Bor. "tifty, ill-natured, petulant;" Gl. Brockett.

To TIFT, v. a. To quaff.

Well fed were they; nor wanted to propine
Among their friends; but tifted canty wine.
Hamilton's Wallace, p. 39.

Apparently allied to E. tiff, drink, or a draught.

To TIG, v. n. 1. To touch lightly, to dally. Young people are said to be tigging, when sporting with gentle touches, or patting each other. It properly applies to those of different sexes, S.

Farewell with chrestetie,
Frae wenchis fall a chucking,
Thair follow things thre,
To gar them gae a gucking;
Imbracing, tigging, plucking.

Scott, Evergreen, i. 125, 126.

V. TAK.

2. To give a stroke to another, and then run away; a term used in a game of children. He, who has received the stroke, is said to be tiggit till he gives it to another, S.

[3. To work in a careless or trifling manner; as, "Ye're jist tiggin at it," Clydes.]

[4. To take a sudden whim; to go off in a pet]; applied to cattle, when, in consequence of being stung by the gad-fly, they run off hither and thither, S.; [synon., to tak the bizz.]

5. [To tig wi',] to trifle with, to treat in a scornful and contemptuous manner; [also, to make love to, to have intercourse with either friendly or criminal, Clydes., Banffs.]

—"Complain, and tell him how the world handleth us, and how our King's business goeth, that he may get up, and lend them a blow, who are tigging and playing with Christ and his spouse." Rutherford's Lett., P. iii. ep. 35.

—Weel kend he, it was nae joke
To tig wi' fends that vomit smoke.

Beattie's John o' Arnha', p. 41.

This may either be allied to Moes.-G. tek-an, to touch, Belg. tik-en, to pat; or Isl. tey-a, teg-ia, teig-ia, lactare, allicere, as denoting the allurements employed in this way. Teyging, allectio, illecebra. V. TYTE, s.

To TIGMATEEZE, v. a. To pull one about, Upp. Clydes.; apparently from S. Tig, and E. Tease, connected by the conjunctive particle ma.

To TIG-TAG, v. n. 1. To trifle, to be busy while doing nothing of importance.

"The King came on Sunday last to Basing-house, with purpose to break up Waller's quarters, and then to enter Kent; but, as we hear, Waller is recruited from Kent, with horse and foot, and minds to stand to it. They may tig tag on this way this twelve-month." Baillie's Lett., i. 404.

2. To be tedious in making a bargain, to haggle, Fife.; tiggle-taggle is also used.

Probably from E. ticktack, a game at tables; q. moving backwards and forwards to little purpose.

[To TIG-TIR, v. n. To make sport by teasing, Clydes.]

To TIG-TOW, v. n. 1. "To touch and go, to be off and on," S., Gall. Enc.

2. "To Tig-tow wi' a Lass, to seem inclined to marry her, yet to hang off," S., ibid.

Formed perhaps from tig and Su.-G. toefic-a, morari; as denoting procrastination in the way of dallying.

TIG, TERO, s. 1. A twitch, a tap, a slight stroke, S.

"It's bairnly to mak sic a wark for a bit tig on the haffet." Sir A. Wylie, i. 36.

"Andrew was compelled to submit, only muttering between his teeth, 'Ower mony maisters—ower mony maisters, as the paddock said to the harrow, when every tooth gae her a tig.'" Rob Roy, ii. 308.

"Many masters! quoth the paddock to the harrow, when every tin [tooth] gave her a tig." S. Prov. "Spoken by those whom persons, inferior to their masters, presume to reprove, command, or correct." Kelly, p. 243. "A little blow," N.

2. Sometimes used to denote a touch of a rougher description, amounting to a stroke, so as to cause a wound, S.

3. A game among children, in which one strikes another and runs off. He who is touched becomes pursuer in his turn, till he can tig or touch another, on whom his office devolves, Fife, Loth., Ettr. For.

A. Bor. "Tig—a play among children on separating for the night, in which every one endeavours to get the last touch; called also, Last bat." Gl. Brock.

O. E. "Tek, or lytill touch, tactus," (Prompt. Parv.) has had a common origin.

4. The stroke itself. He who, in the game, communicates the stroke, says to the person to whom he has given it, Ye bear my tig, Fife.

5. The person who receives it, Loth.

This game in S. is the same with Touchlast in E.

Among the players, the lot, by means of the repetition of a rhyme, falls on the person who is touched with the finger of the repeater at the last word of the rhyme. The individual thus touched is called Tig. He runs about, endeavouring to touch another. The moment this person is touched, he or she becomes Tig, and communicates it to a third, and so on. The transmitting touch is often given so quietly, that it is immediately transferred to another, who, not knowing that Tig is near him, is unconscious of his risk.

6. A pet, a fit of sullen humour. To tak the tig, to be pettish, S. dorts, synon.

What tig then takes the fates that they can thole
Thrawart to fix me i' this dreary hole!

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 73.

TIGGY, adj. Petty, prone to pettishness, S. Dorty more properly expresses that ill humour which is manifested by giving a saucy answer.

TIG ME IF YOU CAN. The name of a game of children, S. A.; the same with Tig.

"It would perhaps be equally vain to expect that ladies should give up the luxurious waltz,—to join in the merry ring at Through the needle-ee,—or Tig me if you can." Blackw. Mag. Aug. 1821, p. 38.

[TIG-TAG, adv. In suspense, Shetl.]

TIG-TAGGIN, s. The act of haggling; as, We had an awfu' tig-taggin about it, before we could mak our bargain, Fife.

TIG-TOW, s. 1. The name given to the game of Tig, in Ang.

2. To play at tig-tow, to pat backwards and forwards, to dally, S. It is sometimes used as a v.

[To TIG, TIGG, v. a. To beg, to importune, Shetl. V. THIG.]

[TIGGAR, s. A beggar, mendicant, ibid. V. THIGGAR.]

TIGER-TARRAN, s. A waspish child, Teviotd. V. TIRAN.

To TIGHER, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed way, to titter, Ayr.; synon. Kigher.

To TIGHER, v. n. To ooze out; applied to blood and other liquids; Berw. V. TEICHER.

TIGHT, TIGHT, part. pa. and pret. 1. Tied.

The tassess were of topas, that were thereto tight.
Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 2

2. Prepared, girt for action.

Nou will I rekkin the renkis of the round tabill,
That has traistly thame tight to governe that gait.
Gawain and Goh., iii. 8

For ticht, id. V. TISCHE.

Qu. bound up, from A.-S. tyg-an, to bind. And here perhaps we see the true origin of E. tight, as signifying neat, generally traced to Teut. dicht, solidus. It seems merely, q. tied close, well knit. The term, however, as used in sense 2, may be immediately allied to Isl. ty-ia, armo, instruo; ty, arma, utensilia; tyad-r, armatus.

[To TIGMATEEZE, v. a. V. under TIG, v.]

TIKE, TYKE, TYK, s. 1. A dog, a cur; properly, one of a larger and common breed, as a mastiff, a shepherd's dog, &c., S.

A. Bor.

—Thocht he dow not to leid a tyk.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 62.

Ye Moabites, with hornes twa full hie,
Outward like sheipa, yee beir the beistes marke,
Inward like tykes, ye byte, but cannot bark.

Poems Sixteenth Century, p. 97.

[2. The common otter, Shetl.]

3. "A selfish snarling fellow;" Gl. Surv. Moray. Thus it is said of a stubborn-man, He's a dour tyke; [and of a coarse, untidy man, He's a toosie tyke, Clydes.

"Tike is applied in contempt to a person;" Gl. Lynda. A. Bor. tike, "an odd or queer fellow;" Grose; "a blunt or vulgar fellow;" Brockett.

Su.-G. tik, Isl. tyk, a little bitch; Alem. zoh, Germ. sucke, id.; the t in other languages, being softened into s in the German dialects.

TYKE-HUNGRY, adj. Ravenous as a dog, S.

TYKE-TULYIE, s. Literally, a dog's quarrel; metaph. applied to any coarse scolding match; S. synon. Collyshangie.

TIKE-TYRIT, adj. Dog-weary, tired like a dog after coursing or running, S.

Qahan greittis the wean, the nurse in vain,
Thoch tike-tyrit, tries to sleip.

Minstrelsy Border, iii. 363.

It is the same word, I suspect, that Rudd. writes tig-tyre, rendering it, to vex or disquiet, vo. Tary; unless this be q. to tire with tigging, or childish sportiveness.

The same idiom is found in Sw. troett som en hund, dog-weary; Seren. vo. Dog.

TIL, Till, prep. 1. To, S. A. Bor.

Now God gyff grace that I may swa
Tret it, and bryng it till endyng,
That I say nought bot suthfast thing.

Barbour, i. 35, MS.

Tille is often used by R. Brunne for to.

Ther were chanons of clergie,
That knew wels of Astronomie,
To knowe the sternes ther wittes leid,
& tille Arthure oft tynes seid,
That what thing that he was aboute,
He suld spede withouten doute.

V. Tille, Gloss. R. Glouc.

Moes.-G. A.-S. Isl. til, Su.-G. till, id.

2. With, in addition to.

The Empryce than, owre story sayis,
Come In Ingland in tha dayis,
In that land to ger be dwne,
And to be mad Kyng hyr swne
Henry, the qwhilk owre Kyng Dawy,
And till hym Lordis rycht mony,
Kend hym nerrast ayre to be
Than of all that reawt.

Wyntown, [vii.] 6. 230.

3. From, improperly.

Swa til Saynt Margret eftyre syne,
As til Malcolm in ewyn lyne,
All our kyngis of Scotland
Ware in-til successyowne discendand.

Wyntown, vi. 19. 139.

4. As a mark of the infinitive, [or gerund], instead of to. It is more generally used by our old writers, before a vowel or the aspirate; although this rule is by no means strictly observed.

For loy thay pingil than for till renew
Thare bankettis with al obseruance dew.

Doug. Virgil, 210, 3.

Mr. Macpherson has observed, that it is used by Ulphilas, as a prefix to the infinitive, Luke. vi. 7. "where Junius is quite at a loss for a meaning to it." Gl. Wynt. Ei biyeteina du til wrohjan ina; Ut invenirent unde accusarent eum. Du til is a redundant phraseology, resembling for till; du, as well as til, signifying to.

TIL, TILL, conj. That, so that, to such a degree that, Buchan.

Leitch wi's fit gae 'im sic a kick,
Till they a' thought him slain,

That very day.

Skinner's Christmas Ba'ing, st. 13.

Isl. til thess is expl., ideo.

TIL, TILL, adv. While, during the time that.

Thai wald nocht fecht till that he wes
Lland in till his seknes.

Barbour, ix. 106, MS.

This line is omitted in Edit. Pink.

As quhill S. is used for till E., till, vice versa, occurs in the sense of while.

The A.-S. s. tille signifies rest, as if it were synon. with while, id. whence E. while, which is evidently from Isl. Su.-G. hvil-a, quiescere. Thus, it would appear that the change of till for quhill is not accidental, or merely arbitrary.

TILFOIR, adv. Before. "A yeir tilfoir he deceissit;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. Su.-G. tillfoerene, prius; Ihre, vo. Till.

[TILER, s. A door-keeper, &c. V. TYLER.]

TILE-STONE, s. An anomalous term, which must formerly have been used in S. for a tile or brick.

"Later, a tile-stone, or brick." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 21.

It has, however, been imported from the continent. Teut. teghel-steen, tichel-steen, Germ. zieghel-steyn, tegula, later; Sw. tegelsten, brick; Wideg.

[TILFIR, s. The loose flooring of a boat, Shetl., Sw. tilja, a covering of boards, and farja, a boat.]

To TILL, v. a. To entice. V. TEAL.

TILL, s. A cold unproductive clay, S.

"The soil of the upper grounds, in general, is a very strong heavy clay, lying upon a stratum of a dense argillaceous substance, generally of a great depth; which, under all its different appearances, is called till in this country." P. Dalserf, Lanarka. Statist. Acc., ii. 372.

"The bottom is a very bad sort of clay, commonly called by the farmers here mortar or till." P. Kilspindie, Perth. Statist. Acc., iv. 203.

"We find in digging, or sinking, that after the clay is past, which keeps no course, all metals, as stone and tilles, (which are seems [seams] of black stone, and participat much of the nature of coal), ly one above another, and keep a regular course." Siuclair's Misc. Obs., Hydrost., p. 260.

"Indurated clays abound in both parishes. The most plentiful is the Schistus or Till.—Schistus and Till are words indiscriminately used to denote the same argillaceous, hard, fossil substance. The word Till is, indeed, sometimes vulgarly used to denote a stiff clay, although in a soft state." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 252.

"Till is a provincial word, of which the meaning is not always perfectly definite. It is sometimes used to express a sort of hard impenetrable clay, mixed with fragments of stone or gravel. This, however, is only one species of it, for the name is applied likewise to subsoils of an absorbent nature, which, if exposed by culture to the sun and atmosphere would turn into excellent dry loams. It is often used to denote a retentive subsoil, abounding with iron ore. In general it may be taken for any subsoil, consisting of a mixture of clay and sand or stones, devoid of the vegetable matter which gives a soil the friability and openness requisite for vegetation." Agr. Surv., Galloway, p. 12.

TILL-BAND, s. The name giving to Pudding-stone or Conglomerate, S.

"Blotta.—Breccia arenacea, Cronst. Scottish till-band." Headrick's View of Arran, p. 245.

TILLIE, TILLY, adj. Of or belonging to till, S.

"In various parts of the northern districts, remote from the benefit of sea-ware, large pits were dug up of a tilly substance, to give firmness and consistency to a loose mossy soil." Agr. Surv., Invern., p. 112.

[TILLIE, s. A wet, clay soil, Shetl.]

TILLIE-CLAY, s. 1. "Cold clay, unproductive soil," S., Gall. Enc.

2. Used metaph. as expressive of coldness of heart.

"The heart that never felt love, is said to be a piece of tillie-clay." Ibid.

To TILLER, v. n. A term applied to grasses when they give out a number of stems or suckers from the same root, S. A., Stirl.; synon. Stool.

"Clover-plants, when they have room to grow, tiller or stool, and employ more ground than those of corn." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 24.

"Clover is not so much fed by the atmosphere when kept down by cattle, and short, as when allowed to tiller or stool, and grow to its full height." Ibid., p. 211.

"When the plants are thin, they keep tillering (or sending forth new shoots), when they should be shot into seed." Agr. Surv., Stirl., p. 403, 404.

"Tiller, to send out shoots, as wheat. Durham; " Gl. Brockett.

O. E. tillar, tiller, "a small tree left to grow till it be fellable," (Phillips), is most probably allied. Fr. taller, thaler, are applied to corn when it buds; "Corn to bud, shoot out their tops," &c.

TILLER, s. "The rising blade of growing corn shooting out several stems from one seed;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

The term seems very ancient, and is apparently of Goth. extract. For the Isl. v. tylle, tilldr-a, has a sense nearly akin; signifying, to raise up and to fix lightly; attollo et leviter figo. Hence tilldr, levis structura; G. Andr., p. 239.

VOL. IV.

Its affinity is more evident to A.-S. tely, ramus, surculus, frondes; "a bough, a shoot, a twig, a branch;" Somner: Sax. telghe, telgher, ramus, ramale, frons, frondes; Kilian: Su.-G. taelung, surculus, anciently taelung.

[TILI-HEWYN, part. pa. To-hewn, hewn about, severely cut or hacked, Barbour, xx. 367.]

TILLIE-LICK, s. A gibe, Gall.

"Tillie-licks, taunts and sneers;" Gall. Enc.

It would appear that there has been in some country or other, an instrument, used in former times, called a tillie, and that the term had originally denoted a stroke with this. Fr. tille, signifies "the rind, or piling of hemp," &c., and tillier, the linden tree. Tillie, however, denotes a knife, Shetl. It seems to have signified a churn-staff, S. Y. TULLIE.

TILLIE-LICKIT, s. 1. An unexpected stroke, Fife; the same with the preceding word, only used figuratively.

2. An unexpected misfortune, ibid.

TILLIESOUL, s. A place at some distance from a gentleman's mansion-house, whither the servants and horses of his guests are sent, when he does not choose to entertain the former at his own expense. The person employed is often an old servant of the family, who is allowed to sell corn, hay, &c., for his own sustenance, and for the accommodation of visitors, Loth.

"If she were to be joining company wi' Mr. Peter, he would be shewing her ta grieve's house, and ta new tilliesoul, and ta gardener's house,—and a score of other houses she canna just pe minding." Macrimmon, iv. 63.

From tons les saouls, q. the place whither all the drunkards resort; or, from Gael. tuloach-saibal; the latter part of which compound is pronounced soul or sawal, and signifies a barn. As tuloach denotes a hillock, according to this etymon, the signification is, "the hillock barn," or "the barn on the hillock."

It may perhaps have been formed, in allusion to soldiers getting dry billets, as they are called, i.e., money to pay for lodging elsewhere, from Fr. tillet, a ticket, and sould, soldier's entertainment or pay.

TILLING, s. [Erat. for Titing, the titlark, Alauda pratensis. V. Edmonstone's Gloss.]

"The birds are—plover pages, tillings, linnets, thrushes, hill sparrows," &c. P. Reay, Caithn. Statist. Acc., vii. 574.

TILLIT, pret. v. Prob., coaxed, enticed.

'Quhat suld a Scot do with sa fayr a knyff'

'Sa said the Prest that last janglyt thi wyff

'That woman lang has tillit him so fayr,

'Quhill that his child worthit to be thine ayr.'

Wallace, vi. 149, MS.

This is part of the dialogue between Wallace and an Englishman, who, according to the story, was employed to provoke Wallace to some act that might seem to warrant an attack on him and his handful of friends at Lanark.

Tillit most probably signifies, coaxed, enticed; Isl.

A 4

tael-ia, pellicere; the same with Teal, q. v. Tillit, is absurdly changed to called, Edit. 1648.

TILLOWIE, s. 1. A cry addressed to hounds, urging them on to the chase, Clackmann.; evidently a corr. of the E. huntsman's cheer, Tallihoo.

2. Used of one who has dealt too freely with intoxicating liquor; as, "He has gotten his tillowie," ibid.; q. "he has got as much as urges him on."

[TILL'T. To it, along with it, in addition, S.]

TILLY-PAN, s. A skillet, Moray. Gael. tealla denotes the hearth; perhaps q. a pan to be always at the side of the fire.

TILT, s. [Erat. for Tine], account, tidings of, S.B. V. TAINT.

Great search was made for her baith far and near,
But till nor trial of her cud we hear.

Ross's Helenore, p. 126.

Instead of—till nor trial—it is tint, &c. in First Edit. of Ross's Helenore, p. 122, [and 44.]

Tint is retained in the second Edit. A. 1778, p. 142, which was corrected by the celebrated Dr. Beattie. This might seem to render it probable that till had been an error of the press. But till appears in Gloss. affixed to the third Edit. of Helenore, expl. "account of, tidings;" also in Gl. Shirr. with the same explanation.

[In first and second editions of Helenore, which were published in Ross's lifetime, and in the glossary which he annexed to the second, as well as in an earlier part of the poem, the word is tint. The third edition is of no authority, and Shirrefs merely copied what he found there. There is no evidence, that Dr. Beattie corrected the second edition. Of the first he wrote:—"the whole is incorrectly printed," and yet, in the second, not a few typographical errors are repeated, and others introduced.]

TILT, TILTH, s. Plight, condition, good or bad, like Tift; as, ["To be on the tilt" to be in a high-minded state, Shetl.]; "The land's in sae bad a tilth, that we canna saw the day;" Roxb.

This seems to be merely a secondary sense of A.-S. and E. tilth, as signifying the state of tillage. Teut. teht, however, denotes the proper season when herrings and other fishes make their appearance, Kilian; perhaps from teel-en, tel-en, gignere, generare, producere, which this learned writer views as the same v. with that signifying to cultivate the ground.

TILT up, pret. Snatched.

Ane haistie hensour, callit Harie,—
Tilt up ane tackle withouten tary.

Chr. Kirk, st. 10.

This is the reading giving by Callander, and in Sibb. Chron. S.P. But in Pink. Sel. Ball., ii. 20, it is tyft. It seems most probable that this is the true reading, as we have many examples of the use of the v. to Tyte precisely in this sense; but, as far as I have observed, not one of Tilt having the same signification. Could we view Tilt as the genuine reading, the term might be traced to Fris. till-en, levare, tollere; Isl. till-a, (pret. tytte), attollere.

TIMBER MARE, [The Wooden Horse], an instrument of punishment formerly used in the army.

"He causes put up betwixt the crosses a timber mare, whereon runagate knaves and runagate soldiers should ride. Uncouth to see such discipline in Aberdeen, and painful for the trespasser to suffer." Spalding, i. 227. V. TREIN MARE.

TIME, s. The act of once harrowing a field, Berw.; Tine, synon. Clydes.

"The harrowings are given partly across the ridges, and partly endlong, and are more or less numerous, according to circumstances; never less than a full double time between each successive ploughing. The completest harrowing is called a double double time; in which the harrow goes four times successively over the same range; either all endlong, or all across, or half each way." Agr. Surv. Berw., p. 198.

TIMEABOUT, adv. Alternately, S. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 50. It is used in the vulgar Prov. Timeabout's fair play.

"Vices sunt alternationes, course or time about." Desput. Gram., D. 2, b.

"That—divers of his friends should come in competent number, time about, and attend him upon their own expences." Spalding's Troubles, i. 102.

TIMEOUS, adj. Timely; as, "See that ye keep timeous hours;" i.e., that ye be not too late, S.

This adj. is formed in an anomalous way, having a Fr. or Lat. termination affixed to a Goth. noun.

Timous is O. E., but now obsolete.

TIMEOUSLY, adv. In due time, S., Gl. Crooksh.

It occurs in our version of the Psalms.

Mine eyes did timeously prevent
The watches of the night.

Psa., cxix. 148.

It is here used in an improper sense; for it must be understood as signifying early, or as E. timely.

[TIMMELE, s. A thimble.

"A thing of gold with a top like a timmele." Accts. L. H. Treas. I.]

TIMMER, s. 1. Timber, wood, S. V. sense 2.

Sw. timmer, id.

2. A certain quantity of skins, denominated from the mode in which they are packed.

"Ane Timmer of skinnies: That is, awa monie as is inclosed within twa broddes of Timmer, quihilk counounlie containis fourtie skinnies: In the quihilk manner, merchaundes vsis to bring hame nartrick, sable and vther coastlie skinnies and furringes." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Timbria.

The word is used in the same sense in Fr. Un timbre de martres, "a certain quantity, or number, of martin's skins;" Cotgr. Su.-G. timmer, certus numerus pelium pretiosarum, 40 alii tradunt, alii 50; Ihre.

TIMMER, adj. Of or belonging to wood; as, "a timmer cap," a wooden bowl; "a timmer trencher," a wooden plate, S.

To TIMMER, v. a. To beat, to chastise; properly with a stick; as, "I trow, he timmer'd him weel," S. O., Aberd.

TIMMER-BREEKS, s. pl. A cant term for a coffin, Roxb.

But now ye're auld, an downa dree
The wark an' freika.
Sae ye'll be forced on to try
Your timmer breeks.

Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 50.

TIMMERIN, s. "A beating with a stick;" Gall. Enc.

TIMMERTUNED, adj. Having a harsh voice, one that is by no means musical, S.; from timmer, timber, q. having as little music as a piece of wood.

It has been remarked, that this word S. A. does not so properly denote a harsh untuneable voice as the want of a musical ear; being applied to one who is unable to sing in melody.

To TIMMER up, v. a. A term that admits of great variety of application; but signifying, in general, to do strenuously, and successfully, any work that requires continued exertion and employment, Aberd.

To timmer up the baw, to play briskly at ball; to timmer up the flail, to ply the flail; to timmer up the floor with a dishclout, to clean it thoroughly by hard rubbing; to timmer up the lesson, to be busily engaged in getting one's lesson, also, to say it accurately and readily. O! as he timmers up the Latin! How expeditiously he uses the Latin language! or, What a deal of Latin he employs!

And who in singing cou'd excel
Fam'd Douglas, Bishop of Dunkel?
He timmer'd up, tho' it be lang,
In guid braid Scots, a' Virgil's sang.

W. Ingram's Poems, p. 57.

The original sense of the term is to be found in Isl. timbr-a, ædificare, extruere; A.-S. timbr-ian, id., also, to instruct. Moes.-G. timbr-jan, occurs only in the simple sense; as well as Teut. timmer-en, and Dan. toemr-er.

TIMMING, TEMMING, s. A kind of woollen cloth resembling what is called durant, but very coarse and thin, S.

"Timming, camblet for women's gowns, when in colours, are respectively sold at 3s. and 2s. 10d. the yard." P. Barrie, Forfar. Statist. Acc., iv. 242.

This seems to be the same with Taminy, Johns. Tammie, Pennant.

"There is no inconsiderable manufacture, at Durham, of shalloons, tammies, stripes and callimancoes." Tour in S., 1769, p. 36.

This is certainly from O. Fr. estamine, Mod. Fr. etamine, id., Teut. stayme, stamineum textum, Kilian; Ital. stamegna, Hisp. stamena; all from Lat. stamen.

This etymon is confirmed by the mode in which Sir Thomas Urquhart translates Fr. estamel.

"The men were apparelled after their fashion. Their stockings were of tamine or of cloth-serge, of white, black, scarlet, or some other ingrained colour." Rabelais, B. I., p. 245, 246.

[TIMOTHY, s. Haste, bustle, agitation; also, anger, Banffs.]

TIMOURSUM, TIMERSOME, adj. Timorous, S.

"My conscience—is something of a timersome nature, cannot abide angry folks, and can never speak above her breath, when there is aught of a fray going forward." The Pirate, ii. 116.

A. B. "Timersome, Timmersome, fearful, timorous;" Gl. Brockett.

TIMPAN, TYMPANY, s. The middle part of the front of a house, raised above the level of the rest of the wall, resembling a gable, for carrying up a vent, and giving a sort of attic apartment in the roof, S. B. This is also called a Tympany gavel, Moray.

Fr. tympa, the gable end of a house; Cotgr.

TIMTY, s. A mode of labouring the ground in the island of Lewis.

"The natives are very industrious, and undergo a great fatigue by digging the ground with spades, and in most places they turn the ground so digged upside down, and cover it with sea-ware; and in this manner there are about 500 people employ'd daily for some months. This mode of labouring is by them call'd Timty; and certainly produces a greater increase than digging or plowing otherwise." Martin's West. Isl., p. 3.

The term and practice are still retained.

"There is a general mode of turning the ground, called timilt, or making lazybeds, at which two persons are employed on each side of the ridge; of these two are cutting, and two are lifting the clods." Stat. Acc. P. Stornoway, xix. p. 248.

This mode seems to correspond with what is in S. called trenching. Perhaps of Norwegian origin; as merely denominated from the soil itself: Isl. Norw. Su.-G. tomt, signifying the area around a house, also a place of pasture. Toft is synon.

It may, however, be allied to Gael. teannmeadh, a cutting, dividing.

TIN, s. Loss.

Tristrem and Ganhardin,
Treuthe plighthen thay,
In wining, and in tin,
Trews to ben ay.

Sir Tristrem, p. 173.

i. e., gaining or losing. V. TINZ, v.

TIN, s. A jug of tinned iron, S.

TINNIE, s. The small jug or porringer, of this description, used by children, S.

[TIN, adj. Thin, not thick, Shetl. A.-S. thinne, id.]

[To TIN, v. a. To pick the bones out of the boiled heads of fish, and collect the fleshy parts, Shetl. Goth. tina, to collect.]

TINCHILL, TINCHEL, s. 1. "A circle of sportsmen, who, by surrounding a great space, and gradually narrowing, brought immense quantities of deer together, which usually made desperate efforts to break through," S.

We'll quell the savage mountaineer,
As their Tinchel cows the game.
Lady of the Lake, p. 267.

"These active assistants spread through the country far and near, forming a circle, technically called the tinche, which, gradually closing, drove the deer in herds together towards the glen where the chiefs and principal sportsmen lay in wait for them." Waverley, ii. 8.

2. A snare, gin, or trap.

"After this, there followed nothing but slaughter in this realm, every party ilk one lying in wait for another, as they had been setting tinchills for the slaughter of wild beasts." Pitcottie, p. 22.

The term may be of Gael. origin; timchioll, circuit, compass, timchioll-am, to surround, to environ. These terms occur in the same sense in Irish.

[TINDA, s. Fleecy, wet snow, Shetl.]

TINDE, s. On tinde, in a collected state.

He tight the mawe on tinde,
And eke the gargiloun.

Sir Tristrem, p. 32, st. 46.

i.e., He tied its parts together, in the way of collecting the grease of the deer, and all its appurtenances. Isl. tin-a, colligere, tynt, collectum; Verol.

TINDLING, s. "Ane new sark of tindling," Aberd. Reg., A. 1565.

Can this be an error for kindling? V. KENDILLING. Or shall we view the term as referring to the fineness, q. A-S. tyndael, literally, "the tenth part."

To TINE, TYNE, v. a. 1. To lose; tynt, pret. and part. pa.

Thus Wallace wist: Had he beyne left allayne,
And he war fals, to enemyss he wald ga;
Gyff he war trew, the Sothroun wald him sla.
Mycht he do ocht bot tyne him as it was?
Wallace, v. 121, MS.

He left the toune, and held his way;
And syne wes put to sik assay,
Throw the power off that cite,
That his lyft and his land tynt he.
Barbour, iii. 248, MS.

It occurs in the same sense in O.E.

—That can I repreue,
And preuen it by Peter, and by Paule bothe,
That ben baptised be saued, be he ryche or pore,
That is in extremis, quod Scripture, among Saracens & Jewes;

They now be sauȝd so, and that is our beleue,
That an vnchristen in that case may christen a heathen,
And for his lely beleue, whan he the lyfe *tyne*th,
Have the heritage of heuene, as am man christen.
P. Ploughman, Fol. 50, b.

Lely beleue, i.e., true faith, leal belief, S.

2. To forfeit; used as a forensic term.

—"And gif he slayis, he sall die thairfoir, and tyne all his gudis as escheit to the King." Acts Ja. I., 1428, c. 108, Edit. 1586.

"And at the thrid tyme gif he be conuict of sic trespas he sall tyne his lyfe or than by it.—And gif ony dois the contrare he sall tyne ane hundredth S. for the valaw befor the Justice." Ibid., 1424, c. 12.

3. To lose a cause in a court of justice; to receive a decision contrary to one's claim, S.

4. To kill or destroy.

In-to the innys lang or day,
Quhare that the Erle of Athole lay,
A fell fyre hym to colys brynt.
Thus suddenly was that lord thare tynt,
And wyth hym mony ma.
Wyntoun, vii. 9. 506.

"And seeing hee only is terrible, because he is onely Lord of body and soule, onely hee hath power to saue and tyne; And seeing it is so, let vs feare and retyre our selfis to him, who is able to preserue & keep baith body and soule." Bruce's Eleven Serms., 1591. Sign. R. 4. a.

He seems to refer to James iv. 12. "There is one lawgiver, who is able to save, and to destroy." "Leese and delyuere;" Wiclif, ibid.

5. To Tyne Heart, to lose courage or spirit, or inclination to any business.

"They hoped no guid in his hand, and thairfoir thay tynt heartis, and had no will to raise the fire in Ingland." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 403.

6. To Tyne the Heartis of others, to lose their affections, S.

"The king was abused, and tynt all the heartis of his nobilitie, to quhom he gave no credit." Ibid.

7. To tyne the saddle, to loose all; a proverbial phrase, S.

"You must not look to expences, when presently we are either to win the horse or tyne the saddle." Baillie's Lett., i. 397.

This term has no affinity to any A-S. v. Isl. tyndael, perdere, eg tyne, perdo, tynde, perdidit. The same Isl. v. signifies, to separate chaff from grain. Legumina purgare, ab aliis rejectaneis separare; G. Andr. This may have been its primary sense. The chaff being thrown down or lost, the term may have been at length used to denote the loss of any thing in what way soever. Sw. tynd-a, tynd-a af, afstynd-a, to languish, to dwindle away. This sense corresponds to the neut. signification of the Isl. v., perdi, interire. Hence tion, jactura, perditio; Verol. To this corresponds Tin, s. q. v.

To TINE, v. n. To be lost, to perish in whatever way.

"Gif ony ship tine be storm of wether, or the gudis and geir being thairin, the mast failyie, or ony uther thing, throw uther mischance in the voyage, the merchandis are not haldin to pay ony thing thairof." Ship Lawis, Balfour's Pract., p. 623.

"Siclike, quhen the ship is tint, the shipmen may not sell the taikill of hir without licence or commandment of the—awners." Ibid.

He wald haue eitun with the swyne,
His hungrie stommok to fulfyll;
Bot thoct he suld for hunger tyne,
Yit nane wald gif him leif thairtill.
Forlorne Sone, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 34.

It also occurs in this sense in that fine old song, Tak your auld Cloak about you—

My Cromie is a useful cow,
And she is come of a good kin';
Aft has she wet the bairns' moun,
And I am laith that she should tyne.
Herd's Coll., ii. 102.

Mr. Nares, in his valuable Glossary, has shewn that Spenser uses this word as signifying, "to perish, to die."

V. the etymon of the v. a.

TINE HEART, TYNE A'. A proverbial phrase, urging the necessity of not suffering the spirits to sink, when one meets with difficulties, S.

But Nory keeps up better heart, and says,
We manna weary at thir rugged braes;

*Tyne heart, tyne a', we'll even tak sic beed
As thir uncouthy heather-hills can yield.*

Ross's Helenore, p. 74.

TINEMAN, s. An appellation given to one of the Lords of Douglas whose christian name was Archibald.

Lord Hailes, after Fordun, says that this was that Archibald who was killed at Halidon. He was the first of this name. Godscroft ascribes the designation to Archibald the third of the name, who was Duke of Turrane in France. He also assigns a far more satisfying reason for the appellation, than that adopted by Lord Hailes, who says; "He was commonly called Tineman, implying, as may be conjectured, tiny or slender little man." Ann. ii. 260.

According to Godscroft, "this Archibald is hee who was called Tineman, for his unfortunate and hard success he had, in that he lost (or lost) almost all his men, and all the battels that he fought. This nickname, or cognomination, the old manuscript (of Sir Richard Metellan of Lithington) giveth to Archibald slain at Halidon hill, and calleth this, Archibald one eye for distinction, because of the loose of his eye in a battell against Percie. But that surname of Tineman, cannot bee given so conveniently to the former Archibald who lost only one field, and himself in it; whereas this man ever lost his men, himself escaping often." Hist. H. Douglas, p. 115.

Besides its being a mere conjecture that he was a little man, the word tiny, I suspect, was never so much in use in S. as to be the foundation of a nick-name.

The historical fact cannot perhaps be easily determined; and it is not of great importance. But the first Archibald might be thus denominated, although he lost but one battle, because it was a very fatal one to the Scots; and especially as Douglas seems to have been blamed by the bulk of his countrymen afterwards, for engaging with Edw. II. in the circumstances in which his army was placed. Hence Lesley; Intellexisset Archibaldum Douglasium gubernatorem, furore quodam, tanquam Erensi, percitum, praelio ad Halidonum monticulum commisso, militibus fasis fugatisque, cecidisse, &c. Hist. Lib. vii. p. 238.

TINER, TYNAR, s. A loser.

"It is statute and ordanit, that gif ony persoun persewis ane vther within burgh, that the tynar of the cause, pay the winnaris expensis." Acts Ja. V., 1540, c. 91. Edit. 1566. Tiner, Skene's Edit.

TINSALL, TYNSAILL, TYNSELL, s. 1. Loss, in whatever sense, S.B. V. under TYNE.

For oftsays throw a word may ryss
Discomford, and tynsaill with all.
And throu a word, als weill may fall,
Comfort may ryss, and hardyment
May ger men do thair entent.

Barbour, xi. 488, MS.

A wykyd word may wmgwhil mak
Full gret tynsel, as it dyd here.

Wyntoun, viii. 80. 83.

It is retained in the Buchan Dialect. V. ALLPUIST. It occurs in a very useful S. Prov. "He that's far from his geer, is near his tynsel."—"A man may soon be wrong'd when his back is turn'd." Kelly, p. 132, 133.

It is used by R. Brunne—

Lost he had his men ilk one.
Conseile couth he tak at none,
How he myght his brother help.
Of tynselle myht he mak his gelp.

V. Gl. R. Glouc. vo. Boskes.

2. Forfeiture; used as a forensic term.

"That na man haue out of the realme gold nor siluer, bot he pay xli. d. of ilk pund of custume to the king, vnder the pane of tinsall of all gold and siluer that beis fundin with him, and x. pund to the King for the vnlaw." Acts Ja. I., 1424, c. 16, Edit. 1566.

To TINSALL, TINSELL, v. a. To injure; synon. with skait; formed from the s.

"Gif he does otherwise, the partie that is essonyied will be tinsalled." Baron Courts, c. 40, s. 2.

"And gif sic essonyie without borgh, be made against the soyte of the partie mutand in court, he that swa is essonyied may be tinselled and skaited." Ibid. c. 34, s. 3.

TIN-EGIN, s. Forced fire, West. Isl. V. NEID-FYRE.

[TING, s. 1. A tongue of land jutting into the sea, Shetl.

2. An affix in names of many districts in Shetland.]

[TING, s. Thing; a corr. of the E. term, Shetl.]

To TING, v. a. and n. To ring.

—In ane dreme she fel,
And by aperaunce herde quhere she did lie
Cupide the King tingand a silvir bel.
Quich men micht here fro hevin into hel.
Henryson's Test. Creneide, Chron. S. P., i. 161.

Hence ting-tung, a reduplicative term used among children, to denote the sound made by a bell. Tent. tinghe-tangh-en, tintinnare.

To TINK, v. a. To rivet, as including the idea of the noise made in the act of rivetting; a Gipsy word, Roxb.

The E. v. to Tink, as denoting a sharp sound, is most probably the origin, derived from C. B. tinc-ias, to tinkle.

To TINKLE on, v. n. [1. To ring chimes about; hence to praise one immoderately, Loth.]

2. To trifle about; [to work in a lazy, trifling manner; as, "Hit it, man: ye're jist tinklin' on't," Clydes.]

"If that man now go to tinkle on bishops, and delinquents, and such foolish toys, it seems he is mad." Baillie's Lett., ii. 208.

TINKLE-SWEETIE, s. A cant name formerly given in Edinburgh to the bell rung at eight o'clock, P.M., as that which was rung at two o'clock was called the Kail-bell.

Both these terms are well remembered by some yet alive. The eight-hours bell was thus denominated, because the sound of it was so secret to the ears of apprentices and shopmen, as they were then at liberty to shut in for the night.

[* TINKLER, s. A loud, scolding woman, Ayr.

Prob. so called from her likeness to the loud, bold, randy tinkler's-wife.]

[TINKLER, adj. Loud, scolding, blustering, ibid.

For Paddy Burke, like ony Turk,
Nae mercy had at a' man;
An' Charlie Fox threw by his box,
An' lows'd his tinkler jaw, man.
Burns, When Guilford Good, &c., s. 5.]

[TINKLER'S CURSE. The term is applied to anything that is worthless; as, "It's no worth a tinkler's curse," Banffs.]

TINKLER'S TIPPENCE. Expl. "useless cash," Gall. Encycl.; money to be spent, as a tinker wastes his, in the change-house.

TINNEL, s. Water mark.

"Gif ony tymbrell, utherwayis callit ane littil quhail, or ony uther fisch, is fund within the seamark, foiranent the land—of ane Baron or uther frehalder, the quhilk fisch may be drawin outwith the tynnel of the sea to the land, with sax oxin yokkit in ane wane, the samin could pertene to the Baron or frehalder." Balfour's Pract., p. 555.

L. B. "Tinnel-ius—The sea-marke, vtherwaies in English, tyde-mouthe; that is, the farrest parte quhair the sea tyde flowis. Littus quo scilicet fluxus hybernus maris maximus excurrit, hoc est quantumcunque mare aliquo plus extenditur in hyme vel aestate, tantum est littus ejus. Gl. Instit." Skene, Verb. Sign.

It may have been formed from A.-S. tyne, a hedge, a fence; or Su.-G. taen-in, to extend; q. that which forms a fence to the sea, or the utmost extent of its fluctuation.

[TINSALL, s. and v. V. under TINE.]

[TINT, pret. and part. pa. Lost. V. TINE.

Till first ae caper, syne anither,
Tam tint his reason a' thegither.
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.]

TINT NOR TRIAL. V. TAINT.

TINTOE, s. The pin used in turning the cloth-beam of a loom, Paisley, Edinburgh.

[TINWALD COURT. "This word, yet retained in many parts of Scotland, signifies Valis Negotii, and is applied to those artificial mounds, which were in ancient times assigned to the meeting of the inhabitants for holding their Comitia." Sir W. Scott.]

[TIORDIN, s. Thunder, Shetl. Dan. tor-den, Sw. thordon, id.]

TIP, s. A ram, Galloway, Clydes.

Of't as, among the bushy birny braes
Young Colin plodded wi' his strayed tips,
He'd cast a look upo' the lonely cot
Wi' wishfu' een.—

Davidson's Seasons, p. 99.

She was nae get o' moorland tips,
Wi' tawted ket, an' hairy hips.

Burns, iii. 82.

A. Bor. "Teap, tup, a ram. North." Grose. He also gives it in the form of Tip. V. TUP.

To TIP, v. n. To take the ram.

"Tip when you will, you shall lamb with the leave;" [l. lave, i. e., rest.] S. Prov. Kelly, p. 306. V. LAMB, v. It is also used actively.

"The lamb where it's tipped, and the ewe where she's clipped;" S. Prov., "a proverbial rule about tythes; signifying that the lamb shall pay tythes in the place where the ewe was when she took the ram, but the old sheep where they were shorn." Kelly, p. 307.

S. it is tup. Johns. expl. this v. "to but like a ram." But in O.E. it had the same sense as in S. Hence Phillips renders it, to cover the ewe.

[*TIP, s. 1. The best; applied to persons and things as a mark of excellence; as, the tip o' the family, the tip o' the market, the tip o' the ball, i. e., the belle of the ball, Clydes., Banffs.

2. An equal, a match; the thing required, ibid.

3. A nick, a notch; also, a dram of ardent spirits, Shetl.

4. That which fixes, settles, or silences; as, that's the tip for him, Clydes.

Evidently a metaph. use of E. tip, the topmost point.]

To TIP, v. a. [1. To excel, exceed, overcome, Clydes.

It seems to be merely a metaph. use of E. tip, as signifying to strike slightly.

2. To equal, to match, ibid., Banffs.

3. To kick, as when playing at football, Shetl.]

4. Used to signify the effect of an expression, action, or event, which disappoints or nettles one. That tips him; It silences or mortifies him, S.

[TIPPER, s. A belle, a beau, a grand person, Banffs.]

TIPPY, adj. Dressed in the highest fashion, modish, Renfr.

A. Bor. "Tippy, smart, fine. Tippy Bob;" Gl. Brock.

TIPPY, s. The ton; as, at the tap of the tippy, at the top of the fashion, Renfr.

Most probably from E. tip, the top, the extremity.

[TIPP, s. and v. V. TIP.]

To TIPPANIZE, v. n. To act the toper, properly in drinking small beer, S.

"Your tippanizing, scant o' grace."
Quoth she, "gars me gang duddy;
Our nighbour Pate sin break of day's Been thumping at his studly."

Ramsay's Poems, l. 277.

"Scant o' grace," seems to be an appellation. V. TWO-PENNY.

To TIPPER, v. n. To walk on tiptoe, or in an unsteady way, to totter; as, to tipper up a hill, Su.-G. tipp-a, leviter tangere.

This undoubtedly gives the origin of Tippertie q. to tipper, or walk unsteadily, on the tae or toe.

To TIPPER-TAIPER, v. n. To totter, Lanarks.

[TIPPERIN, adj. Taking short uncertain steps, tottering, slipping on tiptoe, S.]

TIPPERTIN, s. A bit of card with a small piece of stick passed through it; resembling a te totum, Loth. Hence the phrase, to loup like a tippertin.

TIPPERTY, adj. 1. Unstable. An object is said to be tipperty, or to stand tipperty-like, when it is ready to fall, S. B.

2. To gang tipperty-like, to walk in a flighty, ridiculous sort of way, S. B.

3. Applied to a young woman, who walks very stiffly, precisely, or with a mincing gait, Fife.

Q. to walk on tip-toes; as allied to E. tip, top or end, Su.-G. Dan. tipp, Isl. typpe, cacumen.

TIPPET, s. 1. One length of twisted hair or gut in a fishing-line, S. Tibbet, Fife, Mearns; synonym. Leit, Upp. Clydes.

C. B. tip, a bit, a small fragment; or Teut. tip, apex.

2. A handful of straw bound together at one end; used in thatching, Aberd., Clydes.

This, however, may be allied to Fris. tepp-en, carpere, vellere, as being plucked from the stack.

3. St Johnstone's Tippet, a halter. V. RIB-BAND.

[TIPPET-STANE, s. A circular stone with a hook in the centre, used in twisting tippets.]

[TIPPY, s. and adj. V. under TIP.]

To TIPTOO, v. n. To be in a violent passion, Ayr.; perhaps q. set on tiptoe. But see TAPTOO.

To TIRL, TIRLE, v. n. 1. To quiver, vibrate, thrill; hence, to change, to veer about; applied to the wind, Loth.

Allied perhaps to Isl. thirl-a, circumagere; thyr-l-a, turbine versari subito.

2. To touch the chords of an instrument, so as to produce tremulous vibrations of sound.

Courage to give, was mightily then blown
Saint Johnstone's Huntsup, since, most famous known
By all musicians, when they sweetly sing
With heavenly voice, and well concurring string,
O how they bend their backs and fingers tirle.

Muse's Threnodie, p. 133.

Evidently the same with E. trill, which Johns. derives from Ital. trillo, a quaver. But this, I apprehend, is itself derived from Su.-G. drill-a, vocem inter canendum crispare; trall-a, cantillare.

[3. To tirl at the pin, to twirl the handle of the latch.]

Probably the same with E. Twirl, "to turn round; to move by a quick rotation." This idea has been suggested by the notice in Gl. Antiq. "Tirling at the door-pin, twirling the handle of the latch."

It seems used in a similar sense in the S. poem, Sweet William's Ghost, Ramsay's Tea Table Miscellany.

There came a ghost to Margaret's door,
With many a grievous groan,
And ay he tirled at the pin.

In E. Dict. this is derived from Whirl. But certainly without any proper reason. Serenius, in vo., gives different terms that seem to have a superior claim of affinity; Isl. thyr-l-a, turbine versari subito; thyrill, Sw. torrell, verticillum, quo lacticinia agitantur.

To TIRL, TIRLE, v. a. [1. To twirl; to cause to rotate rapidly, or to turn over frequently, S.]

2. [To strip off, to toss away]; to uncover; as, to tirl a house, Gl. Shirr. Aberd.

It seems properly to include the idea of velocity of motion, as having been originally used to denote the effect of the wind.

—Whyles on the strong-wing'd tempest flyin,
Tirling the kirks.

Burns, iii. 71.

Mr. Chalmers is therefore mistaken when he mentions it as one of Sibbald's egregious interpolations, "that he gives tirl for tirr." Works Sir D. Lyndsay, iii. 215.

Tirl is used in the same sense in Galloway.

Whan the wind blaws loud and tirls our strae,
An' a' our house-sides are dreeping wi' rain,
An' ilka burn rows frae the bank to the brae,
I weep for our Habbie wha rows i' the main.

Remains of Nithdale Song, p. 33.

3. To pluck off lightly and expeditiously; applied to dress.

And syne this fule thay thankit of al,
That caused sik concord among them fal.
And of his coate thay tirlit be the croun,
And on him kest ane syde clarkly gonn.

Priests Peblis, S. P. R. i. 30.

This is classed by Sibb., as if it were the same with Tirr, or a dimin. from it. But perhaps it is from a common fountain with E. twirl; Isl. thyr-l-a, turbine versari subito, G. Andr. This indeed expresses the sense in which the term is still frequently used, as denoting the effect of an impetuous wind.

4. To strip, applied to property, S.

Name gathers gear withouten care;—
Suppose then they should tirle ye bare
And gar ye fike;—

E'en learn to thole. — Ramsay's Poems, i. 300.

[5. To cause to vibrate, to thrill; as, "He tirled the strings," Clydes.]

6. To trill, S.

— I hope it's nae a sin
Sometimes to tirl a merry pin
As weel's we're able,
Whan fowks are in a merry bin
For sang or fable.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 134.

TIRL, TIRLE, s. [1. A vibration, the act of vibrating, S.]

2. A twirl, a toss round or over and over; the act of rotating, S.]

3. A substitute for the trundle of a mill, Shetland.

"A round piece of wood, about 4 feet in length, and fitted with 12 small boards, in the same manner as the extremity of the exterior wheel of an ordinary mill, with a strong iron spindle fixed to its upper end, supplies the place of a wheel in these mills. The iron spindle, passing through the under millstone, is fixed in the upper. A pivot in the under end of the tirl (the piece of wood above mentioned) runs in a hollowed iron plate.—The tirl occupies the same situation under this mill, as the trundles in the inner part of an ordinary mill; and it performs the same office. The diameter of the tirl is always equal to that of the millstone." P. Unst, Shetl. Statist. Acc. v. 195.

This is undoubtedly allied to Su.-G. trill-a, rotari, to trundle, Dan. trill-er.

4. A smart tap or stroke, S. either as allied to the v. TIRLE, or denominated from its producing a thrilling sensation. V. DIRLE.

5. A touch, in the way of intermeddling with any thing.

Her nain-sell shook her naked breeches,
For she was tyred with his speeches;
She would far rather had a tirle
Of an Aquavitae barrel.

Cleland's Poems, p. 32.

6. A gentle breeze, S. synon. a pirr of wind.

King Aeol, grant a tydie tirl,
But boast the blasts that loudly whirl.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 201.

7. A dance.

—The young swankies on the green,
Took round a merry tirl.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 262.

TIRLIE, TIRLY, s. [1. Applied to a waving or ornamental line in scroll-work or carving; also, to the ornament itself. Tirlywirly is also used, S.]

2. Applied to a winding in a footpath. "Tirlies, little circular stoppages in pathways which turn round;" Gall. Enc.

TIRLING OF THE MOSS. The act of paring off the superficial part of the soil which lies above peats, S.

"The best peat—is commonly not above 14 or 18 inches, or the length of a peat, in deepness, after removing the surface soil with the roots of the heath, or ling, growing on it, called the tirling of the moss." Agr. Surv. Peebles. V. Pennecuik, p. 71, N.

TIRLY-TOY, s. Apparently synon. with Tirly-wirly, a toy or trifle, Aberd.

What can ye be that con'd employ
Your pen in sic a tirly-toy,
Frae hyne awa' as far's Portsoy.—

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 183.

TIRLYWIRLY, TIRLIEWIRLIE, s. 1. A whirligig, S.

Tirly mirly, used as an appellative, Evergreen, ii. 20, seems originally the same.

"Kerly-merly, a fanciful or useless thing," (Gl. Westmorel.) is probably a corr. of this. At anyrate, it is a term of similar formation.

2. A figure or ornament of any kind on stone, wood, stockings, S.

It is used to denote clocks in stockings.

Red, blue, an' green, an' likewise pearl,

I hae to fit the little girl;—

Wi' mony a bony tirly-wirl

About the queets.

Forbes's Shop Bill, Journal, p. 13.

It was in and through the window-broads,

And a' the tirlie-wirlies o'd,

The sweetest kiss that ever I got,

Was frae my Dainty Davie.

Dainty Davie, Herd's Coll., ii. 215.

It would seem comp. of two synon. terms, Su.-G. trill-a, and hworl-a, rotare, q. something that is whirled.

TIRLYWIRLY, TIRLIE-WIRLIE, adj. Intricate; or as conjoining the ideas of intricacy and trivial ornament, S.

"The air's free enuech,—the monks took care o' that,—they hae contrived queer tirlie-wirlie holes, that gang out to the open air, and keep the stair as caller's a kail-blaid." Antiquary, ii. 148.

"Tirlie-wirlie holes, intricate holes;" Gl. Antiq.

TIRLES, s. pl. Some kind of disease.

The Teasick, and Tooth-aiik, the Titts & the Tirles.

Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 14.

V. FEYK.

Fr. tarle signifies a wood worm; but there seems no affinity.

TIRLESS, TIRLASS, TIRLIES, s. 1. A lattice, grate, or rail. It is now generally applied to that used for defending a window, S.

"At the back of the throne were two rooms on the two sides. In the one, Duke de Vanden, Duke de Valler, and other French nobles, sat; in the other, the King, Queen, Princes, Mary, the Prince Elector, and some court ladies. The tirlies that made them to be secret, the King brake down with his own hands; so they sat in the eyes of all; but little more regarded than if they had been absent; for the Lords sat all covered." Baillie's Lett., i. 259.

2. A wicket, a small gate, S. B.

"That at or near the westmost pole,—there is a tirlase, at which a single person may enter; and he recollects no other opening on any part of said planted inclosures at the north." State, Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 194.

This term had been formerly used to denote a wattled grate.

"Cratis ferrea, cratis viminea, a Tirlies." Despaut. Gram. D. i.

TIRLESS-YETT, s. A turnstile, S.

Fr. treillis, "a grate set thick with cross bars of wood." Cotgr. Teut. trælic.

TIRLLEST, part. adj. Having grates, latticed, trellised, S. V. TERLYST.

TIRMA, s. The sea-pie, a bird; hoematopus ostralegus, Linn.

"The Tirma, or Sca-Pie, by the inhabitants called Trilichan, comes in May, goes away in August." Martin's St. Kilda, p. 35.

TO TIRR, TIRUE, v. a. 1. To tear.

Or in quhat land lysis thou manglit and schent,
Thy fare body and membrs tyrryt and rent.

Doug. Virgil, 924, 27.

It may be viewed as synon. with rent, lacerum being the only term used by Virg.

—Aut quæ nunc artus avolsaque membra,
Et funus lacerum tellus habet!—

Aen., ix. 491.

There is a possibility, however, that Doug. alludes to the preceding complaint of the mother of Euryalus, that she was not at hand to dress his dead body.

Veste tegens. —

Rudd. and Sibb. derive it from Fr. tir-er, to draw.

But if the sense given above be just, (and it receives confirmation from another passage to be quoted just now,) it directs us to A.-S. tyr-an, tyrw-an, to tear, as the origin of our tirr.

2. To uncover in a forcible way, S., q. to tear off.

Vato him syne Eneas genin has,
That by his vertw wan the second place,
Ane habirgeoun of birnist mailleis bricht,— Quhillk he sum time, with his strang handis two,
Tirrit and rent of bald Demoleo.

Doug. Virgil, 136, 22.

Thir venerable virgins, whom the world call witches,
In the time of their triumph, tirr'd me the tade.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 17.

"Scot. to tir one to the skin, i.e., strip him naked;"

Rudd.
Both these examples evidently suggest the idea of force. Hence, a house is often said to be tirred by a strong wind.

"They tirred skipper Walker out of his cloaths, and clad him in rags." Spalding's Trouble, ii. 170.

3. To unroof, S.

"He tirred the hail toofalls of the office-houses,—and carried roof and slates away, wherewith he roofed a long school." Spalding, ut sup., p. 26.

"To tir a house, to take off the slates, tiles, &c. of a house;" Rudd.

4. Metaph. to strip one of his property, S.

The term is used in a very emphatic S. Prov. applied to a selfish greedy person: "He caresna quha be tirr'd, gin he be theikit."

Sae Fortune, tirr me steek by steek,
And hair by hair.

Morison's Poems, p. 99.

"They follow'd hastily, being under cloud and silence of night, lap about the house, and tried to tirr it." Spalding, i. 30.

5. To pare off the sward by means of a spade. Persons are said to tirr the ground, before casting peats; as they first clear off the surface that covers the moss. To tirr and burn, to cast turfs on bad ground, and burn them that their ashes may serve for manure, S.

"Terrave.—The name is evidently a corruption of Terræ navis; but whether given it by the Romans, or since they left the country, is uncertain. To this place a superstitious regard is attached by the vulgar. Tradition asserts, that some time ago a man attempting to cast divots (turf/s) on the side of it, no sooner opened the ground with the spade, than the form of an old man, supposed to have been the spirit of the mountain, made its appearance from the opening, and with an angry countenance and tone of voice, asked the countryman why he was tirring (uncovering) his house over his head? On saying this, the apparition instantly disappeared.—None has since ventured to disturb the repose of the imaginary spirit." P. Dunning, Perth. Statist. Acc., xix. 442.

VOL. IV.

The term is also used with respect to quarries.

"These quarries require very little tirring. In some places the rock has no covering of earth." P. St. Andrews, Fife, Statist. Acc., xiii. 201. Ibid. xi. 453.

6. To undress, to pull off one's clothes, S. B.

The phrase used by Rudd. properly belongs to this sense.

It is probable, indeed, that this is the true origin of turf, a term that has puzzled etymologists. As tyrf is used in the same sense in A.-S. it would appear to be derived from tyrw-an, to tear; the surface being thus rent from the soil. This etymon is not materially different from that of Seren, who derives Isl. torf, id. from what he designs antiquiss. Goth. torfa, effodere; according to Wachter, (vo. Torf,) the most ancient language of Iceland.

To TIRR the KIRK, to THEEK the QUIRE.

To act preposterously, to pull down with the one hand in order to rebuild with the other.

—"These who conform'd to the Romish rites,—as the proverb has it, tirr'd the Kirk, to theek the Quire; and cunningly got these on their side, to be placed in the room of the Culdees, who died and keep'd the places vacant, till such time as they got, from England and elsewhere, some of their own sentiments, to re-implace." Sibb. Fife, p. 193.

But here the Prov. is not applied with propriety; because the party referred to obtained their end, which was the subversion of the Culdees.

To TIRR, v. n. To snarl, to speak ill-naturedly, S.

Teut. tergh-en, irritare, lacerare, exacerbare; Mod. Sax. terr-en, id.

We have the term in the very same form in Dan. tirr-er, irritare, instigare, (Baden); properly denoting the act of setting on a dog, as S. tir-wirring signifies the growling of this animal.

TIRR, adj. Crabbed, quarrelsome, in bad humour, S. V. the v.

Isl. tirrin, difficilis, austerus; Haldorson.

[TIRR, s. A crabbed, ill-natured, quarrelsome child, S.]

TIRRACKE, TIRROOK, s. The Tarrock, Larus tridactylus, Linn., Shetl.

"The waterfowl took to wing,—answering the echoes with a thousand varying screams, from the deep note of the swabie or swartback, to the querulous cry of the tirracke, and kittiewake." The Pirate, i. 227.

[TIRRAN, TIRRIE, adj. Cross, ill-natured, enraged, Shetl. A.-S. tyran, to tear, to irritate.]

TIRRAN, s. A person with a perverse humour, with whom it is hardly possible to live, S.

It does not accord with the politesse of the French, that this term, in its secondary sense, should be restricted to the female sex. O. Fr. tyraine, tyrann, femme méchante, qui agit comme un tyren, qui abuse de son autorité; Roquefort.

[TIRRAN-SPREET, s. A cross-grained, ill-natured person or child, Shetl.]

TIRRIVEE, s. A fit of passion, S., or the extravagant mode of displaying it, as by prancing, stamping, &c.

"At length the faught began in earnest,—what a tirrivee and stramash! We had twa Highland regiments; some o' the sogers in them being shot, the rest gat mad on the instant—they saw blood." Gall. Enc., p. 420.

"It's a great pity of Evan Dhu, who was a very weel-meaning good-natured man to be a Hielandman; and indeed so was the Laird o' Glennaquoich too, for that matter, when he wasna in ane o' his tirrivees." Waverley, iii. 330.

"An' ye tak thae wuntlins and tirivees this way, we'll hae tae get the road postet tae haud ye up." Saint Patrick, ii. 267.

"Tirrivees, tantrums," Gl. Antiq.

The Exmore v. to terree is perhaps allied; "to struggle and tumble to get free;" Grose.

This has much appearance of being of Fr. origin; perhaps from tir-er, to draw; also, to dart forth; and vif, lively, as denoting the lively action of one animated by rage.

TIRWIR, TIRWIRIN, adj. Growling; a term applied to one who is habitually chiding or quarrelling. As tirwirr as a cat, S.

This might seem comp. of two synon. verbs, as more forcibly expressing the habit referred to; Teut. tergh-en, (V. Tirr, v.) and werr-en, to contend, or rather Isl. verr-a, to bark.

The Dutch use a term of similar combination, harre-warr-en, to jarr, to wrangle, to squabble, &c. Sewel; probably from harre, herre, a hinge, and warr-en, to entangle, to disturb, q. to grate on the hinges.

[To TIRSE, v. a. To tug, to pull with a jerk, Shetl.]

[TIRSE, s. A sudden jerk or pull, ibid. Probably allied to A.-S. tyran, to tear.]

TISCHE, TYSCHÉ, TYSCHÉY, TUSCHÉ, s. A girdle, a belt.

Ane riche tysche or belt hynt he syne,
The pendentis wrocht of byrnist gold maist syne.
Doug. Virgil, 238, 52.

And quhar hir pap was for the spere cut away,
Of gold thairon was belt ane riche tischey.
Ibid., 28, 25.

Holland and Dunbar use tusché in the same sense.

Syne schyre schapin to schaw, mony schene scheild
With tuscheis of tuest silk ticht to the tra.
Howlate, ii. 8, MS.

And of ane burde of silk, richt costlie grein,
Hir tusché was, with silver weil besene.
Maitland Poems, p. 70.

V. BURDE.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. tissu, "a wide sort of ribbon, a girth or fillet, or tissu, participle of tistre, to weave." Ilre views our term as allied to Su.-G. taska, Alem. Isl. tasca, Belg. tassche, tesache, a bag or scrip; observing, that S. tesche denotes such a girdle as the ancients used to fix their purses to. Hence Ital. tascha marsupium, intasc-are, to hide.

TISEDAY, TYSDAY, TYISDAY, s. Tuesday, the name given to the third day of the week, S.

"Yit befor the next day at 12 Hours (quhilk was Tyisday the 13th of Junii) the number passit thre thousand men, quhilk be Godis Providence came unto the Lordis." Knox's Hist., p. 141.

The bridal-day was set

On Tiseday for to be:

Then hey play up the rinawa' bride,

For she has ta'en the gie.

And when they came to Kelso town

They gart the clap gae thro',

—Saw ye a lass wi' a hood and a mantle,

Was maried on Tiseday 'teen?

Runaway Bride, Herd's Coll., ii. 87, 88.

This name has been generally derived from Tuisco, one of the deities of the Saxons, to whom it has been supposed that this day was consecrated. In A.-S. it is written Tweesdaeg, Dan. Tigsdag, Thysdag, Isl. Rijdag.

Arngrim views this as Tyrslag-ur, softened into Tysdagur; deriving the term from Tyr, one of the deities of the Goths, to whom great power over battle was ascribed. V. Bartholin. de Causis Contempt. Mort., p. 350, 351. According to G. Andr. it is from Tyr, Mercury or Mars; in the oblique cases, Ty.

Wormius traces the name to Disa, or Thisa, the wife of Thor; who was supposed to preside over justice. From her, he thinks, the third day of the week was in Dan. denominated Thijsdag. In honour of this goddess, sacred rites were annually performed with great pomp and solemnity at Upsal in Sweden. These were called Tijsating.

This learned writer having mentioned Tuisco, Lat. Teutas or Teutates, who was worshipped as a male divinity, observes that Tijs did not correspond to the Teutates, but to the Heus, of Latin writers. He adds, that, according to Vossius, de Idolol. Lib. 2, c. 33, T was often prefixed to H. Monument. Dan. Lib. 1. c. 4. Fast. Dan. Lib. 1. c. 15.

TISSLE, s. "A struggle; same with Dissle;" Gall. Enc.; merely a variety of TAISSE, q. v.

[TIT, TYT, adv. Soon; als tit, as soon as possible, very soon, Barbour, iv. 289, Skeat's Ed. V. TITE.]

[TIT, TITE, pret. Pulled, snatched, Barbour, v. 603. V. TYTE.]

TIT, s. A snatch. V. TYTE, s.

TITTISH, [TITSAM, TITTY], adj. Captious, testy, ill-humoured, S.; [titsam is the form in Shetl.]

TITTY, adj. 1. The wind is said to be titty, when forcible, or coming in gusts, S. B. from tit, a stroke. V. TYTE, v. and s.

2. Captious, testy, Renfr.

In the latter sense it nearly resembles A. Bor.

"Teety or Teathy, fretful, fractious; as children when cutting their teeth;" Grose. From the illustration given, it would seem that this humorous writer viewed it as having some connection with the teeth. Mr. Brockett refers to E. Techy, with which Titty seems to have no connexion. Perhaps in both the senses given above, it may be traced to the same origin with tyte, quickly. Verel. gives Isl. titt, not only in the sense of Promptum, but also as signifying, Frequens, quod saepe fit; being the neuter of Tid-r.

TITUPP, s. A trigger.

"In the middes of this hous was ane ymago of bran maid in the similitude of Kenneth with ane goldis apill in his hand, with sic ingyne, that als sone as ony man maid him to throw this apill out of the hand of the ymage, the wrying of the samyn drew all the tituppis of the crosbowis vp at anis, & schot at hym that threw the apill." Bellend. Cron., B. xi., c. 10.

From tit, tyte, a pull, a slight stroke, conjoined with the prep. vp; as denoting the motion of the trigger upwards.

TIT. A tit, agog.

"All men, I know, ar not alike disposed, and yit all men wer never mair a tit." Bruce's Eleven Sermon, P. 2, a.

Perhaps allied to TID, s. q. v., q. in the humour of any thing.

TIT FOR TAT. Exact retaliation, a fair equivalent, S.

"I lang'd ance for some jewels costely,
"And staw them frae a sneaking miser,
"Wha was a wicked cheating squeezer,
"And much had me and others wrang'd."
The father says, "I own my son,
"To rob or piller is ill done;
"But I can eith forgive the faut,
"Since it is only tit for tat."

Tit for Tat, Ramsay's Poems, ii. 513, 514.

This phrase is retained in the intercourse of children, in the following adage, uttered when one returns a stroke received from another, "Tit for tat's fair play in gude cottar fechtin'." Loth.

This phrase, though overlooked by Johns., Bailey, &c., is given by Grose in his Class. Dict. as signifying "an equivalent." It is, however, generally, if not always, used as denoting retribution of evil. Though now classed among cant terms, it most probably has a more ancient origin than the most of these. Serenius renders the phrase, "to give one tit for tat," gifica enim titt foer tatt. I see no vestige of it, however, in any other Lexicon. Might we not view tit for tat as formed from S. tit, a slight stroke? Thus the reduplicative phrase will merely signify one tap or stroke for another; and it will resemble, not only in form, but in meaning and origin, the very ancient expression Lil for Lal, q. v.

It may be a contraposition of the Teut. or Goth. pronouns signifying this and that, with the slight change of a letter of the same organ. Thus, Belg. dil voor dat would literally signify, this for that. There is a Sw. phrase which has some analogy: Tog detta och gif me det; Take this, and give me that; Wideg. vo. Det.

TITBORE TATBORE. The play of Bo-peep.

"When, thervpon we have stablished against al their cavillations, they leape now back, & of new again intended accusation against our doctrine, what is this else, but (as children, in their sporting, childishly practise and more childishly speak) to play titbore tatbore with vs?" Forbes's Discoverie of Pervers Deceit, p. 4.

The first syllable tit is obviously the same with teet, in the common name of this sport, Teet-bo. But bore, if not a corruption, must have a different origin from bo, which may be viewed as the same with the E. interj. meant to produce terror, S. bu; q. "the game in which one peeps out to fright another." Shall we view bore as signifying a small opening, q. "peeping through a bore?"

In Aberdeenshire, the county in which Bp. Forbes resided, the phrase Titbo tatbo is still used by some old people, who had been accustomed in their youth thus to denominate the play of Bo-peep.

TITE, TIT, TYTE, TYT, adv. Soon, quickly.

He callit his marschall till him tyt.

Barbour, ii. 4, MS.

All samyn soundit the dedely bowis string,
Quhirrand smertly furth flaw the takyll tyt,
Quite throw the hede the Remulus did smyte.

Doug. Virgil, 300, 20.

Als tye, as soon, as tyte, id. S.

At this ilk coist ar we arriuit als tye,
And in the port enterit, lo, we se
Flokis and herdis of oxen and of fee.

Doug. Virgil, 75, 2.

Huc ubi delati. Virg.

P. 209.

Hearne improperly views this as the same with tite, close, tight. He indeed renders als tite, also (vel ad) tightly. V. Gl.

As tite, anon, shortly, as soon, id. Lancash.; tite, soon, A. Bor.

Rudd. derives it from A.-S. tid, tempus. Macpherson, more properly, from Isl. titt, ready. This seems formed from tid-r, titt, Su.-G. tid, frequens, diurnans; the origin of which is evidently tijd, tempus. Su.-G. tid, although primarily signifying time, is used in the sense of, quickly. Komma i tid, not to delay. Isl. Foro their i burt som tydaz; They departed as quickly as possible; Heims Kringl. l. p. 261.

To TITLE, v. n. To prate idly, S. tittle, the same with the E. v. tittle-tattle.

"Otherwise I should have at the earnest desire of the House of Guise, my old and great acquaintances, while I was residing at the court of France, titled in the Queen's ear, that her rebellious subjects, who had at their own hands, without her authority, changed their religion, should have been exemplarily punished as rebels and trayters." Melvil's Mem. Author's Address to his Son.

Under E. tattle, Seren. refers to Sw. tatt-a, reprehendere; Isl. thicatt-a, nugari. Perhaps Su.-G. tuctalan, double-tongued, from tice, two, and tala, to tell, may be a cognate term; as tattlers are generally false to both parties.

[TITTY, adj. Captious. V. under TIT.]

TITULAR, s. The name given to a person who, although a laic, had a donation of church lands at or after the Reformation.

"—Declaires the saids Titulars to be free and liberat of the ministers stipend pro rata," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vol. V. 200.

"Titulars of Election, are those who, after Popery were destroyed, got a right to the parsonage tithes, which had fallen to monasteries, because of several parishes that had been mortified to them." Dict. Feud. Law.

The person, invested with this property, was thus designed as having a legal title to the tithes.

[TITUPP, s. A trigger. V. under TIT.]

[TIVLACH, s. 1. A thick cake of coarse meal; properly, the last of the baking, an odd or extra one, Shetl.

2. The tail of an animal, ibid.

Sw. tillfällig, accidental, extra.]

[To TIZE, v. a. To entice, Shetl.]

To TIZZLE, v. a. To stir up or turn over; as, "to tizzle hay," Fife.

Perhaps q. Teazle, from the E. v. to Teaze.

TO, adv. 1. Too.

Thai war all out to fele to fycht
With few folk, off a symple land.
Bot quhar God helpys quhat may withstand?
Barbour, xi. 201, MS.

i.e., Too many. A.-S. to, nimis.

2. "When preceding a verb, part. or adj., quite, entirely, very." Gl. Wynt.

Thai fand thare mawmentis, mare and myn,
To fruschyd and to brokyn all,
And castyn downe in pecis small.

Wyntoun, vii. 10. 71.

Here war we first to fruschit and hard beset,
With dartis and with stanis all to bet.

Doug. Virgil, 52, 41.

To bet, i.e., much hurt, overpowered. Obruimur, Virg. A.-S. to beat-an, dilacerare.

This form occurs in O. E.

"Too monithes after the batel of Poyter, the cite of Basile al to shaken and rent with an yerth quake." Leland's Collectan., i. 568.

Mr. Macpherson refers to Wachter, who in his Prolegom. Sect. v. observes that Germ. zu is used as an adverb, denoting excess, also intension. The former quotes as examples, A.-S. to-greysan (l. to-cweysan) to shake in pieces; to-broken, quite broken; to-fuegen, very glad. He also refers to Tyrwhitt in vo., who observes that "to, in composition with verbs, is generally augmentative."

But both these learned writers seem mistaken, in viewing to, as if it occurred only in one sense. It is indeed augmentative, as in to-faegen, perlaetus; and in this sense may be traced to A.-S. to, insuper. But it is very often disjunctive, having the force of Lat. dis. Thus, to-braccan is rendered by Lye, disrumpere, to-crysan, not only, quatero, but dissipare; to-beutan, dilacerare, diverberare, to-brædan, dilatare, to-clifan, diffindere, &c. It must be admitted, however, that in some of these compounds, it is chiefly augmentative or intensive; the v. in its simple state conveying the idea; as in to-braccan and to-clifan.

3. Shut, close; pron. tu, as Gr. v. The dore is to, S. The door is shut, [i.e., put to the door-post.]

Belg. toe, id. De duur is toe. In Belg. toe is used as an adj. Germ. zu, id. Significat clausum, sicut anf apertum. Hinc vulgo dicimus, Die thür est zu, janua clausa est; item zuthun, zumachen claudere, clausum facere. Wachter, Prolegom. Sect. v. vo. Zu.

- TO, prep. Used in the sense of down, S. "Ganging to of the sun," his going down.

"All summoundis could be execute in the time of day light, efter the sone rying, and befor the ganging to of the samin; for all summoundis execute in the time of night, efter the setting of the sone, is of nane avail, gif only alleldis and opponis the samin." Balfour's Pract., p. 303.

Gawin Douglas uses went to in the same sense.

Be this the son went to, and we forwrocht
Left desolate, the wyndis calmit eik.

Doug. Virg., 87, 31.

- TO-AIRN (o pron. as Gr. v.), s. A piece of iron, with a perforation so wide as to admit the pipe of the smith's bellows, built into the wall of his forge, to preserve the pipe from being consumed by the fire, Roxb.

Teut. toe signifies clausus. Shall we suppose that it has this designation, because it encloses or shuts in the mouth of the pipe?

- TOALIE, TOLIE, s. A small round bannock or cake of any kind of bread, Upp. Clydes.; Todie, synon. Roxb.

C.B. tol, that which is rounded and smooth.

- [TOAM, s. and v. V. TOME.]

- [To TÖB, TOBE, v. a. and n. 1. To chide, to carp at, Shetl.]

2. To be talkative, to prose, ibid.]

- [TOBIN, part. adj. Prosing, talkative, making silly speeches, ibid.]

Dan. taabe, a fool, a simpleton.]

- TOCHER, TOUCHQUHARE, TOCHER-GOOD, s. The dowry which a wife brings to her husband by marriage, S. Tougher, Cumb.

The term is at times so obscured by the awkwardness of the construction, that it might at first view seem to denote the dowry settled by a husband on his wife.

"Our souerane Lord—confirmis the twa acquittances—to the town of Abirdene vpoun the payment of aucht thousand pundis quhilk was deliuerit to tham of the tocher of his maiesteis derrest spous the quenis grace, and quhilk thai had for annuell and proffeit." Acts Ja. VI., 1597, Ed. 1814, p. 149.

In an act immediately following, in regard to Perth, it is called "his maiesteis tocher;" as if it had been given by him to the queen. In like manner, in p. 87, c. 80, we read of "that part of his hienes tocher," amounting to "the soume of tuentie thousand pundis, quhilk was deponit and put in" the hands of "the provest, &c. of the burgh of Dundie."

There appears, however, to be no good reason to doubt that this refers to the portion which he had received, from the crown of Denmark, with the queen. This he had lent to the boroughs of Aberdeen, Perth, and Dundee, as being places of considerable trade, that he might receive annual interest on the capital.

"Peace was roborat with the Danys in this sort. King Charlis douchtir salbe geuin in marriage to Rolland. And Rolland with all the Danis sall ressaue the Cristin faith, and in the name of touchquharre sall haue al thai landis quhilkis wer namit afore Newstria." Bellend. Cron., B. x., c. 22.

"The first was married upon Sir William Crichton, heir to the said Lord Crichton foresaid, and got with her the land of Frendraught in tocher." Pitcottie, p. 26.

"King James III. being of the age of twenty years, taketh to wife Margaret the King of Norway's daughter, (otherwise the King of Denmark,) and got with her, in tocher-good, the lauds of Orkney and Shetland, with all right and title of right to them, pertaining to the King of Norway at that time." Ibid, p. 72.

Sibb., after Skinner, derives it from A.-S. taec-an, betac-an, tradere, assignare. But it is a Celt. term. Ir. tochar, a dowry; perhaps originally from Lat. dowar-ium, id.

- To TOCHER, v. a. To give one a dowry, S.

"He married her to his brother John Earl of Athole, the Black Knight of Lorn's son, and tocherd her with the lordship of Balveny." Pitcottie, p. 56.

- TOCHERLESS, adj. Having no portion, S.

Wha bids the maist, is sure to win the prize;
While she that's tocherless, neglected lies.

Shirreff's Poems, p. 76.

"As Baron of Bradwardine, I might have thought it my duty to insist upon certain compliances respecting name and bearings, quhilk now, as a landless laird, wi' a tocherless daughter, no one can blame me for departing from." Waverley, iii. 289.

- [TOCHT, s. Thought, Shetl.]

- To TO-CUM, v. n. 1. To approach.

In sic like wise Turnus was to cumyng;
And quhen that Pallas saw him cum so nere,
He mycht areik to him ane casting spere.

Doug. Virgil, 333, 8.

A.-S. to-cum-an, advenire.

2. In old writings it is often used with respect to the receipt of letters, in the same sense with come to in modern language.

"To al thaim to quhais knaulage thir present lettres sal to cum, William Chartris Lord of Caungor Gretyng in God," &c. Regist. Scon., p. 87. Macfarlan's MSS.

- TOCUM, TO-CUMMING, s. 1. Access, approach.

Baith here and thare Turnus the greuit sere
Went on horsbak, sersand about the wall
Euery dern way and secrete passage al,
Gif ony entre or tocum espy

Doug. Virgil, 275, 49.

And lat vs forrest haist vs to the se,
And thare recounter our fais, or thay land.
Quhilk as thay fyrst set fute vpon the sand

With slyd to cummyng, half deile in affray,
Or thay thare futeesteppis ferne, and tak array.
Ibid. 325, 27.

2. Meeting, encounter.

And furth thay streike thare lang speris on fer,
Drew in thare armes wyth schaftis chargeit wele far,
Tasit vp dartis, takillis, and fleand flanis,
To counter the first locum, for the nanis.

Doug. Virgil, 385, 50.

A.-S. to-cyme, adventus, accessus, an arriving, approaching; Somner. Belg. toe-komste, id. In like manner Sw. tiltrade, literally, a treading to; tilgang, a going to.

TOD, [TOD-LOWRIE], s. The fox, S.

"Item, of ilk dakar of Otter skinnis and Tod skinnis vi. d." Acts Ja. I., 1424, c. 34, Edit. 1566.

Sum in ane lamb-skin is a Tod.

Dundar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 41.

"Amang thame are mony martirikis, bevers, quhit-redis, and toodis." Bellend. Descr. Albion, c. 8.

—Thou may reil in his halie Evangell;

"Birds hes their nests, and tods hes their den,

"Bot Christ Jesus, the Saviour of men,

"In all this warld hes nocht ane penny braid,

"Quhalron he may repois his heavenlie head."

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 249.

The fox is vulgarly known by no other name throughout S. Yet I find no term that has the least resemblance to it, except Isl. toot, tove, vulpes, G. Andr. tofa, Verel.

This crafty animal is often called Tod Lowrie, and simply Lowrie, q. v.

This word seems to have been formerly used in the North of E. For Ben Johnson, in his Sad Shepherd, which contains many North-Country words, introduces Tods haireis.

Or strew Tods haireis, or with their tailles doe sweepe
The dewy grasse, to d'off the simpler sheepe.

This refers to some ancient pastoral customs, used for frightening sheep from breaking through inclosures. They either strewed some of the Fox's hair on the place, or brushed it with his tail; believing that the scent of this dreaded animal would act as a safeguard. The term occurs in another place.

Thou our fields dost still secure,
And keep'st our fountains sweet and pure,
Dri'v'st hence the Wolfe, the Tode, the Brock,
Or other vermine from the flock.

Masques, ii. 124.

But we can scarcely view it as much known; for I have not observed that it is used by any other E. writer. Perhaps Johnson, in hunting for north country words, might, without sufficient proof, adopt this as belonging to the north of E. It does not appear in any provincial Glossary. It must be recollected, however, that he was of Scottish extraction.

As Tod in E. signifies a bush, Mr. Chalmers has remarked, that "the fox is so called, probably from his bushy tail;" Gl. Lynde. But before this seem probable, it would be necessary to prove that the meaning of the term, as signifying a bush, was not only known in S., but known previously to its application to the fox. It does not appear, indeed, that it ever bore this sense in S.

TOD'S BIRDS. An evil brood, a perverse young generation; sometimes, Tod's Bairns.

"Suspect ever your affectionous, what ever entisement they haue to cloake the self with: suspect ever the motioun of them, for the Devill is in them:—Swa they wald ever be handled as Tod's birds; for they ar aye the war of ouer great libertie." Bruce's Eleven Sermon, 1591, Sign. Y. 8, a.

"Argyle—put some 4 or 500 on Kintyre shore, to watch on Antrim's designs; the rest on the head of Lorn, to hold the islanders and those tods birds of Lochaber in some awe." Baillie's Lett., i. 159.

"The Tod's Bairns are ill to tame," S. Prov., "apply'd to them who are descended of an ill parentage, or curs'd with a bad education. Such are hard to be made good or virtuous." Kelly, p. 329.

"You breed of the Tod's Bairns, if one be good, all are good," S. Prov., "spoken of a bad family, where there are [is] none to mend another." Ibid., p. 361.

In like manner, those called "the quhelpis of the wolfs," Acts Ja. I., c. 115, Edit. 1566, are, in the title, denominated wolf birds.

Birds, as applied to quadrupels, may be merely a tropical use of the term, as denoting the young of a fowl; especially as bairns is used in a similar manner. It deserves to be mentioned, however, that Isl. byrd has the sense of nativitas, genus, familia; Verel.

TOD-HOLE, s. A hole in which the fox hides himself, S.

"Ilk hag, and den, and todhole round about, seemed to be fu' o' plovers." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 49.

TOD and LAMBS. A game played on a perforated board, with wooden pins, S.

This game is materially the same with the E. one called Fox and Grease, described by Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 237, 238.

Some force, t' inclose the Tod, the wooden Lamb on;

Some shake the pelting dice upon the broad backgammon.

Anster Tair, C. ii. st. 71.

TOD-LIKE, adj. Resembling the fox; as expressing the idea of the use of crafty means for effecting the hurt of others, S.

—"Considering he's a gipsy, I'm far wrang if he iana an honest man, gin we make a proper allowance for his tod-like inclination to other folk's cocks and hens; but that's bred in him by nature." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 144.

Was worth that tod-like clan excise,
That jeuk wi' cannin crafty guise;
The tae wife's pot they mak their prize,
The tither's maut.

Tarras's Poems, p. 134.

TOD-PULTIS. Errat. for tod-peltis, fox-skins.

"Item, ane coit of blak taffiteis, lynit with tod pultis, and harit with martirik sabill, with ane vane of blak velvot." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 37.

This is probably an error of the writer for tod peltis, i.e., fox skins. E. pelt, Teut. pels, Germ. peltz, &c. id.

TOD'S TAILS, s. pl. Alpine club-moss, an herb, S. Lycopodium clavatum, Linn. It seems to receive its name, S. from its supposed resemblance to the tail of a fox.

"I ascended an eminence, matted knee deep with brown heather, amongst which that singular and beautiful creeping ornament of the moorlands, called by the peasantry tod tails, wound its green branches like plants of vegetable coral." Blackw. Mag. June 1820, p. 278.

TOD-TURN, s. A base trick, manifesting the low cunning of a fox; a term still used in some parts of the north of S.

"This will be very odd, for a Scots Parliament to do this, or Scotsmen to play their own country sic a Tod's turn. Fy, fy ! whare's the baulk and bra spirits of our forefathers, wha wad as soon a shoot [shot] their head in the fire, as pit too their hand to onny sic discreditable bargain, by whilk we'll get baith skaith and scorn." Lett. from a Country Farmer to his Laird, a Member of Parliament, p. 2. (A. 1706.)

TOD-TOUZING, s. "The Scottish method of hunting the fox, by shouting, bustling, guarding, halloaing," &c. Gall. Encycl.

TOD-TRACK, s. "The traces of the fox's feet in snow.—By the marks of his feet, he seems to have but two; for—he sets his hind feet exactly in the tracks of the fore ones;" Gall. Enc.

TOD-TYKE, s. A mongrel between a fox and a dog, S.

"Tod-tykes, dogs half foxes, half common dogs.—They are said to be excellent hunters;" Gall. Enc.

TOD, s. Bush. Ivy tod, ivy-bush.

"I will carry ye to a mair convenient place, where I hae sat mony a time to hear the howlit crying out of the ivy tod." Antiquary, ii. 147.

This is an O.E. word, now obsolete: and I mention it merely to point out what seems to be the root, although overlooked by English lexicographers;—Isl. tota, ramusculus; Haldorson.

TOD, TODIE, TODDIE, s. A small round cake of any kind of bread, given to children to keep them in good humour, Roxb.

Teut. tote, libum cornutum. Isl. toddi, integrum frustum, portio, tomus, or rather Isl. taata, placenta infantum; Haldorson.

TODDLE, s. A small cake or skon, Upp. Clydes.; a dimin. from Tod, id.

TODGIE, s. A round flat cake, of a small size, Berwicks.; apparently from Tod, id.

C.B. tais and teien, however, signify a cake; and toes, dough, paste of bread.

To TODDLE, TODLE, v. n. 1. To walk with short steps, in a tottering way, as children do, or those who are in some degree intoxicated, S.

Than out thar come the Modiwart,
Ane beist throw nature blind,
Quho fast the irth culd scrup and scart,
Rest and refuge to find:
Quhiles dodling and todling,
Vpon fowr prettie feit.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll., ii. 22.

Todle and Dodde are undoubtedly synon. Dodde is given by Seren. as an obsolete E. word corresponding to Lat. vacillare. Our term seems also equivalent, and allied to didille, a r. used by Quarles, although I have not met with it in any Dictionary.

And when his forward strength began to bloome,
To see him diddle up and doun the roome!
O, who would thinke, so sweet a babe as this,
Should ere be slaine by a false-hearted kisse!

Divine Fancies, Lib. I. 4.

The vera wee things, todlin, rin
Wi' stocks out owre their shouther.

Burns, iii. 127.

2. To purl, to move with a gentle noise, S.
Cou'd—todling burns, that smoothly play
O'er gowden beel,
Compare wi' Birks of Indermay!
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 25.

3. It denotes the murmuring noise caused by meat boiling gently in a pot, Fife; more generally tottle, S.

A junt o' beef, baith fat and fresh,
Aft in your pat be todlin!

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 67.

Isl. dudd-a, segnipes esse; Su.-G. tult-a, minutis gressibus ire, ut solent decrepiti aut infantes; Ihre. Isl. tolt-a, id. Seren. expl. doddle by tulta. Exm. totte, a slow, lazy person, totling, slow, idle, E. totty, shaking, unsteady, seem allied. The latter is derived by Dr. Johns. from totter, which has more the appearance of being a derivative than the other.

TODDLE, s. A designation given to a child, or to a neat person of a small size, Ang.

TODDLER, s. One who moves with short steps, S. V. HODLE, v.

TODLICH (gutt.), s. A child beginning to walk, Fife.

TO-DRAW, s. A resource, a refuge, something to stand one in stead, to which one can draw in danger or difficulty, Teviotd.

Teut. toe-dragh-en, is adferre; and Dan. tildragende, attractive. But I observe no term nearly allied. The same analogy occurs, however, in the formation of Teut. toe-vlucht, Germ. zukunft, Su.-G. tilflykt, refugium, a person or place to which one may fly; Belg. toe loop, Germ. zulauf, a resort, that to which one may run.

TO-FALL, TOO-FALL, s. The close. To-fall o' the day, the evening, S. Toofal of the night, id.

He shot them up, he shot them down,
The deer but and the rae;
And he has scour'd the gude green wood
Till to-fall o' the day.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 197.

But e'er the toofal of the night,
He lay a corps on the Braes of Yarrow.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 152.

Mr. Lambe views this image as drawn from a suspended canopy, so let fall as to cover what is below. V. Gl.

TOFALL, TOOFALL, s. A building annexed to the wall of a larger one. It now properly denotes one whose roof rests on the wall of the principal building, S.

Of the Corskyrk the ilyt twa,
Wyth leide the south yle thekyd alsua,
The north ile, and the qwere,
The *tofall*is twa war made but were.

Wyntonon, ix. 6. 126.

"The *tofall*s were not theeked, because they might not be overtaken this season." Spalding's Troubles, ii. 30.

"He tirred the hail toofalls of the office-houses, such as bake-house, brew-house, byres, stables, yea and of some toefall chambers also, and carried roof and slates away, wherewith he roofed a song school, and slated the same within Bernard Innes' close, where never song school was before." Spalding, ii. 26, 27. In the second instance here, it is used as an adj.

O. E. "Tofal, shedde. Appendixum. Appendix. Teges." Prompt. Parv., A. Bor. "Toofal, Toofull, or Teefall, a small building adjoining to, and with the roof resting on the wall of a larger one;—often pronounced Touffa;" Gl. Brockett. This is apparently the same with the sound given to the term in S. Tu-fa. Teut. loc-vall-en, adjungi, adjungere.

TOFORE, prep. Before.

And vther quhillis walle scho raik on raw,
Or pas tofore the altaris with fat offerandia.
Doug. Virgil, 101, 42.

A.-S. to-for, ante, coram.

TOFORE, adv. Before.

With thyr woundis the sprete of Dido Quene,
The quhillk tofore in luf was kendillit grene,
Now all in fyre the flambe of luf furth bleisid.
Doug. Virgil, 101, 23.

[TO FRUYCHIT, TO-FRUSCHIT, TO-FRUSCHYT, part. pa. Broken to pieces, dashed in pieces; crushed, bruised severely, Barbour, ii. 350, viii. 303, xiii. 146, xx. 385.

This is a hybrid word, being compounded of A.-S. to, in twain, and Fr. froisser, to dash.]

TOFT, s. A bed for plants, Caithn.; whence,

PLANT-TOFT, s. A bed for rearing young coleworts or cabbages, ibid.

"They make these nurseries or plant-tofts of small extent, that the dykes might shelter the young plants from the severity of the winter." Agr. Surv. Caithn., p. 119.

Isl. plant-a, plantare, and toft, area.

L.B. toft-um has certainly been formed from Su.-G. toft, also topt, area, properly that appropriated to building. Isl. topt, also written tof, tompt, tometa, is thus expl. by Verelius; Fundi pars aedificiis occupati; scala mensoria est, omnis partitionis agri per totum solum pago subiectum. Hann markhi topter til gartha; Descripsit areas aedibus; Heims Kring., T. I. p. 432. Dan. toft, tomt, huustomt, "the premises of a house, a yard;" Wolff. Norw. toft, taft, "the place where houses stand." Ihre derives the word from taepp-a, claudere, quum aedificiis fore cingi solet.

This term, however, is also used to denote a place of pasture near a village. Notat quoque locum pasuum juxta villam, quain a reliquis possessor divisam habent. Kal/romt, locus ubi pascuntur vituli; Ihre. Dan. tofte, ager villae subjacens, contiguus; Baden.

Haldorson, I observe, views tomt as the most ancient form of the word. For he refers to tom-r, vacuus, (S. tume), as its origin. He indeed defines toft, area domus vacua.

[TÖG, s. A person whom one values, or likes, Shetl.]

[TO-GA, pret. Fled, departed in haste; also, dispersed, Barbour, viii. 351, ix. 263; misprinted to ga.

This is a peculiar form of the past tense of Ga, to go, which is still used in the West of S.; as in, "It was a' by gin he ga hame."

TO-GANG, s. "Encounter, meeting, access;" Gl. Sibb., vo. To-cum.

TO-GAUN, s. A drubbing; as, "I'll gi'e you a gude to-gaun;" Lanarks.

This seems originally the same with To-gang. Apparently from Gae, to go, with the prep. To. Gae-to, syuon.

[TOGEDDER, TOGIDDER, adv. Together, Aberds.]

TOGERSUM, adj. Tedious, tiresome; pron. Tzhogersum; Mearns.

C.B. tog-i, signifies to elongate, to extend; tawg, that which is lengthened out; Ir. and Gael. tuirneach, weary, tired, appears to have had a common origin. Teut. togher is everriculum, a drag-net, from togh-en, trahere, q. what is drawn out, like Isl. tang, Su.-G. tog, funis, from a similar source. The termination seems to indicate that the term is of Goth. origin.

Perhaps it should be read as two words to hile, q. to imprison; A.-S. hrl-an, Su.-G. hel-a, occultare; A. Bor. to hile, to hyll, to conceal.

[Dr. Laing's Ed. has [tulge], to harass, to abuse; but in the Gloss. the editor suggests that it may be an errat. for to kill.]

Su.-G. torfw-a, verberare.

TOIT, s. A fit, whether of illness, or of bad humour; the same with Toutt. V. EYNDING.

TOKEN, s. A ticket of admission to the sacrament of the Supper.

The first instance, as far as I have observed, of the use of such tokens, was at the General Assembly at Glasgow, 1638.

"The church gates were strictly guarded by the town, none had entrance but he who had a token of lead, declaring that he was a covenantant." Spalding's Troubles, i. 89.

"The minister of the parish examines the people as to their fitness, and to those of whom he approves gives little pieces of tin, stamped with the name of the parish, as tokens, which they must produce before receiving it. This is a species of priestly power and sometimes may be abused." Boswell's Journal, p. 108, N., Ed. 1807.

This account is not quite accurate. According to the rules of the church, these tokens are, or at least ought to be, given by the minister in public. In dispensing them, he does not act individually, but as Moderator of the Session, the members of which are generally present. It is, indeed, properly a judicial act in which the Session is concerned. Although, as a matter of expediency, those who apply for admission to the Sacrament of the Supper are commonly examined by the Minister in private; if any one should think himself unjustly rejected on the ground of ignorance, he might claim it as his right to be examined in presence of the Session, and to be received or rejected according to the state of the votes. Nor does the receiving of a token merely respect religious knowledge. It no less regards the moral character of the candidate, in judging of which all the elders of the church are viewed as on a level; whatever preference be given to the Pastor in the trial as to knowledge.

TOKIE, s. An old woman's head-dress, resembling a monk's cowl, S. B.

Fr. toque, "a fashion of bonnet, or cap, (somewhat like our old courtiers velvet cap), worn ordinarily by schollers, and some old men;" Cotgr. Tocqué, coiffed, Span. toca, Ital. tocador, a woman's night head-dress.

It most nearly resembles Fr. toquet, a little toque; a maid-servant's cap. Tokie might seem to be of Gothic origin, as Dan. tokke is a cap or bonnet. Couarrubias, however, in his Tesoro Leng. Castellana, says that Span. toca, a coif, is by some derived from Arab. toque, id., as the Moors had this as a piece of dress. We may add C. B. toc, a hat, cap, or bonnet.

TOKIE, s. A fondling term applied to a child, S. B. Germ. tocke, a baby, a puppet.

TOLBUTHE, TOLLBOOTH, s. A prison or jail, S.

This term is mentioned by Johns. on the authority of Ainsworth. But it does not appear to have ever been properly received as an E. word in this signification. Phillips, indeed views this as a sense peculiar to Scotland.

"Toll-booth," he says, "a custom-house, or place where toll is paid; also the name of the chief prison of Edenborough in Scotland."

Skinner expl. it solely in the former sense.

It, therefore, seems most probable, that in S. it originally denoted the place of custom; and that it may have been transferred, in its application, to a place of confinement, in consequence of those who refused to pay custom, or who were chargeable with some breach of the law in buying or selling, being confined in the booth, in which those who received toll or custom were stationed, till reparation was made. Hence it might, by a slight transition, be used to denote a place appropriated for the confinement of transgressors of whatever description.

Whether this conjecture be well-founded or not, we certainly know that the place thus designed was early employed as the seat of the highest courts of the nation. The tollbooth was even the place of the meetings of Parliament.

"The Consale Generale haldyn at Strivilyn in the tollbuthe of that ilk," &c. Acts James II., vol. ii., 32. The present "tollbooth" of Edinburgh "was built by the citizens A. D. 1561, and destined for the accommodation of the parliament and courts of justice, and for the confinement of debtors and malefactors.—Since A. D. 1640, this building has been used solely for a jail." Arnot's Hist. Edin., p. 297.

It might appear that, so early as the year 1593, the parliament had a place of meeting distinct from the tollbooth. For in an act passed that year "for punishment of thame that trublis the Parliament, Session, and vther Jugementis," we find that "his hienes parliament house" is distinguished from "the inner tollbutth," where "the lordis of Session" are said to "sit for the administratioun of iustice."

VOL. IV.

In the acts of Parliament which were written in Latin, this is denominated Pretorium, the judgment-hall. V. Acts, Ed. 1814, vol. ii. p. 79. 87. &c. Isl. tollbud, Dan. tollbod, telonium.

TOLDOUR, TOLDOIR, s. A kind of cloth wrought with threads of gold.

"Item, ane pair of hois of blak velvett, cuttit out with toldour, with ane small trais of gold." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 43.

"Item, ane pair of hois of crammesey velvett, freyett with silvir cuttit out on toldoir." Ibid., p. 44.

This is evidently the same with Twecild doir. V. TWEAL and TWOLDERE.

Qu. toile d'or, from Fr. toile, cloth, linen cloth, and d'or, of gold. This might seem to be improperly substituted for drap d'or. But toile is used to denote clot of various kinds. Toile d'or, ou d'argent, est un estouffe dont les fils sont d'or ou d'argent. Dict. Trev. The origin is Lat. tela, a web. Twoldere, and Twecild doir, however much disguised, seem to be merely the same term, vitiated by the ignorance of the writer, who has substituted we and wo to give the sound of the diphthong oi.

TOLIE, s. A small round cake of any kind of bread. V. TOALIE.

TOLL, s. A turnpike, S. V. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 130.

[The term toll is used also to represent the tax levied at the turnpike.]

TOLL-BAR, s. A turnpike, S., A. Bor.; evidently from the bar or bars employed for preventing passage without payment of the toll imposed.

[TOLLIE, s. The person who levies tolls.]

TOLLIE, s. Excrement, Fife.

Isl. tolli, stripes obtusus; or C. B. tol, that which separates, tolch, a coagulated mass? Or rather tail, finna, stercus, tail-o, stercorare, Davies; Armor. and Cora. teil, merla; dung, dirt.

TOLLING, TOWLING, s. The name given to that sound which is emitted by bees before they swarm, Upp. Clydes.

"Most observers also affirm, that in the evening before swarming an uncommon humming or buzzing is heard in the hive, and a distinct sound from the queen, called tolling or calling. Mr. Hunter compares it to a note of a piano forte; and other authors to different tones." Edin. Encycl. vo. Bee, p. 414.

"If you listen, especially when they have done working, you will hear one of them making now and then a very distinguishable sound from the rest, which he begins to do about forty-eight hours before swarming, with this difference, that the first twenty-four hours the sound is much weaker, and the intervals betwixt the sounds are greater than in the other day,—when the noise is louder, and much more frequent.—This sound, commonly called Towling, proceeds, I suppose, from the young king, giving signal to his company to make ready for a march," &c. Maxwell's Bee-master, p. 46.

Mr. Bonner compares the note to Peep, peep, sounded rapidly three or four times, and then intermitted for a little.

Either from the E. v. to Toll, or from Sw. tull-a, canere, a word mentioned by Seren. as allied to Toll.

TOLLONESELLAR, s. A dealer in tallow, anciently written Tallone, Aberd. Reg.

TOLL-ROAD, s. A turnpike road, S.

TOLMONTH, TOLMOND, s. A year, twelve months, S.; Toumonth, Ayrs., q.v.

—"And that thai exerce thair said office frome the day of thair electioun to that day tolmonth allanerlie." Acts Ja. VI. 1587, Ed. 1814, p. 451.

"This tyme tolmond or thairby." Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

TO-LOOK, TOLUIK, s. A prospect, matter of expectation; as, a puir tolook, an ill prospect as to the future, S.

"Bot heirof had our proud and vane Quene no pleasour, and especially after that her husband was deid; for (thocht me) the to-luik of England sall allure mony wowers to me." Knox's Hist., p. 277.

"Bodwell—had the Queen of England by her Ambassador orlinar—to be his Commer, and Mr. Robert Bruce, my Uncle, and me, being moderatour of that Assembly, invited now and then to good cheer; having some great purpose and to-look in hand; but he was never luckie, nor honest to God nor man." Mr. Ja. Melvill's MS. Mem., p. 196.

A.-S. to-loc-ian, adspicere.

TOLOR, s. State, condition. V. TALER.

To TOLTER, v. n. To move unequally, to totter.

So tolter quihlum did sche it to wreye,
There was bot clymbe and rycht downward hye,
And sum were eke that falling sore,
There for to clymbe thair corage was no more.

King's Quair, C. v. 13.

Perhaps there is an inversion, for, "so did she at times writhe herself to make it totter."

Su.-G. tul-a, vacillare; Lat. tolutar-is, ambling.

TOLTER, TOLTIR, adj. Unstable, in a state of vacillation.

For sothe it is, that, on her tolter quebele.

Every wight cleverith in his stage,

And failyng foting oft quhen hir lest rede,

Sum up, sum down, is non estate nor age

Ensured more, the prynce than the page.

King's Quair, l. 9.

Before his face ane apill hang also,
Fast at his mouth, apon a tolter threde,
Quhen he gapit, it rokkit to and fro,
And fled as it refusit hym to fede.

This is part of the description given of Tantalus, in the Tractate of Orpheus kyng, Edinburgh, 1503. V. the v.

To-LUCK, s. Boot, what is given above bargain, S. mends, syuon. I got a penny to the to-luck.

This has originated from the vulgar idea of giving luck to a bargain; like Luck-penny, q. v.

TOME, TOM, TOUM, s. 1. A line for a fishing-rod, including the whole length, S.O. Cumb. A snood denotes only one length of the hair, from knot to knot.

It is used in the same sense in Shetl.

"That the rancelmen—see—all lines and toms made of horse-hair, and keep account thereof." Acts of Shetl. Survey, App. p. 3.

"He attached a cork to each small cord, or tome, as it is called, to which the hook is fixed, about six inches from the hook," &c. Edmonstone's Zetl. Isl., i. 362.

"He—cleekit out a hantle o' geds and perches wi' his towm." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 158.

We must undoubtedly view A. Bor. "Tawm, Tam, a fishing line," as originally the same. It would seem to be applied to one made of twine: "A lang twine tam," Gl. Brockett. Sibbald has given Towm as synon. with Tow, a rope; Gl.

2. A long thread of any ropy glutinous substance; as rosiu half-melted, sealing-wax, &c. Clydes.

The origin is undoubtedly Isl. For tawm signifies, 1. Habena; 2. Funis piscatorius. The first sense corresponds with that of Teut. toom, habena; the second with that of Norw. tomme, a line, a rope.

To TOME, TOUM, v. a. To draw out any viscous substance into a line, Roxb.; pron. q. Toom.

To TOME, or TOUM out, v. n. To be drawn out into a line, to issue in long threads, like any glutinous substance; as, "It cam towmin' out," Clydes., Roxb. To hing tawmin' down, to hang in the manner of saliva from the lips, ibid.; q. to hang down as a hair-line.

Su.-G. toyn-a may seem originally the same, signifying to be drawn out; extendi. Usurpatur de fanibus aliave, quae tenas producantur; Ihre. Hence giftea toeyn, to be ductile. He derives it from Isl. teig-in, extendere, protendere; although perhaps it is immediately from Su.-G. toyn-a, to draw.

TOME, s. Used, perhaps, for Book; L.B. tomus, libellus, codex. Fr. tome, part of a book in one volume.

For lyke crymes, the tyran Claudius
Losit his stait, and gat deid for his dome.
To speik of Nero now, I have na tome.

Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 274.

TOMERALL, s. "A horse two years old; a young cout or staig;" Gall. Enc.

Traum is the dative of Moes.-G. tua, duo, as tuam, the dative and accusative of the same term in A.-S.; and Moes.-G. ger, A.-S. gear, annus. Thus the first part of the word might seem to be q. tuam geara, two years. But it may be merely a corr. of Tomminaul, q. v.

TOMMACK, s. A hillock. V. TAMMOCK.

TOMMINAUL, s. An animal of the ox kind that is a year old, Ayrs.

Evidently corr. from Toumonth, a year or twal months, and Auld, old. V. ETTERLIN, and TOMERALL.

TOMMY NODDIE, TOM-NODDY. The Puffin, a bird, S. Orkn. The Tam Norie of the Bass.

"Puffin, Tom-Noddy." P. Luss, Dunbart. Statist. Acc. xvii. 251.

"The Puffin (alca arctica, Lin. Syst.), the coulter-neb, or tommy noddie of this place, is seen very often on our rocks; it buikls in holes under ground, and lays but one egg." Barry's Orkney, p. 305.

Tom-Noddy, S.O. P. Luss, Dunbart. Statist. Acc., xvii. 251. V. NORIE.

[TO-MORN, adv. To-morrow, Barbour, i. 124.]

TOMSHEE, s. A term introduced from Gael., signifying, in that language, a fairy-hillock.

"In the course of the morning she—gathered a four-leaved clover from one of those gently swelling and verdant mounds called in the language of the country Tomshee, or the 'hillock of fairies.' A four-leaved clover is called in the Highlands 'the shamrock of powers or virtues.' The finder—is esteemed very lucky." Clan-Albin, ii. 240, 241.

TO-NAME, s. A name added, for the sake of distinction, to one's surname; or used instead of it.

They theifs that steillis and tursis hame,
Ilk ane of them has ane to-name;
Will of the Lawie,
Hab of the Schawis:
To mak hair wawis,
Thay think na schame.

Maitland of Lethington, ap. Scott's Minstrelsy, I. Introd. CLIII.

"Owing to the marchmen being divided into large clans, bearing the same surname, individuals were usually distinguished by some epithet, derived from their place of residence, personal qualities, or descent. Thus, every distinguished moss-trooper had, what is here called a to-name or nom de guerre, in addition to his family name." Ibid. N.

TONE, part. pa. Taken.

Quhairfore I counsall every man, that he
With lufe nocht in the feindis net be tone.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 92.

*TONGUE, s. 1. On one's tongue, by heart, S. B.; [when one is on the point of uttering, Clydes. V. TONGUE-ROOTS.]

2. To gie aff the tongue, to deliver a message, or render an account, from recollection, or verbally, as contradistinguished from writing; as, "Did you give it in writing?" "Na, I gied it aff my tongue," S.

TONGUE-FERDY, adj. Loquacious, glib of the tongue, Ang.

Su.-G. tung, lingua, and faerdig, paratus. Many words of the same formation occur in Su.-G.; as spak-ferdig, meek, peaceable, raettferdig, hoyferdig, &c. Ihre thinks, that all the words, which have this termination, acknowledge A.-S. ferth, mens, animus, as their origin. If this be the case as to some of them, others seem more nearly allied to Teut. vaerdigh, expeditus, promptus, agilis. V. Laett, Ihre.

[TONGABLA, s. Incessant speaking, Shetl.; a corr. of tongue-gabble.]

TONG-GRANT, s. Acknowledgement, confession. "His awin tong grant;" Aberd. Reg.

TONGUE-RAIK, s. Elocution, S. V. RAIK.

TONGUE-ROOTS, s. pl. It was juist at my tongue-roots, a phrase commonly used as intimating either that a person was just about to catch a term that had caused some degree of hesitation, or that he was on the point of uttering an idea in which he has been anticipated by another, S. [Tip of the tongue, E.]

To TONGUE-TACK, v. a. To prevent from freedom of speech.

"It has been the trick of all the enemies to gain their woeful purposes, and very fatal to, and hath tongue-tacked many a valiant hero for Christ in our day." Society Contendings, p. 218.

TONGUE-TACKED, part. pa. 1. Tongue-tied; applied to those who have an impediment in speech, in consequence of the membrane, which attaches the tongue to the under part of the mouth, coming too far forward, S.; pron. tongue-tackit.

2. Applied to a person that is accustomed to speak a good deal, who becomes suddenly or unusually silent; as, "What ails ye the night, man? Ye look as gif ye were tongue-tackit," S.

3. Mealy-mouthed; not speaking the truth with becoming boldness, S.

"Queen Mary—gave him [John Knox] that sharp challenge, which would strike our mean-spirited tongue-tacked ministers dumb, for his giving publick faithful warning of the danger of the church and nation, thro' her marrying the Dauphine of France." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 60.

"Mr. Shields much lamented his silence before that assembly, and coming so far short of his former resolutions, that if ever he saw such an occasion he should not be tongue-tacked." Ibid. p. 78.

TONGUEY, adj. 1. Applied to one who is qualified to defend his cause with the tongue, S.

2. Loquacious, glib-tongued; rather used in a bad sense, S.

Sooner at Yule-day shall the birk be drest,
Or birds in sapless busses big their nest,
Before a tonguey woman's noisy plea
Shou'd ever be a cause to danton me.

Fergusson's Poems, P. ii. 3.

This is undoubtedly a very old word. For Teut. toughigh has precisely the same sense; linguax, Kilian.

TONNE, adj. Apparently, made of tin. "Ane tonne flakoune," i.e., flagon; Aberd. Reg., V. 26.

TONNOCHIED, part. pa. Covered with a plaid, Perths.

The auld mare nichers for her filly,

Wi' a mither's tender care.—

"Ca' them hame, poor tonnoched Willy,

For I see they'll eat nae mair."

Donald and Flora, p. 186.

Properly a Gael. word. Tonnay, a wrapper round the shoulders.

TONNY, adj. "Ane tonny quot," perhaps a tawney-coloured coat; Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

To TOOBER, v. a. To beat, to strike, S. O. tabour, E. and Loth.

Fr. tabour-er, to strike or bump on the posteriors, q. as on a drum; from tabour, a dram.

TOOBER, s. A quarrel, S. O.

TOOBERIN, s. A beating, a drubbing; as, "I gae him a gude tooberin," S. O. V. TABOUR.

TOOFAL, s. Toofal of the night, nightfall, S. V. TO-FALL.

[TOOG, s. A small hillock with a tuft of grass, Shetl.; a dimin. from Dan. tue, a hillock.]

TOOK, s. A particular and disagreeable taste or flavour. V. TEUK.

TOOLYE, s. A broil. To TOOLYE, v. n. To quarrel. V. TUILYIE.

TOOM, adj. Empty. V. TUME.

[TOOM, s. A place into which rubbish is emptied.]

[To TOOM, v. a. To empty, to pour out, Clydes.]

TOOM-SKINN'D, adj. Hungry. V. under TUME.

[TOOM, s. The thumb, Shetl.; Sw. tum, Dan. tomme, an inch, the breadth of a thumb; hence, Sw. tumme, thumb.]

[TOONMALL, TOONWALL, s. A plot of ground in front of a cottar village, which is always kept in grass, Shetl.]

[TOONMILLS, s. The grass-land near houses or farms, ibid.

Isl. tun, household plot, and Dan. maal, a boundary.]

TOOP, s. A Tup, a ram; but pron. like Gr. v., S.

*O! may thou ne'er forgather up
Wi' ony blastit, moorland toop!*

Burns, iii. 79.

[TOOPIE, s. A knob or standing up point, Shetl.; Fr. toupée, id.]

TOOPIKIN, TOOPICK, s. 1. A pinnacle, a summit, Aberd.

—"Being as evidently driven of the devil, upon the highest Topicks of the dangerous perishing rocks of atheism, as ever the Gadarene swine were." Walker's Peden, p. 4.

Topicks here may have the same sense with that of the E. s.

2. A narrow pile raised to such a height as to be in danger of falling, ibid.

3. Used also for a dome, cupola, turret, or steeple; perhaps by a loose application of the term as used in sense 1, ibid.

C. B. topiary, having a top or crest. But perhaps rather a dimin. from Teut. top, Isl. toppe, cacumen, formed by the addition of kin. V. KIN, s.

[To TOOPIKIN, v. a. To build or place high, but implying want of stability, Banffs.]

TOOR, s. A turf, S. B. V. TURES.

[TOOR, adj. Tedious, wearisome, difficult, Ayrs., syn. door, of which this may be a corr.

Isl. tor, difficulty in accomplishing. V. TEIR, TERE.]

TOORRIN, part. pr. "Hay is said to be toorrin, when it rises on the rake in raking;" Gall. Encycl.

Either as E. towering; or allied to O. Fr. turde, levée, Roquefort; or perhaps rather from Gael. toor-am, C. B. twr-iaw, to heap, to pile, to raise up.

TOOSH, s. A woman's bed-gown; synon. Short-gown; an abbreviation of Curtloush, q. v.

*[Yer ae druggat coat is baith scrumpy an' worn,
An' your auld leloc toosh is baith dirty an' torn.*

Janet Hamilton.]

[To TOOSHT, v. a. 1. To toss or dash about in a hurried or careless manner, Banffs.

2. To roll up, or to put past, in a careless manner, ibid.

Prob. a corr. of E. toss, or of S. tash, q. v.]

[TOOSHT, s. 1. A heavy dash, ibid.

2. An untidy bundle of rags, straw, etc.; also, applied to females of dirty, untidy habits, ibid.]

To TOOT, TOUT, v. a. 1. To blow or sound a horn, S.

"Sir William Hamilton of Preston,—and the other heritors of Prestonpans parish, are convened for the riot mentioned supra,—for suffering Brown then preaching and praying to be affronted by boys, who touted horns," &c. Fountainhall's Decis., i. 182.

*O lady, I heard a wee horn toot,
And it blew wonder clear.*

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 172.

2. To sound loudly, to spread as a report. "It was tootit throw a' the kintry;"—"The kintra claiks war tootit far and wide;" Fife.

Su.-G. tut-a, Isl. tant-a, Dan. tud-er, A.-S. thut-an, theot-an, thiot-an, ululare; Germ. dud-en, sonare. Su.-G. tuta i horn, to blow a horn, Belg. toet-en, Teut. tuyt-en, id. tuyte, a horn; Germ. dul-horn, a sounding horn. It seems to be the same Belg. v., which also signifies to buzz: tuyting der ooren, a buzzing in the ears.

Ihre observes, that Isl. taut-a is almost always used to denote the sound made with horns, although it primarily respects the howling of wild beasts. Olaus Rudbeck refers to Chald. tū, which signifies both a horn, and the sound made by it.

To TOOT, v. n. 1. To cry as if one were sounding a horn; to cry by prolonging the voice, S.

"How they did carouse it, and pluck (as we say) at the kid's leather: and flagons to trot, and they to toote, Draw, give [page] some wine here reach hither." Urquhart's Rabelais, B. ii. p. 143.

The term used in the original is corner, to wind a horn.

2. To make a plaintive noise, as when a child cries loud and mournfully, S.

Isl. taut, murmur, susurrus; taut-a, murmurare; Haldorson.

TOOT, TOUT, s. The blast of a horn or trumpet, S.

The rattling drum and trumpet's tout
Delight young swankies that are stout.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 369.

"A new tout in an old horn;" Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 7.

"Mr. Shields sometimes said in publick, that 'the tout of a horn over the Croes of Edinburgh blew the greatest part of the Ministers of the Church of Scotland out of their pulpits.'" Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 173.

TOOTIN' HORN, TOUTING HORN, s. A horn for blowing, S.

"Every individual was accounted with a large club, and, if possible, a touting horn (the horn of an ox perforated at the small end), by blowing on which they made a loud, and not altogether a discordant sound." Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 2; Note.

The only E. writer, as far as I know, who seems to use this phrase, is Howell. "That wiseacre deserves of all other to wear a touting horn." Lett. B. i. 7. In relation to this passage, Dr. Johnson says of the v. "It was used in a contemptuous sense, which I do not fully understand." The truth is, the acute lexicographer did not understand it at all, else he would never have given it as the same v. with Toot, to pry, to peep. It is pretty evident that Howell himself did not understand it. For he writes toting, (although it is changed to touting by Mr. Todd), which might seem to be formed from Teut. tole, cornu, extremitas instar cornu; and, from the connexion, Howell seems evidently to have understood the phrase as denoting a horn of a very different description. For, in the passage quoted he not only speaks of wearing it, but passes this sentence on "a poor shallow-brained puppy, who upon any cause of disaffection, would have men to have a privilege to change their wives, or to repudiate them;" introducing the passage with this remark, that such an one "deserves to be hins'd at rather than confuted." He afterwards subjoins; "Whereas in other commonwealths men use to wear invisible horns, it would be a wholesome constitution, that they who upon too much jealousy and restraint,—impel their wives to change, &c. should wear plain visible horns, that passengers may beware of them as they go along, and give warning to others—Cornu ferit ille, Careto." P. 455, 456. He does not seem to have had any idea that this was a horn which the wearer was to blow.

[To TOOTLE, TOOTER, v. n. 1. To tattle, gossip, Perth., Banffs., Ayr.

2. To mutter, to speak to one's self, Kinross.]

[TOOTLE, TOOTER, s. Silly gossip; a person given to gossiping, Banffs.]

[TOOTLIN, TOOTERIN, adj. Given to idle gossip, ibid.]

TOOT-MOOT, s. A muttering. This is the pron. of Tut-mute, Aberd.

To TOOT, v. a. To drink copiously; Toot it up, Drink it off. V. TOUT, v.

[TOOT, TOOTIE. V. under TOUT.]

To TQOT, v. n. To express dissatisfaction or contempt.

This v., as well as the E. interj. tut, seem formed from the sound.

TOOT, [TOOTS], interj. Expressive of contempt, S.; the same with E. Tut.

To TOOT, v. a. To toss. [V. TOUT.]

On the margin, opposite to this word, Sir W. Scott remarks: "Tout is used in slang,—to observe or look out.—'Young Jenny the file-frow I touted.'"

He cannot, however, view this as having any connexion with the v., signifying to toss; but undoubtedly considers it as quite a distinct word. It is originally the same with Teet, to peer; and in fact, though now confined to cant language, is a good old E. word, as appears from the quotations vo. TETE, v.

[TOOTH, s. V. TEETH.]

TOOTHFU', s. To tak a toothfu', to take a moderate quantity of strong liquor, S.

Whan night, owre yirth, begins to fa',
Auld gray-hair'd carles, fu' willin,
To tak their toothfu' gaung awa—

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 39.

TOOTH-RIFE, adj. Agreeable to the taste, palatable, that of which one can eat a considerable quantity, Roxb.

A.-S. tooth, dens, and rife, frequens; q. what one wishes to employ his teeth about frequently.

* TOOTHISOME, adj. Not merely pleasing to the taste, as in E., but easily chewed, Fife.

TOOT-NET, s. A large fishing-net anchored, Ang. A man stands in a coble, or small fishing-boat; and, when he sees the fish enter the net, calls the fishers to haul it. He is designed the Tootsman, pron. tuts-man. This net is used only, it is supposed, in the sea, or in rivers where the tide flows.

"The fishing-tackle formerly employed was of various kinds. Sometimes it consisted of a common moveable net or siene; sometimes of a toot-net, much larger and stronger than the former, extending to an indefinite length from the beach into the water, and secured at its extremity by an anchor." Case in the House of Lords, A. 1805. Charles Gray of Carse, Respondent.

This word is evidently of Belg. origin. For tootebel is defined, "a certain square net;" Sewel. Perhaps as this species of net projects so far, the term is allied to Teut. tot, rostrum.

To TOOTTLE, v. n. 1. To mutter, to speak to one's self, Kinross; a dimin. either from Toot, v., to express dissatisfaction, or from the Isl. taut-a, murmurare. [V. under Toot.]

[2. To gossip; also, to go about in a silly manner, Banffs.]

TOP, TAP, adj. Very good, capital, excellent; as, "That's tap yill," excellent ale, S.; q. what is at the top of all, S. A. Hence, TOPPER, s. Any thing excellent in its kind; as, "That's a topper," ibid.

A. Bor. Top, good, excellent. "Topper, any thing superior,—a clever, or extraordinary person; but generally in an ironical sense." GL Bröckett.

To TOP, TOPE, v. a. 1. To tap, to broach.

—"Four pundis—of ilk tune of wyne to be toppit, ventit, and sauld in smallis within the said burgh." Acts Ja. VI., 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 669.

2. Also used in a laxer sense, as equivalent to breaking bulk.

"For the spilling of the merkat in bying of wittail in gryt, & topping tharof befor none.—Bying & topping of wax, hempt & tar in gryt." Aberd. Reg., A. 1538, V. 16.

—"Tope nor regrait ony wyttall." Ibid.

"And als, to tope & retail all commodities whatsoevir." Acts Cha. II., viii. 63.

I have some doubt, however, whether it should not be read copping, in the sense of selling.

This is against the analogy of the kindred tongues; Belg. tapp-en, Su.-G. tapp-a, id. tappe, stipamen. Hence, TOPSTER, TOPSTAR, s. A tapster.

"Four pundis—of ilk tune of wyne, &c. to be vpliftit be thame—fra the ventineris, topsteris, and selleris thairof in all tyme cuming." Acts, ubi sup.

"Ordanis the excise—to be collected—from the brewers, topsters, and viutners respective." Acts Cha. II., viii. 63.

To TOPT, v. a. To tap, to broach.

"Ordanis the excise of the ale, beer, and wines, to be collected—according to the quantity made use of, toppt, or sold by them." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vi. 163.

TOP ANNUELL. A certain annuity paid from lands or houses.

In the Acts of Mar. 29, May, 1551, c. 10, three kinds of annuells are mentioned, which Skene doubtfully expl. in the following manner:—

"Ground annuell is esteemed to be quhen the ground or propertie of onie lande bigged or vnbigged, is disposed and annuall for ane annuell to be payed to the annuall thereof, or to ane vther person, sik as ony Chaipleine or Priest. Top annuell, is ane certaine dewtie, given and disposed furth of ony bigged tenement, or land, of the quihilk tenement the propertie remains with the disponer, & he is only obliged to paye the said annuell. Few annuell is ather when the few mail, or dewtie is disposed as ane yeirlic annuel: or quhen the land, or tenement is sette in few-ferme heretablie, for ane certaine annuel to be payed nomine feudifirmae." De Verb. Sign vo. Annuell.

In Acts, Edit. 1566, tope is the orthography; Tope annuellaris, Fol. 149, b.; toppe, Skene.

Erskine has observed, that "the very meaning of these words, Sir John Skene, not above forty years after the statute was enacted, professes himself utterly ignorant of." Instit. B. ii., T. 3, § 52.

"The case being there of tenements within burgh, the feu-annuel," according to Stair, "is that which is due by the reddendo of the property of the ground before the house was built; ground-annuel is a distinct several annualrent, constitute upon the ground, before the house was built; and the top-annuel is out of the house." Instit. B. ii., T. 5, § 7.

It is possible, that the term top may be equivalent to chief or principal, as it is often used, in this sense, S., as if it were an adj. These annuitants may be thus denominated, because the annuity alone is disposed to them, whereas the property remains with the disponer. It may have some reference to L. B. feulum capitale, Fr. chef en chef; the person, giving the annuity, still retaining his right to the lands; only with the burden of paying a certain sum annually, in consequence of his act of disposition.

[TOP-CASTELLIS, s. pl. Small castles made in the main-top of a war-ship, Barbour, xvii. 713.]

TOPFAW, s. Soil that has fallen in, or sunk from the surface, Fife.

TOPINELLIS, s. pl. "The lines for haling the top-sails;" Gl. Compl.

"Than the master cryit, Top your topinellis, hail on your top sail scheitis." Compl. of S., p. 63.

TOPMAN, s. A ship or vessel with tops.

"From this letter it also appears that, at this time, the ambassador observed at Leith only nine or ten small topmen, (ships with tops), and some balingars and crayers; and none were rigged for sea, except one small topman of about sixty tons." Pink. Hist. Scot., ii. 84, N.

TOP OUR TAILL, adv. Topsyturny.

The pryd of princis, withowttn fail,
Garris all the warld rin top our tail.
Lyndsay, S.P.R., ii. 97.

TOP, TAIL, nor MANE. V. under TAP.

To TOPE, v. a. To oppose.

"The King nominated one day, in face of parliament, the Earl of Morton; while Argyle topes this nomination, as of a man unmeet, because of irresponsibleness to the law for his debts." Baillie's Lett., i. 329.

Perhaps the S. phrase is allied, to be on one's tap, to assault him, either with hands, or with the tongue.

We find a similar phrase used by Durham. "And the nations were angry: The world was in tops with Christ's church, having hatred against his people." Exposition of the Revelation, c. xi. 18.

TO-PUT, part. pa. Affixed; put to.

—"The seals of the fersaid lord the Governour, and of the fersaid Earll of Mar hes cusin, to thir indentures interchangable are toput." Indent. of Murdao D. of Albany, &c. Pink. Hist. Scot., i. 455.

To-PUT, (pron. Tee-pit), s. 1. Any thing unnecessarily or incongruously superadded, Aberd.

2. Very often used to denote any fictitious addition to a true narrative, ibid.

To-PUTTER, s. One that holds another to work, S. It is used in the Proverb; "Ill workers are aye gude to-putters."

TOQUE, s. Formerly used to denote the cushion worn on the forepart of the head, over which the hair of a female was combed, Perth., Ang.

The term is put in the mouth of a Scotsman, but evidently in a different sense; although, from the manner in which a turban is rolled, not very distant.

"Bot I think it touches our honour, that Tristan and his people pretend to confound our Scottish bonnets with these pilfering vagabonds' toques and turbands, as they call them," said Lindsay. Q. Durdward, i. 156. V. TOKIZ.

TOR (of a chair), s. Perhaps the round, or the semicircular arm of a chair of state.

"Things thus put in orduer the Quene cam forth, and with no little worldly pompe was placed in the chair having twa faithfull supports, the Maister of Maxwell upon the one Tor, and Secretare Lethington upon the vther Tor of the chair, quhareupoun they waytit diligently, all the tyme of that accusatioun, sumetyme this one occupying hir ear, sumtyme the uther." Knox's Hist., p. 340.

Fr. tour, Teut. toer, circulus.

TORE (of a saddle), s. The pommel, the forepart of which is somewhat elevated, S.

A horse he never doth bestride
Without a pistol at each side;
And without other two before,
One at either saddle tore.

Colvil's Mock Poem, i. 41.

A.-S. tor, a tower, an eminence.

"I did also use to carry one [a portefaile] of a 4th form, with good tyers to it in a carpet bag (such as they use in France) tyed to the tore of my saddle, so that if it was my fortune to meet with any thing by the way worth the gathering, I could easily take it and preserve it without being in danger to loss my companie." Sir A. Balfour's Letters, p. 33.

To TORE, v. a. To tear.

Like so as quhare Jouis big foule the erne,
With her strang tallouns, and hir punsis sterne,
Lichtand had claucht the litil hynd calf ying,
Toring the skyn, and made the blood out spring.

Doug. Virgil, 465, 40.

Rudd. is inclined to view this as the same with toir. But this seems formed from A.-S. teer-an, rumpere.

TORETT, or TORRETT, CLAITH. A muffer.

"Ane torrett claith of holane claith sewit with gold and blew silk.—Twa torrett claithis of hollane claith, &c.—Ane torrett of Turkie claith wrought with divers coulouris of silk, and freinyeit with gold and crammosie silk." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 235.

Fr. touret de nez, a muffer; Cotgr. Phillips expl. muffer as denoting a piece of cloth for tying under the chin. But the torret was meant to cover the nose.

It is thus defined in Dict. Trev. Touret, vieux mot qui signifioit une espèce de marque [masque] ou d'ornement que les dames de condition portoient autrefois, qui ne leur cachoit que le nez. Aussi l'appelloit-on touret de nez. Buccula muliebris, rel epistomium. On voit dans le Bibliothèque du Roi plusieurs représentations de fêtes & de carousels, où les dames sont peintes avec des torrets de nez. Le mot, aussi bien que la chose sont hors d'usage.

TORFEIR, TORFER, s. Hardship, difficulty.

Than said he loud upone loft, "Loni, will ye lyth,
"Ye sal nane torfeir betyle, I tak upone hand,
"Na mysliking have in hart, nor have ye na dout."
Gawan and Goh., iii. 13.

It occurs MS. Libr. Royal College of Physicians. marked H. iii. 12, supposed to be of the age of Rob. Bruce, or prior to it.

In thair speling ful wele thai spedde;
Thoh that thai wel spedd als I saie,
Ful manie a torfer sufferid thae;
Na lefte thai for na grame of man
Bot werande on the wrang thai wan.

This would seem merely Isl. torfaer-a, iter difficile et impeditum, Verel., p. 257, from Tor, a particle in composition denoting difficulty and trouble in accomplishing any thing, and faer-a, to go.

O. Fr. torfaire has a resemblance; signifying to err, to wander; torfait, violence, outrage.

To TORFEL, TORCHEL, v. n. 1. "To pine away, to die;" Gl. Sibb. Torfle, to decline in health, A. Bor., Roxb.

"At the same time it was reportit, that there was to be seen every morning at two o'clock, a naked woman torfelling on the Alemoor loch, wi' her hands tied behind her back, and a heavy stone at her neck." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 149.

2. It is also expl. to relapse into disease, Roxb.

3. Metaph. to draw back from a design or purpose, ibid.

"I fleehyt Eleesabett noore [never] to lat us torfell in the waretyne of owir raik." Wint. Ev. Tales ii. 41.

Sibb. derives it from Isl. thurk-a, Su.-G. tork-a, micare, areocere, abstergere, Isl. thorr, aridus, sicca. Perhaps it may signify, to be in a state of difficulty or trouble; Isl. torfelld, torrellde, difficilis, arduus; apparently from tor, as in Torfeir, and rellld, efficio, valeo, potis sum.

TORFLE, TORFEL, s. The state of being unwell, a declining state of health, Roxb.

Isl. tor-a, misere vitam trahere; from tor, an inseparable particle denoting difficulty, and occurring in a variety of compound words, as tor-fenjua, acquisitu difficilis, tor-faerur, viarum difficultates, torrek, damnum, amissio, &c.

[TORIE, s. The grub of Daddy-long-legs, (Tipula oleracea, Linn.), a dipterous insect, Banffs.]

[To TORIE, v. n. To be eaten by the Torie, q. v., ibid.]

[TORIE-EATEN, adj. Eaten by the Torie, ibid.]

To TORK, TORQUE, v. a. To torture, or give pain, by the continued infliction of punctures, pinching, nipping, or scratching, Roxb. Fr. torqu-er, Lat. torqu-ere, to writhe.

To TORN, v. a. To turn.

The cattle elk beheld thay raik on raw,— Bayth squell and low in thay ilk plentiful gatis, Quhilk sum tyme hecht Caryne fare and large,
Quhare the housis war like ane turned barge.

Doug. Virgil, 254, 42.

[TORN, s. A turn; quyt thaim torn, requite them a turn, repay them.]

And the King that angry wes,
For he his men saw fle him fra,
Said then, "Lordingis, sen it is awa
"That vre rynnys again ws her,
"Gud is we pass off thar daunger,
"Till God ws send eftsonys grace;
"And yeyt may fall, gif thai will chace,
"Quyt thaim torn but sum dele we sall.

Barbour, ii. 433, MS.

[Dr. Jamieson suggested that torn but might be equivalent to turn about, a meaning which the passage certainly does not bear out.]

TORNE, s. A tower.

"Their leaders desirous to gaine further honour and reputation, pursued the enemy so hard, till they had beaten them out of a torne they had fled unto." Monro's Exped. P. II., p. 80.

Teut. turn, torne, the same with torre, turris; Germ. thurn, Mod. Sax. thorn, id. Isl. herturn, turres, castella, Verel; q. "the towers of the army." C. B. tur, arx.

TORNE, s. A turn, an action done to one, whether favourable or injurious.

And in remembrance of this ill torne,
Thay can his temple wourship and adorne.

Doug. Virgil, 480, 13.

TORPIT, s. Turpentine, Upp. Clydes.

Perhaps retained from C. B. turpant, id.

TORRIE, s. A term applied to peas roasted in the sheaf, Fife; apparently from Lat. torreo, q. what is scorched.

TORRIE, TORY, s. An insect that breeds in dung, and consumes grain, Banffs. [V. TORIE.]

"It [ploughing lands when dry which have been tathed] also fosters that destructive animal called the tory; for that insect, whether it be generated from the corrupted dung, or be produced by the indisposition of the soil, or whatever be their origin, experience teacheth that drought infallibly preserveth them and nourisheth them." App. Agr. Surv., Banffs., p. 47. Practice of Farmers in Buchan, Edin. 1735, p. 29.

The Torie-worm is expl. "the hairy caterpillar," Mearns; the grub-worm, Aberd.

Fria, Belg. torre, vermis et scarabaeus, scarabaeus pilularius, cantharus.

To TORRIE-EAT, v. n. The same with being Torry-eaten, q. v.

"If it [the soil] be inclined to torry-eat, it should be turned over as soon as the plough can possibly enter the mould after frosty weather." Surv. Banffs., ibid.

TORRY-EATEN, adj. Torry-eaten land, poor moorish soil, when exhausted by cropping, and appearing puffed, and very bare, having only scattered tufts of sheep's fescue, S. B.

A literary correspondent, who, I should be inclined to think, has a warm heart to the whigs, contends that this word has had its origin from the recollection of the desolating ravages of the Tories, who eat up every one's substance, or destroyed what they could not devour. "Hence," he adds, "a place in the utmost extremity of want, or a piece of ground unfit to support animal life, is said to be torrie-eaten, as the strongest term by which human misery can be expressed."

TORRIS. [Prob. tedious, devious. V. TEIR, TOR.]

The king faris with his folk, our firthis and fellis,— Withoutin beilding of blis, of bern, or of byre:
Bot torris, and tene wais, teirfull quha tellis.

Gavan and Gol, i. 3.

[Prob. bot is an errat. for by, which would suit the context. Dr. Jamieson suggests the following, which is not satisfactory.]

Does this mean towers (Teut. torre, turris) and mournful ways? Or shall we view tene as an error for tene, q. empty walls?

TORT, part. pa. Tortured, distorted.

Now sal he perische, and now sall he de;
And sched his gentyle blude so pacient,
In greuous pany, be Troianis tort and rent.

Doug. Virgil, 340, 34.

Lat. tort-us.

[TORTIS, s. pl. Wrongs, cruelties.]

TORTOR, s. A tormentor, Lat.

"The Lord keep vs from angering this Spirit; if thou anger him, he will anger thee, and will draw himself aside in such sort that thou wilt not know thou hast him; and in the meantime he will waken the conscience of sin, and make it accuse thee, and as a tortor within thee to torment thee, as if thou wert in hell." Rollock on 1 Theas., p. 305.

* TORY, s. A term expressive of the greatest indignation or contempt; often applied to a child; as, "Ye vile little tory," Ayrs.

It is used, especially in the higher parts of Kyle, by those who have not the remotest idea of its proper meaning, nor have ever supposed that it must have been transmitted from their ancestors, many of whom suffered most severely from the Tories, during Charles II.'s reign, especially when the western counties were put under the tuition of the Highland Host.

TORYT, Wallace, vii. 1240, Perth Edit. Leg. taryt, as in MS. i.e. tarried.

TOSCH, TOSCHE, TOSH, adj. 1. Neat, trim, S.; applied to trees, &c., as referring to the use of the shears or pruning knife, S.

—So as quhilom the mekil tosche fir tre
On Erimanthus the mont of Archadé,
Or in the wod of Ida with ane sound,
Vp by the rutis rent, ruschis to the ground.

Doug. Virgil, 142, 46.

As cava pinus is the phrase in Virg., and the reading in MS., according to Rudd., costhe; it seems very doubtful what had been the word, as written by Doug. Boose would have been most natural.

I gang ay fou clean and fou tosh,
As a' the neighbors can tell.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 99.

An ingenious literary correspondent suggests that the word in Doug. Virgil must certainly be read coache, c and t being written so much alike in ancient MSS. Coache, he says, or coah, is used in the stewarty of Kirkcudbright in the sense of "hollow." Thus, to lay a piece of wood coah on the ground in order to its being broken, is to place it in such a way that there may be a hollow place under that part of it at which it is meant to give the stroke. He traces the term to Ir. Gael. cunach, "hollow, full of holes or pits, cuas, a cave," Lhuyd; "hollow of a tree," Shaw.

"The hedges will do—I clipped them wi' my ain hand last back-end; —and, nae doubt, they make the avenue look a hantle *tosh*er." M. Lindsay, p. 271.

2. This word is expl. as signifying "happy;" Gall. Enc.

Perhaps allied to Belg. dos, array, doss-en, to clothe; transferred, from neatness in clothing, to a trim appearance in whatever respect.

- [TOSH, s. A comely person of small stature, the term is also applied to animals, Banffs.]

- TOSHLY, adv. Neatly, S.

The lines that ye sent owre the lawn.—
Gin gloamin hours reek't Eben's haun,
Row't toshly up, and frankit.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 176.

- TOSHOCH, s. "A comfortable looking young person, from Tosh, happy;" Ibid.

Perhaps rather an oblique use of Ir. and Gael. toiseach, a chief, a leader.

- TOSCHIEDERACHE, s. The deputy of a Mair of fee; also, the name given to the office itself, in our old laws. V. MAIR, MAIRE.

- TOSIE, adj. 1. Topsy, intoxicated in some degree, S. synonym. ree.

—She's got her Jimmie cosie,
Of well mull'd sack, till she be tosie.

Meston's Poems, p. 55.

"The Magistrates there came into prison, and said, This day you are all to die, and if any of you will undertake to be executioner to the rest, he shall have his life—Cornelius [Anderson] said, if the rest would forgive him, he would do it. They answered, If he did it, they would wish him repentance and forgiveness. The Magistrates gave him drink, and kept him tozy until the murder was over." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 133.

Wha, when he's taen his proper tift,
Was ever kent to want the gift
O's gab! What puir man, when he's tozy,
But spends as he ware bein and cozy!

Poems, English, Scotch, and Latin, p. 95.

2. Intoxicating, S.

A good true Scot, who kept a stabling there,—
Frae be't he saw them, came within a blink,
And brought them wealth of meat and tosie drink.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 41.

Mod. Sax. clasiq, giddy; Isl. dus, drunken. Su.-G. dus is used in relation to those who are addicted to tipping. Isl. tos-a, to habble, to talk idly; tos, babbling.

- TOSIE, TOZIE, adj. Warm and snug, Clydes.; [syn. cosie.]

- TOSILIE, TOZILIE, adv. Warmly and snugly, ib.

- TOSINESS, TOZINESS, s. Warmth and snugness, ibid.

I know not if this be allied to Gael. teoth-am, teoth-kaich-am, to warm; teothughadh, exandescence; or if we should trace it to Teut. doss-en, munire vestibus suffultis, vestire duplicibus, from dos, vestis pellicea, d and t being frequently interchanged.

- TOSOT, s. An instrument of torture, antiently used in S.

"Lord Royston observes, 'Anciently I find other torturing instruments are used, as piiniewinks or pilliwinks, and caspitaws or caspicaws, in the Master of Orkney's case, 24th June, 1596; and tosots, August 1632.' But what these instruments were I know not, unless they are other names for the boots and thumbikins." Maclaurin's Crim. Cases, Intr. xxxvii.

As the Thummikins were for screwing the thumbs, I rather think that the Tosot had been an instrument of torture for the toes; perhaps from Su.-G. taa, pron. to, Isl. ta, the toe, and sut, dolor; q. the pain or anguish of the toe.

- TOSS, s. 1. A health proposed, a toast, S.A.

2. A celebrated beauty, one often given as a toast, ibid.

An' a' forbye my bonnie sell,
The tos o' a' Lochmaben.

Old Song.

- To TOST, TOAST, v. a. 1. To teaze, to vex, Clydes.

C.B. tos-i, to cause violent pain, to rack, to torture.

2. Equivalent to the E. v. to Toss.

- TOSTIT, TOSTED, part. pa. 1. Tossed, used metaph. in regard to difficulties and opposition.

"If thou hast hope of glorie, assure thee, an'hundredth stayes shall be casten in the way, and thou shalt be beatten and tosted here and there." Rollock on 2 Thea., p. 138.

2. A term vulgarly used, as signifying that one is oppressed with severe affliction, S. B.

- [TO-STONAY, v. a. To astound thoroughly, Barbour, xviii. 547, Skeat's Edit.

Mis-written till-stonay, in Camb. MS., while Edin. MS. has stonay.]

- TOT, s. A fondling name given to a child, S.

Wow, Jenny! can there greater pleasure be,
Than see sic wee tots tooling at your knee;
When a' they ettle at, their greatest wish,
Is to be made of, and obtain a kiss!

Gentle Shep. Ramsay's Works, ii. 81.

O wae me! for our blooming tots!

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 31.

Perhaps contr. from totum, a term often applied to a child, from its diminutive size, in allusion to the Te-totum used by children; or from S. tot, to totter, in allusion to the motion of children. V. TOTTE. It may, however, be an ancient term, allied to Isl. totta, leviter sugere, applied to infants; G. Andr., p. 241, evidently akin to Teut. tote, manilla.

To TOT, TOT about, v. n. 1. To move with short steps, as a child does, S.

2. To move feebly and in a tottering sort of way, S.; Toyle synon. Ayr. Hence,

To TOTTIE, v. n. To move with short steps, Fife; synon. Todle, Toddle.

To TOTTLE, v. n. To walk with short steps; the same with Todle, Ayr.

—"Their bairns, when they begin to tottle about the house, we'll need to tie bells to their backs to hear whar they gang." Sir A. Wylie, iii. 237.

The origin seems the same with that of Todle.

TOT, s. The whole of any number of objects; with haill or whole prefixed; a redundant phrase, merely signifying the whole without any exception, S.

"Sorrow a gardner in the whole tot here ever heard of sick a thing." Blackw. Mag. Jan. 1821, p. 369.

"But will she let me go halffer? 'Ye need na mis-doubt that; na, an ye fleech her weel, I would na be surprised if she would gie you the whole tot.'" The Entail, i. 216.

More commonly, the haill tot. O. Fr. tot, femin. tote; Tout, Lat. tot-us; Roquet; [tot lot is the form in Clydes.]

A. Bur. "Tote, the whole. The whole tote, a common pleonasm. Lat. totus;" Gl. Brockett.

Perhaps we ought to view as a cognate phrase, "to do work by the tut, or tote, to undertake it by the great," A. Bur. (Grose); i.e., in wholesale.

To TOTCH, v. a. 1. To toss about, Upp. Clydes.

2. To rock a cradle, Nithsdale.

I cresshed weel kimmer's loof wi' howdyding fee,
Or a cradle had never been totched for me.

Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 61.

"Totching is the act of rocking the cradle gently with the foot," N. ibid.

Teut. toets-en, tangere, attricare.

To TOTCH, v. n. To move with short steps and somewhat quickly; as, "a totchin' poney," Roxb.

This, and Tot, Tottie, and Todle, as they agree in signification, seem all to claim a common root.

TOTCH, s. A sudden jerk, Fife, Roxb.

To TOTH, TOATH, v. a. To manure land by means of what is called a toth-fold, Banffs.

"Every one knows the necessity of surrounding the field with a dyke which he designs to toth.—Let the fold be sufficiently toth'd, and not allowed to shoot up in long grass." Surv. Banffs. App., p. 44, 45.

TOTH, s. The manure made in this way, Banffs.

"The immediate hazard of the toth very much depends upon the situation of the field." Ibid. p. 48.

This is only provincially different from Tuth, q. v.

Isl. at bera tad d'voell, pratum stercorare; tada, foenum prati stercorati; tadd-r, stercoratus; toedu-fall, copia graminis culti; Halderson. Tad-a, stercorare agrum; Verel. Ind. I observe no similar word in any of the cognate languages.

TOTH-FOLD, TOTH-FAULD, s. An inclosure for the purpose of manuring land, Banffs Moray.

"A toth-fold is a field inclosed with a dyke, to keep in the cattle in the night time, and for some hours at mid-day, who, during their confinement, dung the field." Surv. Banffs. App., p. 44.

This is sometimes called Toathed-fauld.

TOTHIR, TOTHYR, adj. 1. The other, S. pron. tither.

The tothir twa fled to thar aors agayne.

Wallace, i. 416, MS.

The tane the tothire wald have wndwne.

Wyntown, vii. 8. 76.

Tother is used in the same sense O.E.

Concupiscencia carnis men called the elder mayde,

And Couetis of eyes called was the tother.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 54, a.

His soumes thei ne wald, the ton ne the tother.

R. Brunne, p. 90.

2. The second.

For-thi haldis clerkis be thare sawe,

That custwme is the tothir lawe.

Wyntown, viii. 4. 256.

We still say, Custom's a second nature, Prov. S.

Bot fra the stok down ewynlykly

Discendand persownys lynealy

In the tothir, or the thryd gre.

Newu, or Pronerw suld be.

Wyntown, viii. 3. 115.

Tother occurs in the same sense, R. Brunne, p. 169.

At none the tother day thei sauh fer in the se

A grete busse & gay, fulle hie of saile was he.

3. Sometimes used indefinitely, in the sense of another, or posterior.

The Kyng upon the tothyr day

Gan till his priw menye say, &c.

Barbour, iv. 518, MS.

[The tothir, i.e., thet othir, the other. Tothir occurs only when the precedes. Thet, that, from A.-S. thæt, the neut. of the def. article.]

[To TOTHIR, TOTHER, v. a. To handle roughly; to dash, to drag; to throw into disorder, Banffs.; part. totherin is used also as a s.]

[TOTHIR, TOTHER, s. Rough handling, a disordering, ibid.]

TOTTLE, adj. Warm, snug, Perth. ; synon. Cosie.

Gael. teoth-am, teothaich-am, to warm.

TOTTIS, s.

Na dentie geir this Doctor seikis;

Of tottis russet his ryding breikis.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 327.

Perhaps q. tails, as denoting the refuse or coarsest locks of wool; Su.-G. tolle, a handful of flax or wool.

To TOTTLE, v. n. 1. A term used to denote the noise made by any substance, when boiling gently, S.; [syn. hotter.]

In summer time a piece fat beef to totle,—
Some pocket-money; these can please my mind.
A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 100.

It is used, perhaps improperly, as a v. a.

Imprimis, then, a haggis fat,
Weel tott'd in a seething pat,
Wi' spice an' ingans weel ca'd thro',
Had help'd to gust the stirrah's mow.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 78.

V. TODLE, v.

[2. To boil, to simmer, Perths.]

Ye's get a cock well tott'd i' the pot,
And ye'll come hame again een, jo.
Herd's Coll., ii. 182.

3. To purl, applied to a stream, Nithsd.

'Side the sang o' the birds whare some burn tottles owre,
I'll wander awa there an' big a wee bit bower.
Remains Nithsdale Song, p. 136.

V. TODLE, which is also used in this sense.

[To TOTTLE, v. n. V. under Tot, v.]

TOTUM, s. 1. The game of Te-totum, S.

2. A term of endearment for a child, S.

Twa-three todlin weans they hae,
The pride o' a' Stra'bogie;
Whene'er the totums cry for meat,
She curses ay his cogie.

Song, Could Kail in Aberdeen.

* To TOUCH, v. a. 1. Applied to an act of Parliament, when it received the royal assent.

"This act was not touched; and so the Lords thought they could not supply the royal assent, nor make it an act." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 179.

2. To hurt, to injure, S.

To TOUCH up, v. a. To animadvert upon, S.

[TOUCHIE, s. A small quantity, a short space, S.]

TOUCHBELL, s. An earwig, S.A.; evidently the same with A. Bor. Twitch-bell, id.

It is also pron Coch-bell, q. v., which, I suspect, is a corruption. It might seem, in the form of Touch-bell, to be compounded of Teut. toets-en, tangere, and bal, malum, A.-S. bael, miseria; q. the animal whose touch is baleful. This is very uncertain, however, as it is also pron. Touch-spale. If we might view this as the genuine form, it might be traced to Teut. toets-en, and spelle, acicula, spina, a thorn, a prickle, a sting; q. what stings by its touch.

TOUCHET (gutt.), s. A lapwing, S.

"Upupa, a touchet." Wedderburn's Vocab. V. TRUCHIT and TUQUHET.

TOUCH-SPALE, s. The earwig, Roxb., Loth. V. TOUCHBELL.

To TOUK, TUCK, v. a. To beat.

"Aberdeen carefully caused tuck drums through the town, charging all men to be in readiness with their best arms," &c. Spalding's Troubles, ii. 166.

To TOUK, TUCK, v. n. To emit a sound, in consequence of being beaten.

The armies met, the trumpet sounds,
The dandring drums aloud did touk.

Battle Harlaw, Evergreen, i. 85.

"Trumpets sound, and drums tuck." Spalding's Troubles, i. 167. V. the s.

TOUK, s. 1. A stroke, a blow.

Hercules it smytis with ane mychty touk,
Apoun the richt half for to mak it jouk.

Doug. Virgil, 249, 23.

2. Touk of drum, beat of drum, S. Gl. Sibb.

"The first touk of the drum." Aberd. Reg.

3. A hasty pull, a tug, S.

"Scot. the word is used for a touch, pull; as, to take a touk of any thing, i.e., have a touch of it;" Rudd.

A.-S. teog-an, trahere. Teut. tucken, synon. But it signifies to touch; also, to strike. We may add Moes.-G. ting-a, Su.-G. tog-a, trahere. It may be observed, however, that A.-S. twicc-an, vellicare, precisely expresses the idea conveyed by our term.

TOUK, s. An embankment to hinder the water from washing away the soil, Roxb.; synon. Hutch.

Formed perhaps from the E. v. to Tuck, "to gather into a narrow compass."

TOUM, s. 1. A fishing-line. V. TOME.

2. The gossamer, Roxb.

In Fr. the gossamer is called filandres, q. small or thin threads.

TOUMS, adj. Ropy, glutinous, Roxb. V. TOME, v.

TOUN, TOWN, s. 1. This term is used in S., not merely as signifying a city or large assemblage of houses, but also as denoting a farmer's steading, or a collection of dwelling-houses, however small.

"I've look'd every where; he's no about the toun;" i.e., He's not about the place or premises, S.

"Imprimis, Taken out of Auchingool (quhairf the said Duncan Smith was tacksman) be Lochaber men, ten cows valued to 133 lb. 6s 8d.

"Item, be them out of that toun 30 sheep and goats estimate to 40 lb." Depred. Argyle, p. 42.

A.-S. tun properly denotes a fence or inclosure. Hence it is transferred to a field or farm; praedium, fundus, ager, possessio. Neark tham tune the Jacob sealde Joseph; "Near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to Joseph;" John 4. 5. Hence used to signify a village. The root seems to be tyu-an, claudere. Su.-G. tuna, both by itself, and in composition, denotes an inclosed place. The term Civitas, as applied by Tacitus to the first British cities, does not seem to have conveyed a much higher idea than our S. Toun.

2. Often applied to a single dwelling-house, S.

"Waverley learned from this colloquy, that in Scotland a single house was called a toun." Waverley, i. 124.

This closely corresponds with what is given by Somner as the secondary sense of A.-S. tun, Teut. tuga; Domus, habitaculum; a house, a dwelling place.

TOUN-GATE, s. A street, South of S.

—"Beyond which appear the straggled houses of the village, built in the old Scottish style, many of them with their gable-ends, backs, or corners, turned to the street or toun-gate." Edin. Month. Mag., May, 1817, p. 155.

TOUN-RAW, s. Used to denote the privileges of a Town-ship. To Thraw one's self out o' a toun-raw, to forfeit the privileges enjoyed in a small community, Roxb.; q. a row of houses.

TOUN'S-BAIRN, s. A native of the same toun, city or village, S.

See, too, enarm'd wi' sword and spear,
M'Ghee, our ain toun's baurn, draws near.
Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 82.

TOWNSHIP, s.

"A township is a farm occupied by two or more farmers, in common, or in separate lots, who reside in a straggling hamlet, or village." Agr. Surv. Forfars., p. 561.

TOUNDER, s. Tinder.

Than vp to Mars in by we haistit vs,
Wounder hote, and dryer than the tounder,
His face flammand, as fyre richt furious;
His boist and brag mair aull than the thunder,
Maid all the heuin most like to schaik in sunder.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 238.

Alem. tundere, Isl. tunthere, id. The term seems derived from tinthra, Moes.-G. tand-jan, A.-S. tend-an, to kindle; whence also Teind, a spark, q. v.

[TOUNG, s. The tongue, Barbour, xvii. 7.]

[TOUNIT, s. The manufacturing of wool, Shetl. Isl. to, wool, and knyta, to knit or weave.]

TOUP, s. A foolish fellow, Mearns.

Dan. taabe, a fool, a simpleton. V. TAUPIE, which must have had a common origin.

To TOUR, v. n. [To speed, haste; synon. scour.]

—Come back when'er ye please;
Afore you aye your welcome ye sall find,
And blame yoursell, in case ye come behind.
Ise see to that, I says, and aff I scours,
Blessing my lucky stars, and hame I toors.

Ross's Helenore, p. 39.

[Fr. tour, an excursion.]

By TOUR, adv. Alternately, by turns.

"Ye have heard before how the earl of Antrim was treacherously taken by Monro in Ireland. He was straitly warded, or kept by tour, or night and day by his captains." Spalding, ii. 119.

TOURE, s. Turn, course, in regular succession, S. Fr. tour, id.

"If any of these whose toours fallis to be present shalbe absent—the saidis quorums—shall enioyne suche paynis—as they shall find the saidis persones—to demerite." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 311.

TOUR, TOOR, s. A turf, S. B.

O! is my corn a' shorn, he said,
Or is my toors a' won;
Or my lady licht'er'd sin the streen,
O' a dochter or a son?

Old Song.

TOURKIN-CALF, TOURKIN-LAMB, s. A calf or lamb that wears a skin which is not its own. A tourkin-lamb is one taken from its dam, and given to another ewe that has lost her own by death. In this case the shepherd takes the skin of the dead lamb, and puts it on the back of the one that is to suck the ewe which has lost her lamb; and thus deceives her so that she allows the stranger to suck. This is communicated to me as from the North of S.

Hence it is said the name of Tourkin Bishops. The word in this form might plausibly be traced to Isl. torkend-r, nota difficilis, item deformatus, (Halderson); as applied to an animal "so disguised as not to be easily known;" from tor, an inseparable particle denoting difficulty, and kend-r, known. Torkennast, difficulter agnoscit. The Icelanders use it in a sense nearly allied. Han hujle torkent sik i kladabunade; Vestem mutaverat, ne cognosceretur; Verel. Ind. This evidently regards the same persons denominated Tulchane Bishops. But which of these is the ancient and proper pronunciation, I cannot pretend to determine.

As the A. Bor. v. Toorecan signifies "to wonder, or muse on what one means to do," (Ray, Grose,) there can be no doubt that this is traduced from the Isl. v.

To TOUSE, TOUSS, v. a. 1. To disorder, to dishevel; particularly used in relation to the hair, S. This sense occurs in O. E.

2. To handle roughly, S.

TOUSIE, TOWZIE, adj. 1. Disordered, dishevelled; as, a tousie head, one that has not been combed, S. Touslie is sometimes used.

"A fine fleece and a full? It's as coarse as the heather cove, ye gouk—e'en like yere ain tousie hassock o' hair, that has nae been kamed since Kate Kimmer kamed it with the three footed stool, and the muckle pot clips." Blackw. Mag., May, 1820, p. 159.

2. Rough, shaggy, S.

His breast was white, his tousie back
Weel clad wi' coat o' glossy black.

Burns, iii. 8.

V. TOUSLE.

To TOUSLE, v. a. 1. To put into disorder, to dishevel; often, to rumple, S.

Frae Gudame's mouth auld-warld tales they hear,—
O' gaists that win in glen and kirk-yard drear,
Whilk tousles a' their tap, and gars them shak wi' fear.
Fergusson's Poems, li. 57.

With warwolfes and wild cats thy weird be to wander,
Dragleit through dirty dubs and dykes,
Tousled and tugged with town tykes.

Pooleart, Watson's Coll., lii. 16.

Tussel is used for straggle, N. and S. of E. Grose, Prov. Gl. This term is adopted by P. Pindar.

Thus Envy, the vile Hag, attacks my rhymes,
Swearing they shall not peep on distant times;
But violent indeed shall be the tussel.

Royal Tour, Proem.

It seems doubtful, if this has been formed from E. touse, expl. "to pull, to tear, to haul, to drag;" Johns. Germ. tusel-n, signifies to beat. But the S. term has more analogy to Isl. tusk-a, luctari, tusk, lucta lenis et jocosa, G. Andr., p. 243, as it is most generally used to express the disorder of one's dress in consequence of playful or wanton struggling. It may be a dimin. from the Isl. v., as the adj. is most commonly used, wanting the l. V. TAINSLK.

To TOUSLE out, v. a. 1. To turn out in a confused way, S. A.

"They—touzed out mony a leather poke-full o' papers," &c. Antiquary, i. 201.

"Touzled-out, ransacked;" Gl. Antiq.

TOUSLE, TOUZLE, s. Rough dalliance, S.

For tho' I be baith blyth and canty,
I ne'er get a touze at a'.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 214.

TOUST, s. Prob., a small tax on ships for towage.

"My said lord archiebischof of Sanctandris salbo bundin and obleist, to gront, pas and expeld, to the prouest, baillies, counsals, and communitie of the said cietie of Sanctandris ane confirmatioun of the hail infestmentis, richtis, evidendis, writtis, and securitis maid be his lordschip [or his] predicessouris, bischoppis or archiebischoppis of Sanctandris, to thame and their predicessouris inhabitants of the said cietie;—with the priuilege of the schoir, port and heuvin of the said cietie [Sanctandris], ancorrage, small toust, quhairin thay and thair predicessouris is and hes bene in vse or possession. —And siklyke the saidis prouest &c. salbe obleist to pay to the said archiebischof and his successouris, —for the priuilege of the schore, ancoragis and [touais] twentye schillingis money." Acts Ja. VI., 1612, vol. IV. 516, 517.

Una cum parvis et minutis custumis, ankeragiis, et lie Toust addictum portum, lie heavin et herberie pertinen. Cart. Ja. VI. to St. Andrews, 1620.

This word probably denoted a small tax levied by the city on every vessel that changed its position, or that in doing so was towed by boats belonging to the harbour. It is probably corrupted from Towage, a term of the E. law, signifying, "the rowing or drawing of a ship or barge along the water by another ship or boat fastened to her;" Jacob. Fr. toiage, id. L. B. towag-ium, a term that appears in the laws of E. as early as the year 1286.

Roquefort gives O. Fr. touage, as denoting the change made in the position of a vessel at sea, or lying in a road. Changement de place d'un navire qui, étant dans un mauvais endroit de peiage ou de rade, va dans un meilleur, c'est-à-dire, que lorsqu'un vaisseau est sur un bord ou rivage incommode, il va dans un autre endroit.

Somner deduces L. B. towag-ium, &c., from A.-S. te-on, ducere, trahere, "to tow, to tugge;" vo. Teon.

TOUSTIE, adj. Irascible, testy, Loth.

Teut. twistigh, contentious, litigious; Su.-G. tuss-a, incitare; Isl. thiostug-r, austerus, trux; thiost-r, austeritas.

To TOUT, v. a. To sound a horn. V. TOOT.

To TOUT, TOOT, v. n. To drink copiously, to take large draughts, S. pron, toot.

—They'll ban fu' sair the time
That e'er they toutit aff the horn,
Which wambles thro' their weym
Wi pain that day.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 52.

For now our gentles gabbs are grown sae nice,
At thee they toot, an' never speir my price.

Ibid. p. 74.

An' mourn wi' me, ye tipplin louns,
That tout the cap wi' cantie roun's, &c.

Turra's Poems, p. 143.

Lang winter nights we than could tout
It swack an' sicker. Ibid. p. 132.

To TOUT aff, v. a. To empty the vessel from which one drinks, to drink its whole contents, S.

To TOUT at, v. a. To continue to drink copiously, S.

To TOUT out, v. a. The same with to Tout aff, S.; also to Tout up out.

—To mak him play the quicker,

They fill'd his cap;

He lough and toutit up the liquor

Out ilka drap.

G. Turnbull's Poet. Essays, p. 199.

I find that Teut. tuylte is rendered by Kilian, obla, amphora, cyrnea, as denoting a drinking vessel. Hence perhaps the transition, according to the sense of the S. terms bearing this form, to the act of using it liberally. It may be added, that Halderson gives Isl. toll-a, as signifying augere, vel evacuare, and as synonym with Dan. ultomme, udsugge; q. to empty or toom out, to suck out.

To TOUTLE, TOOTLE, v. n. To tipple; as, a tootlin body, one who is addicted to tippling, Loth.

TOOTTIE, s. A drunkard; often pleonastically, "a drucken tootie," S.

TOUT, s. 1. A copious draught, S.

2. A drinking match, S.B. Gl. Shirr.

To TOUT, TOWT, v. a. 1. To toss, to put in disorder, S.

To spill the bed it war a pene,
Quod he, the laird wald not be fane
To find it toutit and outred.

Chron. S. P., iii. 201.

2. Metaph. to throw into disorder by quibbling or litigation.

"They came in a loving & well willing manner to enquire, but we perceive the purpose is but to canvass and tout our matters here a while, that hereafter men of little skill and less conscience may discern into them as they please," &c. Mr. James Melvill's MS. Mem., p. 298.

3. To tease, to vex, S.

This might seem all to Isl. taatt-a, to tease (wool), Seren. vo. Teaze; or Su.-G. tugt-a, to chastise: But V. the a.

To TOUT, TOWT, v. n. 1. To be seized with a sudden fit of sickness, Clydes.

2. To be seized with a fit of ill humour, ibid.

TOUT, s. 1. A fit of illness; an ailment of a transient kind, S.

"'I hope it's no the gout or the rheumatism.'—'It's neither the tane nor the tither, but just—a bit tout that's no worth the talkin o'.'" Entail, ii. 11, 12.

Ir. tocht signifies a fit or trance. But our term greatly resembles the use of Belg. tocht, toyt, wind, air; also, an expedition, a voyage. De togt van de deur, the wind that comes into the door. Zy had een zwaare togt, She had a sore bout; Sewel. It is often said, of one who has been pretty severely ill, He had a sair tout, S.

2. A transient displeasure, a fit of ill humour, Ang. Loth. It seems to be the same which was anciently written toit, toyt, expl. "freak," Gl. Everg.

Were he ay sae, he then wad ay be kind:
Bat then anither tout may change his mind.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 42.

"I aye telled the gudeman ye meant weel to him; but he takes the tout at every bit lippening word."
Bride of Lammermoor, i. 312.

TOUTIE, TOUTTIE, adj. 1. Throwing into disorder; as, a touttie wind, a boisterous wind that tosses one who is exposed to it, S.

This is much the same with Belg. togtig, windy.

2. One whose temper is very irritable, who is easily put in disorder, S.

Perhaps A. Bor. Totey, bad-tempered, (a toley body, Gl. Brockett) is originally the same.

3. Subject to frequent ailments, S.

It may be observed that Belg. togt, which in sing. signifies air, wind, in pl. (togt-en) denotes the passions. Zyne togten bedwingen, to refrain one's passions; q. to dwang one's touts, S.

TO TOUTLE, v. a. To put clothes in disorder, especially applied to woollen clothes, Berwicks.

TO TOUTHER, v. a. To put into disorder, Ettr. For., Tweedd.; synon. Tousle.

TOUTHERIE, adj. Disordered, confused; slovenly, ibid.

Teut. touter-en, motitare, jactare, pultare; Su.-G. tudd-a, convolvere, intricare, Mod. Sax. tiuler-n, id.

[TO-VAUERAND, part. pr. Wandering in different directions, Barbour, vii. 302, 331, Skeat's Ed.]

TO TOVE, v. n. 1. To talk familiarly, prolixly, and cheerfully, S. To tove and crack, to carry on a free conversation with great glee, without regard to the lapse of time; often applied to one whose animal spirits are elevated by strong drink.

This has every appearance of being the same with the old Norw. v. toev-e, expl. by Dana vaas, sludder, which both signify to prattle, to chatter, to be talkative; toev, incoherent talk. To tarry, to delay, is given as the secondary sense of toev-e; Hallager. This corresponds with Su.-G. toefw-a, morare.

- [2. To swell, to rise in a mass; as, "The heat tored it till it burst," Clydes.]

3. To give forth a strong smoke, [or smell], when burning. Thus a thing is said to "tove and reek," Roxb.

"The reek gaugs torin up the lum," i.e., it ascends in a close compact body, Ettr. For.

—The luntain cutty toving prime,

And snishin-box,

O how they heave the saul sublime,

In mirth and jokes!

A. Scott's Poems, p. 35.

TOVIE, adj. 1. Tipsy; a low term, synon. with Tosie, q. v. perhaps, q. loquacious, in consequence of drinking.

"Tovie,—blowzie-looking, with drinking warm drink;" Gall. Enc.

2. Babbling, talking in a silly and incoherent manner, Clydes.

3. Comfortable, warm; as, "a tovie fire," Ettr. For., Fife, Loth.

"Tovie, thesame with Tozie, warm and comfortable;" Gall. Enc.

The term, as thus used, may be allied to Teut. toev-en, excipere blandè, commodè curare hospitum.

[TOVIN, adj. Swelling, bragging, Clydes.]

TO TOVIZE, v. a. To flatter, to use cajoling language, Ayrs.

"I am doons sweir to let my pen fa' without tovizin you a wee for the auld farrant letter whilk ye sent me." Edin. Mag. April 1821, p. 352; corrected from the MS. letter.

TOW, s. 1. A rope of any kind; as, the bell-tow, the rope for ringing a bell; the tows of a ship, the cables, S.

His towes, I find, hes bene so fyne,
For all the stormes hes bene sensyne,
His schip come never on the schalke,
But stack still on the anker halde.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 314.

"The anchor-tow abideth fast within the vail"
Rutherford's Lett. Ep. 15.

Su.-G. tog, Isl. tog, taug, Belg. toue, reastis, funis. Sw. ankartog, a cable. Ihre derives tog from tog-a, ducere, as appearing properly to denote the ropes by which nets, and things of the same kind, are drawn.

L. B. tugg-ae, ropes or harness, or traces for drawing. Cowel, in like manner, deduces this from A.-S. getog-æ, to tug, or pull, or draw.

Sibb. mentions towm as used in the same sense with tow; Sw. toem, habena.

2. A halter, S.

And wnosso yields alive, this tow portends,
Streight must he hing, where did our dearest friends
Who suffered for the truth.—

Muses Threnodie, p. 134.

"Some of us would have rejoiced more than in great sums, to have seen these bishops sent legally down the Bow, that they might have found the weight of their tails in a tow, to dry their hose-soles, that they might know what hanging was; they having been the—main instigators to all the mischiefs, cruelties, and bloodshed of that time," &c. Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 73.

Down the Bow, refers to the steep winding street through which those, who were going to execution, had to pass, on their way from the Tolbooth to the Grassmarket of Edinburgh.

- [3. Tows, fishing-lines; also, the halliards of a boat, Shetl.]

TOWAR, s. A rope-maker, Aberd. Reg. V. 28.

[TOWEN, part. pr. Towing, Accts. L. H. Treas. i. 248, Dickson.]

• TOW, s. 1. Hemp in a prepared state, S.

2. That which especially occupies one's attention, S.; as, To Hae other Tow on one's Rock, to have business quite of another kind, S.

"I have other tow on my roke [rock];" S. Prov. Kelly, p. 182. He gives it as equivalent to the E. Prov. "I have other fish to fry." It properly denotes some business of far greater importance to the individual than that which is mentioned, as giving occasion for the reply.

"I saw sune they were ower mony men for the drove; and from the questions they put to me, I judged they had other tow on their rock." Rob Roy, iii. 335.

To TOW, v. n. 1. To give way, to fail, to perish, S.B. It is used with respect to both persons and things. In the former acceptation, it denotes death. [Syn. dow]. Perhaps from Alem. douu-en, Su.-G. do, to die.

[2. To thaw, Shetl.; tow, a thaw, ibid. Sw. tōa, tō, id.]

[TOW-LOWSING, s. A thaw, ibid.]

TOWALL ROSS. [Meaning uncertain.]

"Ane towall ross of aik worcht vas." Aberd. Reg. A. 1541, V. 17.

Something made of oak is evidently meant. Had we any proof that Su.-G. and Germ. ros, Isl. hros, equus, had ever found its way into our country, we might view this as meant for a sort of screen for drying linens, q. a towel-horse; although the term is now confined to an implement for brushing clothes.

[TOWART, prep. Towards, Barbour, i. 83.]

TOWDY, s. The breech or buttocks, Upp. Clydes., Perth. Gl. Evergr.

This, it would seem, is radically the same with O.E. toute, used by Chaucer.

And he was redy with his yren hote,
And Nicholas amid the ers he smote—
The hote culter brenned so his toute,
That for the smerte he wened for to die.

Miller's Tale, v. 3810.

—And Nicholas is scalded in the toute.

Ibid. v. 3851.

This term occurs in the Evergr. in what I suspect is rather an indelicate sense; and may perhaps be allied to Gael. Ir. toth, feminine, female.

To TOWEN, TOWIN, v. a. 1. To beat, to maul, to subdue by severe means, Loth.

Ye towin'd him tightly; I commend ye for't;
His bleeding snout gae me nae little sport.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 151.

2. To tame, especially by beating, sometimes pron. q. Town; as, to towin, or town, an unruly horse, Loth., Berwicks.

3. To tire, to weary out, Fife.

It may be allied to Su.-G. torg-a, to draw with a rope; or to Isl. thion-a, laborare. It is in favour of the latter etymon. that towin properly respects taming by means of hard work.

It may, however, be formed from Teut. tow-en, premere, pressare, agitare, subigere; Kilian. Or from the same verb, as primarily signifying to tire leather. The v., in Belg. is also rendered "to bang, to taw one's hide, to belabour one's bones;" Sewel. This seems most nearly to express the sense of the phrase quoted from the Gentle Shepherd.

TOWNIN', s. A drubbing, Ayrs.; generally used in relation to an animal that is restive or refractory.

TOWERICK, TOWRICKIE, s. A summit, or any thing elevated, especially if on an eminence, Roxb.; a diminutive from E. Tower.

TOWK, s. 1. Expl. "a bustle, a set-to. I had an unco Towk wi' a deil's bairn;" Gall. Enc.

2. "A take up in ladies' clothing;" ibid., i.e. a tuck, a sort of fold.

In the first sense, perhaps the same with E. Teg, Su.-G. tock-a, tog-a, A.-S. teog-an, trahere; q. a severe pull. V. Touk.

TOWLIE, s. "A toll-keeper," Gall. Enc.; a cant term formed from E. Toll, Su.-G. tull, id.

TOWLING, s. The term used to express the signal given, in a hive, for some time before the bees swarm. V. TOLLING.

[TOWME, s. A tomb, Barbour, xx. 293.]

TOWMONT, TOWMON, TOMOND, s. A year; corr. of twelve-month, used in the same sense, S.

An' young weel fill'd an' daft are,
Wha winna be sae croun an' bauld
For a lang towmont after.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 27.

Till this time tomond I've indent,
Our claihs of dirt will sa'r.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 280.

Towmon, Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 295.

TOWMONDALL, TOWMONTELL, s. A yearling cow, Ayrs.; from Towmond, twelve months, and auld, old, pron. aul, S.O.

This term is also applied to colts, Lanarks.

"The colts, when a year old, are called Tomontals, a provincial contraction for twelve-month-old." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 51.

TOWNIT, TOUNIT, s. The manufacturing of wool, Shetl. [V. TOWEN, v.]

Isl. toa, lanificium evercere, or to, lana, and kyg-a, nectere; q. "to knit wool."

TOWNNYS, pl. Tuns, large casks or barrels.

Syne off he townnys the heids out strak;
A foule mellé than gan he mak.

Barbour, v. 403, MS.

[TOWNYS, s. pl. Towns, Barbour, xi. 138.
V. TOUN.]

[TOWRIS, s. pl. Towers, Barbour, ix. 451.]

[TOW-ROW, s. A disturbance, an uproar,
Shetl.]

TOWT, s. A fit of illness, &c. V. TOUT.

TOWTHER, s. A tussling, Perth.

—Mind this,
Whether you want a loutcher, or a kiss,
You'll tak the nest I offer—
Donald and Flora, p. 49.

V. TOUTHER, v.

TOXIE, TOXY, adj. Topsy, Ayrs., Perth.

"I remember—decent ladies coming home with red faces, toxy and cosh from a posset-masking." Annals of the Parish, p. 41.

TOXIFIED, part. pa. Rendered tipsy, intoxicated, S.

These terms are both low; from L.B. toxic-um, venenum, toxic-are, veneno inficere.

TOY, s. A head dress either of linen or woollen, that hangs down over the shoulders, worn by old women of the lower classes, S.

"The tenants wives wore toys of linen of the coarsest kind upon their heads, when they went to church, fairs, or markets. At home in their own houses, they wore toys of coarse plaiding." P. Tongland, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc., ix. 325.

I wad na been surpris'd to spy,
You on an auld wife's flainen toy. —
Burns, iii. 230.

V. MUTCH.

Belg. tooijen, to tire, to adorn; whence tooisel, a tire, an ornament; tooiester, a tire-woman. This fashion, doubtless, when introduced, was reckoned highly ornamental. From its formidable appearance, it may be supposed that it was at first used in full dress.

Dan. toej, "stuff;" nattory, "a night or white and plain head-dress;" hored toej, "a head-dress," Wolff.

[TOYM, s. Leisure, Barbour, V. 642. Isl. tóm, emptiness, leisure; Dan. tom, empty; S. toom.]

TOYT, s. Toyts of Tay, the name given to the fresh water mussels found in Tay.

Now let us go, the pretious pearlys a fishing,
Th' occasion serveth well, while here we stay,
To catch these muscels, you call toyts of Tay.
—Muse's Threnodie, p. 91.

Perhaps from Teut. tote, tuft, cornu, extremitas in-star cornu; Kilian. [The Toyt is the Alasmodon margaritifera.]

To TOYTE, v. n. To totter like old age, S. also tot.

We've worn to crazy years thegither,
We'll toyte about wi' ane anither.
—Burns, iii. 145.

V. TODLE.

TOZEE, TOS-IE, s. The mark at which the stones are aimed in the amusement of Curling, Loth. It is also the Cock, and the Tee.

This term has been most probably imported from the Low Countries. Teut. tozi-en, Belg. toezi-en, to look to, to regard; q. something to fix the eye on, as an aim or mark.

TOZIE, adj. 1. Tipsy.

2. Warm and snug. V. TOSIE.

[To TRAA, v. a. and n. To twist, wring, wreath, Shetl.; evidently the local pron. of thraw, q. v.]

[TRAA, s. Twist, act of twisting; obliquity, perversity, ibid.]

[TRAARWARD, TRAWART, adj. Awkward, contrary, froward, ibid.]

* TRACED, adj. Laced. A traced hat is a hat bound with gold lace, S.

Perhaps from Fr. trasser, to weave, to twist.

To TRACHLE, TRAUCHLE, v. a. 1. To draggle, to trail; to abuse from carelessness or slovenliness, S.

"That night the Laird—suffered the souldiers to come a land and ly all together to the number of thirteen score, for the most part young beardless men, silly, trauchled, and hungered." Mr. James Melvill's MS. Mem., p. 186. This respects some of the soldiers who sailed on board the Spanish Armada, 1587.

It seems doubtful, whether it be allied to Belg. treyl-en, trahere, whence E. trail; or formed from Teut. traegh-en, pigrescere, tardescere; Alem. dreyel-en, per incuriam aliquid perdere.

2. To dishevel.

"Hyr hayr, of the coulour of fyne gold, was feltrit & trachlit out of ordour, hingand ouer hyr schuldurs." Compl. S., p. 106.

3. To drudge; to overtoil; [to burden, over-fatigue.] I'm trachlit with sair wark, S. I am overfatigued with hard labour.

In this sense it would seem allied to Sw. traal-a, duro labore exerceri. V. TARVEAL.

Quo' they, we're trachled unco sair,
We've gane twall mile o' yerd and mair,
The gait was ill, our feet war bare.

—The Farmer's Ha', st. 36.

4. A person is said to trauchle corn or grass, when he injures it by treading on it, S.

To TRACHLE, v. n. To drag one's self onwards, when fatigued, or through a long road, S.

"Aweel, we've haen a fine straik;—I'm a wee forjeskit though, wi' trachlin' sae lang." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 171.

TRACHLE, s. 1. A fatiguing exertion, especially in the way of walking, S.

"Weel I wat an' I'm gay yap after my walk; its e'en a lang trachle frae the Kirk Wynd in Anster, to the Castle Wynd in St. Andrews." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 174.

[2. A burden, drag; whatever causes exhaustion or overfatigue, S.]

[TRACHLIE, adj. 1. Always drudging, dirty, and slovenly, Clydes.

2. Fatiguing, exhausting, ibid.]

[To TRACK, v. a. To train an animal, Banffs.; part. pa. trackit, trained.]

TRACK, s. Feature, lineament, S. Belg. trek, id. from trekk-en, to delineate.

It is evident that this v. has been formed from drag-a, to draw. For what is delineation, but drawing in a metaph. sense? Hence Draught is used as synon. with Track.

[TRACKIN', s. Training, the act of training, Banffs.]

TRACK-BOAT, s. 1. A boat used on a canal, S.

"I sailed on the canal in the trackboat to Falkirk." The Steam-Boat, p. 38.

Belg. trek-schuyt, id. from trekk-en, to draw, because it is drawn by a horse.

2. A boat employed in fishing, for dragging another.

"Also thair trakboats, boats, crears, shippes more or lesse—sall not be arrested," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, v. 243.

TRACK-POT, TRACK, s. A tea-pot, S., i.e., a pot for masking; from Belg. trekk-en, to draw. De thee wordt getrekken, the tea is infused.

In some parts of the west of S., it seems to be called truck-pot.

"I heard them, like guilty creatures, whispering and gathering up the track-pots and trenchers, and cowering away home." Annals of the Parish, p. 27.

[TRACKER, TRACTER, s. A small funnel used for filling casks or bottles, Banffs.]

TRACTIVE, s. A treatise.

This is the title of Mr. Quintine Kennedy's (Comendatar of the Abbey of Crosraguell) work.

"Ane compendius Tractive conforme to the Scripturis of almychtie God, resoun, and authoritie, declaring the nerrest, and only way, to establishe the conscience of ane christiane man in all materis (quhilke ar in debate) concerning faith and religion;" A. 1558.

Fr. tracté, id.

TRAD, s. Track, course in travelling or sailing.

The Kyng hym-self in-to that quhyle
Wytht hys nawyn, that sawfyd was,
Wychtly wan ow't of the presse,
And tuk the se hamwart the way,
Thare trad haldand til Orknay.
Thare than tuk land Haco that Kyng.

Wyntown, vii. 10. 212.

Mr. Macpherson refers to C.B. traud, A.-S. trode, O.Dan. Isl. tradr. The latter is expl. by Verel. Vestigiorum multiplicata impressio. Isl. troeda, proprie terra, quod teratur et calcetur, G. Andr., p. 241. q. a beaten path; from trod-a, to tread. To this Camb. trad, a footpath, evidently corresponds.

VOL. IV.

TRADES, s. pl. The name given to the different bodies of craftsmen belonging to a borough, S.

As simmer's morning, wi' the sun
The Sev'n Trades

Forgathered—

Forth came our Trades, some ora saving
To wear that day.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 9, 14.

"The craftsmen are here, as in other Scotch boroughs called Trades." Ibid. Notes, p. 106.

TRADESMAN, s. A name restricted to a handicraftsman; all who keep shops being, according to the constitution of boroughs, called Merchants, S. In E. a tradesman is defined "a shopkeeper," Johns.

TRAE, adj. "Stubborn; a boy who is trae to learn, is stiff to learn," &c. Gall. Enc.

This odd explanation rather diffuses obscurity on the term. It seems, however, to be the same with our old Thra, obstinate, pertinacious, q.v.

[TRAFF, s. Oakum, the untwisted fibres of a rope, Shetl.]

TRAFEQUE, TRAFFE'CK, s. Intercourse, familiarity, S.; a limited sense, borrowed from the more general use of Fr. trafique, as denoting mercantile intercourse.

[To TRAFEQUE, v. n. To hold familiar intercourse, Banffs.]

TRAG, s. Trash, any thing useless or worthless, Buchan, Shetl.; [a person of mean character, Banffs.]

Geneva trag, an' burnin' brannie,
Gang slowly owre wi' Lawlan' Sannie.

Tarras's Poems, p. 134.

Compared to you, what's peevish trag,
Or beaus wi' cleadfu' triggin?

Ibid. p. 48.

Su.-G. traeck, sordes, stercur.

TRAGET, TRIGGET, s. A trick, a deceit, S. triget, Rudd.

Thou swelth denourare of tyme vnrecouerahill—
Of thy tragetis quhat tounge may tell the triyill?

Doug. Virgil, Prolog. 98, 10.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. trigaut, "a man that by tricks or slights makes a business hard to be decided." Sibb. views it as a corr. of tragedy.

O. E. "Tregettynge. Jocularatus. Pancracium. Tregetoure. Jocularator. Mimus." Prompt. Parv.

One might almost view, as a kindred term to Traget, O. E. "Trebet, or sly instrument to take beestys and fowlys. Tendula." Ibid. Fr. trebuchet, id.

To TRAIK, TRACH, v. n. 1. To go idly from place to place, S.

Hence trakit, sore fatigued; perhaps implying that one is also dragged.

In winter now for purthit thou art trakit.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 54, st. 2.

E 4

Traikit-like expresses the appearance that one makes, when dragged and fatigued, in consequence of ranging about.

2. To wander so as to lose one's self; chiefly applied to the young of poultry, Dumfr. Hence the proverbial phrase, "He's nane o' the birds that traik," he can take good care of himself.

- [3. To walk with difficulty, to work in a careless manner, Clydes., Banffs.]

4. To be in a declining state of health.

It is said of one, who is very durable; "He's the gear that winna traik;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 33. If I mistake not, this Prov. is also applied to one, who is of so little use to society, that his death would not be regretted; as it is generally supposed that persons of this description survive others whose lives are far more valuable.

"The English bodies could not endure to be prisoned in ships.—Had we in time foreseen to have fortified Inchkeith and Inchcolm, as we did thereafter Inchgarvie, they could not have lain in our frith one month; yet, notwithstanding of all the comfort, the air, and water of these isles could furnish them, many of them died; and when they went home, the most part of all who remained traiked pitifully." Baillie's Lett., i. 166.

This might seem allied to Su.-G. trak-a, cum difficultate progredi; tra, viribus defici. But it is most probable, that the v. has been formed from the s., the idea being transferred from sheep to men.

Belg. treck-en, vertreck-en, to travel, to engage in an expedition. Sw. traek-a, niti, cum molestia incedere; Seren. vo. Trace. The adj. might seem allied to Sw. traeck, dirt, filth; traeck-a, to dirty one's self.

To TRAIK after, v. a. To follow in a lounging or dangling way, S.

"There isna a huzzy now on this side of thirty that ye can bring within your doors, but there will bechiels, writer-lads, prentice-lads, and what not,—coming traiking after them for their destruction, and discrediting ane's honest house into the bargain." Heart M. Loth., ii. 294.

"Traiking, lounging, dangling;" GL. Antiq.

TRAIK, TRAICH, s. 1. A plague, a mischief, a disaster, applied both to things and persons.

—Suddainlie ane cruel pest and traik,
So that cornes and frutis gois to waik,
Throw the corruptit are, and cours of heuin,
Ane dedelie yere, fer wers than I can neuin,
Fell in our membris with sic infectioun,
Was na remede, cure, nor correctioun.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 5.

Bot at this time I bid na mare, I wys,
Salf that this wensche, this vengeabil pest or traik.
Be bet doun dede by my wound and scharp straik.

Ibid. 393, 49.

It is sometimes used, in profane language, like meikle Sorrow, apparently as a designation for the devil.

The meikle Trake come o'er their snouts.

A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 22.

From the same origin with Tray, q. v.

- [2. Loss, misfortune, disaster; weariness, fatigue, Clydes]. "He that has nae gear will hae nae traik," Teviotd.

3. Used to denote the flesh of sheep that have died of disease or by accident, S.

"The poor, sullen, sulky, sluggish Tweeddale shepherd, fed with his dog upon traik (sheep that have died of some disease), constantly in view of the same dreary inanimate objects, debarred from the pleasures of sight, and destitute of those from sound, owing to the want of sufficient exercise, is deprived even of the full enjoyment of sleep itself." Notes to Pen. Tweedd., p. 95.

4. The worst part of a flock of sheep, Loth.

TRAIK, TRAICHIE, adj. Weak, in a declining state; as, "He's very traik," Roxb. V.

TRAIK, v., 2.

TRAIL, s. A term of reproach for a dirty woman; as, "Ye wile trail," you nasty hussy, Aberd.; from the E. word, or Teut. treyl-en, trahere.

[TRAILACHIN, TRAILOCHIN, adj. Slovenly, dirty, always drudging, Clydes.]

TRAILER, s. In fly-fishing, the hook at the end of the line, S. That above it is called the Bobber, Dumfr. babber, because it ought to bob on the surface of the water.

TRAILIE, TRAILOCH, s. 1. "One who trails about in shabby clothes;" Gall. Enc.

[2. One who is always wandering idly about, or gossiping, Clydes.]

[TRAILIN-SLADE, s. A crawling insect.]

TRAILSIDE, adj. So long as to trail on the ground.

In robbis lang also or trailsyde gounne
With thame he ioned oratouris in fere.

V. SYDE.

Doug. Virgil, 466, 9.

TRAILYE, TRELYE, s. Cloth woven in some checkered form resembling lattices.

"Item, ane doublet of blak sating trailye geitit and buttonit with the self." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 92.

The article immediately following regards "blak chakerit silk." Teut. traelie, clathrus, a lattice, traelienwijs, cancellatum; Kilian.

TRAILYEIT, adj. Latticed.

"Item, ane gown of cramasy velvott, upon velvott droppit with gold, and lynit with trailyeit tweldore, furnist with hornis of gold." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1490, p. 79. V. TREILE.

To TRAIN, TRAYN, v. a. To draw, to entice.

The Lord Douglas towart thaim raid;
A gowne on his armor he haid;
And trawersyt allways wj agayn,
Thaim ner his bataillis for to trayn.

Fr. train-er, to draw.

Barbour, xix. 354, MS.

[TRAYN, s. Plot, train, Barbour, vi. 397.]

TRAIN, s. 1. A rope used for drawing, Orkn. from Fr. train-er.

"The harrows are drawn side-ways, by a train or side rope, (like that used in a plough), fastened at each end." P. St. Andrews, Orkn. Statist. Acc., xx. 260.

- [2. Train, i.e., enticement into an ambush, Barbour, xix. 360.

3. A small quantity of gunpowder moistened and kneaded into a pyramid to serve as priming for a toy gun.]

TRAIS OF GOLD. Gold lace.

"Item, ane nycht gowne of gray dammes, with ane waltin trais of gold, lynit with martirikis sabill, furnist with buttonis of gold." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 32.

"Item, ane coit [coat] of quhite satyne, cuttit out on claith of gold, with ane small waltin trais of gold, lynit with quhite taffeteia." Ibid. p. 35. V. TRACED, and TRESS.

[To TRAISHUR, v. n. To go about in an idly, slovenly manner, Banffs.]

[TRAISHUR, s. A big, stupid person; a big ugly animal, ibid.]

To TRAISSE, v. a. To tread down. To Traisse Corn, to make small roads through growing corn, to trample it down; to Traisse Gerse, &c. Ettr. For., Roxb.

—"Aye sin' syne the hogg-fence o' the Quave Brae has been harried an' traisselled till its little better nor a drift road." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 141.

Fr. trepasser, to leap over; or trasser, to make traces.

To TRAIST, TREST, TREIST, v. a. 1. To trust.

So that the ferd buke of Eneadoun,
Twiching the luf and dede of Dido quene,
The tua part of hys volume doth contene,
That in the text of Virgill, traistis me,
The tuelf part skars contenis, as ye may se.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 6. 10.

i. e., believe me; in the imperat.

Thocht thow be greit like Gowmakmorne,
Traist weil I sall yow melt the morne.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., l. 158.

Gude maister, I wald speir at you ane thing,
Quhar treist ye sall I find yone new maid King?

Ibid. ii. 158.

"Quhar for I treist that his diuine iustice wil permit sum vthir strayingne natione to be mercyles boreans to them, ande til extinct that fals seid ande that incredule generatione furtht of remembrance." Compl. S., p. 41.

2. v. n. To pledge faith, by entering into a truce.

Syne thai traist in the feild, throw tetry of trew;
Put up their brandis sa braid, burly and hair.

Gaican and Gd., iv. 10.

Isl. treist-a, Su.-G. traest-a, Germ. trost-en, confidere.

As the Isl. and Su.-G. verbs signify both to dare, and to trust, Ihre has accordingly observed, that the various Northern verbs, signifying to trust, seem all to conspire in Su.-G. toeras, audere; and that jag toers, and jag traender, equally mean, I dare. It is singular, he adds, that the same metathesis, which is observable in the letters here, may be traced to a very early period. The Greeks promiscuously use θαρρος (from θapp-eu) and θραυρος, audacia; θαρρυνω and θραυρυνω, andacem reddo. He also refers to Moe-G. thrafst-jdn, to trust, as bearing an obvious analogy to daur-an, to dare, whence ga-daurst-an, he durst, audebat. V. TRAIST, adj.

TRAIST, TREST, s. 1. Trust, faith, assurance.

—Gif outhir wit or fame
Or traist may be geuin to Helenus the prophete,

Or gif with verité Phebus inspiris his aprete,
This ane thinge, son of the goddes, I the teiche, &c.
Doug. Virgil, 82, 87.

"God turnit the hazard of fortune, and take vengeance on Xerxes gryt pryde, quhilk suld be ane gryt exemplil til al princis, that thai gyf nocht there treist in ane particular pouer of multiple of men, bot rather to set there treist in God." Compl. S., p. 123.

2. An appointed meeting.

Syn to the traist that thaim was set
Thai sped thaim, with their company.

Barbour, vii. 290, M3.

V. TRYST.

Isl. traust-r, Su.-G. troest, fiducia.

TRAIST, TRAISTY, adj. 1. Trusty, faithful.

Til Erie Malcolm he went vpon a day,
The Lennox haile he had still in his hand;
Till King Eduuard he had nocht than maid band
That land is strait, and maisterfull to wyn;
Gud men of armyss that tyme was it within.
The lord was traist, the men sekyl and trow;
With waik power thai durst him nocht persew.

Wallace, iv. 161, M3.

—We him gair ansuere not traist ynouch,
Astonyt with the word abak he dreuch.

Doug. Virgil, 51, 44.

Be al Eneas destaneis I swere,
His traistly fayth, or rycht hand into were
Sa vailyeant at vnset and defence.

Ibid. 213, 37.

Treist is used by R. Brunne, p. 175.

Your will is euer so gode, & your treuth so traist,
Your doughtynesse of blode the Sarazins sall freist.

Isl. traust-r, fidus, fidelis, Su.-G. troest, Germ. trost, id.

2. Confident.

Thai tuk to consail that thai wald
Thai wayis toward Coigneris hald;
And herbery in the cite ta.
And than in gret hy thai haf don sua;
And raid be nycht to the cite.
Thai fand thair of wittail grete plenté;
And maid thaim rycht mery cher,
For all traist in the toun thai wer.

Barbour, xiv. 466, M3.

Germ. treist, triest, Su.-G. troest, audax, intrepidus.

3. Secure, safe.

—And gert dyk thaim sa stalwartly,
That quhill thaim likyt thar to ly,
Thai suld for owt the traister be.

Barbour, xvii. 273, M3.

Surer, Edit. 1620.

TRAISTIS, s. pl. A roll of the accusations brought against those who, in former times, were to be legally tried.

"It is thocht expedient,—that in tyme tocum, quhes the Crownar resailis his portewis & traistis, that thair be ony parsounis contentit in the samyn, that will disobey him, that he dar not, nor is not of powar to arrest, in that cause the Crownar sall pass to the Lord & Barrone of the Barronie, quhair that persoun or persounis dwellis and inhabitis." Acts Ja. III., 1457, c. 119, Ed. 1566.

"Traistis—signities ane roll or catalogue, containand the particular dittay, taken vp vpon malefactours, quhilk with the portuous is delivered be the justice Clerk to the Crownar, to the effect the persons, quhais names ar contained in the portuous, may be attached conforme to the dittay, contained in the traistis. For like as the portuous comprehends the names of the persons indited; swa the traistis containis the kindes of dittay, given vp vpon them : quhilk is swa called, because it is committed to the traist, faith and credit of the clerkes and crowner, quha gif they be trustir, & faithfull, suld nocht reveale, delecte, change, or alter the samin. Jam. 2. par. 6. c. 28." Skene, Verb. Sign. in vo.

TRAISTLY, adv. Confidently, securely.

Ga we, and wenge sum off the dispyte,
And that may we haiff done als tite ;
For thail y traistly, but dreding
Off ws, or off our her cummyng.
Barbour, v. 81, MS.

TRAIST, s. The frame of a table. V. TREST.

TRAITIS, s. pl. Draughts, lines, or streaks.

"Item, ane claith of estate of fresit claith of gold, and traitis of violet silk, partit equalie with violet velvet, furnisit with thre pandis, and the taill the nukis only freinyeit." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 133.

This seems to signify streaks or lines, from Fr. traict, trait, a draught, line, or streak. For in the next article the term drauchtis is used as synonym.—"Drauchtis of violett silk partit equalie with violett velvet."

[TRAKED, part. pa. Drawn, infused, Shetl.]

[TRAKIN, part. pr. Trakin the tay, drawing or infusing tea, ibid. V. TRACK-POT.]

TRAKIT, part. pa. 1. Sore fatigued. V. TRAIK.

2. Wasted, brought into a declining state by being overdriven, starved, or exposed to the inclemency of the weather, S.

—"Be the tempestuous stormis of the winteris past, the hail gudis wer sa trakit, smorit and deid, that the prices of the flesche ar risin to sic extreme derth, that the like has not bene sene within this realme." Sedl. Conc. A. 1562, Keith's Hist. App., p. 96.

TRAM, s. 1. The shaft of a cart, or carriage of any kind, S.

I wald scho war, bayth syde and bak,
Weill batterit with a barrow tram.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 93.

Nor is the nsig the worse to draw
A wee while in the trams.

Shirref's Poems, p. 360.

Su.-G. traam, that part of a pretty long tree, which is cut into different portions, that it may be more conveniently inserted in a plough; Ihre. Germ. tram, a tree, also, a beam. Hence the forensic term tramrecht, the liberty of inserting a roof into a wall belonging to a neighbour. Moes.-G. thrams, a tree.

2. A beam or bar.

"By order, the hangman brake his sword between the crosses of Aberdeen, and betwixt the gallows trams standing there." Spalding's Troubles, i. 290.

3. Used metaph., in a ludicrous sense for leg or limb; as, lang trams, long limbs, S. [Applied also to a person with long ungainly legs, Clydes.]

[TRAMSACH, s. Applied to a person, or animal that is long-legged, lean, and uncomely, Banffs.]

TRAMALT NET. Corr. from E. trammel.

Into thair tramalt net, thay fangit ane flasche,
Mair nor ane quhale, worthy of memorie :
Of quhom thay haue had mony dainty dische,
Be quhome thay ar exaltit to greit glorie,
That maruellous monstour callit Purgatorie.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 136.

TRAMORT, s. A corpse, a dead body.

Thair wes with him an ugly sort,
And mony stinkand fowll tramort.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 29.

V. also p. 94.

The last part of the word is undoubtedly from Fr. mort, dead, or Germ. mord, death. Su.-G. tra signifies to consume, to rot, tabesce; q. a dead body in a state of consumption.

To TRAMP, v. a. 1. To trample, to tread with force, S.

Behald, how your awin brethren now laity
In Dutchland, Inland, Denmark and Norroway,
Ar trampit down with thair hypocrisie,
And as the snaw ar molten clene away.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 75.

Sw. trampa pa, conculcare. Belg. tramp-en, pedibus proculcare; Moes.-G. anatramp, they pressed upon him, Luke, v. 1.

"Tramp on a snail, and she'll shoot out her horns;" Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 30, a proverb founded on the vulgar idea, that the telescopical eyes of the snails are horns.

2. To tread, in reference to walking, S.

Frae this the human race may learn
Reflection's honey'd draps to earn :
Whether they tramp life's thorny way,
Or thro' the sunny vineyard stray.
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 32.

3. To cleanse clothes by treading on them in water, S. V. To TRAMP CLAISE.

To TRAMP, v. n. 1. To tread with a heavy step, S.

Su.-G. tramp-a, cum pedum aliqua supposicione incedere.

2. To walk; as opposed to any other mode of travelling; a low sense, S.

I've trampit mony a weary fit,
And mony a tumble did I get,
Sin I set out frae hame, jo.
Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 237.

To TRAMP CLAISE. To wash clothes by treading them in a tub, S.

"And that great glowrin new toun there,—whar I used to sit an' luck at bonny green parks, and see the coos milket, and the bits o' bairnys rowin an' tumlin, an' the lasses trampin i' their tubs." Marriage, ii. 125.

The operation is thus described by an English writer, although he substitutes another term for that generally used:—

"I shall take notice of one thing more, which is commonly to be seen by the sides of the river, (and not only here, but in all the parts of Scotland where I have been) that is, women with their coats tucked up, stamping, in tubs, upon linen by way of washing; and this not only in summer, but in the hardest frosty weather, when their legs and feet are almost literally as red as blood with the cold; and often two of these wenches stamp in one tub, supporting themselves by their arms thrown over each others shoulders." Burt's Letters, i. 62.

An earlier E. writer gives an account of the same delicate custom in still stronger language.

"Here also you may observe a large and spacious bridge, that directly leads into the country of Gallo-way, where thrice in a week you shall rarely fail to see their maid-maukins dance coranto's in tubs. So on every Sunday some as seldom miss to make their appearance on the stool of repentance."

From the reply in this dialogue, it appears that the writer viewed this practice as having a natural connexion with the Stool of Repentance.

"TA. Then it seems by your relation they keep time with their Comers [Cummers], that hazard their reputation for a country custom."—Franck's Northern Memoirs, p. 76.

Sir John Carr uses the proper term.

"In my way from Hopetoun-house to Linlithgow I saw the process of tramping, that is, of washing. The washerwoman first soaps the linen, and next puts it in a tub of cold water; she then kilts her coats, that is, raises her petticoats above her knees, and dances round the tub with her face outwards, until she presses out the dirt with her feet; she then rinses the linen in the river or stream, and dries it on the grass. If the tub is large, and the work much, two women will dance round, hand in hand, laughing and singing all the time." Caledonian Sketches, p. 226, 227.

To TRAMP on one's TAES. Metaph., to take undue advantage of one, Aberd.

TRAMP, s. 1. The act of striking the foot suddenly downwards, S.

2. The tread, properly including the idea of weight, as the trampling of horses, S.

"Then came the tramp of horse, and you cried 'Rin, rin,' and I had nae mair thought o' the book." Antiquary, ii. 294.

3. The act of walking, an excursion, a pedestrian expedition, S.

"An' whan does this burnin'-match begin?—We've haen a lang tramp frae Dunfermlin, for the very purpose." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 120.

If haply knowledge, on a random tramp,
Had shord them with a glimmer of his lamp,—
Plain, dull Simplicity stept kindly in to aid them.
Burns, iii. 53.

4. A plate of iron worn by ditchers below the centre of the foot, for working on their spades; q. for receiving the force of the tramp in digging, Roxb., Aberd.

Isl. tramp, conculcatio.

TRAMP-COLL, s. A number of colls or cocks of hay put into one, and tramped hard, in order that the hay may be farther dried, Aberd.

As some ricks are made in a more compact form by tramping, S.A., it is common to say, in forming the ricks, "Tramp the coil weel."

TRAMPER, s. A foot-traveller; used in a contemptuous way, q. a vagrant, S.

"D'ye think his honour has naething else to do than to speak wi' ilka idle trumper that comes about the town, and him in his bed yet, honest man?" Heart M. Loth., iii. 13.

A. Bor. "Trampers, strollers, whether beggars or pedlars," Grose.

TRAMP-PICK, s. An iron instrument similar to a very narrow spade, with a footstep, used for turning up very hard soils, Mearns.

"Among the lesser implements may be mentioned the tramp-pick.—This is a kind of lever, of iron, about four feet long, and an inch square in thickness, tapering away at the lower end, and having a small degree of curvature there, similar to the prong of a dung fork. It is fitted with a footstep, about eighteen inches from the lower end, on which the workman presses with his foot, when he is pushing it into the ground, or into the hard gravel." Agr. Surv. Kincard., p. 238.

TRAMPILFEYST, adj. Untoward, unmanageable, Roxb.

The same word, it would seem, assumes so many forms, that there can be nothing like certainty as to its component principles. For it appears, as Amplefeyst and Wimplefeyst; and the adj. Gumple-foisted is explained exactly synon. with Trampilfeyst.

[TRANSICKS, s. pl. Ragged clothes, Shetl. Sw. trassig, ragged, tattered.]

[TRAMYS, TRAMMYS, s. pl. V. TRANYS.]

TRANCE, TRANSE, s. 1. A passage within a house, S.

"A passage from a stair case." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 169. He derives it from Lat. transitus. Perhaps it is rather immediately from the v. transire, to pass.

2. A close, or passage without a house.

"Now at the taking of our town's men, the lord (Gordon [who] was in the Old-toun, caused draw out his horse out of the stables into the trance, and beheld all." Spalding, ii. 156.

"Of old all the classes had one common entrie to their private schools, first ascending from the trance of the old gate by an strait scale of stone to the lower gallery, and from thence to the higher by an timber scale," &c. Craufurd's Hist. Univ. Edin., p. 151.

3. A close or passage from one alley to another.

"—All and hail the lands—lyand in the burgh of Edinburgh, upon the south-side of the high street thereof, betwixt the Trans of the Vennel called Hair's Closs, and the Trans of the Vennel called Borthwick's Closs." A. 1545, Blue Blanket, p. 36.

4. Also used metaph.

"If death—were any other thing but a friendly dissolution, and a change, not a destruction of life, it would seem a hard voyage to go through such a sad and dark trance,—as is the wages of sin." Rutherford's Lett. P. ii. ep. 47.

TRANCE-DOOR, TRANSE-DOOR, s. The door between the outer door and the kitchen. S. O.

"The other part of the building was occupied by the cattle, which generally entered by the same door with the family; the one turning to the one band, by the trans-door to the kitchen, and through it to the spence, and the other turning the contrary way by the back-door to the byre or stable." Agr. Surv. Ayr., p. 114, 115.

[TRANÉ, TRAIÑE, s. 1. A plot, stratagem, lit. a train, Barbour, viii. 440.

2. Something attached to a hawk-lure to entice a hawk, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 291, Dickson.]

To TRANONT, TRANOYNT, TRANOWNT, TRANENT, TRAWYNT, v. n. 1. To march suddenly in a clandestine manner; often, to steal a march under night.

It discomfortyt thaim alsua,
That the King, with hys mengne, was
All armyt to defend that place,
That thai wend, throw thar tranonting,
Till haiff wonyn, for owtyng fechtig.
Barbour, vii. 608, MS.

King Robert, that had witteryng then
That he lay thar with mekill mycht,
Tranowntyt swa on him a nycht,
That be the morn that it wes day,
Cummyñ in a plane feld war thai,
Fra Biland bot a littill space.

Ibid. xviii. 360, MS.

As he releit was, so wes he ever than,
Off a wycht him allane, wirthy and wicht,
Circlit with Sarazenis mony a sad man,
That tranowntit with a trane upoun that trew Knycht.

Houlate, ii. 16, MS.

In printed copy, trawnytit.

It seems most probable that Travent or Trawynt is the original term, as it corresponds with O.E. "Trowant-yn, Trutannizo;" also with "Trowande, Trutannus, Discolus;" and "Trowandryc, Trutannia, Trutanizatio." Prompt. Parv. This barbarous verb Trutanizo is in Ort. Vocab. expl., Vicia vel mores trutannorum ducere; Trutannus, "quasi trudens annos. Anglice a trowande;" i.e., a truant. Thus it had conveyed the idea of a loitering course.

Bp. Hall uses the v. to Traunt or Trant, "to traffic in an itinerary manner, like a pedlar." Gl. Nares. I think there can scarcely be a doubt that this, at least, is the same with O.E. Trowant.

2. To march quickly, without including the idea of stratagem or secrecy.

The scry sone rais, the bauld Loran was dede.
Schyr Garrat Heroun tranontit to that stede,
And all the host assemblit him about.
Wallace, iv. 672, MS.

3. To return, to turn back.

Thir ladyis feistit according thair estait,
Uprais at last, commandand till tranoynt.
Retreit was blawn loude, &c.

Palice of Honour, ii. 52.

Wallace tranoyntyt on the second day,
Fra York thai passyt rycht in a gud aray;
North-west thai past in battaill buskyt boun,
Thar lugeyng tuk besyd Northallyrtoun.

Wallace, viii. 567, MS.

Than Wallace said, We will pass ner Scotland,
Or o-bt be seld; and tharfor mak ws boun:
Agayn we will besid Northallyrtoun,
Quhar King Edward fyrst battaill hecht to me.—
Apon the morn, the ost, but mar awys,
Tranowntyt north apon a gudlye wys.

Ibid. viii. 1560, MS.

It is used in the same sense, as denoting a retrograde march, Ibid. ii. 52. MS. tranoyntyt.

Mr. Macpherson says; "Travent or tranvint in B. Harry—seems a different word." But there appears to be no ground for this idea. The passages he refers to, are these quoted above. Could we suppose travent, or trawynt, the original orthography, the term would in form much resemble Teut. trouwant-en, otoiæð vagari; Fr. truand-er, to beg, to play the rogue; from Teut. trouwant, Germ. drubant, satelles, stipator, a retainer. But what affinity would there be in signification, unless we suppose that the reference were to the clandestine arts practised by such wanderers? It seems rather connected with Fr. traine, a snare, an ambush; especially from their being conjoined in the passage quoted from the Houlate.

[TRANONTING, TRANONTYNE], TRANOWINTYNT, s. A stratagem of war, [a wile; also, a forced march in order to surprise an enemy.]

We ar the fox: and thai the fischer,
That stekis forouth ws the way.
Thai wene we may na get away,
Bot rycht quhar thai ly.—
—Our sayis for this small tranowintyn
Wenys weill we sall prid us swa,
That we planely on hand sall ta
To gift thaim opynly battaill:
Bot at this tyme thair thought sall faille.
Barbour, xix. 694, MS.

[He thought, with his chawalry,
To cum apon him sodanly;—
—And swagate, with sic tranonting,
He thought he suld suppress the king.
Ibid., vii. 508.]

Til Anand in a tranowintyng
Thai come on thame in the dawyng.
Wyntown, viii. 26, 357.

To TRANÉ, TRANT, v. n. To go from home, to travel.

Remane ye, or trane ye,
On fee so far of schore?
Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 52.

Su.-G. tren-a, incedere, gressus facere; trant, in-cessus; O. Teut. trant, gressus, gradus; trant-en, gradi lentè.

[TRANG, s. A crowd, throng, Shetl.]

[TRANG, adj. Busy, crowded, ibid.

Dan. trænge, Sw. tränga, to crowd.]

TRANGAM, s. A trinket, a toy.

"Hey-day, what, have you taken the chain and medal off from my bonnet?" And meet time it was, when you usher, vinegar-faced rogue that he is, began to enquire what popish trangam you were wearing?" The Abbot, ii. 101.

TRANKLE, s. A small rick of hay, Annandale; perhaps a corr. of Tramp-coll, q. v.

[TRANONT, TRANENT, v. n. V. under TRANÉ.]

TRANSE, s. A passage. V. TRANCE.

TRANSING, adj. Passing across a house, from wall to wall.

"That all middle or transing walls, wherein there are no chimneys, shall be at least ten inches thick." Spottiswood's MS. Dict.

Lat. trans-ire, to pass through.

To TRANSE, v. n. To determine, to resolve.

Perplexit and vexit
Betwixt houp and dispair,

Qubyls transing, qubyls panning
How till eschew the snair.

Burd's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 48.

i.e., Now resolving, then hesitating.

Fr. tranch-er, decider, parler franchement, our avec autorité. Illico, praeiudique decernere, statuere; Dict. Trev. Fr. trance, denotes extreme fear. But the former sense seems preferable, as retaining the contrast, which occurs in the preceding lines.

[TRANSLACIONE, s. Changing a place of meeting, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 52, Dickson.]

To TRANSMEW, v. a. "To transmute or change. Fr. transmu-er;" Gl. Sibb.

To TRANSMOGRIFY, TRANSMUGRIFY, v. a.
To transform, to transmute; a ludicrous and low word, S.

See social life and glee sit down,
All joyous and unthinking,
Till quite transmugrify'd, they're grown,
Debauchery and drinking.

Burns, iii. 115.

TRANSMOGRIFICATION, s. Transmutation, S.

"To be sure,—since my time and your worthy father's time, it has undergone a great transmogrification." The Entail, ii. 233.

A. Bor. "Transmogrified, transformed, metamorphosed;" Gl. Brockett.

* To TRANSPORT, v. a. To translate a minister from one charge to another, S.

"Actual ministers, when transported, are not to be tried again, as was done at their entry to the ministry." Stewart's Collect. B. i. Tit. 2. § 11.

TRANSPORTATION, s. The act of translating a minister, S.

"That in all Transportations in time coming, previous enquiry be made if there be a legal stipend and a decret therefor, in the Parish craving the Transportation." Act 5, Ass. 1702.

TRANSS, s. Supposed to be a species of dance anciently in use.

He playit sa schill, and sang sa sweet,
Qubil Towsie tuik ane transa.

Chr. Kirk, st. 6.

Callander views it as what the Scots call, "reel, a train, Belg. train." But the passage may have been misunderstood. Qubill does not signify while, during, but till. Might it signify, "He continued his exquisite melody, till it cast Towsie into a trance?"

TRANSMPT, s. A copy, a transcript; an old forensic term.

—"That the said Andro sall broik & joise the said tak of the saidis landis for all the dais of his life, efter the forme of a transumpt be ane actentik instrument," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1490, p. 52.

L.B. transumpt-um, copie, Du Cange. Exhibuerint transumptum revocationis impetrationis prae dictae. Chart. A. 1399. Transsumere, transsumptare, transcribere. Fr. transumpt, "the copie of a record;" Cotgr.

TRANTLE, s. [1. A trundle; the sound made by the movement, ibid.]

2. The rut made by a cart wheel, when it is deep. This is denominated the trantle of the wheel, Ang. [V. TRUNTLE.]

TRANTLES, TRITLE-TRANTLES, TRANTLINS, s. pl. 1. Trifling or superstitious ceremonies.

—These I shall
Call acts that's preter Scriptural.
And such are baptizing of bells,
Hallowing altars, kirks and cells;—
For to impose gray gowns, or mantles,
Or ony such base trille trantles.

Cleland's Poems, p. 88.

2. Moveables of little value, petty articles of furniture; sometimes, accoutrements; S.

I came fiercelings in,
And wi' my trantlins, made a clattering din.

Ross's Helenore, p. 37.

3. Toys used by children, S. Loth. trantles.

There seems little reason to doubt that these are only secondary senses of a term originally used to denote one of the Popish services. This contemptuous application might be introduced after the Reformation, from a conviction of the unprofitable and trivial nature of the employment. It is printed trantals, Evergreen, ii. 8. st. 12, and expl. in the Gl. by nig-nays, a S. word nearly allied in sense to trantles, as now understood. V. TRENTALIS. Patter, pattering, pitter-patter, &c., have had a similar origin.

TRANTLE-HOLE, s. A place into which odd or broken things are thrown, Gall.

"About a farm-house—there are generally boles or holes,—where broken horse shoon, &c., are thrown; these are termed trantle-holes." Gall. Encyc. V. TRANTLES.

TRAP, s. A sort of ladder, a moveable flight of wooden steps, S. Sw. trappa, Teut. trap, gradus.

To TRAP, v. a. 1. To correct in saying a lesson at school, so as to have a right to take the place of him who is thus corrected; a school-boy's term, S.

"Trapp, to trip, to catch another reading wrong;" Gall. Enc.

2. In play, to catch, to lay hold of; as, I trap you, S.

3. When one finds anything, if there be others present, he cries out, I trap, or I trapse this, by which he means to exclude the rest from any share of what is found, Loth.; synon. Chap, Chapse.

Fr. attrap-er, to catch, to apprehend.

TRAP-CREEL, s. A basket used for catching lobsters, &c., Fife.

"A considerable quantity of lobsters and crabs, or partons, (and sometimes a few cray or craw fish) are taken with trap-creels let down into the sea upon the rocks near the shore. Stat. Acc. P. Wemyss, xvi. 516. O. Teut. trappe, muscipula, decipula.

[TRAPPIT, part. pa. Furnished with trappings, equipped; armed; generally applied to horses, Barbour, xiv. 289.]

TRAPPOURIS, TRAPOURIS, s. pl. Trappings; phalerae, ornamenta equestria.

Syne cummis sum, and in the fyre dois fling—
Brydylis and all thare stedis trappouris fare.

Doug. Virgil, 367, 47.

Rudd. derives this from Fr. draperie,—from drap, cloth. Although these terms are radically the same; this is more nearly allied to L.B. trappatura, ornatus è trapo seu panno, amplum equi stratum undique defuens. Du Cange. V. TRAPPYS.

TRAPPYS, s. pl. Trappings. [Trappin, tape, Mearns.]

Off saffroun hew betuix yellow and rede
Was his ryche mantil, of quham the forbrest lappys,
Ratlyng of brycht gold wyre wyth gyltyn trappys;
Of cordis fyne was buklyt wyth ane knot.

Doug. Virgil, 393, 10.

L.B. trap-us, Hisp. trop-o, cloth.

TRAS, s. The trace or track, as of game.

The kyng blew rechas,
And followed fast on the tras.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 5.

Fr. trace, id. Trasses, the footing of a deer.

To TRASH, v. a. To maltreat, to dash, to jade, to abuse; as, "He trash'd that horse terribly," by over-heating or over-riding him, Ettr. For., Roxb.; synonym. Dash.

[Goth. thriskan, Isl. threskja, A.-S. thirskan, Dan. terake, Sw. tröskja, all from the Teut. base thrisk, to beat. The S. term is applied both to beating, thrashing, abusing, and to the beating or dashing of heavy rain. V. under THRASH, in Skeat's Etym. Dict.]

TRASH o' weet. A heavy fall of rain, Selkirk.; synonym. Blush. Hence, TRASHIE, adj. Abounding with rain; as, trashie weather, ibid.; synonym. blashie weather.

TRASHTRIE, s. Trash, Ayr.

An' tho' the gentry first are stechin,
Yet ev'n the ha' folk fill their pechan
Wi' sauce, ragouts, and siklike trashtrie, &c.

Burns, iii. 4.

[Sw. trasa, rag, tatter; trasig, ragged, tattered.]

TRAST, TREST, s. A beam.

—Wallace gert wrychtis call,
Hewyt trastis, wndid the passage all.
Sa the sam folk he send to the depfurd,
Gert set the ground with scharp spykis off burd.

Wallace, x. 40, MS.

In Perth Edit. it is—

He with crafts undid——

In common editions—

And with crafts men, &c.

Him self wndyr he ordand thar with all,

Bownd on the trest in a credidill to sit,

To lous the pyne quhen Wallace leit him witt.

Wallace, vii. 1158, MS.

Hamilton retains this term.

—Caus'd saw the boards immediately in two,
By the mid trest, that none might over goe.

Wallace, p. 168.

But in MS. it is clearly hewyt trastis, i.e., caused beams to be hewed; from Fr. tralles, which seems to have been anciently written trastes, thus defined, Dict. Trev. Terme de charpenterie, qui se dit de grosses pieces de bois de trois toises de long, et de 10 pouces de grot, posées au dessus de la chaise, d'un moulin à vent, es qui portent sa cage. Tigna majore.

[To TRAST, v. a. To trust, Barbour, vii. 179; pret. and part. pa. trastit, trusted, Ibid., v. 530, Accts. L. H. Treas, i. Gl. V. TRAIST.]

[TRAST, adj. Trusty, confident, secure, Barbour, ix. 381; trastar, more secure, ibid. xvii. 273.

Isl. traustr, trusty.]

[TRAST, s. Tryst, Barbour, xvii. 36.]

[TRASTLY, adv. Trustfully, ibid. iv. 327; confidently, v. 81; securely, vii. 300.]

[TRASTLYAR, adv. With more confidence, ibid. xviii. 36.]

TRAT, TRATTES, s. An old woman; a term generally used in contempt, S. Chaucer, trate, E. trot.

Out on the, auld trat, agit wyffe or dame,
Eschames ne time in roust of syn to ly?

Doug. Virgil, Frol. 98, 28.

Thus said Dido, and the tothir with that Hyit on furth with slaw pase lik ane trat.

Ibid. 122, 39.

Alecto hir trawin vissage did away,
All furus membris laid apart and array,
And hir in schape transformyt of ane trat,
Hir forrett skorit with runkilis and mony rat;
And with ane vaile ouer sprede hir lyart hare,
Ane branche of oliue thareto knittis yare:
Of Junois tempil semyt scho to be
The Nun and trattes, clepit Calybe.

Ibid. 221, 39.

The etymon given by Rudd., in his Addenda, has great probability. "Goth. drotta, domina, Teut. truhtin, dominus, whence Dr. Hickes derives the Ital. drudo, amasia, concubina."

It must be observed, however, that in signification it is more clearly connected with some other terms proceeding from the same stock; Isl. draettur; Su.-G. drott, a servant; whence kirkiudrott, oeconomus templi, corresponding to kirkiuwaer-jande, which seems nearly the same with Church-warden, E. There is an obvious analogy between this designation, and that given by Doug. to Calybe, whom he calls "the nun and trattes of Junois tempil."

Some have viewed the term as allied to Germ. drutte, a witch; saga, mulier fatidica; trot, a woman, an old woman, a witch. Wachter thinks that the latter was a designation originally given to any woman, afterwards restricted to those that were decrepit with age; and hence transferred to witches, because the vulgar generally imputed the crime of witchcraft to old women. Keyser, having made the same observation, in reference to E. trot, derives it from Drut, a female Druid. Antiq. Septent., p. 503, 504.

The word waltrot occurs in P. Ploughman, although overlooked both by Skinner and Junius; and might be viewed as favouring the latter etymon.

—“Patriarks & Prophets haue preched here often,
That man shall man saue through a womans helpe;
And that was tynt through tree, tree shall it wyne;
And that dethe downe brought, deth shall relieue.”
“That thou tellest,” quoth Truth, “is but a tale of walltrot;
For Adam and Eue, Abraham and other
Patriarks and Prophetes yet in payne ligen,” &c.
Fol. 99. a.

Isl. Vaia, Volua, is the name of a certain Sibyl, says G. Andr., whence Voluspa, Sibyllinum vaticinium. Thus walltrot may signify, an old woman's fable.

According to some writers, Isl. troda, denotes a woman, in general; foemina, Gl. Gunnlang. vo. Lins-troda. G. Andr., however, says that they err who view this term, when standing singly, as signifying a woman; p. 241, 242.

To TRATTIL, TRATLE, v. n. 1. To prattle; to tattle.

The Kyng thus answeryd to thaim then,
“Thare modris has tynt thame, and noucht I.
Yhe rawe, and tratelys all foly.”

Wyntown, vii. 10. 360.

But wist thir folkis that uthir demis,
How that thair sawis to uthir semis,
Thair vicious wordis and vanitie,
Thair trattling tungis that all furth temis,
Sam wald lat thair deming be.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 63.

Thair honestie as justifie thair wald,
[As sould] thame schame till lie that war so bald;
And gar thi grace sa ken the veritie,
That thow sould than for honest men thame hald:
And tratlane toungs have [na mair] leif to lie.

Maitland Poems, p. 344.

“A tame purse makes a trattling merchant,” S. Prov. retained in Loth.

Of the same meaning with that, “A toom purse makes a bleat merchant,” i.e., bashful. “A man will have little confidence to buy, when he wants money to pay for it,” Kelly, p. 21. Therefore he trattlis or talks much in making a bargain, or in cheapening commodities.

2. To repeat in a rapid and careless manner; nearly synon. with patter.

And with greit blis bury we sal your banis,
Sine Trentallis twenty trattil al at anis.

Lyndsay's Warkie, 1592, p. 208.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. tract-a, detractare.

The idea of Mr. Pinkerton, that the term, as used Maitl. P., signifies to asperse is highly probable. Junius refers to C. B. tryd-ar, to prattle.

Trittell trattell, pshaw, expressive of contempt; tut-tatie, synon.

Dil. Better bring hir to the leichis heir.

Fol. Trittell trattell! sche ma not steir.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 83.

TRATTILS, s. pl. Prattles, idle talk.

“The Earl of Douglas, hearing this, gave over-soon credit to the wicked false reports of an idle lown, that had no other shift to conqueass his living with, except vain trattils, to sow discord among noblemen.” Pit-scottie's Hist., p. 36. V. the v.

TRAYT, s. Bread of trayt, a superior kind of bread made of fine wheat.

"They make not all kindes of bread, as law requyres; that is ane fage, symmell, wastell, pure cleane breade, —and bread of trayt." Chalm. Air, c. 9. s. 4. Panem de trayt, Lat.

"In the Stat. 5. Hen. 3. Bread of treete seems to be that bread which was made of fine wheat." Cowel. He derives it from Lat. tritium, wheat.

Panis de Treyt duos wastellos ponderabit, et panis de omne blado ponderabit ii coket. Fleta, Lib. 2. c. 9.

TRAZILEYS, s. pl. The props of vines.

Furth of fresche burgeouns the wyne grapis ying,
Endland the trazileys dyd on twistis hing.

Doug. Virgil, 400, 50.

Fr. treillis, a latticed frame for supporting vines; Rudd. This may be viewed as the origin, if the s should, as I suspect, be read y. If otherwise, perhaps rather from L. B. treidell-us, fulcrum mensae, but used in a general sense for a prop.

TRE, TREE, s. 1. Wood, timber, Aberd. Reg. This is the old orthography.

The tothir end he ordand for to be,
How it suld stand on thre rowaris off tre.

Wallace, vil. 1156, Ed. 1820.

2. A barrel, S.

"Gif ony flasche, salmound, hering, or keling, beis found in sic barrellis vnmarkit, the samin to be escheit, and siclyke the tume treis; that ane half to our Souerane Lord, and the vther to the tounne." Acts Ja. V., 1540, c. 90, Edit. 1566.

i.e., empty barrels.

"Thir great barrellies ar called Hamburg trees." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Serplait.

"That no barrel be sooner made,—but the Coupers birn be set thereon,—in testimony of the sufficiency of the tree." Acts Cha II., 1661, c. 33.

This is a Su.-G. idiom. Trae denotes a barrel used as a dry measure. Accipitur pro mensura aridorum. Hinc habemus epitrac, dolium ex assulis confectum ad continenda arida; Ihre.

In the passage first quoted, it in like manner denotes a barrel used for a dry measure. But it also signifies a measure of liquids. A barrel for containing ale is vulgarly called a tree; as, a ten gallon tree, a twenty gallon tree, S.

A.-S. aescen, a pail, and Isl. ask-r, a measure of liquids, seems likewise to derive their names from A.-S. aesc, Isl. ask-r, the ash-tree, as having been originally made of this wood.

TREE AND TRANTEL. A piece of wood that goes behind a horse's tail, for keeping back the sunks or sods, used instead of a saddle. This is fastened by a cord on each side, and used instead of a crupper; but reaching farther down, to prevent the horse from being tickled under the tail; Perth.

TREE-CLOUT, s. A piece of wood formerly used instead of leather for the heels of shoes, Teviotdale.

Test. tree, arbor, and klood, klotte, massa.

TREECLOUT, adj. Having wooden heels, Roxb.

A pair o' hose an' treeclout shoon
Was a' my kirk an' market dress;
An' I was thought a gay trig lass.

Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 102

Till [near the close of last century], the heels of shoes were, in the South of S., made of birch-wood. The heel thus put upon them was called the clout, and required to be frequently replaced; and this operation the wearers themselves performed. For this purpose, a supply of birch was always kept in their houses. These were denominated tree-clout shoon.

TREIN, TRENE, adj. Wooden, trein, S. as a trein leg, a wooden leg.

To this cuill, Constantine his preposterous zeale to indew the church with riches and pompe much helped. As the voice (then vttered, if their stories say true) did verifie. Hodie seminaturn est virus in ecclesia. The common saying is well known: Ecclesia peperit diuitias, & filia deuorauit matrem. And that of "Golden Bishops and trein Chalice, and Golden Chalice and trein Bishop." Bp. Forbes on the Revelation, p. 61.

"Thay spulyeit the eucarist out of the cais of siluer, quhair it hang, & kest it in ane trein kist." Bellend. Cron., B. xiv., c. 15. In ligneam pyxidem; Boeth.

Ane trein truncheon, ane ramehorne spona.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 160.

Lord Hailes renders this spout; but [he gives no explanation]. It evidently means a wooden plate.

A.-S. treowen, arboreus, ligneus, from treo, arbor. This word was used by E. writers, so late as the time of Camden.

"Sir Thomas Rokesby being controlled for first suffering himselfe to be serued in trene cuppes, answered; These homely cups and dishes pay truly for that they containe: I had rather drinke out of treene, and pay gold and siluer, than drink out of gold and siluer, and make wooden payment." Remains, p. 354. Hence, TREIN MARE. A barbarous instrument of punishment, formerly used in the army; E. the wooden horse.

"He caused big up a trein mare at the cross for punishing the trespassing soldiers according to the discipline of war." Spalding's Troubles, i. 243. It is called a timber mare, ibid., p. 227. V. Grose's Milit. Hist., ii. 106.

TREINPHISS, s. pl. Perhaps, wooden traces.

"In the gunhous—Item, ane pair of treinphiss." Inventories, A. 1566, p. 168.

From the connexion, this must have been something used in the management of artillery. The first syllable seems to be merely S. Trein, of wood, joined with Phess, q. v. "wooden traces."

To TREADLE, v. n. To go frequently and with difficulty, Fife; the idea being perhaps borrowed from the treadle of a loom.

TREAD-WIDDIE, s. The same with Trod-widdie, q. v.

TREB, s. A sort of rampart, Orkn.

"Gorback—a longitudinal heap of earth, thrown up, —suggesting the idea of its being originally meant as a line of division between the lands of different proprietors. It is also called Treb." V. GORBACK.

Su.-G. trafre, a heap of any kind, as of wood, &c., and trafo-a, to heap up, are the only terms that seem to have any affinity.

TREBUSCHET, s. A balance.

"It is a hard thing to fall into the hands of the Lord; before whom all nations are but as the drop of a bucket, or as the dust of a trebuschet." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 183.

Fr. trebuchet, "a pit-fall for birds; also, a paire of gold weights;" Cotgr. Trebuchet, trutina momentana; Kilian, App. Peregrin. Dict. Fraunces defines O. E. "Trebget, sly instrument to take beestys and fowlys. Tendula." Prompt. Parv.

TRECK, interj. Considered as an expletive equivalent to Troth, Lanarks.

It seems, however, to be merely the abbreviation of Quhat Rak, q. v., which assumes a variety of forms in different parts of the country. V. RAIK, RAK, s.

TRECK-POT, s. A tea-pot, S. O.; elsewhere Track-pot, q. v.

"Tell the lass to bring ben the treck-pot—which she accordingly did; and as soon as the treck-pot, alias tea-pot was on the board, she opened her trenches." The Entail, ii. 271.

To TRED, v. a. To track, to follow the footsteps of an animal.

"That the auld actis maid tueching mureburne be ratifit, and ordanis—the panis contentit thairin to be execute aganis thame that treddis hairis in the snaw," i.e., "tracks hares in snow." Acts Ja. VI., 1567, App., Ed. 1814, p. 41.

Su.-G. traed-a : ens fotepor, vestigis alicujus insistere.

TRED, s. The act of tracking.

"The said Schir Walter [Scott of Branzholme] resauit ane oppin and manifest iniurie, to the dishonour of his maiestie his souerane;—quhillk dishonour and wrang can not iustlie be excuseit be pretens of the said Williames stopping of the following of ane lauchfull tred, seing the said forme of following wes nawayes lauchfull." Acts Ja. VI., 1596, Ed. 1814, p. 100.

A.-S. tredd, passus, gressus; Teut. trede, gressus, vestigium.

TREDWALLE, s. A christian name formerly in use, S.; Aberd. Reg., V. 16, p. 654.

This has much the appearance of a Scandinavian name, though I have not observed one exactly like it.

TREDWIDDIE, s. The same with Trod-widdie, q. v., Aberd.

[TREE, adj. Three, Shetl.]

[TREE, s. Wood, &c. V. TRE.]

[TREED, s. Thread, Shetl.]

[TREEIN, TREIN, adj. V. under TRE.]

To TREESH with one, to entreat one in a kind and flattering way, Buchan.

The origin is quite uncertain. C. B. truth, signifies flattery, and truth-iaw, to fawn, to wheedle. The only Goth. word that seems to have any affinity is laithrist-a, cogere, urgere.

[TREESH, TREESHIN, s. [Enticement, cajolery, Banffs.; coaxing], courting, Buchan.

My pipe bein' in elegiac tiff,
It needs nae treeshin.

Tarras's Poems, p. 9.

[In Banffs., Treesh, Treesh! is used as a call for an ox, cow, or bull. V. GL.]

[To TREETLE, v. n. 1. To fall in drops or in a gentle stream, Banffs.

2. To treetle at, to work at anything in a lazy or unskilful manner, ibid.]

[TREETLE, TREETLIN, s. 1. A very small quantity of any liquid, ibid.

2. The noise made by the dropping of a liquid, or by the running of a slender stream, ibid.

3. A lazy or unskilful worker; also, the act of working in a lazy or slovenly manner, ibid.

4. Used also as an adv., in drops, ibid.]

TREEVOLIE, s. A scolding, Ayrs.

O. Fr. tribol-er, tribaul-er, troubler, vexer; tribouk, maltraité; Roquefort.

[TREFOLD, s. Trefoil (menyanthes trifoliata), Shetl.]

TREGALLION, s. 1. Collection, assortment. The haill tregallion, the whole without exception, Dumfr.

If we might suppose that this term had been originally used to denote a measure of liquids, we might view it as allied to la. tryggill, parva trua, from treg, trua, linter.

Tragullion is used in the same sense, Ayrs.

2. A company, used in contempt of such as are not accounted respectable, Renfr.; also pron. Tregullion.

The second sense of this word clearly shows that it has belonged to the old Strathclyde kingdom. For, to this day, C. B. trigofion signifies inhabitants, trigaw, tarrying, trigle, a dwelling-place, trigra and trigra, id., whence trigvaucl, belonging to a dwelling-place. Owen refers to trig, a stay, a fixed state, as the origin. He expl. trig-aw, to stay, to tarry; trig-o, manere, morari, habitare, Boxhorn. Corn. tre-gillion is expl., "the dwelling in the groves;" Pryce. In the same language treg-o is to dwell; Lhuyd. He also gives la. aitrigh-im as used in the same sense. Oreilly writes it aitreabh-aim; Gael. id.

TREILIE, adj. Cross-barred, latticed, chequered, applied to cloth; Fr. treillé, id.

"Of treilie bucharem v elle." Chalm. Mary, i. 207.

TRELYE, s. Latticed or checkered cloth.

"That James Du sall—pay to David Quhitehed—five stikkis of trelye of sindry hewis." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1490, p. 158. V. TRAILYEIT.

To TREISSLE, v. a. To abuse by treading, Loth. apparently a frequentative from the E. v.

To TREIT, TRETE, v. a. To intreat.

Giftis fra sumi ma na man treit;
In geving aould Discretioun be.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 48.

Saynt Adaman, the haly man,
Come til hyme thare, and fermly
Mad spyrytuale band of cumpny,
And tretyd hym to cum in Fyfe,
The tyme to dryveoure of his lyfe.

Wynntown, v. 12. 1168.

O. Fr. traict-er, id. Lat. tract-are.

TREYTER, s. A messenger for treating of peace.

Schyr Alexander off Arghile, that saw
The King destroy wp clene and law
His land; send tretyleris to the King
And come his man but mar duelling.

Barbour, x. 125, MS.

V. the v.

TREITCHEOURE, s. A traitor; Fr. tricheur.

Sum treitcheours crynis the cunye, and kepis corne stakkis.
Doug. Virgil, Frol. 233, b. 54.

TREK, adj. Diseased, dying, lingering, South and West of S. V. TRAIK, v. and s.

TRELLYEIS, TRELYEIS, s. pl. Currycombs.

Thair lokkerand manis and thair creistis hie,
Dressis with trelyeis and kamis honestly.

Doug. Virgil, 409, 23.

Fr. drille, Lat. strigil-is.

TRELYE, s. V. TRAILYE.

TREMBLES, s. pl. The palsy in sheep, S.

"Ovis in pascuis montosis morbo obnoxia est, hactenus insanabili, colonis admodum damnosa, the Trembles, dicto. Paralysis faciem gerit." Dr. Walker's Essays on Nat. Hist., p. 525.

TREMBLING EXIES, or AIXIES. The ague, Loth. Trembling Fevers, Ang.

"Ye may gang down yoursell, and look into our kitchen—the cookmaid in the trembling exies—the good vivers lying a' about," &c. Bride of Lammermoor, i. 282.

Prob. from Fr. acces. Cotgr. indeed expl. Acces de fevre, as signifying, "a fit of an ague."

TREMBLING-ILL. A disease of sheep, Selkirks.

"Trembling, Thwarter, or Leaping Ill. These three appellations, of which the last is most common in Annandale, and the first in Selkirkshire and to the eastward, are now used as synonymous." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 385.

[TREMSKIT, adj.] Ill-arranged, slovenly, Shetl.]

TRENCHMAN, s. 1. "Expl. train-bearer; rather perhaps carver; from Fr. trench-er, scindere; or interpreter, Fr. trucheman;" Gl. Sibb.

That this word was understood in the latter sense, appears to be probable from what follows.

2. An interpreter.

"Interpreter, an interpreter or Trenchman." Desaut. Gram., B. 10, b.

This may be an erratum for Trucheman, used by O. E. writers in the same sense; or a corr. from the Fr. word which has the same form with the E. one?

TRENE, adj. Wooden. V. TREIN.

TRENKETS, s. pl. Iron heels put on shoes, Stirlings.

Can this have any connection with Gael. triochan, a shoe? Or, as wooden heels were formerly in use, shall we view it as originally used in this sense, and as having the same signification with Tree-clout, q. Trein-clout, from Treine, Trene, wooden?

TRENSAND, part. pr. Cutting.

The trensand blaid to persyt euery deill!

Throu plaitt and stuff, mycht nocht agayn it stand.

Wallace, iv. 662, MS.

Fr. trenchant, id.

TRENTAL, s. Properly a service of thirty masses, which were usually celebrated upon as many different days, for the dead.

Thay tyrit God with tryfillis tume trentalis,
And daift him with [thair] daylie dargeis;
With owklie Abitis, to augment thair rentalis,
Mantand mort-mumlingis, mixt with monye leis.

Scott, Bannatyne Poems, p. 197.

It has been observed, (vo. Trantles), that this term was most probably used in a contemptuous sense after the Reformation, to denote any thing mean and trifling. In this passage, it seems rather to admit this general signification. Even long before the Reformation, it appears to have been declining in its acceptance.

And so leue lellye Lories, forbode els
That pardon and penance, & prayers done saue
Soules that have sinned seven sythes deadly:
And to trust to these trentals, truly me thinketh,
Is not so siker for the soule, as to do well.
Therefore I rede you reukes, that rich be on this earth,
Apon truste of your treasure, trentales to haue,
Be ye neuer the bolder to breake the ten hestes.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 39. a.

The term is also used by Chaucer. V. Tyrwhitt. Fr. trentel, id. from trente, thirty.

TRES-ACE, s. A game in which generally six are engaged; one taking a station before, two about twelve yards behind him, three twelve yards behind these two. One is the catch-pole. Never more can remain at any post than three; the supernumerary one must always shift and seek a new station. If the catchpole can get in before the person who changes his station, he has the right to take his place, and the other becomes pursuer. The design of the game which is played in the fields, and often by those on the harvest-field, is for putting them in heat when the weather is cold,

Fife.

TRESS, TRES, s. A welt or binding.

"Item, ane cott of variand taffatie, with ane small waltin tres of gold, lynit with reid bukrem." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 82.

"Item, ane doublett of quhite velvett, with ane small tress of silveir." Ibid. A. 1539, p. 42.

The same with Trais, q. v., whence our vulgar phrase gold-traced. Fr. trasse, cordon plat, fait de plusieurs brins de fil, de soie, ou d'autres filet entrelacés en forme de natte; Dict. Trev.

TRESS, s. A frame of wood, S. V. TREST.

TREST, adj. Trusty, faithful.

"We having trew and perfite knowlege of the guid and thankfull service done to our derrest moder of most noble memore, and to ws, be our umquhile cousing Johnne lord Erskin, and now sen his deceis be our trew cousing Johnne now erle of Mar," &c. Inventories, A. 1566, p. 177. V. TRAIST.

To TREST, to trust. TREST, faith. V. TRAIST.

TREST, TRAIST, TRIST, s. 1. A beam. V. TRAST.

2. The frame of a table, S. tress, E. trestle.

The golden tristis shynand standis ouerthorte,
Vnder rich tabillis dicht for maniory.

Doug. Virgil, 185, 34.

Of sardanis, of jasp, and smaragdane,
Traists, formis, and benkis, war poleist plane.

Palace of Honour, iii. 70.

3. A tripod.

Before thare ene war set, that all beheid,
The gilt trastis, and the grene tre,
The laurere crounis for the price and gre.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 9.

4. The frames for supporting artillery.

"And ilk man hauand fourtie pund land, sall haue ane culuering, with calmes, leid, and powder, ganand thairto, with trastis to be at all tymes ready, for schutting of the saidis hagbuttis." Acts Ja. V., 1540, c. 73. Ed. 1566. Treastes, Skene.

Fr. treseau, fulcrum mensae.

TRESTARIG, s. The name given, in the isle of Lewis, to a kind of ardent spirits distilled from grain.

"Their plenty of corn was such, as disposed the natives to brew several sorts of liquors, as common Usquebaugh, another called Trestarig, i.e., Aqua-vita, three times distill'd, which is strong and hot; a third kind is four times distill'd, and this by the natives is called Usquebaugh-baul, i.e., Usquebaugh, which at first affects all the members of the body. Two spoonfuls of this last liquor is a sufficient dose; and if any man exceed this, it would presently stop his breath, and endanger his life. The Trestarig and Usquebaugh-baul, are both made of oats." Martin's Western Islands of S., p. 3.

From Ir. Gael. treise, force, strength, and teora, three, thrice; or the last part of the word may be from Gael. tarruing, distillation, from tarruing-am, to draw, to distil, q. the strong distillation. Ir. tarrudh, also signifies drawing; Obrien.

TRET, adj. Long and well proportioned.

Braid breyst and heyeh, with sturnly crag and gret,
His lyppys round, his noyas was squar and tret,
Wallace, ix. 1925, MS.

Fr. traict, trait, drawn out, lengthened. From the same origin is the O. adj. traictif, traictis, traidis, treis. Nez traictif, a pretty long nose, traictisses mains, long and slender hands; Cotgr. The very phrase used in Wallace occurs in Rom. de la Rose.

Les yieux rians, le nez treitis,
Qui n'est trop grand ne trop petit.

Hence it is adopted by Chaucer.

Hire nose treitis; hir eyen grey as glas.

Prod. Cant. T. v. 152. Also Rom. Rose, v. 1016, 1216.

To TRET, TRET, v. a. [1. To treat, handle, manage, Barbour, i. 35.

2. To make a treaty, to assure by treaty, Ibid. iv. 172, 177.]

3. To intreat. V. TREIT.

TRETABYL, adj. Tractable, pliable.

For al thar weping nycht him not anis sterc,
Nor of thare worles likis him to here,
Thoch he of nature was tretabyt, and courtes.

Doug. Virgil, 115, 18.

Rudd. renders it "easy to be intreated." But this does not so properly shew the sense of the term used by Virg., which is tractabilis.

TRETIE, TRETIS, s. 1. A treatise.

"Here beginnis ane litil tretie intitult the goldyn targe, compilt be Maister Wilyam Dunbar." Title of this Poem, Edin. 1508. Fr. traité.

[2. A treaty, proposals of treaty, Barbour, i. 125, xi. 35.]

3. Intreaty.

With tretie fair, at last, scho gart her ryse.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 152.

[TRETING, s. Treating, negotiations, Barbour, iv. 8.]

TREUTH, s. Truth; treuytht, Brechine Reg., Fol. 92; [gaf treuth, believed, Barbour, iv. 223.]

TREULES, TROWLESS, adj. Faithless, truthless, false; Gl. Sibb.

TRUEX, s. Truce.

"Anent the pece & treuz that is now takin betuix our soueran lord—and Richard king of Ingland," &c. Acts Ja. III., 1485, Ed. 1814, p. 150.

This resembles the plural of the Fr. noun. V. TARV.

TREVAILLIE, s. [Lit., a work, a to-do; hence, applied to anything unusual.]

"Ye'll maybe no ken, fren, whar ony o' thae runigates has dern'd upo' the hill here? gin ye could airt me tae ane o' them, we wad let you see a fine trevallie." St. Patrick, i. 162.

[Prob. from Fr. travail, work, worry, Ital. travaglio.]

TREVALLYIE, s. A train or retinue, implying the idea of its meanness; Clydes.

TREVISS, TREVESSE, TRAVESSE, s. 1. Any thing laid across by way of bar; as, a trevis in a stable, the partition between two stalls, S.

2. A horse's stall, Ettr. For.

Perhaps immediately from Fr. traversa, cross, what is laid across. In this sense travers is used in O. E.

"To make valences to the travers in the Q. chamber, which was made of some of thother peece of lxxxiiij yards, and to enlarge it.—For a traverse in the Q. chambre...about xii or xiii yards." Sadler's Papers, ii. 511, 512.

3. A counter or desk in a shop, S. B.

L. B. travacha, travayso, Ital. travata, Fr. travaison, treve, intertignium; "a floor or frame of beams, also, a single beam;" Cotgr.

4. Hangings, a curtain; corresponding to E. traverse.

Rycht ouer thwert the chamber was there drawe
A trevesse thin and quhite, all of plesance.
King's Quair, iii. 8.
And seis thou now yone multitude on rawe,
Standing behynd yone travresse of delyte.
Ibid. iii. 17.

[To TREVISS, v. a. To fit up into stalls, S.]

To TREW, v. a. To trust, believe. V. TROW.

TREW, s. Often in pl. trewis, a truce.

The trew on his half gert he stand
Apon the marchis stabbill,
And gert men kep thaim lelely.
Barbour, xix. 200, MS.
Than your curst king desyrrt off ws a trew,
Quhilk maid Scotland full rathly for to rew.
Wallace, viii. 1358, MS.
The Persey said, Of our trewis he will nane;
Ane awfull chyftane trewly he is ane.
Ibid., iii. 267, MS.

O. Fr. [truve, triuve, triuve, trive; whence Mod. Fr. trêves]; Ital. trèves; from Moes.-G. trigguo, A.-S. tréowa, tréowe, fides data, promissum, pactum, foedus; Alem. truua, Germ. true, Su.-G. tro; L. B. treug-a, Hsp. treyn-as; all from the idea of faith being pledged in a truce. V. TROW, v.

TREWANE, adj. [Held as true, proverbial.]

"Bot it is no mervell, for he understude that he is a Priest's gett, and therefore we sould not wonder, albeit that the auld Trewane vers be trew, Patrem sequitur sua proles." Knox's Hist., p. 262. Trewane, MS. i.

This is perhaps the same with S. Tronie, q. v.
Dan. troende not only signifies believing, as being the part. pr. of the v. Tro-er to trust, but is also rendered faithful. Thus the adage referred to might be called trewane in regard to the credit generally given to it; Sw. trogen, id.

TREWTHELIE, adv. Truly.

"And for the mare sickernes aithir of the sadies partiis has subscriuit this writte with thare awne handis, yere, day, & place aboune writtin, leilie or trewthelie, but fraud or gile." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1493, p. 313.

TREWYD, part. pa. Protected by a truce.

Til the Fest of the TERNYTH
He grawntyd thame trewyd for to be.
Wyntown, vii. 8. 100.

[TREWYS, s. A truce, Barbour, xv. 102. V. TREW.]

TREWAGE, TREWBUT, s. Tribute.

This Emperoure Scyr Trajane
Tuk the trewage of Brettane.

Wyntown, v. 6. 145.

For friendis thaim tauld, was bound vndir trewage,
That Fenweik was for Persey's caryage.

Wallace, iii. 61, MS.

The term is common in O. E. —

Bot Athelstan the maistris wan, and did thaim mercie crie, & all Northwales he set to trewage his.

R. Brunne, p. 22.

In thair thrillage he wald no langar be,
Trewhut befor till Ingland payit he.
Wallace, vi. 771, MS.

O. Fr. truage, trenage, a toll, custom, tax, or imposition, Cotgr.; from truu, id. L. B. truagium, tributum. V. Du Cange, vo. Trutanizare.

TREWS, s. pl. Trous, trousers, S.

Ir. trias, Gael. triubhas, Fr. trousse.

O to see his tartan trues,
Bonnet blue and high-heeled shoes,
Philabeg aboon his knee!
That's the lad that I'll gang wi'.

Lewis Gordon, Jacobite Relics, ii. 81.

"And I cannot tell you how they sorted; but they agreed so well that Donald was invited to dance at the wedding in his Highland trues, and they said there never was sae meikle silver clinked in his purse either before or since." Waverley, i. 280.

"He wore the trues, or close trowsers, made of tartan, checket scarlet and white." Ibid. p. 283.

TREWSMAN, s. A denomination for a Highlandman, or perhaps for an Islesman, from the fashion of his dress, S.

"We have a wheen canny trewsman here that wadna let us want if there was a horned beast atween this and Perth." Leg. Montrose, p. 217.

[TREYN, adj. Wooden. V. TRE, TREIN.]

* TRIAL, TRYELL, s. 1. Proof, S.

"But this news turned to nothing, for there was no trial found that their matters were true." Spalding's Troubles i. 300.

"Schortlie, or evir James Stewart had tryell that onie man vnbesett his gaitt, ane companie of armed men rasched round about him, and slew him cruellie a little from Kirkpatrick." Pitscottie's Chron., p. 56.

"They were all suddenly blown up with the roof in the air,—and never bone nor lyre seen of them again, nor ever trial got how this stately house was so blown up." Spalding, i. 258.

2. Trouble, affliction, S.

TRIAPONE, s. [Prob., Triphane, a grayish green mineral.]

Thair I saw sindry stains beset,
The Garned and the Agat quhite,
With moné mo quhilk I foryst:
Beside thir twa did hing alone,
The Turcas and the Triapone.

Burel, Watson's Coll., ii. 11.

TRIARIS, s. pl. Soldiers in the Roman army who were always placed in the rear.

"Seand the inemyis sett ernstlie to win the tentis, he ischit on thare richt hand with ane feirs company of triaris." Bolland. T. Liv., p. 338. Triaris, Lat.

TRIBLE, s. Trouble.

"Sa I hoip—nocht to be sa feble, and fleit, for na trible of tyme, nor tyrannie of man, that I be a temperizar in Godis cause contrar my conscience." N. Winyet's Questionis, Keith's Hist. App., p. 224; i. e., trouble during life.

Fr. tribouil, "trouble, vexation, molestation (an old word);" Cotgr. Lat. tribul-are, to afflict.

TRIBULIT, part. pa. Troubled.

"Thair is bot ane fayth of Christis deirbelovit spous his haly kirk,—the quhilk suppose be tribulit, sall nocht decay aluterlie, conforme to our Salvouris promitt, all the dayis of this warld." N. Winyet, ubi sup.

TRICKY, adj. 1. Knavishly artful, addicted to mean tricks, S. Trickish, E.

"How troublesome must it be to a minister to be obliged to write out receipts for four pennies, and with a lippie measure in his hand,—paid in kind from the small tricky heritors, who are imposing upon him grain of the worst quality." Agr. Surv. Stirl., p. 401.

A. Bor. "Tricky, artful, cunning; full of tricks;" Gl. Brockett.

2. It is often used in a more favourable sense, as denoting one that is somewhat mischievously playful or waggish, without including any idea of dishonesty; as, "O! he's a tricky laddie, that;" S.

TRICKILIE, adv. Knavishly, S.

TRICKINESS, s. Knavery, S.

TRIE, s. A stick. "To hawe strickin him with ane trie;" Aberd. Reg.

TRIG, adj. Neat, trim, S.; [to trig up, to make neat or trim, Clydes.]

The beist sall be full tydy, trig, and wicht,
With hede equale to his moder on hicht.

Doug. Virgil, 300, 12.

In lesuris and on levis litill lammes

Full tait and trig socht bietand to their dammes.

Ibid. 402, 23.

"The same with E. tricked up;" Rudd.

Trig her house, and oh! to busk aye
Ilk sweet bairn was a' her pride!

Macneill's Poems, l. ii.

Can this be the S.-G. adj. trygg, Isl. traeggja, safe, used in an oblique sense? It is applied to a house or habitation, as conveying the idea of the preparation necessary to give security. Et trygt stalle, a safe place. Or shall we view it as allied to Su.-G. draegt, dress, trim?

TRIGGIN, s. Apparently, decking out, Buchan.

Compar'd wi' you, what's peevish trag,
Or beans wi' cleadfu' triggin!

Tarras's Poems, p. 48.

TRIGLY, adv. Neatly, trimly, S.

O busk yir locks trigly, an' kilt up yir coaties,
An' dry up that tearie, and synd yir face clean.

Ibid. p. 124.

TRIGNESS, s. Neatness, the state of being trim, S.

"The lassies, who had been at Nanse Banks's school, were always well spoken of—for the trigness of their houses, when they were afterwards married." Annals of the Parish, p. 29.

To TRIGLE, TRIGIL, v. n. To trickle.

And swete down trigilis in stremes ouer al quhare.

Doug. Virgil, 134, 18.

Be al thir teris trigilland ouer my face,—

And be our spouses begynnynng, I the besaik.

Ibid. 110, 86.

Seren. derives the E. v. from Isl. trekt, a funnel, infundibulum. Adhering to the same line of deduction, I would prefer Isl. tregill, alveolus; for tears, trickling down, form as it were a small trough or furrow in the cheek, or fall as water in a narrow channel.

• To TRIM, v. a. To drub, to beat soundly, S., the E. v. used metaph., in the same manner as dress. This is also used A. Bor. "Trim, to chastise, to beat soundly; I'll trim your jacket;" Gl. Brockett.

TRIMMER, s. A disrespectful designation for a woman, nearly synon. with E. Vixen.

"Eh! man, Edie, but she was a trimmer,—it wad hae ta'en a skelly man to hae squared wi' her.—But she's in her grave, and we may loose our tongues a bit fan we meet a friend." Antiquary, iii. 337.

TRIMMIE, s. 1. A disrespectful term applied to a female, S.B.

2. A name for the devil, Strathmore.

This term has been deduced from Belg. drommel, devil, fiend. Isl. tramen, larva vel cacodaemon, (G. Andr., p. 241,) has more resemblance. But they are perhaps from the same root. V. Ihre, vo. Tro, p. 950, 951.

TRIM-TRAM. A reduplicative term, apparently expressive of ridicule bordering on contempt.

"Trim-tram, like master like man," S. Prov., Kelly, p. 836. He illustrates it by "Eng. Hacknay mistrea, hacknay maid."

It may have been originally meant as a play on the E. word Trim, sprucely dressed.

To TRINCH, TRINSH, v. a. 1. To cut, to hack, with to prefixed.

Fr. trench-er, id.

Ene hynself ane yow was blak of fece

Brytuit with his swerd in sacrifice ful his

Vnto the moder of the furies thre,

And hir grete sister, and to Proserpyne

Ane yeld kow all trinchit.—

Doug. Virgil, 171, 62.

2. To cut off, to kill.

And eik yone same Ascanus mycht I nocht

Haue trynchit with ane swerl, and maid ane mais

To his fader thereof to eit at deis?

Doug. Virgil, 121, 15.

To TRINDLE, TRINNLE, v. a. To trundle, S.; a variety of Trintle.

TRINES, s. pl. Drinking matches.

For baudrie and bordeleng luckless he ruized:

Trist, trines and drunkenness, the Dyvour defam'd.

Polwart, Watson's Coll., iii. 25.

Fr. trinke, drinking.

TRING, s. A series, things in succession; as, "a tring of wild geese," "a tring of stories," &c., Berwicks.

Probably corr. from Tryne, a train, q. v.; if not allied to A.-S. tring-an, tangere.

TRINK, TRENK, s. 1. Apparently synon. with E. Trench, Caithn. Ital. trincea, id.

—"The upper end fixed by a wooden pin to the top of the couple, and the lower end in an oblong trink in the earth or floor," &c. Agr. Surv. Caithn., p. 200. V. NEID-FYRE.

2. A small course or passage for water, a drain, Aberd.

3. The water running in such a drain, ibid.

* To TRINKET, v. n. To lie in an indirect way.

"I have heard some hudibras—the examining of witnesses upon their age, their being married or not, &c.—notwithstanding that the same is necessary to be inserted; for—if the witness be found lying and trinketing in thir, it vilefies and derogates much from the weight and faith of his testimony." Fountainh. Dec. Suppl., iii. 67.

The v. in E. is expl. as signifying "to give trinkets," although this does not even express the sense in which it is used in that language; as it evidently suggests the idea of such an intercourse between persons of opposite parties or interests, as gives reason to suspect that there is juggling or collusion between them.

TRINKETING, s. Clandestine correspondence with an opposite party.

"It was the Independents study to cast all the odium of trinketing with Oxford on Hollis, while Saville refuses to decypher the letter."—Baillie's Lett., ii. 145.

"The King, all his life, has loved trinketing naturally, and is thought to be much in that action now with all parties, for the imminent hazard of all." Ibid. p. 245.

To TRINKLE, TRYNKLE, v. n. To trickle, S.

Ouer al his body furth yet the swete thik,
Lyke to the trynkland blak stemes of pik.
Doug. Virgil, 307, 39.

V. TRIGLE.

To TRINKLE, v. n. To tingle, to thrill.

"The main chance is in the north, for which our hearts are trinkling." Baillie's Lett., i. 445.

This seems synon. with Prinkle, q. v.

TRINNEL, s. Calf's guts, Upp. Clydes.

TRINSCHELL, s. "Tua pund trinschell, price of the wnce vi sh." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

Unless this be some modification of the name of Treacle, I know not what to make of it.

To TRINTLE, TRINLE, v. a. To trundle or roll, S.

A.-S. trendel, tryndel, globus; Fr. trondel-er. The origin is Su.-G. trind, rotundus; as rolling is properly ascribed to what is of a round form.

TRIP, s. A flock, a considerable number.

—Lo, we se
Flokis and herdís of oxin and of fee,
Fat and tydy, rakand ouer all quhare,
And trippis eik of gait but only kepare.
Doug. Virgil, 75, 6.

Then came a trip of myce out of thair nest,
Richt tait and trig, all dansand in a gyss,
And owre the Lyon lansir twyss or thriss.
Henryson, Evergreen, i. 189.

Trip, O.E. denotes a troop or host.

Me thought kyng Philip inouh was disconfit,
Whan he & alle his trip for nouht fled so tite.
R. Brunne, p. 203.

"In Norfolk, a trip of sheep, is a few sheep; [A. Bor. a small flock;] Jul. Barnes has a Tryppe of gete, for a flock of goats." Ruold.

Sibb. mentions A.-S. trepp, grex, troop. But treppas, for it is found only in pl., seems to be used to signify an army. "Aries, the front of an army, battell-aray, troops;" Somner. He adds,—grex, collectio, turba. Sa.-G. drift, grex; Isl. thyrpa, caterva. The origin of drift is drif-a, agere, pellere.

"The river was low and fordable, and trintled his waters with a silvery sheen in the stillness of the beautiful night." R. Gilhaize, i. 129.

The O. E. v. is "Trendl-yn. Trocleo. Volvo." Prompt. Parv.

TRIP-TROUT, s. A game in which a common ball is used instead of the cork and feathers in shuttle-cock, Kinross, Perth.

Apparently a cant term, from the idea of stopping a trout in its run.

TRIST, adj. Sad, melancholy.

Thare bene also full sorrowfull and trist,
Thay quhilkis thare dochteris chalmers violat.

Doug. Virgil, 186, 29.

Fr. triste, Lat. tristis.

TRIST, TRISTE, TRYIST, TRYST, s. 1. An appointment to meet, S.

—He herd that of Ingland
The Kyng was northwartis than cumand,
As to the New-castelle, or Durame,
Til Bawnbowrch, or Norame.
Thare he thowcht for til hawe mete,
As tryst mycht thare-of hawe bene sete;
For that twa Kyngis bwnaldyn wes
To-gyddyr in gret tendyrnes.

Wyntoun, vii. 9. 490. V. also vii. 9. 179. vii. 10. 131.

To set tryst is still used in the same sense. To keep tryst, to fulfil an engagement to meet; the phrase opposed to this is, to break tryst, formerly to crack tryst. V. sense 3.

"John Forbes of Lesly broke tryst, having appointed to have settled the same." Spalding's Troubles, ii. 54.

2. An appointed meeting, S.

On the Marche a day of Trew wes set.—
Schir Davy Lord than de Lynedsey
Was at that Triste that ilke day.

Wyntoun, ix. 18. 3.—16.

Markets are in various instances denominated Trysts; because those, who design to sell or buy, have agreed to meet at a certain time and place.

This designation has considerable antiquity. It occurs in the old Ballad, entitled Thomas the Rhymer.

"My tongue is mine ain," true Thomas said,

"A gudellie gift ye wald gie to me!

"I neither dought to buy nor sell,

"At fair or tryst where I may be."

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 273.

"Under the article of Commerce, we must not omit the three great markets for black cattle, called Trysts, which are yearly held in the neighbourhood of Falkirk, in the months of August, September, and October." Nimmo's Stirlingshire, p. 456.

"Tryst is a Scotch word for an appointed-meeting." Statist. Acc. xix. 83, N.

In Nithdale and Galloway, the word denotes a merry meeting among the peasantry.

The Lord's Marie has kep'd her locks

Up wi' a gowden kame,

An' she has put on her net-silk hose,

An' awa to the tryste has gane.

Remains of Nithdale Song, p. 6.

"This old song is founded on a traditional story of a daughter of the Lord Maxwell, of Nithsdale, accompanying, in disguise, a peasant to a rustic dancing tryste." Ibid. p. 3.

Those who attended these meetings were called the trysters. Ibid. Intro. xxi.

The word Trist, Tryst, is also used for a market. A. Bor. "A fair for black cattle, horses, sheep, &c. Long Framlington trist, Felton tryet," Gl. Brockett. This word has most probably been either borrowed from S., in consequence of frequent intercourse between those who lived near the Border; or left by the Scots, while Cumberland constituted an appanage of the crown.

3. The appointed time of meeting.

He trystyt hyr quhen he wald cum agayne,

On the thrid day.—

At the set trist he entrit in the toun,

Wittand no thing of all this fals tresoun.

Wallace, iv. 709. 731. MS.

We sall begin at sevin houis of the day :

So ye keip tryst, forsuith we sall nocht felyie.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 6.

"The salmons also in their season returne to the place where they were spawned : They like skilled arithmeticians number well the dayes of their absence, and for no rubs in their way will they be moved to cracke their tryst." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1256, 1257.

4. The place appointed, a rendezvous.

—Thai approach to the Pape in his presence,

At the foirsaid triste quhar the treté tellis.

Houlate, i. 24.

"By thir letters came to the King's Majesty, he knew well that his navy had not passed the right way ; and shortly hereafter got wit that they were landed at the town of Air ; which displeased the King very greatly ; for he believed surely that they had been in France at the farthest tryst." Pitcottie, p. 110.

Trist, q. v., is also used for an appointed meeting. The word evidently has its origin from the trust, or confidence, which the parties who enter into such an engagement, repose in each other. V. TRUST, v.

5. A journey undertaken by more persons than one, who are to travel in company. The termination of such a journey is called the Tryst's end, S.B.

And gin we reach na our tryst's end ere night ;

—Gin ye gae farrer, I sall gie to you

This brand-new pouch of sattin double blue.

Ross's Helenore, p. 71.

—I think we'll gang and speir

Says Bydby, gin we our tryst's end be near.

Ibid. p. 76.

Denominated most probably from the engagement to travel to a certain place in company.

6. A concurrence of circumstances or events.

"Indeed men cannot consider the same without acknowledging a divine hand and something above ordinary means and causes, where all did thus meet together in a solemn tryst to accomplish that people's ruin." Fleming's Fulfilling Script., p. 148.

In a sense very much akin to the fourth, trist, triste, is used in O. E., as denoting "a post or station in hunting."

Ye shall be set at such a trist,

That hart and hind shall come to your fist.

Lydgate's Squire of Low Degree.

V. Ellis's Spec. E. P., i. 336.

—He asked for his archere,

Walter Tirelle was haten, maister of that mister.

To triste was he sette, for to waite the chance,

With a herte thei mette, a herte therof gan lance.

VOL. IV.

Walter was relli, he wend haf schoten the herte,
The kyng stole ouer nchi, the stroke he laht so smerte.
R. Brunne, p. 94.

Hearne renders it, "meta, mark, direction." The same writer uses it to denote a station in battle.

The Inglis at ther triste bifor tham bare all doun, & R. als him liste the way had reddy roun.

Ibid. p. 179.

It is used in the same sense by Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1534. V. Trista, Tristra, Du Cange; Trista and Tristis, Cowel. The latter expl. Tristis as an immunity from attending on the Lord of a Forest, when he is disposed to chase. But, according to the quotation, the immunity is from the Tristae, as denoting this attendance. Et sint quieti—de—Tristis, &c.

TRISTRES, s. pl. The stations allotted to different persons in hunting.

And Arthur, with his Erles, earnestly rides,
To teche hem to her tristres, the trouthe for to tell.
To her tristres he hem taught, ho the trouthe trowes,
Eche lord, withouten lete,
To an oke he hem sette ;
With bow, and with barsette,
Under the bowes.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., i. 3.

V. TRYST, s.

To TRIST, v. a. To squeeze, Shetl.

It seems the same with Thrist, to thrust, &c., q. v. from Isl. thrist-a, premere.

TRIST, s. [Sadness, affliction.]

Swa, on one day, the dayis watchis tua

Come [in:] and said thai saw ane ielloun mist.

"Ya," said Wisdome, "I wist it wald be sa :

"That is ane sang befor ane hevie trist !

"That is perell to cum, quhair it wist.

"For, on sum syde, thair sall us folk assaill."

King Hart, ii. 48.

The phrase has evidently been proverbial. Trist might signify sadness, from Fr. triste, sad ; or trial, affliction. The v. tryst is used in this sense, or in one equivalent: He is sore trysted ; He has met with a heavy trial. The sense of the s., however, seems oblique ; and if the s. ever admitted of this signification, it is now obsolete.

TRISTSUM, adj. [Very sad, doleful.]

I wat it wald mak ony haill hairt sair,

For to renouue his tristsum tragilie.

Testament K. Henry, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 259.

TRISTENE, s. The act of giving on credit or trust.

—To my returning bak,

Ye wald doe weill gif ye wald thrist me.

—Ye salbe payit ; tak ye no thought ;

Your tristene sall not be for nought

At our next meeting.—

Leg. Dip. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 342.

To TRIVLE, TRIVIL, v. n. To grope, to feel one's way in darkness, Shetl.

A diminutive from Su.-G. trif-a, Isl. thrif-a, also trif-a, manibus tentare.

TROAP, s. (pron. as E. loan). A game played by two persons, with bandies, or sticks hooked at the end, and a bit of wood called a nacket. At each end of the ground occupied, a line is drawn. He who strikes off the nacket from the one line, tries to drive it as near the other as possible. The object of his antagonist, who stands between him and the goal, is to throw back with his hand the nacket to the line from which the other has struck it. If he does this, he takes the place of the other. If not, the distance is measured between the striking point and the nacket with one of the sticks used in striking; and for every length of the stick one is counted against the caster. It is indeed a trial of strength between the one who strikes and the other who throws, to see whether the latter can throw, as far as the other can strike, the nacket. This game is still played by boys in Angus.

The name must have been originally the same with E. Trap, although in this game a ball is used instead of a nacket, and it is struck off as in cricket. Skinner derives trap, from Teut. treffen, to strike; Casaubon from Gr. trapa; referring perhaps to trapa verro, because the ball is turned back. In E. it is also called Cat and Trap; Fr. martinet; Sw. triss-lek. V. Seren. va. Trap.

[To TROCK, v. a. To exchange, to traffic, Clydes., Banffs. V. TROKE.]

TROCKER, s. One who exchanges goods, a low trader, Ettr. For. V. TROGGERS.

TROD, s. Tread, footstep, S. B.

This is the worst o' a' mishaps,
Tis war than death's fell trod.

Tarras's Poems, p. 59.

A.-S. trod, vestigium, gradus, passus, "a path, a step, a footstep." Somner.

To TROD, v. a. To trace, to follow by the footstep or track. Thus one is said to "trod a thief;" S. B.

To TRODDLE, TRODLE, v. n. 1. To walk with short steps, as a little child does, Ang. todde, synon.

May heaven allow me length of dayis to see
Their bairns troddling round and round my knee!

Morrison's Poems, p. 209.

—The young things trodlin rin.

Ibid. p. 46.

2. To purl, to glide gently, S. B.

Aince by a trodlin burnie's side,
Where chrystal waters smoothly glide,
I musing sat a while.—

The trodlin burnie i' the glen
Glides cannie o'er its pebbles sma'.

Tarras's Poems, p. 32, 82.

Germ. trottel-n, tarle et pigra incedere; Su.-G. tratt-a, minutis passibus ire, ut solent infantes. The origin seems to be traad-a, trod-a, calcare; although Ihre derives it from trans, incessus.

To TRODGE, v. n. To trudge, S.

TRODWIDDIE, s. 1. The chain that fastens the harrow to what are called the Swingle-trees, S.B. V. RIGWIDDIE.

"Item, 2 pots, 1 spale, 1 grape, one iron trodwiddie, 1 round heckle, one smoothing iron, and 3 shearing hooks." Depred. on the Clan Campbell, p. 98.

As this bar of wood is immediately joined to the harrow, and lies nearer the ground, the name may be from Isl. trola, terra, G. Andr. p. 242, and vijder, vimen, q. the ground-wi'hy, or that which touches the earth. For it had been originally formed of twisted wilhes.

To TROG, v. a. To truck, Dumfr.

TROG, s. "Old clothes;" Gall. Enc.; [troggin, pedlar's wares, Burns.] Fr. troqu-er, to truck, to barter. V. TROKE, v. and s.

TROGGER, s. 1. One who trucks, Dumfr.

2. A name given to one species of Irish vagrants, Wigton.

"The people are greatly oppressed by inundations of poor vagrants from Ireland.—They may be divided into two classes. The first are those whose only object is to beg their bread. The second are those called troggers, who carry on a species of traffic, unknown, I am persuaded in most places. They bring linen from Ireland, which they barter for the old woollen clothes of Scotland, and these they prefer to gold or silver. Bending under burdens of these clothes, they return to their own kingdom." P. Inch, Statist. Acc. iii. 139.

This is merely q. trokers, from the v. TROKE, q. v.

TROGS, adv. A vulgar oath, Lanarks., Dumfr.; the same with TRUGS, q. v.

TROGUE, s. A young horse, Upp. Clydes.
Isl. droeg, equa vilissima effecta, Haldorson.

TROILYA, s. A fairy, Shetl.; a dimin. from TROLL, q. v.

[TROISS, s. A truss, which keeps the centre of the yard to the mast. V. TROSS.]

TROISTRY, s. The entrails of a beast, offals, S.B.

Isl. troe, trash, Sw. trastyg, trumpery; Seren. Gael. tarungar, giblets.

[TROJAN, s. A name applied to a person of uncommon size, strength, daring, or endurance, Clydes., Shetl.]

To TROKE, v. a. and n. 1. To bargain, exchange, barter, S. truck, E.

How cou'd you troke the mavis' note
For "penny pies all piping hot!"

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 34.

Fr. troqu-er, to exchange.

2. To do business in a mean way, or on a small scale, S.

"She'll not loose the letters that come to her by the King's post, and she must go on troking wi' the old carrier, as if there was no post-house in the neighbourhood." St. Ronan, iii. 119. V. TROO, v.

3. To be busy about little, in whatever way, S.

TROKE, TROCK, TROQUE, s. 1. Exchange, barter, S.

Fr. troc, id.

2. Troques, or trookies, pl. small wares, merchandise of little value, S. B.; [troggin, Ayrs.]

Nae harm tho' I hae brought her ane or twa
Sic bonny trocks to help to make her bra.
Skirre's Poems, p. 40.

3. Small pieces of business that require a deal of stirring, S. B.

4. Familiar intercourse, S. B.

Nor does our blinded master see
The trocks between the Clerk and she.
Morison's Poems, p. 106.

Ye ken or e'er ye got a frock,
I took ye in to my sma' flock,
An' ye and I have had a trock
This forty year.
Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 176.

- TROLIE, TROLL, s. 1. Any long unshapely thing that trails on the ground, Roxb.

- [2. A person of slovenly habits, S.]

3. Any object that has length disproportionate to its breadth, Perth.

4. The dung of horses, cows, &c., also of man, Dumfr.

Apparently from a common source with E. Trawl, Troll.

- [To TROLL, TROLLOP, v. n. To walk, work, or dress in a slovenly manner, S.]

- TROLLIBAGS, TROLLIEBAGS, s. pl. A low or ludicrous term for the paunch or tripe of a slaughtered animal, S.

"Trolliebags, the inwards of animals;" Gall. Enc.
And when he fin's a sheep fa'en aul,
Her trolly-bags he can unravel.

Ibid. p. 400.

In Ettr. For. it denotes the small guts of a sheep; synon. Sma' Fairna. A.-Bor. "Trolly-bags, tripe; Cumb.;" Grose.

- [TROLLOP, s. A large, unseemly, straggling mass of anything; applied also to a dirty, slovenly person, S.]

- [TROLLOPIN, TROLLOPY, adj. Slovenly, slatternly, Clydes.]

- TROLY, TRAWLIE, s. A ring through which the sowme passes betwixt the two horses or oxen next the plough, and by means of which it is kept from trailing on the ground, Ang. V. SOWME.

Isl. travale, impedimentum; Teut. trælie, clathrus, a bar, lattice-work, &c. Or perhaps from Trawl, q. v. because this ring is intended to prevent the rope from being drayged.

- TROLL, s. A goblin. V. TROW.

- TROLOLLAY, s. A term which occurs in a rhyme used by young people, on the last day of the year, S. V. HOGMANAY.

We find a similar phrase in O.E.; but whether originally the same is uncertain.

And than satten some, and song at the nale,
And holpen erie his halfe acre, with hey trolly billy.
P. Ploughman, Fol. 52, b.

Prob. allied to Su.-G. troll-a, incantare; troll-a, canere?

- TRONACH, s. The crupper used with dorsets or a pack-saddle; formed of a piece of wood, connected with the saddle by a cord at each end; Mearns.

- TRONE, s. Synon. with E. Truant, Dumfr. To Play the Trone, to play the truant, ibid.

- TRONIE, s. A truant, ibid. V. TRONNIE.

- TRONE, s. A trowel, used by masons, Gall.; Dumfr. Trowen; pron. trooen, Lanarks, and some other counties.

"Trone, a trowel [r. trowel], a masonic instrument;" Gall. Enc. The adj. masonic is here used in a sense totally new.

This seems evidently a corr. of the E. word, as it is not supported by analogy.

- TRONE, s. 1. An instrument, consisting of two horizontal bars crossing each other, beaked at the extremities, and supported by a wooden pillar; used for weighing heavy wares, S. This instrument still remains in some towns.

"It is statute, that the Chalmerlane sall cause big, and mak ane Trone for weying of wolle in all the Kings burghis, and in all the portis of the realme." Stat. Dav. H. c. 39, s. 1.

Trones had been used in England so early as the reign of Edw. I. For we find this ordinance in Flota. Item, ulnas, tronax, stateras, & pondera cujuslibet generis, tam pro pane quam pro aliis rebus venalibus provisus & habitus. Lib. II. c. 12, § 15.

A. Bor. "Trones, a steelyard;" Gl. Brockett. Du Cange expl. L. B. Trona, Statera publica, s. Trutina; supposing that it is a corr. of the latter term. Such a "Trona or beam, for the tronage of wool, was fixed at Leadenhall in London;" Cowel.

Isl. triona signifies a beak; Rostrum porrectum, quasi serpentis vel Rajae; G. Andr. Thus the stern or beak of a ship got this name; Landnamab. p. 299. Trana signifies not only a beak, but a crane; Grus, item Rostrum longiusculum, seu res porrectum; G. Andr., p. 241.

Hence it appears that the name of the bird, which we call a crane, has been used to denote a beak, or any thing extended so as to resemble the long neck of a crane. C. B. troyn, Fr. troyn, also signify a beak.

2. A market-place, a market, Ayrs.

"I—looked towards Irville which is an abundant trone for widows and other single women; and I fixed my purpose on Mrs. Nugent." Annals of the Parish, p. 300.

Apparently from sense 1, the trone being the place where marketable goods are weighed.

3. The pillory, S.

"They ordain the said John Rob to be sett upon the Trone, with a paper upon his head bearing this words (This John Rob is sett heir for being a false informer of witnesses), and ordaines his lugg to be nailed to the Trone be the space of ane hour." Act. Sed. just.

6th Feb. 1630. V. also Act 24th July, 1700. In the Index to these Acts it is rendered Pillory.

"In Edinburgh the Pillory is called the Trone;" Rudd.

There seems to be no reason for the extension of this name to the Pillory, save that, as this stood in a public place, those subjected to the punishment referred to, were exhibited here.

To TRONE, v. a. To subject to the disgraceful punishment of the pillory.

I sall degraif the gracless of thy greis,
Scald thee for skorn, and scor thee af thy sule,
Gar round thy heid, transform thee as a fule,
And with treason gar trone thee on the treis.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 68, st. 19.

Or as in Edin. Edit. 1508, 1, 2, and 4.

Scalle thee for skorn, and schert thee af thy scule—
And syne with treason trone thee to the treis.
V. the s.

TRONARE, s. The person who had the charge of the Trone; L.B. tronar-ius.

"The clerk of the cocquet, sall controll beath the customars, and the Tronar-ius." Stat. Dav. II., c. 39, s. 4.

TRONE-MEN, s. The name given to those who carry off the soot swept from chimneys, because they had their station at the Trone, Edinburgh.

TRONE WEIGHT. The standard weight used at the Trone, S.

"That weight called of old the Trone weight to be allutterlie abolished and discharged, and never hereafter to be received nor used." Act 19th Feb. 1618, Murray, p. 411.

TRONE, s. A throne, Fr. id.

Togidder he thare with mony thousand can by,
And euin amydwart in his trone grete,
For him arrayit, takin has his sete.

Doug. Virgil, 137, 25.

Hardyng uses this term.

Belyn was kyng, and sat in royal trone.

Gron. Fol 28, a.

TRONIE, s. 1. Any metrical saw, or jargon, used by children, S.B. Rane, Ratt rhyme, synon. q. v.

2. A long story, Strathmore.

3. Trifling conversation; evidently an oblique sense of the term as signifying a tedious story, ibid.

4. A darling, ibid.

In the latter sense, it seems to have considerable affinity to the ancient Su.-G. term already mentioned, as it occurs in the following adage; Troen maen aer gulle baetle; A trusty friend is better than gold; Ihre, vo. Tro, to trust. Teut. trouant has a similar sense; satelles, lateranus; a retainer, a dependant. It can scarcely be supposed, that, as used in the first and second senses, it is a corr. of lr. drauog, rhyme, metre.

This, I suspect, is the same with Treiwane, q. v. a term used by Knox; allied perhaps to O. Su.-G. troen, now trogen, true, trusty; because such rhymes, although now in general justly viewed as expressing the language of ignorance or superstition, were considered by our ancestors, as containing adages worthy of implicit confidence. Teut. trouens, bona fide.

TRONNIE, s. "A boy who plays the truant;" Gall. Enc.

Fr. truand-leau, "a young rascal;" Cotgr. Truan, (as well as truant), was formerly used as the s. in Fr.; truand-er, to play the rogue, also to beg about the country; Teut. trouant-en, otiosè vagari; from trouant, satelles, metaph. vagabundus et parasitus.

To TROO the School. To play the truant, Aberd.

TROOIE, s. A truant, ibid.

TROOD, s. Prob., wood for fences.

"Patrick Earl of Orkney, in a disposition of the lands of Sand to Jerome Umphray, narrates—that he had evicted 6 merks from ——— in Cullswiek for stealing bolts from his lordship's trood, probably some piece of wreck which had been drawn into Cullswiek." P. Aithsting, Shetl. Statist. Acc., vii. 584.

It seems to signify wood employed for fences. Su.-G. trod-r, lignum, quod materiam praebet saepibus construendis. Timber ok trodhor, materiam aedium et sepimentorum; Leg. Ost-Goth. c. 23, ap. Ihre, in vo.

TROOKER, s. An appellation of contempt and reproach for a woman, Shetl.; obviously the same with S. Truckier, Trucker.

To TROOTLE, v. n. To walk with short steps at a quick pace, Ayrs. V. TRUTLE.

[TROPELLIS,] TROPLYS, s. pl. Troops, [small companies].

For all the Scottismen that thar war,
Quhen thair saw thaim eschew the fycht,
Dang on thaim with all thair mycht,
That thair scalyt thaim in troplys ser;
And till discomfittur war ner.

Barbour, xiii. 275, MS.

Teut. troppel, globus, congeries; which seems derived from trope, grex, collectio. [O. Fr. tropel, dimin. of trope, a troop.]

To TROSS, TROOS, v. a. 1. To pack up, to truss, S.

2. To pack off, to set out, S.B. also turs, truss, S.A.

Thus trus is used by Minot.

Ye men of Saint Omers,

Trus ye this tide,

And puttes out yowre pavilionnes

With yowre mekill pride.

Poems, p. 50.

Fr. trouss-er, to truss; C.B. triosa, Isl. truts, sarcina, fasciculus.

[TROSS, TROOS, s. A tuck or hem on a gown, Shetl.]

TROSSIS, s. pl. "The small round blocks in which the lines of a ship run;" Gl. Compl. E. Truss.

"Than the master cryit, and bald renye ane bonet, vire the trossis, nou heise." Compl. S., p. 63.

To TROT, v. a. To draw a man out in conversation, especially by the appearance of being entertained or of admiration, so as to make him expose himself to ridicule. Both the term and practice are well known in Glasgow.

"I have already met with well-bred gentlemen in Glasgow, who neither trot nor are trotted." Peter's Letters, iii. 247.

TROTTEE, s. One who shows off, like a horse in a market, so as to be held up to ridicule, ib.

"I had the good sense to perceive the danger of the practice,—and hope never to fill the roll either of Trotter or Trottee." Ibid. p. 246.

TROTTER, s. One who shews off another in this manner, ibid. V. preceding word.

[TROTTIE. To be on trottie, to be in bad humour, Banffs.]

• TROT, s. 1. Schaik a trot, seems to have been an old phrase for, Take a dance.

"In the fyrst thai dancit—Schaik a trot." Compl. S.

2. Used, perhaps in a ludicrous way, for an expedition by horsemen, synon. raid.

"The Covenanters, hearing of this trott of Turriff, and that they were come to Aberdeen, began to hide their goods," &c. Spalding's Troubles, i. 152.

Teut. trot, cursus, grassus, succussatio.

[TROT, s. The throat, Shetl.]

TROTCOSIE, s. A piece of woollen cloth, which covers the back part of the neck and shoulders, with straps across the crown of the head, buttoned from the chin downwards on the breast; for defence against the weather, S.

It seems to be properly throatcosie, because it keeps the throat warm. V. COSIE.

"The upper part of his form—was shrouded in a large great-coat, belted over his under habiliments, and crested with a huge cowl of the same stuff, which, when drawn over the head and hat, completely overshadowed both, and being buttoned beneath the chin, was called a trot-cosy." Waverley, ii. 112.

"To see how a trot-cosy and a josph can disguise a man—that I suldna ken my auld feal friend the deacon." Rob Roy, iii. 31.

TROTH-PLIGHT, s. The act of pledging faith between lovers, by means of a symbol.

"The dispute—ended by the lovers going through an emblematic ceremony of their troth-plight, of which the vulgar still preserve some traces. They broke betwixt them the thin broad piece of gold which Alice had refused to receive from Ravenswood." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 130.

Trothplight is used by Shakspeare as an adj. in the sense of betrothed, affianced. It occurs also as a r. "Trothplight-yn. Affido." Prompt. Parv.

• TROUBLE, s. A name given by miners to a sudden break in the stratum of coal, S.; called also Dyke and Gae.

"That alteration of course was not caused by any gae, or trouble, which sometimes have their effect." "Gaes, and Dykes,—being the occasion of so much trouble, in the working of coal,—the coal-hewers call them ordinarily by that name trouble." Sinclair's Misc. Obs. Hydrost., p. 267. 276.

"The strata are frequently deranged by troubles or dykes." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 287.

• TROUGH, TROUCHE, s. The same with Trow, q. v.

"The view we had from these heights, of the whole valley, or strath, or trough of the Clyde upwards, is by far the richest thing I have yet seen north of the Tweed." Peter's Letters, iii. 299.

TROUK, s. A slight but teasing complaint; as, "a trouk o' the cauld," Mearns: synon. Brash, Tout.

Fr. truc is a blow or thwack. But it may be rather from A.-S. truc-ian, deficere, languere. Cueoru truciath, Genus deficient. Gael. truai ghe is rendered, "misery, woe;" Shaw. Ir. truagh, "lean, poor, meagre, dismal," O'Reilly; C.B. trucch, "broken, maimed," Owen.

TROUSH, interj. A call or cry directed to cattle; as, "Troush, hawkie," Mearns.

It is singular, that, in the terms expressing a call to cattle, there should be so great a resemblance, where the people using them were so remote from each other. V. PRU, and PRUTCHIE.

To TROUSS, v. a. To tuck up, to shorten; as, "to trouss a petticoat," to turn up a fold of the petticoat, and fasten it by sewing or pinning it to the garment immediately above, S.; hence, trouss, a tuck, pron. trouss.

This must be viewed as originally the same with the E. v. to Truss, from Fr. trouss-er, "to tucke, bind or girt in;" Cotgr. Perhaps we may add Teut. trouss, succingere, colligere.

TROVE, s. A turf, Aberd. toor, Ang.

"These lands—have for centuries been wasted by the practice of cutting up the sward into turf, for the different purposes of mixing it with the stable and byre dung, (muck-fail;) of building the walls of houses, when it is called fail; of roofing houses, when the sward is pared thin, and for fuel, which they call troves." P. Alford, Aberd. Statist. Acc., xv. 456, 457.

Su.-G. Isl. torf, ima arvi gleba ad alendum focum eruta; ab antiquiss. Goth. torfu, effodere; Scen.

Einar, Earl of Orkney, about the year 912, is much celebrated by the Northern Scalds, because he taught the inhabitants of these islands the use of turf. Hence he was ever after honoured with the name of Torf-Einar. V. Barry's Orkney, p. 112.

TROW, s. [1. A trough; as, a swine's trow, Clydes.]

2. The wooden spout by which water is carried to a mill-wheel, S., in some places in pl. the trows. It is also called a shot.

Su.-G. Belg. troj, E. trough, Dan. trou, Isl. thro. Junius views C.B. trychu, truncare, as the root, whence trick, troch, incisia; because troughs were anciently trees hollowed out.

3. The trow of the water, the lower ground through which a river runs; as, the trow of Clyde, Upp. Lanarks. Also the trough of Clyde, Middle Ward.

Halderson renders Isl. trog, alveus, which denotes both the bed of a river, and a conduit pipe. The trow of a river thus seems to be merely the trough by means of which the water is conveyed. C.B. troch, a cut into, an incision; troch, cut, broken.

To TROW, TREW, v. a. 1. To believe, S.

God Robert Boyd, that worthi was and wicht,

Spec. Godly Sange, p. 25.

I'll kiss your bonny mou',
I'll gar your mither true
That I'll marry thee.
Hey Tutie Tutie; Old Song.

2. To trust to, or, confide in.

Now I persawe, he that will trow
His fa, it sall him sum tyme rew.
Barbour, ll. 326, MS.

The prep. to is sometimes added.

And gif that ye will trow to me,
Ye sall gar mak tharoff king,
And I sall be in your helping.
Barbour, l. 490, MS.

TROWABIL, adj. Credible.

"It is als nocht trowabil, that sic exempil suld be introduct be ane patriciane." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 334.

- To TROW, v. a. and n. 1. To put any thing into a rotatory motion, to cause to roll; as, "to trow a half-penny," to make it spin round on the table, Lanarks., Ettr. For.

2. To roll over; as, to trow down a hill, to descend a hill, as children often do, by rolling or whirling, Upp. Lanarks., Berwicks.

- [3. To turn over a liquid continuously with a spoon; as in cooling liquid food, Banffs.

4. To coddle, to nurse daintily, ibid.]

The same with E. Troul, Troll; or from C.B. tro, circumvolution, troel, a cylinder, troellog, round, troi, to turn, (Lat. tru-are, volvere. gyrare), troelli, to put in a whirling motion; Su.-G. trull-a, rotari, ut solet globus per loca declivia; lhre.

- [TROW, s. 1. A continued tossing up of a liquid by means of a spoon, or any small vessel, ibid.

2. Dainty nursing, ibid.; trowin is also used.]

TROW, TROWE, TROLL, DROW, s. 1. A name given to the devil, Orkn., Shetl.

Hence this imprecation is used, Trow tak you!

2. In pl. it denotes an inferior order of demons.

The demonology of these islands, according to its more modern form, is said to include three orders of spirits; the Fairies, the Trow, and the Troies. While the Fairies are uniformly represented as social, cheerful, and benevolent beings; the Troies are described as gloomy and malignant, ever prone to injure men. Of these there are two classes, which receive their distinguishing denominations from the places of their residence.

HILL-TROWS, s. pl. Spirits supposed to inhabit the hills or the mountainous part of the Orkney Islands.

The superstitious, in some places, endeavour to bribe them by leaving an offering of food for them every night; being persuaded that, otherwise, they would destroy the family before morning. It is believed, that they still frequently appear in wild and sequestered scenes; having a haggard and malignant aspect. One of the attributes of the Fairies, in Scotland, is in Orkney appropriated to the Troies: it being an article of the vulgar creed, that they often carry off children.

The Brownies, although, as appears from Brand, formerly well known in Orkney, seem to be now almost entirely forgotten. I strongly suspect, however, from what has been mentioned above, that they are now confounded with the Hill-Trows; especially from the description given of their appearance, and from the offerings made to them. V. the extract from Brand, vo. BAOWXIE.

SEA-TROWES, s. pl. Certain inhabitants of the sea, viewed by the vulgar as malignant spirits.

It is believed in Orkney, by those living on the coast, that the Trows do much injury to fishermen; and particularly, that they destroy the fishing-grounds.

Brand, speaking of "those sea-monsters, the Meer-men and Mermaids, which have not only been seen, but apprehended and kept for sometime," adds;

"They tell us that several such creatures do appear to fishers at sea, particularly such as they call Sea-Trowes, great rolling creatures, tumbling in the waters, which, if they come among their nets, they break them, and sometimes take them away with them; if the fishers see them before they come near, they endeavour to keep them off with their oars or long staves; and if they can beat them therewith, they will endeavour to do it: The fishers both in Orkney and Zetland are afraid when they see them, which panick fear of their's makes them think and sometimes say, that it is the Devil in the shape of such creatures, whether it be so or not as they apprehend, I cannot determine." Descr. of Zetland, p. 115.

The good man had no occasion for so much modesty. They were a very odd sort of evil spirits, that could be beat off by poles! He had often himself seen such tumbling about in the Firth of Forth.

With respect to the origin of this name, it is merely the corrupt pronunciation of the old word Troll. This term was used by the ancient Scandinavians to denote a spectre, and particularly applied to a sort of incarnate goblins, of monstrous size, and correspondent strength, who were very destructive of mankind. They lived in solitudes, and clefts of the rocks; and were believed to feed on human flesh. They were also denominated Berggiar, i.e., giants of the mountains. Hence the fables of the Orkneys concerning the Hill-Trows.

From their superior skill in magical arts, in Su.-G. magic in general came to be denominated troll. For such was the power of incantation ascribed to them, that they could make men assume the likeness of satyrs, wild beasts, &c. Troll-a, and Isl. tryll-a, signify incantare, magicis artibus uti; Su.-G. trollilom, veneficium, and troll-kona, venefica. E. trull, a prostitute, is by Itho traced to Su.-G. troll; and with pretty good reason, as it is her business to entice men by her fascinations.

That Trow, as still used in Orkney, is the same with Troll, is unquestionable from the account given by Cunrad, commonly called the Celt, in his Hotleporici, as quoted by Arngrim Jonas, Specimen Islandiæ, p. 118. Speaking of the Orkney Islands, he says:

Orcaas has memorant, factas e nomine Graeco,
Atque has perjuri, exilium esse, Diis.
Accola mutato, quos dicit nomine Drollos.

Some have supposed that this is an error for Trollos. The word, however, is originally the same. For Dan. drol signifies a demon, and Teut. drol is expl. trullus, drollus: Vulgo dicitur daemonum genus quod in omni labore genere so videtur exercere, cum tamen nihil agat: alio nomine kabouter mannken. Trolus, Cimbrica lingua Gothicae affinis, cacodaemon ruber dicitur. ADr. Jun. This designation assimilates him to the Bronie of our own country. This seems originally the same with Isl. draug, lemur (G. Andr. and Verel.) Hence Odin was denominated Drouga Drottin, lemurum sive tumulorum dominus, as presiding over the departed: Keysler. Antiq. Septentr., p. 136.

But from the following passage we have a somewhat different account:—

—"Swertha, in despair, had recourse to the good offices of Morlaunt Mertoun, with whom she had acquired some favour by her knowledge in old Norwegian ballads, and distal tales concerning the Trows or Drows, (the dwarfs of the Scalds), with whom superstitious eld had peopled many a lonely cavern and brown dale in Dunrosness, as in every other district of Zetland." The Pirate, i. 28.

The learned author has no doubt that the Trows or Drows are originally the same with the Duergar of the northern nations. V. vo. DROWS. The one name, however, is evidently not borrowed from the other; and, as the Duergar or Dwarfs were confined to the earth, whereas one species of the Trows belonged to the sea, it is not improbable that Trow was a more generic name, and that it might include the Duergar under it.

In the Isl. version of the Bible, the word used in both places where the term satyr occurs in ours, is Draugar, Isa. 13. 21; 34. 14; with this difference, that in the latter passage Troll also occurs. And thar munu til samans kluupa Draugar og skrymsl, og eitt Troll mun thar odru moeta; lit-rally, "And there shall the Dwarf and the Spectre run together, and one Troll shall meet another." This proves that the terms Draugar and Trol, however loosely they might at times be used, are radically different, and have been thus viewed by that people who still retain the purest specimen of the ancient language of Scandinavia.

Dr. Edmonstone views Trows as synon. with Fairies.

"The fairies or trows have still a 'local habitation and a name.' They occupy small stony hillocks or knows, and whenever they make an excursion abroad, are seen, mounted on bulrushes, riding in the air.—They are said to be very mischievous, not only shooting cattle with their arrows, but even carrying human beings with them to the hills. Child-bed women are sometimes taken to nurse a prince; and although the appearance of the body remain at home, yet the immaterial part is removed," &c. Zetl. ii. 75, 76.

Dr. Hibbert justly views the name of Fairies as a misnomer, when given to the Trows.

"The subterraneous Trows of Shetland," he says, "have, in more recent times, had the improper name given them of Fairies, which is of comparatively modern introduction into Europe." Shetl. Isl., p. 446.

"The Trows of Shetland, who inhabit the interior of rocks, are the same race of beings whom the natives of Feroe describe as Foldenskræmand, or underground men; in the Icelandic Edda, they appear under the name of Duergar, or dwarfs." Ibid. p. 445.

Two centuries ago, the world continued to be written, and perhaps spoken in Shetland, after the Norwegian mode. In a ditty against Catherine Jonesdchter and others for witchcraft, &c. tried in the Sheriff Court of Shetland, Oct. 2, 1616, one of the points is thus set forth:—"Item mair, the said Catherine for airt & pairt of witchcraft and sorcerie, in hanting and seeing the Trollis ryse out of the kyrk yeard of Hildiswick & Holy cross kirk of Eshenes; and that she saw thame on the hill callit Greinfaill, at mony sindrie tymes; and that they come to ony hous quhair thair was feasting or great mirrines, and speciallie at Yule."—Found guilty, on her own confession, and sentenced to be "taken by the lockman to the place of execution, abone Birrie, used & wont, wirryet at an stake while she be dead, & thairefter to be burnt in ashes." Sheriff-Court Book of Shetland.

Catharine was accused, and also confest that "she conversed, lay, and kept company and society with the Devil, whom she called the Bowman of Hildiswick, and Eshenes, for more than 40 years, and every year sensyne, and specially at Halloweven and holy cross day: and that the last time he lay with her, he gave her an merk on the privie members, and left with her ane sey nwttie and ane cleik, whairby she could be hable to do any thing she desyrit," &c.

To TROW, v. a. [To imprecate], to curse.

Messyngeris than sic tithingis brocht thaim till,
And tald Persye, that Wallace leffand war,
Off his eschaip fra thar preoune in Ayr.
Thai trowit rycht weil, he passit was that steid,
For Longcastell and his twa men was deid,
He trowit the chance that Wallace so was past.
In ilka part thai war gretly agast,
Throw prophesye that thai had herd before.

Wallace, iii. 25, MS.

In Edit. 1648, it is thus altered.

They trowd it well, that Wallace past that steid,
For Long-castle and his two men were dead:
They waried the chance that Wallace so was past.

It would seem, that some early editor, while he retained the first trowit, as obviously signifying believed, changed the second to waried, as being better understood in his time.

Trow tak yow, is an imprecation still used in Orkney. It is said that in Norse trow signifies Devil. Isl. tramen, larva vel cacodaemon; thraen, diabolus; draugr, lemur. Su.-G. tro is used in profane swearing or imprecation. Tro mig, tro hort mig, dispaream; tro dig, male percas. Itho conjectures that taye may be understood,—ut sit, Diabolus me auferat. Gloss. p. 950, 951. Germ. traun is used in a similar sense. V. Wachter.

[To TROW, v. n. To labour under a slight illness; to dwine, Baniffs.]

TROWIE, adj. Sickly, Orkn.

As in our own country, unknown diseases were often in former ages ascribed to the influence of witchcraft, shall we view this as signifying, "under the malign influence of the Trow, or daemou?" V. Trow, Trowie, &c.

TROWIE GLOVES. [Gloves of the Sea-
Trows]; a name given to sponges, Caithn.

"Sponges are found upon the shore in great plenty, shaped like a man's hand, and called by the people Trowie Gloves." P. Dunrossness, Statist. Acc. vii. 396. q. Make-believe gloves, because an ignorant person might view them as such. V. TROW, v.

To TROW, v. a. To season a cask, by rinsing it with a little wort, before it be used; a term common with brewers; also, to trow the brew-ooms, Ang.

A.-S. ge-treowian, in a moral sense, signifies purgare; Germ. trauen, to administer the sacerdotal blessing. We say, to sign or synd a vessel, when it is cleansed by a little water being passed through it; in allusion to the supposed purification of a person or thing, in consequence of making the sign of the cross. Trow perhaps may have a similar origin; especially as Brewers retain a considerable portion of superstition. V. BURN.

TROWAN, TROWEN, s. A mason's trowel, S.; apparently corr. from the E. word. V. TRONE.

TROWENTYN, Barbour, xix. 696. Leg. tranouwintyn. V. TRANONT.

To TROLL, v. n. Used in a different sense from E. troll; as in trolling, a line, with a number of hooks on it, extending from one side of a stream to the other, and fixed to a rod on each side, is drawn gently upwards, S.

TROWNSOWR, s. A trencher. "A dowsone [dozen] of trowsowris;" Aberd. Reg. V. TRUNSCHOUR.

TROWS, s. pl. The term used in Roxb. and other southern shires, to denote two pieces of wood, each formed like the half or section of an ellipsis, fenced with upright boards, so as to prevent the entrance of water. These two are conjoined by means of iron hooks, or a cross-board; the broad part of the one being placed towards that of the other. An interstice is left between the two sections, so that the water is seen distinctly through it. This sort of vessel, resembling two short flat-bottomed yawls placed stern to stern, is used in what is called burning the water, or night-fishing on rivers for salmon. Through the interstice, by means of the lights, the fishers can see, and more certainly strike their prey.

In Isl. trog signifies linter, a small boat, from its resemblance to a trough. A.-S. troy, troyc, alveus, a trough; also, "linter, a cock-boat, a wherry or sculler; Kilian, troch;" Somner.

TROWS, s. pl. A sluice. V. MILL-TROWSE.

This does not properly denote the cloose or sluice itself, but the troughs which conduct the water to the mill-wheel.

TROWTH, s. 1. Truth, Wyntown.

2. Belief.

Syne thai herd, that Makbeth aye

Qwhill wyth hys eyne he suld se
The wode browcht of Brynnane,
To the hill of Dwynsynane.

Wyntown, vi. 18. 363.

TROYT, s. An inactive person, S.B. generally conjoined with the epithet nasty; as, a nasty troyt, one who is both dirty and indolent.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. tryt-a, to cease, conveying the idea of one who becomes weary of work; or rather, as the v. also signifies, inique ferre, pigere, taedere, whence thryt, contumacy, neglect of duty. Troelt, fessus, lassus, is a kindred term; troelt of arbele, fessus labore; and troelt-a, fatigare.

TROYT, TROYCHT, s. Prob., a trough.

"Ane troyt, ane baik breid, iijj reid truncheris." Aberd. Reg. A. 1543, V. 18. "Ane troycht & tua aiking buyrdia." Ibid. A. 1535, V. 15.

The only idea I can form of this word, is that it is meant for trocht, perhaps a trough.

To TROYTTLE, v. n. To tattle, to gossip, Shetl.; merely a variety of TRATTIL, q. v.

* TROY WEIGHT, TROYS WEICHT. A certain kind of weight, used both in S. and in E.

"That there shall be onely one just weight through all the parts of this kingdome, which shall universallie serve all his Majesties lieges, by the which (and no other) they shall buy and sell—in all tyme hereafter: to wit, the French Troys Stone weight, containing sexteine Troys Pounds in the Stone, and sexteine Troys Unces in the Pound, and the lesser weights and measures to be made in proportion conforme thereto." Act Ja. VI., 19 Feb., 1618, Murray, p. 441.

This is ordered to be used instead of "that weight called of old the Trone Weight."

The phrase, according to Keith, is written in an act of the Privy Council, A. 1565. Troce Weicht. V. REMEID. Somner, and Du Cange, both suppose that Troy is a corr. of Trone. V. Du Cange, vo. Trona. Cowel asserts that "Trone weight plainly appears to be the same with what we now call Troy weight," vo. Weights. Yet, under Pondus Regis, he says that "it seems easy to infer that what we call Troy Weight was this Pondus Regis, or le Roy Weight."

It is evident, however, that they were quite different. For, by the Act of James, quoted above, it is ordered that the one be used, and the other is discharged.

Troy Weight in E., according to Spelman, consisted of twelve ounces in the pound. This is the standard still used in S. for weighing gold, silver, jewels, oorn, bread, and liquors. V. Hutton's Arithm., p. 15. It is simply denominated Troy Weight. What is called Scot's Troy, in our times, is the same with Dutch weight; and said also to correspond to Trone weight, only the pound varying in different places, and for different purposes, from 20 to 23 ounces.

In the reign of James VI. Troy differed from Trone weight, the latter exceeding the former three pounds and a half in the stone. For Skene says:

"Ilk Trois stane contains sextene pound Trois. And ilk pound weicht theirof, contains sextene ounce Trois.—The wool, quhen it is bocht be merchanda, is bocht be the Trone stane, quhilk containis commonly xix. pound and ane halfe Trois." De Verb. Sign. vo. Serplath.

As this weight is called, in the Act, French Troys, it shows that our rulers in that age viewed it as originally borrowed from the French, and that it had received its name from its being used in Troies, the capital city of Champagne. For we learn from Dict. Trev., that almost every city had its own peculiar weights.

TRUBLANCE, s. Disturbance.

"Conwickit for the trubulance of him in wordis, calland him koff-caryll one the oppin gait." Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

TRUBLY, adj. Dark, lowering, troubled, muddy; drumly, synon. Fr. trouble.

Throw help thareof he chasis the wyndis awa,
And trubly cloudis diuidis in ane thraw.

Doug. Virgil, 108, 21.

[To TRUCK, v. a. To trample, crush, Shetl. Dan.]

[TRUCK, s. The surface of pasture land peeled off for the purpose of making compost, Shetl.

Prob., a corr. of turf-ick.]

TRUCKER, TRUCKAR, s. V. TRUKIER.

TRUCK-POT, s. A tea-pot. V. TRACK-POT.

TRUDDER, s. Lumber, trumpery, Aberd.

Isl. truts is expl. fasculus; Isl. trod-r, and Su.-G. trod, the stakes or wood with which hedges are constructed.

TRUDGE BAK. Prob., hump-back.

A trudge bak that cairful captive bare;
And crukit was his laythlie lunnis bayth.

K. Hart, ii. 54.

From the rest of this description, as well as from the name of the person, Decrepitus, it is clear that the poet meant to say that he was hump-backed. The phrase is still used in this sense, S.B.

It may be from Lat. turg-ere, to swell. But I would prefer Su.-G. trutn-a, id. Isl. thrutn-a, id. throle, a tumor.

TRUDGET, v. I dread trudget of you; I suspect that you will do some mischief, or play me some trick; Loth.

Perhaps allied to Alem. trug, fraud, trug-en, to deceive; as, being the same with O.E. treyet, deceit, treachery, Minot's Poems, p. 31.

—For all thaire treyet and thaire gile.

TRUDGET, s. A sort of paste used by tinkers, for preventing a newly-soldered vessel from leaking. It is made of barley-meal and water, Roxb.

[To TRUE, TRU, v. a. To believe, credit; as, "He gart me true," he led me to believe, Clydes., Shetl. V. TROW.]

VOL. IV.

TRUE-BLUE, adj. 1. An epithet formerly given to those who were accounted rigid Presbyterians, and still occasionally used, S.

Hence the title of a pamphlet, published about the beginning of last century, "A Sample of True-Blue Presbyterian Loyalty."

This phraseology seems to have originated during the civil wars in the time of Charles I., when the opposite parties were distinguished by badges of different colours.

"—Few, or none of this army wanted a blue ribband; but the lord Gordon and some others of the marquis' family had a ribband, when they were dwelling in the town, of a red flesh colour, which they wore in their hats, and called it the Royal Ribband, as a sign of their love and loyalty to the king. In despite and derision thereof this blue ribband was worn, and called the Covenanters Ribband by the hail soldiers of the army." Spalding's Troubles, i. 123. V. also p. 160.

"—The hail house dogs, messens, and whelps within Aberdeen killed upon the streets, so that neither hound, messen or other dog was left alive that they could see; the reason was this, when the first army came here, ilk captane and soldier had a blue ribband about his craig, in despite and derision whereof, when they removed from Aberdeen, some women of Aberdeen (as was alleged) knit blue ribbands about their messens craigs, whereat their soldiers took offence, and killed all their dogs for this very cause." Spalding, i. 160.

"Blue was the favourite colour of the covenanters; hence, the vulgar phrase of a true blue whig." Minstrelsy Border, iii. 224.

2. Metaph., a person of integrity and steadiness.

"True blue will never stain." S. Prov. "A man of fixed principles, and firm resolutions, will not be easily induced to do an ill, or mean thing." Kelly, p. 303.

TRUELINS, TRULINS, adv. Truly, Loth., Dumfr., Ang. Though properly an adv., it is used as if it were an s.

"My trulines, gin they had to huckle down on a heap o' haver straw,—gin they wad gang to bed wi' sic a wauf wamefou," &c. Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1820, p. 154. V. the termination LINGS.

TRUE-LOVE, s. One whose love is pledged to another, S.

I leant my back unto an aik,
I thought it was a trusty tree;
But first it bow'd, and syne it brak,
And sae did my true-love to me.

Song; Wala, wala, up the bank

It has been ingeniously supposed that the origin of this term is Dan. trolovet, from tro, troth or faith, and lov-e, to promise, to engage. "This seems," it has been said, "the origin of the term, true-love, in many of our old ditties." This idea is supported by the remark that "the lady's true-love is really her false-love," whence some editors have taken the liberty of altering it accordingly. V. Northern Antiq., p. 385.

TRULIE, adj. True, not fictitious. A trulie story, S.B. Su.-G. trolig, credibilis.

TRULY. Anomalously used as a s. expressive of surprise, or a kind of oath; My truly, or By my truly, S.

"By my truly, I have a mind to settle some good revenue or pension upon her out of the readiest increase of the lands of my Salmigondinois." Urquhart's Rabelais, B. iii. c. 18.

TRUFF, s. Corr. of E. turf, S.

Lang may his truff in gowans gay be drest !
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 8.

V. TROVE.

The frost may bite, the hail may nip,
The rain may steep us to the skin ;
But thae sneath the auld green truffs,
The wae o' weather never fin'.

Gall. Encycl., p. 405.

TRUFF, s. A trick, a deceit.

Ne bid I not into my stile for thy
To speke of truffs, nor name harlottry.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 272, 4.

Ital. truffa, id. truff-are, to cheat, to deceive, truffiere, a deceiver. In Fr. the sense is limited to that deception that is included in mockery. Truffe, a gibe, truffer, to mock, truff-er, a mocker. Hence, perhaps,

To TRUFF, v. a. To steal, Gl. Shirr.

Cleek a' ye can by hook or crook,
Ryp ilka pouch frae nouk to nouk ;
Be sure to truff his pocket-book, &c.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 299.

Allied perhaps to Flandr. truff-en, decipere, fallere, imponere, L. B. truff-are, truf-are, id. O. Fr. truff-er, to mock, is most probably from the same fountain. The original idea may have been that conveyed by Alem. treff-en, Su.-G. treff-a, Isl. tres/a-a, apprehendere, manibus tentare.

TRUFFURE, s. A deceiver.

Than wox I tene, that I tike to sic ane truffuris tent.
Doug. Virgil, ProL 239, b. 23.

TRUGS, s. A mode of profane swearing, used among the vulgar, S.B.

It is generally viewed as a corruption of troth, to which it is equivalent. But it seems rather derived from Moe.-G. trigga, Su.-G. trigg, faithful, trigga, a covenant. It is an affecting proof of the pertinacity of men in immoral customs, that some of the oaths used in this country seem to retain evident marks of the highest antiquity. Thus Gothe, a common profanation of the name of God, S.B. is evidently Moe.-G. Gotha, the very term used to denote the Supreme Being, when Ulphilas wrote, during the reign of Constantine the Great, that is, nearly fifteen hundred years ago. V. Michaelis' Introd. Lect. sect. 68.

[TRUISH, s. V. TREWS.]

TRUKIER, TRUCKER, s. 1. A contemptuous term, always implying that the person, to whom it is given, has done something that is offensive, S.

Despitedful spider, poor of sprite,
Begins with babbling me to blame ;
Gowk, wyte me not to gar thee greit ;
Thy tratling, Trukier, I shall tame.

Potwart, Watson's Coll., iii. 2.

2. Often applied to a female in contempt, as equivalent to "worthless hussy," S.

3. A waggish or tricky person, Roxb.

The term seems to convey the idea of deceit. O. Germ. trugh, guile, Teut. droghener, a deceiver, bedriegh-er, id. Perhaps merely a contemptuous use of Fr. trouqueur, one who barter or trucks ; as persons of this description have not generally been supposed worthy of implicit confidence.

[TRULIE, TRULY. V. under TRUE.]

TRULIS, s. pl. Some kind of game.

So mony lords, so mony naturall fulis,
That bettir accordis to play thame at the trulis,
Nor seis the dulis that commons dois sustene.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 42.

Lord Hailes thinks that this may mean some game which resembles a spindle, from Fr. trouil, id. "I am informed," he adds "that trule means some childish game, of the nature of cuppy-hole." Note, p. 231.

Germ. tori signifies the game of top. The term, however, seems rather to denote some trundling sort of game, perhaps resembling the bowls ; as probably allied to Su.-G. trill-a, rotari, ut solet globus ; Ihre.

[TRULLA, TROLLA, TROLL, adj. Haunted or affected by trows, Shetl.]

[TRULLASCUD, s. A witch-like woman, ibid. Dan. trold, an elf, and skudt, shot.]

[TRULLIA, adj. Sickly ; same with trowie, q. v.]

TRULLION, s. A sort of crupper, Mearns ; the same with Tronach, q. v. Isl. travale, impedimentum ?

TRULLION, TRULL, s. A foolish person, a silly creature, Ayrs. V. TROLL.

TRUM, s. Apparently, drum. "To play vpoune the trum nychtly, to convene the waich at ewin," &c. Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. Germ. Dan. tronne, Su.-G. trumma, Isl. trumba, tympanum.

TRUM, s. A thread. V. THRUM.

There will I wear out life's frail trum,
Just clotchng canny on my bum.

Gall. Enc., p. 253.

To TRUMP, v. n. 1. To trumpet forth, to sound abroad ; with the prep. up.

Tharefore trump up, blaw furth thine eloquence.

Doug. Virgil, 376, 14.

We have the same phraseology in the Battallie of Agynhourte.

They tromped up full meryly,
The grete battell to gederes ged.

Ap. Watson's Hist. E. P., ii. 36.

Teut. tromp-en, canere tuba.

2. To "break wind backwards."

In publyk placis fra that day
Scho wes behynd than trumpand ay :
Sa wes scho schamyd in ilk sted,
Quhil in this world hyr lyf scho led.

Wyntown, vi. 2. 98.

3. To fling as a horse, to kick, Shetl.

Isl. tramp-a, conculare, tramp-r, equus succusator.

4. To march, to trudge, S.

With that thai war weil ner the King :
And he left his amonesting,
And gert trump to the assemblé.

Barbour, viii. 293, MS.

And than, but langer delaying,
Thai gert trump till the assemblé.
On athir sid men mycht than se

Mony a wyght man, and worthi,
Redy to do chawalry. Ibid. xli. 491, MS.

Eneas all his oist and hale armye
Has rasit trumpin to the toun in bye.
Doug. Virgil, 379, 8.

Sa. G. Isl. tramp-a, calcare; Germ. trump-en, currere.
Hardyng, however, uses the v. with the prep. up in a different sense.

The Erie then of Northumberland throughout
Rayssed up the land, and when he came it nere,
The kyng trumped up, and went away full clere.
Cron. Fol. 222. a.

It seems to signify, trussed up his goods.

5. To deceive; used actively.

Than sall we all be at our will.
And thair sall let thaim trumpyt ill,
Fra thair wytt weill we be away.
Barbour, xix. 712, MS.

That fals man, by dissaitfull wordis fare,
With wanhope trumpet the wofull luffare.
Doug. Virgil, 24, 3.

Fr. tromp-er, Teut. tromp-en, id. The E. v. trump up seems to have a common origin, q. to fabricate by deceiving others. As Sw. trumph-a, id. has the same orthography with trumph-a, to play it at cards, trumph
the victorious card, (Seren.); it is not improbable that the verbs, signifying to deceive, have originally a reference to this amusement, which has been so common a mean of deception.

TRUMP, TRUMPE, s. 1. A Jew's-harp. Fr.
trompe, Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 159.

"Like a sow playing on a trump;" S. Prov.,
"spoken when people do a thing ungracefully." Kelly,
p. 232. V. CORNEPIPE.

2. A trifle, a thing of little value.

Ten teyndis ar ane trumpe, bot gif he tak may Ane kinrik of parish kyrkis cuplit with commendis.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, a. 10.

3. In pl. goods.

Now, haly fader, thi maieste inclyne,
Grant that our nauy thys fyre may eschape,
And from distruction delyuer and out scrape
The sobir trumpis, and meyne graith of Troyanis.
Doug. Virgil, 150, 55.

4. The tongue of the trump, the principal person, or that object on which there is most dependence, S.

—"Though he be termed my lord, and so forth, all the world knows that you are the tongue of the trump."
Monastery, iii. 145, 146.

"He is the tongue of the trump to the whole squad of them." Redgauntlet, ii. 225.

This undoubtedly refers to the elastic part of the instrument which causes the sound. In the same sense Dan. tunge signifies the reed of a hautboy.

"From Belg. tromp, a rattle for little children;
tromp-en, to rattle, or play with a rattle;" Rudd.

[TRUMPIE, s. The Skua-gull; so called on account of its cry, Orkn.]

TRUMPOSIE, adj. 1. Guileful, Ayrs.

2. Cross-tempered, of a perverse spirit, Renfr.

TRUMPOUR, TRUMPER, s. 1. A deceiver.

Mony proud trumpour with him trippit.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 27.

Lord Hailes renders this rattlescull; from the idea that trump signifies rattle, Belg. But Dunbar evidently uses the term elsewhere, in a moral sense, as opposed to gud men, and conjoined with schreivia.

Sum'gevis gud men for thair gud kewis,
Sum gevis to trumpouris, and to schreivia.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 50.

I am not for a trumper tane.
Cherrie and Sae, st. 86.

Et nulli insulias quondam simulata paravi.
Lat. Par.

Tyrwhitt thinks that the word means trumpeters;
Cant. Tales, Note, v. 2673.
Fr. trompeur, id.

2. Sometimes used as a contemptuous term, without any definite meaning.

How durst thou, trumper, be sa bald,
To tant or tell, that he was auld?
Philotus, S. P. R., iii. 21.

TRUMPH. To play trumph about, to be on a footing with, to perform actions equally valorous, S.B.

Achilles played na' trumph about
Wi' him, he says; but judge ye.
Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 29.

Trumph, S., has the same meaning with trump, E.,
as denoting the principal card.

TRUMPLEFEYST, s. A qualm or fit of sickness, Upp. Lanarks., Ayrs.

TRUNCHEUR SPEIR. A pointless spear, a spear having part of it lopped off.

With twa blunt truncher speirs squair,
It was thair interprise,
To fecht with baith thair faces hair,
For luv, as is the gyse.

Scott, Evergreen, ii. 178.

The same with E. truncheon, Fr. tronchet, tronson;
from trunc-ir, to cut off, to break into two pieces.
[Trunsioune, a truncheon, occurs in Barbour, xvi.
129.]

[TRONIE, s. The snout of a swine, Shetl.
Dan. tryne.

TRUNCHEOUR, s. A plate, a trencher,
S.

Syne brade truncheouris did thay fill and charge.
With wilde scrabbis and vthir frutis large.—
Ne spare thay not at last, for laik of mete,
Thare fatale foure nukit truncheouris for til etc.
Doug. Virgil, 208, 43, 52.

Fr. trencheoir, quadra mensaria; from trench-er, to cut, as on these meat is cut.

To TRUNTLE, v. a. and n. To trundle, to roll along, S.

Whan ye fell in the snawy flood,
I truntl't frae aboon you.
A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 61.

TRUPHANE, s.

A tyrant, a tormentour,
A truphane, and a traitour.
Colkelbie Soc., F. 1. v. 73.

[TRÜSH, part. pa. Thrashed; from r. tresh,
Shetl.]

[TRÜSHKA, TRUTSKA, s. Stubbornness, fits of sulks; also, pride, Shetl.]

[TRUSHKIT, adj. Stubborn, sulky, ibid.]

[To TRUSS, v. n. To break, crumble; to eat in a slovenly manner, Shetl.; hence truss, crumbs, fragments, ibid.]

TRUSTFUL, adj. Trustworthy.

"If the whole supplicants had been so trustful in a matter so great and universal,—their Lordships could not but have engaged lives, fortunes, and honour, for a good success to follow their advice." Baillie's Lett., i. 42.

TRUSTRE. Butter, S. B.; as, in Ross-shire. I see no term that has any similarity.

TRUTHFU', adj. Honest, sincere, possessing integrity, South of S.

"I'm a pair man—but I'm an auld man too, and what my poverty takes awa' frae the weight o' my counsel, gray hairs and a truthfu' heart should add to it twenty times." Antiquary, ii. 132.

To TRUTLE, v. n. To be slow in motion; applied by nurses to children beginning to walk, Dumfr., Trottle, Ayrs.

This is viewed as synon. with Drutle. It seems, indeed, to be also merely a variety of Trodde.

[To TRUTTLE, v. n. Same with troyttle, q. v. Shetl.]

TRVCOUR, s. A deceiver.

—A dowble toungit counsalour,
A trimpour [trampour] a trvcour. —
Colkelbie Sow, F. i. v. 75.

V. TRUKIER.

[TRWMP, TEWMPIT. V. TRUMP.]

TRY, s. Means of finding any thing that has been lost, S. B. I could get nae try o't.

• To TRY, v. a. 1. To vex, to grieve, to trouble, S.

2. To afflict, to harass, S.

The v. is thus used in a sort of oblique way, in consequence of its primarily signifying, "to put to the test." Thus men are said to be tried with affliction, because God proves them by means of it.

3. To prove legally, to convict.

"Quhasoeur salbe tryt to haue contravenit the same for the first faulit salbe adingit in the sowme of ten pandis monie," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1594, Ed. 1814, p. 70.

This peculiar signification approaches more nearly, than any of the senses of the E. v., to Fr. tri-er, to select, to cull out from among others: for selection denotes the result of experiment or trial. It would appear, indeed, that in O. Fr. it had been used as in S. For Roquefort renders Trié, attesté, certifié; Gloss. Langue Romane.

TRYING, part. adj. 1. Distressful, S.

2. Hard, severe; as, "These are trying times," S.

TRYFFIS, 3. p. s. v. n. Prospers, thrives.

—Thair be mony wyffis,
Throw habundance of spech that nevir tryffis.
Colkelbie Sow, v. 643.
Sa. G. trifw-as, valere, bene esse; Dan. triver, id.

[To TRYMBILL, v. n. To tremble, Barbour, ii. 295.]

TRYME, adj. Trim, trig.

Then gif you knew his duple tackie,
Amonges the countrie men he mackie,
Weith feinyeit seillis and antideatis,
And twentie vther tryme conceatis, &c.

Leg. Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 324.

This is merely E. trim, disguised by the orthography; i. e., nice conceits.

TRYNE, s. Art, stratagem.

Of Agarens what tounge can tell the tryne,
With hurkitt hule ouer a weill nourisht necke!
Spec. Godly Songs, p. 2.

Lord Hailes renders this "train, retinue." But trayne, tryne, is used by Wyntown as train by E. writers, for stratagem; Fr. traine, id.

"The tryne of merchandis;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

TRYNE, s. Train, retinue.

Foryetting all the Burgis tryne,
Without descriptioun of thair cace;
Not speiking of the riche propine,
Quhilk thay did giue vnto hir Grace.

Bursl. Watson, ii. 13.

"That hir hienes derrest brother Robert commendatour of the abbay of Halyrudehouss hes sustenit sic sumptuous charges and expensis, beysid hir labouris, panis & travell, in awaiting vpoun hir hienes seruice in tymes bypast, that he is nocht abill to continew langer in his former tryne & honorabill convoie." Acts Mary, 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 552.

Test. tryn, comitatus.

TRYPAL, TRYPALL, s. Expl. "ill-made fellow," Gl. Skinn., Aberd.

But a lang trypall there was snap,
Cam' on him wi' a bend,
Gart him, ere ever he wist, cry clap
Upon his nether end.

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 126.

Fr. tripail'e, "a quantity of tripes, or guts;" Cotgr. from tripe, the paunch. Some might prefer trepelu, "a poor tattered, a base, bare, and beggarly wretch;" ibid. But the conjoined epithet shews that disproportionate length is especially included in that awkwardness of form here expressed. Besides, a tall meagre person is denominated "a lang tripe o' a fallow," S. The term seems exactly to correspond with Lat. longurio.

[TRYPLIT, part. pa. Trebled, Barbour, xviii. 80.]

TRYP VELVOT. An inferior kind of velvet.

"Item, twa burclaitthis of blak tryp velvot figurit, with twa cusscheonis of the same." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 155.

Fr. tripe, or tripe de velours, étoffe de laine qu'on manufacture, et qu'on coupe comme le velours. Tratum villosum. Dict. Trev. "Valure, Irish tuftaffata, fustian an apes," according to Cotgr.

TRYING, s.

"For it is the custome of Scotland, that if the meanest gentleman, that has his kynsman or neir friend murdered, enter in tryeing with the committeris friendis, the offeris ar maid be the committeris of the deed. Quhilkis ar deliberatlie resolut vpon be him, his kyn and freindia." Belh. MS. Mem. Ja. VI. Fo. 34.

This word, which obviously suggests the idea of entering into terms for accommodation, is most probably a relique of A.-S. tryes-ian, fidem dare, foedus inire; from tríow, treowre, fidis, fidis data, or tríow, fidus, fidelis; whence trye-ian, justificare, purgare; and, although perhaps through the medium of the Fr. language, E. truce, in S. trewis, the pl. of Trewo, q.v. I need scarcely mention our Tryd as clearly belonging to the same stock.

TRYSS, adv. Thrice, Aberd. Reg., V. 16.

[TRYST, TRYSTE, s. Appointment to meet, S. For other meanings V. under TRIST.]

To TRYST, v. a. 1. To engage a person to meet one at a given time and place, S.

"He—then trysted Mr. Williamson at London, who met the same man in a coach, near London bridge, and who called on him by his name." Fountainhall's Decisions, i. 15. V. the s. sense 3.

The v. to Tryst is evidently from the same fountain with E. Trust, as implying the idea of mutual confidence. Isl. tryest-a, confidere.

2. To meet with; used in relation to a divine ordination.

"The plot hath laid Leith and Edinburgh desolate.—That this should have trysted the enemy at that time and place, when we had most to do with Leith and Edinburgh, is evidently God's hand." Baillie's Lett., ii. 151.

"It is found that the most eminent and honourable service of the church, doth usually tryst her in a low and suffering condition, when there hath been but little strength, many outward disadvantages." Fleming's Fulfilling Epistle, p. iv.

3. To bespeak: as, "I trystit my furniture to be hame" on such a day, S.

4. It occurs in a singular sense, as denoting such accuracy in motion as to make every step, in a difficult road, correspond with the one that has preceded it.

Sir A. Balfour applies it to the well regulated motion of those who bear travellers down the Alpine declivities.

"They go at the rate of an ordinary horse trot, as they go will trist the stones to step upon, which lye confusedly here and there, as exactly as if they were a paire of stairs, and yet they will not fall once in 500 times, and if they should it would be a fall without any great perill." Letters, p. 254.

To TRYST, v. n. 1. To agree to meet at any particular time or place, S.

"In our treaty, we prefaced with a declaration in writ, that our tryding there [in London] was no submission to the English Parliament." Baillie's Lett., i. 221.

The prep. with is often added, S.

"The particulars are,—the writing, dictating, and contriving a letter directed to the perfidious Oliver Cromwell, and tryding with him and his officers at the Lady Hume's lodgings, tending to the ruin of the late King, and these kingdoms." Wodrow's Hist., i. 85.

2. To enter into mutual engagements.

"There followed great outcry against him; friends met and trysted; at last it resolved in this, the creditors compelled the cautioners to pay them completely to the hazard of the sum of their estates," &c. Spalding, i. 37.

This suggests quite a different idea from "tryding to meet;" and marks engagements entered into after they had met.

"They raised an army and came to Inverury, whilk he could not resist,—and was forced to tryd and give his band, no doubt to their contentment." Ibid. p. 143.

"Argyle accepted the gentlemen, and without Athole's knowledge sent them to the Tables, syne tryts and causes Athole swear and subscribe as he pleased. This was not fair play." Spalding, i. 220.

3. To concur with; used metaph. as to circumstances or events.

"What a marvellous concurrence of providence, and convincing appearances of a divine hand was in this judgment, the besieging of Jerusalem by the Romans, trysted with the very time of the passover, whilst so great a confluence of the people from all parts of the land were there on that account, that both sword and famine might contribute their help to destroy." Fleming's Fulfilling, p. 148.

4. Used, in a passive sense, in relation to one's meeting with adverse dispensations, S.

"It is a dark time now with the church of Christ, which we see every where almost suffering and afflicted, whilst the whole earth besides seemeth to be at ease, christians also even beyond others, in their private lot, trysted with very sharp trials." Fleming's Fulfilling Epist., p. iv.

—"The proud and insolent, who do most hunt after outward glory, are usually trysted with some humbling abasing stroke; he poureth contempt on princes, and such who will not honour God shall not enjoy that honour they seek from men." Ibid. p. 113. V. following word.

To BIDE TRYSTE. To keep an engagement to meet with another; including the idea that one waits the fulfilment of it at the time fixed, S.

"'You walk late, sir,' said I.—'I bide tryte,' was the reply, 'and so I think do you, Mr. Osbaldistone.'" Rob Roy, ii. 165.

[To BREAK TRYST, CRACK TRYST. To break an engagement.

"John Forbes of Lealy broke tryst, having appointed to have settled the same." Spalding's Troubles, ii. 54

[To KEEP TRYST. To fulfil an engagement, to meet, S.]

[To SET TRYST. To make an engagement to meet, S.]

TRYSTER, s. A person who convenes others, as those of opposite parties, fixing the time and place of meeting.

"Mr. Blair and he [Mr. Durham] deal with Mr. Wood to be content with conference at Edinburgh.—We had drawn up an overture, as we thought, very favourable, as far as we could go, according to the Assembly's late overture for union, and by the hands of the trysters, Mr. Blair and Mr. Durham, sent in to their meeting. Also the tryders had given us both their overtures to be thought upon." Baillie's Lett., ii. 387.

TRYSTING, s. An engagement to meet, as implying a mutual pledge of safety.

"The maister of Forbes, in the north, slew the laird of Meldrum, vnder trysting." Pittscottie's Cron., p. 311. Under tryst, Edit. 1728, p. 131.

"The earl Marischal did nothing but by advice of the committee of estates, who directed him and the committees both of Angus and Mearns, to hold the marquis under trysting, while they should raise up forces to go upon him." Spalding, ii. 167.

TRYSTING-PLACE, s. 1. The place of meeting previously appointed, S.

At our trysting-place, for a certain space,
I must wander to and fro;
But I had not had power to come to thy bower,
Had'st thou not conjur'd me so.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 346.

2. Used metaph. to denote a centre of union, or medium of fellowship.

"Consider, that Christ Jesus, Godman, is not only a fit trysting-place for God and men to meet into [in], and a fit spokesman to treat between the parties now at variance;—but we may say also, he is immediate bridegroom." Guthrie's Trial, p. 221.

TRYST-STANE, s. A stone anciently erected for marking out a rendezvous, S.

"The tryst-stanes are commonly on high ground. They are placed perpendicularly in rows, not unfrequently in a circular direction. It is said, as also the name imports, that, in times of hostilities, they marked the places of resort for the borderers, when they were assembling for any expedition of importance." P. Morbattle, Stat. Acc., xvi. 512.

[TRYST, TRYSTE, s. Affliction, S. V. TRISTE.]

TUACK, s. A small hillock, Orkn.

Apparently from the same origin with Tuca in Tuwa-Keuthic; a diminutive from Su.-G. tufwa, tuber, or Dan. tue, "a little hill or mole-hill."

TUAY, adj. Two. V. TWA.

TUCHT, TUGHT, (gutt.), s. Vigour, Ettr. For.

TUCHTLESS, adj. Pithless, wanting strength, nerveless, inactive, ibid., Upp. Clydes.

This word may have been formed by the change of a letter of the same organ, from Teut. deught, A.-S. duguth, virtue, valor, potentia.

TUCK, s. A jettie on the side of a river, S.O. pron. took.

"That while he possessed the farm, he erected about ten tucks upon the Snodgrass side of the water of Garrow, in order to prevent the water from encroaching on the holms; which tucks were made by driving stobs from the edge of the bank into the river, and filling the same up betwixt the stobs with brushwood and stones; that the stobs were generally drove seven or eight feet into the ground and channel of the river." Proof, E. of Eglinton against Taylor, 1807, p. 3.

Perhaps from E. Tuck, "to gather into a narrower compass."

TUCK, s. Tuck of drum, beat of drum, S.

"The council gave orders, that after the muster is over this day, one company of the Militia keep guard in the Caunogate Tolbooth, and another in the Abbey, and that the whole Regiment be ready to draw together upon the tuck of drum." Wodrow's Hist., p. 51. V. TOUK.

[To TUD (short u), v. n. To speak much, to rave, Shetl. Dan. tude, to howl.]

TUE, TUED, part. adj. Fatigued; killed, destroyed, S. V. TEW, v. and s.

TUECHING, prep. Concerning, touching.

"In Parlamento apud Edinburgh. xxxi Jan. M.D.LXXII. Tueching the recovering and collecting of the Kingis Majesties jewellis and movables." Inventories, p. 181. V. TWICHEK, v.

To TUEG, v. a. To tug; Gall. Enc. A.-S. teog-an, Moes.-G. tiuh-an, trahere.

TUEIT, s. "An imitative word, expressing the short shrill cry of a small bird; hence to twitter; Teut. zittern," Gl. Compl.

"The rede schauk cryit my fut, my fut, and the oxee cryit tueit." Compl. S., p. 60.

[TUELF, adj. Twelve, Twelfth. Barbour. x. 547.]

TUFF, TUFA, s. A tuft of feathers or ribbons.

My Lady, as she is a woman,
Is born a helper to undo man.—
For she invents a thousand toys,
That house, and hold, and all destroys;
As scarfs, shephroas, tuffs, and rings,
Fairdings, facings, and powderings;
Rebats, ribands, bands, and ruffs,
Lapbends, shagbands, cuffs, and muffs;
Folding outlays [ourlays], pearly sprigs,
Atrys, varligals, periwigs;
Hats, hoods, wires, and also kells,
Washing balls, and perfuming smells:
French gows cut out, and double banded,
Jet rings to make her pleasant-handed:
A fan, a feather, bracelets, gloves,
All new-come busks she dearly loves.
For such trim bony baby-clouts,
Still on the Laird she greets and shouts;
Which made the Laird take up more gear,
Than all the lands or rigs could bear.

Watson's Coll., i. 80.

The term seems properly to denote something that is involved or plaited.

—"But above all she [the mare] had a horrible tail; for it was little more or lesse, than every whit as great as the steeple-pillar of St. Mark beside Langes; and squarred as that is, with tuff and ennicroches, or haire-plaits wrought within one another, no otherwise then as the beards are upon the cares of corne." Urquhart's Rabelais, p. 74.

As here used, it seems most nearly allied to Fr. touffe de cheveux, a tuft, or lock of curled hair; Cotgr.

[Tufa, an appendage to anything, Gl. Shetl.]

Fr. touffe, a tuft, applied to hair, ribbons, feathers, &c. On faisoit il y a quelque-temps, des garnitures d'une grosse touffe de rubans.—Une touffe de plumes; c'est-à-dire, un gros bouquet, comme celui qu'on met sur les capilènes. Dict. Trev.

TUFFING, TOFFIN, s. Tow, ockam, wad-ing.

The tuffing kindillis betuix the plankis wak,
Quharfra ouerthrowis the pikky smok coil blak.
Doug. Virgil, 150, 39.

Dan. toi, Su.-G. stuf, coactum, constipatum uti materia pilei; Ihre. Fr. touffu, thick.

To TUFFLE, v. a. To ruffle, to put any thing in disorder by handling it, or tossing in it, S. Tiffe, A. Bor.

O what has keepit ye, Peggy lass,
At sifting o' the meller?
An' what has tuffed yere gowden locks,
Kepped up wi' kame o' siller?

Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 67.

As A. Bor. tiffe is expl. "to turn, to stirr;—to disorder any thing by tumbling it;" (Grose, Prov. Gl.) there can be no doubt that this is the same with the O.E. word given by Palsgrave. "I tyfell with my fyngers or busye my selfe longe aboute a thyng to make it well to the contentyng of my mynde: Je tiffe. You haue spente two howres to tyfell about this thyng." B. iii., F. 391, a. This, then, must be viewed as originally the same with our Tuffle.

The author of The Plowman's Tale, printed with Chaucer's works, speaks of Tiflers attired in trecherie.

Vrry's Edit., p. 180, v. 2135.

This is rendered in Gl. triflers. Skiuner seems to view the term, although without reason, as a corruption. Cotgr. expl. the Fr. v. tiff-er in the same manner as Palsgr. expl. the O. E. one. It may be from twefallt, twofold, A.-S. twyfyld-an, duplicare, to double; because things said to be tuffed, are generally such as are creased, in consequence of being folded down.

TUG, s. "Raw hide, of which formerly plough traces were made;" Gl. Burns, S. O.

Thou was a noble fittie-lan',
As e'er in tug or tow was drawn.

Burns, iii. 143.

V. TEUG.

To TUGGLE, TUGGILL, TUGLE, v. a. and n.
1. To pull by repeated jerks, S.

Now we leave Nory wi' her change of dress,—
Till we inform you of poor Lindy's fate,
That was left corded up at sic a rate.
Tuggling and struggling how to get him free,
He did great pyne and meikle sorrow dree.

Ross's Helenore, p. 43.

2. To strive, to struggle.

Thair is mony toun man to tuggill is full teuch,
Thocht thair brandis be blak and vnburly.

Rauf Coilyear, C. 1, b.

[TUGGLE, s. A kind of pin used for fastening the ends of a band so as to form a loop, Shetl.]

[TUGGLED, part. adj.] 1. Tossed backwards and forwards, handled roughly.

—Tousled and tuggled with town tykes.

V. TOUZLE.

2. Fatigued with travelling or severe labour, wrought above one's strength, kept under, S. B.

Tuglit and travailt thus trew men can tyre.
Sa wundir wait wes the way, wit ye but wene.

Gowan and Gol., i. 3.

This may be either from Su.-G. toeg-a, to draw, or from E. tug.

TUGHT, s. Vigour, Ettr. For. V. TUCHT.

TUG-WHITING, s. A whiting caught by a hand-line, Aberd.

"About this time some tug-whitings were taken, and by God's providence the fishes became larger." Spalding's Troubles, i. 39.

TUHU, s. A spiritless person, one destitute of energy and incapable of exertion, Fife.

TUIGH, s. Suspicion, doubt.

A man at one for to serve lordis twayn,
The quhilk be baith contrair in opynion;—
Be trew to both, without tuigh of treson,
It may be wele ryme, but it acordis nought.

Pink. S.P.R., iii. 124.

"Touch," Gl. Pink. But it seems to signify suspicion, from A.-S. twecog-an, dubitare, tweco, a doubt. Alem. zurh-on, Su.-G. twec-k-a, to doubt, twekan, doubting. Ihre derives the v. from tweta, because in doubting the thought is as it were drawn into two parts. Hence also Su.-G. tue, doubt.

[TUIK, pret. Took. V. TEUK.]

TUIK, s. A spell, a turn; a bye-taste; same with Touk and Towk. V. TEUK.

TUIK, s. A cook; as the word is corruptly pron. in some parts of Angus and Moray.

TUILL, s. Contention. "Toil, trouble," Pink.

In Scotland had not been sic tuill,
Gif this had bein the common rew.

Maitland Poems, p. 221.

Same with Tuilye, q. v.

TUILYIE, TULYE, TOOLYIE, s. 1. A quarrel, a broil, a combat, S.

"Chaud-melle,—ane host suddaine tuilyie, or debaite, quhilk is opponed as contrair to fore-thocht felonnie." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Chaud-melle.

Be that the bargan was all playit,
The stringis stert out of thair nokks;
Sevin-sun, that the tuilye maid,
Lay gruffing in the stokks.

Pebbles to the Play, st. 19.

Ye do abound in coal and calk:
And think, as fools, to fley all faes
With targets, tuilies, and toom talk.

Polwart, Watson's Coll., iii. 9.

2. Tuilyie is used, rather ludicrously, for a battle, or skirmish.

"He said that Callum Beg, (he was a bauld mischievous callant that,) and your honour, were killed that same night in the tuilyie, and mony mae bra'men." Waverley, iii. 218.

Sibb. derives Toolye from Teut. tuyl, labor. It was probably introduced by the application of a Fr. term in a particular sense; as tuill-er, to mix in a confused manner, which might be applied to a crowd in a tumultuous state, or entering into a broil. Teut. tuyl-en, however, in a secondary sense denotes rage; furere, Kilian. Gael. taghal, to contend, to drive the ball to the goal, has by some been viewed as the origin.

To TUILYIE, TOOLIE, v. n. To quarrel, to squabble, S.

"Ane French word, Melle, dissension, strife, debate; as wee say, that ane has melled or tullyied with ane ither." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Melleum.

"A tulying tike comes limping hame;" S. Prov. Ramsay, p. 17.

See whilles they toolied, whilles they drank,
Till a' their sense was smoor'd.

Ramsay's Poems, l. 280.

TULYEOUR, s. One who is addicted to fighting or engaging in broils.

"Gif there be any injurious persons of their neighbours, or defamers of others, common fechtars (tulyeours) or any other malefactors." Chalm. Air, c. 39, s. 72.

"Na man may be a procurator, quha is excommunicat, or a common tulyeour or fechter, ane notar-publick, nor any that cannot write or reid." Balfour's Pract., p. 298.

TULYIE-MULIE, s. The same with Tulyie, S. B.

I know not if mulie should be traced to Tent. mulica, to quarrel: Rostrum extendere simultatis aut irae causa, mutire, mussitare, cum indignatione et stomacho; Kilian. V. TUTE-MUTE.

TULYIESUM, adj. Quarrelsome, S.

Tulyiesum dogs cum happing hame; S. Prov., i.e., Those, who are inclined to brawl, generally suffer by them.

TULYIE-WAP, s. A childish amusement, in Teviotdale, in which a number of boys take hold of each other's hands, and wrap themselves round the one who is at the head; clasping themselves as firmly together as possible, and every one pushing till the mass fall over.

From Tulyie, and Wap to throw.

YOKIT-TULYIE. A winter amusement on the ice, in which a number of boys or lads take hold of each other's clothes, and sit down in a line on their hunkers, while two or three lay hold of the foremost and pull them along, Roxb.

Perhaps the term Tulyie may be here used, as that sport may have been carried on between two parties. Yokit seems to refer to the sliders being connected with each other.

To TUIVE, TUIVE up, v. n. 1. To swell, to rise as dough from the effect of leaven, Roxb.

2. In a sense nearly allied, it is used to denote the operation of yeast, or the working of ale in a vat; "It's tuivin up," ibid.

Isl. túv/a, and Dan. tue, signify tuber terrae. C.B. tuf, a rise, a lift; toef/i, to make dough. Perhaps the v. to Tove, as applied to smoke ascending, is originally the same.

TUKE, s. A hasty and rough pull, a tug, S.A.

When thou had fairly pass'd the clips,
An' a' the taylor's tukes an' nips,
That day I gat thee in my grips
An' try't thee on,

At Boswell's fair to grace my hips,
Fu' aprush and fon'.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 105.

[TULCH, s. A big, stout, sulky person, Banff. V. TULSHIE.]

TULCHANE, TULCHIN, s. 1. A calf's skin, in its rough state, stuffed with straw, and set beside a cow to make her give her milk, S.

Hence the phrase Tulchane Bishops.

"Here is a fair shew of restoring benefices of cure, great and small to the Kirk: But in effect it was to restore only titles, which noblemen perceived, could not be given conveniently to themselves; but they gripped to the commodity, in obtaining from the titulars, either temporal lands feued to themselves, or tithes, or pensions to their servants or dependers. And therefore the Bishops, admitted according to this new order, were called in jest, Tulchane Bishops. A Tulchane is a calf's skin stuffed full with straw, to cause the cow give milk. The Bishop had the title, but my Lord got the milk or commoditie." Calderwood's Hist., p. 55.

"Mr. Patrick Adamson, in a sermon which he preached against the order of bishops, had the following observations, that there were three sorts of bishops, I. The Lord's Bishop, viz. Christ's, and such was every pastor. II. My Lord Bishop, that is a bishop who is a lord who sits and votes in parliament, and exercises jurisdiction over his brethren. III. My Lord's Bishop, one, whom some lord or nobleman at court places to be receiver-general of his rents, and to give leases for his lordship's behoof; but had neither the means nor power of a bishop. This last sort he called a Tulchan Bishop." Cant's Hist. Perth, I. Intro., p. xi.

2. A bag or budget, generally of the skin of an animal, S.B.

"Flae him belly-flaught, his skin wad mak a gailant tulchin for you." Journal from London, p. 2.

3. The term is metaph. applied to a chubby, sometimes to a dwarfish, child, Aug.

It has been said that Tulchan is an Irish word used in the sense first mentioned; Knox's Hist. Life, xxxiii. Prob. it is of Gothic origin. Su.-G. tolk signifies a model. In re architectonica dicitur modulus vel typus, ad quem plura facienda exiguntur, ut forma crassitie vel longitudine similia sint; Ihre. Isl. tulk-a signifies to entice; pellicere. Now, tulchan, in sense 1, corresponds to both terms. It is a resemblance of the animal, made as like to it as possible: and it is thus made, for the purpose of enticing the dam to give her milk.

TULIPASE, s. A tulip.

"Tulipa, a tulipase." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 18.

TULLIE, s. A knife fixed in the haft, Shetl.

Evidently corrupted from Isl. taelguknifr, Su.-G. taelgknif, Dan. taelgknif, culter sectorius, from the v. telg-a, tael-ja, taelg-er, cultro secare. Literally it signifies "a carving knife." Wolff gives the Dan. word in a more modern form, explaining taeltekknir, "a pocket or carving knife, a sort of dagger." Isl. taelgu-knifr, culter fabrilis, [Dan.] tollekknir; Halderson. Hence Fr. taill-er, to cut, from which perhaps E. tully, as applied to a stick containing notches, has been immediately formed. It may, however, have been transmitted from the Belgae, as Belg. talie signifies incisura.

[TULLIE-BUDIE, s. A tool-basket with different compartments, Shetl.

Compounded of Tullie, and Budie from Dan. buddik, a little box.]

TULLISAUL, s. V. TILLIESOUL.

TULLYAT, s. A bundle; used contemptuously; [Tulshoch, Aberd.], Banyel, Lanarks.

C.B. tuellad, forming a covert, tuliad, an enveloping.

TULSHIE, s. A sour-looking person, Ayr.

O.Fr. tule, etourd, lunatique, Roqnef. Gael. tul-chuiseach, confident, bold, may have been the original word, notwithstanding the change in signification.

[TULSURE, TULZEQR, s. A wrestler, a bully, Lyndsay, Comp. of Bagsche, l. 27.]

TULSURELIKE, adj. [Like a wrestler or bully.]

And at his mouth a blabbir stode of some,
Like to a ne bore quibetting his tuskis kene,
Rycht tulsurelike, but temperance in tene.

Henryson's Test. Crescide, Chron. S. P., l. 163.

[V. TULIE.]

[TUMAIL, s. Arable land next the stead-ing, Orkn.; contr. of toonmall.]

TUMBLER, s. 1. A small cart, lightly formed, used in the South-west of S.

"Behind them followed the train of laden asses, and small carts, or tumblers, as they were called in that country, on which were laid the decrepid and the helpless, the aged and infant part of the exiled community." Guy Mannering, i. 119.

2. One of the names of the Porpoise. [Syn. Crespie.]

"Delphinus Phocaena, Linn.—Brit. Porpasse.—Scot. Pellock. Tumbler. Mereswine." Dr. Walker's Essays on Nat. Hist., p. 532.

TUMBUS, s. 1. Any thing large, Fife. synon. Dolver.

2. Applied to a big inactive person, ibid.

C.B. tum, a round heap; tump, a round mass; tump-an, an epithet for a fat female; Owen.

TUMBOUS, adj. Large and slovenly; reverse of Snod, Fife.

TUMDEIF, s. Some kind of disease, mentioned by Sir John Roull.

—Tumdeif or edroposity,
Maigran, madness, or missilry, &c.

V. Gl. Compl., p. 330.

The last syllable is apparently allied to Isl. deif, hebeto, viribus defraudo. Could we suppose the first to be from Su.-G. tumme, pollex, it might signify want of feeling or numbness in the thumb, or other joints.

Isl. tumb-a, cadere praeceps, deyfa, hebetudo; perhaps q. falling down in a state of insensibility.

To TUME, v. a. To empty, to evacuate, S.

Dan. tomme-er, Su.-G. Isl. toem-a, vacuare, A. Bor. toom or tume. V. TEEM.

The v. properly signifies to pour out as from a bucket, or other vessel. As an adj., it is opposed to the term Few or Full.

VOL. IV.

It seems to have been originally the same word that occurs in Prompt. Parv., as signifying to pierce a vessel in order to extract the liquid, to tap. "Tamyn or attam-yn, vessell with drinke. Attamino.—Temynge or a brookinge of a vessell. Attaminacio. Deplecio." From the orthography of the v., and from the alphabetical arrangement, it would appear that the latter had been Tamynge in the MS. Lat. attamino seems to have here a sense given to it from the E. word; for it invariably respects defilement. Elsewhere Frances gives "Tem-yn or maken empty. Euacuo."

TUME, TOOM, TOME, adj. 1. Empty, having nothing in it, S. Toome, A. Bor. Teem, Aberd.

Bot other lordis, that war by,
Sayd, he had fyllid fullyly

His baggis, and thairris all tume war.
Wynlown, viii. 40. 95.

"A toom purse makes a bleit (bashful) merchant;" A. Bor. Ray. This is also used in S.

Su.-G. tom, Isl. tom-ur, id.

"Monro himself came over to the old-town, took the hail horses there, and other horses going back from the town with their toom criels from carrying of peats." Spalding, i. 259.

2. Untenanted, S.

"Better a tume house than an ill tenant;" S. Prov.

It is used in the same sense by R. Brunne.

In ther way ilk dele thei fond voide als hethe,
The toun of Mount Carmele, the toun of Nazareth,
The strong castelle Pilryn, that first wonne was,
Alle tok Ricarlynn, Caloyne & Kayfas
Ilkon thise thei seised, tome alle thei fond.

P. 192.

Hearne, not understanding th term, renders it "shut, enclosed, cut;" Gl. The s nse is illustrated by the first verse quoted. "They found every thing in their way void as heath," or "as a desert."

3. In a state of inanition, as to food. I'm very tume; My stomach is quite empty. Ye're no tume; You are not in want of food, you cannot be hungry, S. Clung, synon.

— On her they fuish on a change,
That gut and ga' she keest with braking strange.—
Gin she was toom afore, she's toomer now,
Her heart was like to loup out at her mou'.

Ross's Helenore, p. 56.

4. Lean, lank. A lang tume man, one who is tall and meagre, S.

5. Shadowy, unsubstantial.

In this sense, the phrase, a toom spoon, is applied to loose unsubstantial doctrine, under the name of gospel.

"He rumbled the whole day, touched many things, but I could gather nothing; he put a toom spoon in the people's mouth that could not feed nor nourish them." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 64.

And were not his expert mait Sibylla
Taucht him thay war bot voide gaistis all tha,—
He had apoun thame ruschit in grete haist,
And with his bitand brycht brand all in vane,
The tume schaddois smityng to haue slane.

Doug. Virgil, 173. 30.

6. Vain; as denoting the want of any proper cause for boasting.

Sam spendis on the auld vse,
Sam makis ane tume ruse.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 3.

V. TULLY, s.

7. Unprofitable, what brings no return, S.

O'er lang with empty brag we have been vain,
Of toom dominion on the plenteous main.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 52.

8. Ineffectual, inefficient.

— I got a beguile.

Naething I got, seek for them what I list,
But a toom hale, an' sae my mark I mist.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 64.

This apparently means an unproductive haul, in reference to the drawing of an empty net.

9. Deficient in mind. A toom chield, one who has no understanding; often with a negative prefixed, No a tume man, i.e., a sensible man, S.

TUME, s. A tume of rain, a sudden and heavy fall of rain, S. B.

TUME-HANDIT, adj. Empty-handed, in whatever respect, S.

— I'll tak fat ye gee,

Ye're nae toom-handed, gin your heart be free.

Ross's Helenore, Introd.

Su.-G. tomheand, qui vacuas manus habet, qui nihil adfert; Ihre.

Isl. tomhendt-r, vacuus, qui nihil adfert; Dan. tomhaendet, id.

TUME-HEADIT, TOOM-HEADED, adj. Destitute of understanding, S.

"Racha is a word of injurie, which signifieth vacuus, a man as we say that hath not harnes, or brain, a toome headed man." Z. Boyd's Balme of Gilead, p. 21.

TUME-SKIN'D, TOOM-SKIN'D, adj. Hungry, Gall. Enc.

TUME-TAIL, adj. 1. To Cum back Tume-tail, to go away with a load, and return empty, Roxb.; also, to return without gaining one's object, Loth.

The allusion seems to be properly to a cart or wain, the hinder part of which is called the tail. This, indeed, is confirmed by the S. Prov.: "The cart disna lose its errand, when it cums na hame tume-tail."

2. A plough is said to gang tume-tail, when it is drawn along without making a furrow, or without entering into the ground, Loth.

The idea seems to be, that it takes up no earth.

TUMFIE, s. A stupid person, male or female, S.O.; used also as an adj.

"Surely neither you nor that unreverent and mis-learn't tumfie your wife—would refuse to be present at the occasion." The Entail, iii. 41.

Dan. tompet, doting, foolish.

Dan. dumt-fue, "a silly fellow, a blockhead," Wolff. As it also signifies a brute, it seems formed from dum, blockish, and fue, cattle, q. stupid as a brute.

To TUMMLE, TUMPLE, v. a. and n. To roll over, to tumble, S.

To TUMMLE THE WULLCAT, "to tumble heels over head," S. Gl. Picken; apparently from the agility of a wild cat.

TUMMOCK, s. A tuft, or small spot of elevated ground, Ayrs.

Gael. tomag signifies a small bush or tuft, tomach, full of bushes; from tom, a bush, a thicket. C. B. tom, a mound; tum, a round heap.

TUMULT, s. The portion of land connected with a cottar-house, Orkn.

This term seems allied to Su.-G. tomt, area. Notat quoque, says Ihre, locum pascuum juxta villam, quam a reliquis possessor divisam habet. L. B. tumba, area. Curiae sive Tumbae, faciendae in rure occasione habitationis domini et rusticorum. The last syllable may be from Isl. holtt, terra aspera et sterilis; or hald-a, to possess, whence hoelld-ar, rustici.

TUNAG, s. "A short mantle, still worn by old women in some parts of the Highlands" of S.

"She was dressed in green, a white tunag flowed from her shoulders, which was fastened by a gold brooch.—The plaid is only worn in full dress, but the tunag by way of shawl. In the distant isles this piece of dress is called Guileihan." Clan-Albin, i. 57.

Gael. tonnag, "a wrapper round the shoulders of women in the Highlands like a shawl; a shawl, veil;" Shaw. If not derived from Lat. tunic-a, a waist-coat, a wrapper, &c., it may be from the same root.

To TUNCH, v. a. To push or jog with the elbow, Fife; radically the same with Dunch.

TUNCH, s. A jog of this description, ibid.

TUNDLE-BOX, s. A tinder-box, Lanarks., Roxb.; by the gypsies commonly called "an auld wife's necessary."

In the first syllable it resembles Su.-G. tunder, Isl. tundur, fomea, tinder. The last approaches more to C. B. taniudawl, tending to fire, igniferous; tanlli, a fire glow; Owen.

TUNIE, adj. Changeable in humour or temper, Ettr. For.; evidently from E. Tune.

TUNNAKIL, s. [Prob. a dimin. from Tunag, q. v.]

"Tua haill standis of claithe of gold, that is to say, twa chesops, four tunnakillis," &c. Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

[TUNNIR, s. and v. Thunder, Shetl. Isl. dunur, id.]

[TUNNYS, s. pl. Tuns, Barbour, V. 403.]

TUP, s. 1. The common term for a ram, S. also used Staffords. and A. Bor.

2. A foolish fellow, S.

This may be either a metaph. use of the term; or allied to Teut. tolpe, foolish.

3. It is sometimes contemptuously applied to an unpolished store-farmer who is supposed to resemble his property.

"'He'll be a Teviotdale tup tat ane,' said the chairman, 'tat's for keeping ta crown o' ta causeway tat gate—he'll no gang far or he'll get somebody to bell ta cat wi' him.'" Guy Mannering, ii. 261.

To Rin like a Blind Tup-?-The-Wind. A phrase applied to a young woman who indiscreetly and eagerly seeks the company of men, S.

TUP-YIELD, TUP-EILD, adj. A term applied to a ewe, that proves unexpectedly barren, or not with lamb, Roxb.

That is, she is barren, notwithstanding the approximation of the ram. V. YELD, YEALD, &c.

TUPPENS, TIPPENCE, s. Twopence, S.

—"They might sell at tuppens, a groat, & sexpens, &c.—They might sell—the deirest for a tippens." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 410.

TUQUHEIT, TEUGHIT, s. The lapwing, S.

In come twa flyrand Fulis with a fond fair,
The tuquheit, and the gukkit gowk, and yede hiddie
giddie,
Rwischt bayth to the Bard, and ruggit his hare;
Callit him thris thevisnek, to throw in a widdie.

Houdate, lii. 15.

That the word therianek contains an illusion to the cry of this bird, appears from the use of it elsewhere.

"The tuechitis cryit theus nek, quhen the piettis clattrit." Compl. S., p. 60.

The name is probably meant to imitate the sound made by this bird; like Germ. kiwit; Sw. körvja, E. peewit, Fr. dishuit, and S. synonym. Peeweeep, peesweep, q. v.

TUQUHEIT STORM. The name given to some days of severe weather, which occur in March, about the time of the re-appearance of the lapwing, S.

"The green plover, or peas-weep, arrives here so very correctly about Candlemas term, that the storm which generally happens at that season of the year, goes by its name, (the Techuchet-Storm)." Agr. Surv. Kincard., p. 396.

This orthography expresses the sound given to the word in that county.

This is by the peasantry viewed as the last storm of the winter season.

This term is understood, Aberd., as equivalent to "the equinoctial storm," as the tuquheits make their appearance about the time of the vernal equinox.

It would appear that, in the neighbouring county of Mearns, an earlier date is assigned to this storm.

This is called the Peesweep-storm, South of S. A proverbial saying is connected with the phrase, "A peesweep-storm makes a fat," or a "red, kirkyard," as often proving fatal to old or to delicate people. The Gouk-storm is not the same with this; as the designation is never applied without the concomitant circumstance of the appearance of the cuckoo, which is generally about a month later than the Tuquheit-storm. Both these are viewed as different from the Borrowing Days.

In Denmark this bird has a name which, like those already mentioned, seems meant to express the noise emitted by it. This is kiwit. V. TEUGHIT.

TURBOT, s. The name commonly given, in our markets, to halibut, S.

"The fish on this part of the coast, are cod, ling, skate, mackerel, hollybot, here called turbot." P. St. Vigeans, Forfars. Statist. Acc., xii. 171, N.

This misnomer is pretty general. It prevails on the Firth of Forth.

"Pleuronectes Hippoglossus. Holibut; Turbot. In our [Edinburgh] market this is generally, though very preposterously, named the turbot; the proper turbot, at the same time, getting another name, that of ram-shek." Neill's List of Fishes, p. 11.

[TURBOT-REEKLINS. Strips of halibut flesh dried in peat smoke, Shetl.]

TURCAS, s. The stone called a turquoise, Fr. turquoise.

"Item, a flour the lys of gold. Item, a ryng with a turcas." Inventories, p. 6.

TURCHIE, adj. Short and thick, squat; Perth.

TURCUME, s. Clotted filth.

And all the day quhair euer scho go,
Sic liquour scho likkis vp also:
The turcume of hir taill I trow,
Micht be ane supper till ane sow.
Lyndsay on Syde Tailis, Warkis, 1592, p. 300.

Perhaps allied to Su.-G. traeck, sordes.

[TURDEEVIL, s. The dung beetle, (Scarabæus stercorarius), Shetl. Sw. tordifvel, id.]

TURDION, s. "A species of galliard or gay dance; Fr. tordion;" Gl. Compl. V. BRAUL.

TURES, s. pl. Turfs, S. O., Gl. Picken; Toora, S. B.; [Turven, Shetl.]

TURIT, TURET, s. [A high horned head-dress worn by ladies, Gl. L. H. Treas. Accts., Dickson.]

"Ane hude and ane turit of qubeit velvet.—Ane hude and tua turretis of purpor velvet." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 231.

O. E. Toret is expl. Turricula; Prompt. Parv.

TURKAS, TURKES, TURKESE, s. 1. Pincers, nippers, S.

They wer full stränge of countenance,
Lyk turkas burnand reil.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 22.

—Wyth the grypand turkes oft also

The glouand lunipe thay turnit to and fro
Doug. Virgil, 258, 27.

"Man's heart on earth is like a teeth in a jaw, the deepe roote it had the more paine it causeth, when it is drawn out with the turkes." Z. Boyd's Last Battle, p. 534.

"His nailes upon all his fingers were riven and pulled off with an instrument called in Scottish a Turkas, which in England we call a pair of pincers." Newes from Scotland, declaring the damnable life of Doctor Fian, a notable sorcerer, who was burned at Edenbrough in Januarie last 1591. Reprinted by the Roxburghe Club, 1816.

2. Metaph. applied to a gripping oppressive man, Aberd. Roquefort gives O. Fr. turquois and truquaise as used in sense first; Tenaille a l'usage des maréchaise, i.e., smith's pincers.

Arm. turques, turkes, id. Lhuyd. Bullet says that the term is still used in this sense in Franche-Comté.

To TURKEN, v. n. To harden, to wax stout; a term applied to a young foal, Clydes.

Su.-G. tork-a, Germ. torck-en, Isl. thurk-a, exsiccare, areocere. Alem. gi-truchinū, exsiccatur. The term conveys the idea of hardening by drying.

- TURN, s. 1. A piece of work, of whatever kind; often, a hand's turn; as, "She's a lazy queyn, she's no worth her meat, I canna get her to do a hand's turn," S.

"Thir turns settled, the marquis gives up his house in the Canongate, discharges his servants, and—to the king goes he." Spalding, i. 199.

- 2. To do the turn, to perform any piece of work or business; also, to be sufficient for any purpose; to give satisfaction, S.

"The over-lord sall doe all the turnis and affairs pertaining to the heire, and sall persew all his pleyes and actions for him," &c. Reg. Maj. B. ii. c. 41, § 7.

"There was no pay to the waged horsemen and footmen, wherein stood the forces that were reposed in to do the turn." Mr. Ja. Melville's MS. Mem., p. 229.

But words I winna langer using be,
Nor will sic aff-sets do the turn with me.
Ross's Helenore, p. 85.

- 3. On the turn, applied to milk, beer, &c., intimating that it is turning to a state of acidity, &c., S.

- 4. The day's on the turn, the days are beginning to lengthen, S. B.

TURNER-ASIDE, s. One who deviates from a particular course.

—"His soul hath no pleasure in them that draw back, but shall lead forth such back-drawers, and turners-aside with the workers of iniquity." Mac-Ward's Contendings, p. 89.

TURNGREYS, s. A winding stair.

A cruell portar gat upon the wall,
Powit out a pyn, the portculys leit fall—
Rychard Wallace the turngreys weill has sean;
He folowit fast upon the portar keyn,
A tour the wall dede in the dyk him draiff,
Tak wp the port, and leit in all the layff.

Wallace, ix. 510, MS.

From Fr. turn-er, to turn, and gre, contr. from degré, pl. degrés, steps.

TURNPIKE, TURNE-PECK, TURNE-PYK, s.

- 1. The winding stair of a castle.

Syne the colis and crelis wyth-all
A-pon the turne-pyk lete he fall;
And ane syne blew a horn in hy,
Than in the castell ras the cry.

Wynntown, viii. 38, 74.

- 2. Any stair of a spiral form built without a house, and resembling one of the towers of a castle, S.

"A turnpike stair is the term used in Edinburgh, and over all Scotland, to denote a stair, of which the steps are built in a spiral form, like a screw [i. screw] winding round the same axis, in opposition to straight flights of steps, which are called scale stairs." Arnot's Hist. Edin., p. 246, N.

"Thus the King accompanied only with the sayde Maister Alexander, comes forth of the chamber, passeth through the ende of the hall (where the noblemen and his Majesties servants were sitting at their dinner,) up a turnepecke." Account of Gowrie's Conspiracy, Cant's Hist. Perth, i. 196.

"But the Earle of Gowrie and his servants made them for another way up a quiet turnepeck, which was ever condemned before, and was only then left open (as appeared) for that purpose." Ibid. 202, 203.

TURN-SCREW, s. A screw-driver, S.

TURN-TAIL, s. Used as synon. with E. turncoat. Perhaps it originally denoted a fugitive.

"Many of the Covenanters proved turn-tail through plain fear, and came in most willingly to him." Spalding's Troubles, i. 170.

TURNER, s. A copper coin, formerly current in S., in value two pennies Scots money, and equivalent to a Bodde.

"So far as I know, the copper coin of two pennies, commonly called two-penny pieces, boddles or turners, and also babees, containing sixpences, or half a shilling Scots, such as the English call half-pennies, began to be coined after the Restoration, in the beginning of Charles II.'s reign." Introd. to Anderson's Diplom., p. 138.

The learned writer is mistaken in giving so late a date to the Turner. This coin was struck in the reign of James VI.

—"King Charles' turners, stricken by the earl of Stirling, by virtue of the king's gift, were, by proclamation,—cried down from two pennies to one penny; king James' turners to pass for two pennies, because they were no less worth; and the kaird turners simpliciter discharged, as false cuinzies." Spalding's Troubles, i. 197. V. also p. 217.

Since Allan's death, nae body car'd
For aunes to speer how Scotia far'd,
Nor plack nor thristled turner war'd,
To quench her drouth.

Dr. Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore.

It may be observed, in addition, that so early as the reign of Edw. III. of England, black money was designated by a similar name. Edwardus III. avum imitatus leges contra falsarios & peregrinum monetau tulit, quibus speciatim prohibita est Nigra moneta, dicta Turney, in Hibernia percussa. Vid. Rymer. Tom. V., p. 113. Wise, Numm. Antiq. Catal., p. 238.

KAIRD-TURNERS. Counterfeit money issued by tinkers.

Rudd seems justly to observe, that "this name is taken from the French, who were used to call their gros, dernier [i. denier], and doubles, Tournois, from the money coined with a great mixture of brass in the city of Tours." Ibid. p. 220. These were also current in S., on account of the friendship between the two nations. They have the inscription, Double Tournois, i. e., a Twopenny piece Tournois; of the reigns of Lewis XIII. and XIV. Thus, their nominal value in S. was the same as in France. Their real value exceeded ours. For a French penny was, according to Cotgr., vo. Tournois, the tenth part of a penny Sterling, ours being only the twelfth.

TURRA, s. To Ride to Turra, to be in great glee, S. B. V. TROT.

How soon sūd Buchan hear the fact,
Au' cease her sorrow;

An' since again renew the knack,
To ride to Turra.

Tarras's Poems, p. 13.

"Turreff, a village in Banffshire, famous for merriment; hence he is said to be riding to Turra, who is merry." N. Ibid.

TURRIS, TURVES, pl. Turfs, a species of earthen fuel, S.; often pron. toors.

"With power—to cast and wind peitis, turris, fewall," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 591. V. TURVES.

To TURS, TURSS, v. a. 1. To pack up in a bale or bundle, as E. truss, Fr. trouss-er, id. from Isl. truts, fasciculus, Belg. tross, sarcina.

2. To carry off hastily.

This jowell he gert turss in till Ingland.
Wallace, l. 128, MS.

A hundreth schippis, that ruther bar and ayr,
To turss thair gud, in hawyn was lyand thar.
Ibid. vii. 1067, MS.

Fr. trouss-er, also signifies to pluck or twitch up; Cotgr.

3. To take one's self off quickly, to march with expedition.

Thy slicht and wylis sal the not bere away,
Nor hail skarth hyne do turs the hame fra vs
Vnto thy faderis hous the fals Aunus.
Doug. Virgil, 390, 26.

Thidder hail the pepill of Italia,
And all the land eik of Enotria,
Thare doutsum asking tursis for ansuere,
And thare peticiounis gettis assoulyet here.
Ibid. 207, 42.

4. To turss furth, to bring out what has been kept in store. Turssyt furth ger; Wallace.

To TURS, TURSE, v. n. "To walk;" Gl. Tarr. Buchan.

TURS, TURZE, s. A turs of heather, as much heath as a horse can carry on his back, S. A. "Turze, a truss;" Gall. Enc.

This seems merely a provinciality for E. Truss, from Fr. trousse.

TURSBABLE, adj. What may be carried away.

"The laird, fearing some trouble to follow, dis-splenished the place, left nothing tursable within."— Spalding's Troubles, i. 221.

TURSKIL, s. An instrument used for cutting peats, Caithn.; tuskar, Shetl. q. v.

"When the peat-moss is not more than from one to two feet deep, the peat is cut perpendicularly by a spade called a turskill. This instrument is about nine inches long, with a heel at right angles to the right side, two inches and a half broad, with a perpendicular socket, (being the continuance of the heel), to embrace the wooden handle, about four feet and a half long, and in it is fixed a foot-step of wood, a few inches above the termination of the socket of the spade. The peat-cutter, holding the handle with both hands, with one push of the right foot drives the spade into the moss, so as to cut out a peat, or turf, 12 inches long, and two inches thick." Agr. Surv. Caithn., p. 234.

Apparently from Isl. and Su.-G. torf, Dan. toerv, turf, and skil-ia, to divide. It is synon. with Tuskar, Orkn., id., in the composition of which a verb of the same signification, sker-a, to cut, to shear, to divide, is used instead of skil-ia.

TURTOUR, TURTURE, s. The turtle-dove, Lat. turtur.

—Sodenly, a turtur quibite as calk,
So evinly vpon my hand gan lycht,
And vnto me sche turnyt hir, full rycht.

King's Quair, vi. 8.

TURVES, TURVVEN, s. pl. Peats, Shetl. Turven. This is merely the Scandinavian pl. retained. Sw. torfven, id.

—"To pull heilder; and to cast, win, and away leid peatis, turves, and fewall thairvpoun." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vol. V. 155.

TUSCHA, TUSCHE, s. A girdle, Dunbar. V. TISCHE.

"The lordis assignis to Margret Levenax—to preb the avale of a silken dune tuscha of siluer grantit be Johne Wilsoune—laid in wed be the said Margret to the said Jonet." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1488, p. 93.

In the same page mention is made of "a tuscha of silk siluerit, price v merkia."
[Fr. tissu, a broad ribbon.]

To TUSH, v. n. To express displeasure.

"Nay, some were puffed up, and tushed at the fear of others, instead of being deeply affected, to see what spiritual judgments and plagues we were thereby threatened with," &c. Rutherford's Lett. Postcr. p. 514.

Q. to command silence, from Su.-G. tyst, silens, tyst-a, silere, from tig-a, id. Hence, also tush, E. interj.

[TUSHKARRUE, s. A confused struggle, Shetl.]

TUSHLACH, COW-TUSHLACH, s. A cake of cow-dung, so dry that it may be burned, Dumfr. V. TUSOCK.

Allied perhaps to Gael. taos, dough, taois-am, to knead; as cakes of cow-dung are often kneaded for being used by the poor, instead of fuel.

TUSK, s. The torsk of Pennant, S. [Bros-mus vulgaris, Flen.]

"The fish called tusk abounds on the coast of Brama: the time for fishing is at the end of May. This fish is as big as a ling, of a brown and yellow colour, has a broad tail; it is better fresh than salted." Martin's West Islands, p. 385.

"It is a fish much esteemed for its delicacy; the meat divides into flakes on being boiled, like that of a salmon: for which reason, as Schoneveldt tells us, the Germans call it Scheibendorsch." Pennant's Zool. v. iii. 143. Ed. 1769.

"The torsk, often called the tusk and brismac, is the most valued of all the cod kind, and, when dried, forms a considerable article of commerce: it is only to be found in the north of Scotland." Essays Highl. Soc. iii. 15.

According to Pennant, its Sw. name is torsk. This, however, is rendered cod by Seren., colling by Wilez. Our designation is nearly the same with Isl. thok-r, asellus.

To TUSK at, v. a. To pluck or pull roughly; as when a horse tears hay from a stack, Fife; to Rusk at, synon.

Allied perhaps to E. tuaks, O. Fris. tuaken, id., which is traced by Seren. to Su.-G. tugg-a, tygg-a, masticare.

TUSKAR, s. An instrument used in Orkn. and Shetl. for cutting peats; [tusk-spawd, Banffs.]

"When the moor is thus flayed, an ancient Scandinavian implement of husbandry is used for casting the peats, named a tuskar; its shaft is rather longer than that of a common spade, whilst to the bottom of it is affixed a sharp iron plate, styled a feather, which projects from one place seven inches, and from another a little more than an inch." Hibbert's Shetl., p. 430.

[V. under TUSKIL.

To tusk, to cut peats from above, i.e., the top of the bank, Gl. Banffs.]

[TUSSAY, s. A girdle; a belt with purse attached, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 74. Same with TUSCHA.]

TUSSOCK (of wheat), s. A tuft of wheat in a corn field, generally owing to the vegetating of the nest or granary of a field-mouse, Loth.; [tushlick, Banffs.]

Sw. test, a lock; Isl. thud-r, a handful of reeds.

TUTCH, s. A small boat or packet.

"You shall lykewayse desyre that the parliament wald appoynt two pinnaces or tutches for conveying diligence betuixt them & this kingdome." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, VI. 18.

To TUTE, v. n. To jut out, to project; also Tute, s. a jutting out, a projection, S.B.

Su.-G. tut, rostrum, a beak; Teut. tuyle, id. also, a horn, or any thing wreathed. Hence, TUTE-MOWITT, adj. Having the nether jaw projected.

How fain wald I discryve perfytt
My layde with the mekle lippis!
How scho is tute-mowitt lyk an ape.

Dumbar on ans Blak-moir Ladye, Mailland Poems, p. 97.

Mr. Pinkerton renders this thick-lipped, deriving it from Su.-G. tut, rostrum. But most probably it is originally the same with Teut. tote-muyt, tuyle-muyt, bronchus; which properly signifies "having the teeth and nether jaw more sticking out than the upper;" Ainsw. This agrees better with the similitude, like an ape, than the idea of thick lips. The word is comp. of tuyle, rostrum, and muyt, os, oris, whence perhaps our mow, mouth. Belg. toot, signifies "a wry mouth;" Sewel. V. Mow and MOWBAND.

Tut-mouthed occurs in a similar sense in E. Somner gives it as synon. with great-lipped, when explaining A.-S. wroc, bronchus. It is also expl. in the same manner by Seren.

Isl. tutna, intumescere, tutnan, tumor, and tut-ur, tumidus, (G. Andr., p. 243), seem to acknowledge the same fountain. Perhaps teit-a, rostrum beluinum, ibid. p. 237. is the s. synon. with Teut. tuyle.

TUTELE, TUTILL, s. Guardianship, tutel-age.

"At the quhilk tyme we our self—wer committit—to the last vmquhile erle of Mar, vpoune speciall trust reposit in his persone, to be nourist and brocht vp within our said Castell of Striueling vudir his tutele and gouernnance." Acts Ja. VI., 1579, Ed. 1814, p. 158.

—"They may heirefter get promoted sic as misteris rather a tutill of vtheris, than to have charge above vtheris whome of they may haue the government, and consequentie of this miserable and unfortunat cuntries." Bannatyne's Journal, p. 447.

Fr. tutele, Lat. tutel-a.

TUTIE. Drunken Tutie, a name given to a female who is addicted to drinking. Applied also to children who drink a great deal.

Now all ye men, haith far and near,
That haue a drunken tutie—O,
Duck you your wives in time of year,
And I'll lend you the pockle—O.
Drap of Capie, O, Herd's Coll., ii. 142.

V. TOOT, TOOR, to drink copiously.

TUTIE TATIE, interj. Pshaw. Hey tutti taiti, the name of one of our oldest Scottish tunes.

V. TOOT, v. 2, and TUT-MUTE.

This, according to tradition, was Robert Bruce's march at the battle of Bannockburn, A. 1314. The words tutti taiti, may have been meant as imitative of the sound of the trumpet in giving the charge, or what Barbour calls the tutilling of a horne. This might appear at least to be the sense in which it was understood a century ago, when the following words were written:

When you hear the trumpets sound
Tutti taiti to the drum,
Up your swords, and down your gun,
And to the loons again.
Jacobite Relics, i. 110.

In Mr. Thomson's copy it is—

When the pipes begin to play.

Teut. tuyl-en, canere cornu, buccinare, gives us the origin of the phrase. V. TOOT, v.

My late worthy friend, the reverend Dr. Douglas of Galashiels, communicated to me a different view of the origin.

"There were old words," he says, "to this tune, among which I recollect the following:

"Hei toutes tetes,
Ho toutes tetes;
I will drink your barrels dry,
Out upon you, lie, lie!
The grounds of the barrels
Are no for me."

"From these words," he subjoins, "I have always considered the phrase to be of French origin, tout à tete, or toutes à tete, "all is taken to the head," synon. with, "He hauds weel to his head;" or imperatively, as a toast, "Lift all your glasses" or "hands to your heads;" which sense is confirmed by the old Jacobite words given in Thomson's Scottish Airs, vol. iii. p. 33.

Fill, fill your bumpers high,
Drain, drain your glasses dry:
Out upon him, lie, lie,
That winna do't again.

[TUTILLING, TUTLYNG, s.] A blast or blowing of a horn.

And, as that war in sic effray,
A tutilling off his horne hard thai:
And thai, that hes it knawyn swith
War of his cummyn woude blyth.

Barbour, xix. 604, MS.

This word is a dimin. from Toot, and denotes a weaker sound, or that which seems to be so, as being heard at a distance.

TUTIVILLAR, TUTIVILLUS, s. [Prob., a low, worthless person, or thing.]

So many rackettis, so many ketches-pillaris,
Sic ballis, sic nachettis, and sic tutivillaris,—
Within this land was never hard nor sene.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 44.

—A tutivillus, a tutlar,
And a fanyeit flatterar.

Colkelbie Sow, F.I. v. 62.

Lord Hailes observes from Junius, that things of no value were anciently called tutivillia, as the term denoted rotten threads which fall from the distaff, and in general the vilest things of this description, which cheats imposed on the simple instead of valuable merchandise; Note, p. 254.

From the use of this word, however, although somewhat altered, in other places, it is probably a personal designation.

In Kennedy's Flying, it is written tutevillous, Evergreen, ii. 74, tutivillus, Edin. Edit. 1508. In a Poem in the Bann. MS. describing Cockelbie's Feast, one of the guests is a tutevillus. In another, ibid., p. 104, this designation is given to an evil spirit.

It may bear the sense of rustic; and Ir. tuatamhail, tuatavail, has precisely this signification; from tuata, id. and this from tuath, a country. V. Lhuyd, vo. Rusticus.

TUTLAR, s. Perhaps, one who barter.
V. TUTIVILLAR.

Teut. tuteler, permutator; tutyl-en, commutare. Su.-G. tutal-en, signifies to shift in language, to change in judgment.

TUT-MUTE, s. A muttering or grumbling between parties, as at the beginning of a broil, S. B.

A pretty serious broil having occurred in a fishing town in the county of Mearns in the North of S., among other witnesses, a good plain woman, who resided in the village, was called to give evidence; and her testimony happens to be the only one that tradition has recorded. Being interrogated by her landlord, who was ex officio a judge, as to the origin of the fray, she replied; "It began my lord, wi' a laigh tut-mute, and it raise to a heich tuilyemulie; and or ever your lordship wad hae kissed your ain a—e, they were a' i' the mussel-middin abone ither."

Teut. tut-en, to buzz; Isl. taut-a, murmurare, mutire, taut, mutum murmur, susurratio, G. Andr. Teut. muyt-en, Su.-G. mutt-a, to mutter; two synon. terms being conjoined, which is frequently the case in such comp. words. Or mute, may be used in the sense of quarrel. V. TULLIE-MULIE.

* TUTOR, s. A guardian appointed for a minor, whether by a testament, or by a disposition of law, S.

"The earl of Sutherland—with his tutor of Duffus followed, who came to the Bog, but the marquis made him cold welcome for his good-brother the laird of Frendraught's cause." Spalding, i. 17.

—"The lord Yester, and laird of Auldbar, as tutors to the earl of Errol, with many others convened at Turiff for choosing their commissioners," &c. Ibid., i. 104.

Such a guardian was invariably designed from the name of his estate put under his charge.

"The guardians who are entrusted with the care of minors, get the name either of tutors or curators.—In the doctrine of tutors, the law of Scotland nearly resembles the Roman." Ersk. Inst. B. i. Tit. 6, § 1, 2.

TUTORY, s. 1. Tutorage, that stage of life in which one is under tutors, S., Fr. tutorie.

"Out of tutory, being passit xiiij yeris of age." Aberl. Reg.

2. Tutelage, tender care exercised about an infant, S.

Gryte was the care and tut'ry that was ha'en
Baith night and day about the bonny weane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 12.

TUVA-KEUTHIE. A word which I find, without interpretation, in an ancient MS. Explic. of Norish words used in Orkn. and Shetl.

Might we view it as signifying "a hut on a rising ground," it might with propriety be deduced from Su.-G. tufica, Isl. thufa, terrae tuber, and kointe, tricinium navium, or rather Norw. kocite, a little hut for kindling a fire in; Hallager.

TWA, TUAY, TWAY, adj. Two, S.

Wyth thir twa mony lordis sere
Held thame in the North land,
Qahil this ded wes in South wedand.

Wyntown, viii. 45, 110.

Thus said sche, and anon therwith bayth tway
Gan walkin furth throw out the dern way.

Doug. Virgil, 187, 5.

And sayand this, he gan his templis tuay,
Courir with myrthus, that is his moderis tre.

Ibid. 129, 46.

Rudd. says that tuay and tway, are used metri causa. But although twa is the common pron. S., tway is that of the Southern counties. Twey occurs in O.E.

"No man may serve twey lordis." Wiclif, Matt. vi.

The schip was dounbren,—with other busses twey.

R. Brunne, p. 153.

Moes.-G. twa, twai, A.-S. twa, twæg, Franc. Isl. Precop. twa, Su.-G. tuwa, anc. toa, Belg. tuwe.

TWA-BEAST-TREE, s. The swingle-tree in the Orcadian plough, by which two horses draw, each having its own peculiar swingle-tree attached to one of the ends of the twa-beast-tree.

TWA-FACED, adj. Double, deceitful; often used to denote one who carries favour with both parties, S. [Twa-facedness, deceit, S.]

Formed like A.-S. twi-space, double-tongued.

"What had I to do to tell the rascal?—or wha wad hae thought o' him playing us sic a trick? Twa-faced dog that he is!" Perils of Man, i. 263.

Fowks—ca' you but a twa-fac'd nitty,
Wi' a' your wit.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 157.

V. WAFNESS.

TWA-FALD, TWA-FAWLD, adj. 1. Double, twofold, S.

—Bot a stane,
That come fra hycht, has hym oure-tane,
And twa-fawld down it can hyni bere,
And steykd hym on his awyn spere.

Wyntown, viii. 37, 151.

He has broke three ribs in that ane's side,
But and his collar bane;
He's laid him twa-fald ower his steed;
Bade him carry the tidings hame.

Minstrelsy Border, i. 79.

2. Used to denote a person bowed down with age or infirmity, q. bent together.

"'Tam—canna keep up his rigg against my auld auntie, wha's twofauld with the rheumatics.' 'Me twofauld wi' the rheumatics!—My certie, ye slip-tongued cuttie, ye rheumatic weel.—I can walk as straight in my black leather shoon as ye can do in yere pink slippers, ye cresting kimmer.'" Blackw. Mag. Jan. 1821, p. 402.

A.-S. two-feald, Sw. twofeallt, duplex.

TWA-HANDED CRACK. A familiar conversation between two persons, that which is held tete-a-tete, S.

"They found Mrs. Comyns and her guest enjoying a tete-a-tete, or, as I prefer a Scotch term to a French at any time when I can get it 'a gude two-handit crack, after supper.'" The Smugglers, i. 113.

TWA-HANDIT-SWERD. A two-handed sword, S.

"Tokande swerde. Spata. Cluniculum." Pr. Parv.

TWA-HANDIT WARK. Work so imperfectly done at first, that it must be performed again, S.

[TWA HORSE FARM. A farm that requires two horses to labour it, S.]

TWA-HORSE-TREE, s. A swingle-tree stretcher of a plough, at which two horses draw, S.

"The plough is drawn by a strong stretcher commonly called a two-horse-tree." Agr. Surv. Rox., p. 50.

TWA-LOFTED, adj. Having two stories, Loth.

"Folk are far frae respecting me as they wad do if I lived in a two-lofted aclated house." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 244.

TWA PART, TWAPARTE. Two thirds.

—The ferd buke of Eneadoun
Twiching the lufe and dede of Dido quene,
The twa part of hys volume doth contene.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 6, 2.

This mode of expression is still quite common, S. B. The twa part and third, i.e., two thirds, and the remaining one.

"The Schiref of the schire—aucht and sould divide equalle the tierce of the saidis landis fra the twa part thair of." Balfour's Practicks, p. 108.

It is sometimes written as one word. "The saidis personis sall content & pay to the said David Lawder the soume of thre li yerely of ix yeris bipast for the malen & profitis of the twaparte of the said mylne." Act. Audit. A. 1493, p. 171.

TWA-PART AND THRID. "The two thirds of any thing;" Gall. Enc., p. 446.

TWA-PENNIES, s. pl. An old copper coin; the third of an E. halfpenny; synonym. Bodle.

"Bodel. a small copper coin of the sixth part of a penny Sterling. They are called in Scotland two [r. two] pennies; and seem to have been first struck in Queen Mary's reign, and were continued by her successors till the union A. 1707. They have the King's name with the crown, and the sceptre with sword saltire ways on one side, and on the reverse the thistle, with this motto, Nemo me impune lacesset." Spottiswoode's MS. Law. Dict. vo. Bodel.

TWASUM, adj. Two in company, or abreast.
V. SUM, term.

This, although properly an adj., is used as a s., denoting a pair, a couple. It is pron. twasum, Ettr. For.

"I think," said I, "that if ae kail-wife pou'd aff her neighbour's mutch, they wad hae the twasome o' them into the Parliament-House o' Lunnun." Rob Roy, ii. 13.

Lang. poor things, the twasome dander'd
Douf an' douie oure the sade.

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 172.

Twasum is still used to denote a dance, in which two persons are engaged; a twasome dance, i.e., a strathspey, Perth, Fife.

TWA-THREE, s. A few, S. q. two or three.

Boutgates I hate, quo' girning Maggy Pringle,
Synne harl'd Watty, greeting, thro' the ingle.
Since this fell question seems sae lang to hing on,
In twa-three words I'll gie you my opinion.

The Loss of the Pack, a Tale.

Ane may wi' twa-three social frien's convene,
To crack a while, an' spen' a sunless een.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 21.

It is also pronounced twarrie, and twae'ree.

"They could do nae great ill tuo speak o', haud aff the burning o' the twae-ree braw tents." Saint Patrick, i. 169.

TWA-YEAR-AULD, TWA-YEAR-ALL, s. A heifer that is two years old, S.

The unco brute much dunching dried
Frae twa-year-alls and stirks.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 49.

TWAL, adj. Twelve, S.

And Alexandir the Conqueroure,
That conquest Babilonys tour,
And all this world off lenth and breid,
In twal yher, throw his douchty deid,
Wes syne destroyit throw pwsoune,
In hys awyne hows, throw gret tressoune.

Barbour, l. 532.

Edit. Pink.

In MS., however, it is xii.

The auld kirk-hammer strak the bell
Some wee short hour ayont the twal.

Burns, iii. 49.

Moea.-G. twalib, twalif, id.

TWAL-HOURS, s. 1. Twelve o'clock, S.

2. A luncheon or nuncheon, S. Sometimes called eleven-hours, when taken before noon.

[TWALMONT, TWALMONTH, s. A year, S.]

TWALPENNIES, s. pl. A penny sterling; which, according to our ancient reckoning, included twelve pence Scottish currency, S.

"Here is twal pennies, my man." Bride of Lammermoor, i. 314.

"Lend us twalpennies to buy sneeshing." Redgauntlet, i. 317.

It is sometimes written as one word, at other times as two.

"Saunders, in addition to the customary twal pennies on the postage, had a dram for his pains." Ayrshire Legatees, p. 33.

"Twa'pennies, one penny sterling;" Gl. Antiq.

TWAL-PENNYWORTH, s. What is given as the value of a penny sterling, S.

[TWANG, s. A thong, a shoe-tie, Shetl.]

[TWART, TWARTER, TWARTOUR. V. THORTER.]

To TWASPUR, v. a. To gallop, Shetl.

May be compounded of Isl. Su.-G. tua or tuo, duo, and sporre, calcar; as signifying the application of both spurs to the sides of a horse to put him to his full speed.

TWAY, adj. Two. V. TWA.

[To TWEDDLE, v. a. V. TWEEL.]

TWEEL, adv. Truly. Tweel no, no indeed,
S. V. ATWEEL.

To TWEEL, TWEAL, TWEIL, TWEDDLE, v. a.
To work cloth in such a manner, that the woof appears to cross the warp diagonally, kersey-weve, S.

Teut. tweceling, geminus, seems allied.

A.-S. twaede, duplex; or tua, and dael, part.

TWEEL, s. 1. The manufacture of cloth that is tweeled, S.; [also, the name of such cloth, Clydes.]

Ye sall hae twa good pocks
That ance were o' the tweel,
The tane to ha'd the groats,
The ither to ha'd the meal.

Maggie's Tocher, Herd's Coll., li. 78.

"A tait o' woo' would be scarce among us," said the goodwife brightening, "if you should nae hae that, and as good a tweel as ever came aff a pirn." Guy Mannering, ii. 74, 75.

2. Tweel is sometimes used metaphorically, in regard to literary composition.

I guess you be some pawky chiel,
That's maybe been at Allan's skuil
Some orra time,
And seems to understand the tweel
O' rustic rhyme.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 181.

TWEELIN, TWEEL, adj. Belonging to cloth that is tweeled, S.

TWEELIN, TWEDDLIN, TWEEL, s. Cloth that is tweeled; used also as an adj., S.

"Ane sark of small tweedlyne." Aberd. Reg., A. 1541, V. 17.

TWEELIE, TWELLIE, s. A quarrel, a broil, Dumf., Gall.

But some wi' mair than powder smell'd
Forfain by the tweelie.—

To TWEELIE, v. n. To contend, Galloway.

—For sovereignty,
Or pow'r among the herd, he ne'er contends,
Nor tweelies for the kingdom of the loan.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 44.

TWEESH, prep. Betwixt, S.; the abbreviation of atweesh or betweesh.

For tweesh twa hillocks, the poor lambie lies,
And aye fell forret as it shoop to rise.

Ross's Helenore.

V. ATWEESH.

TWEILD DOIR. V. TOLDOUR.

"Item ane doublett of tweild doir champit." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 42.

TWELLIE, s. [V. TWEELIE.]

TWELT, TWALT, adj. The twelfth, S.

I hint ane scripture, and my pen furth tuke,
Syne thus began of Virgil the twell buke.

Doug. Virg., p. 404.

[To TWET, TWIET, v. a. To cut slices from a piece of wood, Shetl.; white, Clydes. Norse, twelte, id.]

To TWICHE, TWITCH, v. a. 1. To touch, S. B.

"Thou art thrumbed and thrust by the multitude, and yet thou speiris quha hes twiched thee." Bruce's Sermon. Sacra., J. 5, a.

2. To touch, metaph.

Cartoun, for dreid thay suld his lippis skaude,
Durst neuer twiche this fark for laike of knalage.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 7, 43.

Hence twiching, prep., touching, concerning.

But twiching Virgyllis honoure and reuerence,
Quho euer contrary, I mon stand at defence.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 8, 6.

To TWIDDLE one out of a thing. To circumvent, to obtain by cozening means; "He tried to twiddle me out of my money;" S. Synon. with E. Diddle.

A.-S. twæalding, adulation, is evidently allied, from twa, duo; q. acting a double part. Twæald-an, dividere, is not used in this sense; but Twiddle has undoubtedly been formed in the same manner from twa, two, and dael, part. Isl. tuelalan is compounded in a similar manner, from tue, duo, and tala, loqui, signifying prevarication; Accusationis vel defensionis variatio in iudicio; Verel. Ind. q. S. twa tales.

To TWIG, v. a. 1. To pull hastily, S. B. twitch, E.

Let rantin billies twig the string,
An' for anither mutchkin ring.

Morison's Poems, p. 78.

2. To wound the skin of a sheep in shearing. Ettr. For.; perhaps from A.-S. twice-ian, vellere, to twitch, E.

Both this and the E. v. twitch, also, twag, tweel, to pinch, are evidently from A.-S. twice-ian, vellere. Germ. twick-en, id.

The form of the O.E. v. did not differ from that of the A.-S. "Twykk-yn or drawn. Tractulo." Prompt. Parv.

TWIG, s. A quick pull, a twitch, S.

K 4

To TWIG, v. a. To put cross ropes on the thatch of a house, Ettr. For.

TWIG-RAPE, s. A rope used for the purpose, ibid.

Perhaps from A.-S. twig, ramus; as withes might be at first employed in this way.

To TWILT, v. a. To quilt, S., Westmorel.

Seren. derives the E. word from the very ancient Isl. s. kulta, aulaeum, culcitra; tapestry,—a mattress, which, as Dr. Johns. defines it, is "a kind of quilt made to lie upon." Teut. kulkt is used in the latter sense. Hence, TWILT, s. A quilted bed-cover, S.

"Where's the wardrobe and the linens?—where's the tapestries and the decorements?—beds of state, twills, pands and testors, napery and broidered work?" Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 296.

Blankets, sheets, and stryptit tykin;
Twills an' cov'rins to your likin'.

Duff's Poems, p. 56.

"Twilt, a quilt or bed-cover, North." Grose.

To TWIN, v. a. To empty, to throw out.

"And that na persone wesche in the said locht, nor twyn thair closettis or ony fylthynes thairin." Aberd. Reg., V. 16.

Perhaps an errat. for Twim. V. TUME.

TWIN, TWYN, TWYNE, adj. [Twain.] In twyn, in twain, asunder.

The Sothron als war sundryt than in twyn,
Bot thai agayne to gidder sone can wyu.
Wallace, iv. 637, MS.

Hys bow with hors sennonis bendit has he,
Thairin ane takill set of sour tre;
And tasand vp his armes ser in twyn,
Thus vnto Jouy lawly did begyn
To make his first peticion and prayere.

Doug. Virgil, 300, 2.

A.-S. twegen, twain, from tweg, two. Moes.-G. twa has twans in the accus. Su.-G. twenne, the old feminine of twa.

The phrase occurs in another passage, which deserves our attention—

Wallace send Blayr, in his priestis weid,
To warn the west, quhar freyndis had gret dreid,
How thai suld pass, or to gud Wallace wyn,
For Inglismen that held thaim lang in twyn.

Wallace, ix. 1237, MS.

This might, without any violence, signify in doubt, as A.-S. twyn and tucon denote doubt, hesitation; and twyn-an, to doubt. But it seems rather to mean asunder.

It may, however, be worth while to observe, that these terms are formed from twa, tworg, two, as Su.-G. twek-a, dubitare, from twa; because, as Ihre remarks, the thoughts, in a state of hesitation, are as it were drawn into two parts. The same metaphor, he adds, prevails in almost all languages. Thus sheni, duo; Gr. dyon, dubium, dyatō, &c. from dyo; as Lat. ambigo, and dubito, from ambo and duo; Moes.-G. tuver-ian, hesitare, from twa, in compos. tus; Belg. twantel-en, Alem. zueh-on, id. from twee, and zuey.

To TWIN, TWYNE, v. n. To part, to separate.

Thre slew he thar, twa fled with a' thair mycht
Eftir thar lord, bot he was out of sycht,
Takand the mure, or he and thai couth twyne.

Wallace, i. 420, MS.

Syne eftir thir, all sory and full of care,
The thrid place haldis, and sall euermare,

Gittles folk, that for dislene, wo, or fede,
With thare awin handis wrocht thare self to dede,
And irkit of the lyfe that thay war in
Thare suet saulis made fra the body twyn.

Doug. Virgil, 179, 8.

To twyn with, is now used in the same sense, S.

My daddy is a canker'd carle
He'll no twyn wi' his gear.

Herd's Collection, ii. 64.

The v. twynne occurs in O.E.

We see all day in place thing that a man wynnes,
It is told to purchase, whedir he it hold or twynnes.

R. Brunne, p. 86.

To TWIN, TWYNE, v. a. [1. To deprive.]

To twyn one out of a thing, to deprive him of it, applied especially to solicitation or stratagem, as the mean of success, S.B.

2. To twyn o' or of, to part from, S.B.

Maun ye be twyn't o' that blythe neukie
Whar ye hac win't sae lang?

Tarras's Poems, p. 23.

* TWINE, s. Intricate vicissitude, S.B.

And vain may I be now, when all that's past
By unco twines has fallen sae well at last.

Ross's Helenore, p. 128.

"Twine, a turn of fortune;" Gl. Ross.

The metaphor seems to refer to the fable of the thread of life being spun by the Fatal Sisters.

TWINE-SPINNER, s. A ropemaker, Loth.

Teut. tweyn, filum duplex, filum tortum.

To TWINGLE, v. n. To twine [or spin] round, Aberd.

—Afore't she knit a lingle
To swing the roast;
They had nae jack, but this would twingle
Wi' little cost.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 5.

Perhaps a dimin. from Teut. tweyn-en, to twine.

To TWINE, v. a. To chastise, Aberd.

Su.-G. twing-a, Dan. twing-er, Isl. twuing-a, arctare, comprimere; coercere; affligere.

TWINTER, s. A beast that is two years old, S. A. Bor.; corr. quinter.

Fyne twinteris britnyt he, as was the gyis,
And als mony swine, and tydy qwyis

Doug. Virgil, 130, 34.

A.-S. twy-winter, duos annos natus. A cow of three years old was called, thry-winter, triennis. Aelfr. Gl.

This term indeed seems of pretty general use. Fris. twinter-dier, has the very same sense; Animal binum, Kilian; Isl. tvitent-r, bidens.

TWIRK, s. A twitch, Loth.

[To TWIRM, v. n. To dwine, to wither, Shetl.]

TWISCAR, TUYSKER, s. An instrument for casting peats, Shetl.

—"They being now arrived where the rude and antique instruments of Zetland agriculture lay scattered,—his thoughts were at once engrossed in the deficiencies of the one-stilted plough, of the twiscar, with which they dig peats," &c. The Pirate, i. 273.

"The peats are cut with an instrument called a tuysker, which resembles a narrow spade, having a sharp plate of iron called a feather, about seven inches long, projecting from the bottom on its left hand side ; and it determines the form and size of the peat." Edmonstone's Zetl. Isl., i. 177.

This seems to be the same with the Flaughter spade. V. TUSKER.

To TWISLE, v. a. "To twist, fold;" Gl. Picken. V. TWUSSLE.

TWIST, TWYST, s. A twig, a small branch; Chaucer, id.

The King then wynkyt a litill wey ;
And slepyt nocht full encrely ;
Bot glifnyt up oft sodanly.
For he had dreid off thai thre men,
That at the tothyr fyr war then.
That thai his fais war he wyst ;
Tharfor he slepyt, as foule on twyst.

Barbour, vii. 183, MS.

Ane vthir small twist of ane tre I chesit
For to brek down, the cavis to assay
Of this mater, that was vnkownin alway.

Doug. Virgil, 68, 8.

Teut. twist, rami abscissi, ramalia; Kilian. Junius thinks that this may be deduced from twist-en, duplicare, because such small branches are generally intertwined.

To TWITCH, v. a. To touch. V. TWICHE.

TWITCH, s. In a twitch, in a moment, Fife; referring to the suddenness with which a twitch is given.

"Twitch, touch, instant of time;" Gl. Picken.

TWITTER. 1. "That part of a thread that is spun too small." Yarn is said to be twined to twitters, when twined too small, S. Hence, to twitter yarn, to spin it unequally, A. Bor. Ray.

Both Ray and Grose seem to view this q. to twitter, applied to thread, as the same with A. Bor. twitter, to tremble, which they deduce from Teut. titlern, tremere. It may be suspected, however, that they are radically different. Our v. may have been from Teut. two, two, as denoting that a thread is spun so fine as to be divided into two.

2. Applied to any thing slender or feeble. It is said of a lank delicate girl; "She's a mere twitter," S.

"You are as small as the twitter of a twin'd rusky;" S. Prov. Kelly, p. 395. V. RUSKY.

Can it be allied to A.-S. tyddr, fragilis, debilis?

TWITTERY, adj. Slender; properly, spun very small, S.

"Nor were the people of Galloway acquainted with dyeing any other colour than black, which, when mixed with white wool, was made into clothing—(hadden grey) for both lairls and ladies, and was far afore the twittery worn-wabs made now-a-days." Edin. Evin. Cour., July 1, 1819.

[To TWMMYL, v. a. To tumble, hurl, Barbour, x. 496, Skeat's Edit.]

[TWN, s. A tun, Accts. L. H. Treas. i. 344, Dickson.]

TWNE, s. Tin "xij truncheonis all of twne." Aberd. Reg. V. 16.

TWOLDERE, s. V. DOIR and TOLDOR.

"Item, ane gowne of purpore velvot, with ane braid passment of gold & silvir, lynit with twoldere, and furnist with hornis of gold." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 34.

TWOLT, s. "A coverlid for a bed;" Gall. Enc. a variety of TWILT, q. v.

TWO-PENNY, TIPPENY, s. A weak kind of beer, sold at two-pence the Scots pint, or two quarts, S.

"They make their own malt, and brew it into that kind of drink called Two-penny, which, till debased in consequence of multiplied taxes, was long the favourite liquor of all ranks of people in Dundee." Dundee, Statist. Acc., viii. 250. Hence,

TWO-PENNY- (or TIPPENY-) HOUSE, s. An ale-house, S. V. TIPPANISE, c.

To TWUSSLE, v. a. Perhaps a dimin. from Twist, v.

"I'll twussle your thrapple in a jiffy, an' ye think tae camshacle me wi you bluid-thirsty fingers." Samt Patrick, ii. 191. V. TWISLE.

TWYIS, TWYS, TWYST, adv. Twice, Aberd. Reg.

[TWYN, adj. Twain. V. TWIN.]

TWYNRYS, s. pl. "Pincers, nippers; from twine, q. d. twiners," Rudd.

Oft with his richt hand serchis he in vane,
To ripe the outgate of the wound sa wide,
And for to seik the schaft on euery syde,
Wyth his twynrys, and grippand turkes sle,
To thrist the hede, and draw furth pressis he.

Doug. Virgil, 424, 7.

TWYS, TWYSS, TUSSAY, s. A girdle or sash.

"Thai—held their bullis, and their siluer, and a silkyne twiss, and all vthir graith that thai had that was oucht wyber." Aldie. Scot. Corniklis, p. 15.

O. Fr. toissu, ruban, ceinture, tissu; Roquefort.

TYAL, s. Any thing used for tying a latchet, S. B. Isl. tigill, ligula.

To TYAUVE, v. n. This, pronounced as one syllable, gives the proper sound of the v. Taave. [Tyauvin, laborious, Banffs.]

TYBER, s.

Yet shal the riche remayns with one be over-ronen,
And with the Rounde Table the rentes be reved.
Thus shal a Tyber untrue tymber with tene.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 22

A.-S. tyber signifies a sacrifice, an offering; and timbr-ian, to build. But the connection of these ideas is not obvious. The language is metaph., expressing the consequences of the death of King Arthur.

To TYCE, v. n. To move slowly and cautiously, Aberd.

Whan ither ewies lap the dyke,
And eat the kail for a' the tyke,
My ewie never played the like,
But tyc'd about the barn-wa'.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 144, Ed. 1808.

"Went slowly, warily about;" Gl.

Under the v. Feeze, I have viewed tee'd, given by Riteon, as an error, having heard fee'd invariably used in the repetition of this song. But from the use of tye'd in this Edit. it is most probable that this is the proper term. It seems allied to Su.-G. tass-a, to walk softly; "Tacito gressu incedere, ut solent nudipedes; Fena tassent-an," Ihre; and probably to Su.-G. tyet-a, to be silent, tyet-er, close, quiet. Thus tye'd about may signify, "moved in quietness, without causing any disturbance."

[TYD, TYDE, s. Time, Barbour, i. 127. V. TID.]

[To TYD, TYDE, v. n. To betide, happen, Ibid. iii. 24.]

TYDWOLL, s. [Prob. for Tydy-woll, clean or picked wool.] "XLVIIJ stayne of tydwoll," Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

TYDY, TYDIE, adj. 1. Neat; synonym. trig, S.

In this sense tidy is used in E. as in the passage which Johna. quotes from Gay's Pastorals.

Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass.

2. Plump, fat, S.

Fyne twinteris britnyt he, as was the gyis,
And als many swine, and tydy qwyis
Wyth hydys blak.—

Doug. Virgil, 130, 35.

Tydy ky lowis, velis by thaim rynnys.
Ibid. Prol., 402, 25.

—Lo, we se
Flokks and herdys of oxin and of fee,
Fat and tydy, rakand ouer all quhare.

Ibid. 75, 5.

A tydy bairn, a child that is plump and thriving, S.

3. Lucky, favourable.

King Aeol, grant a tydie tirl,
But boast the blasts that rudely whirl.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 201.

4. Pregnant, Ayrs., Clydes.; as applied to a cow. Also to a woman; as, "a tidy bride," one who goes home to the bridegroom's house in a state of pregnancy.

There is no proof that the term was used in this sense by our ancestors. It would seem, however, from the following passages, that it was applied to a cow giving milk, in contradistinction from one whose milk was dried up.

"That the said Robert—pay—to David Smyth, quhilk wantit the mylk of thre tithy ky, in defalt of the said Robert—the soume of thre li. for coatis & scathis," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1493, p. 300.

"Item, from Archibald M'Keller there, fourtie tydie coues, 5 yeld coues," &c. Depredations on the Clan Campbell, p. 18.

"Fra Duncan M'Keller, in Cromunachan, fyve tydie coues, fyve yeld coues, fyve stirks," &c. Ibid., p. 17.

"Taken—from the said Ion Campbell, 7 tydie coues with their calves.—Item, from him sex forrow coues and sex stirks," &c. Ibid., p. 51.

As signifying, either pregnant, or giving milk, the sense corresponds with what may be viewed as the primary application of the term "in season;" as, in either case, a cow is in a state adapted to its principal use.

The term, in sense 1, seems most analogous to Isl. tyd-r, obsequens, applicabilis. The phrase en tyd kona is expl. by the Sw. synonym. lustig husfru, i.e., a pleasant housewife. Su.-G. tidig, decorus, decens, conveniens.

The second sense is perhaps immediately borrowed from Teut. tydigh, in season, mature, ripe. Thus a young cow is denominated, eene tydighe koe; Kilian. To this corresponds Su.-G. tiidfoedd hiord, grex mature editus; and tidig frukt, fructus cito maturescens, which Ihre derives from tid, tempus. Teut. tydigh also signifies, tempestivus, which corresponds to the third sense.

It appears that there was an O.E. v. nearly allied in signification, from which the word, in the second sense at least, may have been formed. "Tyl-yn or thryuen, supra in Then." Now "Thene or thryuen" is expl. "Vigeo." Prompt. Parv.

UDAL, adj. A term applied to lands held by uninterrupted succession, without any original charter, and without subjection to feudal service, or the acknowledgment of any superior.

"Previously to that æra [the Reformation], the lands here, like those in the eastern countries, seem to have acknowledged no superior, nor to have been held by any tenure, but were called odal or udal lands; the characteristic of which is, that they are subject to no feudal service, nor held of any superior.—The holders of these lands, or, what is the same thing, the proprietors of them were, of all men, reckoned the most honourable. Hence, the frequent mention that is made, not only in the celebrated Danish historian [Torfaeus], and in the noted deduction so often quoted [Wallace's Diploma], but even in the elegant Latin historian of Scotland [Buchanan], of the Proceres Orcadium, or the nobles of Orkney. This appellation, however, could not have been bestowed on all the proprietors of this description, who seem to have been very numerous, but was probably confined principally to the earls, their relations and connexions, who held their lands in this manner." Barry's Orkney, p. 219.

This term has been viewed as synonym. with allodial.

—"These udal or allodial lands are directly opposed to fees or feus, which are always subject to a rental or feu-duty to a superior, to which the other never were, but only paid tithe, which appears to have been exacted from almost all lands whatever; and scat, which, in the language of the mother country, is said to signify tribute, land-tax or ground-subsidy." Ibid.

"It is very probable that all the lands in Shetland were allodial or udal. The proprietor had no right to shew but uninterrupted succession." P. Aithsting, Shetl. Statist. Acc., vii. 584.

"Allodial subjects, or subjects granted in alode, are opposed to feus. By these are understood lands or goods enjoyed by the owner independent of any superior, or without any feudal homage." Erskine's Instit., B. ii., T. 3, s. 8.

Udal property has, in one instance, been distinguished from allodial, but, as would seem, improperly.

"There are three kinds of tenure of land in Scotland. First, the Feudal—Secondly, the Allodial, which in the German language signifies free, without paying any quit rent, or having a superior; and, Thirdly, the Udal, being a right complete without writing; this obtains in Orkney and Zetland, and in the buildings of the Four Towns of the parish of Lochmaben.—The lands of Four Towns were granted by one of our kings to his household servants, or garrison of the castle, and the property of each being small, they were allowed, as a kind of indulgence, to hold it without the necessity of charter and sasine, bare possession being a sufficient title. The Tenants pay a small rent to the Viscount of Stormont, but have no charter or sasine from him. The property of these lands is transferred from one person to another, by delivery and possession only; but they must be entered in the rental in Lord Stormont's rental-book, which is done without fee or reward." P. Lochmaben, Dumfr. Statist. Acc., vii. 239.

The small rent paid to Lord Stormont may have been equivalent to the scat mentioned above, although afterwards consigned to a subject; otherwise, these towns cannot strictly be viewed as udal property.

In like manner, "some of the udal lands [in Orkney] pay a small proportion of yearly rent to the King, and to the kirk; and some of them do not pay any thing to the one or to the other." P. Stronay, Statist. Acc., xv. 393.

Allodial property has thus been distinguished from udal, on the ground that the latter implies "a right complete without writing." But this appears to have been merely a local peculiarity of possessions of the udal kind, forming no essential difference between them and those called allodial.

Erskine, when speaking of "the udal right of the stewardry of Orkney and Shetland," says: "When these islands were first transferred from the crown of Denmark to that of Scotland, the right of their lands was held by natural possession, and might be proved by witnesses, without any title in writing; which had probably been their law formerly, while they were subject to Denmark; and to this day, the lands, the proprietors of which have never applied to the sovereign, or those deriving right from him, for charters, are enjoyed in this manner: but where the right of lands in that stewardry has once been constituted by charter and seisin, the lands must from that period be governed by the common feudal rules; except church-lands, whose valuation is no higher than L20 Scots, the proprietors of which are allowed, by 1690, c. 32, to enjoy their property by the udal right, without the necessity of renewing their infeftments." Ersk. ut sup.

There is no good reason to doubt that allodial and adal are originally one term. Erskine indeed has observed, that the former "is probably derived from a, privativa, and leode, or leude, a German vocable used in the middle ages for vassal, or fidelis, (from whence the term liege probably draws its origin);—for the proprietor of allodial subjects is laid under no obligations of fidelity to a superior." Instit. ubi sup.

Our learned countryman, Dr. Robertson, has adopted Wachter's etymon. "Alode," he says, "or allodium, is compounded of the German particle an, and lot, i.e., land obtained by lot. Wachter, Gloss. Germ. voc. Allodium, p. 35. It appears by the authorities produced by him and Du Cange, voc. Sors, that the northern nations divided the lands which they had conquered, in this manner. Feodum is compounded of od, possession or estate, and feo, wages, pay; intimating that it was stipendiary, and granted as a recompence for service. Wachter, ibid., voc. feodum, p. 441." Hist. Charles V., Vol. I. Proofs, p. 270.

Alode (L. B. alod-is, alod-us, alod-ium, alaud-ium,) seems to be merely odal or adal inverted. This is the opinion of Wachter, vo. Allodium. Loccenius evidently entertained a similar idea. For he expl. odhelby, 'as signifying an allodial village,—Ille cum allodiali, veteri et principali pago (Odhelby), ex communi pagi silva possidebit ligna cremalia. Sueciae Leg. Provinc., p. 173. Verel. also expl. Odal, bona avita, fundi, allodium; Ind., p. 184.

Odal, according to Wormius, "denotes hereditary goods, or prædia libera, subjected to no servitude; to which feuda [S. feus] are opposed, as lying under this bondage. This word," he says, "agrees with Allodium, which denotes an inheritance derived from ancestors, and inseparable from the family. Hence Allodarii, those who held inheritances of this kind, and could enter into agreements with respect to their possessions, without consulting their lords." Mon. Danic., p. 507, 508.

The basis of the term odal, adal, undoubtedly is Su.-G. od, anc. aud, oed, possession. This is analogous to the etymon of Feodum given by Robertson. It is rather surprising, that it did not occur to the learned writer, that this etymon of feodum rendered that which he gives of alode extremely suspicious; it being natural to suppose that both these terms would contain a reference to the mode of possession.

There is more difficulty in determining the origin of the termination. It has been supposed, with considerable probability, that it is from ald-ur, actas, antiquitas, Germ. alt, old, as denoting ancient possession. Accordingly, Su.-G. odaljard signifies that which has been long in possession; odalmandr, a man who possesses an ancient property; odalboren, one who has by his birth the possession of an ancient property; odalby, a primitive and ancient village, i.e., one built by the first inhabitants of a country, as distinguished from those erected in later times. O'Brien, and after him General Vallanny, says, that "Ir. allod, ancient, is the original, upon which the Lat. allodium, signifying ancient property, hath been formed."

Verelius, perhaps with greater probability, derives allodium from all, omnis, and aude, possessio, plena et totalis possessio, q. as excluding any superior. Ind. vo. Luta, p. 163.

Some have supposed that al is contr. from Su.-G. adel, noble. But there is a possibility, that, notwithstanding the change of the vowels, adel and odal may have been originally the same. This might seem to be confirmed, not only from the A.-S. synonym being sometimes written oethel, but from its also signifying, patria, regio. The presumption, however, is still stronger from the Isl. term odalboren, nobly born, being so similar to Su.-G. adalborin, and A.-S. aethelboren, which have precisely the same signification. Alem. adalerbi is expl. as synon. with alod, Allodium nobile, immune, liberum, hereditas et possessio libera et exenta; Schilt. Gl. vo. Adhal, p. 10.

If this conjecture be well-founded, A.-S. aethel has originally conveyed the idea of one who had an allodial property, or who acknowledged no superior. V. ATHILL.

"From a comparison," it has been observed, "between the laws by which this adal property was inherited, sold, redeemed, or transmitted from one person to another, and some of the Mosiacal institutions mentioned in Scripture, some have imagined that the former were derived from the latter; and indeed it must be confessed that there are between them many striking points of resemblance." Barry's Orkney, p. 219.

We cannot with certainty, however, trace it any farther back than to the irruption of the barbarous nations into the provinces of the Roman empire. The account, which the elegant historian, formerly quoted, gives of the origin of allodial property, may be viewed as equally applicable to this. "Upon settling in the countries which they had subdued, the victorious troops divided the conquered lands. That portion which fell to every soldier, he seized as a recompence due to his valour, as a settlement acquired by his own sword. He took possession of it as a freeman in full property. He enjoyed it during his life, and could dispose of it at pleasure, or transmit it as an inheritance to his children. Thus property in land became fixed. It was at the same time allodial, i.e., the possessor had the entire right of property and dominion; he held of no sovereign or superior lord, to whom he was bound to do homage, and perform service." Hist. Charles V., Vol. I., p. 256.

This mode of holding property seems to have been introduced into the Orkney islands immediately from Norway, during their subjection to that country, or to Earls of Norwegian extraction. In Norway, it is said, feudal tenures were not known. V. Barry, p. 218.

Different attempts were made to wrest this right from the inhabitants of the Orkneys. Harold Harfager, about the beginning of the tenth century, commanded Earl Einar and all the inhabitants of Orkney to pay him sixty marks of gold. The landholders reckoning the fine too great, the Earl obtained this condition for them, that he should himself pay the whole fine, oc skyldi hann eignaz tha odol oll i eyonom; omnia in insulis bona allodialia vicissim obtenturus; and that he should hold, in return, all the adal property in the islands."—Long after, at Jarlar atto odol oll, "the Earls possessed all the adal property in the Orkneys, till Sigurd the son of Lewis restored it to the owners." Heimskr. ap. Johnst. Antiq. Celto-Scand., p. 11.

Harold Harfager had acted the same part in Norway, as did Einar in Orkney. We learn accordingly, that when his son Hacon succeeded him, it was reported that in all respects he was such a prince as Harold,

"with this single exception, that whereas Harold greatly oppressed all the subjects, Hacon desired to live on good terms with them, oc bauld at gefu bændom edol sin, having promised to the possessors of land the restitution of their allodial rights, of which Harold had deprived them." Ibid. p. 62.

It is to be observed, that although bændom and bændom occur in the original here, and are rendered in the Lat. version, coloni, the terms are not to be understood as denoting what we now call farmers. For, as we learn from Ilhre, bonde, in one of its senses, denotes the possessor of his own inheritance, as distinguished from Landbo, Bryti, &c. which signify one who cultivates the land of another, paying rent, or a certain part of the produce, in return. V. HUSBAND.

UDAL-MAN, UDELAR, UDALLER, s. One who holds property by udal right.

"The Udal-men, with us were likewise called Rothmen or Roythmen, i.e., Self-holders, or men holding in their own right, by way of contradistinction to feudatories." Fea's Grievances, p. 105.

"There are six udelars in Deerness, persons whose property, in some parts of Orkney, is so small, as, if let to a tenant, would scarcely draw above a tub of bear, that is, about a firlof of yearly rent." P. St. Andrews, Orkn. Statist. Acc., xx. 260.

"They are occupied, at least some of them, by men here called udallers, who are little proprietors of land, that has never been held by the feudal tenure, nor subjected to either service or payment to any superior." Barry's Orkney, p. 28.

The smallness of the property of these landholders in our times is thus accounted for :

"As these udallers, divided their lands among all their children, [the son got two merks, and the daughter one ; hence the sister part, a common proverb in Shetland to this day], the possessions soon became trifling, and were swallowed up by great men, generally strangers, many of whom acquired estates in a very short time." P. Aithing, Shetl. Statist. Acc., vii. 584.

Had Dr. Barry attended to the cause of the gradual diminution of the property of these landholders, in proportion to the increase of their number, he would have seen no reason for supposing, that the appellation of Proceres, or nobles, "could not have been bestowed on all the proprietors of this description,—but was probably confined to the earls, their relations and connexions."

Eagerness for political influence has greatly contributed to diminish the number of udallers, as none of this description can vote for a member of Parliament. This is to be viewed as another reason, why, in the present time, the udal rights are to be found attached only to inconsiderable possessions. For as there are not "any persons of note, any more than of extensive property, to be found at present among that class of proprietors ;" we are assured, that "all of that description have long ago relinquished their ancient udal rights, and hold their lands by the same tenures as those of the same rank in other parts of the kingdom." Barry's Orkney, p. 220. V. UDAL.

UDDER-CLAP, s. A sort of schirrous tumour affecting the udder of ewes, by an unexpected return of milk after being some-time cild, Teviotd.

being thought refreshing and salutary." Note, Agr. Surv. Roxb., p. 136.

"Mr. Laidlaw is of opinion that a small quantity of wool [should be] pulled from their udders, to give the lamb more easy access to the teats ; but others condemn this practice of udder-locking, as unnecessary and dangerous."—"I never saw one lamb die for lack of its dam being udder-locked." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 343.

To make their foes to houge so with the sight
And so they did, afore thenemies came,
Echeon their nose & ouer lippe ful right
Cut of anone, which was an hougly sight ;
For whithe the foes thabbe and nunnes brent,
For they them selfe disfigured had shent.

Chron. Fol. 107, b.

This passage clearly points out the origin of E. ugly, q. what causes abhorrence.

For the origin, V. OGERTFUL.

UGERTFOW, adj. Nice, squeamish. V. OGERTFUL.

[To UGGLE, v. a. To besmear with filth. Shetl.]

UGSUM, UGSOME, OUGSUM, UGFOW, adj. 1. Frightful, terrible, causing one to shudder with horror.

"Uh, goodman, ye are flesh and blude yet ! But O ! ye're cauld an' ugsome." Brownie of Bolsbeck, ii. 45.

Acts Mar. 1551, c. 16. Edit. 1566. Ougsum, Skene's Edit.

Here the term is evidently used as synon. with abominabil. V. OGERTFUL.

UGSUMNES, s. Frightfulness, horror.

UHU, UH UH, adv. A sound, especially used by children, equivalent to yes or aye, S.

It seems to have originated from indolence or lassitude, as being pronounced without any exertion to the lips.

UI, s. An isthmus or neck of land, Lewis.

"Ui was the ancient name of the parish. There is in it a place called Ui, which was of old the only place of worship in the parish, and is situated on a narrow neck of land; every such neck of land, or isthmus, whether formed by creeks of the sea, or by the approximation of fresh-water lakes, is in Lewis called Ui, which in the Danish language signifies any such neck of land." Stat. Acc. Par. Storn., xix. p. 255.

Su.-G. and Norw. udde signify lingula terrae in mare procurrans. But rather from Isl. roy-r, Dan. vig, sinus maris angustus; Haldorson.

Doug. Virgil, 334, 5.

This term is still in common use in the north of S., pron. q. umist.

A.-S. ufemest, ufemyst, supremus; from ufa, above, and meist, most, the sign of the superlative. Moes.-G. auhumists, id.

UMAST CLAITH. A perquisite claimed by the Vicar, in the time of Popery, on occasion of the death of any person.

Item, this prudent Consall has concludit,
Sa that our haly Vickers be nocht wraith,
From this day furth thay sal be cleane denudit
Baith of cors-present, cow, and umest claith.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 267.

Sibb. supposes that this was "probably the sheet which covered the body." But, from the description given of it by Lyndsay elsewhere, it appears that it was the coverlet of the bed. We also learn from the same passage, a curious trait of ancient manners; that it was customary for a man to use his cloak as a coverlet in bed, and for a woman to employ her petticoat in the same way.

And als the Vicar, as I trow,
He will nocht faill to tak ane kow:
And ymaist claith (thocht babis thame ban),
From ane pure selie husbandman:
Quhen that he lyes till die,
Hauing small bairnis twa or thrie:
And his thrie ky, withoutin mo,
The Vicar must haue one of tho:
With the gray cloke, that happis the bed;
Howbeit that he be purely cied.
And gif the wife die on the mornie,
Thoch all the babis suld be forlorne,
The vther kow he cleikis away,
With hir pure cote of roploch gray:
And gif within twa days or thrie
The eldest chilkie happis to die,
Of the third kow he will be sure.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 134, 135.

This most oppressive perquisite is in Su.-G. denominated Likstol; donarium Sacerdoti ob sepulturam datum. Ihre offers different conjectures as to the origin. But, as Su.-G. stole signifies a garment worn by a priest, likstol may be analogous to the umaist claith as being claimed by the priest for his own use; q. the body-garment. The antiquity of the custom of giving him also a cow, appears from what is advanced by the same learned writer, vo. Ko, vacca.

[To UMBECAST, v. n. To consider, ponder, Barbour, v. 552. Isl. um, around, kasta, to cast.]

To UMBEDRAW, v. n. Expl. to withdraw.

And Venus loist the bewté of hir eye,
Fleand eschamet within Cyllenius caue,
Mars umbedrew for all his grundin glawe.

Doug. Virgil, Frol. 399, 11.

Sibb. observes, after Rudd., that the initial particle um or un has "here an intensive signification, as in unloose, and in various other instances." But um is undoubtedly the prep. signifying, about, around, corresponding to A.-S. umb, ymb, ymbe, Alem. umbi, Belg. om, Germ. Isl. um, Su.-G. om, um, circa. Ihre marks the affinity between these and the prep. am and amb, anciently used in Lat. and retained in Ambale, Amb-urbium, Amb-ire; and Gr. αμφι. Su.-G. om also signifies back.

Uumbedrew may, therefore, be more properly rendered turned about, or drew back; as allied to Belg. omdraaij-en, to turn about, omgedraaid, turned about; or omdraag-en, to carry about.

UMBERAUCHT, pret. "Embarrassed,—or rather, smote, pursued; from the intensive particle un and beraucht, q. d. raucht, i.e., reached to, or did overtake;" Rudd.

The forthir coist of Italie haue we caught,
Thocht hidditillis hardle fortoun has knberaucht
The Troians, and persewit vnfriendly.
Doug. Virgil, 164, 41.

Thir mony yeris I left vnprofitable,
Ay sen the fader of goldis and King of men
With thunder blast me smate, as that ye ken,
And with his fyry leuin me vnberaucht.
Ibid., 60, 31.

The sense is, encompassed, environed, from um,
A.-S. umb, circa, and raucht, from rac-an, rac-an, to reach, to extend, also, to overtake.

UMBERSORROW, adj. 1. Hardy, resisting disease, or the effects of severe weather.
An umbersorrow bairn, a child that feels no bad effects from any kind of exposure, Border.
It is sometimes corr. pron. number-sorrow.

2. Rugged, of a surly disposition, Loth.; an oblique sense.

The etymon of this sense is uncertain. But it may either be corr. from Teut. on-be-sorht, negligens curae, non sollicitus, Kilian; or comp. of Su.-G. ombaer-a, carere, also, ferre, portare, and sorg, aerumna, dolor;
q. one who is devoid of care, or who bears without injury
those things that cause it to others.

3. As signifying "weakly, delicate," Roxb.
Isl. umber-a, pati.

To UMBESCHEW, v. a. To avoid.

Bot umbeschew this coist of Italie,
Quhilk nixt vnto our bourdouris ye se ly,
Bedyit with flowing of our seis fude,
Sen all thay cieties, with wikkit Grekis not gude
Inhabit ar.—
Doug. Virgil, 81, 24.

It is here used as equivalent to eschew, v. 37.

Eschew thir cieties and thir coistis al.

Umb has perhaps been prefixed, as denoting the act of avoiding by taking a circutious course.

Johnstone, however, in his Gloss. Lodbrokar-Quida,
p. 52, observes that Isl. um is an expletive particle, like Germ. ye and C.B. ym.

To UMBESEGE, v. a. To besiege round about, to encompass a city with armed men.

Was I not gonerour, and cheif leidar thare,
The time quhen that the Troians adulterare
Umbeegit the cieté of Sparta,
And the quene Elene reit and brocht awa?
Doug. Virgil, 316, 34.

To UMBESET, v. a. To beset on every side,
to surround.

Grekis flokkis togidder here and thare,
And umbesettis cruelly and sare.
Doug. Virgil, 52, 50.

A.-S. ymb-sætt-an, id. circumdare, circumsedere.

To UMBETHINK, v. n. To consider attentively, q. on all sides, to view a matter in every possible light, to revolve in the mind.

—The traitour ay

Umbethought in Edit.

Tim Boblin gives umbethout as used in Lancash., explaining it, "reflected, remembered."

A.-S. ymbethenc-an, ymbethinc-an, cogitare de.

UMBEWEROUND, part. pa. Environed.

And with your leve I will me speid
To help him, for he has nel;
All umbeueround with his fayis is he.
Barbour, xi, 640, MS.

Scren. derives environ from Sw. veir-a, omveir-a, torquere, literally, to surround with gold thread, from Isl. veyr, fila ex orichalco: Germ. veirr-en, Sw.
veirr-a, implicare.

Umbeueround seems to be derived from A.-S. ymb- hwearf-an, circumcingere, circumdare, circuire, ambire;
from ymbe, about, and hwearf-fian, to turn.

UMBOTH, UMBITH, adj. A term applied to Teind or tithe of an alternate description, Orkn., Shetl.

"The corn teind is divided between the minister and the proprietor of the crown rents, and the share of the latter is denominated umbith or umboth duty.
This word is—of Norwegian origin, and is said to imply a going or changing about; and the following is the tradition respecting it. When the bishop received the one half of the tithes, and the parson the other, the former, apprehensive that, as the parson was constantly on the spot, he might appropriate to himself the best half of the tithes, directed that they should change shares alternately, and what fell to the bishop one year, should become the share of the parson the following one." Edmonstone's Zetl. Isl., i. 164-5.

The etymon here given is certainly the proper one.
For, although there is not any correspondent term in the Norw., yet Dan. ombytt-er, significa, "to change, to exchange, to chop or swap one thing for another."
Wolff. Sw. ombytt-a, to change; ombyte, change, variation; Wideg.

UMBOTH, s. 1. Tithe given by rotation or alternately, Orkn., Shetl.

It is thus defined in an old MS. Explic. of Norish Words; "Umboth,—the great teind of either half of the parish; so called because every other year it was changed with the Minister for his half. For the word Umboth signifieth tyne about."

"On page second of the Rental are 385 merks of land, also in the Parish of Unst, the teind of which being umboth, or free parsonage teind, is—payable to Lord Dundas as the Crown's Donator of the Lordship of Shetland, who has right to the Bishop's reserved teinds and church-lands.—The 385 merks land—pay of Landmails 128 lisponds, &c., and of umbloth or free corn teind no less than 111 cans of oil, and 48 lisponds, 20 5.12ths. merks weight of Butter." MS. Account of some lands in P. of Unst, Shetl.

[2. Procuratory, factorship, Shetl.]

UMBRE, s. Shade. Fr. ombre, Lat. umbra.

Suich feynit treuth is all bot trechorye,

King's Quair, iv. 11.

"Als thow may see, that of all herysis quhilkis casious of the scripture. Nochteles the falt wes not in the scripture, bot in thare awin perverste mynd, and laik of gudo doctryne: as in calis, throw negligence of the gardnare, thare enterit divers wyld beistis in the yarde, and under the *umbr*e of the dyk thay make thare dennis and cavernis, and thairefter cum oute and devore and trampe down the tender wyne-branchis; the dyk hes nocht the wyte, bot the gardnare quihilk wes sua negligent." Q. Kennedy's Compend. Tract. Keith's Hist. App., p. 201, 202.

UMQUHILE, adv. 1. Sometimes, at times.

Ye may weill be ensampill se,
That na man suld disparity be:
Na lat his hart be wencusyt all,
For na myscheiff that euir may fall.
For nane wate, in how litill space,
That God umquhile wil send grace.

Barbour, iii. 256, MS.

This seems to be merely A.-S. hwilom, hwilum, hwilon, aliquando, inverted; from umb, circum, and hwile, intervallum temporis.

2. Used distributively, in the sense of now as contrasted with then.

Tharfor men that werrayand war,
Suld set thair etlyng euir mar
To stand agayne thair fayis mycht,
Umquhile with strenth, and quhile with slycht.

Barbour, iii. 262, MS., also v. 441.

Thay lust nocht with ladry, nor with lown,
Nor with trumpours to travel throw the town;
Both [Bot] with themself quhat thay wald tel or crak,
Umquhile sadlie, umquhile jangle and jak.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R., i. 3.

It is once used by R. Brunne in this sense, as contrasted with tochile.

Sir Robynet the Brus he durst noure abide,
That thei mad him restus, bot in more & wod side.
Tochile he mad his trayne, & did umchile outrage.

Chron. p. 336.

Restus is expl. by Hearne rests. But it should certainly be rescurs, i.e., rescue, O. Fr. rescousse, id. He could not wait till his friends should bring him a supply of troops. V. RESCOURS.

A.-S. hwilon is used in the same manner. Hwilon an, hwilon twa; Nunc unus, nunc duo; Now (or sometime) one, now two; Somner.

3. Sometime ago, formerly.

Thair standis into the sicht of Troy an ile,
Wele knawin be name, hecht Tenedos umquhile,
Michty of gudis quhill Priamus ring sa stude:
Now is it bot ane firth in the sey flude.

Doug. Virgil, 39, 19.

The war Troianis, umquhile was Ilionn,
The schynand glorie of Phriganis now is gon.

Doug. Virgil, 50, 5.

Skinner mentions A.-S. ymbhwile as also signifying, olim, pridem. But this word seems to have been unknown to Somner, Benson, and Lye.

That this is an inversion of A.-S. hwilom or hwilon, is confirmed by the use of quhilum, in this sense by Barbour.

For Rome quhilum sa hard wes stad,
Quhen Hanniball thaim wencusyt had,
That off ryngis with rich stanyis,
That war off knychtis fyngyris taneys,
He send thre bollis to Cartage.

Bruce, iii. 207, MS.

In Edit. 1620 and 1670, it is umquhile, which might be the reading of another MS.

If any additional evidence seem necessary, as to umquhile being, in the sense last mentioned, perfectly synon. with whilom, it may be found in a Precept of Seisin, granted by David Bruce to Mure of Rowallan, in which whileom occurs in that legal phraseology which more commonly bears umquhile.

—"Reservand to us the warl and relief of the saids landis, reservand also the frank tenendry to Dame Jannet Mure, whyteom wife to Adam Mure Knight." App. Cromerty's Vindic. Rob. III., p. 66.

[UMQUHILE, adj. Late, deceased, S.]

"The King to the Schiref greating: Command B. that instantlie and without delay, he deliver and restore to M. quha was wife of N. her reasonabill dowrie in sic ane towne; quhilk she alleidges to pertaine to her, be gift of her umquhile husband." Reg. Maj. B., ii. c. 16, a. 53.

"That the lands, rents and riches, pertainiung to his umquhile brother, should not come in the hand of foreign men, the Earl of Douglas sent to the Pope for a dispensation to marry his brother's wife, to whom a great part of the lands fell, through the decease of her said umquhile husband." Pitcottie, p. 44.

It is a singular blunder that the learned Whitaker has fallen into, somewhere in his Vindication of Q. Mary, in explaining this term as signifying uncle.

As used in this sense, it is equivalent to, who sometime was husband or brother. Belg. wylen, from wyl, sometime, in like manner signifies deceased. Huyssvrouwe van Wylen N. N., i.e., Wife to the deceased N. N.

UMWYLLS, s. Reluctance, opposition.

But he shal wring his honde, and warry the wyle,

UNABASITLIE, adv. Without fear or dejection.

Unabasitlie this champion saw I gang
In a deip cistarne, & thair a lyoun slench.

Palace of Honour, iii. 28.

Unabasitlie, Edit. 1579, and Doug. Virgil, 141, 54.

To UNABILL, v. a. To incapacitate.

"Quhilk persones [nominated for Elders or Deacons] ar publictly proclaimed in the audience of the hail kirk, upoun a Sunday befoir-none, efter sermone; with admonition to the kirk, that if any man knaw ony notorious cryme or cause, that mycht unabill ony of these persones to enter in sick vocation, that they sould notife the same unto the Sessioun the next Thursday." Knox's Hist., p. 267.

UNAMENDABLE, adj. That cannot be remedied.

"Because of—the Independents miserable unamendable design to keep all things from any conclusion, it is like we shall not be able to perfect our answers for some time." Baillie's Lett., ii. 216.

UNAWARNISTLIE, adv. Without previous warning.

"He schew how his fader wes reddy to invaid thaim unawarnistlie, quhen he saw occasioun and time." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 92. V. UNWARNIST.

To UNBALL, v. a. To unpack.

"You must have a particular licence, as I noted formerly, and then cause unball them at the custom-house, and set your mark upon them," &c. Sir A. Balfour's Letters, p. 96. V. BALL, a bale.

UNBAULD, adj. Humble, self-abased, Clydes.; from the negative, and Bald, bold.

UNBEIST, s. A monster. V. ONBEIST.

[UNBIGGIT, part. adj. Not built upon, S.]

UNBODIN, adj. Unprovided.

"And at na pure man, na unbodin, be chargeit, to cum to ony raidis in Ingland." Acts Ja. II., 1456, c. 62, Edit. 1566. V. BODIN.

UNBODING, adj. Unpropitious, unpromising, Dumfr.

UNBOWSOME, adj. 1. Unbending, in a literal sense, South of S.

"When the sole of a shoe's turned uppermost, it makes aye but ane unbowsome overleather." Browne of Bodsbeck, ii. 202.

2. Stiff, obstinate, S. A.

"Wi' a' your kindness to me and mine, ye hae a dour, stiff, unbowsome kind o' nature in ye—it 'ill hardly souple when steepit i' yer ain e'esight." Ibid. i. 2. V. BOVSUM.

From A.-S. un, negative, and boesum, obediens, flexibilis, "tractable, pliant, flexible," Somner; from bugan, to bend; Teut. ghe-booghsaem, patiens, indulgens. Onboogigh, inflexibilis, immediately corresponds with the S. term.

UNCAIRDLY, adv. In a reckless manner, without the exercise of concern or care.

Dispairdly, uncairdly,
I hasert ouer the hill.

Burd's Pilg. Watson's Coll., ii. 45.
i.e., "I hazarded myself, without regarding danger."

UNCANNAND, adj. As denoting one who is supposed to have some preternatural power. V. UNCANNY.

I bade you alway hold you weill,
And namely from that man Gray Steel:

For he is called uncannand,
And spoken of in many land.

Sir Egicr, p. 14.

UNCANNY, adj. 1. Not safe, dangerous, S.

Thus wi' uncanny pranks he fights;
An' sae he did beguile,
An' twin'd us o' our kneefest men
By death and by exile.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 7.

2. Not tender, not cautious, harsh, S.; used both literally and metaph.

—Whinstanes, howkit frae the craigs,
May thole the prancing feet o' naigs,
Nor ever fear uncanny hotches
Frae clumsy carts or hackney-coaches.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 69.

3. Incautious, imprudent, S.

"I—was, by this experience of his watchful Providence over this great cause, made hopeful he would not suffer it to be spoiled by the imprudence of many uncanny hands which are about it." Baillie's Lett., i. 77.

4. Mischievous; applied to those with whom any interference is dangerous, S.

"It was thought meet that he and his should lie about Stirling,—to make all without din march forward, lest his uncanny trewsman should light on to call [drive] them up in their rear." Baillie's Lett., i. 175.

5. Applied to one supposed to possess preternatural powers; no canny, synonym. S.

They tell me, Geortie, he hae sic a gift,
That scarce a starnie blinkit frae the lift,
But he wou'd some auld world name for't find;—
For this some ca'd him an uncanny wight;
The clash gaed round, "he had the second sight."

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 8.

"Captain," said Dinmont in a half whisper, "I wish she binna uncanny—her worls dinna seem to come in God's name, or like other folks. They threep in our country that there are sic things." Guy Mannering, iii. 273.

6. Exposing to danger from preternatural causes, S.

"A child was always considered in imminent danger until baptised, and was spoken of as being uncanny, as its presence rendered the house liable to the visits of these unearthly intruders." Edin. Mag. March 1819, p. 219.

7. Severe, as applied to a fall, or blow, S.

"He's been aye short in the wind—since I rode whip and spur to fetch the Chevalier to redd Mr. Wauverley and Vich Ian Vohr; and an uncanny coup I got for my pains." Waverley, iii. 272.

UNCASSABLE, adj. What cannot be annulled or invalidated, Reg. Maj.; from in negat. and cass-are, irritum reddere.

UNCE, WNSE, s. An ounce. "In weycht of ten wnsiss or tharby;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1563.

UNCHANCE, s. Mischance, calamity, Ayrs.

"I was thankful to learn, that the end of my brother's widow had been in peace, and not caused by any of those greivous unchances which darkened the latter days of so many of the pious in that epoch of the great displeasure." R. Gilhaize, iii. 153.

UNCHANCY, adj. 1. Not lucky, not fortunate, S.

"Our ennymes ar to fecht aganis wa, quhome we meir offendit with iniuria. Throw quhilk thair werkis salbe the more unchancy and mair odious to God." Bellend Cron., B. vi. c. 17.

2. Dangerous, not safe to meddle with; applied to persons, S.

"—But I doubt ye wad hae come aff wi' the short measure; for we gang-there-out Hieland bodies are an unchancy generation, when you speak to us of boudage." Rob Roy, ii. 206.

3. Ill-fated; applied to things which are the cause of misfortune, trouble, or suffering, S.

Sae wi' sick treatment, I am left my lane,
An' monie a weary foot synsyne hae gane,
Born i' the yerd wi' that unchancy coat,
That he sae sleely said he had forgot.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 98.

UNCLEAN HEARTSOMENESS. Adultery.

"Alleged,—Warrandice is only incurred by legal deeds, as by a contrary disposition and double rights, and not by such a natural fact of unclean heartsomeness." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iii. 293.

UNCLIMMABIL, adj. That may not be climbed.

"—The mountainis—stude sa hie aganis him, that thay apperit unclimmabil." Bellend. T. Liv., 450.

[UNCLISBACKS, s. pl.] Gloves without fingers, Shetl.]

UNCO, [UNCA, UNCAN], adj. 1. Unknown.

"Nae safe wading in unco waters;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 55.

This is the primary sense; A.-S. uncuth, id.

2. Not acquainted; used both with respect to persons and brute animals, that are strange to each other. He's quite unco; He feels himself entirely a stranger, S. Uncouth is used by Bellenden in this sense, as to cattle. V. HOMYLL.

3. Not domestic. An unco man, a stranger; as distinguished from one who is a member of the family, or familiar in it, S.

Frae fouks a feldward, nae frae fouk at hame,
Will come the antecast ye'll hae to blame;
Gin ye be wise beware of unco men.

Ross's Helenore, p. 61.

—Shortsyn unto our glen,
Seeking a hership came yon unco' men,
An' our ain lads, albuist I say't my sell,
But guided them right cankardly and snell.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 62.

4. So much altered, as scarcely to be recognised; having the appearance of change, S.

"The neighbours—expressed, in feeling terms, their sense of the sad change that had taken place in the appearance of the house, which they said was now a unco, they would scarcely ken it for the same place." Cottagers of Glenburnie, p. 260.

5. Strange, unusual. That's unco; that is surprising, S. corr. from A.-S. uncuth, incognitus, alienus.

As she hauf-sleeping and hauf-waking lay,
An unco din she hears of fouk and play;
The sough they maile gar'd her lift up her eyn,
And O! the gathring that was on the green!

Ross's Helenore, p. 62.

"Aprile 1683,—strange and uncow diseases happens people. In Menteith severall families taken with an uncow disease, like unto convulsion fits, their face throwing about to their neck, their hands gripping close together," &c. Law's Memor., p. 246.

6. Strange, as applied to country; denoting that in which one has not been born, S.

"I was doomed—still I kept my purpose in the cage and in the stock—I was banished—I kept it in an unco land—I was scourged,—I was branded—It lay deeper than scourge or red iron could reach—and now the hour is come." Guy Mann., iii. 273.

7. Distant, reserved in one's manner towards another, S.

UNCO, adv. Very, S. "Unco glad, very or unusually glad;" Gl. Sibb.

Whan she a mile or two had farther gane,
She's unco eery to be sae her lane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 60.

UNCO, s. 1. Any thing strange or prodigious, S. O.

"He—lifting his hand into a posture of admiration, cried as if he had seen an unco." Provost, p. 129.

2. A strange person, a stranger, S. O.

"We had advised her, by course of post, of our coming, and intendment to lodge with her as uncos and strangers." Annals of the Parish, p. 191.

"Poor boy,—ye'll soon see the want of education when ye gang tae the uncos;* ye canna expect to be a' your days about your father's fireside." Writer's Clerk, i. 122. "Meaning among strangers;" N. ib.

"I was nae sae lang about my parents as what ye hae been; I was sent to the uncos when I was only seven years o' age." Ibid. p. 210.

3. In pl. uncos, news, S. B., Gl. Shirr.

I hear down at the Brough this day ye've been,
Sae tell's the uncos that ye've heard or seen.

Morrison's Poems, p. 183.

"Uncuffs and Uncuds, news;" A. Bor. Grose. A.-S. uncuth is used in this very sense; in the dative uncuthum. Ne fyligeath hig uncuthum; A stranger will they not follow. Joh. 10. 5.

UNCOLIE, UNCOLIES, UNCOLIKE, adv. Greatly, very much; strange to a surprising degree, Aberd. The latter is used, ibid. and Loth.

This must be traced to A.-S. uncuthlice, inusitatè, used obliquely.

UNCOLINS, adv. In a strange or odd manner, Fife; from Unco, and the termination lins denoting quality. V. LINGIS.

[UNCOACTIT, part. adj. Voluntary. V. VNCOACTED.]

UNCOFT, adj. Unbought, S.

"Gif the Albanis had sic grace that thai mycht leif with concord amang thaim self,—thai mycht nocht allanerlie haif all necessaris within thaim self uncoft, bot with small difficultie mycht dant all nyctbouris." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 4.

"Ye cangle about uncoft kids;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 81. Kelly gives it; "You strive about uncoft gait," i.e., goats, p. 388. V. COFF, v.

"Allowand—fiftj d. struilingis of impositioun [impost] takin fra him in Ingland, togidder with the custemez, fraucht, & uncostis maid be the said George of the said malt." Act. Audit. A. 1488, p. 117.

"Bot gif the merchand persow his merchandice within yeir and day fra the said perishing and tinsel, he sall recover it, payand the uncostis of the saifing to thame that has done the samin." Sea Lawis, Balfour's Pract., p. 633; i.e., the expense of salvage.

Uncost is the proper orthography. For un is a negative; whereas, on denotes what is imposed, i.e., laid on as the price of any article. Belg. onkosten, charges, expences. This seems properly to denote additional charges, as in sense 2. of Onkost. For Kilian defines onkosten; Quaecunque emptio*n*i acce*du*ant et praeter pretium ab emptore erogantur.

UNCOIST, UNCOST, s. Expense; the same with Oncost, sense 1. "Fraucht and uncostis of certane geir;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

UNCOME, adj. Not come, not arrived.

"He missed some of the Strathboggie folk uncome there, whereupon he directed M'Ronald to go plunder and bring them in." Spalding, ii. 172.

UNCORDUALL, adj. Incongruous.

Still in to pees he couth nocht lang endur,
Uncorduall it was till his natur.

Wallace, ix. 429, MS.

Either q. uncordial, or as not according.

UNCORNE, s. Wild oats, S. B.

Quhare schame is loist, thar spredis your burgeons hate,
Of to reuolue ane vnleful consate,
Ripis your perellus frutis and uncorne;
Of wikkit grane how sall gude schaf be schorne?

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 93, 18.

"In some places of Scotland they say, that one hath sown his uncorn;" Rudd. This is equivalent to sowing one's wild oats.

Teut. on-kruyd is used in a similar way, as denoting noxious weeds; zizania, lolium, herba inutilis; from on, negat., and kruyd, an herb. V. ON and ONBEIST.

UNCOUNSELFOW, adj. Unadvisable, S. B.

UNCOUTHY, adj. 1. Dreary, causing fear, S.; pron. uncoudy, S. B.

Tyne heart, tyne a'; we'll even tak sic beeld
As thir uncouthy heather-hills can yield.

Ross's Helenore, p. 74.

2. Under the influence of fear, S. B. Fery, synon.

3. Unseemly, Fife. V. COUTH, COUTHY.

UNCOUTHNESSE, s. Strangeness, want of acquaintance.

"He speaketh of Christ's presenting his church to himself in glory at the great day, as if there were nothing but uncouthnesse and distance betwixt him and the church until then." Fergusson on the Ephes., p. 389.

UNCREDYBLE, adj. Unbelieving, incredulous.

Quhy dois he refuse my wourdis and prayeris

To lat entyr in hys dul uncredyble eris!

Doug. Virgil, 114, 48.

L. B. incredibilis, incredulus; Du Cange. Rudd. mentions S. ceuyeabill as used to signify, bringing vengeance or mischief.

To UNCT, v. a. To anoint.

"The barme that is to be baptizit is unctit with haly oyle upon his breist, to signifie that his hart is consecrate to God, and that his mynd is confortit in the faith of Christ." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 131, a.

Lat. unct-us.

UNCTING, s. Anointing.

"Quhen the uncting is complete, thair followis ane catechisme, that is to say, ane inquisition of our faith, quhilk we aucht to haue of the blisat Trinite." Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 131, a.

UNCUNNANDLY, adv. Unknowingly.

For feir uncunnandly he cawkit,

Quhill all his pennis war drown and drawkit.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 22.

"But they retired uncunnandlie to a place called the Staige Myre, quhair mony of thare hors laired." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 403—4.

V. CUNNAND.

UNCUNNANDNES, s. Want of knowledge, ignorance.

Clerkis for uncunnandnes mysknawis ilk wycht.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 233, b. 43.

UNDALA, adj. Mean, despicable, Shetl.

This has perhaps been borrowed from the Dutch, as Teut. ondelghelick signifies improbus. It may, however, be from Isl. uan, used as E. un in composition, and daell, mansuetus, liber, odaell, inutilis.

UNDEGEST, adj. 1. Rash, imprudent.

And into counsalis geuing he was hald
Ane man not undegest, bot wise and cald.

Doug. Virgil, 374, 2.

2. Untimely, premature.

Bot had this haisty dede sa undegest
Sufferit haue bot my sone ane stouid to lest,
Quhill of Rutulianis he had slane thousandis,—
Wele likit me that he had endit syne.

Doug. Virgil, 366, 30.

Vndegest dede, i.e., untimely death. V. DEGEST.

UNDEGRATE, adj. Ungrateful. V. UNGRATE.

UNDEIP, s. A shallow place.

And first Sergest belynd sone left has he,
Wreland on skellyis, and undeippis of the se,
With brokin airis lerand to haist agane.

Doug. Virgil, 134, 51.

Teut. ondeip, non profundus, on-deipte, vadium, brevia, Germ. untiefe, id.

UNDEMIT, UNDEMYT, adj. Uncensured, Gl. Sibb. This seems originally the same with the following word.

UNDEMUS, adj. Incalculable, inconceivable; undeemis, undeemint, S. B.

"Suppone we be vincuat (quhilk may nocht succed but udemus murdir of yow) than sall ye be ane facyll pray to your ennymes, bryngand thaim to tryumphe and honour, and your self to misire & seruitude." Beland. Cron., Fol. 6, b.

Undeemis, or undeemint money, a countless sum, S. B. from A.-S. un, negat. and dem-an, to judge, to reckon.

UNDERCOTTED, part. adj. Apparently for undercoated.

"A slight way of healing indeed, which now is undercotted, and seems to be incurable," &c. Walker's Rem. Passages, p. 76.

The allusion seems to be to a sore which festers under the superficial scurf brought over it, from being healed too hastily.

UNDERFIT, adj. A term applied to peats cast in a peculiar mode, Gall.

"Underfit peats, peat turf, digged beneath the foot, not in the common way of cutting them of a brest," i.e., off abreast; Gall. Enc.

UNDER-FUR SOWING. Sowing in a shallow furrow.

"If you find it so sandy that it cannot be left rough, —sow the rye above the dung, plow it down with an ebb fur (which is termed under-fur sowing), then sow the clover and rye-grass, and harrow them in gently with light harrows." Max. Sel. Trans., p. 34.

UNDERGORE, adj. "In a state of leprous eruption;" Gl. Sibb.

To UNDERLY, v. a. To be subjected to, to undergo, S.

Belg. onderlegg-en, to lie under.

To UNDERLOUT, WNDYRLOWT, v. n. To stoop, to be subject.

—The bargane lang standis in dout,
Quha sal be vycytoure, and quha vnderlout.
Doug. Virgil, 323, 35.

Schyre Edward the Ballyol that tyme bade,
In-til Perth, and thare he made
The landis lyand hym about
Til hys Lordschype wndyrlout.
Wyntown, viii. 23. 43.

A.-S. underlut-an, id. V. LOUT.

UNDERLOUT, WNDYRLOWTE, adj. In a state of subjection.

Bot hys thryft he has sald all owte,
Quham falschad haldis wndyrlout.
Wyntown, vi. 18. 330.

UNDERN, s. The third hour of the artificial day, according to the ancient reckoning, i.e., nine o'clock A.M.

"Na man duelland ututh the burgh sall by bestis for to sla befor that undern be runnyn in wynty, ande mydmorne in somyr: Bot the propyr fleschewaris of the toun sal by bestis to the oyse of the tounne al tyme of the day at hym lykis." Leg. Quat. Burg., c. 66.

Auteterciam pulsatam in hieme, et primam in estate.
Lat. Runnyn seems to be for rungyn, or rung.

The passage is thus given in an ancient MS.

"Na man wonnand in the kings burgh sal by bestis to sla befor that undern be runnyn in wynter, & mydmorne in somer." Bur. Laws, c. 56. MS. Adv. Lib. U. 4, ult. fol. v., 138.

What might have been necessary for illustrating this term has been anticipated under the word ORNTREN, q. v.

UNDER SPEAKING, under pretence of speaking with.

"Kingcausie being a fine gentleman, scorned to be tane with the like of him, and underspeaking this William Forbes, shoots this gentleman dead with a pistol." Spalding, ii. 226.

UNDERSTANDABLE, adj. Intelligible.

"This uncouth act, scarce understandable, bred great fear and perturbation among the king's loyal subjects." Spalding, ii. 122.

UNDERSSTANDIN, part. pa. Understood.

—"The euidentis, richtis, ressounis, & allegacions of bath the partijs beand herde, sene, & vndirstandin, the lordis of counsaile, ripely avisit, decretis," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1466, p. 5.

UNDIGITED, part. adj. Not dressed, S.

"Lana rudis, undigited wool." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 21. V. DICT, v.

To UNDO, v. a. 1. To cut off, q. to loose.

I am commundit, said scho, and I man
Vndo this hare to Pluto consecrate,
And lous the saul out of this mortal state.
Doug. Virgil, 124, 49.

2. To unravel.

Bot nestles Dedalus caught pieté,
Of the grete luf of fare Ariadne,
That was the Kingis dochter, taucht ful richt
Of this quent hous for to vndo the slicht,
How by ane threde the subtil wentis ilkane
Thay michten hald, and turne that way agane.
Doug. Virgil, 163, 26.

Ambagesque resolvit; Virg.

3. To disclose, to uncover.

At leist thou knawis this goldin granit tre,
And with that word the branche schew, and rndid,
That priuely vnder hir cloke was hid.
Doug. Virgil, 177, 49.

A.-S. un-do-en, aperire, solvere, retexere, enodare; to open, to loose; Belg. ontdo-en; Somner.

UNDON, WNDON, part. pa. "Explained," q. d. unlocked; Gl. Wynt.

Naww for til have wndon,
Is nowthir brodyr na syster sone.
Wyntown, viii. 3. 111.

UNDOCH, UNDOCHT, UNDOUGHT, WANDOUGHT, s. 1. A weak or puny creature, one who is good for nothing; applied both to body and mind, S. wandocht, S. B.

"He had said before that Mr. George Graham, the wndoch of Bishops, had gotten the bishoprick of Dumbane, the excrement of bishopricks." Calderwood's Hist., p. 650.

Let never this undought of ill-doing irk
But ay blyth to begin all barret and bail.
Montgonerie, p. 19.

V. TAIDREL.

And when thou bids the paughty Czar stand yon,
The wandought seems beneath thee on his throne.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 391.

2. Rudd. expl. it as also signifying a coward.

Turnus, what ! will thou suffer this undocht,
Thy lang trauell and laubour be for nocht !
Doug. Virgil, 221, 42.

It is doubtful, if it imply the idea of a coward. The sense seems to be ; "Wilt thou suffer such a silly fellow as Aeneas to frustrate all thy former labour ?"

Tent. on-deughd, vitium, delectus ; on-deughfulig, inutilis, improbus, Kilian ; from on, negative, and deughd, virtus, valor, probitas, from deugh-en, A.-S. dug-an, valere, whence S. dow.

UNDOOMIS, UNDUMOUS, adj. (Gr. v.) Immense, uncountable, what cannot be reckoned, Ang., Shetl. "An undumous sicht," an immense quantity or number, Mearns.

Verelius gives Isl. vandlaemt as signifying, nimis leniter et negligenter judicatum. Daemi, exempla, documenta ; or daemum, sine exemplis, inauditum. V. UNDEMUS.

UNDRAIKIT, part. adj. Not drenched, Stirlings. V. DRAKE, DRAIK, v.

UNE, s. Oven, S.

"Was nocht the thre barnis cassin in ane birnand une, because thay wald nocht adorne [i.e., adore] fals ydolia." Bellend. Cron., B. xv., c. 4. V. OON.

UNEARTHLY, adj. Ghostly, preternatural, S.; waneearthly, S.B.

But how shall I thee ken, Tamlane,
Or how shall I thee knaw,
Amang so many uneearthly knights,
The like I never saw !

Scott's Minstrelsy Border, ii. 253.

UNEGALL, adj. Unequal. Fr. inegal.

"Quhat was it then that joynit sa unegall lufe and sa far aganis resoun ?" Buchanan's Detect. C., 7. b.

UNEITH, ONEITH, UNETH, S. UNETHIS, UNEIS, UNESE, WNESS, UNEIST, adv. Hardly, not easily, with difficulty.

Thay walkit furth so dirk oneith thay wyst,
Quhiddir thay went amyddis dym schaddoils thare.
Doug. Virgil, 172, 31.

—Quhiddir was day or nycht vneth wist we.
Ibid. 74. 24.

Hir self sche hid therfore, and held full koy,
Besyde the altare sitting vnethis sene.
Ibid. 68. 13.

So thik in stale all merrit wox the rout,
Vneis mycht ony turne his hand about.
Ibid., 331. 54.

The birdis—unese has songin thrise.
Ballad, 1508, S. P. R., iii. 127.

Wness a word he mycht bryng out for teyne,
The bailfull ters bryst braithly fra hys eyne.
Wallace, vi. 208, MS.

Allace ! quhat suld he do ? vneist he wyst.
Doug. Virgil, 109, 33.

R. Brunne uses vnethis in the same sense, p. 75.

Hors & hondles thei ete, vnethis skaped non.—
Clerkes vnethis thei lete, to kirke o lyue to go.

A.-S. un-eathe, vix, scarcely ; Somner. Unneth, Chaucer. Alem. unodo, difficulter. Ihre views Su.-G. oonedig, invitus, as allied to A.-S. un-eathe. V. EITH.

VOL. IV.

UNERDIT, part. adj. Not buried.

Vnerdit lvis of new the dede body,
That with his corpis infekkis al the nauy.
Doug. Virgil, 168, 10.

V. ERD, v.

UNESCHEWABIL, adj. Unavoidable, Doug.

"Becaus the schott of gunnys, hagbutis, hand bowis, and vther small artalyerie now commonlie vit in all cuntreis baithe be sey and lande in thare wera, is sa fellounse and unescheuable to the pithe and his curage of noble and vailyeand mene ;—that every landit man within this realme sall haue ane hagbut of found," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1535, Ed. 1814, p. 345.

UNESS, adv. V. UNEITH.

UN-EVER, adv. Never, at no time, Moray.

This resembles the formation of A.-S. naefre, naefre, by means of the negative prefixed to aefre, ever, also of Moer.-G. niavri, as well as of Lat. namquam, q. ne-unquam, not ever. V. DELIVERLY.

UNFANDRUM, adj. Bulky, unmanageable, Ang.

UNFARRANT, adj. Senseless, without quickness of apprehension, Ettr. For.

"Mumps—O, man, ye're an unfarrant beast !—I never saw sic an unfeasible creature as you." Browne of Bodsbeck, ii. 260. V. FARAND.

UNFEIL, adj. 1. Uncomfortable, Roxb.

2. Rough, not smooth, ibid. V. FEIL.

UNFEIROCH, UNFERY, UNFIERDY, ONFEIRIE, adj. Infirm, feeble, unweildy, not fit for action, S.

For thocht the violence of his sare smert
Maid him unfery, yit his stalwart bert
And curage vndekeyit was gude in nede.
Doug. Virgil, 351, 21.

But leal my heart beats yet, and warm ;
Thoch auld, onfeirie, and lyart I'm now.
Jamieson's Popul. Ball., ii. 171.

"Gang about your business, and dinna plague a poor auld unfeiroch man." Perils of Man, iii. 212.
Onfeirie is the more common pron. S. B.
Su.-G. wanfoer, imbecillis ; Ihre, vo. Wan, p. 1035.
V. FERY.

UNFEUED, part. adj. Not disposed of in few, S.

"The unfeued and unproductive property would also be exposed to sale in way of few." Aberd. Journ., Jan. 20, 1819.

UNFLEGGIT, part. adj. Not affrighted.

—Thou canst charm,
Unfleggit by the year's alarm. —
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 83.

V. FLEG.

UNFORE. "All in ane voce baitht fore & unfore ;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

This might seem to signify, "for and against." There is a difficulty, however, from the voice being spoken of as unanimous. Un has evidently the power of not.

UNFORLATIT, part. adj. 1. Not forsaken, Rudd.

2. "Fresh, new;" Rudd. In the passages referred to, the term contains a reference to the act of racking or drawing off wine from one cask to another.

Bot my propyne come fra the pres fute hate,
Unforlatit, not jawyn fra tun to tun.
Doug. Virgil, Prol., 126, 8.

And quha sa lykis may taisting of the tvn
Unforlatit news from the berry rvn,
Rede Virgil bauldly, but mekill offence,
Except our vulgare toungeis deference.
Doug. Virgil, 482, 48.

Belg. wyn verlaet-en, to rack wine, to draw it from one cask to another.

UNFORSAIN'D, adj. "Undeserved;" Gl. Ross.

My wrang, my wrang, gryte is my wrang, she says,—
Wrang unforsain'd and that we never bought,
Rank Kettren were they that did us the ill.

Ross's Helenore, p. 29.

Perhaps this term may have originally signified, irremediable, irreparable, q. that for which no atonement could be made; Teut. on, negat. and versoen-en; Sw. foersön-a, to expiate.

UNFOTHERSUM, adj. A term applied to the weather, when not favourable to vegetation, Dumfr.; corr. from unforthersum, q. what does not further the crop. V. FORDERSUM.

UNFRE, UNFREE, adj. 1. Discourteous.

Thou sleugh his brether thre,

In fight;

Urgan and Morgan unfre,
And Moraunt the noble knight.

Sir Tristrem, p. 160, st. 39.

2. Not enjoying the liberties of a burgess, Aberd.

—"The Dean of Guild with the burgesses of guild—presently condescended to lend and advance 1000 pounds sterling, for the whilk ilk man, free and unfree, was soundly taxed." Spalding, ii. 200.

UNFRELIE, UNFREELIE, adj. 1. Frail, feeble, S. B.

2. Heavy, unweildy, S. B. unfery, synon.

3. Inelegant, not handsome.

"Quhy is my fate," quoth the fyle, "fasseint so foule?"

"My forme, and my letherin, unfrelie but feir."
Howlate, l. 5.

i.e., "ugly without a parallel." From un, negat. and Frelie, q. v.

UNFRIEND, UNFRIEND, s. An enemy.

O Lord! I mak the supplicatioun,

With thyne unfreindis lat me not be opprest.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 132.

"It seems his unfriends has made such reformation of that his unadvisedness, that in all hazards he must retreat it." Baillie's Lett., i. 77.

"Many in the house of Commons are falling off our unfriends;" Ibid. ii. 207, i.e., no longer taking part with our enemies.

Thus, as Mr. Macpherson observes, Lat. inimicus, is slightly altered from in-amicus. Teut. on-vriend, inimicus, parum amicus; on-vriend-schap, inimicitia; A.-S. unfreondlice, parum amice, inimice.

UNFRIENDSHIP, s. Enmity.

"Inimicitiae—unfriendship." Desp. Gram., D. 8, b.

UNFRUGAL, adj. Lavish, given to expense.

"He was not given to the cares of this world, though not unfrugal; for although he had very small incomes by his charge,—he left his children in good condition." Crauford's Univ. Edin., p. 113.

UNFUTE-SAIR, adj. At ease, not foot-sore.

A tymes quhen scho was full and unfute sair

Scho take in mynd hir sister wpoland.

Henryson, Tale of the Two Myse, Auchinl. MS., fo. 321.

In Sibbald's Edition from the Bannatyne MS., the word is corrupted into on fute fare.

Thar Priests went unto collatioun,

Into ane privie place of the said toun.

Quhair that they sat, richt soft and unfute-sair;

They laist not na rangald nor repair.

Priests Pebdis, S. P. R., i. 3.

"This passage," Mr. Pinkerton says, "seems corrupt." But there is no ground for this supposition. A.-S. fota-sare, signifies dolor pedum, a pain in the foot; Sommer. This phrase with the negat. particle prefixed, seems to be here used as an adj. "They sat at their ease, without pain." Although the reference immediately is to pain in the feet, as arising from much walking, the expression is certainly to be understood more generally, as signifying that they were free from any cause of disturbance whatsoever. The phrase is indeed expl. a little downwards.

Quhair that thay sat, full easily and soft.

UNGANAND, UNGAND, part. adj. Unfit, not becoming.

And younder, lo, beheld he Troylus

Wanting his armour, the fey barne fleand,

For to encounter Achilles unganand.

Doug. Virgil, 27, 50.

V. GANE.

UNGANG, WNGANG, s. [The outgo, range.]

"And als for the parting of the said maisteris fysche thre tymmes on ane wngang, quhar thai suld be twa tymmes partit on ane hail day." Aberd. Reg., V. 16, A. 1533.

This seems to denote the range made by a fishing-boat for one draught of the net, or the act of landing; A.-S. on-gang, ingressus.

To UNGANG, v. a. [To outgo, surpass]. It ungangs me sair, I am much deceived, I am greatly mistaken, Ang.

An' sae I hadd it best, ye bid the lad

Lay's hand to heart, an' to the bargain'hadd.

For it ungangs me sair, gin at the last

To gang together binna found the best.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 85.

For I am much mistane, &c., Edit. Second.

This term resembles Teut. ont-gaen, evadere, deflectere; errare, praevaricari; et excedere limites; Kilian. This is obviously formed from gaen, to go, with the negative prefixed. The pret. is ontging; as, Belg. Zyne spraak ontging him; His speech failed him; Sewel. Dan. undga-a-e, also signifies to escape.

UNGEIR'D, UNGEARIT, adj. 1. "Naked, not clad, unharnessed," S. Gl. Shirr. V. GEIR.

2. Castrated, Ayrs.

Picken gives it different senses conjunctly. "Un-gear'd, gelded; naked, unharnessed;" Gl.

UNGLAD, adj. Sorrowful.

Hir supplication with teris ful englaid
Reports hir syster. —

Doug. Virgil, 115, 12.

A.-S. un-gladu, tristitia, formed like Lat. illaetabilis, id.

UNGRATE, UNDEGRATE, adj. Ungrateful, S.B.

Ye Muses, who were never yet ungrate,
When you your benefactor's deeds relate, &c.
Milton's Poems, p. 145, Ed. 1802.

Undegrate is also used, Aberd.; as in the following Prov.; "It's tint gweed that's dane [done] to the undegrate."

UNHALIST, part. pa. Not saluted.

Now hir I leif unhalist, as I ryde,
Of this dangere quataouer betyde,
Al ignorant and wat nathing, pure wicht.
Doug. Virgil, 285, 41.

V. HALLES.

UNHANTY, UNHAUNTY, adj. 1. Inconvenient, Loth. V. HANTY.2. "Unwieldy, overlarge; a very fat person is called unhaunty," Gl. Picken, Renfr.

—The hirpling pining gout
Swall't baith his legs unhaunty,
Like beams that day.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1719, p. 201.

V. HANTY.

UNHEARTY, UNHEARTSOME, adj. 1. Uncomfortable; applied to the state of the atmosphere; as, "an unhearty day," a day that is cold and damp, S.

2. Transferred to bodily feeling, when one ails a little; especially as regarding the sensation of cold, S.

3. Melancholy, sad.

"It is an unheartsome thing, to see our father and mother agree so ill; yet the bastards, if they be fed, care not." Rutherford's Lett., p. i. ep. 178.

To UNHEILD, v. a. To uncover.

I kneillit law, and unheild my heid.
Palices of Honour, ll. 45.

A.-S. unhel-an, revelare, unheled, revelatus. V. HEILD.

UNHELE, s. Pain, suffering.

It needis nocht to renew all my unhele.
Houlate, l. 20.

Chaucer, id. misfortune; A.-S. un-helc, crux, tormentum; Moes.-G. unhailt, infirmitas, invaletudo; unhails, infirmus, invalidus, aegrotus; from un, negat. and hails, sanus.

UNHINE, UNHYNE, adj. 1. Extraordinary, unprecedented, unparalleled, in a bad sense, Aberd.

2. Expl. "immense, excessive," Moray; also generally used in a bad sense.

Perhaps, as A.-S. gehend signifies propet, nigh, from un-gehend, non propinquus, longinquus. Or shall we view it as formed, by prefixing the negative, from A.-S. hiwan, "familiaris, persons of the same family or household," (Somner); q. entire strangers.

UNHIT, part. pa. Not named.

Quha wald the, grete Cato, leif unhit?
Or quha with sylence Cossus pretermit?

Doug. Virgil, 185, 55.

V. HAT.

UNHONEST, adj. Dishonourable.

"He had na sicht to honest nor unhonest actionis, bot allanerly to his proffet." Bellend. Cron. B. xiii. c. 12.

Anciently, it would seem, that of a barber was viewed as a very mean occupation.

"Repellit fra passing up on ane assise,—all personis that ar of vile and unhonest office or vocatioun, as clenyar of drauchtis [Qu. sewers, as in E., or entrails as in S.?] schawer of bairdis." Balfour's Pract., p. 379.

2. Dishonest, Aberd.

"To have a special care that information be timeously made against every bishop, with the sure evidences thereof, anent—the purchasing of the bishopricks by bribes, their unhonest dealings in bargains, and abusing of their vassals." Spalding's Troubles, i. 82.

Lat. inhonest-us, Fr. inhoneste.

UNHONESTIE, s. Injustice; dishonesty; indecorous conduct.

"That he wald give na credite to ony man that wald murmure the saidis Lordeis, or ony of them, be doing of wrang and unhonestie." Acts Ja. VI., 1579, c. 92. Murray.

Murmure is evidently elliptical, for murmur against, or perhaps reproach.

UNICORN, s. The denomination of a gold coin, struck in S. in the reign of James III.; and thus designed as exhibiting a unicorn supporting a shield with the royal arms.

"Item, in unicornis nyne hundrethe & four score." Inventories, p. 1.

This had been the common designation of the coin. For in Aberd. Reg. mention is made of "ane unicorn gud & sufficient gold." A. 1538, &c., V. 16.

—"James III. introduced the unicorn holding the shield; the largest of these weighs 48 gr., the half in proportion." Cardonnell's Numism. Pref., p. 23.

UNICORN FISH. The name given by our seamen to a species of whale, [the narwhal].

"Monodon Monoceros. Linn.—Scot. Unicorn Fish." Dr. Walker's Essays on Nat. Hist., p. 527.

UNIRKIT, adj. Unwearied.

And the Eneadanis all of his menyis
Ithandly and unirkit luffit laue I.

Doug. Virgil, 479, 22.

UNITE, s. The designation of a gold coin of James VI.

"The piece No. 1. was first called the Units, on account of the union of the two kingdomis under one prince; they afterwards obtained the appellation of Jacobus's and Broad Pieces.—Their value was at 20 English shillings; afterwards they increased to 25, which was 12 pounds Scots." Cardonnel's Numism. Scot. Pref., p. 31.

[UNKALLOWED, part. adj. Uncalved, Orkn. Dan. un; and kalver, to calve.]

UNKENSOME, adj. Unknowable.

"A smith! a smith!" Dickie he cries,
"A smith, a smith, right speedilie,
To turn back the caukers of our horses shoon!
For its unkensome we wad be."

Minstrelsy Border, l. 198.

[UNKIRSEN, adj. Lit., not fit for a Christian; applied to food that is unfit for use, Shetl.]

UNKNAW, part. pa. Unknown.

We se ane strange man, of forme unknaw,
Ane leuar wycht na mare pynt I ne saw.

Doug. Virgil, 88, 21.

Leuar is here viewed as an error of a copyist for leuar, leaner. V. KNAW.

UNLATIT, part. pa. Undisciplined, destitute of proper breeding, so as to be unable to regulate one's conduct with propriety.

The unlatit woman the licht man will lair.
Fordun, ii. 376.

V. LAIT, v.

UNLAUCHFUL, adj. Unlawful.

"Against the unlauchful taking of profite be captaines and keepers of the Kingis castles." Ja. VI. 1581, c. 1. 25. Tit. Murray.

UNLAW, UNLACH, s. 1. Any transgression of the law, an injury or act of injustice.

"Seven termes could be observed;—the damage and skaith modified in ane certane quantitie, the words of the court in this maner in the end of the narratioun, 'Unjustlie, and against the law, with wouch, wrang and unlaw.'" Quon. Attach. c. 80.

"Na exception or defence could be challenged; nor the defender could be esteemed as not defending (as not comperand to defend) as lang as he or his preloquuntour defends tert and non reason, that is, wrang and unlach (that is, to have done na iniurie, nor vnreason agais the Law)."
1 Stat. Rob. I. c. 16. s. 1.

"Actiones of wrang and unlaw," says Skene, "appearis to be civil actiones, and ar opposed to actiones criminal, touching life and lim." De Verb. Sign. vo. Tort.

This seems to be the original sense of the term, from A.-S. unlaga, unlage, quod contra legem est, injustitia, iniquitas; from un, negat. and lage, law.

This word occurs, in the same sense, in O.E.

—Gif me dude him unlawe,
That to the byssop from ercedekne is apol solde make.
E. Glouc., p. 473.

"Injustice," Gl. Hearne.

2. A fine, or amerciamment, legally fixed and exacted from one who has transgressed the law.

On the justice him self loud can caw;
"Lat us to borch our men fra your fals law,
At leyfand ar, that chapyt fra your ayr.
Deyll nocht thar land, the unlaw is our sayr:
Thow had no rycht, that sall be on the seyne."

Wallace, vii. 436, MS.

"Quha as euer be conuict of slauchter of salmound, in tyme forbodin be the Law, he sall pay xl. S. for the unlaw." Acts Ja. I. 1424, c. 12. Edit. 1566.

A fine seems to have been called an unlaw, because thus a man paid or made satisfaction for his transgression of the law. In the same manner Su.-G. sak, which denotes a fault, guilt, is transferred to the penalty; multa, quae reatum sequitur; lre. It is also called sakoere, from oere, pecunia, q. guilt-money.

We learn from G. Andr., that, in the ancient Code of Isl. Laws, utlage and utlegd, occur in the same sense; in codice Legum antiquo, multa.

3. Used improperly, to denote a law which has no real authority.

"These cleared, that what the high commission had done to them was not only for righteousness, but that their sentences were evidently null, according to the bishop's unlaw." Bailie's Lett., i. 121.

To UNLAW, v. a. To fine.

"Gif ane Baxter, or ane Browster is unlawed for bread, for aill, na man sould meddle, or intromitt therewith, bot only the Provost of the towne." Burrow Lawes, c. 21, s. 1.

"In the action—for the unlauing of the said Alexr. Blare in the schiref court of Fife, the tyme that he wes at the scherif court of Perth," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1491, p. 164.

UNLEIF, adj. Unpleasant, ungrateful.

Ne, war not thay, thou suld me se alone,
Thus syttand in the are all we begone,
Sustenand thus al manere of mischeif,
And euery stres baith leifsum and unleif.

Doug. Virgil, 442, 4.

Digna, indigna, Virg. V. LEIF.

UNLEFULL, UNLEIFSUM, UNLESUM, adj. Unlawful, that cannot be permitted, S.

"Sic playis unlefull, & speciallie Cartis," &c. Aberd. Reg. V. BILIS.

Tell him, na lust to liffe langare selk I,
Unlesum war sic plesoure I set by.

Doug. Virgil, 367, 10.

Nec fas, Virg. V. LESUM.

UNLEIFSUMELYE, adv. Unwarrantably.

To know thair rewll they maid na diligence;
Unleifsumlye thay uit propertie,
Passing the boundis of willfull povertie.

Lyndsay's Dreame.

V. LESUM. Unlesumlie; Aberd. Reg.

UNLEILL, adj. Dishonest.

Sum part thair was of unleill laubouraris,
Craftsamen thair saw we out of number.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 234.

V. LEILL.

UNLIFE-LIKE, adj. Not having the appearance of living, or of recovery from disease, South of S.

"I see the chaps are living, an' no that unlife-like, as a body may say." Brownie of Bodsbeck, iii. 75. Q. not unlike life.

UNLUSSUM, adj. Unlovely.

And as this leid at the last liggand me seis,
With ane luke unlussum he lent me sic woundis:
Quhat berne be thou in bed with hede full of beis!

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, a. 23.

V. LURSUM.

Unlussum is still used, S. It is more emphatical than the E. unlovely. It does not merely imply that the object referred to is not attractive, but includes the idea of something repulsive or disgusting.

UNMENSEFU', UNMENCEFU', adj. 1. Unmannerly, S.A.

"Callants,—what's the meanin' o' a' this unmencefu' rampaging?" Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 116.

2. Without discretion or any thing like generosity. "He is a neetie unmensefu' body; he did not even offer me meat in his house;" Berwicks.

UNMODERLY, adj. Unkindly; or perhaps rather as an adv.

Thare-fore thai, that come to spy
That land, thaim dressyt unmoderly.

Wynlown, ii. 8, 72.

From un, negat. and A.-S. mothwaere, mild, meek.

[UNNER, pret. and adv. Under. Used also as a prefix; as, unnerlie, to lie under, S.]

To UNNEST, v. a. To dislodge.

—"The queen—like ane other Amasone, by her own example encourages the soldiers to be valorous, and to unnest from that hold the ancient enemies of their country." Memorie of the Somervills, i. 222.

UNOORAMENT, adj. Uncomfortable, unpleasant, Strathmore.

UNPAUNDED, part. adj. Unpledged.

—"Would it not have grieved them to see the subjects suffer by the relying upon unpaunderd trust?" Baillie's Lett., i. 42.

UNPLEYIT, part. adj. Not subjected to litigation by law.

"That all the sindri landis—of the quhilkie—king James—had in peccabill possessioun, sal abide & remayn with our said souerane lord that now is—as his fadir broukit thaim vndemandit and unpleyit of any man befor any juge—on to the tyme of his lauchful age." Parl. Ja. II., A. 1445, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 33. V. PLEY, v.

UNPRUDENCE, s. Imprudence.

"I drede that sumthing be done be unprudence or folie of my pepill." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 163.

UNPURPOSE, adj. Awkward, slovenly, inexact, untidy, Aberd.; q. not suited to the purpose ostensibly in view.

UNPURPOSELIKE, adj. Exhibiting the appearance of awkwardness, or of not being adapted to the use to which any thing is applied, S.

UNPUT, part. pa. Not put. Unput aside, not put out of the way, not secreted.

"They spoliyied what they could get unput aside; but finding little, they barbarously brought down beds, boards, ambries, and plenishing within the house." Spalding, i. 231.

VN-PUT-FURTH, part. pa. Not ejected.

"The tennentis, lauboraris, and inhabitantis [of] ony the said landis sall remane vn put furth or removit quhill the next terme of Witsonday folowand," &c. Acts Ja. IV., 1491, Ed. 1814, p. 225.

UNEPUT TO DEATH. Not executed.

"The said laird seing her maicstie in sic dolor and heaviness, advertised her, that he had saved the—Earle of Huntly uneput to death." Marioribanks' Ann., p. 16.

UNQUART, s. [Stupor, amasement.]

Than thair hors with thair hochis sic harmis couth hist,
As trasit in unquart quakand thai stand.

Gawan and Gol, iii. 1.

This may signify, "in sadness" or "dullness;" as conveying an idea the reverse of Quert, q. v.

UNRABOYTYT, part. pa. Not repulsed.

Unraboityt the Sothroun was in wer;

And fast thai cum fell awfull in offer.

Wallace, iii. 131, MS.

V. REBUT, v.

UNREABILLIT, part. pa. "Ane priestis unreabillit;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

The meaning seems to be, not legitimated, yet legally in a state of bastardy. V. REHABLE, REABILL.

UNREASON, UNRESSOUN, s. 1. Injustice, iniquity.

And that ye think unressoun, or wrang,

Wee al and sundrie sings the samin sang.

Priests of Pöblis, S. P. R., i. 7.

V. CHRESSOUN.

"Tort, et non reason, vn-reason, wrang, and vnlaw."

Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Tort.

This sense is perhaps derived from Fr. raison, which is used to signify justice. V. UNLAW.

2. Disorder.

It is used as corresponding to Misrule, in that title, The Abbot of Unreason. V. ABBOT.

UNREDE, UNRIDE, adj. Cruel, severe.

Her fader on a day,

Gaf hem landes wide;

Fer in that cuntray,

Markes were set biside;

Bituene the douke thai had ben ay,

And a geaunt unride.—

Belagog is unrede,

A stern geaunt is he.

Sir Tristram, p. 160, st. 33, 39.

"Unrighteous," Gl. But these terms seem to be derived from A.-S. un-ge-reod, un-ge-ridu, which both signify barbarous, cruel, rugged. On the latter Sommer says; "Hence our unrudy." Unryde elsewhere occurs in the same sense.

Schir Rannald raught to the renk and rout wes unryde.

Gawan and Gol, ii. 25.

It is also used by R. Brunne, p. 174.

—Fire the sailles threwa.

The stones were of Rynes, the noyse dreffulle & grete,

It affraied the Sarazins, as leuen the fire out schete.

The noyse was unride, it lasted alle day,

Fro morn till euentide, ther of had many affray.

Hearne mistakes the sense, rendering unrid, "continual," Gl. He has been misled by the words immediately connected,—it lasted, &c., whereas the phrase is synon. with noyse dreffulle & grete. [V. UNRIDE.]

UNREGRATED, part. adj. Unnoticed, untold.

"This man could not suffer the matter long to be unregrated to the king." Pitscottie, Ed. 1768, p. 251.

UNREGULAR, adj. Irregular, Aberd. 96

UNREST, s. 1. Trouble.

Bot feill tithingis oft ayris is brocht wa till,
Of ane Wallace was born in to the west :
Our Kingis men he haldis at gret unrest,
Martyris thaim down, grette peté is to se.
Wallace, iv. 276, MS.

Of Job I saw the patience maist degest,
—And of Antiochus the greit unrest,
How tyrannie he Jewrie all oprest.
Palace of Honour, iii. 32.

This word is used by Shakespeare.

Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest.
King Richard II.

2. A person or thing that causes disquietude.

"For our private matters in the college, this twelve-month we have been at peace, our unrest [Mr. P. Gillespie] being quieted." Baillie's Lett., p. 447.
Teut. on-raete, on-ruste, iniquities. V. UNREST.

UNREULFULL, adj. Ungovernable.

"Qubair thair is ony rebellouris or unreulfull men within castellis or fortalices haldin or resett,—that the lieutenant rais the cuntrie, and pas to sic housis, and arrest thair persounis." Parl. Ja. II., A. 1437, Ed. 1566, fol. 26.

[UNRICHT], adj. Unjust, dishonest, Clydes.]

UNRICHT, UNRYCHT, s. Injustice, iniquity; Wallace.

Dakis, Marquessis, Erlis, Barrounis, Knichtis,
With thay Princes war punceit panefully,
Participant thay war of thair unrichtis.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 232.

A.-S. un-richt, Teut. on-recht, injustitia, injuria.

UNRUDE, adj. "Rude, hideous, horrible;" Rudd. But as the term corresponds to ater and coenus, it must certainly signify, vile, impure.

All the midway is wildernes vnplane,
Or wilsum forrest, and the laithlie flude,
Coeytus with his drery bosom unrude,
Floris enuiron round about that place.
Doug. Virgil, 167, 35. Atro, Virg.

Fra thine strekis the way profound anone,
Depe vnto hellis flude of Acherone,
With boll bisme, and hidduous sweith unrude,
Dramly of mude, and skaldand as it war wode.
Ibid., 173, 37. Coeno, Virg.

Farth haue thay rent thare entrellys ful unrude.
Ibid., 455, 50.

This term is still used in Ayra., and expl. "Base, vile, diabolical; detestable;" as, "unrude bleeries," abominable falsehoods.

In O. E. it occurs in a moral sense, as nearly the same with the modern adj. Worthless.

"Here's an unthankfull spitefull wretch! the good gentleman vouchsaft to make him his companion (because my husband put him into a few rags), and now see, how the unrude rascal backbites him!" Ben. Jonson's Works, i. 120.

Perhaps originally the same with UNREDE, q. v.

Teut. on-raed, Germ. un-rat, sordes, immundities.

UNRUFE, s. Trouble, toil, vexation.

I leid my life in this land with mekle unrufe,
Baith tyde and tyme in all my traunle.

Rauf Coilyear, Alij, b.

Germ. warufe, Su.-G. oero, Teut. on-roeuwe, inquires, on-recrigt, inquisitus.

UNRUNNINYN, part. pa. Not run, not expired.

—"The said Alexr. sall obserue & kepe to the said David as are to his fader the tak of the said landis & fischingis—for so many tymes now to cum as was unrunnyn of the xix yeris the tyme of the decess of vmquhile the said George." Act. Audit., A. 1474, p. 37.

UNSALL, adj. Wretched. V. UNSEL.

UNSAUCHT, UNSAUGHT, adj. Disturbed, troubled, disordered.

Than thai schupe for to assege segis unsaught.
Gawan and Gol., ii. 12.

—This Corinens als fast
Ruschit on his fa, thus fyre fangit and unsaucht,
And with his left hand by the hare him clauncht.
Doug. Virgil, 419, 24.

Teut. on-saecht, durus, asper, rudis, is evidently allied. V. SAUCHT, adj.

UNSAUCHT, s. Dispeace, trouble, inquietude, S. B.

A.-S. un-sacht, un-reht, discordia, inimicitia; Su.-G. osacht, id. o, negat. being used instead of A.-S. un. Insaaga, strife, contention, although nearly of the same meaning, seems to be radically different. Ihre derives it from in and sak, strife.

To UNSCHET, v. a. To open, vnsethet, pret. shut.

Ye Musis now, sueit goddessis ichone,
Opin and vnsethet your mont of Helicone.
Doug. Virgil, 230, 51.

—Fresche Aurora, to mychty Tithone spous,— Unsethet the wyndoils of hir large hall.
Ibid. 399, 22.

V. SCHETE.

UNSEY'D, part. adj. Not tried, S.

"A' things are good unsey'd," Prov. Ferguson, p. 7. V. SEY, v.

UNSEL, UNSALL, UNSILLY, adj. 1. Unhappy, wretched.

Of Sathans senyie sure sic an unsall menyie
Within this land was never hard nor sene.
Dunbar, Evergreen, l. 106.

It is unusual, Bannatyne Poems, p. 45.

This may, however, signify, unhallowed, as it is expl. by Lord Hailes. V. sense 2.

Vnsilly wicht, how did thy mind inuaid
Sa grete wodnes!—
Doug. Virgil, 143, 22.

A.-S. un-ge-saelg, un-saelig, infelix, infaustus, Teut. on-saelig, Alem. unsalih, id. Ihre views Su.-G. usel, infelix, pauper, as formed from o or u, privative, and sael, beatus. Isl. usell, pauper.

2. Naughty, worthless.

Little angry attercap, and auld unsel ape,
Ye grein for to gape upon the grey meir.
Montgonerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 5.

Somner expl. A.-S. un-ge-saelig as also signifying improbus, naughty. Moea.-G. sel, bonus, unsel, malus. Augu unsel, an evil eye, Matt. vi. 33. Alem. saligen and unsaligen, in like manner, denote the righteous and the wicked. There is no reason to doubt that A.-S. saelig, felix, sael, prosperitas, have had the same origin with Moea.-G. sel, bonus. For, as Ihre observes, goodness and felicity have so many things in common, that they are fitly expressed in most languages, by common terms.

UNSELE, UNSELL, s. 1. Mischance, misfortune.

And sum, that war with in the pele,
War ischy, on thair awne unsele,
To wyn the herwyat ner tharby.

Barbour, x. 218, MS.

A.-S. un-sælk, infelicitas, infortunium.

2. A wicked or worthless person, a wretch.

I can thame call but kittle unsellis,
That takkis sic maneris at thair motheris,
To bid men keip thair secret counsaillis,
Syne schaw the same againe till uthiris.

Scott, Bannatyne Poems, p. 207.

The King of Pharie and his court, with the Elf Queen,
With many elfish Incubus, was ridland that night.
There an Elf on an ape an Unsel begat.

Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 12.

The term, in this sense, is very ancient; Moes.-G. unsel, evil, wickedness. V. SEILE.

The term unsell is still used in Dumfries-shire. Scoury unsell is a contemptuous designation applied to a child, by one who is in a bad humour.

The provincial E. word Unsel is evidently the same. It is thus expl. by Mr. Thoresby: "A title of reproach, sometimes applied (as by Mr. Garbut, in his Demonstration of the Resurrection of Christ) to the Devil." Ray's Lett., p. 334.

UNSELLYEABLE, adj. Unassailable.

Off Scotland the weir-wall, wit ye but wene,
Our fais forses to defend, and unselyeable;
Baith harmeking and bar to Scottis blud bene,
Our lofes, and our liking, that lyne honorable.

Houlate, ii. 6, MS.

UNSENSIBLE, adj. Destitute of the exercise of reason, S.

"The poor lad was not so unsensible, but he knew to do his bidding.—No that he's unsensible, except when a notion takes him." Discipline, iii. 26.

UNSETT, s. An attack, for onset.

Mony debatis and unsettis we haue done.

Doug. Virgil, 52, 21.

UNSETTING, part. adj. Not becoming.

"In no calling vnder the sun, we should do any thing that is unsettling, or vnseemlie to this christian calling: but all our actiones should be ruled conforme to it." Rollock on 1 The., p. 183. V. SET, v. 3.

UNSIKKIR, UNSICKER, adj. 1. Not secure, not safe.

Thair standis into the sicht of Troy an ile,—
Ane rade unsikkir for schip and ballingere.

Doug. Virgil, 39, 22.

2. Unsteady, S.

Dame Life, tho' fiction out may trick her,
Oh! flickering, feeble, and unwicker
I've found her still.

Burns, iv. 391.

V. SIKKIR.

UNSILLY, adj. Unhappy. V. UNSEL.

UNSKAITHED, part. adj. Unhurt, S.

A literary friend inquires; "Is there any connexion between this word and Gr. ἀσχηθ-ης?" I shall answer his query in the language of Ihre, with whose judgment he unconsciously coincides. In illustrating Su.-G.

askul-a, nocere, having observed that Wachter traces this word to Gr. ἄστυ δαμννν, he adds; Quod vero aliqua propiore notione nostram vocem attigerit Graecismus, mihi videtur concludere posse ex ἀσχηθ-ης, quod Scholiastes Homeri interpretatur illaesum, ἀσφαλής.

UNSNARRE, adj. Blunt, not sharp, S.B. V. SNARRE.

To UNSNECK, v. a. To lift a latch, S.

Tip-tae she tript it o'er the floor;
She drew the bar, unsneck'd the door.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., ii. 339.

[UNSNICKIT, adj.] Not fastened, Clydes Loth.]

UNSNED, part. pa. Not pruned or cut, S.

UNSONSIE, adj. 1. Unlucky, S.

Mony a ane had gotten his death
By this unsonsie tooly.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 239.

"The unsonsie fish gets the unlucky bait;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 69.

2. Causing ill luck, fatal; as applied to the supposed influence of witchcraft, S.

"An old man, remembered in Nithsdale, had een of such unsonsie glance, that they blasted the first born of his yearly flocks, and spoiled his dairy.—The wise and discerning people, instead of flying in the face of the 'Unsonsie Cartin,' pay her tribute in secret to avert her glamour. A goan of new milk was a bribe for the hyre; new meal, when the corn was ground, and a dish full of groats, compounded for the crops." Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 288, 289.

3. Dreary, suggesting the idea of goblins, S.

"It will be past sun-set after I get back frae the Captain's, and at these unsonsie hours the glen has a bad name—there's something no that canny about auld Janet Gellatley." Waverley, iii. 282.

4. Mischievous, S. V. SONSY.

He leugh, and with unsonsie jest,
Cry'd, "Nibour, I'm right blyth in mind,
That in good tift my bow I find:
Did not my arrow flie right smart!
Ye'll find it sticking in your heart."

Ramsay's Poems, i. 146.

"Unsauncy is unluckie, or not fortunate;" Clav. Yorks.

UNSOPITED, part. pa. Not stilled, not entirely quashed.

—"The best and surest method to beget and maintain friendship to their Queen from her Cousin of England, after so late and as yet unsopited jara, was to suffer the affair of succession to ly quiet and undisturbed, until such time as a mutual amity and confidence had been created by kindly offices and intercourse of letters." Keith's Hist., p. 166. V. SOPITE.

UNSOUND, s. [A pang.]

Quhill this querrell be quyt I cover never in quert—
Was never sa unsound set to my heart.

Gawan and Gol, ii. 22.

Teut. on-ghe-sonde, morbus; Kilian.

UNSPERKIT, adj. Not bespattered, Ettr. For.

"I—begoude to keep sklenderie houpees of winning out of myne ravelled lank unsperkyt with schame or disgrace." Wint. Ev. Tales, ii. 41. V. SPARK, v.

UNSPOILYED, part. pa. Without being subjected to spoliation.

"The marquis of Huntly—resolved suddenly to take the best course for himself, to save his honour, his house unspoilyed, and his friends and servants un-plundered." Spalding's Troubles, i. 125.

Lat. unspoliatus. V. SPULAE.

UNSPOKEN WATER. Water from under a bridge, over which the living pass and the dead are carried, brought in the dawn or twilight to the house of a sick person, without the bearer's speaking either in going or returning, Aberd.

The modes of application are various. Sometimes the invalid takes three draughts of it before any thing is spoken; sometimes it is thrown over the house, the vessel in which it was contained being thrown after it. The superstitious believe this to be one of the most powerful charms that can be employed for restoring a sick person to health.

The purifying virtue attributed to water, by almost all nations, is so well known as to require no illustration. Some special virtue has still been ascribed to silence in the use of charms, exorcisms, &c. I recollect being assured by an intelligent person in Angus, that a Popish priest in that part of the country, who was supposed to possess great power in curing those who were deranged, and in exorcising demoniacs would, if called to see a patient, on no account utter a single word on his way, or after arriving at the house, till he had by himself gone through all his appropriate forms in order to effect a cure. Whether this practice might be founded on our Lord's injunction to the Seventy, expressive of the diligence he required, Luke x. 4, "Salute no man by the way," or borrowed from heathen superstition, it is impossible to ascertain. We certainly know that the Romans viewed silence as of the utmost importance in their sacred rites. Hence the phrase of Virgil;

Fida silentia sacris.

And the language of Ovid;

*Ore tacent populi tunc, cum venit aures pompa :
Ipsa sacerdotes subsequiturque suas.*

Amor., Lib. iii. Eleg. 13.

Favere sacris, favere linguis, and pascere linguam, were forms of speech appropriated to their sacred rites, by which they enjoined silence, that the act of worship might not be disturbed by the slightest noise or murmur. Hence also they honoured Harpocrates as the god of silence; and Numa instituted the worship of a goddess under the name of Tacita. V. Stuck. Sacr. Gentil., p. 121. V. also To SING DUMB.

UNSUSPECT, part. adj. Not suspected, or not liable to suspicion. "Ane famous unsuspect assiss;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1538.

UNSWACK, adj. Stiff, not agile, Aberd.

My feet were swell'd maist out of size;
Yet I gade o'er nae that unswack.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 6.

V. SWACK.

UNTELLABYLL, UNTELLIBYLL, adj. Unspeakable, what cannot be told.

"Their followit yit ane cruell and terrybyll bargane with untellabyll murdir." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 44. a, b.

—Thy desir, Lady, is Renewing of untellybill sorrow, I wys.

Doug. Virgil, 33, 36

Infandum, Virg.

The A.-Saxons used untellandlic as signifying innumerable; Chron. Sax. A. 1043.

UNTELLABLY, adv. Ineffably.

The fader then Euander, as they departs,
By the rycht hand thaym grippit with sad hart,
His sone embrasing, and ful tenderly
Apoun him hyngis, wepand untellably.

Doug. Virgil, 262, 47.

UNTELLIN, UNTELLING, adj. That cannot be told; chiefly applied to number, as denoting what cannot be counted, Roxb.

"There was first Murray of Glenvath; why, it was untelling what land that man possessed." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 315.

Contracted perhaps from A.-S. intellendlic, inexorabilis, ineffabilis.

UNTENDED, part. pa. Not watched over, not tented.

Leave untented the herd,

The flock without shelter, &c.

Sir W. Scott's Pibroch of Donald Dhu.

UNTENTY, adj. Inattentive, not watchful, S.

"The cursed Highland salvages," muttered the captain, half aloud, "what is to become of me, if Gustavus the namesake of the invincible Lion of the Protestant league, should be lamed among their untenty hands!" Leg. Montr. Tales, 3d ser., iv. 25.

UNTHINKABILL, adj. Inconceivable, what cannot be thought.

With hart it is unthinkabill,

And with tounis unpronounciabil.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 175.

UNTHIRLIT, part. adj. Not astricted.

"They clomit never thir landis as lang as Coriolos stude fre and unthirlit to Romania." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 309.

UNTHOCHT. To haud one unthocht lang, to keep one from wearying. It seems equivalent to the phrase still used, S. to haud one out of langer.

She's ta'en her till hir mither's bower,

As fast as she could gang;

And she's ta'en twa o' her mither's Marys,

To haud her unthocht lang.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., ii. 131.

V. also p. 130.

It seems to be merely, without thinking long; un being used as a negative. Teut. ondeuchtigh, however, is rendered, Curae et timoris expers; Kilian.

He ta'en his harp intil his hand,

He harpit and he sang;

And ay as he harpit to the king,

To haud him unthought lang.

Glenkindy, A. Laing's Thistle of Scot., p. 32.

V. To Think lang, under Lang, adj.

UNTHOLEABLE, adj. Intolerable, S. V. THOLE, v.

UNTHRIFT, s. Wastefulness.

"Many one blames their wife for their own unthrift," S. Prov. "I never saw a Scottish woman who had not this at her fingers' ends." Kelly, p. 250.

Unthrift is used in E., but for an extravagant person. Johna. thinks it probable that the E. v. to thrice is from Isl. thro-a, to increase. But it is more immediately allied to thrif-az, proficere, bene valere, and thrif-a, curare; whence thrif, bona fortuna, also diligentia domestica, our thrift. In Su.-G. the v. assumes the form of trifw-as, and is used in the same sense.

UNTHRIFTY, adj. Unfriendly, hostile to the prosperity of another.

Quhat wyld dotage sa maid your hedis raif?
Or quhat unthriftly God in sic foly
Has you bewaifit here to Italy!

Doug. Virgil, 299, 3.

V. THRIFT.

UNTIDY, adj. Not neat, not trim; applied, not to the quality of the clothes, but especially to the mode of putting them on, S.

UNTIDILIE, adv. Not neatly, awkwardly; as, "That's most untidily done;" or, "She was very untidily dressed," S.

Untydily, unhandisomely, not neatly, O. E. "I bungyll, or do a thyng untydily, or lyke an yuell workman;" Palagr., B. iii. F. 78, b.

UNTILL, prep. Unto. V. SKAIR.

UNTIMEOUS, adj. Untimely, unseasonable, S. V. TIMEOUS.

UNTINT, UNTYNT, part. pa. Not lost.

The riall child Ascanens full sone, —

— giftis sere

Turris with him of thl auld Troiane gere,

Quhilk fra the storme of the sey is left untynt.

Doug. Virgil, 34, 38.

V. TYNE.

UNTO. Used in the sense of untill.

"For unto he proue that he defendes that same caus quhilk S. Stephan did defend, and tholit deith for, he will neuer caus me to beleue nor grant that other his followers of Edinburgh be lyk the faithfull of Hierusalem, or thair calamities, quhilk thay sustenit throch his departing, lyk to the affliction of the faithfull of Hierusalem efter the death of Stephan." J. Tyrie's Refutation, Pref. 6.

"There is speciall allowance grantit to the said Eustachius—fra the tyme that he sall enter to the bigging of the pannis unto the four compleit pannis be furneist daylie." Acts Ja. VI., 1589, Ed. 1814, p. 183.

UNTRAIST, adj. Unexpected.

"That he mycht be untraist suddante the more cruelte exerce, he maid his army reddy to inuade the Scottis on the nixt morrow." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 8. a.

— Ilk court bin untraist and transitorie,
Changing as oft as weddercock in wind.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 198.

V. TRAIST, adj.

UNTRETABYLL, adj. "That cannot be intreated, inexorable;" Rudd.

Happy war he knew the cause of all thingis,
And settis on syde all drede and cure, quod he,
Vnder his feit that tredis and down thingis
Chancis untretabill of fatis and destiny.

Doug. Virgil, Prol., 160, 26.

Properly, unmanageable, untractable; Lat. intractabilis. V. TRETABYL.

VOL. IV.

UNTRIG, adj. Not trim, slovenly, S.

"It was noticed,—that his cleeding was growing bare, and that his wife kept an untrig house." Annals of the Parish, p. 160. V. TRIG.

UNTROWABILL, adj. Incredible.

— Quhilk till descryue I am nocht abill,
Quhose number bene so untrowabill.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 71.

V. TROW, v.

[UNTYNT, part. pa. V. UNTINT.]

UNVICIAT, part. adj. Productive, not deficient.

—"Resolucioun is takin, that hir Maiestie, and hir chaimerlane in hir name, sall have full and reall possession of the said lordschip of Dumfermling, and as mony of the rentis & fruitis thair of as thar presentie frie and unviciat." Acts Ja. VI., 1593, Ed. 1814, p. 25. V. VICIAT.

UNWAR, UNWER, adj. or adv. Unwary; or unawares.

Ane fule he was, and wittles in ane thing;
Persan't not Turnus Rutuliane King
So violentlie thring in at the yet,
Quham he unwar within the ciety schet.

Doug. Virgil, 304, 12.

Les sche unwar bat caus hir deith puruayit,
Hir list na thyng behynd leif vnassayit.

Ibid. 114, 21.

A.-S. unwar, unwaer, unwer, incantus. The Su.-G. seems to supply us with the root. For war, Isl. var, cantus, is from war-a, videre. Thus war properly respects circumspection; videns, qui rem quandam videt.

UNWARYIT, part. pa. Not accursed.

Than wod for wo so was I quite unwaryit,
That nothir God nor man I left unwaryit.

Doug. Virgil, 63, 21.

V. WARY.

UNWARNYST, part. pa. Not warned, S. Unwarnistly, without previous warning.

Thay tho assemblit to the fray in hy.

And flokkis furth rycht fast unwarnistly.

Doug. Virgil, 225, 13.

Improvisi, Virg. V. WARNIS.

[UNWAUKIT, adj. Not felled, S.]

UNWEEL, adj. 1. Ailing, S.

"Dinna tell me of your son's illness, Maunse! Had he been sincerely unweel, ye would hae been at the Tower wi' daylight to get something that wad do him gude." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 146.

Mr. Todd has adopted Unweel as an E. word in this sense.

2. Sickly, of an ailing constitution, S.

UNWEMMYT, part. adj. Unspotted, unstained. [Unscarred, Barbour, xx. 372.]

Thou take mankynd of ane unwemmyt Mail,
Inclosit within ane Virginis bosum glaid.

Doug. Virgil, Prol., 310, 2.

A.-S. un-wæmme, un-wæmmet, immaculatus, & temeratus. Maria un-wæmme; Maria immaculata; Cod. Exon. ap. Lye. V. WEMELES, synon.

UNWERD, s. Sad fate, misfortune, ruin, S. Rudd.

A.-S. un-wyrd, infortunium. V. WERD.

N 4

UNWINNABLE, UNWYNNABILL, adj. Impregnable.

"This crag is callit the Bas unwynnabill be ingyne of man." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 9. Inexpugnabile, Boeth.

"There were some shots shot at the house, and some from the house, but the assailants finding the place unwinnable, by nature of great strength, without great skaith, left the place without mickle loss on either side." Spalding, i. 228.

This is nearly allied to A.-S. un-winnan, invincibilis; from winn-an, vincere.

UNWINNE, adj. Unpleasant.

The leuedi of heighe kenne,
His woundis schewe sche lete;
To wite his wo unwinnne,
So grimly he can grete.

Sir Tristrem, p. 78, st. 11.

A.-S. un-winum, injucundus, inamoenus, asper. V. WIN.

UNWOLLIT, part. adj. Without wool, having the wool taken off.

"Small un wollit skynnis, sic as hoyg [hog] schorlingis, scadlingis & futfaill." Aberd. Reg., A. 1538, V. 16.

UNWROKIN, part. pa. Unrevenged.

And sayand this, hir mouth fast thristis sche
Doun in the bed: Unwrokin sall we de?

Doug. Virgil, 123, 17.

Inultae, Virg.

A.-S. un-wrecen, inultus; from un, negat. and wrecen, ulcisci, wreog-an, id. V. WRAIK, WROIK.

UNYEMENT, s. Ointment.

"Quhen Schir James Douglas was chosyn as maist worthy of all Scotland to pas with Kyng Robertis hart to the haly land, he put it in ane cais of gold with aromitike and precious unyementis." Bellend. Cron., B. xv., c. 1. Lat. unguent-um.

"The unyementis & drogareis that our forbearis usit mycht not cure the new maledyis." Ibid. Fol. 17, b.

UP, adv. 1. Denoting the state of being open. "Set up the door," open the door, S.

Sa.-G. upp, id. Denotat quamvis aperturam: Lota upp doerren, portam aperire; Ihre. This learned writer observes, that in this sense it has no affinity to upp, denoting motion towards a higher place, but is allied to offen, oepen, apertus, E. open. Germ. auf is used in the same sense. V. To. Some view Isl. op, the same with Gr. ἐν, foramen, as the radical term.

[2. Out of bed; risen; as, "I've been up twa hours," S.]

3. Used to denote the vacation of a court, or rising of a meeting of any kind. The Session is up; the Court of Session is not meeting at present, S.

"The Duke said—that when he spoke, all men being upon their feet, and out of their places, he conceiv'd the house had been up." Clarendon's Hist. B. 4, p. 408.

This is an ellipsis, signifying that the members have risen up, that the meeting has broken up; or, it conveys the idea of openness, as in sense 1; a court being sometimes said to sit down, and at other times to be enclosed. [V. TYLE, v.]

[4. Over, ended, completed; implying failure, loss, adverse decision, &c.; as, "It's a' up wi' him now," S.]

5. Often used as a s. Ups and Downs, changes, vicissitudes, alternations of prosperity and adversity, S.

"It was the observe and saying of several solid Christians, especially Mr. John Dick,—that he had always had many ups and downs in his case, warm blinks and clouds, but especially from the time that he took the wrong end of that plea, in pleading in favour of the Indulgence." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 148.

I've told you how a gospel church
Was first brought to our nation,
And touched at her ups and downs,
E'en since her first foundation.

Scotland's Glory and Shame, p. 2.

NEITHER UP NOR DOUN. In the same state, without any discernible difference, S.

UP-BY, UP-BYE, adv. 1. Applied to an object at some little distance, to which one must approach by ascending, S.

Up-by the lambie's lying yonder styth.

Ross's Helenore, p. 15.

"Frank Kennedy will shew you the penalties in the act, and ye ken yoursell they used to put their run goods into the auld Place of Ellangowan up bye there." Guy Mannering.

"O, woman, we've been ta'en up wi' Captain Hector's wound up bye, that I have na had my fit out ower the door this fortnight." Antiquary, ii. 278.

"Up-bye, a little way higher on;" Gl. Antiq.

2. To come up by, to approach, as giving the idea of ascent, or to come above others, S.

UP wi'. Even with, quit with; often used when one threatens retaliation; as, "I'se be up wi' him for that," S.

A metaph. or borrowed sense, from the hope entertained, or the exertions made, by one who has fallen behind in a journey, to overtake the person who has got before him.

UP-A-LAND, adj. "At a distance from the sea, in the country; rustic;" Gl. Sibb. V. UPLANDS.

To UP-BANG, v. a. To force to rise, especially by bearing.

By sting and ling they did up-bang her,
And bare her down between them.

To Duncan's burn.—

Mare of Collington, Watson's Coll., i. 48.

i. e., They forced her to get upon her feet, partly by beating, and partly by raising her by means of a rope. V. BANG; also STING and LING.

To UPBIG, WPBIG, v. a. 1. To build up, Aberd. Reg.

2. To rebuild.

—"Thairfoir the saids Lordis ordanis all parochie kirkis within this realme quhilkis ar decayit and fallen downe, to be reparit and upbiggit; and quhair thai ar raynous and faltie, to be mendit." Sedl. Stirling, A. 1553, Keith's Hist., p. 426.

Sw. upbygg-a, to build up.

3. Filled with high apprehension of one's self, S.

To UPBRED, v. a. To set in order; to upbred burdis, to set tables in order for a meal.

All thus thay move to the meit : and the Marschale
Gart bring watter to wesche, of a well cleir :
That was the Falcone so fair, frely but faile
Bad bernis burdis upbred, with a blyth chere.

Houlate, iii. 4.

V. BRAID up the burde.

[UPBRING, UPBRINGIN, s. Education; training; board and lodging till a child comes of age; also, the cost of them, S.]

To UP-BULLER, v. a. To boil or throw up. V. BULLER, v.

[To UPCASt, v. a. and n. To turn over, to taunt, Clydes., Banffs.]

UPCAST, s. Taunt, reproach, S.

With blyth upcast and merry countenance,
The elder sister then speird at her gest,
Gif that scho thocht be reson diffurance
Betwixt that chalmere and her sary nest.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 150.

"This did never occasion bitter reflections, or was their upcast before the world, that they trusted God in a day of strait and were not helped." Flemming's Fulfilling, p. 29. V. CAST UP, v.

2. The state of being overturned, S. A.

"What wi' the upcast and terror that I got a wee while syne, and what wi' the bit taste that I behoved to take or the bit plottie while I was making it, my head is sair enough stressed the night already." St. Roman, iii. 43.

UPCASTING, s. The rising of clouds above the horizon, especially as threatening rain, S. In this sense it is also said, It's beginning to cast up, i.e., The sky begins to be overcast, E.

UPCOIL, s. A kind of game with balls.

And now in May to madynnis fawis,
With tymmer wechtis to trip in ringis,
And to play upcoil with the bawis.

Scott, Evergreen, ii. 186, MS.

This seems to refer to the ancient customs of tossing up different balls into the air, and catching them before they reached the ground. V. Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 132.

UPCOME, VPCOME, s. [1. Way up; lit., up-coming, Barbour, vi. 167.]

2. Promising appearance, ground of expectation as to the future; the idea being probably borrowed from the first appearance of the braird, or blade after sowing.

"The King on a time was discoursing at table of the personages of men, and by all mens confession the prerogative was adjudged to the Earle of Angus. A courtier that was by (one Spense of Kilspindie), whether out of envie to hear him so praised, or of his idle humour onely, cast in a word of doubting and disparaging. It is true, said he, if all be good that is up-come; meaning if his action and valour were answerable to his personage and body." Hume's Hist. Douglas, p. 235.

3. Advancement in stature, bodily growth, S.

"I hae nae doubt o' his abilities, for he promises fair according to his upcome." Campbell, i. 27.

A.-S. up-cyme, up-cumyng; ortus; a springing or coming up; Sommer. Isl. upkomid, proditum est.

To UPDAW, v. n. To dawn.

Thus draif thair our that deir nicht with daunting [and chere];
Quhill that the day did updaw.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 63.

Belg. op-daag-en, to rise, to appear, is given by Sewel, as a compound term from daag-en, to dawn. V. DAW, c.

UPDORROK, adj. Worn out, Shetl.; from Isl. upp, and throk-a, also, thrug-a, urgere, premere. Throk-a is also expl. Aegre se continere, sustentare; Haldorson.

UP-DRINKING, s. An entertainment given to gossips after the recovery of a female from child-bearing, Perth. V. VP-SITTING.

"At the feast given on my mother's recovery, which in that part of the country was termed the up-drinking, it was discussed in full divan, whether I should arrive at my dignity in the church or in the army." Campbell, i. 13.

Evidently from the circumstance of the mother being able to get up or out of bed. This in Angus is, for the same reason, called the fit- or foot-ale.

[UPFESS, v. and s. Same with Upbring, Banffs.

UP-FUIRDAYS. Up before sunrise, Roxb. V. FURE-DAYS.

UPGAE, s. An interruption or break in a mineral stratum, which holds its direction upwards.

"Some again making their rise much more than their course,—they call up-gaes." Sinclair's Misc. Obs. Hydrost., p. 278.

UPGANG, s. 1. An ascent, an acclivity.

Bot his horse, that wes born down,
Combryt thaim the upgang to ta.

Barbour, vi. 141, MS.

On the south half, quhar James was,
Is ane upgang, a narrow pass.

Ibid. viii. 33, MS.

2. The act of ascending, S.

"Maybe we will win there the night yet,—though our minny here's rather dreigh in the upgang." Heart M. Loth., iii. 88.

3. A sudden increase of wind and sea; generally applied to the weather, Shetl.

A.-S. up-gang, ascensus; up-gang-an, sursum ire, ascendere.

UPGASTANG, s. A species of loom anciently used in Orkney. V. VADMELL.

UPGESTRY, OPGESTERY, OPGESTRIE, s.

A custom, according to which an udaller may transfer his property, on condition of receiving a sustenance for life.

"There was a law in Shetland empowering possessors of udal lands with the consent of their heirs, to dispose of their patrimony to any person who would undertake their support for life. Whence the law, by which estates could be alienated from the udal-born for such a purpose, was named the custom of opgestery." Hibbert's Shetl. Isl., p. 331.

"I the said Freia [Rasmusdochter] and my husband Ingillbrycht Nickellkoin [r. sone], grantis us weill content—for our guid will and overgom of our said mother, to the said Wm. and his airis for now and ever, and that of opgestrie, be virtue off ane lawdabill custome and form of the cuntrye of opgesterie," &c. Deed, A. 1602, ibid., p. 312.

OPGESTER, s. The name given to the person received for permanent support, according to this custom, ibid.

"Such disponers were then received into the house of their maintainer under the name of his opgesters." Hibbert, p. 311.

"I the said Freia—am become lawfull opgesters to the said Wm. to be sustenitt in meat and claith all the days of my lyfetyne," &c. Deed ubi sup.

It would seem that g had been pronounced hard, as the word is obviously compounded of the particle up and Isl. gest-ur, giaest-ur, Su.-G. garst, Dan. giest, &c., hospes, q. one received as a guest; or from Teut. gasterije, hospitium, q. reception to the enjoyment of hospitality.

To UPGIF, v. a. To deliver up; an old forensic term.

"The lordis—decretis—that the said Williame erle of Errole sall frely upgif & restore agane to the said Henri all & hale the said landis of Mekle Arnage," &c. Act. Audit. A. 1438, p. 126.

"The said erle sall frely upgif the said landis with the pertinentis & charteris tharof." Ibid. A. 1491, p. 153.

UPGIVER, VPGEVAR, s. One who delivers up to another.

"And sall caus the pairties vpgevaris of the saidis inventoures everie pairtis subscrivye his awin inventar him self gif he can wreate." Acts Ja. VI. 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 599.

UPGIVING, s. The act of giving and delivering up.

"—They subscribed rolls of the tenths given up by every subscriber, as they who had commission to receive and see the upgiving of the same, but commissary Farquhar took up the payment." Spalding, i. 259.

Teut. op-gev-en, trailer, Sw. upgifv-a, to deliver up.

To UPHALD, UPHAUD, v. a. 1. To support, to maintain, to make provision for.

"We believe it is weall knowne till all your Wisdoms, how that we uphald an altar situate within the Colledge Kirk of St. Giles, in the honour of God and St. Mango our Patrone." Seal of Cause, A. 1505, Blue Blanket, p. 53.

2. To warrant; as, to uphadd a horse sound, to warrant him free of defect, S. uphowd, id. A. Bor.

3. To furnish horses on a road for a mail, stage, or diligence, S.

"It's Jamie Martingale, that furnishes the naigs on contract, and uphadds them,—and I am not entitled to make any stop, or to suffer prejudice by the like of these accidents." Antiquary, i. 18.

To UPHAUD, v. n. To affirm, to maintain, S.

"Sae ye *uphau*d ye hail nae particulars to say to my lord but about your ain matters." Antiquary, ii. 334.

The E. v. Uphold, is not, as far as I have observed, used in this sense. It is indeed a metaph. or secondary sense borrowed from the custom of pledging one's self to support or maintain an assertion at the expence of life and limb. It resembles Maintain, q. manu tenere.

UPHALD, UPHAUD, UPHADIN, s. 1. Support, sustentation, S. uphadd.

"Yit my hart feiring to displeis yow, as meikle in the reiding heirof, as I delite me in the writing, I will mak end, efter that I haue kissit your handis with als greit affection as I pray God (O the only uphald of my lufe) to giue yow lang and blissit lyfe, and to me your good fauour as the only gude that I desyre, and to the quhilk I pretend." Buchanan's Detect. Q. Mary, Lett. II., 3. a.

"The gentles tak a bantil uphadin." H. Blyd's Contract, p. 7.

"The said princesse—has—assignit to the said Schir Alexander to the uphald of our said soueryn lord and his sistris in the forsaid castel to his said age iiij^m markis of the vauale mone of Scotlande, the whilki war assignit to hir be the said thre estatis and for the same caus." Acts Ja. II., A. 1439, Ed. 1814, p. 54.

2. The act of upholding a building, so as to prevent its falling to decay, by giving it necessary repairs; or the obligation to do so; S. Uphaud.

"Quhair the hail tenement eftir it be biggit be set in few within the auale thair of [i.e., under the proper rent,] for the uphald of the samin, and beis brint, gif the fewar may be compellit to big the samin vpon his awin expensis or not?" Acts Mary, 1555, Ed. 1814, p. 490.

"—The principall—regentis &c. hes evir bene in vse & costome to remane within the said citey of the auld town of Aberdene, and to sit and hald the consistorie and college thairin—as priuilegis, immunitis and uphaldis of the said citey, and quhair of it hes bene in possessione, and thairwith uphaldin, now and in all tymes bygane." Acts Ja. VI., 1597, Ed. 1814, p. 154.

Su.-G. uppehaelle, alimonia; Isl. upheldde, sustentatio, sustentaculum, victualia. The term is used, S. for means of bodily support, or as denoting a person who supports another in this respect.

UPHALIE DAY, VPHALY DAY. The first day after the termination of the Christmas holidays.

"That lettrez be writtin—to charge thaim to tak the said preif before thaim the morne eftir Vphalyday," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1494, p. 206. V. GKRTH, sense 3. It is written Ouphalliday, Aberd. Reg. "Betuix this & Ouphalliday, nixt to cum." A. 1541, V. 17.

To UPHAUE, v. a. Apparently, to heave up. "To uphaue the sentrice of the brig;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1521, V. 11.

A.-S. up-hef-an, up-ahcef-an, levare, exaltare.

To UP-HE', UPHIE, UPHEIS, v. a. To lift up, to exalt; pret. upheit.

Full few thare bene, quhom heich aboue the skyis
Thare ardent vertew has rasit and upheit.
Doug. Virgil, 167, 29.

Sum, wardly honour to up he,
Getis to thame that nothing neidis.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 48.

And souerane vertew, spred so fer on brede is,
Sal mak thame goddis, and thame deify,
And thame upheis full hie aboue the sky.
Doug. Virgil, 477, 31.

V. HEIS.

"From high or hy, q. d. uphyed;" Rudd. But A.-S. up-heah, signifies, sublimis; and he-an is used as a v. Dan. ophoy-er, Belg. ophoog-en, to exalt. V. HE, v.

UPHEILD, part. pa. Carried upwards.

The bettir part of me sall be upheild,
Aboue the sternis perpetually to ring.
Doug. Virgil, Concl. 480, 37.

A.-S. up, and hyld-an, inclinare.

To UPHEIS, v. a. To exalt, S. V. UPHE.

To UPHEUE, v. a. To lift up.

The fairer Eneas astonyst wor sum dele,
Desirus this sing suld betakin sele,
His handis baith upheis toward the heuyn,
And thus gan mak his bone with myld stevyn.
Doug. Virgil, 476, 37.

A.-S. up-hef-an, up-aharf-an, levare, Isl. upphief-ia, exaltare, Su.-G. uppharf-a, id.

UPHOUG, s. Ruin, bankruptcy, Shetl.

Dan. ophugg-er, dissecō, ictu discutio, Baden; q. to heo up by the roots. Isl. haug, and hogg, signify caedes, poena, from the v. haugg-va, caedere; and hence the phrase Leida til hauggs, ad caedem producere; Verel. Ind., p. 111.

UPHYNT, part. pa. Snatched up, plucked up.

Als sone as first the goddis omnipotent
Be sum signis or takinnis lyst consent,
The ensenyeis and baneris be uphynt,—
Se ye al redely be than but delay.
Doug. Virgil, 360, 10.

V. HINT.

UPLANDS, UP OF LAND, UPON-LAND, UP-
PLANE, adj. 1. Living in the country, as distinguished from the town.

"Ane Barges may poynd ane uplands man, or the Barges of ane other burgh, within or without the time of market, within or without the house." Burrow
Lawes, c. 3, s. 1. Foris, habitantes, Lat.

This term, as Mr. Pinkerton observes, is equivalent to landwart frequently used in our laws, as opposed to borough.

2. Rustic, unpolished.

Thus sang ane burd with voce upplane;
"All erdly joy returns in pane."
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 87.

John Up-on-land's Complaint, is the title of one of our old poems, Ibid., p. 114, borrowed perhaps from Chaucer's Jacks Uplande.

A.-S. up-land, highland, a hilly country or region;
also, a midland country far from the sea. Up-landisc man, monticola, rusticus, one that dwelleth on a hilly or mountainous soil, or far from the sea coast; Somner.
To calcan ryrcenn uppeland; To every country kirk;
Chron. Sax., 192, 34.

UPLAND SHOOE. A sort of rullion, or a shoe made of an undressed hide with the hair on it.

"Pero, peronis, an up-land shoe." Desput. Gram.
B. 8, a.

G. Douglas renders cradus pero of Virgil by rough rilling.

* To UPLIFT, v. a. To collect; applied to money, &c., a juridical term, S.

"His father the marquiss was at court, seeking to defend his sheriffships, whilk he could not get donee and therefore returned home again, leaving his son th.
lord Gordon behind him to uplift the prices thereof.
Spalding's Troubles, i. 20.

"He returns home to Aberdeen from Newcastle upon the 4th of December, and again begins to uplift the tenths and twentieths within his division." Ibid.,
i. 272.

The v. in E. merely signifies "to raise aloft." Sw.
uplift-a, to lift up.

UPLIFTER, VPLIFTER, s. A collector.

—"The officiaris chargit for the said taxatioun, uplifteris and recevaris of the samin, hes bene in vse of allowing to thame selfis of greit and extraordinar fees for thair service, quhilk was ane greit impairing of the former taxatioun." Acts Ja. VI., 1597, Ed. 1914, p.
146.

UPLIFTING, s. Collection, exaction.

"There followed the uplifting of the tenths and twentieths through the country, and also of their farms." Spalding, i. 290.

UPLIFTIT, part. adj. Elated, under the influence of pride, S.

"I was sae upliftit I could hardly sit on my yaul; and I saw my father was proud o' his callant, as he ca'd me,—that made me ten times waur." Perils of Man, ii. 229.

[UPLINS, adv. Upwards, Clydes.]

To UPLOIP, v. n. To ascend with rapidity, to rise quickly to an elevated station.

The Cadger clims, new cleikit from the creill,
And laddis uploips to Lordships all their launs.
Montgomery, M.S. Chron. S. P., iii. 499.

Teut. oploop-en, sursum currere, sursum ferri. V.
LOUP, v.

[To UPMak, v. n. To build up, compensate; to supply where there is a deficiency, S.]

UPMAK, s. 1. A contrivance, an invention.
S. B.

2. Composition, S. B.

He held the bink side in an endless gauff,
Wi' catchie glees, some o' his ain up-mak,
Which a' confess he had an unco knack.
Tarras's Poems, p. 4

3. A fabrication, Aberd.

Teut. op-maek-en, construere; ornate conficere.

UPPAL, UPPIL, s. 1. Support; corrupted from Uphald, Aberd.

This term occurs in a Prov. common in that country, which is not expressive of much sensibility: "The death o' wives, and the luck o' sheep, are a pair man's uppal."

2. Chief delight, ruling desire, ibid.

Perhaps Uppil, adj. should be written Uppal, as having a common origin.

UPPIL, adj. Uppil aboon, clear over-head, a phrase applied to the atmosphere, S. B.

This phrase is pure Goth. Sw. uphaalla vænder, dry weather; from uphaalla, to bear up. Haalla up is used in the same sense in which we say, It will hadd up, i.e., There will be no rain. Det haaller uppe, (om regn), It holds up. Jag vill gaa ut, om dete bara haaller uppe; I will go out, if it does but hold up; Wideg. Hence,

To UPPIL, v. n. To clear up, South and West of S.

"When the weather at any time has been wet and ceases to be so, we say it is uppled." Gall. Enc. vo. Upple.

UPPINS, adv. A little way upwards, as Downnins, a little way downwards.UPPISH, adj. Aspiring, ambitious, S. from up, denoting ascent; like Su.-G. ypp-a, elevare, and yppig, superbus, vanus, from upp, sursum.

But the Earl of Glencairn was arrived at Perth before these three commissioners could reach it, where they found the multitude much more uppiish than formerly." Keith's Hist., p. 88.

Here it properly signifies that the multitude were rising in their demands, and more hard to deal with than they had been before Glencairn's arrival.

"Besides, she is getting uppiish notions, from sitting up like a lady from morning to night." Cottagers of Glenburnie, p. 37.

[To UPPLEUSE, v. a. To disclose, discover, Shetl.]UP-PUT, s. The power of secreting, so as to prevent discovery.

Tho he can swear from side to side,
And lye, I think he cannot hide.
He has been several times affronted
By slye backspeakers, and accounted
An emptie rogue. They are not fitt
For stealth, that want a good up-put.

Cleland's Poems, p. 101.

UP-PUTTING, UP-PUTTIN, UP-PITTIN, s. 1. Erection.

"They came all riding up the gate to St. Machar's kirk—to take down the portraiture of the blessed Virgin Mary and our Saviour in her arms, that had stood since the up-putting thereof, in curious work." Spalding, i. 246.

2. Lodging; entertainment whether for man or horses; as, "gude up-putting," S.

"Is it not the most extraordinary thing in this world wide, that you, that have free up-putting—bed, boarding, and washing,—and twelve pounds sterling a-year, just to look after that boy, should let him out of your sight for twa or three hours?" Guy Mannering, i. 140.

"I tell'd ye the cratar had gude up-pittin, but it's lang sin' ony one entered this place but hersel." St. Johnstoun, &c. i. 252.

3. A place, a situation; as, "I've gotten a gude up-pittin now."

"I'm nae rich yoesman! I'm naething but a poor herried, forsaken, reduced auld man! I hae nae up-putting for ought better than a flea." Perils of Man, iii. 205.

To UPRAX, v. a. To stretch upwards, to erect.

Vpraxit him he has amyd the place,
Als big as Athen, the his mont in Trace.

Doug. Virgil, 437, 2.

V. RAX.To UPREND, v. a. To render or give up.

Ane fer mare ganand saule I offer the,
And victour eik my craft and wappinnis fare
Vprendis here for now and euermare.

Doug. Virgil, 144, 2.

UPREUIN, part. pa. Torn up.

Bot eftir that the third sionn of treis,
Apoun the sandis sittand on my kneis,
I schupe to haue upreuin with mare preis.

Doug. Virgil, 63, 23.

UPRIGHT BUR, s. The Lycopodium selago, Linn.

"The upright bur, which grows in flat bogs, and is much more powerful than the creeping bur, is lycopodium selago." App. Agr. Surv. Caithn., p. 197.

To UPSET, v. a. 1. To set up, to fix in a particular situation.

"Their chief and first charge and study is, and should bee, to advance the glory of God, by maintaining and upsetting true preachers of the word, reforming of religion, and subversion of idolatry." Proclamation, A. 1559, Keith's Hist., p. 111.

2. To confirm; to make good.

"Our soueraene lord,—in respect of the said mowing gift, as faithfullie and solempnitlie promesit to be rssett and maid gude decernis and declaris," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1593, Ed. 1814, p. 261.

3. To refund, to repair.

"Gif it happinis the ship or gudis to cum in ony danger in the maister's default,—throw putting furth of insufficient towis, then he is bund and oblist to rsset the skaith, as far as he is worth, or may be able to pay." Ship Lawis, Balfour's Pract., p. 618.

In the same sense, I suppose, must we understand the phrase as used in Aberd. Reg., "to rsset the skaicht;" Cent. 16.

There is a similar phrase in Sw. Ersætta en skada, to repair or make up a loss; er being equivalent to Lat. re.

4. To recover from; applied to a hurt, affliction, or calamity, S. win aboon, synon.

—Folk as stout an' clever,
As ony shearin' herc,
Hae gotten skaith they never
Ursæt for mony year.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 123.

"There is such a great lose and damage in this one thing we call deccite will neuer be rsset: all the kings and doctors vnder heauen will neuer set vp thy lose thou getst by defection." Rollock on 2 Thes., p. 53.

The idea is borrowed from setting up something that has fallen or been overturned; Teut. opselt-en, Sw. upsæta-a.

5. To overset, to overturn; as, to upset a cart, boat, &c. by making the one side to rise so much above the other as to lose the proper balance, S. also used as v. n. in the same sense.

UPSET, VPSETT, s. 1. The admission of one to the freedom of any trade in a burgh.

"And quhat persons that shall happen to be admitted frie men or master to the saidis crafts, or occupys any part of the same, shall pay for his entrie at his upset, five pounds usual money of Scotland," &c. Seal of Cause, A. 1505, Blue Blanket, p. 56.

"That thair be in the baill toun [hot ane] collection and ane purs, not peculiere to ony ane bot common to all of the baill dewiteis and casualiteis callit the entres siluer of prentises, upsettis, ouklike penneis, vnlawis.—The merchand prenteis—to pay at his entrie—xxx s. and at his upsett or end of his prentieschip fyve pundis." Acts Ja. VI., 1584, Ed. 1814, p. 363-4.

2. The money paid in order to one's being admitted into any trade.

"It is weall knowne,—how that we uphauuld an altar, &c., and has nae importance to uphauuld the same, but our sober oukleye penny and upsets." Ibid. p. 55.

Teut. op-sett-en, constituere, instituere; or perhaps we may refer to the v. as signifying aperire, recludere, as denoting that the door of freedom is opened to one who is previously bound.

3. Insurrection, mutiny.

And in the caws of that upset,
That wyolent wes than and gret,
The Byschape of Lyndyn scho gert be
Hey hangyd a-pon gallow tre.

Wyntown, viii. 22, 47.

Su.-G. uppsaet, machinatio, O.Teut. opset, insidiar, Mod. Sax. upsate, seditio; from saett-a, to lay snares. Synon. Isl. uppsaeyt, Sw. uplop, rebellio.

UPSET-PRICE. The price at which any goods are exposed to sale by auction, S.

Teut. op-setten eenen prijs, praemium proponere.

UPSETTER, VPSETTAR, s. One who fixes, sets or sticks up; used as to placards.

"The first sear & findar thair of salbe punist in the samin maner as the first inventar, writtar, tynar, and *upsett*ar of the samin, gif he wer apprehendit." Acts Mary, 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 5:2.

UPSETTING part. adj. 1. Applied to those who aim at higher things than their situation in life entitles them to, aping the modes of superiors, S.

"Upsetting cutty! I mind her fou weel, when she dreed penance of ante-nup—" St. Ronan, i. 34.

"He was very vogie with the notion of making a speech before the council, for he was an upsetting young man." The Provost, p. 358.

"Up-setting, conceited; assuming;" Gl. Antiq. Teut. op-setten, erigere, tollere.

2. Improperly used as signifying vehement.

"But the minister's aye sae upsetting about riches an' gytte fook; an' he had something about that, and Mr. Allan has never entered the door sin syne." Glenfergus, i. 340.

3. Upsetting-like, having the appearance of a spirit of assumption and self-elevation, S.

—"I can tell you he is no favourite in a certain quarter." 'I dinna wonder at it, for he's a proud, upsetting-like puppy.'" Inheritance, ii. 362.

UPSETTING, s. Assumption of right, aspiring or ambitious conduct, S.

"Weel, I declare if e'er I heard the like of sic upsetting. I won'er what business either you or him has to consenting or none consenting." The Entail, ii. 268.

UPSHLAAG, s. A thaw, Shetl.

Isl. upp, and slagi, humiditas, deliquescentia, (whence slagi-a, and slaku-a, mollescere, humescere), slak-r, remissus; slaggi, mixta nive pluvia.

UPSIDES, adv. Quits, q. on an equal foot, S.

"I'll gee fyfteen shillins to thee, crunkit carl,
For a friend to him ye kythe to me;
Gin ye'll take me to the wicht Wallace;
For up-sides wi'm I mean to be."

Jameson's Popul. Ball., ii. 174.

UPSITTEN, part. pa. Listless, callous; applied to those who, regardless both of mercies and of judgments, refuse to make any progress in religion, or to reform what is wrong, S.

"When Historian Wodrow, with the lukewarm, backslidden and upsitten Ministers, he with his pen, and they with their tongues, are saying, that many of these Martyrs suffered for their wild opinions; one thing they much insist upon, is, That they would never pray for the King. They were not bid to do this alone, but to satisfy them of all their other wicked opinions; and it was not salvation to his soul they would suffer them to pray for, but preservation to his body, and lengthning out of his days, that he might exercise more tyranny." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 142. Teut. op-sitt-en, insidere, to sit down upon.

[UPSITTING, s. A merry-making after the baptism of a child, S.]

To UPSKAIL, v. a. To scatter upwards, S.

And sic fowill tallis, to sweep the calsay clene,
The dust upskailis.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 44, st. 15.

V. Note, p. 256. V. SKAIL, v.

UPSTART, s. A stick set upon the top of a wall, in forming the wooden work of a thatch-roof, but not reaching the summit, S.

"Over these were hung sticks about the thickness of a man's arm, called cubbers; and smaller ones set on the top of the wall were termed upstarts." Agr. Surv. Ayr., p. 114.

To UPSTEND, v. n. To spring up.

Upstendit than the stalwart stele on hicht,
And with his helis flang vp in the air.

Doug. Virgil, 352, 50.

Tollit se adirectum; Virg. V. STEND.

UPSTENT, part. pa. Erected.

At euerie sanctuary and altare upstent,
In karrolling the lusty landis went.

Doug. Virgil, 266, 50.

From Teut. op and stan, stabilire, or stann-en, fulcire.

UPSTIRRING, s. Excitement.

"Heereupon all creatures in their kinde reioyce,—the church lastly closeth the song; to shew, that as from them it ought to begin, whereby all the rest may magnify God; so the singing of the rest should serue the church for a new upstirring to insist in his praise." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 29, 30.

To UPSTOUR, v. n. To rise up in a disturbed state, as dust in motion, or the spray of the sea.

—Younder mycht thou se
The hierdys of hartis wyth thare hedis hie
Ouer spynerand wyth awyft cours the plane vale,
The hepe of dust upstourand at thare tale.

Doug. Virgil, 105, 15.

—All the sey upstouris, with an quihlder,
Ouerweltit with the bensell of the aris.

Doug. Virgil, 263, 34.

V. STOUR, v.

UPSTRAUCHT, pret. Stretched, q. erected.

—Bot sche than als hate as fyre,— Alicht, and to hir mait the hors betucht;
At his desire anone on fute upstraucht,
With equale armour bodin wonder licht.

Doug. Virgil, 390, 8.

V. STRAUCHT.

UP-SUN, s. 1. After sunrise.

"The precise question was, If an ejection may be executed in the night-time, at least before sun-rising; or if it must be done with up-sun.—Though the sun was not actually risen, yet we know there is a diluclum preceding it, that, for an hour before it, irradiates and gilds the sky.—Yet the plurality found the ejection illegal, being before sun-rising; and therefore ordained Mr. William Gordon to be repossessed." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 562.

2. It was upsun, the sun was not set, Galloway.

A similar phrase occurs in Isl. Upserandi sol, non dum occidens, superates adhuc supra horizontem. Harb. 56, Edda Saemund. ; literally up-being.

The phrase used in A.-S. is sunnan upp-gange; Sa.-G. solens uppgang, Teut. opganck der sonnen. Perhaps we ought to view up-sun as an ellipse, formed from the A.-S. phraseology, Eode sunna upp, exoribat sol, Gen. 32. 31.

To UPTAK, v. a. 1. To understand, to comprehend, S.2. To collect, applied to money, fines, &c.; synon. Uplift; to Take up, E.

"The Lordis of counsal may tak and constitute ane Procuratour and Factour for thame to raise and uptak all unlaws of ony person that tynis thair causis befor thame." Balfour's Pract., 404.

"John Hepburne was at that tyme prior generall of St. Androis, and uptuk the proffessit thairof." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 292.

3. To make an inventory or list.

"They order how commissioners should be chosen to sit three months at the council table in Edinburgh their time about;—and set down instructions in writt about all thir businesses, whilk bred great trouble in uptaking of the rental, and number of men and others above written." Spalding's Troubles, i. 103.

Sw. up-taga, and Dan. optage, signify to take up literally. The Sw. verb has also several metaphorical senses:

UPTAK, UPTAKIN, UPTAKING, s. 1. Apprehension, S.

"But Mr David, for all your malecontentment, it is better than you apprehend it: your error proceeds from the wrong uptaking of the question." Bp. Galloway's Dikaiologie, p. 85.

"Ye maun ken I'm gay gleg at the uptak; there was never ony thing dune wi' hand but I learn'd gay readily." Tales of my Landlord, iii. 19, 20.

"I can crack some wi' you, though ye're rather slow i' the uptake; but I can crack-nane wi' a man that ca's the streamers a Roara Boriawlis." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 238.

2. The act of collecting or receiving, Aberd. Reg.3. Exaltation.

"The exalting of the childe, is the dejection of the Dragon, from heaurn: and the dejection of the Dragon is the uptaking of the childe." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 103.

UPTENIT, pret. Obtained, Aberd. Reg.UP-THROUGH, adv. 1. In the upper part of the country or higher district, Clydes., Aberd. V. DOUNTHROUGH.2. Upwards, so as to pass through to the other side, Clydes.UP-THROUGH, adj. Living or situated in the upper part of the country, Aberd.UP-THROWIN, s. The vulgar term for puking, S.

Belg. opwerping, which literally signifies the act of throwing up, is used in the same sense in relation to the stomach.

UPTYING, s. The act of putting in bonds.

"His captivity is not absolute, but in some special consideration; and the degrees heere mentioned shew, that then his uplying is to bee counted, when in that consideration hee is perfectly made fast, as taken, shut up, locked on, and sealed." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 217.

UPWARK, s. Apparently, labour in the inland, or upland, as distinguished from employment in fishing.

"Upwark, quhen the fysching wes done;" Aberd. Reg., V. 21.

UPWELT, pret. Threw up. V. WELT.UPWITH, adv. 1. Upwards, S.

"As meikle upwith, as meikle downwith;" S. Prov. Ferguson, p. 2. "Spoken when a man has got a quick advancement, and as sudden depression;" Kelly, p. 24.

2. As a s., To the upwith, taking a direction upwards, S.

This is merely Isl. uppvíð, sursum tenus; G. Andr. V. DOUNWITH, OUTWITH.

UPWITH, adj. Uphill, S.

To the next woole twa myil thai had to gang,
Off upwith erde; thai yeid with all thair mycht,
Gud hope thai had, for it was ner the nycht.

Wallace, v. 101, MS,

V. preceding word.

A.-S. up oth, sursum ad; up oth heofon, sursum ad oelum, Bed. 478, 13. V. OUTWITH.

UPWITH, s. An ascent, a rising ground.

"Will ye sou how the're spankin' leng the side o' that green upwith, an siccan a braengal o' them too?" Saint Patrick, ii. 91.

TO UPWREILE, v. a. To raise or lift up with considerable exertion.

Sum on thare nek the grete cornes upwrellis,
And ouer the furris besely tharewith spelis.
Doug. Virgil, 113, 54.

—From the scharp rolk skairsilie with grete slicht
Sergeatus gan upwreile his schip euil dicht.
Ibid. 136, 43.

V. WREIL.

URE, s. Chance, fortune.

—Bot dryve the thing ryht to the end,
And tak the ure that God wald send.
Barbour, i. 312, MS.

—"Lordings, sen it is awa
"That ure rynnys again ws her,
"Gud is we pass off thar daunger."
Ibid. ii. 434, MS.

For thai thare ure wald with him ta,
Gyff that he eft war assaylyt awa.
Ibid. vi, 377, MS.

[O. Fr. eur, heur, "hap, lucke, fortune, chance," Cotgr.; from Lat. augurium, augury.]

Mr. Macpherson thinks that, when this word has no addition, it is "generally understood of good fortune." But it seems to be used quite indefinitely. He refers to Arm. O. Fr. eur, "retained in bonheur, malheur, which etymologists derive from heure, hour, as if the words signified metaphorically good hour, bad hour; whereas the meaning is obvious and simple without any metaphor." Gl. Wynt.

Eur is used in the sense of hazard, Rom. de la Rose. Teut. ure, vicissitudo.

URE, s. "Practice, toil;" Gl. Pink.

A thrid, O maistres Marie! make I pray:
And put in ure thy worthie vertewes all.
For famous is your fleing fame; I say,
Hyd not so haut a hairt in slugish thrall.

Mailland Poems, p. 267.

In this sense it may be allied to Teut. ure, commoditas, temporis opportunitas; Kilian.

This phrase occurs in O. E. "I bring in ure, by long accustomynge of a thyng or condycion;" Palsgr. B. iii., F. 175, a. "I put in ure, Je mets en experience; —It shall be put in ure, or it be aught louge." Ibid. F. 328, b.

This v. was anciently used in its simple form. "I ure one, I accustume hym to a thyng.—And he be ones reed to it, he wyll do well ynoughe." Ibid. F. 399, b.

It is also used by Hooker. Skinner unnaturally views it as contr. from Lat. usura.

Mr. Nares has properly referred to Norm. Fr. ure, practice, use. Mise en ure, put in practice. Kelham's Dict. From Ure, is the E. v. to inure.

URE, s. Slow heat, as that proceeding from embers; also expl. a suffocating heat, Tweedd.

Prob., Isl. ur, striae, seu stricturae igniti ferri, G. Andr.; scintilla, Haldorson. The latter gives Dan. funke, (whence our spunk;) as synon.; subjoining the Isl. phrase, Ur ef ellu jarni, scintillat ferrum candens.

In Gael. ur, signifies fire; and in Ir., according to O'Reilly, both the sun and fire. To the same fountain has been traced Lat. ur-ere, to burn.

VOL. IV.

URE, s. 1. "A kind of coloured haze, which the sunbeams make in the summer-time, in passing through; that moisture which the sun exhales from the land and ocean;" Gall. Euc.

2. This is expl. "a haze in the air," Clydes.

"The mune be this was shinan clearly abune a' ure." Edin. Mag., Sept. 1818, p. 155.

This seems to be its meaning in the following passage—

Whiles glowing at the azure sky,
And loomy ocean's ure,
Which Phoebus makes when he is dry,
Thrang soaking waters pure.

Gall. Encycl., p. 133.

When the weather is very dry, it is called dry ure. The east was blue, dry ure bespreal the hills.

Ibid.

Perhaps originally the same with Isl. ur, pluvia. G. Andr.; ros, pluvia, Haldorson. V. OORIE. Or shall we trace it to the same fountain with E. hoar, Isl. hor, mucor? Lye has given A.-S. urig, as signifying canus, hoary; which would seem to indicate that there had been an A.-S. s. in the form of ur.

URE, s. The point of a weapon.

"And gif he hurtis or defoulis with felonie assaile yeand with edge or ure, he sall remaine in presoun but remeid, quhill assyth be maid to the partie, and amendis to the King or to the Lord, that it belangis to as effeiris." Acts Ja. I., 1426, c. 108, Edit. 1566.

Edge or ure, i.e., edge or point. This is the same with ord, orde, horde, O.E.

Hys sword he drough out than,
Was scharp of erge, and ord.

Lybzeus, Ritson's E.M.R., ii. 81.

Horn tok the maister heved
That he him had byrevel.
And sette on is suerle,
Aboven othen orde.

Geste Kyng Horn, Ibid. ii. 117.

Mid speres ord hue stronge.
Ibid. ii. p. 149.

Swilk lose thai wan with speres horde,
Over al the world went the worle.

Ycaine and Gawin, Ibid. i. 3.

Su.-G. or, anc. aur, a weapon; Isl. aur, an arrow. Ord is merely the A.-S. term rendered acies, cuspis, "the point of any thing, the point or edge of a weapon;" Somner. Perhaps they have some affinity to Isl. or acer. Ure seems radically the same with Wyr, q. v.

URE, s. 1. Ore; in relation to metals, S.

In Lyde contre thou born was, fast by
The plentuous sulye, quhare the goldin riwere
Pactolus warpis on ground the goldin ure clere.

Doug. Virgil, 318, 41.

"Doun-Creigh was built with a strange kynd of morter, by one Paull Macktyre. This I doe take to be a kind of ure; howsoever, this is most certaine, that ther hath not been seen aue harder kynd of morter." Gordon's Hist. Earls of Sutherland, p. 8.

This evidently refers to a species of vitrification. A.-S. ora, Belg. oor, oor, id.

2. The fur or crust which adheres to vessels in consequence of liquids standing in them, S.B.

This seems only an oblique sense of the same word. Hence,

URY, adj. Furred, crusted, S.B.

O 4

URE, s. A denomination of land in Orkney and Shetland; [also in Sweden.]

"In these parishes there are 1618 merks 4 ures of land. An ure is the eighth part of a merk. The dimensions of the merk vary not only in the different parishes of Shetland, but in different towns of the same parish; and though in some of the towns, in these united parishes, it will not measure above half a Scots acre, yet so much does it exceed the Scots acre in others, that the whole of the arable land cannot be less than 1600 acres." P. Tingwall, Shetl. Statist. Acc. xxi. 278.

The same mode of denomination is retained in Sweden. Apud agrimensores nostros oere, oer-tig, et penning, est certa portio villae dividendae in suas partes,—cujus ratio olim constitit in censu quem pendebant agri, &c. Ihre, vo. Oere.

V. MERK. To what is said there, it may be added that A.-S. ora, ore, was a denomination of money, whether coined, or reckoned by weight, constituting an ounce or the twelfth part of a pound. As this term was introduced into E. by the Danes, it must have been originally the same with Isl. auri, both the A.-S. and the Isl. word signifying an ounce. Auri, est octava pars marcae, tam in fundo, quam in mobilibus; Verel. p. 23. The mode of reckoning, however, was different; Isl. auri being the eighth part of a pound or mark. For the mark in Isl. contains eight ounces. V. G. Andr., p. 175.

URE, s. Colour, tinge, S.B.

This may be allied to Belg. veru, Sw. ferg, id.

URE, s. Soil. An ill ure, a bad soil, Ang.

Ir. Gael. wir, mould, earth, dust; Isl. ur, gravelly soil.

URE, s. Sweat, perspiration, Ang. Hence, ury, clammy, covered with perspiration.

URE, s. The dug or udder of any animal particularly of a sheep or cow, Roxb., Dumfr.; Lure, synon. S.

Dan. yver, yfoer, Isl. jugr, jusr, id. These seem radically the same with Lat. uber.

URE-LOCK, s. The name given to the locks of wool growing round the udder of a sheep, which are pulled off when it is near lambing-time, to facilitate the admission of the young to the udder of the dam, Roxb. V. UDDERLOCK.

UREEN (Gr. v.), s. A ewe, Shetl. Isl. aer, ovis, agna; Verel. Haldorson gives this as a plur. noun.

URF, WURF, s. 1. A stunted ill-grown person, generally applied to children, Roxb., Ettr. For.; synon. Orf, Loth.

"What ir ye, I say, ye bit useless wenzel-blawn like urf that ye're!" Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 116.

2. A crabbed or peevish person, but as implying the idea of diminutive size, ibid.

This seems to be corr. from Warwolf, Werwouf, q. v., sense 2.

3. A fairy, Upp. Lanarks.

In allusion, it has been said, to the ugliness of the elvish race; but more probably to their diminutive size. V. WARF.

URISK, s. The name given to a satyr, in the Highlands of S.

For there she said, did fays resort,
And satyrs* hold their sylvan court,
By moon-light tread their mystic maze,
And blast the rash beholder's gaze.

Lady of the Lake, p. 133.

* The Uriak, or Highland satyr.

URISUM, URUSUM, adj. 1. Troublesome, vexatious.

Astablit lyggis stýl to sleip, and restis—
The lytil mydgis, and the urusum fleis,
Lauborius emottis, and the biassy beis.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 450, 6.

2. "S. frightful, terrifying;" Rudd.

This seems allied to Su.-G. orolig, inquietus, (the term sum being used instead of lig or like), from oro, inquires, comp. of o, negat. and ro, quies; like Germ. unruhig, id. from un and ruhe. This exactly corresponds to the sense; "the restless flies." V. ROIF, rest.

URLUCH, adj. "Silly-looking," Gl. Ross. i.e., having a feeble and emaciated appearance, S. B.

Ayont the pool I spy'd the lad that fell,
Droukit and looking unco urluch like.

Ross's Helenore, p. 43.

In the first edit. of Ross's Helenore, this is written Ourlach, p. 37.

Drouket and looking unko ourlach like.

It is pron. q. oorlagh. V. WURF-LIKE.

Perhaps q. oorielike, as chilled by cold, or in consequence of being drenched with water; as the person referred to is supposed to have been nearly drowned.

I thought therein a lad was like to drown,
His feet yeed frae him, and his head went down.

V. OORIE.

But, perhaps, it is rather q. ourl-like. V. WROUL and WARWOLF. The latter derivation seems confirmed by the use of A. Bor. url, to look sickly; urled, stunted in growth; whence urling, a little dwarfish person.

To URN, v. a. To pain, to torture. V. ERN, which is the pronunciation of Aberd.

Quhat I haiff had in wer befor this day,
Presonne and payne to this nycht was bot play;
So bet I am with strakis sad and sar,
The cheyle wattir urned me mekill mar;
Eftir gret blud throu heitt in cauld was brocht,
That off my lyff almost no thing I roucht.

Wallace, v. 384, MS.

Wined, Perth Edit. In Edit. 1648, it is altered still more strangely;

The shrill water then brunt me meikell more.

The term is still used, Ang. To urn the ee, to pain the eye, as a mote or a grain of sand does. This term might have been originally limited to what causes pain by the sensation of heat; as allied to Isl. orne, calor, orn-a, calefacio, orn, focus. V. Verel. vo. Ornaz, and G. Andr. A.-S. yrn-ed, signifies afflicted, tormented. But we cannot view this as the origin of our term, without supposing that it has been corrupted.

To URP, v. n. To become pettish, Aberd. V. ORP, v.

URUS. The name given to the wild white bull that was formerly so common in the Caledonian forest.

Although this is not a S. word, but that used by Lat. writers, I take notice of it in order to remark, that it is obviously of Gothic formation, and has been adopted by the Romans in that form, which, according to the genius of their language, most nearly expressed the original sound. This is evidently Germ. auerocha, also ur-ocha, "an ure-ox, a buff, a wild bull;" Ludwig. Aur, or ur, signifies ferus silvestris. Thus, aurhan is a wild cock, urkutte, a wild cat, urschwein, a wild swine, &c. Isl. ur and ure have the same meaning with Germ. ur-ocha; Urus, bubalus; Halderson.

To USCHE', USCHE, VSCHÉ, v. n. To issue, to go out; same with Ische.

He had ene previe postroun of his awin,
That he micht uscht, quhen him list, unknowin.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 70.

"Thare sailbe euer iȝ redy to usche at the command of the wardane of the est marchis," &c. Parl. Ja. III., 1431; Ed. 1814, p. 140.

USCHE, s. Issue, termination.

"That a proclamacioun be maid at the usche of this parliament, that nane of his lieges—be of anherd, confort, help, supple, or commoun with any of his rebellis now forfalt," &c. Ibid. 1489, p. 215.

To USHE, v. a. To clear.

The Lords—"recommends to the Ordinary in the Outer-house, from time to time, upon the petitioners desyre, to order the house to be ushed and cleared." Act Sederunt, 3. Feb. 1685. V. ISCHE, v. a.

USE, s. Interest of money, Roxb.

"L. B. us-us occurs in the same sense with usuria; Du Cange. O. Fr. us is rendered usufruct; En los us, en tout usufruit; Roquefort.

• To USE, v. a. To frequent, to be accustomed, to resort to.

"That our souerane lordis liegis, using thai partis haue sic fredoume within the realme of France, & boundis of the samyne, lik as the Frenchemen haue within our souerane lordis realme and bundis." Acts Ja. IV., 1491, Ed. 1814, p. 224.

This singular application of the term may have been borrowed from that of Lat. ut-or, as signifying to be familiar with, as regarding persons; or from the phrase vin uti, to travel on a certain road.

USTE, s. The host, the sacrifice of the mass in the church of Rome.

"Beleue firmly that the hail body of Christ is in the hail uste and also in ilk a part of the same, beleif firmly thair is bot ene body of Christ in mony ustis, that is in syndry and mony altaris." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 147, b.

[To USTE, UST, v. a. To heat sweet milk with a small quantity of butter-milk, till the curd separates from the whey, Shetl.]

USTED, s. The curd of butter-milk heated with sweet milk, ibid.

[USTIN, s. Curds made without rennet, ibid. V. USTE.]

Su.-G. yel-a, pron. ust-a, Isl. id. (Fenn. juust-i.) coagular, yel-ing, coagulation; lac concretum, a sero in seccernens; ust-r, Su.-G. and Dan. ust, Fenn. juusta, caseus. V. Ihre, vo. Ust. Among the Tartars and Turks a-ous denotes milk coagulated.

UTASS, WTASt. Corr. of Oclares.

And past off Marche off rycht degeutione.
Wallace, vi. l. 133

UTELAUY, WTELAUY, s. An outlaw.

Schir Nele Cambell, and othyr ma,
That I thair nauys can nocht say,
As utelauys went mony day.
Barbour, ii. 493, 133

A.-S. ut-laga, id. Isl. utlaeg-r, exul, extorris.

[UTERAL, adj. Frem'd, foreign; a term applied to strangers, Shetl.]

UTERANCE, UTTERANCE, s. 1. Extremity, in any respect, as of exertion.

With al thare force than at the ut-terance,
Thay pingil airis vp to bend and hale.
Doug. Virgil, 134, 11.

2. Extremity, as respecting distress, or implying the idea of destruction.

Doun beting eik war with the Ethurrianis,
And ye also feil bodyis of Troianis,
That war not put by Greikis to ut-terance.
Doug. Virgil, 331, 40.

He confessed all the same, saying, "it was true; and that if the king's majesty and this realm were once at a good peace and unity, they would all be afraid of him, where now both divers lords and all the clergy seem to be at ut-terance with him." Sadler's Papers, i. p. 126. This is the language of the E. of Arran.

"Assuring me, that if those things come to any ut-terance here among themselves, they will be strong enough for their adversaries, as he trusteth." Ibid. p. 151.

This is properly written Out-terance, q. v. At-terance, in a state of the greatest discord.

V. OUTRANCE and OUTRYING.

UTGIE, UTGIEN, s. Expense, expenditure. S. q. giving out. Belg. ugtgaare, id.

To UTHERLOCK, v. a. To pull the wool from a sheep's udder, that the lamb may get at the teats, Clydes. V. UDDERLOCK.

UTHIR, UTHER, pron. Other. This is the common orthography of Douglas and our old writers. Wyntown uses both this and othir.

UTOLE. [Symbol of infeftment.] V. PENNY UTOLE.

"Resignations are said to be made, in the town of Aberdeen, by delivery of a penny utole for staff and baton. Law Case, E. of Aberdeen, v. Duncan, 25th June, 1742.

This phrase might, at first view, seem to have originated from L. B. octal-ium, utel-ein, utole, used to denote a certain measure of grain; Mensura frumentaria; Du Cange. But it is difficult to see how it could apply in this sense. From some of the passages quoted by this learned writer, indeed, it appears that it had at length become the denomination of a certain measure of land, most probably from the quantity of grain which this land would carry. Thus we not only read, that Odo gave—terram ad quatuor Octolias sementis; but the land itself was designed Octolium or Octalium terrae, ager capiens sementis Octolium, as in our own country the vulgar express the small quantities of land possessed by individuals by "a lippie's sawing," "a peck's sawing," &c. V. UDAL.

For dread of the tyrantes ill ful cruel,
And their people cursel and ful of malice,
That raulshed nunnes, uwer where they hard tel,
In her chapter, ordeined againe their enemies,
Shukle not defoule theyr clene virginities;
She cut her nose off, and her ouer lippe,
To make her lothe that she might from him slipe.
Chron. Fol. 107, b.

2. Superior in power. The uwer hand, the superiority, S.

V. OUER, id.

V.

V, in some of our old printed books, is invariably used for W; as in the Complaynt of Scotland. It is not therefore to be supposed that W was pron V.; or that it was even written in this manner. In MSS. these letters are properly distinguished. Often indeed W is written instead of V or U; as in grewys for grevys, grievs, lewys for levys, lives. When it is thus used as a vowel, Mr. Macpherson has marked it with two dots, in this manner, W̄; to distinguish it from W consonant.

The reason why V is substituted in some old books for W, most probably is, that as this letter is not used by the French, these were either printed in France, or, although the product of the Scottish press, executed either by Fr. compositors, or with Fr. types. It may be observed that in S. books printed in France, even where W is used, great awkwardness appears. The capital letter is frequently inserted in the middle of the word. In other instances, for want of the proper letter, v is doubled.

The words, therefore, printed with V as the initial letter, will in general be found under W.

VADMELL, s. A species of woollen cloth, manufactured and worn in the Orkneys.

"The old men and women are just in the style of their forefathers. As they are sprung from the Norwegians, they still continue to wear good strong black clothes without dying, called by the ancient Norse, Vadmell, and by them wrought in a loom called Upstagan; but now wrought in the common manner." P. Birsay, Orkn. Statist. Acc., xiv. 326.

Isl. radmaal, pannus rusticus, seu vulgaris, Burillum, trilix, a rod; G. Andr., 244. According to Verel. it is comp. of rad, textum, and mal, mensuratum vel mensurandum. The Vadmaal web in Iceland is legally twenty-four ells, in Denmark only twenty; G. Andr., p. 250.

This cloth must be often at least, what we call in S. twecled. For it is also denominated Skutradmal, pannus vilior obliquis filis textus; Verel., p. 222. Skakt has the same meaning with S. shacht. V. SHACH.

The name of this cloth is not unknown in some counties in E. "Woodmel. A coarse hairy stuff made of Iceland Wool, and brought from thence by our seamen to Norfolk and Suffolk." Grose's Prov., GL. V. Wadmal, Ihre, vo. Wad.

VAGER, VAGEOURE, s. A mercenary soldier. V. WAGEOUR.

VAGGLE, s. A place where meat is hung for the purpose of being smoked, Shetl.

Isl. vagl, tigillus, pertica; vagli, pertica in qua gallinae noctu quiescunt, metonymice pro toto gallinatio; Verel. Sublica in structura domuum; G. Andr. Su.-G. vagel [pronounced vagel], is defined by Ihre as generally signifying the perch on which fowls sit. But he says that, among the inhabitants of Gothland and of Iceland, it denotes "a beam laid transversely over a stove or chimney." Apud Gothlandos ita appellatur trabs, hypocausto transversim superimposita, quae eadem vocis significatio apud Islandos.

To VAIG, VAGUE, v. n. 1. To wander, to roam. Vagit, pret.

"Quhen Metellus hed vagit vp and doune there ane lang tyme, and hed put his host and armye in ignorance, and his enemies in error, eftir diuerse turnand coursis athourtht the cuntre, he returnit suddanlye to the for-said toun of Tribie, and laid ane sege about it or his enemies var aduertest to mak deffens." Compl. S., p. 172.

"She refused to settle at Rippon, which he had appointed for her, but would vague and wander from one place to another, contrary to his express commands." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 668. V. VAIG, v.

The v. is still used, but especially as denoting idle wandering, S. as stravaig also is.

2. Metaph. applied to discourse.

"The King should be judge, if a minister vag from his text in pulpit." Mr. J. Melville's MS. Mem., p. 323. Isl. vag-a, vakk-a, vagor, G. Andr. Lat. vag-ari; Moes-G. A.-S. wag-ian, Su.-G. wagga-a, Belg. wag-en, fluctuare.

VAIG, VAIGER, s. A wandering fellow, a vagrant, Mearns. [Applied also to females.]

But strip ye straight frae head to heel,
Ye vagit like skinnin of an eel.

Beattie's John o' Arnha, p. 22.

"An act against vaiyers [strollers] from their own ministers—is past the committee without a contrary voice." Baillie's Lett., ii. 257. V. the v.

"Vaiyares, adhaularis of silhoussa," &c. Aberd. Reg.

VAGING, s. The habit of strolling idly.

"That all the students in the several universities and colleges within the kingdom should be obliged to wear constantly gowns during the time of sitting of the colleges; and that the regents and masters be obliged to wear black gowns and the students red gowns, that thereby vaging and vice may be discouraged." Act A. 1692, Bower's Hist. Univer. Edin., i. 54.

VAIGLE, s. A peg to which cattle are fixed in the stall, Shetl.

This seems radically the same with Isl. ragl, Su.-G. ragel; as these northern words in general signify a stake; sublica. It is defined by Hal-lorsen in Dan. as denoting "a short prop, for holding up something else." Wideg. renders ragel, "the stick on which the cocks and hens sit to sleep."

To VAIK, VAICK, WAKE, v. n. To be vacant, to be unoccupied.

"Se we nocht daylie be experience, gyfe ane benefice vaick, the gret men of the realme wyll haue it for temporall reward?" Kennedy of Croisraguell, p. 79, 80.

"When all these—are provided, it is thought some thousands of churches must vaick for want of men." Baillie's Lett., ii. 55.

Thare than wakyd the Papsys se;
And chosyn syne til it wes be.

Wyntown, v. 12, 1136.

Fr. vaqu-er, Lat. vac-are.

To VAICK on, v. a. To attend to, to be exercised in.

"—Amangis vther quæstionis quihilk vas proposid to S. Paul be the Corint. this vas ane, quidder gif thay quha var mareit, to vaick on oraisone and prayer, suld leue thair vyfis or nocht?" N. Burne, Fol. 76, b. Lat. vac-are; as, vacare armis, studiis, &c.

To VAIL, VALE, v. n. To make obeisance, to bow.

The quihilk stude up, and rich [richt] wyselie did vail
Unto the King, and thus began his taill.

Priests Peblis, S. P. R., i. 12

—Before Cupide, vailing his cappe a lite,
Speris the cause of that vocacion.

Henryson's Test. Crescude, Chron. S. P., i. 163.

This v. has perhaps been formed as primarily denoting the obeisance made by servants, when they expected a vail, or vale, i.e., a gratuity from visitors. Johns. derives this from avail, profit, or Lat. vale, farewell. Perhaps from Fr. veill-er, to watch, studiously to attend.

VAILYEANT, VAILZEAND, adj. 1. Valid, available.

"Our sowerane lord—grantis that this present contract be als vailyeant and sufficient in the self as gif it wer ane speciale exemption from all reuocatiouns in-during his minoritie," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1554, Ed. 1814, p. 362.

Fr. vaillant, of much worth.

2. To the avail of.

"Orlanis lettretz to be direct, chargeing all and sundrie erllis, lordis, baronis, fewaris, and fre-baldans, betuix saxtie and saxtene yeiris, vailyeant in yerie rent the sowme of three hundreth merkis,—that thay —address thame selfis to meit his maiestie at the burgh of Dunbartane," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1594, Ed. 1814, p. 98.

VALENT, s. The value of one's property. Their haill valient, synon. with the phrase, "all that they are worth."

—"The saidis decreittis—may bring the danger of the yeirle violent profeittis vpon the persones aganis quhome the saidis decreittis wer obteneid; and thairby surmounting often tymes thair haill valient, gif they be put to extreme executioun, will gif the pairty occasioun of suche despair, as may induce thame to attempt so dangerous remedyes, as may disturb the generall quietnes, and renew or begin hotte and bloody feedes amongis the pairteis." Acts Ja. VI., 1606, Ed. 1814, p. 286.

This is completely a Fr. idiom. Vaillant, "a man's whole estate, or worth, all his substance, meanes, fortunes;" Cotgr.

VAILYE QUOD VAILYE. "At all adventure, be the issue as it will;" Rudd.

Syne perdoun me sat sa fer in my lycht,
And I sal help to smore your falt, leif brother,
Thus vailye quod vailye, ilk gude dede helps uthir.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 272, 88.

Fr. vaille que vaille, Lat. valeat quantum valere potest. Does not the phrase, as used by Doug., rather seem exactly analogous to the Lat., as signifying, "as far as possible, as far as it can go?"

The sense is evidently the same, in the following passage—

Bot thair wald, apon nakyn wyss,
Iche till assaile thaim in fechtung,
Till coweryt war the nobill King,
Bot and othir wald thaim assailye,
Thair wald defend wailye quod wailye.
Barbour, lx. 147, MS.

i.e., "as far as their power could avail them."

VAILLIS, s. pl. Apparently, veils.

"They consisted of 'gownes, vaskenis, skirts, sleeves, doublattis, vailis, vardingallis, cloikis.'" Chalmers's Mary, i. 53, N.

[TO VAIPER, v. n. To stroll, saunter, Shetl.]

VAIRSCALL, VAIR-STAW, s. [Prob., a ware-stall, a kind of press.]

"Ane fische fat, a guill fat, a vairscall." Aberd. Reg., A. 1538, V. 16.

"Ane allmery, ane vair staw." Ibid.

In another place it is wardstall.

"Ane wardstall, and cheir [chair] & a langsadill." This might denote a stall for wares.

VAIRTIE, adj. Early, Buchan. V. VERTIE.

[VAISHLE, s. A maid servant, Banffs. Prob., a corr. of E. vassal.]

TO VAKE, v. n. To watch, to observe, to study. Lat. vac-are.

All day echo sittis va-kind besely,
Apon the top of nobillis houses, to spy.
Doug. Virgil, 106, 23.

VALAWISH, adj. Profuse, lavish, Aberd.

It has a striking resemblance of the Fr. phrase, va cy va là, "one that is sent up and downe on errands;" Cotgr. From the last two words, va là, might be formed vald-ish, as applicable to one who scatters his money, here and there, or who makes it fly about, without serving any good purpose. It may, however, be corr. from volage, light, giddy; inconsiderate, rash.

VALE, s. 1. Avail, weight.

"The lordis decretis and deliueris that the exception proponit one the behalf of the lorde Cathkert aganis the procuraturis of Alex' Erskin & his spouse is of na val, & therefore ordanis the said Alane to ansuere to the summondis." Act. Dom. Audit., p. 3.

Fr. val-oir, to be worth; subjunct. vaille.

2. Worth, value.

—"And gif thair oxin be of mare rale, he to restore again the remanent, and the lordis of counsaile to ger be prufit quhat thair war worth the tyme thair war takin." Act. Audit., A. 1471, p. 11.

VALABIL, VALIABILL, adj. Valid, of value; available.

"And to mak his pretendit mariage, quhilk schortlie followit, the maik valiabil, [Bothwell] unit the ordour of divorce, as weil be the ordinar Commisarius, as in forme and maner of the Roman kirk." Band, 1567, Keith's Hist., p. 405.

"The sam kirk quhilk hes determinat—that haereticis may baptise, hes determinat—that unles thay quha ar sua baptizet be reconciled with the treu kirk, the baptisme, sal not be valabil to bring thame to saluation." Nicol Burne, F. 116, a.

Fr. valable, of force, of value.

VALE, s. The gunwale of a vessel.

His wattry hewit bote, haw as the se,
Towart thame turnis and addressis he,
And gan approach vnto the bra in haist:
Syne vthir saulis expellit has and chaist
Furth of his bate, quhilk sat endlangis the vale:
He strekis sone his airis, and grathis his sale.
Doug. Virgil, 178, 6.

V. WAIL.

TO VALE, v. n. To descend.

Ensampl (quod sche) tak of this tofore,
That fro my quhele be rollit as a ball,
For the nature of it is euermore
After an hicht to vale, and geve a fall.
King's Quair, v. 21.

It seems contr. from Fr. devall-er, id.

VALENTINE, s. The name given to the sealed letters sent by royal authority to cheftains, landholders, &c., for the purpose of apprehending disorderly persons.

"That the Justice-Clerk sall twise in the yeir,—procure the Kingis Majesties close Valentines, to be sent to the Maisters, Landis-lords, Baillies and Cheftains of all notable limmers and thieves, charging to present them, outhir before his Majesties self, or before the Justice, and his deputies, at the day and place to be appoynted, to underly the lawes, conforme to the lawes and generall bande, and under the paines contained in the same, and to try quhat obedience beis schawin be the persones, quhom unto the saidis Valentines sall be directed." Acts Ja. VI., 1587, c. 103.

The term, as used in E., would seem to be confined to persons. Thus Valentines are defined by Blount: "Either saints chosen for special patrons for a year, according to the use of the Romanists; or men or women chosen for special loving friends by an ancient custom upon St. Valentine's day;" Glossograph.

This St. Valentine is called "priest and mart[yr]" at Rome vnder Claudius;" Hamiltoun's Catechisma, Kalendar. That he was chosen to preside over Friendship is somewhat surprising.

VALHOOSE, s. An oblong chest, especially for holding grain; a hutch, a binn.

"He that is righteous air to ane burges—may, be resoun of airship, challenge and claim—ane chimney, ane chair, ane kist, ane valhoose.—Lat. hucha, Fr. huche." Balfour's Practicks, p. 234.

[VALIABILL, adj. V. under VALE.]

VALICOT, s. Sark valicot appears to signify a shirt made of flannel or plaiding.

"She was seen by two young men at 12 hours at even, (when all persons are in their beds) standing bare-legged and in hir sark valicot, at the back of hir yard, conferring with the devill, who was in gray cloaths." C. K. Sharpe's Pref. to Law's Memorials, lviii.

Evidently the same with Wylecot, q. v.

VALIENCIE, s. Strength, hardihood.

"Thair tounes, besydis St. Johnstoun, ar vnwalled, which is to be ascribed to thair—hardines, fixing all thair succouris and help in the valiencie of thair bodies." Pitcottie's Cron., Introd., xxiv.

L. B. valencia, virtus; firmitas, robur; Du Cange. O. Fr. valance, prix, valeur.

• VALISES, s. pl. Saddlebags, S. wullees.

"The country people watched them when they were alone, or but few together, and sometimes robbed them of their horses, sometimes of their valines and luggage." Hume's Hist. Doug., p. 95. V. WALLEES.

[To VALK, v. a. To wake, cause to waken, Barbour, vii. 179, Camb. MS.; pret. valknyt, awoke, vii. 210.]

VALLOUS, VELLOUS, VELUOUS, VELWUS, VELVOUS, s. Velvet; Fr. velour.

"Coft fra Thome of Yare, and deliverit to Archibald of Edmonstoun 17 Decembir, 2 elne and ane half of valloous for a fute mantill to the king, price elne 45 s." Account of expenditure for king James the 3d's person, &c., A. 1474.

VALOUR, VALURE, s. Value, Skene; Fr. valeur. Valuedom, Strathmore.

"Quhen any man is adjudged and decerned to be the native or bond-man to any maister; the maister may—take frae him all his gudes and geir, vntill the valour of foure pennies." Quon. Attach., c. 56, s. 7.

VALTER, s. Water.

"In baptisme is requyrit valter, quhilk according to the vse of the kirk should be hallouit." Nicol Burne's Disput., F. 10, a.

[VAMM, s. Flavour, odour, Shetl.; synonym. goo.]

To VAMPER, v. n. To make an ostentatious appearance, S.A., perhaps corr. from E. vapour.

VANDIE, adj. Ostentatious, Kinross-shire.

This might seem allied to C. B. gwagoneddus, which has precisely the same sense. V. Richards.

VANDIE, s. A vain, vaunting, self-conceited fellow, a braggadocio, Fife.

VANE, s. 1. A vein, [pl. vanyis, Barbour.]

Be this the Quene, with heuy thochtis vnsond,
In euery vane nurissis the grene wound.

Doug. Virgil, 96, 16.

2. A fibre, or shoot.

Welcum the lord of licht, and lampe of day,
Welcum fosterare of tendir herbis grene,
Welcum quhikkynnar of flurist flouris schene,
Welcum support of euery rute and vane,
Welcum confort of al kind frute and grane.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 403, 40.

Up has sche pullit Dictum, the herbe swete,
Of leuis rank, rypit, and wounder fare,
Wyth sproutis, spraingis, and vanyis ouer al qubare.

Ibid., 424, 23.

This seems merely a metaph. use of the same term.

VANE-ORGANIS, s. pl. Prob. the veins of the head.

To be a leiche he senyt him thair,
Quhilk mony a man might rew evirmair;
For he left nowthir sick nor sair
Unslane, or he hyne yeld.

Vane-organis he full clenely carvit.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 19.

Lord Hailes conjectures that this may denote the veins of the head. But the learned writer is undoubtedly mistaken. For the phrase is evidently borrowed from Fr. Veines organiques, which, according to Cotgr., has the same meaning with Veines iliaques, "the iliac or flank veins, two main descendent branches of the hollow vein, a right and a left one, from either of which five others issue. The right one," he says, "is opened against the dropsy, and other diseases of the liver; the left one for the passion of the spleen." There is no reason, then, for supposing, with Lord Hailes, that the operation, referred to by Dunbar, was by means of cupping glasses. The carving, or opening of the organic veins, even without the use of these glasses, seems to have been then accounted a nice and important operation.

VANIT, VANYT, part. pa. Veined, or waved.

"Item, ane coit of fresit claith of silvir, vanit with ane small inset vane of gold, lynit with blak satyne." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 34.

"Item, ane harnessing of claith of silvir, vanit about with claith of gold, with grete bukkillis and stuthis, all ourgilt with gold." Ibid. p. 53.

VANHAP, UANHAP, WANHAP, s. Misfortune, S.

"O quhat vanhap, quhat dyabolic temptatione, quhat misere, quhat maledictione, or quhat vengeance is this that has succumbit your honour, ande hes blynnit your ene fra the perspectione of your extreme rauyne?" Compl. S., p. 111.

—On the blynd craggis myscheuslye
Fast stikkis scho, choppan hard quhynnis in bye,
And on the scharp skellyis, to hir vanhap,
Smate with sic fanl, the airis in flemtris lap.

Doug. Virgil, 134, 26.

Dr. Leyden justly observes that Isl. ran signifies want, privation, as Moes. G. ran, A. S. rana; ranian, to want. Gl. Compl. V. WANE.

VANQUISH, s. A disease of sheep, S.; synonym. Pine, Pining, Daising.

"Without this resource, the young sheep were attacked by the vanquish, which consumed them entirely away." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 405.

All these names denote the same effect of the disease in wasting the strength of the animal.

"The peculiar disadvantages of it are,—the pernicious quality of a species of grass to the health of the sheep on 2 or 3 farms on the side of the Dee, infecting them with a disease called the Vanquish, i.e., it weakens, wastes, and would at last kill them, unless removed to another farm; but [they] are no sooner removed than they recover their health, and gradually their strength and fatness. This disease is of a different nature from the Rot; for rotten sheep put upon these farms (I am told) often recover." P. Kells, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc., iv. 267.

"In one or two farms a disease also prevails termed the Vanquish. It arises from feeding on dry barren moor, void of all nourishment, to which the creatures are so attached, that they will not leave it till they die of emaciation. In this disease the horns usually become red." P. Carsfairn, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc., vii. 518.

In these quotations, the designation of this disease is evidently viewed as borrowed from the E. v. It may be observed, however, that Isl. vanke is mentioned by G. Andr. as a disease of sheep. He indeed describes it as especially affecting the brain. Mutilatio sanitatis, praesertim in cerebro. Vankadr, Laesus sanitate cerebri; ovibus accidit; Lex., p. 247.

To VANT, v. a. To want.

—"The inlak quhairof will breid dirogatioun to the honour of the realme, quhilk onlie among all the christiane kingdomes will be the meane vant that civil and commendable provision of ordinar musick for recreation, and honour of thair princis." Acts Ja. VI., 1606, vol. iv, 298; i.e., "By this means want."

VARDINGARD, s. A farthingale.

"Ane wardingard of blak taffetie, the foirsirt of satine pasmentit with gold." Invent., A. 1578, p. 230.

Fr. vertugade, from Hisp. verdugado, id. As verdugadin, the Fr. diminutive from this, is rendered in Hisp. guardainfante, it appears that the last part of the word is from guarda, a guard or defence. Perhaps the first part is from Fr. vertu, Hisp. virtud, q. "a guard to virtue."

King's Quair, iv. 14.

[VARISOUNE, s. A reward, Barbour, 562.]

* VARLET, s. Used in the sense of warlock or wizard.

—"There is a house called Kebister, where a varlet or wizard lived, commonly designed Luggie," &c. Brand's Zettl., p. 110. V. KNOOP.

VARLOT, VERLOT, s. 1. An inferior servant; [E. varlet.]

The Bishops first, with Prelats and Abbottis,
With thair Clarks, servants and Varlotts;
Into ane hall, was large, richt hie, and hudge,
Thir Prelats all richte lustelie couth ludge.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R., l. 5.

2. It sometimes particularly denotes a groom.

The bisy knapis and verlotts of his stabil
About thaym stude, ful yape and seruabil.

Doug. Virgil, 409, 19.

Menage considers this as the same with Fr. valet, originally written varlet. These terms are accordingly used promiscuously in O. Fr. writings. V. Du Cange. Valetus, Tiro, operarius mercenarius. Bullet gives varlet as an Arm. word of the same sense; deriving valet from it.

Some, however, have viewed varlet as a dimin. from Su.-G. war, Germ. wer, Lat. vir, a man; as it does not merely denote a servant, but a stripling.

Rudd. observes that E. varlet "of old was taken in a good sense for yeomen and yeomen servants, as in a repealed Stat. 20 of Rich. II. of England." Varlet, jeune homme, jeune galant; Gl. Rom. du la Rose.

[VARN, VARNIS, VARNYSOUN. V. under W.]

[To VARRAY, v. a. To war against, Barbour, viii. 24.]

VARSTAY, s. [Prob., same with Vairschal.]

"Ane varstay, four byrassin pottis, tua cadrowns." Aberd. Reg., A. 1535. V. 15.

To VARY, VAIRIE, v. n. Applied to one who exhibits the first symptoms of delirium, as the effect of bodily disorder; as, "I observe him vairyin' the day," Ettr. For.

[To VARY, v. a. To curse. V. WARY.]

VASIS, VAISIS, s. pl.

"The hingar of a belt with vaisis of cristell garnist with gold.—A hingar of a belt of vasis of cristall," &c. Inventories, A. 1578, p. 264.

VASKENE, VASQUINE, s.

"Of Doublettis, Vaskenis and Skirtis, &c. Item, ane doublett of blak velvot, and the vaskene of the same. Item, ane uther doublett of velvot, and the skirt of the same." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 132.

"Of chamlothe of sylk to be ane velicotte, and ane vasquine, xvii elle and half." Chalmers's Mary, i. 207.

Fr. vasquine, "a kirtle or petticoat; also a Spanish wardingale;" Cotgr. As this ancient kind of hoop is denominated Spanish, probably the term vasquine has been formed from Vascuna, the Spanish name for the people of Biscay.

VASSALAGE, WASSELAGE, s. 1. Any great achievement.

"Ane knyght of Ingland intending to do ane hardy vassalage come on ane swift hors out of the castell but armour." Bellend. Cron., B. xii., c. 12. Facinus, Boeth.

Sa weile defendyt he his men
That quha sa cuir had seyne him then
Prowe sa worthly vassalage,
And turn sa oft sythis the wisage,
He suld say he awcht weill to be
A king of a gret rewate.

Barbour, iii. 57, MS.

2. Fortitude, valour, [prowess.]

It is used by Spalding, in close connexion, apparently both in the first and second sense.

"The earl of Murray, being at Edinburgh,—rejoiced mightily at this vassalage done by his men.—How soon James Grant came to Edinburgh, he was admired and looked upon as a man of great vassalage." Troubles, i. 14.

"This Alexander Carron be his singular vassalage slew sindry of thir conspiratouris with ane crukit swerd afore the King, & was callit thairfore Skrimegeour, that is to say, ane scharp fechter." Bellend. B. xii., c. 15. Ob singularem virtutem; Boeth.

War he nocht owtrageous hardy,
He had nocht wunabasytly
Se smertly sene his awantage.
I drede that his gret wassalage,
And his trawail may bring till end
That at men quhile full litill kend.

Barbour, vi. 22, MS.

Fr. vassalage is used in the old romances, as denoting valour; and, a valiant or worthy deed; Cotgr. The reason of this use of the term, according to Rudd., is, "that at first lands were given by superiors to vassals for military service, and these were best rewarded, who signalized themselves by their valour: the same way as Miles and Knight came to be titles of honour."

[VASSAND, s. Weazand, Barbour, vii. 584.]

VAST, s. A great quantity or number; as, "He has a vast o' grund;" "They keep a vast o' servants;" Aug.

A vast o' fowk a' round about,
Come to the feast; they din'd thereout.

Piper of Peebles, p. 14.

[VAT, v. pres. I know. V. WAT.]

[VATH, s. Danger, peril, Barbour, v. 418. Dan. vaade, id.]

[VATN, s. A fresh-water lake, Shetl. Isl. vatn, id.]

To VAUCE, v. a. To stab, to kill.

Hidder belife sal cum cruell Pirrus,
Quhilk vaucys the son before the faderis face,
And gorris the fader at the altere but grace.

Doug. Virgil, 61, 4.

"From Fr. fausse, pierced, run or thrust through, fossus vel confossus; vel a fauch-er, to mow, cut down, as the Lat. demetere caput ense;" Rudd.

VAUDIE, WADY, adj. 1. Gay, showy, S.B., used in the same sense with E. gaudy.

2. Vain, Aberd.

Then all the gieglets, young and gaudy,
Sware ————— I might be wady—

Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 40.

3. It sometimes denotes any thing great or uncommon, Ang.

This, I suppose, is from the show made, or the attention attracted, by an object of this description.

4. Cheerful, gay, Aberd.

Thus must we be sad, whilst the traitors are vaudie,
Till we get a sight o' our ain bonny laddie.

Jacobite Relics, ii. 70.

She says I'm glad 'at ye're eae wadie
Ye sat aae douff an' dowie a' day
Wi' me the ben.

W. Beattie's Poems, p. 7.

—Cummers aled, and hurl'd as weel
On ice, as on vady chiel.

Piper of Peebles, p. 7.

VOL. IV.

E. gaudy seems the same with our vaudie, with this difference, that the latter retains the Gothic form. Skinner derives the former from Lat. gaudere, to rejoice, or Fr. gaude, a yellow flower.

VAUENGEOUR, s. An idler, a vagabond.

"To cause idill men vauengouris to laubour for thair leuing, for the eschewing of vicia and idilnes,—it is thoct expedient—that thair be schippis and buschis maid in all burrowis and townis within the realme;—and in ilk burcht of the rialtie that the officiaris of the burcht mak all the stark idill men within thair boundis to pass with the said schippis for thair wagis;—and gif the said idill men refusis to pas that thay banis thame the burgh." Acts Ja. IV., 1493, Ed. 1814, p. 235.

—"To cause idill men vauengouris to laubour for thair leuing for the eschewing of vicia and idilnes, and for the common profit and vniversall weill of the realme; it is thoct expedient," &c. Acts Ja. II., 1493, c. 81, Edit. 1566.

Apparently formed from L. vacillum, pecus vagans, O. E. wayf; whence ways-iare, relinquere. V. WATF.

[To VAUER, v. n. To waver, flutter; to wander, go astray, Barbour, vii. 111; vauer-yng, s., swerving, vi. 5847.]

VEADGE, s. Voyage.

—"And four shillingis mony foirsaid to be payit be straingeris for ilk veadge," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 585.

* VEAL, s. Used to denote a calf. V. VEIL.

VEAND, adj. Superannuated, Teviotdale.

VEEF, adj. Brisk, lively, Roxb.; the same with VIFE, q. v.

VEEM, s. 1. Expl., "a close heat over the body, with redness in the face, and some perspiration," Ayrs.

2. "In a veem,—exalted in spirits," Gall. Enc. This is undoubtedly the same with Feim, id., S.B.

P 4

VEES, s. Some kind of disease.

—The weam-ill, the wild-fire, the vomit, & the vees.
Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 14.

V. FEYE.

Teut. veese signifies delirium; Isl. vea, tumultuarius impetus et gestus, from vea-a, cum impetu ferri. But as, in this poem, there is a strange mixture of the diseases of man and beast, it may rather be corr. from E. vives, a disease in horses, in which there is an inflammation of the glands under the ear. O. E. vives, id. Palagraue.

[VEESICK, s. A ballad, a song, Shetl. Dan. vise, id.]VEIL, s. Used to denote a calf.

"Ane article for slauchter of veilis, and lambis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 30.

Our forefathers, as has been often remarked, adopted the Fr. idiom, in speaking of the smaller animals used as butcher-meat. Instead of sheep they spoke of muttons, and of veals instead of calves.

Fr. veau, a calf; from Lat. vitulus, id.

VEIR, VER, WERE, WAIR, VOR, s. The spring.

This wes in ver, quhen wynter tid,
 With his blastis hidwyns to bid,
 Was our drywyn: and byrdis smale,
 As turturis and the nyctingale,
 Begouth rycht sarielly to syng.

Barbour, v. 1, MS.

In that ilk buk he teichis vs full rycht,
 The world begouth in veir baith day and nycht.
Doug. Virgil, ProL 160, 18.

Fresche vere to burgioun herbis and suet flouris,
 The hote somer to nuris corne al houris.
Ibid., 308, 18.

"In Galloway they yet say wair," Rudd.

"It has long been remarked in Orkney, that if a man and a dog land upon some of the islands in vor-time, i.e., Spring, almost all the pregnant sheep take to running, and run till they fall down dead. On inquiry, I found that this was only in holms." Neill's Tour, p. 58. The radical term seems to have been very generally diffused.

Isl. vor, Su.-G. vaar, Lat. ver, Gr. εἰς, Gael. carrach, id. One writer ascribes an Egyptian origin to this word. The Egyptians, he says, having no occasion for any kind of manure, because the land was sufficiently fertilized by the overflowing of the Nile, "it was ordered, that all the rotten straw, mouldy corn, dung, &c., should be gathered and set on fire the first of February.—This day, called the lighted wisps and fires, or, the feast of the purification of the air, was proclaimed by an Isis and a Horus.—The Horus was called our or ourim, the fire or firebrands; from whence that season of the year has been ever since called over, or wer, or ver, the Spring." Meagher's Popish Mass, p. 178. V. VOR.

Pece here is, probably, the same with Py, signifying cloth, as expl. above, p. 209 and 211, Pr-DOUBLET.

[VEM, s. Spot, stain, Barbour, xv. 250, Camb. MS. A.-S. wam, id.]VENALL, VINELL, s. An alley, a lane, S.

[To VENCUSS, v. a. To vanquish, Barbour, xi. 134, Camb. MS.]VENDACE, VENDICE, s. The Gwiniad, salmo Lavaretus, Linn. S.

"It is affirmed by the fishermen, that there are fifteen or sixteen different kinds fit for the table, among which there is one that, from every information that can be obtained, is peculiar to that loch [Lochmaben], as it is to be found no where else in Britain. It is called the Vendice or Vendace, some say from Vendois in France, as being brought from thence by one of the Jameses, which is not very probable, as it is found by experience to die the moment that it is touched, and has been attempted to be transported to other lochs in the neighbourhood, where it has always died." P. Lochmaben, Dumfr. Statist. Acc., vii. 236.

This account is evidently incorrect. For this is the Powan of Lochlomond, and the Gwiniad of Wales. Pennant, describing the Gwiniad, says:

"It is the same with the Ferra of the lake of Geneva, the Schelly of Hulse water, the Pollen of Lough Neagh, and the Vangis and Jurangis of Loch Mabon. The Scotch have a tradition that it was first introduced there by the beauteous queen, their unhappy Mary Stuart; and as in her time the Scotch court was much frenchified, it seems likely that the name was derived from the French, vendoice, a dace, to which a slight observer might be tempted to compare it from the whiteness of its scales. The British name Gwiniad, or whiting, was bestowed on it for the same reason." Zool., iii. 268. V. POWAN.

VENENOWS, WENENOUS, VENESUM, adj. Venomous, Lat. venenosus.

To VENT, v. a. To sell, to vend. Ventit, part. pa., synon. with Sauld, or perhaps as conveying an idea somewhat different, that of being set forth.

"—Off the custome and exayias, of the soume of four pundis—of ilk tune of wyne to be toppit, ventit, and sauld in smallis within the said burgh." Acts Ja.
VI., 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 669.

Vended is elsewhere expl. by sold. "The taxmen of the town—pursue Straiton for what ale he brewed and vented or sold within the town of Edinburgh," &c.
Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 726.

To VENT, v. n. To emit smoke, well or ill;
as, "That lum vents very ill," S.

VENT, s. 1. Progress, speed; as, "Are ye comin' ony thing gude vent the day?" Are ye coming speed? a question regarding any piece of work, Roxb.

Borrowed perhaps from the sale of goods; as L. B.
vent-us is used in this sense.

2. A chimney, as being a place of egress for the smoke, S.

3. The vent of a fowl, the anus, Dumfr.

4. To tak vent, to have currency.

"—Remittis to thair consideratioun—concerning—the copper money, how the same shall tak vent and pas in payment." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 377.

VENTAILL, s. The breathing part of a helmet; Fr. ventaille.

He braidit up his ventail,
That cloist wes clene.

Gawan and Gol., iii. 17.

Mr. Pinkerton renders this "visor." But this is distinguished from the other.

sented," Cotgr.

VERES. V. VERNAGE.

[To VERG, v. a. To soil, defile; part. pa.
vergit, striped with dirt, Shetl.]

VERGE, VERGER, s. 1. A belt or stripe of planting, Clydes.

2. An orchard.

The greshoppers amangis the vergers gnappit.
Palace of Honour, Prol. 1

Fr. vergier, Arm. vergé, id. from Lat. viridarium, a green place inclosed.

VERGELT, WERGELT, s. Ransom, or restitution legally made for the commission of a crime.

"The Vergelt, or ransom of ane thief, throw all Scotland is threttie kye; and ane young kow, quithier he be ane frie man or ane servant." Reg. Maj., B. iv. c. 19.

L. B. wergeld-um, wergeld-um, wargild-a, &c. A.-S. wergeld, the payment of the were, or price at which the life of every individual was estimated, according to his rank; geld, gilt, signifying payment.

The term were has evidently had its rise from A.-S.
wer, Moes-G. wair, a man; Su.-G. waer, Lat. vir, id.

Lat. vir, seems to have had a Gothic origin.

Su.-G. waereld, wereld, wergeld, is the price of a man who has been killed, or the fine paid for killing him;

otherwise denominated Manshot. Germ. vergeltung, compensation; vergelt-en, to satisfy, to compensate.

Wergylt theof is a phrase used in the Laws of Iva. c.
72, as denoting a thief adjudged to pay the vergelt.

This was also called Theiftbote.

Verelius, however, gives a different view of Lat. ver- gild, which must be radically the same. He expl. it:

Mulcta solvenda secundum aestimationem damni dati.
—a verde, pretio, i.e., the worth or value of any thing.

But he seems mistaken; especially as this opposes the Su.-G. idiom.

The Welsh had their gwerth, corresponding to vergelt.
It "was not only a compensation for murder or boun-dage; but for all species of injuries." V. Pennant's

Tour in Wales, p. 274.

[VERIOUR, s. A warrior, Barbour, v. 85.]

Wallace, iii. 17, MS.

Vernage, Edit. 1758.

Tyrwhitt thinks that vernage, as mentioned by Chaucer, was probably a wine of Crete, or of the neighbouring continent. V. his Note, ver. 9681. L. B. vernachia, vernac-ia, vini species, vernac-ium, Petr. de Crescentia, Lib. iv., cap. 4, cujus interpreti Vin de Garnache dicitur. Chaucer uses verre in the same sense; Fr. id. Lat. vitrum.

VERRAY, adj. Very, Aberd. Reg.; [true, Barb., ii. 87.]

VERRAYMENT, s. Truth. V. WERRAYMENT.

VERT, WERT, s. A term used in old charters, to signify a right to cut green wood; Fr. verd, Lat. viridis.

"—Cum iurca, fossa, sock, sack, thole, thane, wrack, wair, waith, vert, veth, venison, infang thief, outfang thief, pit et gallows." Charter, Q. Anne, 1707. State, Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 310. V. VRIDEKR.

VERTER, VERTUE, VERTEW, VERTESIT, s.
1. Virtue, virginity, S.

2. Thrift, industry.

"It is necessar that in everie schyre at leist thair be ane schooll or hous of vertue erected.—Any parcellis of cloth, sergis, &c., to be transported beyond seas, and made in the saidis houses of vertue to be frie of all custome—for fyfteeen yeiris nixt." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 392, 393.

The word, as used in the same sense, is pronounced virtue, Loth., Roxb.

"His landlord, digging stones at the end of that village, told the officers that he was afraid the soldiers would plunder his cottage; they said, 'Poor man, you deserve encouragement for your virtue; be not afraid for your house, for we shall order two soldiers to stand at the door, that none may enter to wrong you.'" Life of Peden, Edinr., 1727, p. 119.

3. A charm; [also power to charm.]

Vertesit occurs in an old edition of a foolish song, The Tailor came to clout the claise. In O. Fr. vertuosité is equivalent to vertu, qualité; Lat. virtus; Roquefort.

To HAE VERTER. To possess, or be supposed to possess virtue, by which certain diseases may be cured, ibid.

VERTER-WELL, s. A medicinal well, Selkirks.; corrupted from virtue-well, i.e., a well possessing virtue, or the power of healing.

VERTUOUS, adj. Thrifty, industrious, S.

I've heard my honest uncle often say,
That lads should a' for wives that's vertuous pray.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 82.

Sir W. Scott has kindly furnished me with the following amusing illustration:—

"A young preacher, who chose to enlarge to a country congregation on the beauty of Virtue, was surprised to be informed of an old woman, who expressed herself highly pleased with his sermon, that her daughter was the most virtuous woman in the parish, for that week she had spun sax spyndles of yarn."

[VERTESIT. V. VERTER.]

VERTGADIN, s. A farthingale.

"—The farthingales came first in when the Queen Regent went to Saint Andrews, after the battle of Pinkie, and were then called Vertgadins." The Abbot, iii. 215.

O. Fr. vertugadin; from Hisp. verdugado, id. Dict. Trev. V. VARDINGARD.

VERTIE, VAIRTIE, adj. Early stirring, early at business, Buchan.

Archie, fu' vertie, owre the moorlan' spangs
Ilk strype and stank; nae doubt he itchin' lango
To crack wi' San'.—

Tarras's Poems, p. 2.

By the change of a letter of the same organ, from Teut. vaerdigh, veerdigh, expeditus, accinctus, promptus, agilis. In Alem. indeed, it retains the same form with the S. word; vertig (also faertig) paratus ad iter, Germ. fertig, id.; vertig-en, praeparare. The root is far-an, var-an, ire, profiscisci; whence vert, vart, incessus, ferti, via. Ferd, expeditio, A.-S. MS. ap. Schilter. This adj. is also originally the same with Su.-G. faerdig, paratus. I need scarcely add, that the transition from a state of complete preparation to that of being early astir, is very slight; the one naturally suggesting the other.

To VERTIES, v. a. To warn, Shetl.; undoubtedly an abbrev. of E. Advertise.

VESCHELL, s. Vassal, slave.

There was the cursit empiour Nero,
Of everilk vice the horribill veschell.

Lyndsay's Dreame.

VESCHIARIS, s. pl. Washer - women.
"Veschiaris & ladinsteris," Aberd. Reg.

Veschiaris must be merely the term washers disguised. Ladinsteris seems literally to signify cleansers; from A.-S. ladian, emundere, extergere, purgare; whence ladung, purgatio. From literal purification it was transferred to that which is of a moral description. L. B. lad-a, purgatio, lad-are, lad-iare, purgare, crimen eluere. Ster is the common A.-S. termination of names of trades. V. STER.

To VESIE, VESY, VISIE, VISYE, WESY, WISIE, v. a. 1. To visit.

Be seruent luf kendillit in grete desire
Oure cuntre men to vesy, and with them talk,
To know thir strange casis, on I stalk
From the port, my nauy left in the raid.

Doug. Virgil, 77, 50.

"Thir tua princis vait oft to visye the feildis to tak ther recreatione, ande to pas-til hounting, ande til vthir gammis, conuenient for ther nobilité." Compl. S., p. 19, 20.

She past to visie Sir Clariodus.
Clariodus & Meliades, MS. Gl. Compl., p. 383.

2. To examine accurately, S.

Twa spys he send to vesy all that land.
Wallace, iv. 219, MS.

The king stude vesiand the wall, maist vailyeand to se.
Gawan and Goll., l. 19.

And vesyand all about I se at last
This nany of youris drawand biddler fast.
Doug. Virgil, 90, 19.

"Prenters could not prent ony buikes, or vther thing, but that quhillk is visied and tryed, havand the Kingis licence." Skene, Table to Acts of Parl., vo. Prenters.

3. To send good or evil judicially; as E. visit signifies.

His fadyr than was weseyed with seknes;
God had him tayne in till his lestand grace.
Wallace, vii. 331, MS.

4. To take aim, to mark, S. Fr. viser, id.

Lat. vis-o, to visit; also, to survey; from rid-co, vis-um. Isl. vis-a, monstrare; Alem. uuis-on, visitare.

VESLAR, s. A surveyor or examiner.
"Cerciouris, vesiaris," &c. Aberd. Reg.

[VEST, adj. Western, Barbour, xvi. 550, Camb. MS.]

VESTREEN, s. The west, Shetl.; Isl. vest-traenn, occidentalis.

VETCHER, s. A man of a very suspicious appearance, Fife.

Teut. vaetech, vitiosus saporis aut odoris infectus ex olido vel mucido dolio; perhaps used in a moral sense. Belg. vacht, "having a taste of the barrel—insipid, nauseous," Sewel. Isl. vaelt, malus geffius; G. Andr.

VETIT, adj. Forbidden; Lat. vetit-us.

Grete was the lust that thou had for to fang
The frute vetit, throu thy fals counsailing
Thou gert mankynde consent to do that wrang.
Ballad, A. 1508, S. P. R., iiii. 132.

VEUG, s. [Prob., filthy, lecherous.]

The sparrow veug he vesyit for his vile dedis,
Lyand in lecherye, lasch, unlouable.

Howlate, l. 18.

This may be the same as rogie, vain. But it seems rather to signify, amorous; from A.-S. fog, conjunctio, whence fojere, a wooer; Germ. fug, conjunctus; ghifuog, copulae, Gl. Boxhorn.

To VEX, v. n. To be sorry. I was like to vex,
I was disposed to be sorry, Ang.

VEX, s. A trouble, a vexation, South of S.

"My mother gar'd me learn the Single Carritch, whilk was a great vex." Tales of my Landlord, iv. 160.

VEYLE, adv. Well.

Ye suld for owtyn his demyng,
Haif chosyn yow a king, that mycht
Have haldyn veyle the land in rycht.

Barbour, l. 118, MS.

VIAGE, VEYAGE, s. 1. A voyage; pron. q. ve-age, S. O.

"That nane—cary ony victuallis, talloun, or flesche furth of this realme to vther partis except samekill at salbe thair necessare victualling for thair veyage vnder the pane of escheting of the said victuall," &c. Acts Mary, 1555, Ed. 1814, p. 495.

—"Als of half a Danskin viage of the said auchtane parte," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1492, p. 275.

2. A journey, S. Bp. Doug. uses it in this sense.

["Stop the viage," Marshall Keith.]

"Ital. viaggio, Fr. voyage, iter;" Rudd.

[VIAND, s. Disposition, temper, Shetl.]

VICE NAIL. A screw nail.

"Item, a grete vice nail, maid of siliver." Inventories, p. 11. V. VYSE.

VICIAT, part. adj. Defective.

"And ay as ony pairt of the rent of Dumfermling now riciat salbe recoverit, and hir hienes in peceable possessionn thairof, alsmeikle of the said compensatioun—salbe relevit and returns to be intronettit with be his hienes comptrollar to his Maiesties awin vae." Acts Ja. VI., 1593, Ed. 1814, p. 25.

Fr. vic-ier, to mar; ricit, imperfect; vice, defect, imperfection, default; Cotgr.

VICTUAL, VITTAL, s. Grain of any kind; hence victualler, one who deals in grain, a corn-factor, S.; pron. vittal, S.

"At the Reformation, the stipends of the Protestant clergy were fixed to be paid at the rate of so many chalders of victual (the general term in Scotland for all kinds of grain), part of which was paid in kind, and part in money, converting the chalders, in the rich counties, at L100 Scotch the chalders, and at L80 Scotch in the less fertile ones." P. Alloa, Clackman. Statist. Acc., viii. 643, N.

In a poor country like Scotland, it is not surprising that the term, which originally signifies food or means of sustenance in general, should be limited to the fruit of the husbandman's labours.

BUCHAN-VITTAL. 1. Applied to meal of which the "two part is aits, and the third bear," i.e., consisting of two thirds of oats and one third of barley, S. B.

2. Metaph. transferred to a person on whom one can place no dependence; as, "He's Buchan vittal that," S. B.

VIER, VYER, s. [Prob., a corr. of ether, other.]

They'll witness that I was the vier
Of all the dogs within the shire;
I'd run all day and never tyre.

Watson's Coll., i. 68.

Perhaps one who ried with all the rest, as being able to surpass them.

"The appello' than sall lay on his hand, and swear the grit ay' all out, that all is tiew that he has said upon that fals untrew man, efter the forme of his appellatioun, and that he wait weil the vyer hes a fals untrew quarrell to defend." Sir D. Lindsay's Tracts of Heraldry, MS. V. Compl. S. Prel. Diss., p. 55.

This seems merely the word ether, other (alius), the letter y being ridiculously substituted for the ancient th. This appears from the use of it in the same sentence, and elsewhere in the MS.

[VIEVERS, s. pl. Provisions, food, Shetl. Fr. vivres, id.]

VIFDA, s. Beef or mutton dried without salt. V. VIVDA.

VIFELIE, adv. In a lively manner.

And ilk as are with wickednes bewitched,
I canne not how vifelis they be tuitched.
Hume, Chron., & P., iii. 376.

V. VIVE.

[VIF, WIF, s. A woman, Barbour, iv. 302.]

VILCOUS, adj. "Leud, vilcous & scandalus lye;" Aberd. Reg.; perhaps immoral, from Su.-G. will, error, and kios-a, to choose.

VILITE', VILITIE, s. Filth, pollution.

"And als becaus of the vilite that cumis be slaying of flesche be the flescheouris duelland on the east syde [of Leith Wynde] and temyng of interellis of beistia, generand corruptiouns, it is therefor ordinat that the samis be foribiddin—vnder the pane of the confiscatiouns of all sic flesche slaine be thame in maner for-said." Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 374. Vilitie, Ed. 1566. This act is entitled, "For policy in Edinburgh."

Fr. vilett, vileness, baseness.

[VILFULL, adj. Willing, anxious, Barbour, ix. 625, Camb. MS.]

[VILL, adj. Wild, at a loss, Barbour, vii. 2, Camb. MS.]

[To VIMMER, v. n. To quiver, tremble, Shetl.; part. pr. vimmering, used also as a s.]

To VINCUS, v. a. To vanquish.

"How the Sabinis and Aruncis war vincust." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 144. Fr. vainc-re, id.

VINDICT, s. Vengeance, revenge, Lat. vindict-a.

"Ye would do well to examine more narrowly than Laban searched Jacob's tents,—lost that—the happy hoped-for event of this solemn meeting be woefully crost, as Simson and Levi pretending religion, but intending their own private vindict, were accused by him, who otherwise would have blessed them." Guild. V. Spalding, i. 301.

To VIOLENT, v. a. To do violence to.

"The providence of God in things here beneath moveth suitably to the nature of inferior causes, whether necessary, free, or contingent, not violenting them, or otherways making use of them, but according to their nature, so that though the event be necessary, and infallible with a respect to the first cause, the determined counsel of God, it is nevertheless contingent in respect of its nearest cause." Fleming's Fulfilling, p. 80.

"But certainly the procedure of this Period, in violenting people into the Declaration, Bond and Test, ought for ever to stop the mouths of the Episcopal Faction, as to their complaints of Presbyterian severities in pressing the covenants, which they never did by a Highland Host, when the power was in their hand." Wodrow's Hist., i. 469.

Fr. violent-er, to force, to break into by force.

VIOLER, VIOLAR, s. One who plays on the fiddle or violin, S.

"One of the Town of Edinburgh's soldiers—with his bayonet stabs a violer named Watson, because he was serenading in the night-time with his fiddle in the street, contrary to an act discharging it, and gave him ill words." Fountainh., i. 364.

"Violaris: Mekill Thomas Hudson, &c. Item, to the violaris, and thair servandis, daylie vij gret bred," &c. Housh. Book, E. of Mar, 1567, Chalmers's Mary, i. 177, 178.

VIRE, s. "The arrow called a quarrel, used only for the crossbow;" Fr. vire, id. Rudd.

Th. virgin spent on swiftlie as ane vire.

Doug. Virgil, 148, 8.

Vyre is used by Gower in the same sense.

As a vyre:

Whiche flyeth out of a myghty bowe
Away he fledde for a throwe,
As he that was for loue wode,
Whan that he sawe howe it stode.

Conf. Am., Fol. 23, p. 1, c. 1.

V. WYN.

VIRE, s. "A great beauty," Orkn.

VIRGE THRED. Thread of a particular description.

"Ane French rapar, with ane Scottis skawbert thairone, gardit with blak hiltis—and the neif, wewpit with blak virge thred." Aberd. Reg., A. 1543, V. 18.

This must certainly be viewed as a corr. of E. Birges Thred. V. BIRGET, BIRGES.

VIRGUS, s. "Some fancied liquid, considered to be the sourest of any; It's as sour as virgus;" Gall. Enc.

This is obviously verjuice, Fr. verjus, "acid liquor expressed from crab-apples." This provincial term has probably been imported from the north of E. For Johns. adds: "It is vulgarly pronounced varges." Tent. verd-ings, q. viride jus.

VIRIDEER, s. The keeper of the grass or green wood in a forest.

"And gif he be found the third time with grene wode; he sall be presented to the virideer (the keiper of the grene wode and grasse) in the chief place of the keeping of the wode, and sall be put vnder aucht pledges." Forrest Lawes, c. 11, s. 4.

L. B. viridar-ius, Fr. verdeur. In the E. laws, verderer.

"This word Vert taketh the name of Vert, a viriditate, of greenesse, for it is alwaies vnderstood but of such things, as doe growe within the Forrest and are greene, it is called in our olde English Greene Heve, in Latin it is called Viridis, and thereof is framed this word Viridarius, a Verderer, or one that doeth take the charge of the Vert or of Greene Heve." Manwood's Forrest Lawes, c. 6, s. 5, Fol. 37, b.

VIRLAT, s. The same with Valet.

"The treasurer paid David Rizzio, viriat in the Queen's Chamber L89, on the 8th of January 1561-2." Chalmers's Mary, i. 75.

VIRLE, s. A small ring put round any body, to keep it firm, S. ferrule.

Sax good fat lambe, I sold them ilka clute,
At the West Port, and bought a winsome flute,
Of plum-tree made, with iv'ry virles round.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 67.

O. E. vyroll, Fr. virolle; Palsgrau. E. verrouil, a bolt for a door, seems to claim the same origin, Lat. ferr-um.

[VIRPA, s. A thin kind of sowens, Shetl.]

VIRR, VIR, s. Force, impetuosity, S. B. synon. with Birr, q. v.

When he was set, I ga'e the fire a stir,
And Bessy ran, and brought some whins, wi' vir,
Frae out the nook, and made a hearty bleeze.
Skirref's Poems, p. 141.

"Syne we laid our heads together, an' at it wi' virr."
Journal from London, p. 5. V. BEIR, s.

The lads, unwilling yet to stir,
Fire a' their morning guns wi' vir.
W. Beattie's Tales, p. 35.

Wi' double vir the drummers drum,
The piat-stoups clatter.
Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 35.

This word is more classical than might seem at first view. It has been in use for more than two centuries. With respect to the sluice of a dam it is said :

—"It may not be stoppit, nor be troublit he ony person, be altering of the said clouse, or drawing of the said clouse, or drawing of the water fra the said water-passage or dam, or be making of the course of the water to be of greiter force or strength than of befoir, or yit to be of less force or virre than of befoir, quhairthrow the said miln is or may be mair haistie or mair slaw in grinding of cornis nor scho had wont to be in times bygane." A. 1563, Balfour's Pract., p. 493.

[To VIRR, v. n. To move or walk with force, Banffs.]

VIRROCK, s. Quoted by Mr. Pinkerton as not understood.

Ane pyk-thank in a prelots chayse,
With his wawil feit, and virrok tais,
With hoppir hippis, and hanches narrow.—
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 110.

Dr. Leyden, Gl. Compl. S., justly observes, that it "signifies a corn, or bony excrescence on the feet; is in common use, and pronounced virrok;" p. 380. He derives it from Lat. verruc-a, a wart. The name is sometimes applied to boils. I have heard it also expl., a pimple on the sole of the foot or heel, which occasions great pain, and often grows to a considerable size. Thus it is distinguished from a corn. It is sometimes written wyrock.

Ther is not in this fair a flyrock,
That has upon his felt a wyrock,
Knoul taes, or moulis in nae degre,
But ye can hyde them.

Dunbar, Evergreen, i. 254.

A.-S. wearrig, wearrigt, callosus, nodosus; Teut. weer, callus, nodus, tuber; Gl. Sibb. The affinity of wyrock to the latter is rendered highly probable from a circumstance to which the ingenious Glossarist has not adverted. Teut. weer-ooghe denotes a wart or pimple on the eye-lid, a stythe, or S. stie; chalazion, exiguum tuberculum in palpebris, (Kilian); from weer and ooghe, oculus. This seems to have been improperly applied to denote a pimple on the foot.

VIRTUE, s. Thrift, Loth. V. VERTUE.

WISE. V. WEYSE.

[VISIE, VIZY, VIZZIE, s. and v. V. VESIE.]

TO TAK A VIZZIE. To take an aim; as, to look along a gun, with the eye, before firing it off, S.

"Logan took a vizy, and fired, but his gun flashed in the pan." The Steam-Boat, p. 143.

William M'Nish, a taylor slee—
Rouz'd at the thought, charg'd his fuzee;

Took but ae vizzy wi' his ee.—
Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 52.

VIZZIE-DRAP, VISSIE, s. The knob or sight on the muzzle end of a gun, by which aim is taken, S. Fr. visée, aim.

* VISION, s. A thin, meagre person; as, "Puir thing! she's grown a mere vision," S.; a secondary use of the E. word as denoting "a spectre, a phantom."

TO VISITE, v. a. To examine, to survey; used as synon. with Visie; Fr. visiter, id.

"Ordanis—Mr. Johnne Hay, &c. to visite the laws and actis maid in this present parliament," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 569.

VISORNE, s. A mask or visor.

"Jhone Knox answered, The time that hes bene is evin now befoir my eyis; for I sie the pure flock in no les danger than it hes bein at ony tyme before, except that the Devill hes gottin a visorne upon his face." Knox's Hist., p. 341.

VISSIER, s. One who authoritatively inspects or examines.

—"The said Sir James Balfour of Pettindreich knycht, viisier, and ressaver," &c. Inventories, A. 1566, p. 175.

[VIT, VITTING, s. V. WIT.]

TO VITCH, v. a. To visit, Shetl. In Isl. the synonyme is vit-ia.

* VITIOUS, adj. Fierce, fiery, ill-tempered; as, "He's a vitious beast that; I wiss he dinna break that puir man's neck that's on him," S. [Vituous weather, stormy weather, Clydes.]

VITIOUSNESS, s. Fierceness, unmanageableness, S.

VIUE, VIVE, adj. 1. Lively, representing to the life, vivid, S. Fr. vif.

"So wee see the vive imago of a faithfull Pastor, in the Lord Jesus: he will give his life for the sheepe, as hee saith himselfe." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 16. In this sense it is used as an E. word.

2. Brisk, vigorous, S.

3. Applied to what may be seen clearly; as, "vive prent," letter-press which may be read easily, S. B.

VIVDA, s. Beef or mutton hung and dried without salt, Orkney.

"They seldom salt their meat, but either smoke it in the house, or dry it in the air. When preserved in this latter manner, it is known by the name of vivda." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 49.

"Vivda, (dried beef) hams, and pickled pork, flew after each other into empty space, smoked grease were restored to the air, and cured fish to the sea." The Pirate, iii. 32.

We learn from a very intelligent writer, that "Vivda, or unsalted mutton, hung up in their buildings till it was hardened and dried, is no longer known." Hubbert's Shetl. Isl., p. 470.

"Vivda, flesh dried in a Skee without being salted." MS. Explic. of Norish words. V. SKEO.

Most probably from Isl. veif-a, a vibrare; Dan. vift-e, to fan, to winnow; the substance being dried by the action of the wind.

VIVELY, adv. 1. Clearly, in a vivid light, S.

But gin ye like to ware the time, then ye
How a' the matter stood, shall vively see.
Ross's Helenore, p. 69.

2. Distinctly, applied to objects of sound.

"Mr. Andrew Leisk, minister at Ellon, told me that his wife and family, sitting at supper in his own house, heard tucking of drums vively, sometimes appearing near hand, sometimes far off; and upon the 7th of February it was written here to Aberdeen, that Kenton battle of Banbury, wherein his majesty was victorious, has been in vision foughten seven sundry times since syne." Spalding, ii. 71.

VIVERIS, VIEVERS, s. pl. Provisions for the sustenance of life, victuals, S. Fr. vivres.

"Item, if it sall be asked, That thair layed money sall have passage for thair viveris? Ye sall reason the comoditie and incomoditie thareof with the counsaill." Knox's Hist., p. 222.

"He sall come [to the hoist] weill furnished with siluer to bye vievers for his sustentation and not in hope to burling the cuntrie quhereby he passes, without making of payment." 1 Stat. Rob. L, c. 5, s. 6.

VIVUAL, adj. 1. Living, alive, Ayrs.

2. Used to express one's identity; as, "the vivual person," the self same person, ibid. Hence,

O. Fr. vivuallie, vivant; plein de force; Roquesfort.

To VIZZIE, v. a. To view accurately. V. VISIE and VESIE.

[VMBESTOUNT, adv.] Sometimes, Barbour, vii. 398. A.-S. ymbe, about, and stund, a time.]

VMBEKEST, VMBECAST, pret. Explored; or perhaps, surveyed.

He vmbekest the countrie outwith the toun,
Ha [he] saw na thing on steir
Nouther far nor neir—

Rauf Coilyear, B. ij. B.

[Isl. sm, around, kasta, to cast.]

[VMQUHILE, adv.] Sometimes. V. UMQUHILE.]

VNBEGGIT, part. pa. Not asked by begging, or as alms.

—"To see quhat they may be maid content of thair awin consentie to accept daylie to leif on vnbeggit," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1597, Ed. 1814, p. 141.

To VNBESETT, v. a. To surround.

"Sir, yonder is the laird of Buccleugh, and the theives of Annerdaill with him, to vnbesett your grace in the way." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 320. In Ed. 1769, "to vnbeset your grace from the gate," p. 210. The latter mode of expression would rather seem to bear the sense of block up.

It is most commonly used in part. pa.

"When—the said Alexander—was cuming forward with ane great armie, for the kingis support, his gaitt was vnbesett be Alexander earle of Crawford." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 105.

VNBIGGIT, part. adj. Not built upon, S.

"In all vther annuellis, to auise gif the awnaris lat-tis the ground to be vnbiggitt, quhat salbe the chaplanis part gif he may recognosce the samin or not," &c. Acts Mary, 1555, Ed. 1814, p. 439. V. BIG, v.

VNBRINT, part. adj. Not burnt.

"Item, gif samekill restis vnbrint of the haill tene-ment that aw the annuell as will pay the samin, gif the annuell may be craift compleittie." Acts Mary, 1555, Ed. 1814, p. 490.

VNBURELY, adj. Feeble; not burly.

Thar is mony toun man to tuggil is full teuch,
Thocht thair brandis be black and vnburly.
Rauf Coilyear, C. i. b.

VNCOACTED, UNCOACTIT, part. adj. Not forced, voluntary.

"I cannot refuse both the honourable and thankfull conditions to myself,—speciallie quhair thay cum of frie will vncoacted or compelled." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 34. V. COACT, COACTIT.

"Uncoactit or compallit." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. The negative particle is meant to serve both words.

VNCOME, UNCOME, [part. pa.] Not come; also, not having reached or arrived at.]

"The Congregation—had chosine fyve hundredh of thair best horsemen to prik and hold in the French vncome over the watter of Elen." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 538. "To stop the French from crossing," &c. Edit. 1723, p. 205.

"Thus thir people were stayed vncome to Aberdeen at this time, wherat the army there took great excep-tion." Spalding's Troubles, i. 159.

"Thirdly, their naughty reasons alledged for with-holding of the nobles vncome to the king, backed also with much more threatening." Ibid., p. 188.

Uncome is perhaps q. oncome, coming on or forward.

VNDEFESIT, part. adj. Without acquit-tance.

"That the said James sall content & pay to the said Johne the somme of v li contentit in the said sentence arbitrale & vndefesit tharintill." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1492, p. 273. V. DEFESSE, v.

VNDEID, adj. Alive, in the state of life.

Now thankit be Drichtine,
That ane of vs sall never hine
Vndeid in this place.

Rauf Coilyear, D. ij., a.

To VNDIRGANG, v. a. To incur, to be subjected to, [to undergo.]

"And failyeing tharof that he tak the lande to him self and vndirgang the det." Parl. Ja. III., A. 1469, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 96.

A.-S. under-gang-an, subire, to undergo.

VNDISPONIT, part. pa. Not given away.

—"At this present thair ar sindierie prelaces vacand, vnispont to onie person or personis quhatsumeir." Acts Ja. VI., 1597, Ed. 1814, p. 143.

VNDISTRUBLIT, part. pa. Undisturbed.

—"That lettres be writin to the balye of Lawdirdale, chargeing him—to kepe & defend the saide Elisabeth undistrublit in the broukin & joyssing of the samyne in tyme to cum." Act. Audit., A. 1466, p. 5.

VNDOUTABLE, adj. Indubitable, that cannot be called in question.

—"Anent the questioun—tuiching the richtis to the hospitale of Brechin callit the Massindew, clamit be the said Archibald be presentacioun of James duc of Ross, quhilk is undoutable patroune of the saymn, the lordis orlanis," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1488, p. 103.

This, although not mentioned by Johns., has been used in O. E., as Sherwood has undoubtable.

VNECERT, adj. Uncertain; Lat. incert-us.

"Tharfor the said decret of forfaltour is uncert, inept, and generale, & following and promulgate vpounne aue uncert, inept & generale libell." Acts Mary, 1543, Ed. 1814, p. 440.

VNENDIT, part. pa. Unfinished, not terminated.

"The maiste parte [majority] of thaim—sal have the ful power—to avias, determyne, tret, & conclude—al materis concerning the weillfair of our souerane lorde that ar now assynit in this present parliament & vnendit." Acts Ja. III., A. 1471, Ed. 1814, p. 100.

[VNFAIR, adj.] Foul; or perhaps as a s., ill-success, Barbour, xv. 123, Camb. MS.]

[VNFANE, UNFAYNE, adj.] Unwilling, reluctant. V. FANE.]

VNGROND, part. pa. Not grinded.

"That Thomas Kirkpatrick—sall restore—half a boll of malt engrond, price x s." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1488, p. 92.

VNHABILL, VNHABILE, UNHABLE, adj. 1. Unfit for any purpose whatsoever; used in a general sense.

"The quenis grace—hauand respect to the greit and exhorbitant derth ryssin in this realme of victuallis, &c., and vnderstandand that the occasioun thairof is because of the superfluous cheir usit commounlie in this realme alsweill amangis small as greit men, to the greit hurt of commoun weill of the samin, and dampnage to the bodie, quhilk makis aue mau vnhabill to exerce all leifull and gude warkis necessare." Acts Mary, 1551, Ed. 1814, p. 488.

2. Unfit for travelling, by reason of age or bodily indisposition.

"Gif—it be sufficientlie provin—that he is seik, impotent, or of greit age, swa that he may not travel, the Judge sould pass, or send his clerk, as he pleisis, upon the expensis of him that is vnhabile and seik, to pois [pose or interrogate closely] and ressave his aith upon sic thingis as ar referrit to the samin." Balfour's Pract., p. 361.

"All this time the marquis is stormstaid in Melgyne, old and vnhabile to travel, in so great a storm." Spalding's Troubles, i. 42.

3. Under a legal disability; used as a forensic term.

—"Decerning thairfore his dignetic, name & memorie to be extinct,—and his posteritie to be fra thine furth vnhabile to bruike offices, honour & dignetic within this realme." Acts Mary, 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 573.

VOL. IV.

The term contrasted with this, in the same act, in the form of restoration, is able.

"And sic like his posteritie & linage—to be restorit to thair ancient honour, fame & dignitie, and to be maid able to bruike and joias offices, honouris & dignitie within this realme.

VNKNAWLEGE, s. Ignorance.

"That all schireffis, &c., tak the copie of thair artickis or thair depart, at thay may not excuse thame of the vnknowledge of thair artickis." Acts Ja. III., 1483, Ed. 1814, p. 166.

VNLAY, s. Fine, the same with Unlaw.

—"At that be a punt of dittyay in tyme to cum, and at the vnlay be x li togidder with aue mendis of the partij according to the skaith," &c.—"Item, as anent the vnlay of the grene wod," &c. Acts. Ja. IV., 1503, Ed. 1814, p. 242.

VNLANDIT, adj. Not in possession of heritable property.

"Oure souerane lord movit of piety, with the counsall of his lordis, hes avisit that all the gudis movable belonging to the pure vnlandit folkis be restorit and deliverit agane." Acts Ja. IV., 1488, Ed. 1814, p. 207.

[VNLELE, adj.] Disloyal, dishonest. V. LELE.]

VNLETTIN, part. pa. Not released.

"That all—vagabondis, strang and ydill beggaris—taken wandering—be committit in ward in the common presoun, stokis or irnis, within thair iurisdiction; thair to be kept vnlettin to libertie,—quhill thay be put to the knowlege of aue assyiss." Acts Ja. VI., 1574, Ed. 1814, p. 87.

VNMORTIFYIT, part. pa. Not under a deed of mortmain.

"And the soume of the baronis to be raisit of all lordis, baronis, frehaldaris, fre tennandis, ladyis of teneis jont feftmentis, dowryis, and vtheris, quhatsumevir hafand vthouth burgh enmortifyit." Parl. Ja. III., A. 1467, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 90. V. MORTIFY.

VNORDERLY, adv. Irregularly.

"The lordis of parliament decretis—that the process of the breif of richt purchest be Robert of Spens—tuiching the landis of Kittidy, procedit & led before the Schiref of Fiff & his deputis, is vnorderly procedit," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1471, p. 16.

VNPASSING, part. pr. Not going or departing.

"In the menetyne ordanis the haill estaittis presentlie con . . . to remove in this town vnpassing furth of the samyne, quhill the parliament be—endit." Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 531.

VNPLENISSIT, part. pa. Not furnished, waste.

"Aue grete part of the realme, and specialie nere the bordouris, has bene thir mony yeris, in our souerane lordis lesse age, vnplenis-sit, and aue gret part of the inland spulyeit of thair gudis." Acts Ja. V., 1533, Ed. 1814, p. 346, 347. V. PLENIS.

VNPROUISITLIE, adv. Without previous intimation, immediately.

"Be hir vngodlie, and dishonourabill proceeding to aue pretendit mariage with him [Bothwell] sud-landlie, and vnprovisitlie thairafter, it is mai-t certaine, that scho was prenie, airt, and pairt, of the actuall deuse and deid of the foirnamit murthour of the king her lauchfull husband," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 27.

Fr. & l'improvisate, & l'improven, "suddenly, at unawares, before it was thought of, or looked for;" Cotgr.

VNRECOUNSALLIT, part. pa. Unreconciled.

"That quhatsumeuer persoun or persounis ar deuncit cursit,—and lysis thairin obstinatlie be the space of ane year, or resaisit the body of God blist and halie sacrament vnder the said cursing, vnrecounsallit to the bosum of the halie kirk, that all thair gudis mouabill throw that deid sall fall in our souerane ladyis handis be resoun of escheit," &c. Acts Mary, 1551, Ed. 1814, p. 482.

VNREMEMBRAND, part. adj. Unmindful.

—"His grace thinkis that he will nocht be vnremembrand and vngrate for the gude and thankfull seruice done to him be his saidis erlis, lordis," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 363.

VNRESPONSALL, adj. Unable to pay a fine or debt; a forensic term.

"The said third penaltie to be paid to the awner of the wod, brume, or yairdis. Bot in caiss the committar of the wrang be vnresponsall, he sall for the first falt be put in the stokkis, presoun, or yrnis, sucht dayis on breid and wattir," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1579, Ed. 1814, p. 145. V: RESPONSALL.

VNROVNGIT, part. pa. Not gnawed or fretted.

"The bailieis chargit him to take the Inglis grot vnrovngit for thre soun in pament [payment]." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. V: RONGED.

[VANSEILL, s. Misfortune, Barbour, x. 218. V: UNSELE.]

VNSHAMEFASTNESSE, s. Shamelessness.

And take from mee vnshamefastnesse,
And God and man to lous and dreid.
Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. 70.

VNTRANSUMYT, part. pa. Not transcribed.

"William Adamsons—oblist him that he sall bring the writingis laillie maid be our souerane lorde vnder his gret seile to the toune of Myddleburghe, and deliuere the samin agane to the kingis grace and lordis within xx dais nixt to cum without langare delay, vntransumyt anctentily." Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 313. V: TRANSUMPT.

VNTRAISTIE, adj. Faithless, unworthy of trust.

Traist the vntraistie quha that will,—
For sic my selfe I will not kill.
Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 201.

VNWAUKIT, part. pa. Not fulfilled.

"Robert Crostale—sall content & pay to Elspeth Batlare a wob of tanny claith,—for ilke elne xij s., deliuert be the said Elspeth to the said Robert in vnwaikit claith." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1488, p. 95.

[VNWITT, s. Ignorance, folly, S.]

To VNY, v. a. To unite; Fr. unir, id.

"That it sall be lefull till his grace to diuide schiref-domez, & create, vny, & annex the sammyne," &c. Acts Ja. IV., 1509, Ed. 1814, p. 267.

VOALER, s. A cat, Shetl.; q. a wawler, from Isl. vol-a, querulor, G. Andr.; misero queri, Haldorson; vael-a, lamentari, ibid.

VOAMD, s. Meat injured by being too long kept, Shetl.; apparently synon. with Houm'd, S.

Allied perhaps to Isl. vam, vitium, culpa, Verel.; voemm, dedecus, or voma, nausea, Haldorson; voem-uleg, nauseabile, G. Andr.

[VOAR, s. Spring, seed-time, Shetl. Sw. vaar, Lat. ver, id.]

VOCE, s. Voice, S. B.

Ane feynelliche hellis roce scho shoutis schill;
At quhais sound all trymbit the forest,
The derne woddis resoundit east and west.

Doug. Virgil, 225, 37.

[VOD, s. A wood. V. WOD.]

VODDER, s. Weather, Aberd. Reg. V. WODDER.

VODE, VODD, adj. 1. Empty, void.

Unto thir wordis, he nane answer maid,
Nor to my vode demandis na thing said.

Doug. Virgil, 48, 32.

2. Light, indecent.

The rial stile, clepit Heroicall,
Full of wourship and nobilnes ouer all,
Suld be compilit, but tenchis or vode wourle,
Kepand honest wise sportis, quhare euer thay bourle.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 271, 30.

To VODE, v. a. To void, to empty.

Eftir all was vodit, and the lycht of day
Ay mare and mare the mone quenchit awy,—
Within hir chalmir alone scho langis sare,
And thocht all waist for laik of hir luffare.

Doug. Virgil, 102, 25.

Ubi digressi, Virg. When the company were all gone.

VOE, s. An inlet, a bay or creek, Orkney, Shetl.

"This inlet or roe furnishes several excellent harbours, such as Busta Voe, South Voeter, and Alnafirth." P. Delting, Shetl. Statist. Acc., i. 390.

"Voes,—in the ancient language of these islands, signify such creeks or bays as penetrate far into the land." Barry's Orkney, p. 39.

"The parish is every where intersected with long narrow bays, called here Voes or Friths." P. Aithsting, Shetl. Statist. Acc., vii. 581.

"Voe, signifies a creek, or bay." MS. Explic. of Norish Words.

In that very ancient Norse poem Lodbrokar-Quida, or the Death-song of Lodbrok, royr occurs as signifying a bay. Thus Regner is made to say; "Near Hadninga-ragi, (Hadninga's Bay) high towered our crests in fierce encounter." St. 13. The learned Johnstone views this as either a bay in Orkney, or as perhaps Haddington bay in Scotland. Lodbrok, p. 71. Bartharði is indeed mentioned in the preceding strophe, which he explains as denoting the Firth of Tay, near Perth, anciently called Bertha, p. 70.

Ial. vog-r, fretum; G. Andr., p. 257. V. Brand's Orkney, p. 65.

VOGIE, VOKIE, adj. 1. Vain, S.

Of your consent, he says, I'm mair nor fain,
And vogie that I can ca' you my ain.
Ross's Helenore, p. 112.

"Whisht," quoth the vougy jade,
"William's a wise judicious lad,
"Has havins mair than e'er he had,
"Ill-bred bog-stalker."

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 338.

"I was fidgin fain an' unco vokie fan I got out ower her, for as laggart an' trachel'd as I was wi' taavin amo' the dubs." Journal from London, p. 4.

To Waintgude luk and beir neil that I lefe;
To Coraltee syn gif this bleis of fyre;
To servant woky ye beir this rown slef.

K. Hart, ii. 66.

Voky seems to be Vanity in dress personified. "In Scotland," Mr. Pinkerton remarks, "they say a man is vogygy when he is proud." Note, Maitland Poems, p. 379. But it properly denotes ostentation.

We took a spring, and danc'd a fling.

And wow but we were vogy!

We didna fear, though we lay near

The Campbells, in Stra'hogie.

Jacobite Relics, p. 81.

A.-S. hog-an, Belg. pocgh-en, to boast, to vaunt; or from Fr. vogue, Ital. voga, fame, pre-eminence.

2. Merry, cheerful, an oblique sense, S. B.

To VOICE, VOYCE, v. n. To vote.

"We ar borne to have right off place and voyce in that high court, bot not with that knowledge and these abilities—requyred in these quho sould voyce ther." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 361.

To VOYCE out, v. a. To elect by vote.

"The moderator was desired to voice out twelve of their brethern to sit as their committees." Spalding, ii. 192.

VOICER, s. A voter.

"That his voicing should not import his approbation of the commissions of any voicer against whom he was to propone any just exception in due time."—Baillie's Lett., i. 99.

The v. is also used, as by Shakespeare.

VOICING, s. The act of voting.

"It goes to voicing, and by a plurality of voices found that no man should be raised against the country." Spalding, ii. 119.

VOLAGE, VOLLAGE, VOLISH, adj. 1. Giddy, inconsiderate; O. Fr. volage.

"The iugment of Gode (quhilk virkis al thyng) is ane profound onknaunen deipnes, the quhilk passis humane ingyne to comprehende the grounde or limitis of it: be cause oure vit is cuer febil, oure ingyne ouer harde, oure thochtis ouer vollage, ande oure yeiris ouer schort." Compl. S., p. 32.

"Some doubted how far such volage expressions inferred treason, being but lubricum lingue." Fountainhall, i. 484.

2. Profuse, prodigal; as, "He's unco volage o' his siller;" Aberd.

Fr. id. light, giddy, inconsiderate.

[VOLAGEOUS, adj. Very light, giddy, or boastful, Clydes.]

To VOLISH, v. n. To talk ostentatiously, Clydes.

VOLISHER, s. An ostentatious talker, ibid.

VOLE MOUSE. The Short-tailed Field Mouse, Orkn. The field campagnol, S.

"Arvicola agrestis. Field campagnol. E. short-tailed field-mouse. S. Vole-mouse." Edin. Mag. July 1819, p. 505.

"The Short-tailed Field Mouse (mus agrestis, Lin. Syst.) which with us has the name of the vole mouse, is very often found in marshy grounds that are covered with moss and short heath." Barry's Orkney, p. 314.

Perhaps vole has the same sense with field; A.-S. wold, planities; Su.-G. walt, solum herbidum.

[VOLF, s. A wolf, Barbour, vi. 470.]

VOLOUNTE', s. The will.

The ilk stounde of his awin fre volount,
Ioue callis Juno, and thus carpis be.

Doug. Virgil, 340, 1.

Fr. volonté, Lat. volunt-as.

VOLT, s. Countenance, aspect.

"She welcomed me with a merry volt." Chalmers's Mary, i. 175.

O. Fr. volt, visage, Roquef. V. VULT.

VOLT, s. 1. Vault or cellar, Aberd. Reg. V. VOUT.

2. [Roofs, arches.]

Thy tour, and fortres lairge and lang,
Thy nychbours dois excell. —
Thy grounthis deip, and toppis hie
Uprising in the air;
Thy vollis plesand ar to sie,
Thay ar so greit and fair.

Prayse of Lethingtoun, Maitland Poems, p. 253.

Vaults, Pinkerton. But perhaps rather applied to the roofs; from Fr. roulle, which not only signifies a vault, but "a vaulted or embowed roofe;" Cotgr. V. VOUT.

VOLUPTUOSITIE, s. Voluptuousness.

"And quhatsumeuir vther persoun or persons of quhatsumeuir estate, degre or condition that ever thay be of, that failyies and brekis this act and ordinance, that he salbe repute and haldin as ane man geuin to his voluptuosithie," &c. Acts Mary, 1551, Ed. 1814, p. 488; i.e., if he have more dishes at his table than those permitted by this act to men of different orders.

VOLUSPA, s. Explained as synonym. with Sybil.

"Here seated, the voluspa, or sybil, was to listen to the rhymical [rythmical?] inquiries which should be made to her, and to return an extemporaneous answer." The Pirate, ii. 173.

This Scandinavian term is undoubtedly used in a sense which does not properly belong to it. Id. rola, rolva, and vala, denote a prophetess, Sybil vates Pythia, Verel; and sya signifies the prediction itself. It is thus defined by Haldorson, Völsunga oracula sybillina, [Dan.] en spta-kveindes spakom, i.e., "a female soothsayer's divination." Voluspa is the name given to a part of the more ancient Edda; and as M. Mallet has observed, "signifies the oracle or the prophecy of Vola." "Vola," he adds, "might perhaps be a general name for all the women of this kind." Northern Antiq., ii. 202.

But this ingenious and learned writer has fallen into a mistake here. For, according to the Edda, there was one person only to whom this name was given. This was Sif, from whom, it is said, Odin descended. V. Resen. Edd. Dedic. b. 2. This name the Scandinavian writers have identified with that of Sybil. Rudbeck makes her the wife of Thor. He indeed, in his usual manner, traces the name Sybil, to her; viewing the last of the word as the same with hell, a mountain; and rendering Sifhella, Dea montium, or the same with Cybelé. Sif, he expl. by Lat. pius. Atlant. ii. 398.

The term rola, has been traced to Gr. βούλη, counsel, &c. But nothing satisfactory has been offered.

To VOME, v. a. To puke, to vomit.

"I sau fumetterre, that tempris ane heyt lyuyr. I sau brume, that prouokis ane person to vome ald feume." Compl. of S., p. 104.

The term appears in the same primitive form in Isl. roma, nausea, vomitus. Afgr voemer, vomitu urgeor; romuleg-wr, nauseabundus.

VOMITER, s. An emetic, S.

"The manner to make Vomiter. A vomiter is a potion prepared with some vomitive liquor,—to purge the bad humours by vomiting."—"The manner to make a common vomiter—to make a weak vomiter," &c. St. Germain's Royal Physician, p. 124-5.

Fr. vomitore, any thing that provokes vomiting. In the same sense Vomitore is used in E.

[VONAND, VONYNG. V. under WON, v.]

VOR, VOAR, VOUR, s. The spring-time, Orkney, Shetl. V. VEIR.

[VORD, s. A high hill, Shetl. V. WART.]

[VORTH, VORTHIS. V. WORTH.]

VOTE, s. A vow.

He "maid solempnit rote that he & his posterite sall use na anseyne in tymes cumyng (quhen tyme of battal occurit) bot the croce of Sanct Andro." Bellend. Cron., B. x., c. 5. Voit, Ibid., B. xiii. c. 7. Lat. rot-um.

To VOTE, v. a. To devote. Votit, part. pa.

"Becaus sa gret trubill risis daylie aganis the Cristin pepill, the maist catholik prince Charlis hes rotit hym to the deith in defence thair of aganis the ennymes of God." Bellend. Cron. B. x. c. 2. Devotisse, Boeth.

VOTH, s. Outlawry.

"Voth signifies outlawrie, atlagium." Skene, Verb. Sign. in vo.

Allied perhaps to Isl. rode, Su.-G. vaada, (pron. roda) periculum. V. VOUTHMAN.

[VOUD, VOUDE, adj. Mad, Barbour, xvii. 106, Camb. MS. V. WOD.]

VOURAK, s. Wreck. "The tourak of the schip;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

VOUSS, s. The liquor of hay and chaff boiled, Strathmore.

This term does not seem to be descriptive of the particular composition, but to be the ancient word, denoting what is liquid in general, retained in a particular sense. Isl. vos, væsa, veisa; humor, mador, humectatio, perfusio aquae, et ductus aquae; G. Andr., p. 249, 250.

To VOUST, v. n. To boast, S.

In siclyke wyse this Juturna belius
Throw out the oistis can the horsis drue,
—And schew hir brothir Turnus in his chare,
Now brauland in this place, now voustand thare.
Doug. Virgil, 427, 13.

Great as it is, I need na voust.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 3.

VOUST, VOIST, VOUSTIN, s. Boasting, S., a boast, a brag, Gl. Shirr.

And low as Pharon cryis and doys roust,
With haltand woundis and with mekle voust,
Eneas throw an dart at him that tyde,
Quhilk, as he gapit, in his mouth did glide.
Doug. Virgil, 327, 10.

Thare sal thou se, thare sal thou know anone,
Quhom to thys wyndy glore, voist and avantis,
The honour, or with pane the louing grantis.
Ibid. 390, 4.

Where then was a' your windy vousts?

Ye that is now sa kneef?

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 23.

Hamilton writes voisting, Facile Traictise, p. 36.

Perhaps radically the same with boast, v and b being letters of the same organs. Junius derives boast, from C. B. boetio, id.; Seren. from Goth. buse, biesse, rex, dominans. Isl. biasse, pugil; Ihre, vo. Biesse.

VOUSTER, s. A boaster, S. Rudd. V. WOISTARE.

VOUSTY, adj. Vain, given to boasting.

And chiels shall come frae yont the Cairn-amounth right vousty,

If Ross will be so kind as share in

Their pint at Drousty.

Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore, st. 16.

VOUT, s. A vault, S. O. E. id.

"Vout, vnder the ground, (Fr.) voute," Palsgrae; also voute. This seems of Gothic origin; Sw. hvalf, arched, vaulted, hvalfw-a, to arch, to vault, also written walw-a, velfw-a; A.-S. hwalf, convexus; Isl. hioel, sphaera.

VOUTH, adj. or s. Prosecuted, or prosecuted, in course of law; a forensic term.

"Vouth, signifies persegued, calling, or accusation, from Voucher, id. est, Vocare, used in the auld French and English lawes." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Voth.

But the origin is evidently A.-S. wolthe, clamor.

VOUTHMAN, s. An outlaw.

"In our auld Scottish language ane Vouthman is ane out-law, or ane fugitiue fra the lawes." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Voth.

This, in connexion with the preceding word, may perhaps point out the origin of Voth, as signifying outlawry. Vouthman may have denoted one who was legally called, and not compeirand, or presenting himself in court, was outlawed.

VOW, interj. Expressive of admiration or surprise, S.

Yonder he comes; and vow! but he looks fain:

Nae doubt he think's that Peggy's now his ain.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 144.

Isl. vo, metuendum quid; also, repentè, ex improviso. V. Verel. & G. Andr.

VOWBET, s. A hairy worm, a caterpillar.

Yet wanshapen Vowbet of the weinls invytit,
I can tell thee how, when, where and what gat thee,
The quhilk was neither man nor wife,
Nor human creature on life.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 12.

The sense is determined by what is said elsewhere.

A warlock, and a warwolf, a vowbet but hair.

Ibid. p. 25.

It therefore seems the same word with wobat, S. A., a hairy worm, which crawls on vegetables, somewhat of the caterpillar kind.

Sibb. renders woubit, oubit, one of those worms which appear as if covered with wool, Gl., as if the term wool or wool entered into the composition. But more probably it is from A.-S. wibba, a worm.

A vowbet but hair, is a worm in so imperfect a state, that the hair is not yet grown. Wobat is said to be "a hairy caterpillar." Edin. Rev., Oct. 1803, p. 206. O. E. "Warbot, a worm; escarbot," Fr. Palsgrau. V. WOBAT.

VOWKY, adv. Vain.

Of your consent, says he, I'm mair nor fain,
An' vowky that I can ca' you my ain.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 108.

In Edit. Second, changed to Vokie, q. v.

This term, as it has the secondary sense of "merry, cheerful," seems always to include the idea of more self-complacency and happiness than we attach to E. vain.

To VOWL, v. a. A term used at cards, when one of the parties loses all in a game, Gall.

"When one of the parties playing gets nothing, not so much as a trick, then they are said to be vow'd,—this and sutter'd are one." Gall. Enc.

O! there's the Ace—it gets the King;
We're beat—we're vow'd, and a'.

Sang o' the Cartes, ibid., p. 459.

VOWL, s. The state of being quite out of hand in a game at cards. "A vowl is said to be worth nine games," ibid.

Perhaps from Fr. voler, "to rob, to rifle, strip, despoil of all;" Cotgr. Dict. Trev. has Vole, Terme de jeu de Cartes, et se dit, quand quelqu'un fait toutes les mains ou levées des cartes, à l'homme, à la bête, à la triomphe, &c. Omnia folia lusoria ferre, auferre. Roquefort thus expresses it; Dans le jeu des cartes on dit la vole lorsqu'une personne enlève tout, fait toutes les mains. The learned fathers de Trevoux deduce the Fr. v. from Lat. vol-a, the palm of the hand, because this is the instrument commonly employed in carrying off.

• VOYAGE, s. A journey; Fr. id.

"Thairefter, they cam to Edinburgh—Sum men judged nae guid to cum of that voyage." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 40.

The Fr. term denotes either a voyage or a journey.

VPBRINGING, s. Education, instruction, S.

"It sall stand at the kingis grace plesour to send ony man of wircchip of Ingland, and ane lady, with suche company as accordis to thar estate, nocht exceedand xx personis men & women, to gif attendance vpoun the said young quene and hir vertuis vpbringing, and to remane vpoun the king of Inglandis expensis." Acts Mary, 1542, Ed. 1814, p. 425.

"They alledged that they wanted to bring up the king's son in virtuous education, for the whilk they sent for him. The king answered, he was his son, of whom it was meetest he should have the care of his upbringing." Spalding, ii. 2. V. UPBRING.

Upbrought is used by Spenser, as signifying, educated, nurtured.

—With the crew of blessed saints upbrought.

[VPGANG, s. Way up. V. UPGANG.][VPGIF, s. and v. V. UPGIF.]VPLESIT, part. pa. Recovered.

The lost penny wes vplesit,—
Bot the penny that wes hid
I hold leist gude did.

Colkelbie Sow, F. I., v. 15.

A.-S. up and les-an, colligere; redimere. The sense of the term is explained, v. 39.

The penny lost in the lak,
Wes fundin and vpak—i.e., taken up.

To VPMak, v. n. 1. To supply where there is a deficiency.

"Quhar thar is fundin ony sic werk within the said finace, the werk to be brokin, the werkman to vpmak the avale to the finace foresaid, & the said werkman to be punyrt at the kingis will." Acts Ja. III., 1485, Ed. 1814, p. 172.

2. To build up. To vpmak is used in this sense, Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.3. To compensate; often used in the sense of enriching, S.

"I have found my Lord unchangeable, in every estate the same, ay the same up-making, and more than up-making portion." Hamilton to Kenwick, Society Contendings, p. 40.

Belg. opmaak-en, to make up. Any one, who has attended to the genius of the Scottish language, must have remarked that it resembles the Teut. far more than the English does, in the combination of the prepositions. It generally prefers the prefix, instead of adding the preposition to the verb or noun.

VPSITTING, s. A term used to denote a sort of wake after the baptism of a child.

"And that na banquetis salbe at onie vpaittingis efter baptizing of bairnis in time cuming, vnder the pane of twentie pund to be payit be euerie persone, doar in the contrair, alaweill of the maister of the hous, —as of all vther personis that salbe fund or tryit partakeris of sic superfluous banqueting, and cacheting of the droggis and confectouris apprehendit," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1581, Ed. 1814, p. 221.

This custom, which seems to be now obsolete, was most probably introduced in imitation of the Lik-wakes, or watching of the dead; or it might have some connexion with the vigils of the saints. Had the vpaitting preceded the baptism, it might have been supposed that it was meant to guard the unchristened bairn against the mischievous attempts of the Fairies. But it is not easy to conjecture of what use it could be after the baptismal rite.

VRACK, s. 1. Wreck, ruin, Buchan.

I guff't the bickars a' to crack,
Whan e'er I saw yir croou
O' death the night.

Tarras's Poems, p. 10.

V. WRACK.[2. Anything that is worthless; applied also to persons and animals, Banffs.]*[To VRAIT, VREET, v. a. To write, Banffs.]

VRAITER, VRETTAR, s. A writer, Aberd. Reg.; nearly the same with the vulgar pron. of Loth., Vriter.

VRAN, s. The wren, A.-S. wraen. "Vran is still the Lothian pronunciation;" Gl. Compl.

"Robeen and the litil vran, var hamely in vyntir." Compl. S., p. 60.

[VRICHT, s. A wright, Banffs. To vricht, to work as a wright, ibid.]

[To VRING, v. a. To wring, Banffs.]

[VTASS, WTASt, s. Corr. of Octaves.

The same corruption occurs in O.E. "Ulas of a feast, [Fr.] octauhs;" Palagr. B. iii. F. 73.

This term has, however, been viewed as signifying "the eighth day, or the space of eight days after any festival." V. Uis, Nares' Gl.

VTH, s. [Errat. for Uch, a coffer.] "Ane proper uth of gold;" Aberd. Reg. O. Fr. uche, a coffer; or for Ouch, an ornament, a carcanet.

To VTTER, v. n. Vittered, pret.

"Bot air Patrick's horse vittered, and would in no wayes encounter his adversar againe, that it was force to sir Patrik to light on foot." Pitcottie's Cron. p. 248. Entered in Edit. 1728. V. ONTER, v.

Vittered is perhaps nearer to the true orthography, which should be outré, from Fr. outr-er, traverser, parcourir, q. went out of the lists, became unmanageable. O. E. outrale, "to fly out, to be outrageous;" Tyrwh.

This warns I you, that ye not sodenly
Out of yourself for no wo shuld outrais,
Beth patient, and therof I you prais.

Chaucer, Clerkes Tale, v. 8519.

Fr. outré is still used in regard to horses. Cheval outré est un cheval à bout, épuisé d'haleine, & dont la fatigue a consumé les forces. Dict. Trev.

VULT, s. Aspect.

The Erlie beheld fast till his hie curage,
Forthocht sum part that be come to that place,
Gretlye abaysit for the vult off his face.

Wallace, vi. 879, MS.

And he ful feirs, with throwin vult in the start
Seand the scharp poyntis, reculis bakwart.

Doug. Virgil, 306, 53.

Lat. vult-us, Moes.-G. claiits.

To VUNG, v. n. To move swiftly with a buzzing or humming sound, Aberd. bung, S. O.

Ye mauna think that ane sae young,
Wha hirples slowly o'er a rung,
Can up Parnassus glibly vung,
Like Robbie Burns.

Skirra's Poems, p. 337.

Vung is more commonly used as a s., denoting the sound made by a stone discharged from a sling, or any similar sound, as that of a humming-top when emitted from the string.

It has a far better claim, than many other words, to be viewed as ex sono facta. But it may be derived from Teut. Germ. bunge, a drum, which Wachter deduces from Su.-G. bang-ia, to beat. The adv. glibly is improperly conjoined.

[VUXEN, part. adj. Grown; well-grown; plump; ill-vuxen, stunted, unshapely, Shetl. Sw. vdxa, to grow, vuxen, grown.]

[VYCHT, adj. Vigorous, Barbour, x. 430. V. WICHT.]

VYIS, Yyss, adj. Wise.

Brudir, gif thou be vyis, I red thé fle
To mache thé with a frawart fenyet marrow.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 122.

Dunbar uses vyis in the same sense.

VYLAUS, adj. "Seems vile, villainous, or f. fierce;" Gl. Wynt.

This Henry couth noucht hawe this in mynd;
Bot bare hym rylaus and wnkynnd
Til Willame, this Dawys sowmnys awne;
Fra in his prysoun he had hym dwne,
He trettyd bot dyspytwsly
Hym, and his barnage halyly.

Wyntown, vii. 8. 242.

Mr. Macpherson refers to Lat. vil-is, Isl. vill, fierce.

VYLD, adj. Vile; still vulgarly pron. in this manner, in different parts of S.

Thy trymnes and nymnes
Is turn'd to vyld estait.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll., ii. 60.

VYLDLY, adv. Vilely, S.

"In his owne time, when his iudgement therein was fulfilled,—hie should turne their heartes to hate her who had so long and vyldely abused them." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 183.

Shakspeare uses vild and vyld for vile. V. Nares.

VYLT, s. Apparently, vault.

"On the east side of this ile ther is a bore, maid like a rylt, mair nor an arrow shot of any man under the eirde, throw the quhiik vylt we use to row ore [or] sail with our bottis, for fear of the horrible breake of the seas, that is on the outwar side thereof; bot na grate shipes can sail ther." Monroe's Isles, p. 40. V. VOlt.

[To VYN, v. a. To win, acquire, Barbour, v. 11.]

[VYNDLE, VYNDLAND. V. under WYN-DLE.]

[To VYNK, v. n. To sleep lightly; lit. to wink, Barbour, vii. 182.]

[VYRE, s. A crossbow-bolt. V. VIRE.]

VYREENIN, part. pr. Veering, turning, or winding about; apparently corr. from Fr. vironnant, id.

Sen for loun Willox to be your crounal strang,
Quhais heid and schoulders ar of bouk aneuch,
That was in Scotland vyreenin you amang,
Quhen as he drave, and Knox held steve the pleuch.

Nicol Burne, Chron. S. P., iii. 455.

VYSE. Bowys of vyse, Wyntown, viii. 29. 81.

Awblasteris, and bowys of vyse,
And all thyng, that mycht mak serwyse,
Or help thame in-to press of were,
All thai gert thaire battis bere
To the castelle.

Mr. Macpherson inquires, if it means bows worked by screws? Fr. vis, screw. We may add Belg. vijz, id. This seems to be the only conjecture that can be made as to the signification.

WYSSIS, s. pl. Apparently, uses.

"Our souerane lordc, for the strengthening and defense of the realme in tyme of were, sua that ryght of armys be nocht abusit [disused] nor foryett in tyme of pece, ratifyis and appreis the acte maid be his hienes lader," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1535, Ed. 1814, p. 354.

W.

SOME learned writers have viewed this letter as corresponding to the Iolic Digamma; and have observed that it is frequently prefixed to words beginning with a vowel or diphthong. In this way they account for the resemblance between many Gothic and Greek terms. "Thus," says Junius, (Observ. in Willeram., p. 32.) "from avis, lutum, is formed wast, limus; from opus, opus,—werk; from opus, dissidium, concertatio,—werre, dissidium, bellum; from vesba, esse, fieri,—wes-en; from ed-ew, versare, circumagere,—weil, orbiculus versatilis, a spinning wheel; from oupeur or wpeur, cura custodire,—war-en, beucaren, &c. V. Somner, vo. Wase.

The learned Benzelius, Bishop of Lincoping, in his MS. notes on Jun. Gloss., in like manner derives Su.-G. ward-a, videre, from op-aw, id. V. Lye, Add. Jun. Etym.

The affinity in several of these words is imaginary, not to mention the whimsical idea of deriving the Gothic, or old Scythian tongue, from the Greek.

In many Scottish works W is used for V. This, it is believed, has generally proceeded from misreading the MSS., in which W appears with two heads above the line, u, mistaken for ll. Thus wawis has been converted into wallis, waves.

In the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, W frequently appears in the place of V; and it has been supposed that, in different counties at least, it was so pronounced, as is still the case among the common people in East Lothian [and Buchan], who say wrang, wright, write, &c., for wrong, wright, write, and wrath for wrath, &c. Where w is the final letter, succeeding a in the Buchan dialect, it is pronounced v; as, to shiawre, S. saw, E. sow; riawre, S. raw, E. row; to yawre, S. awe, E. owe; to blyawre, S. blaw, E. blow; to miawre, S. maie, E. snow; to riawre, S. eraw, E. crow; to miawre, E. to mew; to tyawre, S. taw, to make tough by kneading.

"I am wae for your skaith, there is so little of it"
S. Prov., "a mock condolence;" Kelly, p. 211, 212.

Content, my Damon, is enough wi' thee;
Gie me contentment, an' I'll ne'er be wae.

Picken's Poems, 1783, p. 107.

A.-S. wa, moestus, afflictus.

WA', s. Wall. Back at the Wa'. V. BACK.

WA, WAW, interj. Used like E. why, as introductory of an assertion, S.

"Wa, might one have said, though he be dead and buried, yet he will rise again; ay but they say, this is the third day; wa but it was lang to ev'ning, might they not have waited on till night came? Wa mistake! Wae is a precipitant thing," &c. W. Guthrie's Sermon, p. 11.

A.-S. wa is not only used in the sense of Lat. ek, but also of euge.

WAAH, s. 1. Expl. "any thing that causes surprise and admiration," Orkn.

[2. Used as an interj. implying negation or prohibition, Bauffs.]

Isl. wa, also wo, malum insperatum; sometimes, ay thing unexpected, but most commonly used in a bad sense. Teut. wee, vae.

To WAAL, v. a. To join two pieces of metal by the force of heat, South of S.

See here 'twas like a waxlin heat,
Lang courtship served neither.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 89.

V. WELL, v.

[WAAR, adj. Aware, conscious of, Banffs.
O. E. ware.]

WAAT, WAUT, s. The swollen and discoloured mark on the skin, from a blow by a whip or stick, [a welt: to waut, to welt, to thrash], Ayrs.

A. Bor. "whale, to beat with a whip or pliant stick;" Grose.

The latter is evidently the same with E. weal, wheat, O. E. wale, from A.-S. wala, id. Somner thus defines Walan in the pl. "Vibices. The mark or prints of stripes or strokes remaining in the flesh." Serenius views the E. word as allied to Isl. hwel, colliculus, protuberantia. S. waut may be q. walt, with the addition of the letter t, and the l changed, as usual, into u. Llyud, however, gives C. B. chuydh as signifying tuber, a bunch or swelling; Ir. fadh, id.; "a mole, a knob, bunch;" Obriep.

WAB, s. A web, Clydes.

WAB-FITTIT, adj. Web-footed, ibid.

WABSTER, s. 1. A weaver, S. The term is now used in contempt.

2. A spider, Ayrs. Gl. Picken.

WA'-BAW, s. A game of hand-ball; so called from the ball being made to strike a wall, as distinguished from other modes of playing; also, the ball used in this game, Gall.

Mugg is expl. "to strike or buck a ball out from a wall, as is done in the game of the wa'-baw;" Gall. Encycl.

[To WABBLE, v. n. To move or walk unsteadily, Clydes. V. WAIBLE.]

[WABBLIE, adj. Unstable, easily shaken, ibid., Banffs.]

WABRAN LEAVES. Great Plantain or Way-bread, an herb, S. Plantago Major, Linn.

In the South of S. it is not only called, in the singular, Wabran-leaf, but Wabert-leaf. The latter approaches very nearly to the A.-S. and Sw. forms of the name.

"I thought the grey whin was gaun frae below me—it shook like a wabron-leaf—I had nae power either to speak or to move." Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1820, p. 202.

It is used in the southern counties as a vulnerary; particularly, it is said, by the venders of quack medicines. Perhaps it may be found fully as harmless as most of those which are sold by them.

A.-S. waeg-braede, Teut. wegh-bree, plantago; herba passim in plateis sive viis nascens; Kilian. Thus its name is derived from the circumstance of its growing on the way side. Sw. waegbredblad, Linn. Fl. Suec.

WA-CAST, s. Any thing unworthy of regard, any thing contemptible; generally used with a negative, Aberd. This is as it were an inverted form of E. Cast-away.

[To WACH, v. a. To watch, guard, Barbour, xv. 128.]

[WACHIS, s. pl. Guards, sentinels, ibid., iii. 187.]

WACHT, s. [Watch, guard.] Keep the wacht o' him, or it; "Keep him, or it, in view, do not lose sight of;" Ayrs.

Dan. vagt, Teut. wacht, custodia; q. "keep watch over" him or it.

To WACHLE, v. n. To move backwards and forwards, S. the same with E. waggle, but in pron. more nearly resembling Teut. wagghel-en, id.

To WACHT, v. a. To quaff. V. WAUCHT.

WACK, WACH, adj. Moist, S.; [wach, wachie, wet, clammy; applied to cake or scone not properly baked, Clydes.]

"Madco, to be wack or drunk. Permadeo, to be very wack." Despaut. Gram. E. 7, b.

WACKNESS, s. Humidity. V. under WAK.

WAD, s. Word. V. WADD.

WAD, s. The name of a hero of romance.

—He faucht wichtly with Wad,
And with Melliager mail.

Cockelbie Sow, F. i. v. 455.

This seems to be the same personage who is more than once alluded to by Chaucer, V. Note, ver. 9298; Wades bote. But his story is now buried in oblivion.

WAD, v. aux. Would, S.

O wad he but now to his Jean be inclin'd,
My heart in a moment soul yield to his mind.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 78.

WAD-BE-AT, s. One who aims at something above his station, as in dress, &c., Roxb.; q. "would be at."

[WADNA. Would not, Clydes.]

WAD, WED, WEDDE, s. 1. A pledge. It is pron. wad, S. and this is the modern orthography. Wed seems the more ancient.

Now both her wedde lys,
And play thai bi ginne;
And sett he hath the long asise,
And endred beth ther inne.

Sir Tristrem, p. 24, st. 30.

In the thickest wode thar maid thai felle defens,
Agayn thair fayis so full of wiolens;
Yit felle Sothron left the lyff to wed.

Wallace, iv. 633, MS.

This is a singular phrase, q. left their lives in pledge, were deprived of life.

"Somethings are borrowed and lent, be giving and receaving of ane wad. And that is done some time be laying and giving in wad, cattell or moveable gudes." Reg. Maj., B. iii., c. 2, s. 1.

2. A wager.

"A wad is a fool's argument," S. Prov. "spoken when, after hot disputing, we offer to lay a wager that we are in the right;" Kelly, p. 19.

Wedde, O. E. Of Robert Courthose, son of William the Conqueror, it is said—

He wende here to Engelond vor the crayserye,
And eyde Wyllam hys brother to wedde Normandy.
R. Glouc., p. 393.

i.e., "He came for the purpose of engaging in the crusade; and for the money, necessary for his expenses, laid Normandy in pledge to his brother."

Had I ben marshall of his men, by Mary of Heauen,
I durst haue layd my lyfe, and no lesse wed,
He should haue be lord of the land, in length & bredth,
And also king of that kyth, his kynne for to helpe.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 14, b.

Thou shalt me leave such a wedde,
That I woll haue thy trowth on honde.

Gower, Conf. Am., Fol. 16, b.

Su.-G. wad, A.-S. wed, Isl. vaed, ved, Dan. vedde, Belg. wedde, Alem. uuetli, Germ. wette. It is supposed that the Su.-G. term is derived from wad, cloth; because, this kind of merchandise being anciently given and received instead of money, when at any time a pledge was left, a piece of cloth was commonly used for this purpose, and hence a pledge in general would be called Wad. According to this view, the Goth. word must be more ancient than Lat. vas, vad-is, a pledge; whence vadimonium, a promise or engagement. It seems evident, at least, that L. B. vad-ium is from the Goth. The term, indeed, assumes a great variety of other forms in L. B., as wad-ium, quad-ia, gag-ium, &c. V. Du Cange.

Hence L. B. Vadiare Mulierem, Fam sibi in sponsam pignore asserere; Du Cange, vo. Vadium, p. 1385.

DEID WAD, s. A species of pledge viewed by our old laws as usurious.

"Sam thingis ar laid in deid, or drounit wad.—Mortgage, or deid wad is that quhair of the fruitis and rentis takin up in the mean time be the creditour, gytis not nor payis not the sowme in all nor in part, for the quhill the wad wes gevin be the debtour." Balfour's Pract., p. 194, 196.

To WAD, WED, v. a. 1. To pledge, to bet, to wager, S.

Than Lowrie as ane lyoun lap,
And sone ane flane culd felder;
He hecht to perss him at the pap,
Thairon to wed ane weddir.

Chr. Kirk, st. 12. Chron. S. P., II. 363.

Wad, in Callander's edition.

"Our mare has gotten a braw brown foal."

—"I'll wad my hail fee against a groat,

"He's bigger than e'er our foal will be."

Minstrelsy Border, I. 85.

2. To promise, to engage, S. as equivalent to, I'll engage for it.

But where's your nephew, Branky? is he here?
I'll wad he's been of use, gin ane may speer.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 75.

—How was the billy pleas'd?

Nae well, I wad, to be sae snelly us'd!

Ibid., p. 35.

It occurs as a v. also in O. E.

—If ye worken it in werke, I dare wed mine eares,
That law shal be a labourer, and leade afelde dounge.

[3. To wed, marry, Clydes.]

[WADDIN, s. A wedding, Clydes.]

WADDS, s. "A youthful amusement, wherein much use is made of pledges;" GL Sibb. S.

In this game, the players being equally divided, and a certain space marked out between them, each lays down one or more wads or pledges at that extremity where the party, to which he belongs, chuse their station. A boundary being fixed at an equal distance from the extremities, the object is to carry off the wads from the one of these to the other. The two parties, advancing to the boundary or line, seize the first opportunity of crossing it, by making inroads on the territories of each other. He who crosses the line, if seized by one of the opposite party, before he has touched any of their wads, is set down beside them as a prisoner, and receives the name of a Stinker; nor can he be released, till one of his own side can touch him, without being intercepted by any of the other; in which case he is free. If any one is caught in the act of carrying off a wad, it is taken from him; but he cannot be detained as a prisoner, in consequence of his having touched it. If he can cross the intermediate line with it, the pursuit is at an end. When the one party have carried off, to the extremity of their ground, all the wads of the other, the game is finished.

Formerly in this game "young men and women arranged themselves on each side of the hearth fire, and alternately bestowed husbands and wives on each other." Remains Nithsdale Song, p. 113, 114. Here a particular account is given of the ancient mode of playing at wadds.

The same game is differently named in Galloway.

"Wadds and the Wears, one of the most celebrated amusements of the ingle-ring.—One in the ring speaks as follows:—

I haae been awa at the wadds and the wears
These seven lang years;
And's come hame a pair broken ploughman;
What will ye gie me to help me to my trade?"

Gall. Encycl.

Wads and Weirs is the name used in Dumfri.

Mactaggart has given a minute account of the mode of playing the game. The phrase, the wears, seems to signify the wars. At the wars is a common mode of denoting the life of a soldier, still retained among the vulgar, S. Shall we suppose that this conjunction of wads with wars has any relation to the circumstance of the pledges often given in warfare, especially in relation to single combat, between men of rank? Hence the L. B. phraseology, Vadium Drelli, Vadiare Bellum, &c.

WAD-KEEPER, WED-KEEPER, s. One who takes charge of pledges; in allusion to those games in which wads are deposited.

"As to this conscience, it is a faithfull wed-keeper the gages that it receiveth, it renderis, of good turnes it giveth a blyith testimonie, of evil turnes it giveth a bitter testimonie: and suppose the maist part of our deidis be now covered from the eye of man, and her testimonie for the maist part hid from our selfe, yt there is a day coming,—in the quhill all thir thingis, that ar now hid vnder darknie, shall come to light and the secretes of all heartes shall be disclosed." Brace's Eleven Sermon, C. 4, b.

WADSET, s. 1. A legal deed, by which a debtor gives his lands, or other heritable subjects, into the hands of his creditor, that the latter may draw the rents in payment of the debt. The debtor, who grants the wadset, is called the Reverser, because he has the reversion of the property, on the payment of the debt; a forensic term, S.

"Quhen ane thing immoveable, is wadsett to ane certaine day, quhereof saising is given to the creditour: It is accorded betwix the debtour and the creditour, that the rents and fruts of the wad, taken vp be the creditour, in the meane time of the wadset, sall be compted and allowed in the principall summe, delivered be the creditour to the debtour." Reg. Maj., B. iii., c. 5, § 1. V. the v.

2. Used in general to denote a pledge.

Here's that little wadset,
Butle's Scrap o' Truth,
Pawned in a gin shop,
Quenching holie drouth.

Burns.

Cromek says, that "sometimes it means bet," giving the following illustration:

Wad ance that wysome carle Death
But rowe her in his black mort-claith;
I'll make a wadset o' an aith,
To feast the parishen, Jo.

Remains of Nithsdale Song, 82, 91.

But he has mistaken the meaning. For it is precisely the same with that in the preceding passage. He does not engage to bet an oath, but to give his oath in pledge.

To WADSET, WEDSET, v. a. To alienate lands, or other heritable property, under reversion; a forensic term, S.

"Be the regesse the superior of lands wed-set, be his vassal, after the redemption thereof, suffers the first seller of the samin to come backe againe to his awin place,—as he did before the alienation." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Reversion.

This v. was used in O. E. "Wed sett-yn. Impignero." Prompt. Parv.

Su.-G. wadsætt-a, Isl. vaedsett-ia, oppignerare, to set, place, or lay in pledge. Su.-G. sætt-a, itself has this signification. The A.-S. phrase, settan wedd, stabilire foedus, is evidently allied.

WADSETTER, s. One who holds the property of another in wadset, S.

"The creditor, to whom the wadset is granted, gets the name of wadsetter, because the right of the wadset is vested in him." Erskine's Instit., B. ii., Tit. 8, § 4.

WAD-SHOOTING, s. Shooting at a mark for a wad, or prize which is laid in pledge, Ang.

"Christmas is held as a great festival in this neighbourhood.—Many amuse themselves with various diversions, particularly with shooting for prizes, called here wad-shooting." P. Kirkden, Forfars. Statist. Acc., ii. 509.

WAD, pret. Wedded, Clydes.

WADAND, part. pr. Expl. fearful.

Bot the fell qwhile, that thai had,
Sa dowtand than thare hartis made
That thair wa all rycht wadand
To fecht in gret rowt hand to hand.

Wyntown, viii. 40, 249.

"Ir. wath, fear;" Gl. Perhaps there is an error here. Rad is used in another MS. for made, l. 2.

WADD, s. Woad, used in dyeing.

"Of listers burgesses quha puts their hands in the wadd." Chalmerlan Air, c. 39, § 60.

Skinner renders the term, as here used, a pledge. But the phrase denotes dyers who work with their own hands; as in the preceding section fleshers are mentioned, "quha slay mairts with thair awin hands."

Wad is here put for dye-stuffs in general, because of its being used for laying the foundation of many colours. In le wadd; Lat.

It also occurs in the form of wad.

—"Anent the spoliacioun & wrangwis withaldin fra the said Elizabeth of twa tune of wad,—j poke of mader" [madder], &c. Act. Audit., A. 1473, p. 31.

"That none of these acts speak—of exporting, &c. but mainly of not selling wax, wine, silks, spices, wood, wadde," &c. Fount. Dec. Suppl., ii. 644.

Mr. Todd has inserted Wad from Barret's Alvearie, as "old English for Woad." Fraunces gives it in a much earlier age. "Woode or wad for lyttinge. Gando." Prompt. Parv.

Gando is probably by mistake for L.B. gualda, glastum; (or gaula), apparently formed from O. Fr. gualde, guatt, &c. id. V. Du Cange and Roquefort.

A.-S. wad, waad, Teut. wedde, Alem. wode, Sw. weide, Fr. guesde, guedde, Ital. guado, Hisp. L. B. gualda, O. E. wad.

WADDER, s. Weather. V. WEDDYR.

WADDER, s. A wedder, S. B.

Had hog or wadder lairt in bog or mire.

Tarras's Poems, p. 117.

WADDIE, s. Apparently the same with Widdie, Caithn.; E. withe.

"Before the introduction of iron binders, the only mode of binding them in their byres, was, by a collar and shank, made (like a rope) of twisted green birch, woddies, or twigs." Agr. Surv. Caithn., p. 199.

Su.-G. wedja, vimen.

WADDIN, part. pa. Strong, like two pieces of iron beat into one, or welded.

This yungman lap upoun the land full licht,
And mervellit mekle of his makidome mail.
Waddix I am, quoth he, and woundir wicht,
With bran as bair, and breist burly and braid.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 131.

"Strong, like two pieces of iron beat into one;" Lord Hailes. Perhaps corr. from Waldyn, q. v.

WADER, s. The name of a bird, Aberd.

"Among the resident birds, may be reckoned,—owzel, bat, tomtit, common and green linnet, yellow-hammer, blackbird, and the wader, a bird frequenting running water." P. Birse, Aberd. Statist. Acc., ix. 108.

Supposed to be the common [Gallinule, or] Water-hen; or perhaps the Water-rail.

WADGE, s. A wedge, S.

"Item, vpoun the tour heid ane moyano of found, mountit as is said is with stoikkis, quheillis, and aixtris garnisit with iron, having ane wadge." Inventories, A. 1566, p. 166.

To WADGE, v. a. To shake in a threatening manner, to brandish, S.B.; as, he wadged his niece in my face, he threatened to strike me with his fist. He wadg'd a stick at me; he brandished one.

Su.-G. waeg-a, Isl. veg-a, Belg. weeg-en, librare.

WADMAAL, s. A species of woollen cloth manufactured and worn in Orku. and Shetl.

"She was wrapped in her long and ample garment of wadmaal." The Pirate, ii. 125.

V. VADMELL, which is the pronunciation of the northern nations, W being sounded V.

WADSET, s. and v. V. under WAD.]

WADY, adj. Vain. V. VAUDIE.

WAE, s. Wo. V. WA.

[WAER, adj. More sad, Barbour, xvi. 245.]

WAEFU', WAEFUL, adj. Woful, sorrowful; also, causing sorrow; pron. waefu', S.

Crale Murry gar't thi waefu' quine luke out,
And see hir lover an' luges slayne.
Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 17.

A waefu' wanderer seeks thy tower,
Lord Gregory ope thy door.
Burns, iv. 38.

But now the day maist waefu' came,
That day the quine did grite her fill,
For Huntly's gallant stalwart son
Wis heidit on the heidin hill.
Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 17.

WAENESS, s. Sorrow, vexation, S.

WAESOME, adj. Woful, melancholy, S.

"She kenn'd her lot would be a waesome ane, but it was of her own framing, sae she desired the less pity." Heart M. Loth., iv. 147.

WAESUCK, WAESUCKS, interj. Alas; wo is me! common in Clydes.

Ye trust waesucks! in works.
Falls of Clyde, p. 133.

Waesucks! for him that has nae lass,
Or lasses that hae naething;
Sma' need has he to say a grace,
Or melvie his brow clathing!

Burns, iii. 38.

Waesuck is the more common form. "Waesuck! woe is me! alas!" Gl. Shirr. and Picken.
Perhaps q. A.-S. wa, and Dan. Sax. usich, usig, vae nobis, wo is to us; the pl. of wa is me.

WAE WAGS YE. An exclamation, or perhaps a sort of imprecation, Buchan.

Wae wags ye, chiel, whare hae ye been,
Ye've gotten sic a drabblin!
Tarras's Poems, p. 69.

Can wags be from A.-S. wag-ian, agitare, concitare; q. "wo," or "calamity agitates you?"

[WAE WORTH YE. Woe befal you. V. WORTH.]

WAEFLEED, WAMFLET, s. The water of a mill burn, after passing the mill, Abern.; synon. Weftlin, Weftum, q. v.

"Waeftled would seem the provincial pron. of Way-flood, like S. Way-gate, and A.-S. waeg-stream, aquarum fluentum. Teut. wegh-vlied-en, however, signifies aufugere.

WAESE, WEESE, WEEZE, s. 1. A waese of strae, a bundle of straw; pron. Waese, Mearns.

In this county a distinction is made between a waese and a wisp of straw; the waese being larger, and generally made of wheat straw, regularly drawn lengthways for the purpose of thatching houses, &c., whereas the wisp is made up, in a confused manner, of any kind of straw, and used as litter for horses, &c.

The word Waese occurs in E. as early as the time of Elyot. For he renders Cesticillus, "a garlande of cloutes, whyche women do laie on theyr beides, when they cary any thyng, a waese." Biblioth. It appears also in Cooper's Thesaur., and in Barret's Alvarie, who gives Wisepe as synon. Phillips, Gouldman, Skinner, and Kersey have retained it.

2. A circular band of straw open in the middle, worn on the head, for the purpose of carrying a pail of milk, a tub, or basket, &c., Tweed., Annandale.

3. A bundle of sticks or brushwood, placed on the wind side of a cottage door to ward off the blast, S.; pron. Weese.

This is a word of pretty general use in the northern dialects. Su.-G. waese, a bundle of twigs, gathered for various purposes; Teut. wische, fascis, penicillus, a wisp; also Isl. vasi, fasciculus ex junco, scirpo, vel stramine colligatus; Verel. Thus it signifies a bundle of straw, as well as of twigs. It was also used to denote the kind of hurdles, cast into lakes or pools, for gathering the fish together that they might be enticed to take the hook; Ihre. The Su.-G. term also denotes fascines. I have observed no vestige of this ancient word in A.-S.

Germ. strohisch, a wisp of straw. By Schwan it is expl. torche, which is thus rendered by Cotgr., "the wreathed clowt, wispe, or wad of straw, layed by wenches between their heads, and the things which they carrie on them."

Mr. Brockett has given this as A. Bor. "Weez, a circular roll of straw, wool, or other soft substance, for protecting the head under the pressure of a load or burthen. Probably from Teut. waese, caespes; or it may be from ease. Brand thinks it a corruption of wisp."

WAFF, WAIF, WAYF, adj. 1. Strayed, and not as yet claimed.

"There is ane other moueable escheit, of any waif beast, within the territorie of any lord; the quhilk suld be cryed vpon the market dayes, or in the Kirk, or in the Scirefdom, sundrie tymes." Quon. Attach., c. 43. § 14.

In this sense waive is used, O. E.

Some serren the kyng, and his siluer tellen,
In cheker and in chauncery chalenge his dettes
Of warles & warmottes, of waives & straynes.
P. Ploughman, Pass. I. A. ii.

Waft is used by Ben Jonson in the same sense. The lord of the soile ha's all wafts and strays here! ha's he not! Every Man out of his Humour.

Fr. chose queues, vaayves, waifs and strays, Cotgr. Isl. vof-a, to wander, seems the natural origin; Germ. web-en, fluctuare.

2. Solitary; used as expressive of the awkward situation of one who is in a strange place where he has not a single acquaintance, S.

3. Worthless. A waft fellow, one whose conduct is immoral; or whose character is so bad, that those, who regard their own, will not associate with him; S. Hence Waff-like, having a very shabby or suspicious appearance, S.

"Though the folk afore the house are a wee waff-like, ye ken it is written in the Book, that the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong." R. Gilhaize, iii. 180.

It is often applied to one who is feeble in mind, unprincipled, or who cannot be trusted, Tweedd.

4. Low born, ignoble; opposed to honourable pedigree and connexions, S.

"Is not it an odd thing that ilka waf carle in the country has a son and heir, and that the house of Ellangowan is without male succession?" Guy Mannering, ii. 341, 342. Hence,

5. Paltry, inferior, not much to be accounted of; pron. waiff; Loth.

"'It may be so,' said Mrs. Black coldly; 'but it will be but a waiff kind of happiness—very different from her two sisters, who want for nothing, and both keep their carriages.'" Inheritance, iii. 164.

6. Feeble, worn out, Dumfr.

[To WAF about, v. n. To wander about idly, Banffs.]

WAFFIE, s. 1. A vagabond, Ang.

. A worthless person, one addicted to idleness, and to low or immoral company, Fife. Waffinger, Whiffinger, Roxb.

[WAFFISH, adj. Disreputable, worthless, Clydes.]

WAFNESS, s. Shabby appearance, S.

"Put on your braws, and let us see nae mair of your dourness; and let nae that ettercap, Miss Scott, an' her twa-faced mither, be wiping my chafts wi' your wafness." Saxon and Gael, iii. 72.

To WAF, WAIF, WAUFF, v. a. and n. To wave, to flutter, to fluctuate, to wave to and fro, S.

If I for obeisance, or bolst, to bondage me bynde,
I war wourthy to be
Hinght beigh on ane tre,
That ilk creature might se
To waif with the wynd.

Gowen and Gol, li. 10.

Apoun the top of mont Cynthus walkis he,
His waifand haris sum tyme doing down thyring
Wyth ane soft garland of laurer sweet smellyng.

Doug. Virgil, 104, 53.

Sauney M'Nab, wi' his tartan trews,
Has hecht to come down in the midst o' the caper,
An' gie us three wallops of merry shantrews
Wi' the true highland-fing of Macrimmon the piper;
Sic hippin' an' skippin',
An springin' an' flingin',
I've wad that there's nane in the lallands can waff it.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 170.

A.-S. waf-ian, Sw. waft-a, vacillare.

For Venus, efter the gys and maner thare,
Ane actiue bow apoun hir schulder bare,
As sche had bene ane wilde huntreis,
With wind waiffing hir haris lowest of trace.

Doug. Virgil, 23, 2.

As lal. waf denotes intricatio, ambages; and waf-a, texere, involvere; the meaning might seem to be, "go through the intricacies of this dance." But it is radically the same with E. waive, v. A.-S. waf-ian, vacillare. lal. waif-a, vibrare.

WAF, WAIF, VAIFF, s. 1. A hasty motion, the act of waving, S.

The grisly serpent sum tyme semyt to be
About hyr hals ane lynkit goldin chenye;
And sum tyme of hyr courtche lap with ane waif,
Become the seluag or bordour of hyr quail.

Doug. Virgil, 218, 51.

"The devil—caused you renew your baptism, and baptised you on the face, with ane waff of his hand, like a dewing, calling you Jean." Records Justiciary, Sept. 13, 1678. Arnot's Hist. Edin., p. 194, N.

2. It is used as denoting a signal; as one made by the waving of a handkerchief.

"And when you are about half a mile from shoar, as it were passing by the house, to gar set forth a waff." Lett. Restalrig. Cromartie's Conspir., p. 104-5.

"The boy waitit one and gairt hes Mr. ane token that the said gaird wer gone, be the schaw or waif of hes hand-curche. The said Ro' hung out an tow, quhairon he thought to have comeit doune; the said gaird spyt the waif of the handourche, and sus the said Ro' wes disappointit of hes intentione and devys." Birrel's Diary, p. 48, 49.

["Ye can allways have a Boat for putting out a Waif on all occasions." Skene's Survey, 1685.]

3. A transient view, a passing glance. I had just a waff o' him, S. This resembles the use of the term, A. Bor.

"In the county of Carmarthen, there is hardly any one that dies, but some one or other sees his light or candle. There is a similar superstition among the vulgar in Northumberland; They call it seeing the Waf of the person whose death it foretells.—I suspect this northern vulgar word to be a corruption of whiff, a sudden and vehement blast, which Davies thinks is derived from the Welch, chwylth, halitus, anhelitus, flatus." Brand's Popular Antiquities, p. 99.

"It is no audible voice, but it is a waff of glory filling the soul with God, as he is life, light, love and liberty, countervailing that audible voice: 'O man, greatly beloved.'" Guthrie's Trial, p. 160.

4. A slight stroke from any soft body, especially in passing, S.

5. A sudden affection, producing a bodily ailment. Thus, to denote the sudden impression sometimes made on the human frame, in consequence of a temporary exposure to chill air, it is said that one has gotten a waff or waif of cauld, S. V. the v. n.

"No,—it's neither the tane, nor the tither, but just a waf o' cauld that I got twa nights ago; a bit tow that's no worth the talking o'." Entail, ii. 12.

"I found myself in a very disjasked state—with the great fatigue,—together with a waff of cold that had come upon me, no doubt caused by that disaster of the thunder plump that drookit me to the skin." Blackw. Mag., Sept. 1821, p. 166.

6. Transient effluvia or odour, Shetl.

7. Metaph. used to denote the contagious and fatal influence of a sinful course; in allusion to the effect of bad air, or of a suffocating wind.

"Mr. George Barclay, who—was a blest instrument to the edification of many souls,—got a waff of that murdering East-Wind in the 1679, and after that got too much old wit, and got too much of the world in his arms, and left too much of it to a sinful fool, to his hurt, having no children alive, as he said to myself when near the gates of death." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 159.

8. A benevolent influence, as if communicated in passing, S.

—"We maun gie something to the young woman, and the bairns, that we may get a waff o' their good will likewise." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 162.

9. Waff is used as equivalent to Wraith, apparently from its being seen only transiently, Border. A. Bor. id. V. Brocket.

"Your honour forgets I fand my dear maister mysel, an' saw him laid in the cauld grave. It's been his waff. Waes me! he maun hae some meikle maiter to make known. Ye should hae spoken to't." Dangerous Secrets, ii. 163.

To WAFFLE, v. a. To rumple, Clydes.

WAFFLE, WAFFIL, WAFF, adj. 1. Limber, pliable, S. V. WEFFIL.

2. Feeble, useless, Roxb. "A waffil dud," a person who is without strength or activity, ibid.; synon. Thowless.

WAF, s. Synon. with Waff, sense 8.

"If I get a favourable waf o' your good will, I can bide a wee for an answer." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 321.

WAFFINGER, WHIFFINGER, s. A vagabond. V. WAFF, adj.

WAFROM, s. Prob. an errat. for Wisser, a mask or Visor.

"Her majesty [Anne of Denmark]—was then conducted thro' the whole town to the abbay; forty two young men of the town, clothed in white taffety, and cloth of silver, with chains of gold and black wafroms in form of Moors, dancing all the way before her grace." Moyse's Memoirs, p. 171.

The word is different in another work.

"There were xliij young men all cled in quhytt talfettie and wisseris of black cullour on ther faces lyk Moors, all full of gold chenyes, that dancit befor hir grace all the way." Belhaven MS., Mem. Ja. VI., Fo. 46.

This evidently signifies masks or visors. It therefore seems probable that Wafroms is an error of the transcriber.

[WAFROUN, s. A wafer, a small cake, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 323.]

WAF, s. One who, under the appearance of friendship, holds another up to ridicule, S.

Apparently of the same origin with E. wag, "any one ludicrously mischievous," from A.-S. waeg-an, ludere; fallere, to mock, to deceive.

WAF, WEFT, WOFT, s. The woof in a web, S.

"Is not this pain and joy, sweetness and sadness to be in one web, the one the weft, the other the warp?" Rutherford's Lett., P. I. ep. 29.

"The threads inserted into the warp, were called Subtemen, the woof or weft." Adam's Roman Antiq., p. 523.

"The weft was chiefly spun by old women." Statist. Acc. (Aberdeen), xix. 207.

A.-S. wefta, Sa.-G. waest, id. from waefw-a, to weave, whence also waef, a web.

WA-GANG, WAYGANG, s. 1. A departure.

"Frost and fawshood have baith a dirty waygang;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 27.

It is sometimes written wa-gaen.

"It was a wa-gaen to mae uor me at that time." Campbell, i. 326.

2. A disagreeable taste in the act of swallowing, or after a thing is swallowed, S.B.

"It tasted sweet i' your mou, but fan anes it was down your wizen, it had an ugly knaggim, an' a wasch wa-gang." Journal from London, p. 3.

"Waugh wa-gang, a disagreeable bye-taste;" Gl. q. the relish any thing has in going away; Teut. weg-ga-en, abire, discedere; wegh-ganck, abitus.

3. The canal through which water runs in its course from a mill, Lanarks.; often the wa-gang o' the water.

WA-GANG CRAP. The crop which the tenant has before he quits his farm, S. B. Way-gangin' Crop, S. A.

*[To WAG, v. a. To make a signal to a person by moving the finger, the hand, or the head; generally followed by on or at, S.]

[WAG, s. A signal made to a person as above, S.]

WAG-AT-THE-WA', s. 1. A name given to a clock, which has no case, frequently used in the country; thus named from the motion of the pendulum, Clydes.

2. A spectre supposed to haunt the kitchen, and to take its station on the crook, wagging backwards and forwards before the death of one of the family, S. As in the old rhyme:—

Wag-at-the-wa' went out i' the night,
To see that the moon was shining bright;
The moon, she was at the latter-fa';
"Gang to your bed," cry'd Wag-at-the-wa'.
O! why do ye wag the witch-nickit crook,
While the piet's asleep, & the ravens they rook?
Hell's een shimmer'd on you i' the moon's latter-fa';
Gae e'er your wagging, for I maun awa'.

WAGE, s. A pledge, a pawn.

Or thay thare lawde suld lois or vassallage,
Thay had fer lewar lay thare life in wage.

Doug. Virgil, 135, 14.

This phrase is analogous to that used by Blind Harry. V. WED, s., and WAIDOK.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. gaye, id. But it must ultimately be traced to Su.-G. wail, pignus.

WAGEOURE, s. A stake, E. wager; used by Bp. Douglas as properly signifying a prize for which different persons contend.

Nixt eftir quham the wageoure has ressaue,
He that the lesche and lyame in sounder draue.
Virgil, 145, 44.

Fr. gageoure, sponsio. V. WAGE.

WAGEOUR, VAGEOURE, VAGER, s. A soldier, one who fights for pay.

And of tressour sua stuffy is he
That he may wageouris haiff plenty.
Barbour, xi. 48, MS.

—Achemenides vnto name I hate,
Cumyn vnto Troy with my fader of late,
But ane pure wageoure clepit Adamastus—
My fallowship vnwitting foryet me here.
Doug. Virgil, 89, 12.

War I ane King,——
I sould gar mak ane congregatioun
Of all the freirs of the four ordouris,
And mak yow vagers on the bordouris.
Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 234.

Bellenden distinguishes wageours from legionary soldiers.

"Suetonius come in Britane with twa legionis and x. m. wagiouris of sindry nationis." Cron., Fol. 41, b. Formed immediately from wage, like soldier, Fr. soldat, from Germ. sold, merces. Fr. gag, L. B. rad-ia, gag-ia, &c., merces; of which the common origin is Goth. wad, pignus.

It deserves observation, however, that Sren. views E. wage, conducere (to wage soldiers), as allied to Isl. veig, res pecuniaria, veig-ur, pretium, pretiosum quid.

We find the phrase vageit men used as equivalent to this. V. VAGEIT.

WAGGLE, s. A bog, a marsh, S.B., also wuggle.

"Depones, that he knows the place called the Waggle, between which and the water there was a bog, or swell that beasts would have laired in.—Interrogated, If he remembers a high point of land projecting into the Allochy grain, nearly opposite to the Waggle or bog above mentioned?" State, Leslie of Powis, &c., 1806, p. 74.

Allied perhaps to Teut. waggel-en, agitare, motitare; because marshy ground shakes under one's tread. It can have no affinity, surely, to Isl. vegafall, Sw. waegfall, a way destroyed by the overflowing of rivers, so as to be rendered unfit for travelling.

WAGHORN, s. A fabulous personage, who, being a liar nineteen times (or, according to others, four and twenty times) greater than the devil, was crowned king of liars. Hence extravagant liars are said to be as ill as Waghorn, or waur than Waghorn; Aberd.

This is the same character that Kelly introduces: "As false as Waghorn, and he was nineteen times false than the Deel." S. Prov., p. 55.

This fanciful denomination may have been formed from this gentleman having a horn on his head, which he wagged, perhaps in imitation of the nod of Jupiter, to give the greater weight to his strong assertions.

WAG-STRING, s. One who dies by means of a halter.

"An euill lad is in the way to proue an olde wag-string." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 952.

WA'-HEAD, s. The vacancy on the top of the inside of a cottage-wall, that is not beam-filled, where articles not constantly in use are deposited, Roxb.

A farmer in Liddisdale, being on a visit to his landlord in Teviotdale, his landlord, having built a new house, asked him what he thought of it. The farmer replied; "Not much; your house has na wa'-heads, to lay harrow-teeth and bits o' odements on. So, think what ye will of it, I will never ca' it a convenient ane." Scott of Liddisdale's Beauties of the Border.

To WAIBLE, WABBLE, v. n. To move unsteadily in walking, as one who is very feeble, Tweedd.

This must be merely a variety of Wevil, to wriggle. It is nearly allied to Germ. wappel-n, motitari, tremule moveri.

WAID, s. The dye-stuff called woad. "Ane pipe of waid;" Aberd. Reg. V. WADD, and WALD.

To WAIDE, v. a. and n. To rage; to render or become furious.

Armour al witles in his bed sekis he,
Armour ouer al the lugeing law and he,
The grete curage of irne wappinis can waide,
Crewell and wyld, and al his wit invaide
In wikkitt wodnes battal to desire,
Quharon he birnis hait in felloun ire.

Doug. Virgil, 223, 18.

"Wade (through) penetrate, possess or employ (his thoughts);" Rudd. Sibb. But this is evidently a mistake. Waide, is either to render, or to become, furious; from A.-S. wed-an, insanire, furere. V. WED.

To WAIDGE, v. a. To pledge.

Yit Hope and Courage hard besyde,
Quha with them wont contend,
Did tak in hand us all to gyde
Unto our journeyes end;
Implaidging and waidding
Baith twa thair lyves for myne.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 104.

Su.-G. waedja, sponsionem facere; L. B. vadiare, guag-iare, ingag-iare, id. This points out the origin of E. engage, q. to give a wad or pledge for one. V. WAGE.

To WAIF. V. WAFF, v.

To WAIGLE, WEEGGLE, v. n. To waddle, to waggle, S.

Belg. waegel-en, waggel-en, motitare; from waeg-en, vacillare; Su.-G. wackl-a, id. A.-S. wicel-ian, id. titubare. The word appears in a more simple form in Moes.-G. wag-ian, agitare, and Su.-G. wick-a, wick-a, vacillare, which Ihre deduces from wick, mollis.

WAIH, WAIHE, s. The watch. "To play vpoun the trum nychtly, to convene the waih at ewin;" Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

[WAIK, adj. Weak; waik and worthy, weak and strong alike, Barbour, xvii. 931.

To WAIK, v. a. To enfeeble, E. weaken.

Nor yit the slaw nor febil vnweikly age
May waik our sprete, nor mynnis our curage.
Doug. Virgil, 299, 28.

Su.-G. wek-a, vacillare, from wek, mollis; wik-a, cedere.

To WAIK, v. a. To watch, S. wauke.

The King, that all fortrowaillyt wes,
Saw that him worthy slep nedwayis;
Till his fostyr brodyr he says,
"May I traist in the, me to waik,
"Till Ik a littil sleping tak!"

Barbour, vii. 179, MS.

A.-S. wac-ian, vigilare, E. wake.

To WAIL, WALE, v. a. To veil.

Ane lenye wattry garmond did him wail,
Of coulour fauch, schape like ane hempyrn sail.
Doug. Virgil, 240, b. 41.

Velabat, Virg.

Thus mekyll said sche and tharwyth bad adew,
Hir hede wailt with ane haw claith or blew.

Ibid. 445, 9.

Tc WAIL, v. a. To choose, to select. V. WALE.WAIL, s. The gunwale of a ship.

On cais thare stude ane meikle schip that tyde,

Doug. Virgil, 342, 16.

Probably from A.-S. weal, munimentum; q. the fortification of the side of a ship.

WAILE, s. Prob. a wand, a rod.

Richt sall nocht rest me alway with his rewle;
Thoch I be quhyllum bowsoun as ane waile,
I sall be cruikit quhill I mak him fule.

K. Hart, ii. 39.

Su.-G. wal, C. B. gwal-en, id.; Fr. gaule, a switch.

WAILL, s. A vale, or valley.

Syn in a wail that ner was thar besid,
Fast on to Tay his buschement can he draw.
Wallace, iv. 428, MS.

WAILL, WAILE, WALE, s. 1. Advantage, contr. from avail.

Than Wallace kest quhat was his grettest wail.
The fleand folk, that off the feild fyrst past,
In to thair king agayne releifit fast.
Fra athir sid so mony semblit thar,
That Wallace wald lat folow thaim no mar.

Wallace, vi. 603, MS.

Then Wallace cast what was his best availle.

Edit. 1648.

This is probably the meaning of the word as used in Gawan and Gol., i. 17.

Wynis went within the wane, maist wourthy to wail,
In counis of cleir gold, brichtest of blee.

S. P. R., iii. 76.

Vaill, edit. 1508.

WAILYE [QUE] WAILYE. V. VAILYE.

[In Dr. Jamieson's edition of Barbour, this phrase is misprinted wailye quod wailye, and was so given in the Dictionary. The Camb. MS. has avale que valze,

WAINE, pret. Fought.

A mychty God! quha thar had bene
And had the kingis worschip sene,
And his brodyr, that waine him by,
That stonayit thaim sa hardely,
He suld weile say, that thai had will
To wyn honour, & cum thairtill.

Barbour, B. viii. 311, MS.

The sense has not been understood by editors.
Hence was has been substituted from Andro Hart's time downwards. It is the pret. wanne, from A.-S.
winn-an, laborare, pugnare.

To WAINGLE, v. n. To flutter, to wave, to wag, to dangle, to flap, Aberd. V. WINGLE, which seems merely a variety.WAIT, WINT, s. A transient sight, a passing view, a glimpse, Aberd. To seay a bow that was sumthing wicht;
Syne come agane, and tak gud nycht,
Bot on lap he, and went to wair;
Fairweill; adewe; they gat na mair.

Poems, Sixteenth Cent., p. 38.

It may have been a phrase borrowed from the sailing line; as A.-S. wave is ora, portus. Thus to wair to wair would signify to take ship. Isl. rer, ora; G.
Andr., p. 253. Or it may be the A.-S. phrase to wair, cautionis gratia, q. to take care of himself.

WAIR ALMERIE. A press or cupboard for holding household articles, or such as are necessary for the table, distinguished from one used for keeping meat.

"The air sall haue—an meit almeric, ane wa almeric, ane scrine," &c. Balfour's Practicks, p. 23.
"That William Halkerstoune—has done wrang in the withhaldin fra Johnne of Knollis,—a met almeric, a weschale almeric, a schryn, a wair almeric," &c. Act
Dom. Conc., A. 1489, p. 131.

WAIRAWONS, interj. Welladay, Fife.

WAIRD, s. A sentence, an award. V. WARDE.

To WAIRD, v. a. To fasten a mortised joint by driving a pin through it, Clydes. Hence the terms, Weel-wairdit and Ill-wairdit.

WAIRD, WAIRD-PIN, s. The pin used for fastening a mortised joint ibid.

WAIRDER, s. One who secures mortised joints in this manner, ibid.

A-S. waerd-an, waerd-ian, tueri; as this operation is meant to guard the joint from opening.

WAIRDHOUSS, s. A prison; now called the Tolbooth; wairdhous, Aberd. Reg.

A-S. waerd-ian, Su.-G. waard-a, custodire.

WAIS, s. [Prob., what is washed ashore.]

—"Wrack, waith, wais, wair," &c. Acts Ja. VI. V. ROICH.

WAISTLESS, adj. [Unshapely, paunchy; synon. baggy.]

Full mony a waistless wally-drag,
With waimis unweildable, did furth wag,
In creische that did increas.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 30, st. 9.

"Spendthrift;" Lord Hailes. But the adj. for this in S. is waisterfow. Perhaps the meaning is, that, in consequence of gluttony, their bellies were so much swelled, that they seemed to have no waists.

WAISTY, adj. Void, waste.

Alhale the barnage flockis furth attanis,
Left vode the toun, and strenth wyth waisty wantis.
Doug. Virgil, 428, 45.

To WAIT, VAIT, WATE, WAT, v. n. To know, E. wot.

"Lordys," he said, "ye wait quhat is ado;
Off thar cummyng my self has na plesance;
Herfor mon we wyrk with ordinance."
Wallace, viii. 1245, MS.

Sic thingis not attentik ar, wate we.
Doug. Virgil, 6, 23.

He vanyst fer away, I wat neur quhare.
Ibid. 109, 20.

"Thou wait, kyng Anthiocus, that this sex and thretty yeiris I hef beene excersit in the veyris, baytht in Ytalie and in Spangye." Compl. S., p. 23.

"It is blinde also, in respect they waits not whom fra it commeth." Bruce's Eleven Serm., Z. 2, a.

Wat is commonly used, S. wait, S. A., as an act. v. "To Wait a person, signifies in popular language, to know from experience." Gl. Compl., p. 379.

I question much, however, if the ingenious editor be right in adding that "it was also used by Minot," in the following passage—

There was thaire baner born all doune,
To mak slike boete thar war to blame;
Bot nevertheles ay er thar boune
To wait Ingland with sorow and schame.
Poems, p. 4.

It seems rather to signify pursue. V. next word.

"Before I ween'd,* but now I wat," S. Prov. "Spoken upon the full discovery of some malefice, which before we only suspected." Kelly, p. 69. "Suspected."

Ye're our weil, and wate na, is a common phrase, signifying that the person, to whom it is addressed, is not sensible of his benefits, S.

Ye're weil, and watna, lad, they're sayin,
Wi' getting leave to dwell aside her;
And gin ye had her a' your ain,
Ye might na find it mows to guide her.

Lazy Liberty, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 160.

Su.-G. wet-a, A.-S. Moes.-G. wit-an; Ihre. Ulphilas uses the phrase, Ni wait; I know not, S. I wate. A.-S. ic wat, scio, S. I wat.

To WAITE, v. a. To blame. [V. WITE.]

"And by my truth," quoth he, "shall I never do him that fault, whereby he shall justly have occasion to wate me of unkindness whilst I live." Sadler's Papers, i. 24.

A vicious orthography for Wite, q. v.

WAITER, s. The name formerly given to the persons who kept the gates of Edinburgh.

"The insurgents had made themselves masters of the West-Port, rushing upon the waiters (so the people were called who had the charge of the gates), and possessing themselves of the keys." Heart M. Loth., i. 137.

WAITER, s. A token, a sign; Border. V. WITTER.

WAITH, s. 1. Cloth made into garments.

Philotus is the man,—
Ane ground-riche man, and full of graith;
He wantis na jewels, claith, nor waith,
Bot is baith big and beine.

Philotus, S. P. R., iii. 8.

The worth o't twice in claith or waith ye's get,
I canna say but I am in your debt.—
Your claith and waith will never tell wi' me,
Though ye a thousand laids thereof wud gee.

Ross's Helenore, p. 80.

Claith nor waith seems to have been a Prov. expression; perhaps q. "neither cloth in the piece, nor cloth made into garments." Su.-G. wad, A.-S. waede, Alem. swad, indumentum; Franc. uual, whence swath-us, vestiarium, uual-en, vestire, Willeram.

2. A plaid; such as is worn by women, S.B.

Bannoeks and kebbocks, knit up in a claith.
She had wiled by, and row'd up in her waith.
Ross's Helenore, p. 53.

WAITH, s. Danger, peril.

He buskyt hym thare eft belyve,
And to the se has tane his way,
Quhare that he trawalyde mony day
In wayth and were and in bargane
Quhyll that he werouynd haly Spayne.
Wyntown, iii. 3. 51.

—Him thoctt weill,
Giff he had baldyn the castell,
It had bene asseyt raith;
And that him thoctt to mekill waith.
For he ne had hop off reskewyng.

Barbour, v. 418, MS.

Quharfor, quha knew thair herbery,
And waki cum on thaim sodanly,—
With few mengye men mycht thaim scaith,
And eschaip for owtyn waith.

Ibid. vii. 305, MS.

The chyftane said, sen thair King had befor
Fra Wallace fled, the canns was the mor.
Fast south thair went, to byd it was great waith.
Donglace as than was quyt off thair scaith.

Wallace, ix. 1734, MS.

In Edit. 1648, absurdly rendered wraith.

This word has no connexion with waith, as signifying the chase, or wandering. There is no reason why Mr. Pink. should say, (Glossa. Maitl. P.) that waith in Henry's Wallace seems to mean accoutrements. It is evidently allied to Su.-G. vaada, danger; discrimen, periculum, anc. wade; Isl. vode. Jak skilde mik gaerna af thenna wade; Lubenter hanc aerumnam vitarem; Hist. Alexand. M. ap. Ihre. It also denotes any accidental loss or misfortune. Su.-G. vaadabot, a fine for accidental homicide; vaadellet, accidental fire. Dan. vaade, danger; vaadedrab, accidental homicide.

WAITH, WAITHE, WAYTH, WAITHING, s.

1. The act of hunting.

We ar in the wode went, to walke on oure waith,
To hunt at the hertes, with honde, and with horne;
We ar in our gamen, we have no gome-graith.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 8.

"Wandering," Gl. Pink.

Your deir may walk quhairver thair will:
I wyn my meit with na sic waith.
I do bot litil wrang.
Bot gif I flouris fang.

Murning Maiden, Maitland Poems, p. 208.

2. The game taken in hunting, or in fishing.

Wallace meklye agayne ansuer him gawe.
"It war resone, me think, yhe suld haif part.
"Waith suld be delt, in all place, with fre hart."
He bad his child gyff thaim of oyr waithyng.
The Sothroun said, "As now of thi delyng
"We will nocht tak; thou wald gif ws our small."
He lychtit doun, and fra the child tuk all.

Wallace, i. 335, 336, MS.

This respects fishing. But it would appear unquestionable, that the term, as anciently used in S., like Isl. veid-a, was applied to both fishing and hunting. Isl. veid-a, venari; piscari; reidi, venatio, vel praeda venatione capta; veidifaung, veidiskap-ur, id. allskonar veidifaung, Res omnes quae venatu, aucupio, piscatu, acquiruntur, ferae, pisces, aves, ova; Verel. Veide, venatio; G. Andr. Fara a reidar met hundum; To go a hunting with dogs; Specul. Regal., p. 619. V. WATT, v.

[3. What is strayed and unclaimed.]

In the Act of Parliament erecting Orkney into an earldom, wayth is conjoined with wraik.

"Grantis to the said lord Robert Stewart—the haill wraik and wayth that shal happen to be fund in ony tyme heirefter, within the boundis of the saidis landis or sie coast thairroff." Acts Ja. VI., 1581, Ed. 1814, p. 235.

WAITH, WAYTH, adj. 1. Wandering, roaming.

"Gif the awner of the saidis gudis,—causis call and drive the saidis gudis upon his cornis and girss quha pointit thame of befor, and awa intronettis not thair-etter with the samin, bot sufferis thame to go waith, and wander quhair thay pleis; he may not call or persaw him quha pointit thame for spuillye, or wrangous intronission thairwith." Balfour's Pract., p. 491.

"Scot. they say, a waith horse, i.e., a horse that wanders in pursuit of mares." Rudd.

VOL. IV.

2. Impertinent.

Thocht Crist grand oure faith,
Virgillis sawis ar worth to put in store:
They aucht not to be hald vacabound nor waith,
Full riche tressoure they bene & pretius graith.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 159, 27.

Rudd. is mistaken, in supposing this to be "the same originally with the E. waif, i.e., a thing that is found and claimed by nobody." The same idea is thrown out by Ritson, Robin Hood, Notes, lxxxv. Lye, (Addit. to Junius) derives it from A.-S. waeth-an, venari. It may have been used to denote wandering in general, as originally applied to wandering in pursuit of game. Waith, "vagatio; astraying, a wandering;" Sonner. Wide, waith; lata vagatio; Caed. 89. 4. Hence waithema, vagabundus. Whether Su.-G. wad-a, ire, ambulare, is allied, seems doubtful.

WAITHMAN, WAYTHMAN, s. A hunter.

Lytil John and Robyne Hude
Wayth-men ware commendyd gud:
In Yngil-wode and Barnys-lale
Thai oysyd all this tyme thare trawale.

Wyntoun, vii. 10. 432.

Wallace, iv. 684, MS.

The King towart the wod is gane,
Wery for awayt, and will off wane.
In til the wod some entrypt he;
And held down towart a wall,
Quhar, throw the wold, a wattir ran.

Barbour, vii. 4, MS.

Fr. valée.

WALAGEOUSS, WALEGEOUSS, adj. [An errat. for Volageouss, Valegeouss, giddy, light of conduct.]

He was baith yong, stout and felloun,
Joly alsua, and walageouss;
And for that he was amorous,
He wald ische for the blythlier.

Barbour, viii. 455, MS.

My fadyr wes kepar off yone hous,
And I wes sum deill walegeouss,
And lovyt a wench her in the toun.
And for I, bot suspicioun,
Mycht repayr till hyr priuely,
Off rapys a leddre to me mad I:
And thar with our the wall slaid I.

Ibid. x. 553, MS.

A.-S. gal, libidinosus, Belg. geylachtig, id. geyl, las-civius; Su.-G. gaelska, morum protervia.
Corr. from Fr. rolage, id. L. B. volagius is used in the sense of light; levis, Du Cange.

[WALAQUYTE, s. A short woollen shirt, Banffs.]

WALD, s. The plain, the ground.

Scharp and awfull increasis the bargane,
Als violent as euer the yett doun rane
Furth of the west dois smyte apoun the wald.
Doug. Virgil, 301, 55.

A.-S. wold, planities. This seems originally the same with faeld, feld, Alem. weld, Belg. vel, Su.-G. fell, id.

WALD, v. aux. 1. Would.

For some wald schout out of thair rout,
And off thaim that assaylt about,
Stekyt stedys, and bar doun men.
Barbour, xi. 596, MS.

2. Should, or ought to be; as implying the idea of necessity.

"Notthoes thair is sum thingis quhilke wald be presently done (and that in ane verray secret maner) as your L. sall persail on the uther side of the leafe." Corraguell to Bethune Abp. of Glasgow, Keith's Hist. App., p. 194.

This idiom is analogous to that in regard to the same auxiliary v., in the future, will. As will is used for shall E., here we have an example of wald, i.e., would, for should.

A.-S. wold, vellem, from will-an, velle. Hickes views wald, as a Dan. corruption of wolde. Gram. A.-S., p. 94. Gl. Wynt. V. following v., sense 3.

To WALD, WALDE, v. a. 1. To wield, to manage.

Kyng of Scotland crownyd wes he:
A chyld than bot twelf yhere awld,
That wapnys mycht nowcht wychtly wald.
Wyntoun, vii. 7. 118.
Thai walit out werryouris with wapinnis to wald.
Gawain and Goh., i. 1.

2. To govern.

Moes.-G. Alem. wald-an, A.-S. wæld-an, Su.-G. wald-a, Isl. vald-a, dirigere, dominari.

3. To possess.

And quhilk of thame wald wyth hym ga,
He suld in all thame sykkyre ma,
As thai wald thame redy mak
For thare fadyre dede to take
Revengeans, or wald thare herytage,
That to thame felle be rycht lynage.
Wyntoun, vi. 18. 255.

4. To Wald and Ward. This phrase occurs in Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. "To scot, lot, wache, wald & ward."

The word wald is left out in another passage, and walk used for wache. "To scot, lott, walk & ward." Perhaps the term here signifies, to have the management of public concerns in common with others who pay taxes.

Mr. Macpherson renders this would, supposing that the principal verb is wanting, as recover, reclaim, or the like. But wald seems itself to be the proper verb, as signifying to possess, enjoy, or obtain; from A.-S. wæld-an. Thus, wæold rices, potitus est imperio; Lye.

WALDING, s. Government, regularity of management.

Almaist my eis grew blind,
To se thair prettie spirtlet wing,
So feltered with the wind:
Dispairit I stairit

Vp to the element,
Behalding thair walding,
How thay in ordour went.
Burd's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 27.

WALDYN, adj. Able, powerful.

"Thair hois war maid of smal lynt or wol, and yid neur abone thair kne, to make thaym the mair waldyn and sowpyll." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 16. V. WALD, v. 2.

To WALD, v. a. To incorporate two masses of metal into one, Tweeddd.

Strike iron while 'tis het, if ye'd have it to wald.
R. irna. Herd's Coll., ii. 113.

V. WELL, WALL, v.

WALDIN-HEAT, s. 1. Such heat as is proper for welding iron, Clydes.2. Metaph. fitness for any particular object or design; as, "He's in a braw waldin heat for courting," ibid.WALD, s. Yellow weed, dyer's weed, Reseda luteola, Linn.

"Thre half pokis of wald." Aberd. Reg., V. 24.
—"Noe vther incorporation—to buy or sell—spiceria, wald and vther materialls for dying." Acts Cha. II., Ed. 1814, VIII. 63.

"For every pound of yarn allow three fourths of a pound good English wald." Max. Sel. Trans., p. 368.
In E. this is called Weld, and viewed by Johns. as quite different from Woad; although Lightfoot gives to the Luteola the name of Wild-woad.
A.-S. wad, waad, glastum.

WALDER WOLL. Prob. wedder wool.

"That Henry Leis burgess of Edinburgh restore-j turas of haddir with stray of a bed, a paire of cardis, a quarter of walder woll," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1473, p. 67.

This can mean nothing save wedder wool, or that plucked from wethers.

To WALE, v. a. To choose, to select, S. Weal, Wyle, A. Bor.; wyle is also used, S.

Tharewith Anchises son the wyse Enee
Perordoure chosin of every degre
Ane hundreth gay Ambassiatouris did wale,
To pass vnto the Kingis stede riale.
Doug. Virgil, 210, 21.

The prep. out is often added, sometimes by.
Thai walit out werryouris, with wapinnis to wald.
Gawain and Goh., i. 1.

Rannocks and kebbocks knit up in a claithe,
She had wiled by.—

Ross's Helenore, p. 53.

It sometimes denotes the act of singling out persons or things for rejection, as unfit for any particular work or purpose.

Wale out al thaim bene waik and vnweildy,
Or yit effert bene in ilk effray;
Sic cummerit wichtis suffer, I the say,
To haif ane hald, and duell here in this land.
Doug. Virgil, 151, 45.

Hence S. Outwaile, refuse, what is rejected, q. v.

Moes.-G. wal-jan, Su.-G. wærl-ia, Alem. wærl-en, Germ. wel-en, Isl. vel-ia, eligere. Thre mentions Scat. waliti, Lapl. walied, id. Su.-G. wæl, O. Belg. wælc, electio.

WALE, WAIL, s. 1. The act of choosing, the choice.

He gaif me the wale; He allowed me to choose, S. most commonly pron. wile. Hence the phrase, will and wile, free choice.

"Your Lord hath the wail and choice of ten thousand other crosses, beside this, to exercise you withal." Rutherford's Lett. P. ii. ep. 32.

Let him now then take will an' wile,
Wha nane at first wou'd wear;
An' I get baith the skaith an' scorn,
Twinn'd o' my brither's gear!

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 5.

2. That which is chosen in preference to others.

This beand said, the king Latyne, but fale
Gart cheis of all his stedis furth the wale.

Doug. Virgil, 215, 19.

V. the v.

3. A person or thing that is excellent, the best, like choice, E.

Auld Rob Morris that wins in yon glen,
He's the king of good fellows, and wale of auld men.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 176.

WEILL-WAIL'D, adj. Well-chosen, cautiously selected; often applied to persuasive language, S. [Syn. hand-wail'd.]

But d'ye see fou better bred
Was mens-fou Maggy Murdy;
She her man like a lammy led
Hame, wi' a well wail'd wordly.

Ramsay, Christ's Kirk, C. iii.

This should have been printed weill-wail'd.

WALE, s. A well, a fountain; S. wall.

"Pilgrimage to chappels, wales, croces, observation of festal daies of saints,—is discharged, and punished." Skene's Crimes, Pecun. Tit. 3. c. 47.

To WALE, v. n. To avail.

The hate fyre consumes fast the now,
Over al the schip discendis the perrellus low;
Thare was na strenth of vailyeant men to wale,
✓ No large fludis on yet that mycht auaile.

Doug. Virgil, 150, 43.

To WALE, v. a. To veil. V. WAIL.

WALE, s. A veil.

Hyr systyr than Dame Crystyane
Of relygowne the wale had tane.

Wyntoun, vii. 3. 20.

[WALE, (disyllable—wa-le), s. A valley, Barbour, xix. 414.]

WALGAN, WALGIE, s. 1. A wallet, a pouch, Aberd.

2. A wool-sack made of leather, a bag made of a calf's skin, S.B., synon. Tulchan.

This seems allied, by the interchange of letters of the same organs, to Su.-G. baelg, a skin; Isl. belg-ur, which denotes any thing made of a skin; ex pelle, pellicanus; G. Andr. C.B. belgan, also denotes a leathern bag.

[3. An ill-made piece of dress, Banffs.]

[To WALGAN, v. n. To go about idly in slatternly clothing, ibid.]

WALIE, WALY, WALLY, adj. 1. Beautiful, excellent.

I think them a' sae braw and walie,
And in sic order,
I wad nae care to be thy vallie,
Or thy recorder.

Hamilton, Ramsay's Poems, ii. 334.

2. Large, ample, S.; A waly bairn, a fine thriving child; synon. stately.

She bad me kiss him, be content
Then wish'd me joy;
And told it was what luck had sent,
A waly boy.

Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 37.

But mark the rustic, haggis-fed,—
Clap in his walie nieve a blade,
He'll mak it whistle.

Burns, iii. 220.

My tender girdil, my waly gowdy.

Evergreen, ii. 20.

"Great jewel," Gl. Ramsay.

"Waly wacht," Burns; a large draught.

Well, I have made a waly round,
To seek what is not to be found.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 490.

Sibb. renders it also chosen, as if derived from the v. Wale. But it may be allied to A.-S. walg, wallig, whole, entire. Waelig, however, signifies rich; Alem. waeleg, id. welig-an, to enrich. Alem. walon, bona, otwalon, divitiae. These terms Schilter derives from wal, wela, bone; apparently, as we say, Goods, from the correspondent adj. But it may be proper to observe, that Germ. wal-en, signifies, to grow luxuriantly; Belg. weelig, luxuriose crescens, weelig gewas, herba luxurians. Wachter, vo. Wels, derives A.-S. welig, opimus, from the Germ. v.

It is more nearly allied, in this sense, to a word used in Lapland, than to any other. This is wallje, ubertas, abundantia. The adj. appears in the form of waljes, copiosus. V. lhre, Dict. Lapon.

WALY, s. A toy, a gewgaw, S.

Baith lads and lasses busked brawly,
To glowr at ilka bonny waly.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 533.

Here chapmen billies tak their stand,
An' shaw their bonny wallies.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 27.

V. LANGRIN.

Wallies might thus originally be, q. wealth, riches.

"At ony rate, the warst barn e'er man lay in wad be a pleasanter abode than Glenallan house, wi' a' the pictures and black velvet, and silver bonnie wawlies belonging to it." Antiquary, ii. 339.

WALY-STANE, s. A nodule of quartz; as being used as a play-thing by children, Clydes. [Syn. chuckie-stane,—from being used as a nest-egg, or swallowed by fowls.]

WALISE, s. Saddlebags, S. V. WALLEES.

"If ye are nae friend to kirk and the king, and are detained as siccan a person, ye maun answer to honest men of the country for breach o' contract; and I maun keep the nag and the walise for damage and expence." Waverley, ii. 127.

WALIT, pret. v. Moved forward.

Ane legioun of thir lustie ladies schene
Folowit this Quene, (trewlie this is no nay;)
Hard by this castell of this King so kene
This wourthy folk hes walit thame away.

K. Hart, i. 18.

Mr. Pink. gives this as not understood. The obvious sense is, "moved forward;" Su.-G. wall-a, to make a journey, to stroll, to roam abroad; Alem. wall-en, Fenn. wall-en, id. A.-S. wal-ian, to travel as an exile. Teut. wal-en, wael-en, wall-en, id. To this source Ihe traces Fr. aller, which, he thinks, was originally written gall-er.

To WALK, WAKK, WAUK, v. a. and n. 1.

To watch, [to keep watch].

Than till a kyrk he gert him be Broucht, and walkyt all that nycht.

Barbour, xiii. 513, MS.

That nycht thai maid thaim mery cher;
For rycht all at thair eyss thair wer;
Thai war ay walkyt sekirly.

Ibid., xiv. 455, MS.

[2. To awake, to keep awake, Clydes.

3. To wake, to cause to waken, Barbour, vii. 179, Camb. MS.]

"Obey thame that hais the reule our you,—for thair walk for your saulis, euin as thair that mone gif a compt thairfor." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 46, a.

L, without any good reason, is inserted here, as in many other ancient S. words. It occurs in O. E. in its simple form.

"Se ye wake ye, and preye ye, for ye witen not whanne the tyme is." Wiclif, Mark xiii.

"—Abide ye here and wake ye with me—Myghtist thou not wake with me oon our? Wake ye and preie ye that ye entre not into temptacioun." Ibid., Mark xiv.

Moes-G. wak-an, A.-S. wac-ian, Su.-G. Isl. wak-a, Alem. wach-en, Germ. wach-en, vigilare.—Hence Lyk-wait, q. v.

4. To awake; used to denote the renewal of a prosecution which has been dormant.

"The said summondis wes callit, ressonit, & dispute in presens of the thre estatis for the tyme, and restit for interlocator to be gevin thairupoun, and slepit sen-syne; as in ane supplicatioun gevin in for walking of the said mater in the self mair largely proportia." Acts Mary, 1558, Ed. 1814, p. 521.

To WALKIN, WALKEN, WAUKEN, WAUK, v. a. and n. 1. To awake, Doug. Virg., as E. Waken.

[2. To wake, to cause to waken, to rouse from sleep, S.]

3. To rouse, to become earnest or excited in one's work, S.]

4. To raise a legal prosecution anew; a forensic term, S.

"And then the principall pley (betrix the perseuer and the defender) sall be walknet, and begin againe." Quon. Attach., c. 55, § 6. Placitum resuscitabitur.

"All sentences gevin—is of nane avail;—gif baith the principal cause and actioun of warrandice at any time slepit, or was continuit [adjourned], and baith the saidis parties wer not lauchfullie warnit to heir the matter walknit, and ressave farder process." Balfour's Pract., p. 403.

As Su.-G. wak-n-a, corresponds in the general sense, Ihe observes that verbs terminating in na have an inceptive signification, like that of Lat. verbs ending in scio, as lascio, lucisco.

WALKRIFE, WAKRIFE, WAUKRIFE, adj. 1. Watchful, S. wakrife.

How mony felderis bene on hir body fynd,
Als mon[y] walkrife ene lurkis thair under.

Doug. Virgil, 106, 15.

"The sentence pronounced by the Synod of Fife against the rest was approved & ratified by the whole Assembly, acknowledging therein the special benefit of God's providence in stirring up the spirits of his servants to be wakerife, carefull, & courageous." Mr. Ja. Melville's MS. Mem., p. 227.

[2. Wakeful, wide awake, Clydes.

Hey, Willie Winkie, are ye comin' ben?
The cat's singing grey thrums to the sleepin ben,
The dog's spelder'd on the floor, and disna gie a cheep,
But here's a waukrife laddie, that winna fa' asleep.

Whistle Binkie, ii. 301.]

3. Metaph., kept still alive.

Ane hundreth tempillis to Jupiter's he maid,
Ane hundreth altaris, quhareon the walkrife fyre
He dedicate, all times birnand schire.

Doug. Virgil, 106, 49.

From A.-S. wæcce, Germ. wakke, watchfulness, (in like-walk, lyke-waik) and rife, abundant.

WALKRIFENESS, WALKRYFENESSE, s. Watchfulness, as opposed to somnolency, S. waukrifeness.

"So long as the diucl is in the world, so long there is necessity requyred of walkryfeness: pastors must be walkryfe, people must be walkryfe, and enerie man and woman must be on their guard." Rollock on 1 Thes., p. 126.

To WALK, WAUK, v. a. To full cloth.

"Ordanis our souerane lordis lettrez be direct her apone, defakand to the said Robert in the said payment vj d. for the walkin of ilke eln of the said xix elz & a half." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1483, p. 95. V. WAKK.

WALKER, s. A fuller. V. under WAUK, &c.

To WALKIN, v. n. To walk; like fleyne for fle, bene for be, seyne for se.

Bot desiring he taryit euermare,
Furth with him to walkin and repare.

Doug. Virg., 181, 6.

V. SEYNE.

To WALL UP, v. n. To boil up, S.

O. E. "Wellynge or boylynge up as playnge pottis. Ebullitio." Prompt. Parv.

Su.-G. wæll-a, A.-S. wæll-an, Alem. wall-an, Belg. Germ. well-en, Lal. vell-a, aestuare, fervere.

WALL, s. A wave.

From Jupiter the wyldre fyre down she flang
Furth of the cloudis, distrois thare schyppis all,
Ouerquhelmit the sey with mony wyndy wall.

Doug. Virgil, 14, 5.

The huge wallis weltres apon hie.

Ibid. 15, 22.

Germ. Sax. Sicamb. walle, unda, fluctus; O. Teut. id., abyssus, profundum; ebullitio. Alem. wall, wuala, abyssus. The root is undoubtedly Teut. wall-en, ebullire, to boil up.

This term exhibits the origin of the name given to the whale in the Goth. dialects. Alem. wuala, wal, Belg. Germ. wal, also walfisk, Flandr. walrick, q. the fish of the abyss, whose enormous size requires a great depth of water.

WALLY, adj. Billowy, full of waves.

Qubalm baith yfere, as said before haue we,
Saland from Troy throw out the wally see,
The dedly storm ouerquhelmit with ane quhiddir.
Doug. Virgil, 178, 8.

To WALLI, v. a. To beat two masses into one. V. WELL.

To WALLACH, (gutt.) v. n. 1. To use many circumlocutions, Ang.

2. To cry, as a child out of humour, to wail, Ang.; to scream; [part. pr. wallachin, Stirling, Clydes.]

The first sense might seem allied to Su.-G. wall-a, to roam; the second has evidently an affinity to Ir. walligh-im, to howl.

[WALLACH, s. 1. A scream, howl, wail, Banffs., Clydes.

2. A noisy step, thump, or fall, ibid.]

WALLACHIE-WEIT, s. The lapwing, Mearns; from Wallach, to wail, and Weit, a term used to denote the sound made by this bird. [Wallop-a-weet, Banffs.]

To WALLAN, v. n. To wither, to fade, Aberd.; synon. with S. Wallow.

WALLAWAY, interj. Alas; E. welaway.

Now nouthir gretest Juno, wallaway!
Nor Saturnus son hie Jupiter with just ene
Has our quarrel considerit, na ouser sene.
Doug. Virgil, 112, 44.

Well away, Ibid. 48, 6. S. wala-wa.

A.-S. wala wa, Su.-G. walewa, proh dolor. V. Wally, interj.

WALLAWALLA, interj. Equivalent to E. hush! silence! Orkn.

WALLEE, s. That part of a quagmire in which there is a spring, S. V. WELL-EY.

[WALL-GIRLS-KALE, s. The water-cress; lit. well grass-kale, Banffs.]

WALLEES, s. Saddlebags, S.

Belg. valleys, Fr. valise, a portmanteau. Thre derives the Fr. term from wad, cloth, and laes-a, to include, or lock up, vo. Wad, indumentum. The Su.-G. synon. term is waetsack, watsack, q. a sack for carrying clothes.

To WALLER, v. n. To toss about as a fish does upon dry land, Tweedd., Upp. Clydes.; either corr. from E. Wallow, or claiming a common origin. It is indeed expl. by E. Wallow, Clydes.

WALLER, s. A confused crowd in a state of quick motion; as, a waller of birds, a waller of bairns, &c., Roxb.

A.-S. weall-ian, to boil up; C. B. gwall-aw, to pour out, to empty. Su.-G. wall-a, is used to denote instant motion.

WALLET, s. A valet.

"Oure souerane lord, remembring the lang, guid, trow and faithfull seruice done to his maiestie, alsweill in his hienes minoritie as maioritie, be his grace dalie seruitour Johnne Gib ane of the wallettis in his G. chalmre;—Ratifica," &c. Acts Ja. VI., vol. iii., p. 507. The act is entitled "Ratificatioun to Johnne Gib, wallet of his maiestie's chalmre."

WALLIDRAG, WALLIDRAGGLE, s. 1. A feeble ill-grown person; S. wallidraggle, S. B. wary draggel; synon. wrig and werdie.

I haue ane wallidrag, ane worm, ane auld wobat carle,
A waistit wolroun, na worthe bot wourdis to clatter.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 33.

2. A drone, an inactive person.

Full mony a waistless wally-drag,
With waimis unweildable did furth wag.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 30.

3. A slovenly female, S.

"I have three daughters, one of seventeen, one of sixteen, and one of twelve years old, and no one wally draggle among them, all fine girls." Lett. Allan Ramsay, Lives of Eminent Scotsmen, P. I., p. 100.

"They say—that king's chaff is better than other folks' corn; but I think that canna be said o' king's soldiers, if they let themselves be beaten wi'—wives wi' their rocks and distaffs, the very wally draggles o' the country-side." Rob Roy, iii. 189.

According to Lord Hailes, it seems "corrupted from wallowit drag, a withered outcast, and thence by an easy metonymy signifies any thing useless or unprofitable;" Note, Bann. P.

But this is by no means satisfactory. It appears primarily to signify the youngest of a family, who is often the feeblest. It is sometimes used to denote the youngest bird in a nest; which in Teut. receives the dirty and contemptuous designation, kack-in-nest; postremo excludens, postremus in nido; Kilian. Drag or draggel may perhaps mean, the dregs. Teut. dragt, however, signifies birth, offspring, from drag-en kindt dragen, to be pregnant. The first part of the word may have been formed from a term used among the vulgar, synon. with Su.-G. gaell, testiculus; resembling the formation of its synon. Pockshakings, q. v., although with still less claim to delicacy.

It is probable, in wary-draggel, the pronunciation of S. B., is the proper one. In this case it seems to be merely the Goth. phrase, used in the old laws of Iceland, wary draegt, the son of an exiled person; filius ab exule genitus; G. Andr., p. 248. Germ. wary and wrag in like manner denote an exile; also, an infamous person. V. WARY-DRAGGEL.

WALLY-DRAGGLE, s. Three sheaves set up together, without the hood-sheaf, more speedily dried, Roxb.

WALLIES, s. pl. 1. The intestines, Ayrs.

2. Also expl. "fecket pouches," or pockets to an under waistcoat, ibid. [V. WALLEES.]

WALLIES, s. pl. Finery, Roxb.; synon. Braws.

What bonny lassies flock to Boswell's fair
To see their joes, an' shaw their wallies there!
A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 96.

WALLIFOU FA'. V. under WALY.

To WALLIPEND, v. a. To undervalue, Mearns; evidently corr. from Vilipend.

WALLOCH, WALLOCK, s. 1. A kind of dance familiar to the Highlands, S.

O she was a cantie quean,
Weel could she dance the highland walloch,
How happy I, had she been mine,
Or I'd been Roy of Aldivalloch.

Song, Roy's Wife.

2. The lapwing, Moray.

Perhaps from its wild cry; V. WALLACH, v.: or from its deceptive mode of teasing those who search for its nest; Isl. ruling-r, fallax, or walk-a, vexare, molestare.

WALLOCH-GOUL, s. 1. A noisy blustering fellow, Ayrs.; apparently from Wallach, to cry, as a child out of humour, and Goul, a sort of yell.

2. A female of a slovenly appearance, ibid.

To WALLOP, WALOP, v. n. 1. "To move quickly, with much agitation of the body or cloaths," Rudd. S.B.; also, to gallop.

He spreit his furth, and full proude waloppis he,
His streikand vp his bede with mony ane ne.

Doug. Virgil, 381, 20.

And sum, to schaw thair courtlie corsis,
Wald ryd to Leith, and ryn thair horsis;
And wichtlie wallop ouer the sandis:
Ye nouthir spairit spurris nor wandis.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 265.

[2. To dash or flap about, to hang loose and flutter, S.

3. To beat severely, to thrash, Clydes.]

Rudd. views this as from the same origin with Fr. gallop-er, E. gallop; observing that G is frequently changed into W. But whence gallop itself? Seren. derives wallop from A.-S. weal-an, Su.-G. waell-a, to boil; and gallop from Su.-G. leap-a, to run, Mocs.-G. ga being prefixed. They seem, however, radically the same: and we find Teut. wal-oppe, Fland. vliegh-walop, rendered, curvus gradarius, i.e., a gallop. This, I suspect, has originally been an inversion of Teut. op-wall-en, op-well-en, scaturire, ebullire, from wall-en, to boil, and op, oppe, up.

O. E. "Walop-yn, as hors. Volopto.—Waloping of hors. Voloptacio." Prompt. Parv. The v. Volopto, seems to have been a sort of Lat. term formed by monkish writers from the O. E. v.

WALLOP, s. 1. Quick motion, with agitation of the clothes, especially when in a ragged state, S.; [a rag hanging loose and fluttering, Banffs.]

2. The noise caused by this motion, S.

3. A sudden and severe blow, Aberd.

To WALLOW, WALOW, v. n. 1. To wither, to fade. Cumb. dwallow, id.

So brynt the feildis, al was birnand maid,
Herbis wox dry, wallowing and gan to faid.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 16.

Laggerit leyis wallowit fernis schew.

Ibid., 201, 5.

2. Metaph. applied to the face.

In thrauts of dethe, wi' wallow'd cheik,
All panting on the plain,
The bleiding corps of warriors lay.
Neir to arise again.

Herdykute, Pinkerton's Sel. Ball., i. 11

3. Transferred to the mind.

To this my wyt is wallowide dry
But floure or froyte.—

Wyntoun, i. Prol. 121

It occurs in O. E.

There both roses of red blee,
And lily, likeful for to se:
They walloweth neither day nor night.

Land of Cokayne, Ellis's Spec. E. P., i. 87.

"And whanne the sunne roos vp it welwreite for hete, and it driede vp, for it hadde no roote." Wiclif, Mark, iv.

A.-S. wealw-ian, wealw-an, wealw-ian, exarescere, marcescere; Alem. wealw-en, Germ. welw-en, id. This Goldastus derives from ual, flavus, because fading herbs assume a yellow colour. Val, color cineritius; Schilter. Wachter in like manner derives Germ. welw-en, from falb, A.-S. fealw, yellow, which is evidently allied to Lat. flav-us.

WALLOWAE, s. The devil, Shetl.

Various etymons might be suggested, not destitute of plausibility. The designation might be traced to Wally-wae, or Wallawa, lamentation, because he is the cause or origin of grief, in the same manner as when called the Sorrow.

WA-LOOK, s. That suspicious down-cast look, which those have who look away from the person to whom they address themselves, Clydes.

WALLY, adj. Beautiful; large. V. WALIE.

WALLY-DYE, s. A toy, agew-gaw, S. O. "Wallys-dys, gew-gaws;" Gl. Sibb. V. WALIE, adj.

WALLY-DYE, interj. Well-a-day, alas, Ettr. For.

"Wally-dye, man, gin ye be nae better a fighter than ye're an examiner, ye may gie up the craft." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 111.

WALLY-WAE, WALLY-WALLYING, s. Lamentation, Ayrs.

I wish that I was dead, but I'm no like to dee, "as Jenny says in her wally-wae about her father's cow and Auld Robin Gray." The Entail, ii. 160.

"Such a wally-wallying as the news of this caused at every door; for the red-coats, from the persecuting days,—were held in dread and as a horror among us." Annals of the Parish, p. 161.

From the same origin with Wallaway, q. v.

WALROUN, s. V. WOLROUN.

WALSH, WELSCH, adj. Insipid, S. walsh, A. Bor. "insipid, fresh, waterish." Ray. Lincolns. id.; [walshoch, Banffs.]

From thy coistis depart I was constrenyt
Be the commandmentis of the goddis vnfeynt,—
To pas throw out the dirk schaidois belue
By gousty placis welsche saurrit, moist, and hare,
Quhare profound nycht perpetualie doith repare.

Doug. Virgil, 180, 4.

E. wallowish, id. Skinner derives it from Teut. walghe, nausea. Rudd. and Sibb. view S. warsh, id. as radically the same. But although walsh, and warsh, are synon., the first must be traced to Teut. gaesech, ingratus, insuavis sapore aut odore; the second, to versch, (versae, R. Glouc., p. 216.) fresh, q. tasteless. Thus, we say that any kind of food is warsh, when it wants salt. Teut. walghe, mentioned above, gives origin to another term, nearly allied in sense. V. WAUGH.

WALSHNESS, s. Insipidity of taste, S. Gl. Sibb.; [walshochness, Banffs.]

To WALT, v. a. To beat, to thump, Dumfr.; perhaps radically the same with Quhult, q. v.

[WALTIN', s. A beating, thrashing, Clydes.]

To WALTER, v. a. To overturn. V. WELTER.

WALTERAR, s. One who overturns.

—Walterars of courts ye lat suborne yow.
Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 248.

WALTH, s. Enough of any thing, plenty of; as, "He has walth o' siller," i.e., abundance of money, S.; synon. Routh, [Fouth.]

This may be from A.-S. waleth, rich; but perhaps in its application it as nearly resembles Su.-G. wælde, power. Thus, the phrase is equivalent; "He has a power o' siller."

WALX, s. Wax, Aberd. Reg.

"Walx, at the entring, naething, bot at the out-pasing, gif it be weyt be hail wawis, viij. d. ilk waw." Balfour's Practicks, Custumes, p. 87.

If we might credit the history of former times, there must have been a considerable demand for this article for the purposes of witchcraft. It was generally found necessary, it would seem, as the medium of inflicting pain on the bodies of men.

"To some others at these times he teacheth, how to make pictures of waxe or clay, that by the wasting thereof, the persons that they beare the name of, may be continually melted or dried away by continuall sicknesse." K. James's Daemonologie, B. 2, c. 5.

In order to cause acute pain in the patient, pins, we are told, were stuck in that part of the body of the image, in which they wished the person to suffer.

The same plan was adopted for inspiring another with the ardour of love.

Then mould her form of fairest wax,
With adder's eyes, and feet of horn;
Place this small scroll within its breast,
Which I, your friend, have hither borne.
Then make a blaze of alder wood,
Before your fire make this to stand;
And the last night of every moon
The bonny May's at your command.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 35.

The Moon, it appears, has great power in this charm. For her supposed influence in love, V. the article MOON. Then it follows:

With fire and steel to urge her weel,
See that you neither stint nor spare;
For if the cock be heard to crow,
The charm will vanish into air.

The wounds given to the image were supposed to be productive of similar sounds of love in the tender heart of the maiden whom it represented.

A female form, of melting wax,
Mess John surveyed with steady eye,
Which ever and anon he pierced,
And forced the lady loud to cry.—P. 84.

The same horrid rites were observed on the continent. For Grilland (de Sortilegiis) says: Quidam solent apponere imaginem cervæ juxta ignem ardentem, completis sacrificiis, de quibus supra, & adhibere quasdam preces nefarias, & turpia verba, ut quemadmodum imago illa igne consumitur & liquescit, eodem modo cor mulieris amoris calore talis viri feruenter ardeat, &c. Malleus Malefic., T. II., p. 232.

It cannot be doubted that these rites have been transmitted from heathenism. Theocritus mentions them as practised by the Greeks in his time. For he introduces Samoetha as using similar enchantments, partly for punishing, and partly for regaining her faithless lover.

But strew the Salt, and say in angry tones,
"I scatter Delphid's, perjured Delphid's bones."
—First Delphid injured me, he raised my flame,
And now I burn this bough in Delphid's name;
As this doth blaze, and break away in fume,
How soon it takes, let Delphid's flesh consume,
Lynx, restore my false, my perjured swain,
And force him back into my arms again.—
As this devoted wax melts o'er the fire,
Let Mincian Delphy melt in warm desire!

Idylliums, p. 12, 13.

Samoetha burns the bough in the name of her false lover, and terms the wax devoted. With this the more modern ritual of witchcraft corresponded. The name of the person, represented by the image, was invoked. For, according to the narrative given concerning the witches of Pollock-shaws, having bound the image on a spit, they "turned it before the fire,—saying, as they turned it, Sir George Maxwell, Sir George Maxwell; and that this was expressed by all of them." Glanvil's Sadducismus, p. 391.

According to Grilland, the image was baptised in the name of Beelzebub. Malleus, ut sup., p. 229.

There is nothing analogous to the Grecian rite, mentioned by Theocritus, of strewing salt. For Grilland asserts, that, in the festivals of the witches, salt was never presented. Ibid., p. 215. It was perhaps excluded from their infernal rites as having been so much used as a sacred symbol.

WALY, WALY-SPRIG, s. "A small flower;" Galloway.

Now frae the cribs the tarry gimmers trot,
And spread around the faulds, to crop the blade
Of tender grass, or thriving waly.—

Davidson's Seasons, p. 3.

—O'er the verdant mead
Behold the blushing prospect. Who can paint
A waly-sprig like Nature!

Davidson's Seasons, p. 42.

Perhaps from O. Germ. wal-en, to grow luxuriously. The term is particularly applied to gowans, (South of S.); which are supposed to be thus denominated because of their beauty. V. WALIE, adj.

WALY, interj. Expressive of lamentation.

O waly, waly up the bank

And waly, waly, down the brae;

And waly, waly on yon burnside,

Where I and my love went to gae.

Ramsay's Tea-Table Miscell., p. 170.

It seems in one place, as if forming a superlative: But perhaps it is merely the interj.

He puts his hand on's ladie's side,
And waly sair was she murnin'.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 271.

This term is used, even in the reduplicative form, in Yorks. "Wally, Wally, is Good lack, good lack, or Oh me, oh me!" Clav.

A.-S. wa-la, sheu, utinam, O si, ah, Lat. wa, from wa, woe, and la, O, Oh! a particle expressive of invocation. Wa is merely repeated in A.-S. wa la wa, E. wella-way; although Junius seems inclined to view it as comp. of wel, felicitas, and away, abeast, as if the A.-S. were deduced from the E. Wa la! se towyrph that tempel; Ah! thou that destroyest the temple; Mark, xv. 29.

WALY, s. Prosperity, good fortune. Waly fa, or faw, may good fortune befall, or betide. Waly fa me, is a phrase not yet entirely obsolete, S.B. [V. WALIE.]

Now waly faw that weill-fard mow!

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 86.

Gud day! gud day! God saif balth your Gracia!

Waly, Waly, fa tha twa weill fard facis!

Ibid. p. 159.

A.-S. wacla, wela, felicitas, beatitudo, prosperitas; from wel, bene.

It is singular that the phrase waly fa has changed its signification in some parts of the north; unless it could be supposed that its meaning was misunderstood by a writer, who, in other respects, has showed that he was well acquainted with our vernacular tongue.

But that camstearly what-dy'e-caw't.

(I think it's Genius, walie fa!)

—Will never dreep frae draffy mawt,

Or bare spring water.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 178.

"Waly fa, woe be to;" Gl. Ibid.

It occurs in the same sense, in another form, in older writing.

Now wally fu' fa the silly bridegroom,

He was as saft as butter, &c.

Runaway Bride, Herd's Coll., ii. 88.

I heard ae wife say t' anither,

Wallifou fa the cat!

Wallifou fa the cat!

She's bred the house an wan ease;

She's open'd the anry door,

An' eaten up a' the cheese.

Herd's Coll., ii. 139.

The song bears these words as its title.

One might almost suppose that this had once had the form of an adj. q. Wallyfull, and been here used improperly. It is possible, however, that it is a corr. of A.-S. wa la wa, proh dolor; Lye.

WALYCOAT, s. An under-petticoat, Aberd.

"Thir rebel ships—sends privately a pinnace ashore to design the house where the queen (Henrietta) was lodged, whilk being done, her Majesty, having mind of no evil, but glad of rest, now wearied by the sea, is cruelly assaulted; for this [thir] six rebel ships ilk one by course sets their broadside to her lodging, baters the house, dings down the roof, ere she wist of herself; but she gets up out of her naked bed in her night walycoat, barefooted and barelegged, with her maids of honour, whereof one for plain fear went straight mad, being a nobleman of England's daughter." Spalding, ii. 74.

This is originally the same with W'ylecoat, q. v.

WAMBE, WAME, WAIM, WEAM, WAYME, s. 1. The womb.

"For he gaderit certane of the maist pure and clein droppis of blud, quhilke was in the bodie of the virgin, and of thame fassionit & formit the perfitt body of our Saviour, within her wayme." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, Fol. 97, b.

VOL. IV.

2. The belly, S.

"—Euery ane of thaym geuyn mair tyl riatus surfet & glutony of thair wambe, than to ony virtue of thair eldaris." Bellenl. Cron. B., viii. c. 3.

His tale, that on his rig before tymes lay,

Vnder his wame lattis fall abasitly,

And to the wod can haist him in til hy.

Doug. Virgil, 394, 40.

A coarse, but emphatical, proverb is often addressed by a mother to her children, when she reckons them unreasonable in their demands for food; "Weel, weel, what's in your wame [or wyme] 's no in your testament," S.

The direct meaning of the language would be: "What ye consume now, you cannot bequeath in any will you may make afterwards." But, as I have heard the Prov. applied, I have always understood the sense to be; "What you get from me by your voraciousness now, you cannot expect to be bequeathed to you in the testament that I shall make for your behoof. You put this out of my power."

3. The stomach. A fow wame, a full stomach. A wamefow, a bellyful, S.

Hes thow no rewth to gar thy tennent sueit

Into thy lawbour, full fayat with hungry wame!

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 121, st. 21.

Moes.-G. wamba, A.-S. Isl. wamb, Su.-G. wamb, venter, uterus.

WEAM-ILL, WAME-ILL, s. 1. The belly-ache.

—The Weam-ill, the Wild fire, the Vomit, & the Vee.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 14.

V. FEYK.

2. A disease of the intestines.

—"The wame-ill was so violent, that thar deit na that yere than euir thar deit ouder in pestilens or yit in ony vther seikens in Scotland." Addic. to Scot. Croniklis, p. 4.

A.-S. wamb-adj, dolor ventris.

SAIR WAME, the same with Wame-ill, S.

ATHORT one's WAME. Maugre, in spite of one's teeth, in open defiance of, Aberd.

It has been supposed that the phrase across the belly, often used by Pat. Walker, in his Remark. Passages, is a kind of modification of this. V. Pref., p. 13. Over the belly is a similar phrase. This, if E., has been overlooked by later lexicographers.

To WAME one's self, v. a. To fill one's belly.

Roxb. V. WAMBE, s.

WAMEFOU, WAMEFU', s. A bellyful, S.

"A wame-fou is a wame-fou,—whether it be of the barley-meal or the bran." St. Ronan, i. 235.

—Let neer a wamefu' be a missing.

But gie us routh o' food;

O gie us hannocks, brose, and kail,

Potatoes, cabbage, and the wale

O' every thing that's good.

Glutton's Grace, A. Scott's Poems, p. 163.

WAMELIN, WAMBLIN, s. A big-bellied puny child, Caithn. V. WAMFLIN.

WAMIE, adj. Corpulent, having a large belly. Upp. Lanarks.

WAMINESS, s. Corpulence, ibid.

Isl. wambi, ventricosus.

WAMYT, GRETE WAMYT, GRETE WAME.

1. Big-bellied.

This fatal moistoure clam ower the wallis then,
Grete Wamyt, and stufft full of armyt men.

Doug. Virgil, 46, 40.

2. Pregnant.

For sorow scho gave the gast rycht thare,
Gret wame wyth barne, scho wes that day,
Hyr tyme nowcht nere. —

Wyntown, vii. 7, 95.

To WAMBLE, WAMPLE, v. n. To move in an undulating manner, like an eel in the water, S.

Wamble is used in E., but only as denoting the action of the stomach, when it rolls with nausea; a sense in which the term is also used, S.

But stomach wambles, I must close,
And with my fist must stop my nose.

Cleland's Poems, p. 95.

Belg. wemel-en, to creep, to crawl, wemelend gewormte, crawling worms; gewemel, a creeping, crawling; Sewel. But we find the very v. in Isl. wambl-a, aegre protrahere se humi ventre; wambl-a, reptatus.

[WAMBLE, WAMPLE, s. The motion of an eel, undulating motion, Clydes.]

WAMBRASSEIRIS, s. Armour for the forepart of the arm. E. vambrace.

"Vthers simpillar of x. pund of rent or fyftie pundis in gudis, haue hat, gorget, and a peasane, with wambrasseiris and reirbrasseiris." Acts Ja. I., 1429, c. 134. Edit. 1566.

Corr. from Fr. avant-bras, id., i.e., before the arm; or rather immediately from avant, and brassart, a vambrace.

WAME, s. The belly. To WAME; WAMEFU'; WAMIE. V. under WAMBE, s.

To WAMFLE, v. n. To flap, to flutter; applied to one's clothes, especially if tattered, or carelessly put on, when they are shaken by the wind, or when the wearer has an awkward motion. It is also said of a vessel at sea; "Her sails were wamflin i' the wind;" Fife. V. WEFFIL.

This may be allied to Teut. wemel-en, circumagi; frequenter et leviter movere; Su.-G. wiml-a, motitari, trepidare; C. B. gwammal-u, to waver. In the S. word f may have been inserted, as b in E. Wamble, from the same origin. Or it may be a provincial variety of W'effil.

To WAMFLE, v. a. Expl. "To sully;" Ayr.; synon. with Suddill.

Prob. the same with W'effil, Waffle, applied to what has lost its stiffness, as by frequent handling or tossing.

WAMFLER, WANFLER, s. A rake, a wench; Wamfler, Philotus, S. P. R., iii. 10. Wanfler, Evergreen, i. 74.

WAMFLET, s. V. WAEFLEED.

WAMFLIN, s. A puny child who has a large belly, Caithn.; perhaps a dimin. from Wamb, wame, the belly. The word is also pron. Wamblin.

WAMPES, s. The motion of an adder, Ayr.

To WAMPISH, v. n. To fluctuate, to move backwards and forwards, Ettr. For.

"Gang away, now, minister, and put by the siller, and dinna keep the notes wampishing in your hand that gate, or I will wish them in the brown pigg again, for fear we get a black cast about them." Heart M. Loth., iv. 259.

But yet his gear was o' the goudle,
As it waved and wampished in the wind;
And the coal-black steed he rode upon,
It was fleetier than the bonny hind.

Ballad, Perils of Man, ii. 1.

To WAMPISH, WAMPUZ, v. a. 1. To brandish, to flourish, to toss about in a threatening, boasting manner, South of S.

2. To toss in a furious or frantic manner, ibid.

"Its fearsome baith to see and hear her when she wampishes about her arms, and gets to her English, and speaks as if she were a prent book." Antiquary, iii. 218.

"Wampuz, to make curvilinear dashes, like a large fish in the water," (Gall. Enc.) must evidently be viewed as the same v. slightly varied.

Perhaps it is from Ital. vampegg-iare, to flash, to be in a flame; also to fume and fret, to rave, to rage, to be in a violent passion, from vampa, flame, blaze; passion, desire.

WAMPLE, s. Undulating motion, Ayr. V. WAMBLE.

To WAMPUZ, v. n. V. WAMPISH.

WAMYT, adj. V. under WAMBE.

WAN. A particle expressive of negation, prefixed both to adjectives and to substantives, S.

It had also been used in O. E. "Wan belear, Perfidus. Wan beleuyng, Perfidia. Wan bode, or he that biddeth not to the value.—Wanhop-yn, Diffido. Dispero.—Wansyn. Euaneco. Euanesco." Prompt. Parv.

Wan is an ancient Goth. and A.-S. particle denoting privation. V. VANHOF.

WAN. An adverbial affix, [signifying way or ward], corresponding in signification and use with the Lat. adv. versus, Aberd.

The following account of this particle is from a very intelligent correspondent in the north. "It differs from With as a termination, in these respects. With implies that the word, to which it is joined, expresses the place of one's destination; Wan does not convey this idea. With is not arbitrarily affixed to words; Wan is, "He was gain to Aberdeen^{wan}," He was on the road to Aberdeen.

Perhaps from A.-S. waeg, Isl. veg, Su.-G. waeg, also waegh, via, iter, a way. Dan. vei, appears in its declined form rejen, paa rejen, in the way, on the road. Vejene til en stad, "the avenue to a town;" Wolff. Sw. paa waegen, id. Isl. vegen, signifies plaga, a quarter. Fogra vegna. In quatuor orbis plagas; Olafs Saga, 34, ap. Verel. Ind. Ibre says, "It is probable that our ancestors sometimes used waeyn" for waey, "and hence, that waeynar remains in the plural, as when we say, alla waeynar, omnibus locis; wila waeynar ifraan, a locis dissitis." He views the term above quoted from Verelius as a confirmation of his conjecture; and renders Su.-G. wagnar, tractus, regio. Did we invert the Sw. phrase, Hun aer paa waeyen til London, He is on his way to London; til London waeyen, it would nearly resemble that mentioned above,—"gain to Aberdeen wan." There is certainly an affinity between this and another S. B. phrase—to Aberdeen awa. This, in the A.-S. form, would be to Aberdeen on waeg, i.e., on the way to Aberdeen.

WAN, adj. 1. Deficient.

I could nocht won into welth, wrech wayest,
I wes so wantoun in will, my werldis ar wan.
Howlate, iii. 28, MS.

2. Not fully round, not plump; as, a wan tree is a tree that has not grown in a circular form, or that is not filled up on one side. Wan-cheekit, applied to a man whose cheeks are thin, Berwicks.

Ial. ran, quod infra justum modum est; Su.-G. wan, id. A.-S. wana, carens, deficiens.

WAN, adj. 1. Black, gloomy.

Her is na gait to fle yone peple can,
Bot rochis heich, and wattir depe and wan.
Wallace, vii. 814, MS.

—Persuayt the mornynge bla, wan and har,
Wyth cloudy gum and rak ouerquhelmyt the are.
Doug. Virgil, 202, 25.

Rudd. takes no notice of this term. It is evidently A.-S. wan, wann, wonn, Wan wolcen, atra nubes. Tha wonnan niht mona onlihteth; Atram noctem luna illuminat; Boet., p. 165. V. Wonn, Lye.

2. Dark-coloured; or rather filthy.

Sum nakit fled, and gat out off that sted,
The wattir socht, abaissit out off slepe.
In the furd weil, that was bath wan and depe,
Feill off thaim fell, that brak out of that place,
Dowkit to ground, and deit with outyn grace.
Wallace, vii. 488, MS.

Editors, not understanding the term, have substituted long; as they have changed furd to Friers.

In the Friers well that was both long and deep.

A.-S. wan, wonn, also signify filthy; foedus. Wonne wagas, luridi, foodi fluctus; Boet. iii. 19. wonne waeldreamas, foedi gurgites aquarum; Ibid. 30. 12. ap. Lye.

It seems uncertain, however, whether wan, in the passage last quoted, does not merely signify, lurid, q. the dark weil, or eddy of the ford.

WAN, pret. v. [Won, got,] came, &c. V. WYN.

WAN, s. Wan and Wound, perhaps blow and wound.

"Blissit is he quhome God dois correct;
Thairfore his scourge se thou not neglect.
For he it is quhilk geuis wan and wound,
And suddanie he will mak haill and sound.

Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. 31, 32.

This alliterative phrase has probably been proverbial with our ancestors. From the succeeding line, the analogy requires that there should be a connexion of idea between wan and wound. Wan may therefore signify a blow or stroke, as allied to Teut. wand, plaga; Ial. wande, difficultas, periculum, noxa.

WAN BAYN. The cheek-bone.

With his gud sneid he maid a hidwys wound,
Left thaim for ded, syne on the ferl can found,
On the wan bayne with gret ire can him ta,
Cleyfyt the cost rycht cruelly in twa.

Wallace, xi. 123, MS.

A.-S. wang, Belg. weng, the cheek.

WANCANNY, adj. Unlucky, S. A wan-canny carlin, one supposed to be a witch, Fife. V. CANNY.

WANCHANCIE, adj. 1. Unlucky, S.

Wae worth the man wha first did shape
That vile, wanchancie thing—a rape!

Burns, iii. 62.

—"When my kinsman came to the village wi' the factor, Mr. James Howie, to lift the rents, some wanchancy person,—I suspect John Heatherblatter, the auld gamekeeper, that was out wi' me in the year fifteen—fired a shot at him in the gloaming, wherewith he was so affrighted, that I may say with Tullius in Catilinam, Abiit, evasit, erupit, effugit." Waverley, iii. 235.

2. Dangerous, apt to injure, S.

My travellers are fley'd to deid
Wi' creels wanchancy, heap'd wi' bread.—
Ferguson's Poems, ii. 63.

WANCOUTH, adj. Uncouth; Rudd.

WAND, WAN, pret. Did wind, S.B.

She bade aye near the door stan' still,
Or fate shou'd something gie her;
She wand the clue wi' tentie han',
An' cries, "Wha hauds the end o't!"

Tarras's Poems, p. 63.

This refers to one of the unwarrantable rites observed on Faisten's E'en, S.B.

WAND, WANDE, s. 1. A sceptre, or badge of authority.

Rohand he gaf the wand,
And bad him sitt him bi,
That fre;
"Rohand lord mak Y,
To held this lond of me."

Sir Tristrem, p. 50, st. 53.

—Helenus,

The lauchful son of the King Priamus,
Rang King ouer mony ceties in Greik land
Berand thareof the scepture and the wand.

Doug. Virgil, 77, 43.

It is used in a similar sense in E., but as denoting a badge of inferior authority, as that borne by ushers, &c.

Under the wand, in a state of subjection.

All cantre vnsujectit vnder our wand,
It may be clepyt aye vncouth strange lande.

Doug. Virgil, 219, 33.

"—The wife,—sa lang as her husband was livand,—was vnder his wand and power; and he was lord of all, quhilk pertained to his wife." Quon. Attach., c. 20, § 2. Sub virga mariti, Lat.

Elsewhere this phrase is used apparently as synonym with under the lind; denoting a situation in the open fields or woods.

Ane tyme when scho was full, and on fute fair,
Scho tuke in mynd her sister up-on laud.

And langt to ken her weilfair and her cheir,
And so quhat lyf scho led vnder the wand.
Henryson, Borrowstoun and Landwart Mous,
Evergreen, l. 145.

V. LIND.

2. The rod of correction.

—Greit God into his handis
To dant the world hes diuers wandis.
Efter our euill conditioun,
He makis on us punitioun:
With houngeir, thirst and indigence,
Sum tyme greit plaigis and pestillence,
And sum tyme with his bludy wand,
Throw cruel weir, be sey, and land.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 10.

"Let his own wand ding him." S. Prov. "Let him reap the fruits of his own folly." Kelly, p. 233.
It literally signifies, "Let him be beaten with his own rod."

3. A fishing-rod, S.

"—Therefore ordanis the saidis actes to—have effect and execution—against the slayers of the saidis reid fisch, in forbidden time, be bleis, casting of wandes, or uthewise." Acts Ja. VI., 1579, c. 89.

*His fishing-wand, his snishin-box,
A fowling-piece, to shoot muir-cocks,
And hunting hares thro' craigs and rocks,
This was his game.*

Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 28.

Su.-G. wand, Dan. raand, Isl. voendur, baculus, virga. Haelenanda, Hist. Alex. M. ap. Ihre, baculi ex corylo, S. hazlewands.

WAND OF PEACE. A symbol of relaxation from an unjust sentence of outlawry.

"Gif ony man alledgis him to be wrangouslie denuncit rebel, and deyrta, be way of supplicatioun gevin in to the Lordis of secrete counsil, in his name and behalf, to be relaxit thairfra; the Lordis may relax him, and give him the wand of peace instantlie, or ellis direct letteris to the Schiref of the schire—to do the samin," &c. A. 1505, Balfour's Pract., p. 560.

—"Relaxand thame inlykemaner fra the said proces of horne, and gevand the wand of peax to Johne Bukim, messenger in thair names." Acts Ja. VI., 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 5.

This is undoubtedly the same with what in L. B. is denominated Virga Alba, or the white rod, which Du Cange defines, Pacis symbolum. This was one of the ancient usages of England. It is mentioned by Britton. Si comme par simple disseisine faite de iour sauns force et armes, oue une blanche verge en signe de peas. Leg. Angl. c. 53. Fol. 138, b.

On the other hand, it was said of those who were put out of the protection of law, that their wand was broken. Qui sic convicti secum portant iudicium, sicut finaliter condemnati nullum habent appellum versus aliquem fidelem nec infidelem; quia omnino frangitur eorum baculus. V. Du Cange, vo. virga.

Davies, referring to these passages, "The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked:"—"How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod?" observes; "These forms of expression must have alluded, necessarily, to some established customs, they must be referred indisputably to some primitive system; which regarded rods, branches, and staves, as the symbols of certain ideas, and as the vehicles of messages, commissions, or the like. So far the customs of the old Asiatics corresponded in their prevalence to those of Druids in Europe.

—"Breaking the rod, or staff, seems—to have been the general mode of dissolving compacts. See Zech. xi. 7, 10, 11. And I took my staff, even beauty, and cut it asunder, that I might break my covenant, which I made with all the people." Celtic Researches, p. 292, 296.

It seems to be in allusion to this ancient rite, that the devil, who appears to his comptroller Doctor Fian, after he had renounced his service, "with a white wand in his hande," is made to break it, as a presage of his vengeance. "The devil answered, 'Once ere thou die, thou shalt be mine': and with that (as he sayd) the devill brake the white wand, and immediately vanished forth of his sight." News from Scotl., 1591. Law's Memor., xli.

Hence the breaking of a wand or rod, in relation to any individual, was a rite expressive of outlawry. Thus, in a passage quoted above, it is said that "the convicted carry their judgment with them, so that being finally condemned they have no appeal, because their wand is completely broken." Britton. Lib., iii., Tract. 2, c. 33. Frangitur talium baculus; Fleta, Lib. i. c. 38, § 16.

In allusion to this symbol, the female gypsy is introduced in Gay's Mannerings as breaking a rod after uttering her virtual denunciations.

"So saying, she broke the sapling she held in her hand, and flung it into the road," l. 125. "Here I stood, when I tauld the last laird of Ellangowan what was coming on his house:—and here, where I brake the wand of peace ower him." Ibid., iii. 135.

WAND, adj. Wicker; as, "a wand basket," "a wand cradle," &c. S.

WAND-BED, s. A wicker-bed, a sort of palanquin.

"The young laird also lying sore sick in the same chamber,—upon gret moyan was transported upon a wand-bed upon the morn from the tolbooth to the castle." Spalding's Troubles, II. 272.

WANDFASSON, s. Denoting what is made in a basket-form, resembling wands or twigs, interlaced.

"Item, ellevin plaittis of sindrie sortis, maid of quhite anameling. Mair, viii. quheit, 1 of wandfasson, iii. of divers collouris," &c. Inventories, A. 1561, p. 158.

It seems to be the same article which is afterwards thus described:

"Ane pleitt hollit as gif it wer wandis." A. 1578, Ibid., p. 241.

This curious collection supplies us with a singular fact as to the materials of which fans were manufactured in the reign of Q. Mary. They were made of small twigs.

"Item, ane glas, and sex litle culing fannis of litle wandis." Ibid., p. 158.

WAND-BIRN, s. Expl. "a straight burn on the face of a sheep," Clydes.

Perhaps q. a cheek-burn, from A.-S. wang, maxilla, and byrn, incendium.

WANDIT, S. P. R., iii. 141.

Scho wandit, and yeld by to ane elriche well.

Leg. wanderit, as in edit. 1508.

WANDOCHT, WANDOUGHT, s. 1. A weak or puny creature, S. B. V. UNDOCH.

2. A silly inactive fellow, Roxb.

3. Equivalent to "worthless creature," S.

Altho' the wandought's sib to me,
He's gien's a waefu' night o't:—

For he's to blame for a' the skaith
That's happen't sin we met.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 143.

WANDOCHT, WANDOUGHT, adj. Feeble, puny, contemptible, Perth., S. O.

"She's haddin' an' dung, daresna speak to them that I'm sure she anes liket;—that wandlought ne'er-do-weel o' a dominie blawin' in her lug, an' winna had his filthy fingers aff her." Campbell, l. 334.

But, Sir, my wandocht rustic muse,
Gane baffens dar't an' doitet,
Begins to glunch, an' hing her brows,
Like ane grown capernoitet.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 160.

WANDRETHER, s. Misfortune, great difficulty or danger.

The wyis wrought either grets wandreth and wench.
Gawan and Gol., iii. 5.

With feistis fell, and full of jolitee,
This cumlie court their king thai kest to keip.
That noy hes none bot newlie novaltie,
And is nocht wount for wo to woun and weip.
Full sendill sad, or [f. ar] soundlie set to sleip.
No wandrethe wait, ay wenis welthe endure.

K. Hart, l. 11.

Sibb. derives it from Tent. neg. particle wan, nn, and rouwe, or rest, quies. But the term is pure Gothic.
Isl. vandraedi, maxima difficultas, unde quis vix se

[Dr. Jamieson was quite astray in his meaning and origin of this term. It is in French form, but of Teutonic origin, being related to Moes.-G. wandjan,
A.-S. wendan, to turn. V. Prof. Skeat's Edit. of Barbour, p. 585.]

WANE, s. Defect, want.

Of fesaunce, pertrik, and of crane,
Ther was plente, and no wane.

Thai had a felloun estremess.

Barbour, xvi. 454, MS.

As the persons killed were sitting at a feast, there is an ironical allusion to the service given on an occasion of this kind. "They served them," as we use to say, "in such high stile," &c.

[Su.-G. winna, to get, gain, profit. Wane occurs in the older version of Chevy Chase, l. 74. and with the meaning given above: "manner, fashion," was Dr.
Jamieson's rendering. V. Prof. Skeat's Edit. of Barbour, p. 781.]

WANE, s. A sort of waggon, a wain.
Maitl. P., p. 116. V. AUCHT, adj.

WANE, s. 1. A habitation, a dwelling.

—The dow effrayit dois fle
Furth of hir holl, and richt dern wyning wane.

Doug. Virgil, 134, 40.

Wanys, although properly the pl. of wane, is often used as if itself a s. singular.

The purweyance that is with in this wans
We will nocht tyne; ger sembyll all at anys,
Gar warn Ramsay, and our gud men ilkan.

Wallace, ix. 1194, MS.

—The herd has fund the beis bike,
Closit vnder ane derne cauerne of stanis;
And fyllit has full sone that litil wans
Wyth smok of soure and bitter rekis stew.

Doug. Virgil, 432, 12.

2. Sometimes in pl. it is used, not as denoting different habitations, but different apartments in the same habitation.

Tharewith the brute and noyis rais in thay wans.
Qubil all the large hillis rang attanis.

Doug. Virgil, 475, 48.

This corresponds with the account given, p. 474, 14, in the description of the palace of Latinus.

Amyd the hallis heich lang and braid, &c.

O. E. wone, wonne, a dwelling, is used in the same manner; as appears from a Poem, entitled, "A Disputation bytwene a Crystene man, and a Jew," written before the year 1300.

Squyeres in uche syde

In the wones so wide.

Warton's Hist., P. ii. Emendations, p. 1

The place described is a nunnery. The wones, as
Mr. Warton observes, are the rooms.

The prophet preacheth thereof, & put it in the psalter.

Domine, quis habitat in tabernaculo tuo, &c.

Lord who shall wonne in thy wones, & with thi holy saynts

Or resten in thi holy hills? this asketh David.

To WANE, v. n. To think.

Had ye intill a quiet place,
Ye wald not wane to flend.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 90

Evidently the same with O.E. wene, modern wen;
A.-S. waen-an, wen-ian, Moes.-G. wen-jan, Alem. waenen, Belg. wan-en, putare, opinari.

WANE, s. Opinion, estimation.

On Schyrtreffmur Wallace the feild has tane,
With viii thousand, that worthy was in wane.
Wallace, x. 20, MS.

A.-S. wen, wena, opinio. This may, however, signify,
"worthy in dwelling."

WANE, s. Expl. "a number of people."

But in my bower there is a wake,
An' at the wake there is a wane;
But I'll come to the greenwood the morn,
Whar blooms the brier by mornin' dawn.
Minstrelsy Border, iii. 236.

WANEARTHLIE, adj. Not belonging to this world, preternatural, S. V. WAN.

"We ne'er luit on that we saw her, though any body wad, in a moment, hae seen that it was something wanearthlie." Edin. Mag., Sept. 1818, p. 155.

To WANEISE one's self, v. a. To put one's self to trouble, S. B. V. UNEITH.WANFORTUNE, s. Misfortune.

"Geen [gin] I have had the wanfortune to believe also, That the Pretender is the Q—s brother, a prince of the bluid, nay the first prince of the bluid, I mon affirm, that he has been prayed for as such by the Church of England," &c. Speech for D—sse of Aristoun, A. 1711, p. 10.

It would appear that the word had been then in use.

WANFORTWNATE, adj. Unfortunate.

"The outter illegality of resistance (if I have been as wanfortunate as to believe the Pretender to be legitimate, mon needs have made me disloyal to her Majesty." Speech, ut sup., p. 14.

WANGRACE, s. Wickedness, S. "q. d. ungrace, want of grace; from A.-S. wana, carens, deficiens, minus; wan-ian, deficere;" Rudd.

Sum bene sa frawart in malice and wangrace,
Qubai is wele sayd thay loif not worth ane ace,
Bot castis thame euir to spy out falt and cruke.
Doug. Virg., 485, 24.

WANGYLE, s. The gospel; contr. from evangyle; Lat. evangelium.

He made a tystyre in that quhyle,
Qubare-in wes cloyd the Wangyle.
Wyntown, vi. 10, 70.

WANHAP, s. Misfortune. V. VANHAP.WANHAPPIE, adj. 1. Unlucky, unfortunate, S. B.

2. Dangerous, fatal.

The wildbair, that wanhappie beist,
Quhois tuskis of length war at the leist
Ane quarter lang and mair,
Into ane furie he ran fast
Throw all the placis quhair he past
With mony rout and rair.
Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 19.

The term does not express the unhappiness of the wild boar himself, but of the person who comes in his way.

WANHOPE, s. Delusive hope.

That fals man by dissaitful wordis fare
With wanhope trumpet the wofull luffare.
Doug. Virgil, 24, 3.

Vana spe lusit. Virg.

This term has not been quite unknown in O.E., although used in a stronger sense. "I despayre, I am in wan hope." Palagr. B. iii. F. 209, b.

"Wanhop-yn. Diffido. Dispero." Prompt. Parv.

WANION, s. Apparently, a misfortune or calamity.

"Bide down, with a mischief to ye,—bide down, with a wanion," cried the king, almost overturned by the obstreperous carresses of the large staghounds."
Nigel, iii. 86.

"I sent him out of my company with a wanion—I would rather have a riffer on my perch than a false knave at my elbow." The Abbot, i. 156.

"What can have come over the lad, with a wanion!"
Ibid., ii. 44.

It occurs in Pericles, Prince of Tyre, Shakspeare, xxi. 210. Perhaps from A.-S. wanung, diminution; also, grief, from wan-ian, to wane. Steevens says that the sense of the term is unknown.

WANKILL, adj. Unstable; wankle, A. Bor. id.

But Thomas, truly I the say,
This world is wondir wankill.
True Thomas, Jamieson's Popul. Ball., ii. 35.

A.-S. wancle, wancol, inconstans; Su.-G. wankelmodig, animi inconstans; from wank-a, Germ. wank-en, fluctuare. Hence also Su.-G. wankl-a, id. As wackl-a is synon., the origin is supposed to be Moes.-G.
wag-ian, agitari.

To WANKISH, v. a. To twist, to entwine; as, in forming a basket the twigs are said to be wankished, Dumfr., Roxb. It is also pron. wankish, in some parts of the country.

This evidently suggests, from its form, a Goth.
origin. But Su.-G. wanka, which most nearly resembles it, signifies fluctuare, huc illuc ferri. Isl. wink-a, circumroto, voluto. These are nearly akin to the sense of the synonym Wampish. Wik-a, signifies plicare, to plait, weck, plica, wickl-a, complicare.

Tent. wanck, captura; tenticula. V. FANK, v.

WANLAS, WANLASS, s. At the wanlas, accidentally, without design.

For hys mudyr at hys beryng
Dayd, and quhen that he wes yhing
Of fyftene yhere eld of cas
Slwe his fadyr at the wanlas.

Wyntown, iii. 3, 28.

V. also vii. 4, 30.

Mr. Macpherson derives it from Dan. last, crime, fraud, and wan, the negat. part.

We find a word much resembling this in A.-S., only inverted; leaswene, false opinion, from waenan, wen-an, to think, and leas, without. Su.-G. handlos, is used to denote an accidental stroke. Or it may be q. wandlos, from wand, evil, and los, corresponding to E. less, i.e., without evil design.

This was evidently used in E. as a term of the chase.
"Wanlass, (a term in hunting) as, Driving the Wanlass,
i.e., the driving of deer to a stand; which in some Latin records is termed Fugatio Wanlassi ad stabulum, and in Doomsday-Book, Stabilitio venationis," Phillips.

"Illi custumarii solebant fugare Wanlassum ad stabulum,—i.e., to drive the deer to a stand, that the Lord may have a shoot;" Blount ap. Cowel. But this use of the term, it must be acknowledged, so far from elucidating it, leaves it in still greater obscurity; for here wanlas seems to signify, not the act, but the object that is driven to a stand.

In Fife, with the dialect of which Wyntown may be supposed to have been familiar, the term wanlas, or wanlass, is still used to signify a surprise; and to be "ta'en at a wanlas," to be taken at a loss, or unprepared.

[WANLESS, adj. Hopeless, destitute, Shetl. Isl. vonlaus, id.]

[WANLIE, adj. Agreeable, comfortable; applied to places, Shetl. Isl. vonlegr.]

WANLIESUM, adj. Unlovely, Mearns; the same with Unlussum, which, by the way, should rather be written Unlissime, as more expressive of the sound.

WANLUCK, s. Misfortune, S. B. wanluk, Maitland Poems.

WANNLE, WANLE, adj. 1. Agile, active, athletic, Roxb.; synonym. Yauld.

The Stuart is sturdy an' wannle,
An' sae is Macleod an' Mackay;
An' I, their gude-brither Macdonald
Sal never be last i' the fray.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 182.

2. Stout, healthy, vigorous, ibid.

"The bairn was sent awa' and bred up near the Highlands, and grew up to be a fine wanle fellow, like mony ane that comes o' the wrang side o' the blanket." Antiquary, ii. 242.

If not allied to Isl. vand-a, elaborate, Su.-G. wand-a, waann-a, id., perhaps from C.B. gicnawel, permeant, thrusting, or guanegawel, driving.

WANNIS, pl. Scars, marks.

"He—had done grete vassalege, baith for the honour and defence of the ciete, as weil apperit be sindry wannis and markis in his face; and uthir of his body." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 140. Cicatrices, Lat.
I see no word allied to this in form save A.-S. wenn, verruca, E. wen.

WANWON'T, part. adj. Not claimed, not acknowledged, S.-O.

"Men of Musselburgh, ye'll forrit yonder and help your wives to drive the wanwon't cattle to the town." Rothelan, i. 238.

WANRECK, s. "Mischance, ruin;" Gl. Sibb.

WANREST, s. 1. Inquietude, S. Belg. onrust.

"Shal ye not then be ashamed of that whereinto now ye take pleasure? Shall not this silly ease be turned in sorrowfull wanrest?" Mr. Ja. Melville's Mem., p. 142.

Mistakes, ye ken, maun be excus'd;
For habit there is nane;
Good nature whiles may be abus'd,
An' at a wanrest taen.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 62.

Tane at a wanrest seems to be a proverbial phrase, q. taken at disadvantage, when one has met with something to ruffle the temper.

2. Cause of inquietude, S. B.

Quo' she, I wiss I cou'd your wanrest ken,
'Tis may be cause ye canna ly your lane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 33.

3. Wanrest of a clock, the pendulum.

"—The wanrest of a clock gae as far the tae gate, as it geds the tither;" S. Prov. signifying, that an unstable person generally goes from one extreme to another.

The candle trembled, as with fright,
An' glimmer'd dim, a dowy light:
The house from top to bottom shook,
An' as a wanrest wagg'd the crook.

Piper of Peebles, p. 13.

As Isl. oroa, denotes the axis of a wheel, because still in motion; it is singular that, although the Danish word be different, it is formed in the same manner, and conveys precisely the same idea with ours. Uroa, a pendulum, from u, negat., and roa, rest. The same analogy is observable in Germ. unruhe, id., from un, negat., and ruhe, rest; and in Sw. oro, as, arona i d hur, the balance of a watch; Wideg.

WANRESTFU', adj. Restless, S.

And may they never learn the gaets
Of ither vile, wanrestfu' pets!

Burns, iii. 79.

WANRUFÉ, s. Disquietude, uneasiness.

Robene answerit her agane,
I wait nocht quhat is luv;e;
But I haif mervell in certaine,
Quhat makis the this wanrufe.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 93.

Both Lord Hailes and Mr. Pink. render it uneasy. But it is evidently the s., from wan, negat., and O. E. row, rest, repose. V. Roif.

WANRULY, adj. Unruly, S., especially, S. B.

Frae their wanruly fellin paw
Mair cause ye hae to fear
Your death that day.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 30.

WANSHAIKEN, part. adj. "Deformed, Teut. wanschaeppen, informis, imperfectus;" Gl. Sibb.

[WANSCOTH, s. A wainscot, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 290, Dickson.]

WANSONSY, adj. Mischievous, S.

We'll learn ye to be douce,
Ye auld wansonsy b——h.

Jacobite Relics, i. 70.

V. UNSONSY.

WANSUCKED, s. A child that has not been properly suckled.

Your mouth must be mucked, while ye be instructed,
Foul Flirlon, Wansucked Tersel of a Tade.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 5.

Wansuckit funnling, that Nature maid an yrie.
Baith John the Ross and thou shall squeel and skirle,
Gif eir I heir ocht of your making mair.

Kennedie, Everygreen, ii. 49.

* WANT, s. To Hae a want, to be under mental imbecility, S.

WANTIN', used as a prep. Without, S.; sometimes wintan, Aberd.

WANTER, s. A term applied, both to a bachelor, and to a widower; from the circumstance of wanting, or being without a wife, S.

Then, ilka counter wale a wife,
Ere eld and handrums seize ye.
Ramsay's Works, l. 115.

WANTHRIFT, s. 1. Prodigality, unthriftiness, S.

Qahat wykkittnes, qahat wanthryft now in warld walkis?
Doug. Virgil, 238, l. 35.

Of our wanthryft sum wytis playis;
And sum their wantoun vane arrayis.
Maitland Poems, p. 300.

2. Used as a personal designation, denoting a prodigal.

Of all bliss let it be as bair as the birk,
That tittest the lairdel may tell an ill tail.
Let no vice in this world in this wanthryft be wanted.
Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 19.

V. next word.

WANTHREVIN, WAN-THRIVEN, part. pa. Not thriven, in a state of decline, S.

We worth (quoth the Weirds) the wights that thee wrought;
Threid-bair be thair thrift, as thou art wanthrevin.
Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 14.

"And what am I but a poor wasted man-thriven tree, dag up by the roots, and flung out to waste in the highway?"
Heart M. Loth., ii. 199.

Sw. wantrifn-as, not to thrive; wantrifne, not thriving;
wantrifnad, the state of not thriving; Wideg.

WANTON, s. A girth; but most commonly used to denote that by means of which the snack-creele were fastened, Teviotd.

If this be not a cant or a ludicrous term, it may be related to Teut. wand, wante, rigging.

WANTON-MEAT, s. The entertainment of spirits, sweetmeats, &c., given to those in a house at the birth of a child, Teviotd.; elsewhere called Blithe-meet.

Various etymons have been given of the E. adj. Wanton. The only one that has the slightest air of probability is that of Serenius. Isl. fant-r, importunus temerario; Su.-G. faent-a, puella lasciva, which has been traced to Isl. fan-a, temere festinare. But probably the term has had a British origin. For Owen gives C. B. goantan, as signifying what "is apt to separate or run off, variable; fickle; wanton." It seems very doubtful, indeed, whether the worst sense in which the E. word is used be the primary one. This perhaps is "frolicsome, gay, sportive, airy."

WANUSE, s. Misuse, abuse, waste; as, "Ye tak care o' naithing; ye let every thing gang to wanuse;" Loth.; i.e., go to wreck from want of use, Roxb.

WANWEIRD, WANWERD, s. Unhappy fate, hard lot, S.

I take comfort herof thinkand but baid,
That hard wanwerd suld follow fortune glaid.
Doug. Virgil, 20, 27.

V. WEIRD.

WANWORTH, WANWORDY, adj. Unworthy, S.

Worlin wanworth, I warn thee it is written.—
Dundar, Evergreen, ii. 57.

i.e., unworthy, or contemptible urchin. The term generally used, S. B. is wanwordly.

Fras Geordie Gow a calf was stown,— Whilk action of the rogue wanwordly
Distrest the heart o' anxious Geordy.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 162.

Isl. wanwurde, dedignor; wanvirda, dedecus; G. Andr., p. 246. Su.-G. wanwoerd-a, dehonestare; Ihre, vo. Worda.

WANWORTH, s. An undervalue, S.; as, It was sold at a wanworth.

The Council winna lack ase meikle grace,
As lat our heritage at wanworth gang.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 87, 88.

WANWUTH, s. A surprise, Fife; synon. with Wanlass. "To be ta'en at a wanwuth," to be taken by surprise, or at a loss.

Teut. wan-wete, ignorantia, dubium; Isl. wanvit, insipientia; q. without wit, notice, or previous intelligence.

WANWYT, s. Want of knowledge.

Gywe it ware wilfully foryhete,
It would be repute wnkynndnes,
Wanwyt, or than reklesnes.

Wyntoun, vi. Prol. 47.

Belg. wanwete, Isl. wanvitaka.

WANYOCH, adj. Pale, wan, Clydes.

"Mony a wearie companie o' wee wee gersie-green riders cam neest,—thair clais skinklan i' the wanyoch mune as though they had been just as diamon." Edin.
Mag. Sept. 1818, p. 155.

This may be a relique of the Welsh kingdom on Clyde; as Lluyd gives C. B. ornog as signifying pale, wan, fearful. Owen expl. ovnaug as if it bore only the latter signification.

WANYS, s. pl. The jaws, used in a secondary sense for the stomach.

He had to slep sa mekill will,
That he moucht set na let thar till.
For quhen the *wany*s fillyt ar,
Men worthys hewy enlmar.

Barbour, vii. 173, MS.

V. WAN BAYN.

WANYS, pl. s. Habitation. V. WANE, s. 4.

To WAP, v. a. 1. To throw quickly, S.

The heynd knight at his haist held to the tounne.
The yettis wappit war wyde,
The knyght can raithly in ryde.

Gawan and Gol., l. 10.

q. thrown wide. Perhaps corr. from WARP. But V. the s.

"Ise wap a samon ore the crage I tro, than with a grip ore his luggs we my ene hand; I tro Ise hold him a bit, an for au his struggle, Ise mar his march to sea any mare." Franck's Northern Memoirs, p. 61.

2. To throw, in a general sense.

Get Jehny's hand in baly band,
Synne wap ye'r wealth together.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 295.

3. To flap.

—Day is dawns, and cocks hae crawen,
—And wappit their wings sae wide.—

Glenkinnie, Jamieson's Popul. Ball., l. 95.

To WAP, v. n. 1. "To wrestle; wapping, wrestling;" Gall. Enc.

[2. To riot, to quarrel; to cause disturbance, Clydes.

3. To strut or dash about, to swagger, Banffs.]

WAP, s. 1. A throw, S.

He shook the blade, an' wi' a wap
Set the heft to the ground,
The nib until his breast; wi' it
Gave himself his death's wound.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 38.

V. the v.

2. A quick and smart stroke, S. It often conveys the idea of that given by an elastic body.

He hit him on the wame ane wap,
It baft lyke ony bladder.

Chr. Kirk, st. 12.

[3. A riot, quarrel, disturbance, Clydes, Banffs.]

This may perhaps be traced to Su.-G. wipp-a, motitare se, sursum deorsum celeriter ferri; Isl. veif-a, Teut. wipp-en, vibrare. Prob. allied to Isl. wipp-a, to vault, to leap over.

WAPPER, s. Any thing that is of a large size, Roxb.; [a beau, a belle, Banffs.]

"'Forgotten him,' replied his kinsman, 'what suld ail me to forget him?—a wapping weaver he was, and wrought my first pair of hose.'" Rob Roy, ii. 218.

WAPPING, WAPPIN, adj. Large in size; as, "a wapping chield," a large boy, S.; often used as synon. with Strapping.

Perhaps from Wap, to throw, as originally denoting strength or agility.

It is, however, a singular coincidence, that A.-S. waepend should signify masculine, as referring to the distinctive mark of the sex. Veretrum habens. Masculus. Waepned bearn, waepned cild, masculus infans. V. Lye. This is from waepen, calamus, veretrum. In Ort. Vocab. Veretrum is expl. Virga virilis.

To WAP, v. a. To wrap, to envelope; [to lap tightly.]

Go, fetch a web o' the silken clait,

Another of the twine,

And wap them into our ship's side,

And let nae the sea come in.

—They wapped them round that gude ship's side,
But still the sea come in.

Sir P. Spens, Minstrelsy Border, iii. 63.

The last phraseology, which is perhaps the most correct, claims affinity with Su.-G. wep-a, to lap about; Isl. wef-ia, Moes.-G. waib-ian, id.

O. E. "Wapp-yn, or hill-yn. Tego.—Wappyn, or wyndyn in clothes. Inuoluo.—Wappinge, lappinge or hillinge. Coopertura. Inuolutio." Prompt. Parv.

WAP, s. [1. A lap or roll, a tie, Clydes.]

2. A bundle, or bottle of straw, Dumfr.

We learn from Grose, that the term is used precisely in the same sense in the north of E.

WAPPIN, s. A loose sort of dress worn by a fisherman when at work, instead of his usual clothes, Dumfr.

Su.-G. wepa signifies stragulum crassum; "any kind of cloth for lapping about a thing," Wideg. Fenn. waipa, pallium, a cloak; A.-S. waefels, tegmen, pallium.

VOL. IV.

WAPPIT, part. pa. Wrapped, enveloped.

The feind is our felloun fa, in thit we confyde,
Then moder of all mercye, and the menare.
For we wappit in wo in this warld wyde,
To thy some mak thy mane, and thy makar.

Houlate, iii. 2.

The only sense given of wappit by Mr. Pink is "warped, turned." But here it certainly signifies wrapped, enveloped; Su.-G. wep-a, to lap about.

[WAPPER, WAPPIN. V. under WAP.]

WAPPIN, WAPPYN, s. A weapon, S.

The Romanis than descendit from Enee
Rasche unto wappynnis for thare libertie.

Doug. Virgil, 206, 45.

WAPNIT, WAPINNIT, part. pa. Provided with weapons; E. weaponed.

"And thai to be weil horsit and wapnit in the best maner as accordis." Acts Mary, 1545, Ed. 1814, p. 462. Wapnait, ibid.

WAPPINLES, adj. Unarmed, without weapons.

"Virginus—take fra you baith your armour and wappinnis, to bring you nakit and wappinnis in your inermis handia." Bellend. T. Liv. p. 234.

Moes.-G. wepna, A.-S. waep-en, Su.-G. wapa, Belg. wapen, Dan. waaben, arma. As Alem. waffen occurs as synon. harnesch, (our harness), Ihre thinks that it may have originally denoted defensive armour, as the breast-plate, &c. from waff-en, to surround. But may it not be conjectured, with as much reason, that it originally signified offensive arms; from Isl. veif-a, Teut. wipp-en, to brandish?

WAPINSCHAW, WAPINSCHAWING, s. An exhibition of arms, according to the rank of the person, made at certain times in every district, S.

"It is statute, that wapinschaw sal be kept & heldin." Stat. Will. c. xxiii. § 6.

"It was ordanit in the second Parliament of our Souerane Lord the King, that ilk Schiref of the realme sould gar wapinschawing be maid foure tymes ilk yer, in als mony placis as war apcailfull within his Baillierie." Acts Ja. I. 1425, c. 67, edit. 1566.

The names of all who appeared, were to be enrolled. These meetings were not designed for military exercise, but only for shewing that the lieges were properly provided with arms; from A.-S. waepn, weapon, and sceaw-ian, to shew. It was also provided, that a captain should be chosen for each parish to instruct the parishioners in the military exercise; for which purpose they were to assemble twice at least every month, during May, June and July. The Swedes had formerly a term of a similar signification, wapna-syn, from wapn, arma, and syn-a, monstrare. V. Ihre, to Moestra. He derives the modern military term muster from Lat. monstrare.

Our word evidently differs, in its signification, from E. weaponake, which seems to be synon. with that division of a county called Hundred. Some, apparently without foundation, derive the term from A.-S. wapn, and tacc-an, to teach, q. a certain district to be taught the use of arms. Dr. Johns. says, that "upon a meeting for that purpose they toucht each other's weapons in token of their fidelity and allegiance." Hoveden indeed derives it a tactu armorum; but gives a more probable account of the ceremony. When any one, he says, was appointed perfect of the weaponake, on a fixed day, in the place where they were wont to assemble, all the elders rose up to him, as he dismounted from his horse. He, having erected his spear, all that were present came and touched it with their lances; and thus they gave a pledge of their mutual engagement, by the contact of arms. V. Cowel.

This practice was undoubtedly borrowed from the ancient Goths. Among them the mode of decreeing edicts by the people at large, by the clashing of their arms, was called Wapntak. The same word denoted the confirmation of a judicial edict by the touch of arms. The votes being collected, the Judge reached forth a spear, by touching which all his assessors confirmed the sentence. V. Verel. and Ihre in vo. Spelman, vo. Wapentachium, thinks that this custom is to be traced to that of the ancient Germans, and also to that of the Macedonians, who, when displeased with any measure in their public assemblies, were wont to express their dissatisfaction by striking their shields.

WAR, WARR, WARE, WERE, adj. Worse, S. Waur, or warse than one's self, a phrase commonly used to denote a visitor from the spiritual world. I ne'er saw ony thing waur than mysel, I never saw a ghost, S.

The dore worm-eaten creakit on its bands;
And in he stept, irie, leukin' round
To ilka part he thought might ha'd a ghaist,
Aneath, and yont his bed, and up the lum;
But naething could he see warse than himsel.

The Ghaist, p. 4.

A proverb, common in Angus, is nearly lost in the E. modification given of it by Kelly.

"Ill comes often on worse back,"—spoken when one misfortune succeeds another. P. 201.

The phrase used in the north of S. is, "Ill on the back of waur."

—Pee and pees the eild syne war and war
Begouth to wax, the coulour fading far.

Doug. Virgil, 253, 16.

Syne dool tells us, the weak ay wins the warr.

Ross's Helenore, p. 91.

Severys Sone he wes but dowte,
Bot he wes were than he all owte.

Wynlowen, v. 8, 172.

Moes.-G. waira, wairsiza, Su.-G. waerre, werre, A.-S. waerra, Isl. verre, id. V. Wor.

WAR, WAUR. This word is frequently used as a s.; as, "Gin that were to happen, it was be ten waur," S.; i.e., ten times worse.

This corresponds with the use of Worse, in E. as a s.

To WAR, WAUR, v. a. 1. To overcome, to outdo in working, running, &c., S., to worst, E.

And now has Pritis the fordel, and syne in hye
The big Centaure hir warris, and slippis by.

Doug. Virgil, 132, 41.

"The scholar may war the master by a time."—S. Prov. Kelly, p. 310.

An' Scotland drew her pipe an' blew,

"Up, and waur them a', man!" Burns, lii. 270.

2. To injure, to make worse.

"Gif ony wines, beand stowit be the shipmen within ship, takis skaith,—without stress of wether, and the merchand sayis that the wines wer disturbit and spilt on the master's behalf; gif the master will sweir, with twa or thre of his fellowis, that thair wines wer not warrit be thame, they sall pass quite." Ship Lawis, Balfour's Pract., p. 620.

3. To be waur'd, to be cast in a court of law, S.

"Onr gudesire, Mr. Lovel,—was like to be waur'd afore the session for want of a paper—it was a paper of great significance to the plea, and we were to be waur'd for want o't." Antiquary, i. 199.

From the adj. In like manner in Isl. and Sw. there is a s. v. formed from the adj.; versna, and foerwaerr-a, deteriorari, to become worse.

WAR, subst. v. 1. Were.

The Romanys now begynnys her,
Off men that war in gret distress,
And assayit full gret hardynes.

Barbour, l. 447, MS.

Thai trowit be than thai war in Awendaille.

Wallace, lii. 78, MS.

2. War him, befall him.

A Scottis man, that him handlyt hat,
He hynt than be the armys twa;
And war him wele or war him wa,
He ewyn apon his bak him flang.

Barbour, xvi. 650, MS.

This seems more nearly allied to Su.-G. war-a, to be, than to any other v.; q. be good or evil to him, like the Sw. phrase: Ware haermed huru det 'will; Be this as it will; Wideg.

Sw. Germ. war, A.-S. waeron, Alem. waran, O. Dan. wara.

WAR, adj. Aware, wary, E. ware. V. WER.

[To WAR, WARE, v. a. To wear.]

On ilkane fyngar scho wars ringis tuo:

Scho was als proud as any papingo.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 70.

Proud is perhaps an error for proud. It may, however, be the same with proyn'd.

[Dr. Jamieson inadvertently set this example under s. 1 of next v. War is from Sw. wara, Ger. währen, to last, endure.]

To WAR, WARE, WAIR, WAYR, v. a. 1.

Tolayout, expend, bestow, in whatever sense; as, to war time, labour, life, &c., S., A. Bor. Warit, part. pa.

"They shall be lyable both for intromission and omission, and shall have no allowance or defalcation of the charges and expences wair'd out by them." Act Sedt., 25th Feb., 1693.

Na marvel though ill win ill wair'd be.

Polwart, Watson's Coll., lii. 28.

This seems to have been a Prov. expression, Ill war'd and weil war'd, are still used concerning money ill or well laid out, S.

Think weil warit the tyme thow hes done spend.

And the travale that thow hes done sustene;

San it is brocht now to sic gud ane end.

Mailland Poems, p. 286.

And nane, as yet, hes [eir] thair lawbor wairit;

As na man war that for this country carit.

Ibid., p. 290.

Be I ane Lord, and not lord-lyk,

Then every pelour and purs-pyk

Sayis, Land war bettir wairit on me.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 62.

"All men, that have any perfect favour thereto, will not only be careful of his counsel, and spend his goods and gear, but also they will ware thair lives to the advancement and welfare of the same." Pitcottie, p. 14.

Thus Symon's heid upon the wall was brokin;
And als freir Johne attour the stayr was loppin

And hurt his heid, and wart him wounder ill;
And Alesoun scho gat nocht all her will.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 85.

i.e., bestowed himself.

A similar phrase is used concerning one who is supposed to deserve any cross accident that befalls him;
It's weill war'd on him, or, at his hand, S.

2. To waste, to squander, to throw away.

Tyne nocht thir men, but to sum strenth ye ryd,
And I sall pass to get yow power mar;
Thir ar our gud thus lychtly for to war.
Wallace, viii. 198, MS.

Wear, edit. 1648.

Syn to the King he raykyt in gret ire,
And said on lowd, Was this all your desyr,
To wayr a Scot thus lychtly into wayn?

Ibid. xi. 255, MS.

Isl. ver-ia, to buy, to purchase; to sell; to make merchandise; Veria varu sinni, to sell his wares; Teut. waer-en, to promise a price. This has been deduced from waer, true, Alem. war-en, to plight faith, i.e., to verify, to give assurance that the goods sold are sufficient; as the seller was anciently bound to do. Hence E. ware, wares, merchandise, something to be sold. This word seems very ancient; as also found in Celt. C. B. gucarr-io, warr-io, to spend money; Ray.

This is an O.E. v. "War-yn or chaffaryn. Mercor. —War-yn or bastowyn in byinge. Commutor. Comparo." Prompt. Parv. Kersey has not overlooked it. "Ware your money (N.C.)," i.e., North Country, "bestow it well." It does not, however, necessarily convey the idea of laying out money in a proper manner.

To WARAND, v. a. To protect, S. and E. warrant, to give security against danger.

For wytht hym had Maximiane
All the gud fechtarys of the land;
Nane left, that evyr wytht strenthe of hand
Mycht warand the small folk fra the fycht,
Na for to stynt thare fays mycht.

Wyntown, v. 10, 547.

[O. Fr. garantir, warantir, to warrant, protect.]

WARAND, WARRANT, s. 1. A place of shelter or defence from enemies.

And thai that saw sa sudandly
That folk come egryly prikand
Rycht betwix thaim and thair warand,
Thai war in to full gret effray.

Barbour, vi. 422, MS.

The chiftanis brak array, and went thare gate,
The baneris left all blout and dyssolate,
Socht to warand on horsbak, he and he,
Frawart thair fais, and held to the ciete.

Doug. Virgil, 397, 7.

It occurs in the same sense, O. E.

The targe was his warrant,
That none till him threw.

Rob. de Brunne, Ellis's Spec., i. 121.

V. the v.

2. A surety one who secures the fulfilment of any bargain, or warrants a purchase made by another; S.

"Ane beand callit and persewit for the singil and doubil avail of his mariage, may leasumlie call ony person for his warrant, quha is bund and oblist to warrant him thairanent." Balfour's Practicks, p. 320.

WARANDISS, WARRANTICE, s. The security given, by the seller, to the purchaser, that the bargain shall be made good to him, S.; the same with E. Warranty.

—"Na persoun may be callit and convenit for warrantice of ony landis annalyeit and dispoit be him, fra ward, releif or non-entres, except he be speciallie and expresseli bund and oblist thairto." Balfour's Pract., p. 318, 319.

"The said Adam allegit to haue a tak of the said land, & warrantiss of the samyn." Act. Audit, A. 1481, p. 97.

L. E. Warrantis-ia, ut Warranta; Du Cange.

WARBLE, s. 1. A sort of worm that breeds betwixt the outer and inner skin of beasts, S., a swelling on the back of a cow or ox, A. Bor.

"Warble, a short thick worm, which lodges between the skin and the fell of black cattle, not between the fell and the flesh." Gall. Enc. This in Angus is called Warbie.

"If at such a time you were to look through an elf-bore in wood, where a thorter knot—has been taken out, or through the hole made by an elf-arrow, (which has probably been made by a warble) in the skin of a beast that has been elf-shot, you may see the elf-ball haiging (butting) with the strongest bull or ox in the herd; but you will never see with that eye again." Northern Antiq., p. 404.

2. A lean person, a scrag, Aberd.; synon. Shargar.

A.-S. wear, Teut. weer, a knot, puff, or bunch; any thing callous.

To WARBLE, v. n. To wriggle, &c. V. WRABIL.

WARD, s. 1. A division of an army.

Apoun this wyse the oistis and wardis hale
On athir part returnyt in bataille.

Doug. Virgil, 430, 17.

2. A small piece of pasture ground, inclosed on all sides, generally appropriated to young quadrupeds; as, the calf-ward, the place where calves are enclosed for pasture, S.

Within the ward I might have clos'd thee
Where well thou mightest have repos'd thee,
Among the Laird's best fillies.

Watson's Coll., i. 49.

"Now the country lords and barons of the covenant being come in to the earl Marischal, as said is, they sent out their horses and destroyed both grass and corns, fed where they pleased in the bishop's ward, and round about New Aberdeen, to the great grief and skaith of the poor labourers." Spalding's Troubles, i. 157, 158.

Sir W. Scott defines this in a note; "An inclosure for securing cattle; i.e., warding them."

But this definition seems too much restricted: for the term is applied to a place that furnishes food. It has obviously this sense as used by Spalding.

Sir W. subjoins the following example of the use of Calf-ward.

Waes me for Johnnie Geld's hole now,
His braw calf-ward where gowans grew,
Sae white and bonnie;
Nae doubt they'll rive't up wi' the plough,
They'll ruin Johnnie.

The subsequent remark is certainly well-founded. "The commutation, which takes place occasionally betwixt the letters Gu, Y, and H", induces me to believe that Ward, Guard, Gard, Gard-n, are originally the same word. Thus Guild-Hall is spelled Whelde-Hall and Yeld-Hall. The Qu in Scottish manuscripts, stupidly printed Qu, is equivalent, like the same letters in Spanish, to Wh, as Quhilk, Whilk, &c.

Thus Su.-G. ward, not only signifies custodia, but sepes, sepimentum, i.e., the means of keeping in safety; A.-S. gearð.

[3. The name given to the divisions of certain counties or districts; thus Lanarkshire is divided into Upper, Middle, and Lower Wards.

4. Guard, post; pl. wardis, places to be guarded, Barbour, xvii. 627, 349.

5. Guardianship of a minor, Ibid. xii. 320; also, tenure by military service, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 168, Dickson.

This was called the casualty of ward. The superior was entitled to the whole profits of a vassal's estate during his minority, under burden of his support. This was by way of recompence for the loss of his service.

6. Imprisonment, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 53.]

7. A decision, a determination; a forensic term, Interloquutour synon.

"And ilk soytour before he is admittit and received be the Judge, should be examinat in thrie courts, gif he can make recorde of the court (of ane proces deduced incourt) or report ane sufficient wardis (interloquutour) or dome, anent wardis or exceptions asked in the court?" Quon. Attach., c. 36, § 2.

"Our souterane lord, &c., be sensemet and ward of parliament, fand and deliuerit that the sailis Eric of Anguss, &c., bure thame trowlie, honourable and manfullie in the said twa battellis." Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 312. It is also written Waird.

"Certane persones—are callit—the keies of the court, that is;—Ane sutor quha wardis & pronounces the ward & interloquutour of the court." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo Curia.

Wairdis is here equivalent to awards,—as expl. by the phrase following "pronounces the waird."

L. B. warda, E. award.

WARD AND WARSEL. Security for, pledge, S. B.

—Ye may meet with skaith,
There's fouk gangs here, that's abler than we baith.
Een sit ye still, and rest you here with me,
And I sall ward and warsel for you be.

Ross's Helenore, p. 33.

This phrase occurs in Aberd. Reg. "To remane wpon his ward & warsall." V. 24.

"He tuk nothyr ward nor warsell of the said claith." Ibid. Cent. 16; i.e., he took no charge of it in any way whatsoever, so as to make him responsible either for the keeping, or for the sale of it.

The only northern term which bears any resemblance is Isl. versla, verdsla, nundinatio, cambium; Haldorson.

As ward signifies keeping, warsel seems corr. from wardsel, perhaps from A.-S. ward, custodia, and sell-an, tradere; q. security for delivery of what has been kept. Wachter observes that the Germ. sal, from sel-en, tradere, conveys this idea. Traditionem, praebitionem et exhibitionem ejus rei, cui annectitur—significat; Proleg. Sect. V. Su.-G. waerd-a, praestare, sensu juridico.

To WARD, v. a. To imprison.

"It appears from the old records, that a company of players were in Perth, June 3d, 1589. In obedience to an act of the General Assembly, which had been made in the year 1574—5, they applied to the consistory of the church for a licence, and shewed a copy of the play, which they proposed to exhibit. The words of the record, some of them a little modernised, are, 'Perth, June 3d, 1589, The minister and elders give licence to play the play, with conditions, that no swearing, banning, nor one [onie] scurrility shall be spoken, which would be a scandal to our religion which we profess, and for an evil example unto others. Also, that nothing shall be added to what is in the register of the play itself. If any one who plays shall do in the contrary, he shall be warded, and make his public repentance.' That is, he was to be imprisoned, and afterwards to appear in the church to be rebuked in the public place of repentance." Statist. Acc. (Perth), xviii. 522.

E. put in ward; Su.-G. waerd-a, custodire.

To WARD, v. n. 1. To go to prison, to submit to confinement, to enter one's person in ward.

"The lords refused to let the lady marchioness go to the castle with her husband [Huntly], unless she would ward also." Spalding's Troubles, i. 48.

2. To award; an old forensic term.

"This court of parliament schawis for law, that the dome given in the Justice Are of Coupir—was evil gevin & wele again said: And tharfor ilk barone & freehaldare that had soytouris in the said Are, & warlit & geve voce with the said dome, is ilkane in amercia-ment, sic as thai nicht tyne in the said Are," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1478, p. 66. Also Acts Ja. IV., 1505, Ed. 1814, p. 264.

The origin of the E. term Award has been variously accounted for. Skinner derives it, as Johns. observes, "rather improbably," from A.-S. weard, towards; Spelman, with far greater verisimilitude, from Anglo-Norm. agard, Fr. garder, as denoting what is to be kept or observed. Kilian expl. agard, awarded; en vos agardetz, in your judgment, determination. G., as Spelman remarks, is often changed into re. Perhaps we ought rather to say, that w of the Goths appears in the Celt. as gw, whence the Fr. gu. A.-S. on wearde signifies, vigilantia, exploratio (Lye); which might assume the form of award, as on wacy has been softened into E. away, and on sid into aside.

The S. word, at least, seems to have been immediately traduced from the Gothic. Su.-G. word-a, anciently ward-a, signifies custodire, like A.-S. weard-ian. Spelman has rightly observed that warda, or varda, Scotis dicitur interloquitorium, judicium, constitutio. Skene indeed expl. varda curiae "the interloquutor or decreets of the court," adding; Curia dicitur wardare, considerare, pronunciare, referring to Quon. Attach. in different places. He subjoins; "That quhilk is called verdictum assise, in libro Carbreith, is called the wairde, veredite, or deliverance of the assise." Vo. Varda. The primary signification of the term is obviously retained in its secondary sense; as the assisors are supposed, in their award, to keep the oath they have taken; unless we should view it as regarding the result of their accurate investigation, in the sense of exploratio.

[WARDANE, s. A warden, regent, Barbour, xiv. 512.]

[WARDANRY, s. Wardenship, office, Ibid. viii. 362.]

WARDATOUR, s. The person who has the wardship of lands while the heir is a minor.

"Gif the wardatouris of sik landis refusis to find souirtie,—that the said schireff—charge thame to find the said souirtie,—vnder the pane of wanting of the proffets of all sic ward landis, conjunct-fee or lif-rentis to be inbrocht to the kingis vas." Acts Ja. V., 1535, Ed. 1814, p. 344.

L. B. guardator, custos.

WARDOUR, s. A person under ward.

—"The castellis of Edinburgh, Dumbertane, Striueling and Blaknes, being four of the cheiff strenthis of this realme maist necessar to be kept, alsueill for our souerane lordis seruice as his residence within the samin at tymis convenient, as for the gard and keeping of prissoneris and wardouris chargit for thair offences to remane within the samin," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1584, Ed. 1814, p. 352.

E. Warder denotes a keeper, a guard; but this term seems to be used by inversion, as denoting those who are kept, and as synon. with prissoneris; from Ward, v. n., to go to prison.

WARDEN, s. "The name of a particular kind of pear," S., Gl. Sibb. V. WASH-WARDEN.

WARDLE, s. A singular transposition of Ward, the world, Buchan.

—That unto thee our wardle blate
May spread its leaf,

—Awa vile trash, thou wardle's gain, &c.
Tarras's Poems, p. 39. 126.

"Wardle, world;" Gl. ibid.

WARDOUR, s. [Meaning uncertain.]

Off ferlifu fyne favour war thair faces meik,
All full of flurist fairheid, as flouris in June,
Quhyt, seimlie, and soft, as the sweet lillies;
New upspreid upon spray as new spynist rose,
Arrayit ryallie about with mony riche wardour.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 45.

Mr. Pink. inclines to render it "ward or division; what we call plot of a garden;" Note, p. 387. But perhaps it rather means verdure.

WARDRAIPPER, s. The keeper of the wardrobe.

The wardraipper of Venus' bour
To gif a joblet he is als doure,
As it war off ane fute syd frog.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 90.

Joblet is probably an error for doblet, a doublet.

From wardreip, wardrep, wardrip: as wardrobe is written by Dunbar, Ibid., p. 90, 91, 92.

O. E. "Wardroper. Vestiarus." Prompt. Parv.

WARE, s. A wire, S.

WARE, WAIR, s. The Spring, Gall., Ayrs.,
Clydes.

There ware an' hairst ilk ither hawse
Upon the self-sam tree.

Ballad, Edin. Mag. Oct. 1818, p. 329.

"Ware, Spring." Ayrs. Gl. Surv., p. 593.
V. VEIR.

WARE-COCK, s. A black cock, Galloway; perhaps q. the cock of spring.

The blow was ettled at a tall ane,
A bra ware cock;

Then, thud! I trow it was a bawl ane;
It made him rock.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 113.

WARETYME, s. 1. The season of spring, Ettr.
For., Roxb., Tweedd.

Mactaggart gives a different orthography, assigning a ludicrous origin to the word. "Waurtime, the spring season, for then the farmers ware, or lay out; they then sow with the hope to reap."

"The Ware evening is long and teuch,
The Harvest evening runs soon o'er the heugh.

"In the spring the days are lengthening; in harvest decreasing; which makes the one seem long, and the other short." Kelly, p. 334.

But it is not mere seeming. The twilight of spring from a well-known physical cause, is in fact of longer duration than that of Autumn.

In Angus it is differently expressed:

The spring e'enings are lang and teugh,
The hairst e'ening tumbles o'er the heugh:

i.e., night so speedily succeeds day, that the evening may be compared to one falling over a precipice, who disappears at once.

2. Early period of life, ibid.

"I—fleechyt Eleesabett noore to let us torrell in the waretyme of ower raik," i.e., in the spring-season of our course or life. Winter Ev. Tales, ii. 41.

Lal. wortimi, vernum tempus, Halderson.

WARE, s. A tough and hard knot in a tree.

Bot fessynyt sa is in the ware the grip
That by na maner force, thoct he was wicht,
Furth of the stok the shaft vp pul he micht.

Doug. Virgil, 440, 40.

A.-S. wear, Belg. weer, callus, nodus, tuber; Radd.
Sibb. renders it as an adj. "War nott, hard knot in a tree;" Gl.

WARE, WAIR, s. 1. The sea-weed, called alga marina; sometimes sea-ware, S. pl.
waris.

—As ane roik of the se,—

Skellyis and fomey craggis thay assay,
Rowtand and rairand, and may nocht empare,
Bot gyf thay scheg fra his sydis the ware.

Doug. Virgil, 228, 31.

—Suffr that the palmes of our airis

Hirrsil on the crag almaist ilk routh and ware.

Ibid., 133, 2.

"Besydis this Kelnsay forsaide, layes Bernersay-beg, haffe ane myle lange, and ane myle of breadthe, ane laiche rough ile, full of little rough craiges and how betwixt, of naturall fertile eirthe, with infinite ware on every stane of the same." Monroe's Ilex,
p. 43.

"On this coast, great quantities of sea-weed, called ware, are thrown up on the shore, which the farmers lay on the ground, and find very profitable in raising crops of barley." P. Gamrie, Banffs. Statist. Acc., i.
472.

A. Bor. waar, or weir; in Thanet island, wore, or woor; Sommer.

2. Fucus vesiculosus.

"Bladder Fucus, or common Sea Wrack, Anglis.
Sea-ware, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 904.

Spelman and Skene derive it from Fr. rarech. But this properly signifies wreck, or all that is cast out by the sea. It is evidently the same with A.-S. wear, waar, Belg. wier, alga marina. Sea-ware, Gl. Aelfric.

INCOME WARE. Weeds cast in by the sea, as distinguished from those which adhere to the rocks.

"What I have hitherto observed is only of ware thrown in by the sea, which the farmers call income ware. But there is a kind of ware that at low water they shear and cut from the rocks, which is of a much stronger nature, and will last full three years." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 116.

WARED, part. pa. Manured with sea-weed, Orkn.

"In the spring season, after the oats are sown, the farmer gives the wared land a ploughing, which they call their fallow." P. Westray, Statist. Acc., xvi. 253.

WARE-BEAR, s. Barley manured with sea-weed.

"Near the coast, the principal part of the crop consists of barley, or, what is call ware-bear," &c.—"When bear or big is manured with sea-ware, the crop is very abundant, but the grain is very small, and is known by the name of ware-bear." P. Ruthen, Aberd. Stat. Acc., vi. 17.

WARE, WAR, pret. v. Wore; from wear.

He bad him bring with him the sceptour vand,—
The collare picht with orient periles als
That sche umquhille war about hir hals.

Doug. Virgil, 33, 42.

To WARE, v. a. To expend, &c. V. WAR.

WARE, s. Price, estimation.

The Dowglas in thay dayis, duchtys alquhare,
Archibald the honorable in habitationis,
Weddit that wlowck wicht, worthye of ware,
With rent and with riches.

Houlate, ii. 19.

For A.-S. wer, were, capitis estimatio; or rather from ware, Sa.-G. wara, merx.

WHOLE-WARE, s. The whole of any thing, the whole lot or assortment; a phrase borrowed from mercantile transactions.

"He saith, In the whole-ware of these things, the life of my soul standeth." Bruce's Eleven Serm., i. 6. 1. V. HALE-WARE.

WARESTALL, s. Perhaps, a stall for holding wares.

"That James erle of Buchane sall restore to—George bischop of Dunkeld—thre malvysy bocis price of the pece viij s. vi d., a Hambro barrel price iij s., a ware-stall price xxvj s. vij d., twa pare of hoisting crelia," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1489, p. 129.

May this denote a stall for holding wares or necessary articles? Perhaps it is allied to Su.-G. waeria, to defend, as conjoined with hoisting crelia, which seem to denote panniers for the host or warfare.

WARF, s. A puny contemptible creature, a dwarfish person, Lanarks. Orf, Loth., Urf, Tweedd., Warwoof, Ang. V. WARWOLF.

WARIDRAG, s. [A weakling, a drag-behind.]

This term is in Moray applied to a puny hog or young sheep that loiters behind the flock, and requires as it were to be dragged along. The first part of the word has been traced to S. weary, as signifying puny, weak. V. WALLIDRAG.

WARING, s. Wares; as synon. with Gudis.

"Certane gudis & waring;" Aberd. Reg., V. 15.

WARISON, WARYSOUN, WARESONE, s. Reward.

—And hycht all Fyfe in warysoun
Till him, that mycht othir ta or sla
Robert the Bruce, that wes his fa.

Barbour, ii. 206, MS.

Luve preysis, but comparesone,
Both gentill, sempill, generall;
And of frē will gevis waresone,
As fortoun chansis to befall.

Scott, Bannatyne Poems, p. 192.

Lord Hailes renders it "remedy, recovery." In this case it would be from Fr. guarison, id. from guarir, guérir, to heal. But it seems rather to signify, reward.

This is its signification in O. E.

—Alle that him serued he brougt to warisoun.

R. Brunne, p. 24.

Chaucer uses this term for merite, in the original of Rom. Rose. Tyrwhitt observes that warysoun is donatium, Prompt. Parv. Garysoun, wareson, reward, riches; Gl. R. Glouc.

I apprehend that Fr. guerdon and E. reward, are both from the same origin with this; which probably is Su.-G. waerl, pretium, or waerl, dignus; Moes.-G. wairths. For a reward is that which is given to one who is accounted worthy in some respect.

As used by Gower, it seems merely to signify provision, sustenance.

My father here hath but a lyte
Of waryson, and that he wende
Had all be lost, but nowe amende
He may well through your noble grace.

Conf. Am., Fol. 26. b. col. 1.

WARISON, s. Expl. "Note of assault."

Either receive within thy towers
Two hundred of my master's powers,
Or straight they sound their warison,
And storm and spoil thy garrison.

Lay of the Last Minstrel, C. iv. 21.

This seems radically different from the preceding; perhaps q. war-sound, from Fr. guerre, and son.

WARK, WARKE, s. 1. Work, S.

"—The ministerie, as I have said, is ane warke, and no idleteth." Bruce's Eleven Serm., A. a. 8, a.

"Wark bears witness of wha well does;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 74.

Ben Johnson uses it, in his Sad Shepherd, as a colloquial word, A. Bor.

—I ha' that wark in hand,
That web upo' the luime, sall gar 'hem think,
By then, they feelin their owne frights, and feares.

"Lat vs go schortlie without trifling to the purpose, and lat wark beir witnes." Reasoning, Crosraguell & J. Knox, F. 25, a.

This proves the antiquity of the proverbial phrase.

2. [A fuss, to-do, show of affection.] To haud a wark wi' him, to make much of or much ado about one, S.

[3. A stately building, an hospital, &c.; as, Mar's Wark, Heriot's Wark.]

4. A fortification; as in the compound designation, Burnswark, Dumfr.

"Two places deserve to be mentioned.—The one is the hill of Burnswark, famous for its particular form, —for the extensive view which it commands, and for the vestiges of Roman works," &c. Stat. Acc., iii. 351. V. also Gordon's Itiner., p. 16, 18.

Isl. virki, vallum, munitio; literally, opus; A.-S. werc, moles, munimentum, castellum. Dr. Henderson expl. virki, as denoting in Iceland "a circular mound of earth, forming the most eminent remains of the fortification, which, in former times, surrounded the farm" of Reykholt. Iceland, ii. 142.

He subjoins in a note; "Hence Southwark, Icel. sudvirki, the southern fortifications constructed by the Danes in the days of Ethelred, and so called because it lay on the south side of the Thames."

5. In pl., [the pieces or fittings of a machine or instrument]; as, the warks o' a lock or key, the ward, S.

WARK-DAY, s. A day on which one may lawfully work, S.; synon. Ikaday, Every-day. Yorks. "wark-day (pron. warday); week-day, in contradistinction to Sunday;" Marshall.

WARKLOOM, s. A tool or instrument for working, in whatever way, S. Thus the term is used as a pen.

But gowked goose, I am right glad,
Thou art begun in write to flyte;
Sen, Lown, thy language I have laid,
And put thee to thy pen to write;
Now, Dog, I shall thee see despite,
With pricking put thee to sick speid,
And cause the (Carr) that warkloom quite,
Synne seek a hole to hide thy head.
Poikart, Watson's Coll., iii. 3.

V. LOME.

WARKLY, adj. Given to work, diligent, S. Germ. wirklich, effective.

WARKMAN, s. 1. A labourer, one who, in the country, engages in any work he can find, a jobber, S.

"So he can be a faithfull and a woorthie warkman."
Bruce's Eleven Serm., A. a. 3, b.

2. Improperly used for a porter, a bearer of burdens, Aberd.

To WARK, WERK, v. n. To ache, A. Bor. yerk, S.

For quhy throw falset and subtiltie,
Thay chaist away Justice, and Equitie,
For laik of quibills my heid dois wark and yaik,
And all my body trymbill dois and schaik.
Lament. L. Scott., A. ii. 6.

The Ingliss men tuk playnly part to fle,
On horsis some, to strenthis part can found,
To socour thaim, with mony werkand wound.
Wallace, iii. 204, MS.

In edit. 1648, absurdly rendered working.
A.-S. waerc, Su.-G. waerk, dolor; hufwoudwaerk, capitis dolor, a head-ache; werk-a, dolere; werk, Chaucer, id. A. Bor. wark, a pain or ache.
O. E. "Werk-yn, or hedeakyn. Doleo.—Werkyng, or hede ahe. Cephalia." Prompt. Parv.

WARLD, s. 1. The world, S.

I woe to God that has the warld in wauld.
Wallace, x. 579.

—"Ye say, your cumming in this cuntrie, was not to seek disputation, but simply to propose vnto the people, Jesus Christ crucified, to be the only Saviour of the warld." Reasoning betuix Croisraguel and J. Knox, iii. b.

2. A great multitude, S.

—Standing there, I sawe
A warld of folk, and by thaire countenance
Thair bertis semyt full of displeasance.
King's Quair, iii. 9.

3. It's new warlds; i.e., a complete change of customs has taken place, Aberd.

Su.-G. wereld, id., which has been deduced from Mos.-G. scuir, Isl. rer, man, and alld, old, (aetas) age.

WARLDLIE, adj. 1. Belonging to the world, S.

2. Secular, temporal.

"Therfor hir hienes—restoria, reponia, and reinte gratis the said Schir Walter—to his fame, warldlie honouris & digniteis in the samin estate, and als frelie as he was befor," &c. Acts Mary, 1542, Ed. 1814, p. 414.

3. Parsimonious; as, a warldlie body, one who is covetous, or eager to amass wealth, S.

WARLD-LIKE, adj. Having nothing unnatural or monstrous in one's appearance; like the rest of mankind; often conjoined with Wyss, sense 3, "in the full possession of reason."

"Wasna he likely enough to be affronted at aye o' the family keeping aye muckle out o' the wye, as gin aye wasna wise an' warld-like, or took him for the Black Bull o' Norway." St. Kathleen, iv. 19.

I rather think that, in this phrase, lik had been originally used as applicable to both adjectives, wyss-like and warld-like.

WARLD'S GEAR. Worldly substance. Nae warld's gear, nothing of any description, S.; as, "I didna taste warld's gear;" "There was nae warld's gear in the glass but could water," i.e., no mixture, nothing to qualify it," S. B.

"Bairns, bairns," he called loudly, and in a tone of the deepest pathos, "keep together—keep yere heads up the flood, cling to the brutes, and let warld's gear gang." Blackw. Mag., May 1820, p. 165.

WARLD'S-WASTER, s. A complete spend-thrift, S.

This term is more ancient than may be generally supposed, having been used at least as early as the reign of Ja. VI.

—Calling him many warld's waster.
Davidson's Kinyneandugh.

V. REBEGEASTOR.

WARLD'S-WONDER, s. A person whose conduct is notorious and surprising, S. Warld's wunner, Aberd.

WARLIEST, adj. Most wary; used metaph.

"Yone is the warliest wane," said the wise king,
That ever I wist in my walk in all this warld wyde
And the straitest of stuf with richesse to ring,
With unabasit bernys bergane to abide.
Gawan and Gol., ii. 13.

Instead of wist, it is wist, edit. 1503.

The meaning is, "Yonder house is the best defended." A.-S. waerlic, cautus.

WARLO, s. A term used to denote a wicked person.

Hud-pykie, hurdars and gadderaris,
All with that warlo went.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 28.

This is the account given of Couatyce, or Covetousness, personified:—

I half ane quick divill to my wyfe,
That haldis me evir in sturt and stryfe:
That warlo, and sche wist
That I wald cum to this gud toun,
Sche wald call me fals ladhorne loun.
And ding me in the dust.
We men that hes sic wickit wyvis
In grit languor we leid our lyvis,
Ay dreiffand in diseiss.

Lyndsay, S.P.R., li. 6.

It is sometimes used as an adj. Thus the title of a poem in the Evergreen is,

A bytand ballat on warlo wives,
That gar thair men live pingling lives.

I. 51.

The term, throughout the poem, is synon. with evil, especially in reference to the temper. A.-S. waer-loga, a hypocrite, a covenant-breaker; a wicked person; compounded of waere, a covenant, and logu, a liar.

WARLOCK, s. A wizard, a man who is supposed to be in compact with the devil, or to deal with familiar spirits, S.

"Warlock in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be conversant with spirits;" Johns. Dict.

"This Barton's wife has been likewise taken with him, who declared, that she never knew him to have been a warlock before; and he likewise declared, that he never knew her to have been a witch before." Satan's Invisible World, p. 87.

A curious anecdote is told concerning the justly celebrated John Napier of Merchistoun, inventor of the logarithms, who, during great part of the time when he was making his calculations, resided at Gartness in the parish of Drymen.

"He used frequently, in the evening, to walk out in his night gown and cap. This, with some things which to the vulgar appeared rather odd, fixed on him the character of a warlock. It was firmly believed, and currently reported, that he was in compact with the devil; and the time he spent in study was spent in learning the black art, and holding conversation with Old Nick." P. Killearn, Stirlings. Statist., Acc. xvi. 108.

Sibb. views warlo as synon. with this term. But no proof is given that it is ever used in relation to sorcery. Warlock seems radically different, bearing strong marks of affinity to Isl. varðlok-r, an incantation, or magical song used for calling up evil spirits. Carmen quoddam magicum quo concinne cantato invitantur mali genii ad indicandum futura; Verel. Ind., p. 284.

It seems to have been a received opinion in this country, that the devil gave all those, who entered into his service new names, by which they were to be called in all their nocturnal meetings; and that, if any one of them was accidentally designed by his or her proper name, the spell was dissolved. V. Satan's Invisible World, p. 14.

The same idea prevailed in Iceland. It was also believed in that country, that the souls of those, acquainted with magical arts, left their bodies in a sort of lifeless state, when they made those expeditions through the air, which were called Hamfarir, and which were undertaken for magical purposes.

WARLOCK FECKET. V. FECKET.

WARLOCKRY, s. Magical skill, S.

"Sin the Rhymer's days, the spirit o' true warlockry is gane." Perils of Man, i. 16.

WARLOT, s. A varlet.

Amongis the Bischopis of the towne,
He played the beggar up and downe,
—Ane scaffing warlot wanting schame, &c.
Leg. Ep. St. Androis, p. 337.

V. SKAFF, v.

WARM, s. The act of warming, S.

This morning raw, gin ye've all night been out,
That ye wad thole a warm I makna doubt.

Ross's Helenore, p. 78.

To WARN, v. a. Corr. from Warrant, S. [Similar to the American "I guess," Shetl.]

[To WARN, v. n. To give notice of; to request attendance at; also, to summon; as, to warn the meeting, to warn the members, &c., Clydes.]

To WARNE, v. a. To refuse.

The Dowglas then his way has tane
Rycht to the horsis, as he him bad;
Bot he that him in yhemself had,
Than warnyt hym dispitously.

Barbour, li. 137, MS.

Thus tretyt he, and cheryst wondyr fair
Trew Scottis men that fewtō maid him thar,
And gaiff gretly feill gudis at the wan;
He warnd it nocht till na gud Scottis man.

Wallace, vi. 777, MS.

In old editions, it is changed to spared.

It is also used in a neut. sense.

And swa the land abandownyt he,
That durst nane warne to do his will.

Barbour, iv. 392, MS.

Warne O. E. signifies to prohibit. "I warne, I defende one or commande hym not to do a thyngne. Je deffenda." Palsgr., F. 401, a.

A.-S. wearn-an, wyrn-an, to refuse, to deny; whence waernung, denial, wearne, repugnance, obstacle. Su.-G. Isl. warn-a, prohibere, denegare. These may perhaps be traced to Moes.-G. war-jan, prohibere. Ihre views Gr. apocryphal, nego, as a cognate term.

To WARNIS, v. a. To warn, S. B. A.-S. warnig-an, id.

WARNISIN, s. Warning; as, "Mind, I've gien ye warnisin," Ang.

To WARNIS, WARNYS, v. a. To furnish a castle, or any fortified place, with that provision which is necessary, whether for defence, or for the support of the defenders.

Till Edinburgh he went in hy,
With gud men in till company,
And set a sege to the castell;
That than was warnyst wondre weill
With men and wyttallis, at all rycht,
Swa that it dred na mannys fycht.

Barbour, x. 311, MS.

—Thai sa styth saw the castell,
And with that it was warnyst weill;
And saw the men defend thaim swa,
That thai nane hop had thaim to ta.

Ibid., iv. 102, MS.

It is used by R. Brunne, p. 293.

His vitalle he was pursueld in Brigges forto be,
His wyne were ther leid, & warneiscl that cito.

Su.-G. waern-a, to defend, to protect; whence waern, a fortification, a castle, or the walls surrounding a castle. Germ. waern-en, munire, instruere armis. Fr. garn-ir, is evidently from this source; and, among other things, signifies, to furnish, to fortify a weak place. Ihs derives waerna from waer, custodia, and naa, capere, q. to keep guard.

[WARNISOUN, s. Garrison, Barbour, x. 325, Herd's Edit.]

WARNSTOR, WARNYSONE, s. Provisions laid up in a garrison, for the sustenance of those to whom the defence of it is committed.

Than Wallace said, Falowis, I mak yow knawin,
The purwyance, that is within this wanya,
We will nocht tyne; ger sembyll all at any,
Gar wern Ram-say, and our gud men ilkan;
I will remayn quhill this waristor be gan.

Wallace, ix. 1197, MS.

It is one word in MS. In edit. 1648,

I will remain till all the stufte be gone.

Warinstour, as used by R. Brunne, is expl. "defence, fortification;" Gl. Hearne.

That castelle hight Pilgrym, of all it bare the flour:
The Sarazins kept it that tym for ther chefe warinstour.
P. 180.

It seems properly to signify, a magazine, or a strong hold for preserving provisions.

From Su.-G. waern-a, to defend, or waern, a fortification, and store, Germ. stour, used nearly in the same sense as the E. word; vectigal, collecta. Thus the idea is, store laid up in a place of defence. By a similar composition, Alem. herideura, signifies military pay; brandstour, a collection of combustibles; and Sw. krigs-behoer, stores for an army or town.

To WARP, v. a. 1. To throw.

The Erie tauld him all his cass,
How he wes chasyt on the se,
With thaim that suld his awyn be;
And how he had bene tane, but dout,

Doug. Virgil, 432, 4.

2. To surround, to involve.

Thre velis tho, as was the auld manere,
In wourschip of Erix he bad down quel,
And ane blak yow to God of tempestis fel:
Synne chargit all thare cabillis vp bellue,

Doug. Virgil, 153, 53.

Dolorus to se them, schap of ground, and stand
Like as ane wall with sand warpyd about.

Ibid., 16, 36.

3. To warp wourdis, to speak, to utter; with the prep. out or furth.

Skarsly the auld thir wourdis had warpyt out
Quhen some the are begouth to rumbill and rout.

Doug. Virgil, 62, 3.

Ibid., 165, 32.

WARP, s. [1. A smart stroke or blow, Clydes; a stroke in pulling an oar, Shetl.]

2. A designation in reckoning oysters, being the term used for four, Loth.

"A hundred, as sold by the fishers contains 33 warps, equal to six score and twelve. The retail hundred contains only 30 warps. Four oysters make a warp." P. Prestonpans, Statist. Acc. xvii. 69.

This is undoubtedly from the v. warpe, to throw, to cast; as, in like manner, a cast of herring includes four. Both terms allude to the act of the fishermen, in throwing down a certain number at a time, when counting or dealing their fish.

WARPING, s. A mode of making embankments by driving in piles and intertwining them with wattles, Gall.

"An attempt has been lately made by the Earl of Selkirk, to recover land from the sea by warping; this is done by driving piles of wood into the beach, interwoven with branches of trees, or any sort of bramble, to retain the mud on the ebbing of the tide." Agr. Surv. Galloway, p. 230.

Allied with E. warp, as referring to the operation of weaving. A.-S. wearp, not only signifies stamen, the warp of cloth, but vimen, a twig, an osier.

To WARPLE, v. a. To intertwine so as to entangle. "That yarn's sae warplit, that I canna get it redd;" it is so twisted that I cannot disentangle it, S.; synonym. Rarel.

Dan. wrapp-a sammen, impicare; Seren. This is written Vred-er, Stephanij Nomencl. Hence,

To WARPLE, v. n. 1. To be intertwined; applied to children who are tumbling and tossing, with their limbs twisted one through another, S. B.

—At greedy-glad, or warpling on the green
She 'clips'd them a' an' gar'd them look like draff,
For she was like the corn, an' they the caff.

Ross's Helenore, p. 10. First Edit.

2. Used in a moral sense, to denote the confusion of any business, S. B.

For Nory's heart began to cool right fast,
Fan she saw things had taken sic a cast,
An' sae thro' ither warpl'd were, that she Began to dread atweesh them what meith be.

Ibid. p. 60.

V. WRABIL, v., which, if not originally the same, must be nearly allied.

To WARRACH, v. n. (gutt.) The term warrachand is applied to those who, from impetuosity of temper, are given to scolding, or to the use of abusive language, S. B.

It seems radically the same with WART, q. v. Perhaps Isl. varg-ur, furiosus, is allied.

2. A stunted, ill-grown person, or puny child. A weary warroch, one who is feeble and puny, Ang., Mearns; nearly synon. with Wroul, wurl; but used in a more contemptuous sense.

Teut. wier, weerr, nodus, callus, whence weerrachtigh, knotty; A.-S. wearrig, wearricht, callosus, nodosus, "knotty, knobbed;" Somner. Wyrock, the name given to a callosity on the foot, has evidently a common origin.

7. Having no determinate character, or fixed principles.

—"The Worcester man was but wersh parritch, neither gude to fry, boil, nor sup could." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 228.

Versae has been already mentioned, (vo. WALSH), as signifying fresh. Our warsh appears in other forms in O. E. It is evidently the same with weryshe, inconditus, (Huloet) q. not pickled or salted. For Elyot expl. inconditus, weryshe; and Skinner, after Gouldman, werish, inconditus, insipidus, insulsus. "Werish (old word) unsavoury;" Phillips.

WARSH-STOMACH'D, adj. Having a delicate or squeamish stomach, S.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 58.

And eik quha best on fute can ryn lat se,
To preif his pith, or wersill, and bere the gre.

Doug. Virgil, 129, 36.

Belg. worstel-en, id. Teut. wersel-en, reluctant, reniti, obniti, Kilian; most probably from wers, vars, contrarius, adversus: for what is wrestling, but one opposing another, by an exertion of strength? From wers is formed O. Teut. wers-saem, contrarius, and from wersel-en, wers-linghe, repugnantia, contrarietas. This analogy indicates their radical affinity. It is equally clear, that E. wrestle, is a vitiated mode of pronunciation.

WARSELL, WARSLE, WARSTLE, s. Struggle, S.; wi' a warsle, with difficulty, S.

The world's wrack we share o't,

WARSLER, WARSTLER, s. A wrestler.

"I'm sair cheatit gin some o' your warstlers dinna warstle you out o' ony bit virtue and maidenly mense that ye hae." Winter Ev. Tales, i. 289.

WARSET, adj.

"Or gif they be found in the forest in time of nicht lyand, hauend an horne, or ane hound quhilk is called Warset: in that case lauchful witnes being brocht (to testify the trueth) archt kye sall be payed." Forest Laws, c. 1, § 2.

Skinner seems rightly to derive this from A. S. ware, observation, caution, and set-an, to set; as denoting a dog employed by a thief, for watching and interrupting the deer in the forest.

[WARSH, adj. V. WARSCHE.]

WARSH-CROP, s. The third crop from Outfield.

"There are four breaks of the outfield in tillage. The first out of ley.—The second, what they call Aould, where the produce will not exceed two bolls, or two bolls and a half, an acre. The third, or Warsh-crop, where the return may be much as on the second." Maxwell's Sol. Trans., p. 214.

The term seems here used in the sense of indifferent.

WARST, adj. Worst. The superlative from War.

"I ken ower weel that the warst we get is far aboon our demerits." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 312. V. WEIL, adv.

WART, in composition of adverbs, is the same with ward in Mod. Eng., as, inwart, inward, utwart, outward. Moes.—G. weirthe, A. S. weard, Isl. vert; Gl. Wynt. Add. Alem. uverti. Wart, locus, is probably the origin. This Wachter deduces from icar, ubi, E. where.

WART, WARD, s. 1. A tumulus or mound thrown up on high ground, in the Orkney and Shetland islands, for the purpose of conveying intelligence.

"To convey intelligence readily from one place to another, and particularly to spread the alarm in case of the approach of an enemy, the latter were generally thrown up on the highest hill, and had fires of wood and other combustible matter lighted on them; and the name of Warts, or Wards, which they at present bear, has a manifest allusion to this circumstance." Barry's Orkney, p. 95.

Sometimes these were intended for beacons to direct navigators.

"The ancient inhabitants of these islands set up on the eminences around the harbours, warts, or marks to direct the course of vessels sailing along the coast, placing one near the point of each arm of the harbor, and a third near the bottom." P. Unst, Shetl. Statist. Acc., v. 184, N.

—"That all manner of men shall convene, with all possible diligence, at Kirkwall, in their best attire and array, immediately after they shall see the cart of Whiteford Hill on fire, and therefore to follow direction from that part of [if] that any invasion shall be." Barry's Orkn., App., p. 469, A. 1623.

2. The beacon or fire kindled on the mound, S.

"Wart, a heap of turfs and peets [peats] placed on the top of the highest hills, which being fyrd gives advertisement to the country people to meet there; this being seen by the adjacent Ward." MS. Explic. of Norish Words.

It is evident that the writer views this as a different use of the term. For he distinguishes "Wart, or Wardhill, from Wart formerly explained;" and thus defines it; "High hills in sight of so much ground upon which they placed Beacons, which, fyrd upon occasion, the people resort thither; and there is always there the fell ready. See Wart."

The language implies that it was still customary to kindle these beacons, when this Explication was written.

With these may be conjoined bergward, a term in the Sw. laws, denoting the watches kept on mountains and headlands against the approach of an enemy; Excubiae in montibus et promontoriis, contra adventurum hostem; Loccen. Lex. Jur. Sueo-Goth., p. 25.

This is the same with Isl. ward, Su.-G. waard, excubiae, custodia, vigilia, E. watch and ward; from ward-a, waard-a, attendere, custodire. Hence Isl. Strandavard, Su.-G. strandaværdr, excubiae littorales, Ibre; excubiae in littore, Verel.; Botavard, botaværdr, excubiae ad speculas positae, Ibre; excubiae in promontoriis ad strues lignorum incendendas, visa classe hostili; Verel.

WARTH, s. An apparition, Ayrs. "Waith, a spirit or ghost, Yorks., Durh." Grose.

At last, the queer spectre drew near like a Warth,
And sett'd just straught i' my view,
But I ne'er was sae muckle amazed i' the earth
As when I beheld it was—you.

Picken's Poems, 1786, p. 184.

Picken, in his Gl., gives Warth as synon. with WRAITH, q. v.

• WART NOR. Corr. perhaps from War [were] it not for, but commonly used as signifying, "Had it not been for," Aberd.

WARTWEIL, WRATWEL, s. The skin above the nail, when fretted, S.

WARWOLF, WERWOULF, s. 1. A person supposed to be transformed into a wolf.

In this sense the word occurs in O. E.

—Christ seyde himself, of swiche I you warn,
And false profetes in the feith, he fulliche hem calde,
In vestimentis ovium, but only with inne

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 16.

2. A puny child, or an ill-grown person of whatever age; pron. warucoof, Ang.

A.-S. weru-culf, Su.-G. warulf, Germ. werwolf, vir-lupus, lycanthropos, man-wolf. It is undoubtedly the same word which is also pron. ucul, eroul, and worlin, S., used precisely in sense second. Sibb., without any probability, thinks that "warlock may be a corruption of this word."

In Fr. the term is inverted; loup garou, or wolfman. Wachter says, that garou is derived from Celt. gur, vir; C. B. gier, pl. gierin. Gur-a, to wed; gierach, a woman, a wife. There is no good reason to doubt that gur is radically the same with Goth. wer, man, Ial. vair; and may we not add Lat. vir? But as Fr. garoul is also used, it is evident that this is merely the Gothic term with g prefixed. Hence it appears that loup, in the other, is redundant.

The Gr. term λυκανθρωπος, corresponding in signification to warwolf, was formed from the same idea which prevailed among the Northern nations, that a man might transform himself into the shape of a wolf, and roam in quest of prey, actuated by the disposition of that ferocious animal.

Cornelius Agrippa introduces Virgil, Pliny, and Augustine, as attesting this transformation.

"Virgill also speaking of certayne hearbes of Pontus sayde:

With these, O Merim, haue I seene,
Oft times a man to haue
The fearfull shape of wilde wolfe, and Him selfe in woodes to saue.

"And Pliny saithe, that one Demarchaus Pharchasius in a sacrifice of mans bodie, which the Arcadians offered to Jupiter Liceus, tasted the inwardes of a sacrificed childe & was turned into a wolfe, for the which transformation of men into wolves Augustine thinketh that Pan was called with another name Liceus, and Jupiter Liceus. The same Augustine [De Civitate Dei, Lib. xviii., c. 18.] doth recompt, that when he was in Italie, certaine women witches, like Circes, when they had giuen enchantments in cheese to straungers, they transformed them into horses, and other beasts of cariage, and when they had caried the burdens that they listed, againe they turned them into men: and that this chaunced at that time to one Father Prestantius." Vanitie of Sciences, Fol. 56, b.

Pliny elsewhere rejects this idea; Homines in lupos verti, rursunque restitui sibi, falsum esse confidentur existimare debemus, aut credere omnia quae fabulosa tot seculis comperimus. Hist. Lib. viii., c. 28.

Solinus, speaking of the Neuri, a Scythian nation, says; Neuri, ut accepimus, statis temporibus in lupos transfigurantur; dein exacto spatio, quod huic sorti attributum est, in pristina faciem reuertuntur; c. 15.

Solinus derived his information on this subject from that very ancient and faithful historian Herodotus. For he nearly transcribes his language concerning the Neuri. "The same men," says Herodotus, "enter into danger, that they may be deemed necromancers; for it is said by the Scythians, and by those Greeks who inhabit Scythia, that once every year for a few days they become wolves, and again return into their former state." Melpom. c. 103.

Some, among whom we may reckon the learned Kilian, have ascribed the origin of this fable to the idea which has been entertained by persons disordered in mind, that they were actually transformed into the likeness of other animals. But Wachter justly rejects this view, as those, who were called lycanthropi, were supposed to produce this change at pleasure, and in consequence of an act of their own wills; whereas the idea, proceeding from disease, has always been a source of suffering. He apprehends that the fable had its origin from those who, at stated times, and for the purpose of celebrating certain mysteries, clothed themselves in the skins of animals, and that it was propagated by those, whose interest it was that it should be believed, that this was a real metamorphosis by the power of the deity whom they worshipped.

Finn, in his Dissertation concerning the Speculum Regale, adopts an hypothesis nearly allied to this. He observes that, as the fable, of men being transformed into wolves, was common amongst the ancients in almost every country, it probably originated from the sports, in which persons appeared masked, which were celebrated from time immemorial about the season of Christmas.

Cotgr. explains Loupgarou as if equivalent to canibal; "a mankinde wolfe, such a one as being flesht on men and children, will rather starve than feed on any thing else."

It is surprising that Verstegan should give credit to all the fables connected with this term. "The Were Wolvis," he says, "are certain sorcerers, who, having their bodies annointed with an ointment, which they make by the instinct of the Devil; and putting on a certain enchanted girdle, do not only unto the view of others seem as wolves, but to their own thinking have both the shape and nature of wolves, so long as they wear the said girdle. And they do dispose themselves as very wolves, in wourrying, and killing, and most of humane creatures.

"Of such, sundry have been taken and executed in sundry parts of Germany, and the Netherlands. One Peter Stump, for being a Were-wolf, and having killed thirteen children, two women, and one man, was at Bedbar, not far from Cullen, in the year 1589, put unto a very terrible death, the flesh of divers parts of his body was pulled out with hot iron tongs, his arms, thighs, and legs broken on a wheel, and his body lastly burnt. He died with very great remorse, desiring that his body might not be spared from any torment, so his soul might be saved." Restitution, p. 263, 264.

Those who wish to have further information on this subject may consult Wachter, vo. Werwolf, and Keyser, Antiq. Septent., p. 453, 494—496. V. WOLFIN. The accounts given by Isl. writers of the Berserker greatly resemble the fables concerning warwolves. V. EYTTIN.

Among the other fanciful names given to pieces of ordnance, or to engines for throwing stones, we find the Warwolf mentioned. It was used by Edw. I. at the siege of Stirling. With it, as we learn from Camden, he "pierced with one stone, and cut as even as a thread two vauntmures [or outer walls], as he did before at the siege of Brechin, where Thomas Maile [Maule] the Scots man scoffed at the English artillery, with wiping the wall with his handkerchief, until both he and the wall were wiped away with a shot." Remains, Artillery, p. 266.

Matth. of Westminster calls this engine lupus belli, p. 449. Annals of Scotl., I. 279, N. If he has not mistaken the meaning of the term, as used by the E. in military affairs, it must be understood as having a different origin from that which has been explained. It may seem to confirm this, that Langtoft [ii. 826.] mentions an engine used at this siege, called a ludgare or lurdare. "This," Lord Hailes has observed, "is plainly a corruption of loup de guerre, lupus belli, warwolf." Annals, iii. 346.

Grose views the Lupus mentioned by Procopius, De Bello Goth., Lib. i. c. 27, as the same instrument with the war-wolf. Du Cange considers it as different, and as only used for defence, vo. Lupus.

To WARY, WARYE, WERRAY, v. a. 1. To curse, to execrate; Lancash. to wish evil to.

The time sal cum, quhen Turnus sal per fay
Hate and warye this spulye and this day.

Doug. Virgil, 335, 10.

They curs and wary fast this vengeabil were.

Ibid., 368, 40.

"The day, the day, the terrible day sall cum quhen the unhappy avaricious man sall warry the tyme that ever he had the brother, or sone, to quhamo he bure sic fleschelic and ungodlie favour as to steir him up to be ane gydare and rewlar of Christis floke, quhilk culde not gyde himself. The malheuris prince sall warry the tyme that ever he tuke on hym the charge, quhilk wes na wayis convenient for him." Compend. Tractive, Keith's Hist., App. p. 203.

In margin this is rendered lament. But it undoubtedly signifies to curse, to execrate.

Lord Hume and Ker of Farnyhirst were accused in Parliament, A. 1526, of the "treasonable art and part of the making of dampnable & waryit factionous aganis our soverane lord." Acts, V. II. 303.

Both v. and s. appear in O.E., although not acknowledged by modern lexicographers. "Warygn Imprecor. Exprecor. Maledico.—Warygn, or bannar. Imprecator. Anathematizator. Maledicus. Waryinge. Maledictio. Imprecatio. Anathematizatio." Prompt. Parv.

Warrie is used by Chaucer. Urry has erroneously expl. it, "to make war upon, to disturb or molest, to worry." Tyrwhitt renders it, "to abuse, to speak evil of." This may correspond with the sense of the first passage he has referred to.

This soudanasse, whom I thus blame and warrie,
Let privily hire conseil gon hir way.

Man of Lawes Tale, v. 1492.

But he refers to another, in which the term evidently conveys a more forcible idea—

Answerde of this echel worse of hem than other,
And Poliphete thei gounin thus to warren:
"And bongid be suche one, were he my brother.
And so he shal."—

Troil. and Cress., ii. v. 1619.

"Maledico, to curse, ban or wary.—Maledictio, waryinge, or spekyng of yll, or cursyng." Ort. Voab.

2. To bring a curse upon; wariit, wareit, really accursed.

"About this tyme deceissit the wariit creature Machonete, quilk was in the tyme of kyng Ferquhart." Bellend. Cron., B. ix., c. 21.

"Cursit and wariit is he that honouris nocht his father and mother." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, Fol. 7, b.

Thane wareit war thy weirdis and wanhap.

Maitland Poems, p. 163.

It occurs in O. E.

"Than he began to warye and to swere." Wiclif, Matt. xxvi.

"I warye, I banne or curse.—This is a farre northern terme." Palsgrane.

A.-S. wæri-an, waery-an, waerig-an, maledicere, execraria. Moes.-G. warg-ian, damnare, and wrok-jan, accusare, seem radically the same. Junius views A.-S. wærg-an, to accuse, as formed from wærig-an, to curse; GL. Goth. V. WARRACH.

WARYING, s. A curse, an execration.

"And to ilkane of thir cursingis & waryingis afore reherait, the peple answered Amen." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, Fol. 7, b.

To WARY, v. a. To defend, to protect.

"The Regent's faction were makand all the preparation they could to fortifie thair caus, and warying thair men." Hist. James the Sext, p. 131.

A.-S. wæri-an, wæri-an, waerig-an, wæry-an, defendere. V. WARYN.

To WARY, v. a. To alter, for vary.

"O. Fr. warison or garison, security, from warir or garir, to secure; A.-S. werian, to fortify, protect. Sir W. Scott uses warrison to signify 'a note of assault,' Lay of L. Minst., iv. 24, which is, I suspect, a mere blunder. Warysoun is the same word as our garrison." Prof. Skeat's Barbour, p. 746.]

WAS, imperf. v. subs. Used in defining the past time; as, "Yesterday was aught days," yesterday week; "Martinmas was a year," the term of Martinmas a year by-past, S.

—"Andro Balfoure sal broik & joiss the tak of the twa parte of the landis of Balledmont set—to the saide Andro—for ten merkis of male for the termis of five yeris fra Witsunday was a yere." Act. Audit., A. 1482, p. 108.

WA'S. Used for way, [or ways.] "Slips his wa's, slips away;" S., Gl.

Hame as the gloamin nearer draws,
Convener Tamson slips his wa's.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 100.

This is analogous to Gangis his wa's. V. GANG, v. I observe that this is a Scandinavian idiom. Nec praetermittendum loquendi genus, quo utimur, gaa sin waeg, quod est abire; immo han aer sin waeg, abest. Ihre, vo. Waeg. He adds, that the ancients used the same mode of expression, referring to Otfrid, Lib. V. c. x. 15. Ther dag ist sinas sindes, dies abiit. For sind denotes a way, a journey.

WASH, WESCHE, s. Stale urine; especially as used for the purpose of steeping clothes, in order to their being washed, S. being sometimes substituted for a lye; whence most probably the name.

There was a still more filthy and pernicious use of urine, in former times, in the fermentation of ale, in order to make it intoxicating. It is thus described by the Knight of the Mount—

And thay can mak withouttyn dowl
A kind of aill thay call harnis out;
Wait ye how thay mak that?
A coubroun quene, a laichly lurdane,
Off strang wesche sheill tak a jurdane
And settis in the pylefat.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 192, 193.

Leg. gylefat.

But however congenial this practice may seem to the manners of our forefathers, we cannot claim the whole honour to ourselves. It has evidently prevailed, in the North of E. at least, in a much later period. Hence, as Ray gives land, lant, leint, as signifying urine, he adds, "To leint ale, to put urine into it to make it strong;" Coll. p. 42, and Gl. Grose.

Yorks. "wash, or wash, urine;" Thoresby, Ray's Lett., p. 341.

"Thow fals heretick said that hollie watter is not so guid as wesch." G. Wischart's Trial, Pitscottie's Cron., p. 468.

"Put into your copper a little stale wash, which will make your wald spend and raise your colour." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 368.

This mode of washing, which certainly does not suggest the idea of great refinement, has probably been transmitted from the Goths. It is retained in Iceland to this day. Van Troil, speaking of the fulling of wadmal, or coarse cloth, says that for this purpose "they make use of urine, which they also employ in washing and bucking, instead of soap and pot-ashes." Letters on Iceland, p. 114.

"Learn your gooddam to kirm wash;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 49. This has evidently the same meaning, and has a common origin, with another Proverb; "Learn your Gooddam to make kail." This is "spoken to them who officiously offer to teach them who know more than themselves." Kelly, p. 233, 234.

Tent. wasch, lotura.

WASH-TUB, s. A large tub or cask into which urine is collected, S.O.; synon. Maister-can.

"A cask, into which urine was collected—known by the name of the wash-tub." Ag. Surv. Ayr, p. 114.

WASH-WARDEN, s. A coarse, harsh-tasted winter pear, also called Worry-carl, Roxb.

To WASH WORDS with one. To converse in any way, Perth.

"He debarred her frae ever speakin' to the poor fellow, either at kirk or market; an' as far as I ken, they've never washen words wi'ither sainsyne." Campbell, i. 333.

WASIE, adj. 1. Sagacious, quick of apprehension, Ang. A wasie lad, a clever fellow.

2. Apparently in the sense of gay, playful, or lively.

The ploughmen, now their labour o'er,
Enjoy'd the balmy gloamin' hour,
Right wasie wax'd, and fou of fun,
They whiselt down the setting sun.

Beattie's John o' Arnha', p. 18.

Alem. wass, Su.-G. whass, also denote quickness of apprehension; originally signifying any thing that is sharp. Dan. hvas, sharp-witted.

WASPET, part. adj. Become thin about the loins, "something like a wasp;" Gall. Enc.

WASSEL, s. A vassal.

"Oure souerane lord—vnderstanding that dyuerss of the frie tennentis and heretable fewaris of the temporall landis of the priorie of Sanctandros, being for the maist pairt meine wassellis,—Grantis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 588.

WASSALAGE, WASLAGE, s. Great achievement; also valour. V. VASSALAGE.

WASSIE, s. A horse-collar, Orkn.; originally the same with WEASSES. V. also WAESE.

WASSOCKS, s. pl. 1. "A kind of turban on which the milkmaids carry their pails, or stoups on their heads;" Gall. Enc.

2. "A kind of bunch put on a boring jumper, to hinder the water required in boring from leaping up into the quarriers' eyes;" ibid.

This must be merely Waese, S. B. with the diminutive termination of the West of S.

WAST, adj. West, S.; [to wast, to veer to the west.]

"The king of France—send him thrie schipes furnished with men, money, and amunitioun, and landit in the wast sea." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 298.

WASTLAND, WASTLIN, adj. Western, westerly, Clydes.

WASTLAND, s. The west country.

"Many of the lordis assemblit,—to witt, the earle of Angus, &c., with all the lordis of the Wastland." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 298.

WASTLANDMAN, s. An inhabitant of the west.

"Thair was no wastlandman away except the earle of Lennox, and the lord Erskine." Pitcottie, ibid.

WASTLE, adv. To the westward of, Roxb.

WASTE, s. The deserted excavations in a mine, S.

"The extent of excavation or waste, in these mines, [the alum mines at Hurler, Renfrews.], is about 1½ mile in length, and the greatest breadth about ¾ of a mile." Agr. Surv. Renfr., p. 26.

To WASTE WIND. To talk, reason, or explain, without effect; to spend one's lungs in vain, S.

WASTEGE, s. A waste, a place of desolation, Ayrs.

"Carswell's family has all gone to drift, and his house become a wastege." R. Gilhaize, ii. 303.

WASTELL, s. A thin cake of oat-meal baked with yeast, Moray.

"They make not all kindes of bread, as law requyres; that is, ane fage, symmell, wastell, pure cleane breade, mixed bread, and bread of trayt." Chalm. Air, c. 9, § 4.

Wastellum, Lat. copy. L. B. wastell-us, id., defined by Du Cange, "a more delicate kind of bread, or cake." Fr. gasteau.

It has generally been supposed, that this was the bread used with the wastell-bowl, in drinking which the Saxons, at their public entertainments, wished health to one another, in the phrase of Waes heil, i.e., Health be to you. V. Cowel. The origin ascribed to this custom in England is so well known that it is scarcely necessary to mention it. Rowena, the daughter of Hengist, by the counsel of her father, who wished, by the influence of her charms, to have Vortigern king of the Britons completely under his power, presented him with a bowl of wine, at an entertainment given by Hengist, saying, Waes heil, Hlaforg Kyning.

It seems doubtful, however, whether the term is not rather derived from Isl. Su.-G. veitsla, veitsla, a feast, from vet-a, a v. used to denote the invitation of many guests. Isl. blotveitzlar, in pl. commensationes sacrae.

Kersey mentions Wastel-bread, as occurring in old statutes, for "the finest sort of white bread or cakes."

Undoubtedly from a common origin with O. Fr. gastiel, a cake, in L. B. guastell-us, gastell-us, placenta panis delicatior, also Wastell-us. In Picardy, Du Cange says, the maker of this bread is called Wastelier. He thinks the word may be from A.-S. witel, expl. tegulum, tegmen, (a word I have met with no where else), because this bread is roasted in the ashes. But it is evidently from Armor. gwastell, gâteau, sorte de pain plat et uni. This Pelletier derives from gwast, as the root of gwastadell, plain. Davies gives C. B. gwastad also in the sense of planus, aequus.

WASTELL, Willie Wastell, the name given to a game common among children, S. A piece of ground is chosen for a den, circum-scribed by certain bounds. He, who occupies this ground, bears the name of Willie Wastell; the rest, who are engaged in the play, approach the limits of his domain; and his object is to get hold of one of them, who sets his foot within it, and to drag him in. If successful, the person who is seized occupies his place, till he can relieve himself by laying hold of another. He who holds the castle, or den, dare not go beyond the limits, else the capture goes for nothing.

The assailants repeat the following rhyme:—

Willie, Willie Wastell,
I am on your Castle.
A' the dogs in the town
Winna pu' Willie down.

It is thus given in Scotch Presb. Eloquence, 139.

Like Willie, Willie Wastell,
I am in my castel.
A' the dogs in the town
Dare not ding me down.

This form evidently shews, that the rhyme was formerly repeated by the person supposed to hold the castle.

This, I am informed, is the same game with that in England called Tom Ticker.

To WASTER, v. a. To squander, to waste, S.

"My servant lasses, having no eye of a mistress over them, wastered every thing at such a rate, and made such a galravitching in the house, that, long before the end of the year, the year's stipend was all spent, and I did not know what to do." Ann. of the Par., p. 58.

"Since that time he's been neither to bind nor to hand,—wasting his income in the most thoughtless way." The Entail, ii. 184.

WASTER, s. A detached bit of the wick which causes a candle to run down, S.

Of on the wick there hangs a waster,
Which makes the candle burn the faster.

G. Wilson's Coll. of Songs, p. 72.

WASTERFUL, WASTERFOW, adj. 1. Destructive, devastating.

"The chiefe of the clanne in the boundis, quhair broken men and limmers dwellis, and committis any wasterful reife,—sall be charged to find caution," &c. Acts Ja. VI., July 1587.

2. Prodigal, lavish, unnecessarily expensive, S.

"There's no need, for all the greatness of God's gifts, that we should be wasterful." Blackw. Mag. June 1820, p. 262.

WASTRIE, adj. Prodigal; a wastrie person, one who is extravagant. V. Wastrife, adj. of which it is a corruption.

WASTRIE, WASTERY, s. 1. Prodiggality, wastefulness, S.

"He abruptly exclaimed,—'Hey, what's a' this wastery for?' and, ere an answer could be returned, his jaw dropped, his eyes fixed, and the Laird of Ckifers ceased to breathe." Marriage, ii. 24.

"You no [know] my way, and that I like a bea house, but no wastrie." Ayrs. Legatces, p. 182.

2. What is wasted, Clydes.

WASTRIFE, adj. Prodigious, wasteful, S.

"Do not slit the quill up sae high, its a wastrife course in your trade, Andrew; they that do not mind corn-pickles, never come to forpits." Nigel, i. 119.

WASTRIFE, s. The same with Wastery.

"She confessed afterwards, that besides the wastrife, it was lang ere she could walk sae comfortably with the shoes as without them." Heart M. Loth., iii. 61.

WASTER, s. A kind of trident used for striking salmon, Dumfr., Eskdale; the same with Wester.

"This chawe, in which the fish is pursued and struck with barbed spears, or a sort of long-shafted trident, called a waster, is much practised at the mouth of the Esk; and in the other salmon rivers of Scotland." Guy Mannering, ii. 61.

Isl. vas, cum impetu feror.

A very intelligent and accurate correspondent explains Leister as properly denoting a spear with three prongs, and Waster one with five; assigning both terms to Selkirks.

WAT, s. Moisture, S.B. V. WEIT.

Although my brogues may draw some wat,
That winna stop my thrivin'.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 125.

WAT, WATE, adj. 1. Wet, moist, S.

—Though I got my moggan wat,
I didna let them gae.

Ibid.

2. Addicted to intemperance in drinking; as,
"They're gey wat lads thae, they'll no part sune," S.

WAT, WATTIE. Abbrev. of the name
Walter, S.

Wat, Act. Dom. Conc., p. 10. col. 1. "Wattie New-wall," Acts Ja. VI., Ed. 1814, p. 390.

To WAT, v. n. To know. V. WAIT.

In heuy wate frog stade and chagrit sore,
They gan with iro wappynnis me invade.

Doug. Virgil, 176, 1.

A.-S. waet, Dan. waad, humidus; A.-S. waet-an, humectare. V. WEIT, s.

WATAKING, WAYTAKING, s. The act of carrying off, or taking away. Generally by theft or violence. Clydes. wa-takkin.

"Comperit David Wemyss summond at the instans of Baldrade Blakater anent the wataking of thre oxin furth of the landis of Myrecarny, tane for his annuall tharof." Act. Audit. A. 1479, p. 93. V. AWAY-TAKAR.

"The waytaking, stealing," &c. Ab. Reg. Cent. 16.

WATCH-MAIL, WATCH-MEAL, s. A duty imposed for maintaining a garrison.

"Others more probably conjecture, from its name given it by Skeen, roce Pension—of the watch-meal of Kilpatrick, that it was for the sustenance of the garrison of Dumbarton.—When this watch-mail was constituted, there was no such measure known as that of Linlithgow." Fount. Dec. Suppl. iv. 779, 780.

The sense is determined by these words in the decision; "That this castle-ward duty being a part of the king's patrimony, it can pay no cess."

From A.-S. waecce, vigilia, excubiae, and mal, vectigal, stipendium. V. MAIL, tribute.

• WATCHMAN, s. The uppermost grain in a stalk of corn; also called the Puom, Aberd.

It must have received the first name from its fancied resemblance to a centinel, placed on an elevated spot.
Shall we suppose that it has obtained the other designation in consequence of its lofty situation, in allusion to one who carries the palm of victory? We learn from Cotgr., indeed, that one species of grain is denominated orge paumée. But this is confined to that species of barley called big, because of its being as it were branched out like a palm-tree.

[To WATE, v. a. and n. To watch, to wait gaiter, id.]WATE, s. 1. A watchman, a sentinel.

Misenus the wate on the hie garrit seis,
And with his trumpet thame ane takin maid.

Doug. Virgil, 75, 42.

The minstrels who go about playing in the night season, both in S. and E., especially before the new year, are called waitis; not, as Skinner supposes, because they wait on magistrates, &c., but because they seem to have been anciently viewed as a sort of watchmen. The word was written wayghtes, in the reign of Edw. III.; "players," says Ritson, "on the hautboy or other pipes during the night, as they are in many places at this day." E. Metr. Rom. I Dissert.
on Romance, & Minstrelsy, ccxcvii. N.

Palgrave mentions the term as denoting the instrument itself. "Wayte, an instrument, [Fr.] hauboy;"
B. iii. F. 73, a.

Teut. wachte, excubiae, castrensis vigilia; et vigiles, excubitores, (Kilian) from wacht-en, vigilare; Moes.-G.
wahts, vigilia; L. B. guet-a, guett-a, gait-a, vigil; O.
Fr. gaite, aguayt.

2. A place of ambush. At the wate, in wait.

—Aruns by his mortale fate
Into myscheus dede predestinate,
Circulis at the wate, and espyis about
The swift madin Camilla.

Doug. Virgil, 392, 22.

WATER, WATTER, s. 1. A river, or pretty large body of running water, S.

"Baith seys and watteris geuis be vnjust merchis als mekle to sum landis, as thay reif fra vther."
Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 1.

"If the water is of quantity sufficient to drive a small water-wheel for light machinery, it is called a burn. Large streams are called waters. Tweed is our only water designed river." Agr. Surv. Peeb., p. 16.

The E. term is very seldom applied even to Tweed by the lower classes.

Bellenden generally uses it to denote a river, sometimes as distinguished from a rivulet.

"Sindry small burnis descendis fra the hillis of Cheuot, and vthir montanis lyand thair about deuid-ing Cumbir fra Annardail, and fallis in the watter of Sulway;" Ibid. c. 5. Solveum furium, Boeth. It is also used when amnis occurs in the original; Ibid.

It does not appear that A.-S. water denoted a body of running water. Nor is Ir. uige, eac, mentioned in Dictionaries as having a similar sense. But it is reasonable to suppose that this was the case in ancient times; as we find it in the composition of the names of many places situated on rivers. Besides, esk and water, in some parts of S., are promiscuously used to denote a river. Thus, in Angus, North Esk is most commonly called The Nord Water, and South Esk The Soud Water.

Germ. wasser is used in the sense of river, torrent, &c. V. Wachter.

2. As a generic word, it denotes any body of running water, whether great or small, S.

"Rivers in Scotland are very frequently called waters." Pennant's Tour in S., 1769, p. 93, N.

Bellenden's orthography of the word marks the pron. universally retained in S., except in the Southern counties, where it is sounded q. wäüler.

3. The ground lying on the banks of a river, S.

"The water, in the mountainous districts of Scotland, is often used to express the banks of the river, which are the only inhabitable parts of the county." Minstrelsy Border, I. 109, N.

4. The inhabitants of a tract of country watered by a certain river or brook, S.

Gar warn the water, braid and wide,
Gar warn it sune and bastilie!
They that winna ride for Teller's kye,
Let them never look in the face o' me!

Minstrelsy Border, I. 109.

"To raise the water,—was to alarm those who lived along its side." N. Ibid., p. 109.

- [5. A watter, a wave, Shetl.]

WATER-BERRY, s. Water-gruel, Dumfr. V. BREAD-BERRY.

WATER-BRASH, s. A disease consisting in a sense of heat in the epigastrium, with copious eructations of aqueous humour, S. the Pyrosis of Cullen.

Mactaggart defines this term, as if he knew of one cause only that could produce the ailment.

"Waterbrash, an eruption in the stomach, brought on by drinking grog;" Gall. Enc.

WATER-BROO, s. "Water-gruel;" Gl. Antiq.

WATER-BROSE, s. "Brose made of meal and water simply, without the addition of milk, butter," &c., Gl. Shirr., S.

WATER-CORN, s. The grain paid by farmers, for upholding the dams and races of mills, to which they are astricted according to their leases, S.

"1 boll of water-corn, being small corn, yearly, for each of the said three ploughs, for manufacturing and upholding the dams and water-gangs." Abstract of Proof, Mill of Inverunsay, A. 1814, p. 3.

WATER-COW, s. The name given to the spirit of the waters, especially as inhabiting a lake, South of S.

VOL. IV.

The torrents rush, the mountains quake,
The sheeted ghosts run to and fro;
And deep, and long, from out the lake,
The Water-Cow was heard to low.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 81.

"The Water-Cow, in former times, haunted Saint Mary's Loch, of which some extremely fabulous stories are yet related; and, though rather less terrible and malignant than the Water-Horse, yet, like him, she possessed the rare slight of turning herself into whatever shape she pleased, and was likewise desirous of getting as many dragged into the lake as possible." Ibid. N., p. 94.

[Wattir-coos, Water-beetles, Banffs.]

WATER-CRAW, s. The water ouzel, S. Sturnus cinclus, Linn. Statist. Acc. xvii. 249.

"Sturnus cinclus, water ouzel, or Water Crawl." Agr. Surv. Forfars., App., p. 43.

• WATERFALL, s. Used in the same sense with Watershed, Border.

WATERFAST, adj. Capable of resisting the force of rain; synon. watertight.

—"Has consentit to aye taxt,—for helping to repair the said kirk and halding of it waterfast." Council of Glasgow, 1574, Life of Melville, i. 439.

To WATER-FUR, v. a. To form furrows in ploughed ground for draining off the water, S.

"Plow up the land and water-fur it, and so let it ly exposed through the winter to frosts, snows and rains, to mellow it, and make it fall." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 51.

Teut. waetere-vore, sulcus aquarius, lira.

WATERGANG, s. 1. The race of a mill.

"The parliament hes statute and ordanit, that the breif vnder writtin, haue cours quhill the next parliament, allanerly of watergangs, that is to say, of myle leidis and nane vther thingis." Acts Ja. I. 1433, c. 149. Edit. 1566.

"The auld watergange of the said burgh;" Abert. Reg., A. 1539.

L. B. watergang-ae, watergang-ia; aquae ductus & fossae, per quas eliciuntur aquae in palustris regionibus, Flandris waterganck, a water, aqua, & ganck ductus, iter. Spelmanus a Saxonibus vocabulis, quae idem sonant, deducit. Du Cange. It occurs so early as the reign of Henry III. of England.

2. "A servitude whereby we have power and privilege to draw water alongst our neighbour's ground for watering our own; Stair, p. 287." Spottiswoode's MS. Dict. v. Aqueduct.

WATERGATE, s. [The act of voiding urine.]

"I'll watch your watergate;" S. Prov.; "That's I'll watch for an advantage over you." Kelly, p. 38.

This seems to refer to a man's turning his face to the wall for a certain purpose, when an enemy might easily take his advantage. The only word that resembles it is A.-S. waeter-gytle, the name given to the sign Aquarius. Lye expl. it, Qui aquam effundit: O. E. Watyr wey is rendered by Meatus. Pr. Par.

[WATER-GAW, s. Synon. with Teeth, q. v.]

X 4

WATER-HORSE, s. The goblin called Water Kelpie, North of S.

"In some places of the Highlands of Scotland the inhabitants are still in continual terror of an imaginary being called the Water-Horse.—On our way to Harries, —although our nearest road lay along the shores of this loch, Malcolm absolutely refused to accompany me by that way for fear of the Water-Horse, of which he told many wonderful stories swearing to the truth of them; and, in particular how his father had lately been very nigh taken by him and that he had succeeded in decoying one man to his destruction, a short time previous to that. This spectre is likewise an inhabitant of Loch Aven at the foot of Cairn Gorm, and of Loch Laggan in the wilds betwixt Lochaber and Badenoch." Hogg's Mountain Bard, N., p. 94.

The same dangerous quadruped also inhabits Loch Tay. According to tradition, he has been known to come ashore, and entice a whole family of fine boys to mount him, that he might have the pleasure of plunging with them all into the deep. V. WATER-COW.

WATER-KAIL, s. Broth made without any meat in it, S.

WATER-KELPIE, s. The spirit of the waters. V. KELPIE.

WATERKYLE, s. Meadow ground possessed by the tenants of an estate by rotation; synon. Alterkyle.

Kyle seems to be the common corr. of Cavel, as signifying chance, or share, q. one's turn or share of the irrigated land, perhaps originally determined by lot, or by casting cavils. Shall we view Alterkyle as denoting a change of the lot?

WATER-MOUSE, WATER-ROTTEN. The water rat, S.

"Arvicola aquatica. Water Campagnol. E. Water Rat. S. Water Mouse, or Rotten." Edin. Mag., July 1819, p. 505.

WATER-MOUTH, s. The mouth of a river, vulgarly Watter-mow, S. B. Thus the mouth of South Esk is denominated in Angus. [Water-neb, Renfr.]

"Prout eadem piscariae et lie cruiffies respective bondantur et jacent a lie water-mouth dictae aquae de Done."—Chart. K. Ja. VI., 1617. State, Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 298. Lie seems an errat. for le.

"In the mean time, I'd be glad to see one of the original charters granted by the town to the heritors of Nether Don, to know whether they have got a right to the town's fishing 'twixt the water mouths, or if the town gave it to the heritors of Dee." Lett. 1727, State, Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 320.

"—Through a great speat of the water of Dee, thir haill four ships brake loose—and were driven out at the water-mouth by violence of the speat." Spalding's Troubles, I. 60.

WATER-PURPIE, s. Common brooklime, an herb, S. Veronica beccabunga, Linn. It seems to receive the latter part of its name from its being somewhat of a purple colour. It is also called Horse well-grass, S.

This seems to be meant in the following passage. "Leaves, of great Fow, Myrrh, Nightshade, Plantain, Purpie, Roses, Violet." St. Germain's Royal Physician, p. 52.

"Cresses or water-purple, and a bit oat-cake, can serve the master for breakfast as weel as Calch." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 72.

WATER-SLAIN MOSS. "As peat earth is readily diffused in water and carried off; wherever it comes again to be deposited, we have water-born peat, or, as it is sometimes called by our country people, water-slain moss." Dr. Walker, Prize Essays, Highl. Soc. S., ii. 13.

[WATER-SPOWNGIS, s. pl. Sponges, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 377, Dickson.]

WATER-STOUP, s. 1. A bucket for carrying water, S.

For hae I ridden,
An' farer hae I gane;
But siller spurs on water stoups
Saw I never nane.

Herd's Coll., ii. 173.

V. STOUP.

2. The name given, in the vicinity of Leith, to the common periwinkle, (Turbo terebra, Linn.) from its resemblance to a pitcher.

WATER-TATH, s. Luxuriant grass proceeding from excess of moisture, S. V. TATH.

WATER-TICHT, WATTIRTEICH, adj. Secure against the entrance of the water, S. Water-tight.

"Our souerane lord—gaif &c. to the said vmquhile James lord Downe—certane fewfermes—for the custodie of the said castell of Downe, and for vphalding of the samyn wattirteich." Acts Ja. VI., 1607, Ed. 1814, p. 381.

WATER-WADER, s. A home-made candle of the worst kind, Roxb.; synon. Sweig.

When a family make their own candles, after the regular operation is ended, there is generally some tallow left in the pot, swimming in a scum on the top of the water. Into this, for licking it up, a few wicks are immersed; which having much to do for accomplishing the purpose in view, because of their frequent passage through the water, are significantly called water-waders. They of course prove miserable lights.

WATER-WAGTAIL, s. The name given to the wagtail, or Motacilla, S.

"Motacilla, a waterwagtail." Wedderburn's Vocab., p. 14.

WATER-WRAITH, s. The spirit of the waters, S. B. V. WRAITH.

Hobgoblins, fudd'rin thro' the air,
Clip Kelpies i' their moss-pot chair,
An' water-wraiths at intack drear,
Wi' eerie yamour.

Tarras's Poems, p. 40.

[WATERY-NEBBIT, adj. Of a pale and sickly countenance, Clydes.]

TO BURN THE WATER. V. under BURN, v. a.

TO GAE DOWN THE WATER. To go to wreck, to be totally lost; like corn carried down a river by a flood, S.

"If the life of the dear bairn,—and Jeanie's, and my ain, and a' mankind's depended on my asking sic a slave o' Satan to speak a word for me or them, they should a' gae down the water for Davie Deans." Heart M. Loth., i. 322.

TO RIDE THE WATER ON. He's no to ride the water on, he cannot be depended on, S.

The allusion seems to be to a horse, on which one may venture to ride on dry ground, but not to ford a river, where one, in consequence of a false step, runs the risk of being drowned.

WATER, s. The name given to a disease of sheep, Shetl. V. SHELL-SICKNESS.

WATH, s. A ford.

"The small river, Kirtle, touches the N. E. part of the parish, & the Solway Firth or Booness wath, as it is called, as its Southern boundary." P. Dornock, Dumfries Statist. Acc., ii. 15.

"The same Scottinwath is also called Myreford by old English writers." Pinkerton's Enquiry, II. 207. A.-S. wad, Belg. waede, Lat. vad-um.

WATLING STRETE, VATLANT STREIT. A term used to denote the milky way.

Of every sterne the twynkling notis he,
That in the still hevin moue course we se,
Arthurys hufe, and Hyades betaiknyng rane,
Syne Walling strete, the Horne, and the Charle wane.
Doug. Virgil, 85, 43.

Henryson uses it in the same sense, in his account of the journey of Orpheus, first to heaven, and then to hell, in quest of his wife Euridice.

Quhen endit was the sangis lamentable,
He take his harp, and on his brest can hyng,
Syne passit to the hevin, as sais the fable,
To seke his wife; but that auailit no thing.
By Wadling strete he went but taryng;
Syne come down throw the spere of Saturn ald,
Quhilk fader is of all thir sternis cald.

Traicte of Orpheus, Edin., 1508.

"It aperis oft in the quhyt circle callit Circulus Lacteus, the quhilk the marynalis callis Vallant Streit." Compl. S., p. 90.

In the same manner it was called by the Romans Via Lactea, from its fancied resemblance to a broad street or causeway, being as it were paved with stars. The street itself, it is said, was thus named "from one Vitellianus, supposed to have superintended the direction of it; the Britons calling Vitellianne, in their language, Guetalin." Statist. Acc., xvi. 325, N.

WATRECK, interj. Expressive of astonishment; sometimes perhaps of commiseration, Loth. V. RAIK, s. 2.

Probably also used as a sort of execration; as formed from traik instead of raik or rack, care. Thus, it would be equivalent to What plague, or to the sense in which sorrow is frequently used in S.

[WATSNA. Wots not. V. WAT, v.]

WATTEL, s. V. WATTLE.

WATTIE, s. A blow, Ang. Su.-G. hwat, celer?

WATTIE, s. An eel, anguilla, Roxh.

If not a cant term, allied perhaps to Su.-G. wat, any noxious or monstrous animal, because of the vulgar antipathy to this species.

[WATTIRTEICH, adj. V. under WATER.]

WATTLE, s. A billet of wood, Berwicks.

Apparently an oblique use of the E. word as signifying a hurdle; or perhaps from Dan. reel, firewood.

WATTLE, s. A tax paid in Shetland.

"Another payment exacted by the grantees of the Crown, is called the Wattle. In the beginning of the 16th century, when Popery blinded mankind, the priests begged, from these islands, money under the name of Wattle, in consideration of the extraordinary benefit which the people were to receive from the liberal distribution of holy water among them." P. Northmave, Shetl. Statist. Acc., xii. 353.

This was "a duty of old paid by the inhabitants of Shetland for the maintenance of the Sheriff yearly, when he came to do justice." It included "18 night meat and drink to him for men and servants; first converted by Olave Sinclair Fold in Stock-fish, taking for each night 7 meals of fish, each meal allowed to 9s. Denae (Danish). So the night's Wattel is 5 Gullyions and 3s., reckoning to an Angel in Gold and an English 6 pence each Gullyion; estimat to 24s. Scots, the 5th part of the Angel.—The duty of the Fair-isle extends to 100 Gullyions in hard fish, each Gullyion weighing 2 hispunds, estimat to 2 Trone stones as aforesaid, extending to 20 Angel Nobles, and in Scots money to 120l." From a Rental of Shetland under Robert Earl of Orkney.

WATTY. Ye look like Watty to the worm, a proverbial phrase, expressive of the appearance of disgust, or great reluctance, S.B.

His father says, Lay by, man, thir humdrums,
And look na mair like Watty to the worm;
Gin ye hae promis'd, what but now perform!
Ross's Helenore, p. 102. See Ed.

"To look like Watty to the worm, to look confusedly;" Gl.

TO WAUBLE, v. n. "To swing, to reel," Gl. Burns, S. O. [V. WABBLE.]

That day ye was a jinker noble,
For heels an' win'!
An' ran them till they a' did wauble,
Far, far behin'.

Burns, iii. 142.

Perhaps rather to hobble.

The snipe, rous'd by the early traveller,
Starts frae the slimy drain; and to the spring,
Wide smoking with the sun, now waubles fast.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 154.

Expl. "to move up and down," Gl. It seems to denote a vacillating motion. Perhaps allied to Test wepel-en, weyfel-en, vacillare, fluctuare.

WAUCH, s. Wall.

Ay as the gailwyf brocht in,
Ane scorit upon the wauch.

Febbs to the Play, st. 11.

A.-S. wah, paries; A. Bor. wogh, id.

This marks the antiquity of the custom, retained to this day, in country tipping-houses, of marking the bill with chalk on the wall, or behind the door.

[TO WAUCH, v. a. To watch, Barbour, i. 520; wauch him, be on one's guard.]

WAUCHIE, (gutt.), adj. 1. Swampy, [boggy, damp.] Clydes.

Germ. waeghe, gurgles; fluctus; unda; A.-S. waeg, wey, aqua, vis aquarum; Su.-G. waeg, fluctus.

2. Sallow and greasy, Lanarks. Also expl. wan-coloured, disgustingly pale; as, "a wauchie skin."

A steefu' sen' will rise at your feet,
Wi' wauchie cheek and wauland ee.

"This word is applied only to the countenance, and denotes that the person has a sallow and greasy face." Edin. Mag., July 1819, p. 527, 529.

"When the bad Fairies carried off a child, they always left one of their own number in its place, generally described in the language of the country as an ill-fair'd wauchie wandocht of a creature." Edin. Mag., Oct. 1818.

The term may have the same origin with Wak, moist. C. B. gwelw signifies pale, gwelwan, pale white, gwelwo-goch, pale red.

To WAUCHLE, v. n. 1. To move from side to side in walking, like a young child, Clydes.

2. "To walk after a fatigued manner; wauchling, walking, yet almost exhausted;" Gall. Enc.

Merely a variety of Waigle or Wachle, q. v.

To WAUCHLE, v. a. 1. To fatigue very much; as, "The road wauchlit him gay and sair;" Upp. Lanarks.

2. To puzzle; as, "That question wauchlit him;" ibid.

As Belg. vaggel-en, signifies to stagger; here the term bears the same sense actively, to cause to stagger.

To WAUCHT, WACHT OUT, WAUGHT, WAUCH, v. a. To quaff, to swig, to take large draughts, S.

And for thir thithings, in flaskoun and in skull
They skynk the wyne, and wauchtis cowpys full
Doug. Virgil, 210, 6.

Do waucht and drink, bring cowpys full in handis,—
And with gude will do skynk and birll the wynis.
Ibid., 250, 47.

So Sathan led men steidfast be the mane;
That nather Lord nor Knight he lute alane,
Except his coup war wachlit out alway,
Seasonit with blasphemie, sacrilige, disdayne,
All godlie lyf and cheritie to slay.

Thus Nicol Burne, an apostate, writes of the Reformation; Chron. S. P., iii. 454.

And, as thai talkit at the tabil of mony taill funde,
They waucht at the wicht wyne, and warit out wourdis;
And syne thai spak more spedelie, and sparit no materis.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 46.

Here wauch is used, and rather as a n. v.

Sibb. supposes, without any sufficient ground, that it is "probably from Queych, a drinking cup." Rudd., with more versimilitude, refers to A.-S. weaht, irriguus. For the idea seems to be that of moistening the throat well. Isl. rotwa, madefieri, Teut. weyck-en, macerare. V. WAK.

E. swig is probably from a common origin, s being prefixed. Johns. derives it from Isl. swina. He seems to have mistaken the word used by Junius, which is Isl. sing-a, sorbere, rather augere. This may indeed be the root of the E. word. For a child is said to wacht, S., when sucking so forcibly as to swallow a considerable quantity at once.

But whether there be any affinity between swig and waucht, E. quaff seems to have been originally the same word. For Palsgrave gives it in a form nearly allied to that which it still bears in S. "I quaught, I drinke alle out.—Wyll you quaught with me?" B. iii. F. 331, a. The modern E. word, having lost the guttural sound like Laugh, is written according to the pronunciation, the t being thrown away.

WAUCHT, WAUGHT, s. A large draught of any liquid, S.

Neist, "O!" cries Halbert, "cou'd your skill
But help us to a waught of ale,
I'd be oblig'd t' ye a' my life."

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 527.

To WAUE, v. a. "To toss, to agitate."

Quhat aventure has brocht the leuand hiddier!
Quhiddier wauit wilsum by storme of the sey,
Or at command of goddis, cum thou, quod he?
Doug. Virgil, 182, 41.

A.-S. waf-ian, fluctuare.

To WAUFF, v. n. To wave. V. WAFF, v.

To WAUFLE, v. n. To waver in the air, as snow, chaff, or any light substance, Upp. Clydes.

WAUFLE, s. A slight fall of snow. ibid.

Teut. weyfel-en, vagare, fluctuare; A.-S. wafol, fluctuans; Isl. vafi, dubium, dubitatio.

WAUGH, WAUCH, adj. 1. Unpleasant to the taste, nauseous, S.

"It tasted sweet i' your mou', bat fan anes it was down your wizen, it had an ugly knaggim, an' a wauch wa-gang." Journal from London, p. 3.

2. A heavy, damp, unwholesome smell; as that of a newly-opened grave, S.

"For my share," said one, "I think she'll no put owre this night. The wauch earth swell is about her already." Saxon and Gael, iii. 189.

Linens that have not been properly dried, when suffered to lie in this state for a time, are said to contract a wauch smell, Ang.

Yorks. "waugh, insipid, unsalted, and so unsavoury;"
Thoresby, Ray's Lett., p. 340.

[3. Affected with nausea, Banffs.]

4. In a moral sense, bad, worthless; as, waugh fouk, loose or disorderly people. [The common form is waff fouk.]

Teut. walghe, nausea, walgh-en, nauseare, walghigh, nauseosus. Isl. mig velger, nauseo, velge, nausea. But this is only a secondary sense. The primary meaning of the Isl. v. relg-ia, is, tepefacere; G. Andr., p. 257. The transition is very natural; as liquids in a tepid state excite nausea.

WAUNGEOUR, WAUYNGOUR, s. A vagabond, a fugitive.

Rutulianis, hynt your wappinnis, and follow me,
Quham now yone waungour, yone ilk strangerere,
Affrayis so wyth hys vnworthy were.

Doug. Virgil, 417, 32.

Lye, (Addit. Jun. Etym.) properly refers to wafe, bestia erratica. V. WAFF.

To WAUK, WAULK, WALK, v. a. 1. To full cloth, to thicken it, S.; pron. wauk.

"The sheep supply them with wool for their upper garments; this, when spun and woven, is full'd, or walk'd, as they term it, in a particular manner by the women." Garnet's Tour, I. 157.

The idea of Dr. Garnet, as to the origin of the term, is similar to that of Skinner, (vo. Walker, fullo). He derives it from the circumstance of the women sitting round the board and cloth, and "working it with their feet, one against another." "It is this part of the operation," he says, "which is properly called walking, and it is on this account that fulling mills, in which water and machinery are made to do the work of these women, are in Scotland and the north of England frequently called walk-mills." Ibid., p. 158.

The custom of fulling cloth with the feet would seem anciently to have been also practised in England.

Cloth that cometh from the weuing is not comely to wear,
Till it be fulled vnder fote, or in fulling stocks,
Washen well wyth water, and with tasels cratched,
Touked and teynted, and vnder taylours hande.

Peres Pl., p. 84, b.

2. To make close and matted, S.

3. To render callous; as when the palm of the hand is hardened by severe work, S.

Su.-G. walk-a, pressare, volutare, ut solent, qui fulloniam exercent; Belg. walk-en, Ital. qualc-are, id. Ray and Skinner view Lat. calc-are, to tread, as the origin. This has great appearance of probability, especially as A.-S. swurner, a fuller, is from swern-ettan, calcitrare, conculcando agitare. But there is one difficulty. The synon. A.-S. term walcere, is undoubtedly from walc-an, volvere, revolvare, to roll; whence walc, a revolution. This A.-S. v., however, is viewed by Somner and Johns. as the origin of E. walk, to go.

To WAUK, v. n. To shrink in consequence of being wetted, S.

WAUKER, WAUK-MILLER, s. A fuller, S. walker, Lancash.

—"William Cowtis deacon of the walkeris,—The deaconis of craftis—ar fourtene in nowmere,—wobstaris, walkeris, bonnet-makeris," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1584, Ed. 1814, p. 361-2.

Belg. walcker, Su.-G. walkare, Germ. waukmuller. V. the v.

[WAUKIN, WAUKING, s. Fulling, the act of fulling, S.]

[WAUKIT, adj. Full'd; become thick and callous; as, waukit skin, a waukit loof, S.]

WAUKITNESS, s. Callousness, Clydes.

WAUK-MILL, WAULK-MILL, s. A fulling-mill, S. A walk-mill, A. Bor.

"The parish—has within itself, or is in the close neighbourhood, of mills of many kinds, not only meal-mills, but flour-mills, wauk-mills, lint-mills, barley-mills, and malt-mills." P. Calder, Inver. Statist. Acc., iv. 253.

Germ. walk-muhle, id.

To WAUK, WAUCH, v. a. To watch, S. V. WALK.

WAUKER, s. A watchman, one who watches clothes during night, S. A.-S. waecer, Belg. waaker. V. WALK, v.

WAUKING, s. The act of watching, S. Wauking of the Claise, the act of tending, during night, a washing of clothes, spread out on the grass to be bleached or dried.

Wauking o' the Fauld, the act of watching the sheep-fold, about the end of summer, when the lambs were weaned, and the ewes milked; a custom now gone into disuse.

My Peggy is a young thing,
And I'm not very aukl;
Yet well I like to meet her at
The wauking o' the fauld.

Ramsay's Gent. Shp., Act I.

Wauking o' the Kirk-yard, the act of watching the dead after interment, for preventing the inroads of resurrection-men, S.

To WAUKEN, v. a. To chastise, Aberd. I know not if this be formed from S. Whauk, id.

To WAUKEN, v. n. 1. To awake from sleep, S.; like E. waken.

2. To become animated, with the prep. on added; as, "He wauken't on his sermon," S.

3. To become violent in language, as in scolding. "O! how she wauken't on him! and gied him an awfu' flytel!" S.

WAUKENIN, s. 1. The act of awaking, S.

2. An outrageous reprehension; as, "My certie, that is a waukenin," S.

3. Could waukenin, a phrase applied to a very bad farm, S.

WAUKFERE, adj. Able to walk about; as, "He's gayly fail't now, but he's still wauk-fere;" Renfr.

From the v. to walk, and S. ferre, entire; Isl. faer, habilis, sufficiens. In that language herfaer is compounded precisely in the same manner; fit for warfare, militiae habilis.

To WAUL, WAWL, v. n. 1. To look wildly, to roll the eyes. S.O. and A.

And in the breist of the goidles graif thay
Gorgonis hede, that monstour of grete wounder,
Wyth ene wauland, and nek bane hak in soulder.
Doug. Virgil, 257, 51.

Bot fra the auld Halesus lay to de,
And yeiklis vp the breith with wauland E,
The fatall sisteris set to hand anone,
And gan his young Halesus so dyspone,
That by Euandrus wappinnis, the ilk stound,
He destynate was to caucht the dethis wound.

Ibid., 331 16.

. Canentia, lumina, Virg. x. 418.

The sicht forhow't her waulen een,
She lay in the deadthraws.

Ballad, Edin. Mag., Oct. 1818, p. 325.

"Presently recovering himself, he wauls on me with his grey een, like a wild cat, and opened his mouth which resembled the mouth of an oven." The Pirate, iii. 56. V. WAUL, v.

2. To gaze with a drowsy eye, Tweedd.

Rudd. derives it from A.-S. weall-an, furere. But it is rather from wealu-ian, to roll, Lat. volv-ere.

WAUL, adj. Agile, nimble, Dumfr.

This seems merely a provincial variety of Yaul, or Yald, id., q. v.

WAULIE, adj. Used in the same sense, Tweedd.

WAUL, interj. Expressive of sorrow, Buchan.

—Something gasp't and grain'd hum-hae!

Will Lor'mer's dead!

Nae ferlie, though it pierc't my saul;

I pegh't, I hegh't, syne cried Waul! Waul!

Tarras's Poems, p. 8.

Abbreviated perhaps from A.-S. wala, ehen! ah!

WAULIESUM, adj. Causing sorrow, Ang.

A waesum, wild, waudiesum sight,

Enough to quench the fires o' night,

And blanch the lightning's vivid light.

John o' Arnha's, p. 36.

WAULD, s. The plain open country, without wood, Lanarks.; [E. Wold.]

Ower wud an' wauld, the rowkis cauld

Spread like a siller sea.

Marmaiden of Clyde, Edin. Mag., May, 1820.

WAULD, s. Government, power. In wald, under sway.

I vow to God, that has the world in wauld,

Thi dede sall be to Sotheroun full der sauld.

Wallace, x. 579, MS.

Dan. vold, Isl. vellde, power, vallde, id. Hence yfer wald, magistracy. V. WALD, v.

[WAUMLE, s. and v. Banffs. form of Wamble, q. v.]

To WAUNER, v. n. To wander, S. O.

I saw, them, tentless, wauner owre the height.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 21.

WAUR, adj. Worse. V. WAR.

[To WAUR, v. a. To injure; also, to overcome. V. WAR, v.]

WAUR-FOR-THE-WEAR, adj. Shabby, rusty, Fife.

"He lent me this bonnie auld apron, and his warst workin'-jacket forby this crunkled waure-for-the-weare hat." Tenn. Card. Beaton, p. 154. V. WAR, WAUR.

WAUR, s. Spring. V. WARE, s.

To WAUR, v. a. To expend. "It's weel waure'd o' his hand," or "i' his hand;" S. Prov. V. WAR, v.

[WAUSIE, adj. Weary, tired and sore, Banffs.]

WAUT, s. A border, a selvage, a welt, Buchan

Gin onie chiel had coolie scaw't,
Sic's grooglit crown, or raggit waut,
Wad we na jeer't?

Tarras's Poems, p. 38.

[To WAUT, v. a. To welt, to bind the edge.

"Thre quartaris of velvuis to waut hir gowne," Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 162, Dickson.]

WAVEL, s. A sort of slug or worm found in bake-houses, among the flour which is scattered on the earthen floor, Roxb.

This must be the same with E. Weevil, a worm bred under ground. V. JOHNSON.

To WAVEL, v. a. and n. To move backwards and forwards, to wave.

He mov'd his shoulders, head did fling,

From van to rear, from wing to wing.

Some were alledging, that had good skill,

He could not speak if he had stood still,

Like some school boy, their lessons saying,

Wha rocks like fiddlers a playing.

Like Gilbert Burnet when he preaches,

Or like some lawyers making speeches;

He making hands, and gown, and sleeves wavel,

Half singing vents this revel ravel.

Cleland's Poems, p. 107.

From the same origin with WAUL and WEFFIL, q. v.

WAVELOCK, s. An instrument for twisting ropes of straw, rushes, &c., Clydes.; synon. Thraucrook.

Perhaps from Teut. weyfel-en, vacillare, because of its rotatory motion.

* To WAVER, WAWER, v. n. 1. To wander; from A.-S. waf-ian. V. BELL-WAVER.

And in that myrk nycht wawerand will, &c.

Wynston, vi. 13. 105.

V. WILL, adj. and HAMALD, adj. sense 2.

2. To exhibit slight symptoms of delirium, in consequence of fever or some other disease, S.; synon. Vary.

WAW, s. Wave; pl. wawys.

—For quhilum sum wald be

Rycht on the wawys, as on mounté;

And sum wald slyd fra heycht to law,

Rycht as thai doune till hell wald draw,

Syne on the waw stert sodanly.

Barbour, iii. 706, MS.

It is used by Wiclif.

"And a great storm of wynd was maad and keste wawis into the boot, so that the boot was ful." Mark iv.

"Wawe of the water. Flustrum. Fluctus. Unda." Prompt. Parv.

To WAW, v. n. To wave, to float.

The discourrouis saw thaim command,

Wyth baneris to the wynd wawand.

Barbour, ix. 245, MS.

V. WAFF, v.

A.-S. waeg, weg, id. pl. waegas. Teut. Germ. waeghe, fluctus; gurgis. Moes.-G. weg-os, pl. undao, from wega, motus, fluctuatio. The origin is evidently A.-S. wag-ian, wecg-ian, &c. movere, to move, to shake. The Moes.-G. v. must have also been wag-ian, as appears from the part. pa. wagids, agitatus.

WAW, s. Wall, S. pl. wawis. In O. E. it had been pron. nearly in the same manner.

"Wall or Wowe. Paries." Prompt. Parv.

A loklate bar was drawyn ourthourth the dur;
Bot thai mycht nocht it brek out of the waw.
Wallace, iv. 235, MS.

Think that it wes his hand that brak the waw.
Mailland Poems, p. 287.

— To mak bair wawis
Thay think na schame.

Ibid. p. 332.

A.-S. wag, wāh, id. Bryden wāh, firmus paries;
Lye.

WAW, s. Wo, sorrow.

God keip our Quein; and grace hir send
This realme to gyde, and to defend;
In justice perseveir:
And of her wawis mak an end,
Now into this new yair.

Mailland Poems, p. 279.

V. WA.

To WAW, v. n. To caterwaul, to cry as a cat, S. A. Bor.

"Then she waw'd and she screamed an' she sprawled, till I thought she wad win away frae me." Wint. Ev.
Tales, i. 314.

This seems the same with E. waul, allied perhaps to Isl. vaele, ejulo, plango; if not formed from the sound.

WAW, interj. Pshaw, Aberd. V. WA.

WAW, s. A measure of twelve stones, each stone weighing eight pounds.

"Walk, at the entering, nathing, bot at the outpassing, gif it be weyit be haill wawis, viii. d. ilk waw;
bot gif it be weyit be stanes, for ilk stane, i. d." Bal-four's Practicks, Customis, p. 87.

"Ane waw sould containe twelue stane: the wecht quhereof containes aucht pound." Stat. Rob. III. c.
82, § 7.

This is certainly the same with E. wey; as, a wey of wool, cheese, &c. from A.-S. waeg, waga, weg, a load. Su.-G. wag, signifies a pound, in which sense the A.-S. term is also used.

WAWAG, s. Voyage, Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

WAWAR, s. A woover.

Be that the daunsing wes all done,
Thair leif tuik les and mair;
Quhen the winklotts and the wawarris twynit,
To se it was hart sair.

Pebbis to the Play, st. 24.

A.-S. wogere, id.

WAWARD, s. The vanguard.

Thai saw in bataillyng cum arayit,
The waward, with baner displayit.

Barbour, viii. 48, MS.

[To WAWER, v. n. To waver, Barbour, viii. 41; part. pr. wawerand, xii. 185;
waweryng, vi. 584.]

WAWIL, adj. Loosely knit.

Ane pyk-thank in a prelots chayse,
With his wawil feit, and virrok tals;
With hoppir hippis, and hanches narrow.—

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 110.

It denotes feet, so loosely connected with the anclejoints as to bend to one side when set on the ground.

Thus, the phrase, shackling feet, is still used. This is evidently the same with W'gfil, q. v.

To WAWL, v. n. To look wildly. V.
WAUL, v.

WAWS, s. pl. Waws of cheese, the crust, especially that round the width, Aberd.;
obviously q. the walls.

WAWSPER, s.

"For keeping of the fischingis in said tyme fra all maner of nettis, cobillis, wawspers, herryvalters [herrie-water nets], & all wther instrumentis." Aberd.
Reg., A. 1548, V. 20.

Can this be from A.-S. wig-spere, bellica hasta, or q.
wael-spere, from wael, caedes, "a slaughter spear!"

WAWTAKIN, s. The act of removing or carrying off. "The wawtakin wrangusly," &c., Aberd. Reg., A. 1521, V. 11.

To WAWYIK, v. n. To be vacant; for Vaik.

"We haue power till choyse a Cheplaine till do diryn service dayly at our said altar at all tymes, when the same should wawryik." Seal of Cause, A. 1505, Blue Blanket, p. 57.

WAX-KERNEL, WAXEN-KERNEL. An indurated gland, or hard gathering, which does not suppurate; often in the neck, or in the armpits of growing persons, S.

It seems to receive its name from waxing or increasing in size.

*[WAY. The compounds of this term in S. are somewhat peculiar.]

WAY-GANGING, WAY-GOING, s. Departure.

"Patrik passed to the inner syde of the chalmir, and hard the lyk noys as he did when he was thair-out, yit could sie nothing; for it was ewin, at the way-ganging of the day light." E. of Huntlie's Death, Bannatyne's Journ., p. 490.

"But before their way-going the earl Marischal caused William Robertson town clerk, produce a band of allegiance, subscribed at command of the lord of Aboyne by the burgh of Aberdeen,—wherein they obliged themselves to stand and abide by the king in all fortunes, against whatsomever factious and se-ditionous persons: not to disobey his commands, but to submit in all obedience, nor enter into any covenant."
Spalding's Troubles, i. 210, 211.

"They pressed that the prorogation might be with the consent of the estates, and upon his refusal they opposed his way-going." Guthrie's Mem., p. 65.

WAY-GANGIN' CROP. V. WA-GANG CRAP.

WAY-GATE, s. Space, room, S.

He's awa to sail,
Wi' water in his waygate,
An' wind in his tail.

Jacobite Relics, i. 24.

Way-gate signifies space, room, Roxb. Here, however, it would seem to contain an allusion to what is called the tail-race of a mill.

WAY-GAUN, WA'-GAUN, WAY-GOING, adj.
Removing from a farm or habitation, S.

"The way-going tenant, in scourging his farm, injures his landlord and successor, at the expense of his own professional character." Agr. Surv. Dumfr., p. 172.

WAYGET, WA'GATE, s. Speed, the act of making progress. He has nae wayget, Loth. He does not get forward. Wa'gate, Lanarks.

It might appear doubtful whether this should be resolved, q. getting on the way, or getting away. From the pronunciation of Lanarks, the latter seems preferable, because although in S. awa is used for away, wa' never occurs for way. The last syllable is not from S. gait, road. For we must suppose too great an ellipse, as if it were said; "He cannot get away on the road."

WAY-GOE, s. Run, course, place where a body of water breaks out.

"They use to stop the way-goe of the water, sometimes in the summer, and let the place overflow with water." Sir A. Balfour's Letters, p. 129, 130.

Teut. wegh-ga-en, abire, discedere.

WAYKENNING, s. The knowledge of one's way from a place.

"He that's ill of his lodging, is well of his way-kenning," S. Prov. "Spoken when I ask my neighbour a loan, and he tells me that he cannot, but such a one can." Kelly, p. 143.

The phrase, "well of his waykenning," seems to have originally signified, that one is happy who knows how to get away from disagreeable lodgings; which is not the case with him who is detained as a prisoner.

Formed like Teut. wegh-komen, evadere; wegh-ga-en, abire, &c. Or shall we view way as a contr. of away, a word indeed formed from the s. way?

WAY-PASSING, s. Departure.

"Ordanis that the persouns that past fra the election of the said Alex^r be summond to a certane day to ansuer to our souerain lord for their way-passing contraire his lawis." Act. Conc., A. 1479, p. 45.

To WAY-PUT, v. a. To vend, to dispose of by sale.

"Nane of thaim way put nor dispoone," &c. Aberd. Reg. V. 16; i.e., put away. V. AWAY-PUTTING.

WAYTAKING, s. The act of removing or carrying off.

"The thiftouss waytaking of his money;" Aberd. Reg. V. WAYAKING.

[WAY, adj. Sad]; wayest, most sorrowful or woeful. V. WA, adj.

[WAYIS. Wayis me, woe is me.]

WAYMENT, WAYMYNG, s. Lamentation, such as implies a flood of tears.

There come a Lede of the Lawe, in londe is not to layne,
And glides to Schir Gawayne, the gates to gayne;
Yauland, and yomerand, with many loudle yelles;
Hit yaules, hit yamers, with waymyng wete.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., l. 7.

Bare was the body, and blak to the bone,
Al bielagged in clay, uncomly cladde.
Hit waried hit wayment, as a woman;
But on hide, ne on huwe, no heling hit hadde.
Ibid. st. 9.

i.e., It varied its mode of wailing, like a woman. Or perhaps for the pret.; it cursed, it lamented like a woman.

"Waymentinge. Lamentacio. Eiulatus. Planctus. Lactus. — Wayment-ga. Eiulor. Lamentor. Gemo. Plango." Prompt. Parv.

Waymenting, Chaucer, id. "I wement, I make mone;" Palsgrau. A. S. wea-mod is rendered angry; but Somner thinks that it more properly signifies lugubris, sorrowful; adding, "We sometimes, (with Ryder) say wayment for lamentor." Teut. weemoedig, mournful, lacrymabundus, ad lacrymas pronus, Kilian; from wee, grief, woe, and moed, mind.

WAYER, s. A weigher, one who weighs.

"Libripens, — stipis ponderandae pensator, — a wayer." Despaut. Gram. C. 2, b.

WAYFF, s. A wife. MS. of Pitscottie's Cron.

"Sir William Crichtoun — was sent to spous Margaret, the duke of Gildares dochter, to be brocht home to wayff to King James the Second." P. 59.

WAYN, WAYNE, s. Plenty, abundance.

Wyld der thai slew, for othir bestis was nayn;
Thir wermen tuk off venysounne gud wayn.

Wallace, viii. 947, MS.

Off horss thai war purwaide in gret wayn.

Ibid. x. 707, MS.

Su.-G. winn-a, sufficere, is the only word I have observed, to which this seems to have any affinity.

WAYN, s. A vein.

Bot blynd he was, so hapnyt throw curage,
Be Ingliss men that dois ws mekill der,
(In his rysyng he worthi was in wer),
Through hurt of waynys, and mystyrit of blud:
Yeit he was wiss, and of his conseil gud.

Wallace, i. 361, MS.

Veines, edit. 1648.

To WAYND, v. n. To change, to turn aside, to swerve.

I love you mair for that lofe ye lippen me till,
Than ony lorischip or land, so me our Lorde leid!
I sall waynd for no way to wrik as ye will,
At wiss, gife my werd wald, with you to the deid.

Houlate, ii. 12, MS.

A.-S. waend-an, mutare, vertere, versari; Su.-G. waend-a, vertere; cessare.

To WAYND, v. n. To care, to be anxious about.

Quhar he fand aue without the othir presance,
Eftir to Scottis that did no mor grewance;
To cut hys throit or steik him sodanlye
He wayndit nocht, fand he thaim fawely.

Wallace, i. 198.

He cared not, fand he them anerly.

Edit. 1648.

It is probably the same word which Gawin Douglas uses, expl. by Mr. Pink. "fears."

Richt as the rose upspringis fro the rute; —
Nor waendis nocht the levis to out achute,
For schyning of the sone that deis renew.

King Hart, i. 12.

A.-S. wand-ian, Su.-G. waand-a, Isl. vand-a, curare. Flaestir aera nua haerdialosir, at ther vanda eigh, hucat bonden faar sitt ater eller eigh: Plerique adeo incuriosi sunt, ut parum pensi habebant, si paterfamilias suum recipiat, necne. Literae Magni R. ap. Thre, vo. Waanda.

WAYNE. In wayne, in vain.

His kyn mycht nocht him get for na kyn thing,
Mycht thai haiff payit the ransounne of a king.
The more thai bad, the mor it was in wayne.

Wallace, ii. 151, MS.

WAYNE, s. Help, relief.

—No socour was that tyde.
Than wist he nocht of no help, bot to de,
To wenge his dede among thaim lousse yeld he.—
Hys byrnyst brand to byrystyt at the last,
Brak in the heltis, away the blaid it flew;
He wyst na wayne, bot out his knyff can draw.
Wallace, ii. 132, MS.

Perhaps from A.-S. wen, spes, expectatio.

To WAYNE, v. n. [To strike; to batter.]

Streyte on his steroppis stoutely he strikes,
And waynes at Schir Wawayn als he were wode.
Then his leman on lowde skirles, and skrikes,
When that burly barne blenket on blode.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gah., ii. 16.

It seems to denote the reiteration of strokes; allied perhaps to Su.-G. waan-a, to labour, winn-a, id., also to fight, pugnare, coufigere. "The Bishop shall accuse the Parish; aen ther widhir then wight wean; and it shall accuse the person who began the struggle." West. G. Leg. ap. Ihre, vo. Winna. A.-S. winn-an. Theod winth onyeæn theod; Nation shall fight against nation; Matt. xxiv. 7. Hence ge-winn, bellum, ge-winne, pugna. Alem. winnn-an, pugnare.

To WAYNE, v. a. To remove.

He wayned up his viser fro his ventalle:
With a knightly contenance he carpes him tille.
Sir Gawain and Sir Gah., ii. 6.

V. VENTAILL.

To WAYNT, v. n. To be deficient, to be wanting.

Syndry wayntyt, bot nane wyst be quhat way.
Wallace, i. 199, MS.

The word is here used according to the Gothic idiom; Isl. vant-a, deesse, deficere; from van, defectus.

To WAYT, WATE, v. a. and n. [1. To wait, watch; to lie in ambush. V. WATE.]

Thare wywys wald thai oft forly
And thare dowchtrys dyspytwsly;
And gyve ony thare-at war wrath,
Wayt hym welle wyth a gret skath.

Wyntown, viii. 18. 38.

A.-S. waeth-an, Su.-G. weid-a, Isl. veid-a, Germ. weid-en, venari. Ihre derives this Goth. term from weid, a wood, as being the place for hunting. It may perhaps be allied to Moes.-G. weithi, a flock. Su.-G. wedehund, a dog used in the chase. A.-S. waethan mid hundum, to hunt with dogs. It may be observed, by the way, that our modern term hunt, although immediately from A.-S. hunt-ian, id. must be traced to hund, a dog. V. WAIT, s. 3.

2. To hunt, to pursue, to persecute.

* WAX, s. For the use of this in witchcraft, V. WALK.WAZIE, adj. V. WASIE.WE, WEY, WIE, s. Conjoined with litill;

1. As denoting time.

Till his fostyr brodyr he sayis;
"May I traist in the, me to walk
"Till Ik a litill sleeping tak!"
"Ya, schyr," he said, "till I may drey."
The King then wynkyt a litill wey;
And slepyt nocht full encrily.

Barbour, vii. 182, MS.

The Quene Dido astonyst aue litill we
At the first sicht, behalding his bewte,

VOL. IV.

Ay wondring he quhat wyse he cumin was,
Unto him thus sche said with myld face.
Doug. Virgil, 32, 34

Ane roundel with aue cleine claith had he,
Neir quhair the king nicht him baith heir and se.
Than, quod the King a lytil we, and leuch;
"Sir faill, ye ar lordly set aneuch."

Priests of Peblis, S. P. R., i. 22

i.e., in a little while the king said, laughing.

2. In relation to place, [or space].

We sall fenyhé ws as we wald fle,
And wyth draw ws a litill we:
Fast folow ws than sall thai,
And sone swa moné thai brek aray.

Wyntown, viii. 33, 144

3. As expressing degree.

Nere quham thare grew an rycht auld laurer tre,
Bowand toward the altere aue litill we,
That with his schalow the goldis did ouer heild.

Doug. Virgil, 56, 15

Sone as the fyrst infectioun aue litill we
Of slymy venom inyat quently had sche;
Than sche begouth hyr wittis to a-sale.

Ibid., 218, 55.

A wee, S. signifies a short while.

Ye hardy heroes, whase brave pains
Defeated ay th' invading rout,
Forsake a wee th' Elysian plains,
View, smile, and bless your lovely sprout.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 104

It is also sometimes used as equivalent to, in a slight degree. Wee, little; Wee and weeny, very small, A. Bor.

This word has been viewed as an abbrev. of Teut. weiniagh, little; Macpherson, Sibb. But both terms are used, A. Bor. Or of A.-S. hweone, few; Ly. Addit. Jun. Etym., vo. Way-bit. But this is far from being satisfactory; and, perhaps, no instance of a similar abbreviation can be produced, where the part of the first syllable is retained. Teut. weiniagh being apparently from the A.-S. word, it is extremely improbable that these terms should be retained in wee, quene, few, and at the same time in an abbreviated form.

It is observed by Wachter, vo. Wan, that Lat. o, a composition, has the power of diminution; as o-grandia, little, literally, not great; o-jovis, parvus Jupiter, concerning whom Ovid thus writes:—

Vis ea si verbi est, cur non ego o-jovis sedem, Aedem non Magni suspicer esse Jovis?

As this term generally occurs as a s., the sense of which is determined by the adj. conjoined, perhaps we did not originally signify little, but may have been a term expressive of time or space. The we of way-bit, A. Bor., for a short way. S. a wee bit might seem to indicate, that the term had been merely A.-S. weay, wey, Isl. wey, as primarily denoting distance as to space. Way-bit would then signify a bit of a wey. It may be observed, however, that Isl. va is used to denote weight, being applied to that which contributes very little to it. Thad er a litil; parvi ponderis est; vel nullius momenti est. Verel.

WE, WEE, WIE, adj. 1. Small, little, S.

C. B. raeyh, Gael. beg, id. The word is often repeated, as signifying very little.

I wuss I had a wee, wee house,
A wee, wee cat to catch a mouse,
A wee, wee cock, to craw fu' crouse.

Popular Song, Gall. Ec.

Esop relates a tale weil worth renown,
Of twa wee myce, and they wor sisters deir.

Y 4

Of quhom the eldier dwelt in borrowstown,
The yauger scho wond upon land weil neir.
Henryson, Evergreen, i. 144.

Tak a pur man a scheip or two,
For hungir, or for falt of fude,
To five or sex wie bairnis, or mo,
They will him hing with raisip rud.
Bot and he tak a fok or two,
A bow of ky, and lat thame blud,
Full saifly may he ryd or go.
Johne Up-on-Land's Compl. Chron. S. P., ii. 33.

Shakspeare has adopted this word.

—"He hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard." Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. Mean, as regarding station; as, "wee fowk;" people of the lowest ranks, Clydes.

3. Mean, applied to conduct; as, "That was very wee in him;" ibid.

WEENESS, s. 1. Smallness, littleness, S.

2. Mean-spiritedness, Clydes.

WEEOCK, s. A little while; as, "Ye had better wait for him a weeock." S. O.; a dimin. from WE, WEE, little. V. Oc, Ock, termin.

WEAM-ILL, s. The belly - ache. V. WAMBE.

WEAN, WEEANE, s. A child, S. bairn, synon.

—Ilka day brought joy and plenty,
Ilka year a dainty wean.

Macneill's Poems, i. 19.

The name the weeane gat, was Helenore,
That her ain grandaie brooked lang before.

Ross's Helenore, p. 12.

Perhaps from A.-S. wæn-an, O. Belg. wenn-en, Sw. af-wæn-ia, ablactare, E. to wean; Dan. afwæn-er, to take away lambs from their dam. It has, however, been viewed, q. wee ane, synon. with little ane, S. id. Hence Johns., in expl. wee, observes; "In Scotland it denotes small or little: as, a wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit."

WEANLY, adj. Feeble, slender, ill-grown, Fife.

It seems doubtful if from S. wean, a child; or, allied to Teut. weynigh, parvus, weynighlick, exigue. A.-S. wæn-ian, minui, decrescere.

To WEAR, v. a. To conduct to the fold, or any other inclosure, with caution, S.; as, "Stand on that side, and wear that cow;" "I'll kep her here." "Wear them cannily, dinna drive them," S.

[A.-S. wæder, wær, an enclosure.]

To WEAR IN, v. a. 1. To gather in with caution.

Will ye go to the ew-bughts Marion,
And wear in the sheep wi' me?

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 49.

Teut. weer-en, propulsare.

2. As a neut. v., to move slowly and cautiously. One who is feeble, when moving to a certain place, is said to be wearing in to it, S.

To WEAR inby, v. n. To move towards a place with caution, S.

We'll cast about and come upon the bught.—
I think I see't mysell, we'll wear inby,
Gin we'll win there, it's time to milk the ky.

Ross's Helenore, p. 76.

[To WEAR roun. To prevail on; to gain the favour of; as, "She'll wear roun him yet," S.]

To WEAR up, or up weir. [To drive cautiously or carefully]; as a thief drives home the cattle he has stolen.

Of sum grit men they have sic gait,
That redy ar thame to debait;
And will up weir
Thair stolin geir:
That nane dar steir
Thame, air nor lair.

Maitland Poems, p. 333.

To WEAR, v. a. 1. To guard, to defend, S. A.

"I set him to wear the fore-door wi' the speir, while I kept the back-door wi' the lance." Minstrelsy Border, i. 208. V. WER, WERE, v.

2. To stop, Roxb.

A.-S. wer-ian, prohibere, arcere; "to restrain, to forbid," Somner. [Sw. våra, to defend.]

To WEAR aff, or off, v. a. To defend from or against, S.

"The lasses should wear the lads aff them," i.e., keep them at a distance, Galloway.

For wearin' corn of hens an' cocks,
For huntin' o' the hare or fox,—
His match was never made for thae tricks.

Hogg's Scot. Pastorals, p. 23.

WEAR, WEIR, s. Force, restraint, Roxb.

A.-S. wær, sepimentum, retinaculum, Teut. wær, weyr, propugnaculum.

* To WEAR, v. n. To last, to endure; as, "That hame-made clath wears weel," S. [Sw. vara, to last.]

To WEAR, v. a. "Wear the jacket. This phrase alludes to a custom, now, we believe, obsolete, by which, on paying a certain fee, or otherwise making interest with the huntsman of the Caledonian Hunt, any citizen aspirant, whose rank did not entitle him to become a member of that highly-born society, might become entitled to the field-privileges of the Hunt, and among others, was tolerated to wear the jacket of the order," Gl. Antiq.

[To WEAR aff. To pass away gradually; to pay by degrees, Clydes. Banffs.]

[To WEAR awa'. To consume or decline slowly, to die, S.

I'm wearin awa, Jean,
Like snaw when it's thaw, Jean.

Baroness Nairne's Land o' the Leal.

[To WEAR on. To near, to approach; as, wearin on to gloamin, Clydes.]

[To WEAR roun. To recover, to become well; as, "He's wearin roun fast again," S.]

[To WEAR thro'. To waste, consume, Banffs.]

[To WEAR up. To grow, to come to maturity; wearin up in years, growing old, S.]

WEAR, s. Clothing, apparel. "Every day wear," one's common dress, S.

WEARY, adj. 1. Feeble; as, a weary bairn, a child that is declining, S.

2. Vexatious, causing trouble, S. as, "the weary," or "weariful fox;" Gl. Sibb.

3. Vexed, sorrowful; Gl. Ritson's S. Songs.

4. Tedious, causing languor or weariness to the mind from prolixity, S.

"We gat some water-broo and bannocks, and mony a weary grace they said,—ere they wad let me win to." Tales of my Landlord, iii. 9.

Sibb. derives it, in sense 2, from wary, to curse. And indeed, A.-S. werig, signifies malignus, infestus, from werig-an, to curse. In sense 1 it is from werig, lassus, fatigued; and also in sense 3, as the same word signifies depressus animo.

To WEARY for, v. a. To long for, eagerly to desire, S.

To WEARY on, v. a. 1. To become weary of, S.

2. To long for, Roxb.

A.-S. weri-an, fatigare. As signifying to long for, it merely denotes that one becomes fatigued or worn out, in waiting for an object that is earnestly desired, but delayed beyond expectation.

WEARIFUL, WEARIFU', adj. 1. Causing pain or trouble; pron. wearifow, S. V. WEARY, sense 2.

"If Mr. Mordaunt should have settled down in the Roost, as mair than ae boat had been lost in that wearifu' squall the other morning,—who, said Swertha, will be the auld fool then?" The Pirate, ii. 269.

2. Tiresome in a great degree, Ayrs.

"My head was buzzing like a beescap, and I could bear nothing but the bir of that weariful woman's tongue." The Steam-Boat, p. 83.

WEARY FA', WEARY ON. An imprecation, S.

"O weary fa' his filthy picture, to set my bairn a sichin an' sabbin." Saxon and Gael, ii. 33.

"O! weary on him! he ne'er brought gude to these lands or the indwellers." Tales of my Landlord, i. 71.

"O! weary fa' thae evil days!—what can evil beings be coming to distract a poor country, now its peaceably settled, and living in love and law?" Tales of my Landlord, i. 71.

Literally, a curse befal, from Wary, to curse, q. v.

WEASSES, s. pl. A species of breeching for the necks of work-horses, Orkn.; synon. with breacham.

"The oxen be yoked with cheatts [i. theatts] and haims and breachams, which they call weassie, albeit they have horns." MS. Adv. Libr. Barry's Ork., p. 447.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. wease, Isl. veasi, a bundle of twigs or withea; as the furniture of horses was anciently made of these. -V. RIGWIDDIE, TRODWINNIE.

* WEATHER, s. 1. A fall of rain or snow accompanied with boisterous wind, Roxb. When the wind comes singly, people say, "It'll be no weather the day, but wind."

This corresponds with Isl. veidr, veidur, tempestas.

2. Fair weather, flattery.

"If he'll no du'd [do it] by fair weather, he'll no du'd by foul," Prov., Roxb. If you cannot prevail with him by coaxing, you will not by severity.

O. E. to make fair weather, to flatter. V. NAREN.

WEATHERFU', WEATHERIE, adj. Stormy, Roxb.

WEATHER-GAW, s. 1. Part of one side of a rainbow, S. V. under WEDDIE.

"Weathergaw.—The rainbow and it seems to be of one nature, and to proceed from the same cause.—The back ground of the weathergaw—is always a black cloud, and instead of being the segment of a circle, is so far as it appears, a straight line." Gall. En cycl.

2. Any change in the atmosphere, known from experience to presage the approach of bad weather, S.

"See how much heavier the clouds fall every moment, and see these weather-gaws that streak the lead-coloured mass with partial gleams of faded red and purple." The Pirate, i. 59.

3. Any day too good for the season, indicating a reverse, S.

4. Metaph. any thing so favourable, as to seem an indication of a reverse; Aberd., Mearns.

Old Colonel Monro uses Weather-gall in this sense.

"This dayes service was but like a pleasant weather-gall, the fore-runner of a greater storm; for they made bootie this day, that had not the happiness to enjoy it eight and fourtie houres." Monro's Exped., P. I., p. 52.

WEATHER-GLEAM, s. V. WEDDIE-GLIM.

"Often when Millar had driven his prey from a distance, and while he was yet miles from home, and the weather-gleam of the eastern hills began to be tinged with the brightening dawn, he has left them to the charge of his dog, and descended himself to the banks of the Leithen, off his way, that he might not seem to be connected with their company." Edin. Mag., Oct. 1817, p. 64.

* To WEAVE, v. a. and n. To knit, applied to stockings, &c.; pron. Wyre, Aberd.

WEAVER, WYVER, WYBISTER, s. A knitter of stockings, Aberd.

WEAVIN, s. A moment, Aberd.

"The auld wife complain'd sae upo' her bones, that you wou'd hae thought she had been in the dead-thraw in a weavon after she came in." Journal from London, p. 7.

A.-S. wiffend, breathing; as we say, in the same sense, in a breath, S. This seems also the origin of E.

whiff, which Johns., after Davies, derives from C. B. chwyth, flatus.

WEAZLE-BLAWING, s. A disease which seems to exist only in the imaginations of the superstitious. V. CATER.

WEB, WAB, s. The covering of the entrails, the cawl, or omentum, S. apparently named from its resemblance to something that is woven; as in Sw. it is called tarmnaet, q. the net of the intestines.

WEBSTER, WABSTER, s. 1. A weaver, S. A. Bor.

Need gars naked men rin,
And sorrow gars websters spin.

Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 26.

"O. E. Webstar. Textor. Webstars lome. Telarium." Prompt. Parv. Webbar was used for a female weaver. "Webbar or maker of clothe. Lanifica. Telaria. Lanifex." Ibid. It is singular, that the original use of the terminations should thus be completely inverted.

2. Metaph. transferred to a spider, because of the web that it weaves for catching its prey, S.

A. S. webbestre, textrix, a female weaver. The use of this term indicates that, among our forefathers, the work of weaving was appropriated to women. This, it is well known, was the case among the Greeks and other ancient nations, who reckoned it an employment unworthy of the dignity of man. Hence the frequent allusions to this, in the poets.

—Tibi quam noctes festina diesque
Urguebam, et tela curas solabar aniles.

Virg., ix. 489.

We find, indeed, that the Roman writers make mention of Textores, or male weavers. But this name was given to the slaves employed in this business, when, in consequence of the increase of luxury, it came to be despised by women of rank. For, in early ages, it was accounted an employment not worthy of queens. It appears, that among the Jews also, and other eastern nations, women were thus engaged. A loom seems to have been part of the furniture of the faithless Delilah's chamber; as she was no stranger to the art of weaving, Judg. xvii., 12—14. Solomon gives such a description of the good wife, as implies that she wove all the clothing worn by her household; Prov. xxxi., 18—24. V. WOB, WOBSTER.

WECHÉ, s. A witch.

"Ane weche said to hym, he suld be crounit kyng afore his deith." Bellend. Cron., B. xvii. c. 8.

A. S. wicca, wicca, id.

WECHT, WEIGHT, WEGHT, s. 1. An instrument for winnowing corn, made in the form of a sieve, but without holes.

—Ane blanket, and ane wecht also,
Ane schule, ane scheit, and ane lang flail.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 159.

—Ay wi' his lang tail he whiskit,
And drumm'd on an auld corn weicht.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 229.

"You shine like the sunny side of a shernie weight." S. Prov. Kelly, p. 378. Wright, Ramsay. V. SHARNY.

Meg fain wad to the barn gaen,
To win three wechts o' naething;

But for to meet the deil her lane,
She pat but little faith in.

Burns, iii. 184.

The rites observed in this daring act of superstition, are thus explained in a note.

"This charm must likewise be performed, unperceived, and alone. You go to the barn, and open both doors, taking them off the hinges, if possible; for there is danger, that the being, about to appear, may shut the doors, and do you some mischief. Then take that instrument used in winnowing the corn, which, in our country dialect, we call a wecht; and go through all the attitudes of letting down corn against the wind. Repeat it three times; and the third time an apparition will pass through the barn, in at the windy door, and out at the other, having both the figure in question, and the appearance or retinue, marking the employment or station in life."

There are two kinds of wechts, S. B. The one is called a windin wecht, immediately used for winnowing, as its name intimates. This is formed of a single hoop covered with parchment. The other is called a maund-wecht, having more resemblance of a basket, its rim being deeper than that of the other. Its proper use is for lifting the grain, that it may be emptied into the windin wecht. It receives its name from maund, a basket.

Germ. faecher, fechel, focher, fucker, an instrument for winnowing; Belg. wayer, more properly written vecher, a fanner or winnower, from Germ. wech-en, wehen, Belg. wai-en, ventum facere; Wachter. Su.-G. weft-a, ventilare. This is the natural origin of wecht; and there is every reason to suppose that it is a very ancient term. As Lat. vent-us, has been deduced from Gr. auw, flare, E. wind is evidently allied; being formed from wai-en, id. of which Junius views it as the part wayend, q. blowing.

2. A sort of tambourin.

In May the pleasant spray vpspringis;
In May the mirthfull mavis singis:

And now in May to madynnis fawis,
With tymmer wechtis to trip in ringis,
And to play vpcoll with the bawis.

Scott, Evergreen, ii. 186, MS.

It seems to receive this name from its resemblance of the instrument employed in winnowing; the word tymmer being conjoined, for the sake of discrimination, to denote that it is wooden, whereas the proper wecht is made of skin.

We have a description in Chaucer which is somewhat similar, especially as the performers plaid up-coill.

There was many a timbestere,
And sailours, that, I dare well swere,
Ycouth the hir craft full partilly.
The timbres up full subtilly
Thei casten, and hent hem full oft
Upon a finger faire and soft,
That thei ne failed never mo.

Tyrwhitt, Rom. Rose, v. 770, says;

"According to this description, it should rather seem that a Timbestere was a woman who plaid tricks with timbres, (basons of some sort or other,) by throwing them up into the air, and catching them upon a single finger; a kind of Balance-mistress." GL.

But in the original of the Romaunt, in another place the timbre is evidently mentioned as an instrument of music.

Cil flues si joliment,
E maine si grand dissonent,
Qu'il résonne, tabourne et timbre,
Plus souef que tabour ne timbre.

V. Dict. Trev. in vo. There the term is expl. "un instrument approchant du tambour."

It is most probably to this instrument that Palsgrave refers. "I playe vpon a tymbre; Je timbre. Maydens playe nat so moche vpon tymblers as they were wonte to do: Les filles ne tymbront poynt tant quelles souloyent." B. iii. F. 318, a.

This is confirmed by Prompt. Parv. "Tymber taboure. Tympanillum."

To WECHT, v. a. To fan, to winnow, Buchan.

She wechts the corn anent the blaw,
Thinkin her joe wad scud her
Fast by that night.

Tarras's Poems, p. 67.

We ought undoubtedly to consider as cognate terms C. B. gewgr, a sieve; gewgr-a, to turn in a sieve, to sift.

WECHTFUL, s. As much as a wecht can contain, S. pron. wechtfow.

WECHT, s. 1. Weight, S.

2. The standard by which any thing is weighed, S.

To WECHT, v. a. To weigh, S.

WECHTY, adj. 1. Expensive.

—"His leving and rentis is sua trublit and burdynnit, that he can nocht defend the said action, being sua wechty that the same is hable to compryse ane greit pairt of his heretage." Acts Ja. VI., 1594, Ed. 1814, p. 80.

[2. Important, powerful; applied to an argument, a discourse, &c., as a wechty sermon, S.]

WED, s. Woad. "Ane pyip of wed;" Aberd. Reg., V. 16. V. WADD.

To WED, v. a. To Wed a Heretage, to enter on possession of an estate.

"The rycht & heretage that he had or wed eftir his foreldaris." Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

WED, s. A pledge. To WED, v. a. To pledge. V. WAD. Hence, WEDKEEPER, s. One who preserves what is deposited in pledge.

"For as to this conscience, it is a faithfull wed-keeper; the gages that it receiveth, it randeris, of good turnes it giveth a blyith testimonie, of evil turnes it giveth a bitter testimonie." Bruce's Eleven Sermons, 1591, Sign. C. 4. 2.

WEDDER, WEDDIR, WEDDYR, s. 1. Weather; used as a general term.

He thoct he to Kyntyrr wald ga,
And sa lang soiwyrnyng thar ma,
Till wyntir wedder war away.

Barbour, lii. 387, MS.

And in the calm or loune weddir is sene,
Aboue the fludis hie, ane fare plane grene.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 42.

I traist not with this wedder to wyn Itale,
The wynd is contrare brayand in ouer bak sale.

Ibid. 127, 49.

2. Wind.

And all the weddrys in thaire fayre
Wes to thare purpos all contrayre.

Wyntown, vi. 20, 105.

And thare be a tempest fell
Of gret weddrys scharpe and anell,
Of iors thai behowyd to tak
Quhylye land, and thame for battayle make.

Ibid. vii. 10, 184, also viii. 6, 54.

O. E. "Wedyr of the ayer. Aura. Tempus." Prompt. Parv. There was also a r. of this form, signifying to blow. "Weder-yn. Auro." Ibid.

A.-S. waeder, Teut. weder, Alem. weter, Isl. rethar, coeli temperies, "the weather good or bad," (Somner,) Su.-G. waeder, id. also the wind; O. Dan. rethur, ventus, turbo. This shews the origin of the term weather-bound, i.e., detained by wind or bad weather. One might almost conjecture, that this were the origin of the term winter, which in Isl. is retur, very nearly allied to rethur, rethur, weather; as if denominated from the storminess of the weather, which is the characteristic of this season. Ihre, however, derives it from waat, humidus.

Weder seems to retain the sense of storm, Ywaine and Gawin.

The king kest water on the stane,
The storme rase ful sone onane,
With wikked wedders kene and calde,
Als it was byfore-hand talde;
The king and his men ilkane
Wend tharwith to have bene slane;
So blew it stor with slete and rayn.

Ritson's E. M. R., i. 55.

V. also p. 16, v. 411.

WEDDER DAIS, WEDDER DAYIS. A phrase denoting a particular season in the year.

"And the clergy presumys thar may be specialte gottin to thame and it be desiryt. And thair trow the Inglismen will alsueill consent till a specialte fra Candilmess till Wedder dais as thair dide now till Candilmess." Parl. Ja. II., A. 1456, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 45. Wedder dayis, Ed. 1566.

Wedderdayis, in Fife, denotes the time of sheep-shearing; and hence, the phrase, "fra Candilmess till Wedderdais," signifies, "from the beginning of spring till mid-summer." The idea that would occur at first view, that the word is formed from S. wedder, A.-S. weder, or Su.-G. waedur, a ram castrated, cannot be entertained as there appears to be no sufficient reason for this particular specification. The compound term is more probably allied to Su.-G. waederlag, which in the laws of the Ostrogoths, denotes mild weather. Notat diem serenum, et colligendis frugibus aptum; Ihre. He adds that the word has the same sense in Isl. Thar ver um varit einn veddrag gothann; Erat tempus vernum et coelum mite; Ol. Trygg. S. V. II. p. 170. Thus it might appear probable that the Wedder dayis referred to in the Act, were meant of the more advanced season when the weather is settled.

WEDDERFU', WEATHERFU', adj. Unsettled, stormy; applied only to the weather; as, in a very bad day, "What a weatherfu' day is this!" Roxb. Sw. waederfull, windy, full of wind.

WEDDIR-GAW, s. Part of one side of a rainbow, appearing immediately above the horizon, viewed as a prognostick of bad weather; pron. weather-gaw, S. In some parts of the country, this is called a deg, also a stump, [and a tooth.]

The term weather-gaw is used in England, to denote the secondary rainbow. This is analogous to Germ. wasser-gall, reperussio iridis; from wasser, humor, moisture, and gall, splendor. Hence Wachter renders wasser-gall, splendor pluvius; referring to A.-S. gyl, splendit, Benson.

A weather-gaw, as the term is used in S., corresponds to Isl. veðr-spær, literally, that which spær or fortells bad weather; Landnamab., p. 264. Our term seems formed in the same manner with Isl. kaf-galle, which has precisely the same signification; Meteorum perlustre in mari, ante ventos apparens; G. Andr., p. 82, col. 2. As kaf, signifies the sea, one might suppose that the other component term were Isl. galle, naevus, vitium, q. a defect in the weather; did not the explanation given by G. Andr. confirm the sense assigned to gall by Wachter.

WEDDIR-GLIM, s. Expl. "clear sky near the horizon; spoken of objects seen in the twilight or dusk; as, between him and the wedder-glim, or weather-gleam, i.e., between him and the light of the sky." Gl. Sibb.
A.-S. weder, coelum, and gleam, glæm, jubar, splendor; Teut. weder-licht, coruscatio.

WEDDERBOUK, s. The carcase of a wether. "ij s. Scottis for half ane wedder-bouk, to pay the samyn of his awin purs." Aberd. Reg.

To WEDE, WEID, WEYD, v. n. To rage, to act furiously, part. pr. wedand.

In this meyne tyme Athelred,

Of Ingland tuk posses-syowne,
Scepter, and coronatyowne,
Quhen the Denmarkis wes wedand,
Wyth fyre and slawchter dystrowyand.
Wyntonon, vi. 15, 63.

Off thir payns God lat you neur preiff,
Thocht I for wo all out off wit suld weid.
Wallace, ii. 204, MS.

Quhen Wallace saw scho ner of witt couth weid,
In his armess he caught hir sobrelly,
And said, "Der hart, quha hass mysdoyne "ocht I?"
"Nay I," quoth scho, "hass falslye wrocht this trayn;"
"I half you sald, rycht now ye will be slayn."
Ibid. iv. 752, MS.

Mr. Ellis interrogatively expl. it, "She could not imagine any contrivance;" Spec. I., 355.

And he for wo weyle ner worthit to wiede;
And said, Sone; thir tithingis sittis me sor.
Ibid. i. 437, MS.

The term not being understood, editors have taken the liberty of altering the phraseology, as in Edit. 1648.

And he for woe neare swelt of this wede.

In this passage it might be viewed as a s.
So mekill baill with in his breyst thar bred,
Ner out off wytt he worthit for to weyl.
Ibid. xi. 1161, MS.

A.-S. wed-an, insanire, furere. Isl. ac-d, id. aede, furor, acdefullr, furibundus. V. WEID.

WEDEIS, pl. n. Withes.

Wallace, iii. 215, MS.

V. WIDDIE.

WED-FIE, s. "Wage, reward, recompence; perhaps some payment of the nature of the interest of money;" Gl. Sibb.

[WEDIS, WEIDIS, s. pl.] Weeds, i.e., garments, Barbour, xi. 130, 467.]

WEDO, WEDOW, s. A widow, Aberd. Reg.

WEDOET, s. Widowhood.

—"The said Cristiane—band and oblist hir to relef & kepe him scathles tharof, like as hir lettres obligatouris niad in hir pure wedoet to the said George thar-uppon purportis." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1491, p. 204. Evidently corr. from wedohed.

WEDONYPHA, s. This term occurs in a curious list of diseases, in Roull's Cursing, MS.

—The Cruke, the Cramp, the Colica,
The Worm, the wareit Wedonypha,
Rimbursin, Ripplis, and Bellythra.

V. Gl. Compl., p. 331.

This is certainly the same with wytenon-fa, Aberd.

"I was fley'd that she had taen the wyten-on-fa, an' inlakit afore supper, far she shuddered a' like a klippert in a cauld day." Journal from London, p. 7.

This is rendered "trembling, chattering." But it is the term generally used in the North, to express that disease peculiar to women, commonly called a weid; wedinson-fa, Ang.

We might suppose that it were allied to A.-S. wite, pain, suffering, calamity, witn-ian, to punish, to afflict, wit-nung, punishment; Su.-G. wit-a, to punish, wike, punishment, also any physical evil, &c. But Wedon-faw is merely the onfall or attack of a weid, Border. Onfaw and weid are sometimes used as synon. V. WEID, s.

To WEE, WEY, v. a. To weigh, S.

[WEE-BAUK, WEES-BAUK, s.] The beam or lever of a balance; also, a balance, S. V. under WEYES.]

WEE CHEESE, WEE BUTTER. A childish play, in which two, placing themselves back to back, and linking their arms into each other, alternately lift one another from the ground, by leaning forward; at the same time the one, when it is his or her turn to lift, crying, Wee cheese, [i.e., weigh] and the other, when he lifts, answering, Wee butter, Roxb.

E. Alexanders.

* WEED, s. Formerly used in S. as in E.
for dress.

"This was the ordinary weed [brown velvet coats side to their hough, with boards of black velvet, &c.]
of his majesty's foot guards." Spalding, i. 22.

* To WEED, v. a. To thin growing plants by taking out the smaller ones; as, "to weed firs," S.

WEEDER-CLIPS, WEEDOCK, s. The instrument for grubbing up weeds, S.

The rough bur-thistle, spreading wide
Among the bearded bear,
I turn'd the weeder-clips aside,
And spared the symbol dear.

V. Minstrelsy Border, I. Introd. cxxx.

V. CLIPS.

WEEDINS, s. pl. What is pulled up, or cut out, in thinning trees, &c.

WEEG, s. The Kittiwake, Larus minuta,
Linn., Shetl.

Shall we view this term as originally the same with wake in the Scottish name? In Sw. the name of the Anas Fuligula is Wigge; Linn. Faun. Suec. N. 132.
As this bird is denominated the Lesser Sea Swallow, it may be observed that in Isl. a swallow is called igda and egda.

To WEEGLE, WEEGLIE, v. n. To waggle.
V. WAIGLE.

WEEGLE, s. An act of wagging or waddling. WEEGLER, s. One who waddles, S.

[To WEEGLE-WAGGLE, v. n. To shake or move from side to side rapidly, Clydes.,
Banffs.]

WEEGLIE, WEEGLIE, adj. 1. Wagging, unstable, S.

2. Having a wriggling motion in walking, S.
Belg. de-weeglik, unstable, pliable.

[WEEGLIE-WAGGLIE, WEEGLE-WAGGLIE,
adj. Very unstable, S.]

[WEEOLTIE-WAGGLTIE, adv. Shaking from side to side, without stability, Clydes.,
Banffs.]

WEEK, s. Weeks of the month. V. WEIL.

WEEL, WELL, with its composites. V.
WEIL.

WEEM, s. 1. A natural cave, Fife, Ang.

"In the town there is a large cove, anciently called a weem. The pits produced by the working of the coal, and the striking natural object of the core or weem, may have given birth to the name of the parish."
P. Pittenweem, Fife, Statist. Acc., iv. p. 369.

2. An artificial cave, or subterraneous building, Ang.

"A little westward from the house of Tealing, about 60 or 70 years ago, was discovered an artificial cave or subterraneous passage, such as is sometimes called by the country people a weem. It was composed of large loose stones." P. Tealing, Forfars. Ibid., p. 101.

From Gael. wamha, a cave; unless allied to Teut.
weme, terebra, a wimble, as an excavation may be compared to what is bored.

[To WEEN, v. n. To boast, the Banffs. pron.
of Wind, q. v.]

WEEPERS, s. pl. Strips of muslin, or cambric, stitched on the extremities of the sleeves of a black coat or gown, as a badge of mourning, S.

Auld, cantie Kyle may weepers wear,
An' stain them wi' the saut, saut tear.
Burns, iii. 215.

WEER, s. Fear, apprehension. V. WERE.

WEERELY, adj. Warlike.

He sall deliver thee at need,
And saue thy life from pestilence;
His wings are thy weerely weed;
His pen[n]is are thy strang defence.

Po. XCI. Poems Sixteenth Cent., i. 98.

V. under WERE, war.

WEERIGILLS, s. pl. V. WEIRIEGILLS.

WEERIT, s. 1. The name given to the young of the Guillemot, or Colymbus
Troile, Mearns.

It is supposed that the name has originated from their cry, which it resembles in sound; as they have an incessant peevish note. Brisson, however, gives this bird the name of Uria. Hence,

2. A peevish child, ibid.

WEESE, s. A bundle of straw; also, a stuffed roll of cloth, of a circular form, which a woman puts on her head, for enabling her to carry on it a wooden vessel,
&c. From the same origin with Weasses.
V. WAESE.

To WEESE, WEEZE, v. n. To ooze, to distil gently, S. B.

Or sinn'd ye wi' yon greetin cheese,
Frae which the tears profusely weeze!
Morison's Poems, p. 105.

Both the S. and E. terms are evidently allied to Isl. vos, voesa, veisa, humor, mador, humectatio, perfusio aquae; G. Andr., vo. Vaele, p. 249, 250. Dan.-Sax. væse, id.; A.-S. weas, weae, liquor, weosing, moist, "succus plenus, full of juice or moisture," Somner. G. Andr. views Germ. wasser as formed from wassa, the genit. of Isl. veitna; and Isl. oes signifies the mouth of a river.

A.-S. weas also signifies humor, mador, aqua. Hiekes has observed that in E. a marshy and moist place is called a wash. Gramm. A.-S., c. 20.

WEESH, interj. Addressed to a horse, to make him go to the right hand, Aberd. [The opposite of "come ader," i.e., come hither.]

Su.-G. hyss, est vox sues abigentium; Thro. Rather allied perhaps to hiss-a, incitare; Teut. hissch-en de honden, instigare canes.

[WEESHIE, WEESHIE-WASHIE. V. WISHY-WASHIE.]

WEEST, part. adj. Depressed with dullness, Buchan.

— For Jamie maun ilk shepherd mourn;
Shepherds to come shall weest his sacred urn.
Pat. Oh! wæs my heart! nae ferlie, then, that ye
Should gang aæ weest', and tine your wonted glee.

Tarras's Poems, p. 115.

Weest is expl. "hebetated;" GL. ibid. R. hebetated. Teut. wease signifies, dilutum multi cerevisiarum; wease, orphanus; Isl. vos, miseria, and veasa, inquietare. But the origin is very doubtful; although the last mentioned term seems to have the preferable claim. It might indeed originate from the common expression used in lamentation, "Wæ's me," wo is me, an A.-S. idiom.

WEET, WEETY, adj. Wet, rainy; as, a weety day, S. V. WEIT.

The gait was ill, our feet war bare,
The night is weety.

The Farmer's Ha', st. 36.

WEET, s. Rain, S.

"Monro caused big up betwixt the crosses a court de guard, for saving his soldiers frae weel or cold on the night, and wherein they should be, except such as were on watch." Spalding, i. 218rd.

WEETNESS, s. 1. Wet, rainy weather, S.

2. Applied to any thing drinkable, Tweed.

WEET-MY-FIT, s. The quail, Roxb., Fife, Perth.

The name seems given from its cry, as if the sound were equivalent to "Wet my foot."

To WEEUK, WEEAK, v. n. A term used to denote the squeaking of rats, the neighing of stallions, or the bellowing of bulls when they raise their voice to the shrillest pitch, Moray; Weeack, Buchan.

This is obviously a provincial variety of Wheak, Week, to whine, q. v. Teut. wiechel-en, hiinnire, would seem to be a diminutive from the radical term. This was secondarily used to signify divination, because, as Tacitus testifies, the Germans were wont to divine from the neighing of horses. V. Kilian, vo. Wychelen.

[WEFF, adj. Having a musty smell, Shetl.]

WEFFIL, adj. Limber, supple, not stiff, S.

A.-S. weafol, fluctuans; Teut. wepel, vagus; weyfel-en, vagari, vacillare; weyfel-er, homo vagus, inconstans; Germ. wappel-n, motitari; Isl. veif-a, vibrare, veid-a, to twist or twine one from his own opinion. Here we perceive the true origin of E. schiffle.

WEFFILNESS, s. Limberness, the state opposed to stiffness, S.

WEFFLIN, WEFFLUM, s. The back-lade, or course of water at the back of the mill-wheel, Ang.

When a mill is so overcharged with water from behind, that the wheel cannot move, the term quæfiva is used in Su.-G. But perhaps the similarity of sound is merely accidental.

WEFT, s. Woof. V. WAFT.

WEFT, s. A signal by waving.

"Your boatmen lie on their oars, and there have already been made two wefts from the warder's turret, to intimate that those in the castle are impatient for your return." Abbot, iii. 66. V. WAFT, v. and s.

WEHAW, interj. "A cry which displeases horses," &c. Gall. Enc.

To WEID, v. n. To become furious. V. WEDE.

WEID, adj. Furious, synonym. wod.

He girt, he glourt, he gapt as he war weid,
And quhylum sat still in aye studying;
And quhylum on his buik he was reydling.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 77.

V. WEDE, v.

A. Bor. "wead, very angry; mad, in a figurative sense." Grose derives it from Wode. But it is from the old v. V. WEDE, v.

WEID, s. 1. A kind of fever to which women in child-bed, or nurses, are subject, S.

—"There to appearance she still lay, very sick of a fever, incident to women in her situation, and here termed a weid." Edin. Mag. March 1819, p. 220.

Men, women, and animals are liable to be affected by this disease. "Milch cows are not unfrequently subject to what is here called a weid, which is a kind of feverish affection." Agr. Surv. W. Loth., p. 163.

2. A fit of the ague, Tweedd.

Germ. weide, or weite, corresponds to Fr. accablé as signifying that one is oppressed with disease.

WEID, Gawan and Gol., i. 4. Leg. Theid.

All the wyis in welth he woillis in weid,
Sall halely be at your will, all that is his.

Leg. theid, as in Edit. 1503.

To WEIF, v. a. To weave; part. pa. weyff, woven.

With subtell slayis, and hir heddes slee
Riche lenye wobbis naityl weyff sche.

Doug. Virgil, 204, 45.

—Quharon was weyf, in subtell goldin thredis,
Kynge Troyus son, the fare Ganymedis.

Ibid. 186, 6.

A.-S. wef-an, Isl. wef-a, Su.-G. wasw-a, Moes.-G. waib-jan, C. B. gwoce, texere.

[WEIGH, s. A denomination of weight used in Orkn. and Shetl., equal to 1 cwt.; as, a weigh of fish.]

[To WEIGHT, WECHT, v. a. To weigh. V. under WEYES.]

WEIGHT, WEGHT, s. An instrument for winnowing the corn. V. WECHT.

WEIK, WEEK, s. A corner or angle. The weiks of the mouth, the corners or sides of it, S., wikes, A. Bor. id. The weik of the ee, the corner of it, S.

Auld Meg the tory took great care
To weed out ilka sable hair,
Plucking out all that look'd like youth,
Frae crown of head to weck of mouth.

Ramsay's Poems, li. 496.

It is sometimes written wick. V. example in WICK, s. a bay.

Thoresby mentions Yorks. "warcks, or corners of the mustachios;" Ray's Lett., p. 340. This seems originally the same word.

Su.-G. wik, angulus, orgen wik, the corner of the eye; Alem. geuwig, id. Teut. flexio, cessio. Perhaps hoeck, angulus, is radically the same.

The same phraseology occurs in Isl., Dan., and Sw. Isl. munneig, canthus oris; Dan. mundicig, "the corner of the mouth," Wolff; Sw. munviken, id., Wideg. Isl. augnarik, Dan. oerwig, sinus oculorum.

The terms, in different languages, originally denoting any angle or corner, have been particularly applied to those formed by water. A.-S. wic, the curving reach of a river, Somner; Teut. wijk, id. Su.-G. wik, Isl. wik, a bay of the sea; whence pirates were called Viking-ur, because they generally lurked in places of this description.

The town of Wick in Caithness seems to be named from its vicinity to a small bay, although it has been otherwise explained.

"The ancient and modern name of this parish, as far as can be now ascertained, is that of Wick, an appellation common all over the Northern continent of Europe, supposed to signify the same with the Latin word vicus, a village or small town, particularly when lying adjacent to a bay, or arm of the sea, resembling a wicket." P. Wick, Caithn. Statist. Acc., x. i. V. WICK, s.

To HING BY THE WEIKS OF THE MOUTH.
To keep the last hold of any thing, to keep hold to the utmost.

"The men of the world say, we will sell the truth: we will let them ken that we will hing by the wicks of the mouth for the least point of truth." Mich. Bruce's Soul-Confirmation, p. 18.

WEIL, s. An eddy. V. WELE.

WEIL, WEILL, WEEL, adj. 1. Well, in health, S. "Weel, well, North," Grose.

2. Sufficiently dressed; applied to meat. "Is the denner weel?" Is it ready to be served up? Clydes., Roxb.

VOL. IV.

With hunger smit, may hap they seem to feel,
Or cry, perhaps, Oh! is the hodgill weel?

A. Scott's Poems, p. 10.

Or it may be used as the adv. Then the phrase must be viewed as elliptical for "well done."

3. Many.

Bot all to few with him he had,
The quethir he bauldly thaim abaid;
And weill oot, at thair fryst metyng,
War layd at erd, but recoveryng.

Barbour, iii. 15, MS.

It is used in the same sense as feill elsewhere. In edit. 1620, p. 38.

And feill of them at their first meeting, &c.

V. FEIL.

Engelond ys a weel god lond.

R. Glouc., l. l. OL Wynt.

WEIL, WEEL, WELE, WELLE, adv. Very, [quite well], joined with gret, gud, &c.

"Mair, ane uther coitt of blew velvet weill auld and worn." Inventories, A. 1562, p. 159; i. e. "very old and much worn."

For in-til wele gret space thare-by Wes nothir hows lewyd, na herbry.

Wyntown, viii. 37. 119.

V. GUD, adj.

And sic lik men thai waillyt weill gud speid.

Wallace, ix. 706, MS.

Sibb. justly observes that this, as prefixed to adjectives, is "commonly used in a good sense, as sere [sair] in a bad." V. FEIL.

In this sense it is often conjoined with the comparative and superlative war and warst. Thus, "It cudna be weill war," S. This nearly corresponds with the E. phrase, "It could not weel be worse;" but, from the unaccountable influence of idiom, it seems, at least to a Scottish ear, to express a more forcible idea, "Gin ye tak that way, it'll be weill war," S. Here it seems to have one of the senses of A.-S. wel, weil. This is vere, revera, sane; or, as expressed by Somner, "greatly, very much." Teut. weil is rendered valde. It is used in a similar mode in the superlative; as, "He abus'd me the weel warst that could be," S.B.; He could not have given me more abusive language.

WEIL, WEILL, WEEL, s. 1. Prosperity, advantage.

For victory me hatis not, dar I say,
Nor list sik wyse withdraw their handis tway,
That I refuse suld till assay ony thing,
Quhilk mycht sa grete beleif of weil inbring.

Doug. Virgil, 373, 35.

"The weill of the kingdom's metropolis of the city of our solemnities, must also be here considered, in so far as it draws not with it any considerable prejudice to the rest of the country." Fount. Dec. Suppl., u. 567.

Hence weil is me, S., happy am I, q. It is well to me. Weil is yow, happy are ye.

Now weilis yow priestis, weilis yow, in all your Iyis,
That ar nocht waddit with sic wicket wywis.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 55.

2. A benefit.

A.-S. wel, well, bene. Wel beon, bene esse. Wel is tham the that mot; Bene est iis quibus possit esse; Caed., 99. 8. Wel us waes; Bene nobis erat; Num. xi. 18, from weel, bene, and is, est. Su.-G. weeles mig, O! me felicem.

[WEIL-AFF, WEEL-AFF, adj. In comfortable circumstances, fortunate, Clydes.]

[WEIL-AT-HIMSEL, adj. Applied to a person grown stout, Shetl.]

WEIL-BUILT, adj. Strongly made, S.

"But d'ye hear Laddy Sibby, hae nae thing to do wi' that feckless coif o' a Frenchman; leuk at Sir John Gawky there, a stout weel-built caller chield, an' ne'er fash your thumb wi' the monshiera." Saxon and Gael, i. 81.

WEIL-FAUR'T, WEILL-FARAND, adj. Well-favoured, having a handsome or goodly appearance, S. V. FYRAND.

There was a may, and a weel-faur'd may,
Lived high up in yon glen;
Her name was Katharine Sanfarie,
She was courted by many men.

Minstrelsy Border, i. 238.

In the same manner, ill-faur'd or ill-faur'd is used for hard-favoured, S.

"'He's a pratty man, a very pratty man,' said Evan Dhu.—'He's very weel,' said the Widow Flockhart, 'but no naithing so weel-faur'd [rather weel-faur'd] as your colonel, ensign.'" Waverley, ii. 238.

"Jenny, who was a weel-faur't lassie, had as many wooers as Tibbie Fowler." The Steam-Boat, p. 357.

WEIL-FAUR'TLIE, adv. 1. Handsomely, S.

2. Avowedly, as opposed to any clandestine measure, S.

3. "With a good grace," S., Gl. Shirr.

WEIL-FAUR'TNESS, s. Handsomeness, S.

[WEIL-GAIN, WEEL-GAUN, adj. Spirited, applied to animals; smoothly working, applied to machinery, Clydes.]

WEIL-GAITIT, part. adj. A term applied to a horse that is thoroughly broke, S.

[WEIL-GIRST, WEEL-GIRSED, adj. Fed on good pasture, Banffs.]

[WEIL-GROWN, adj. Nearly mature, nearly at the age of puberty, S.]

[WEIL-HAINT, adj. Well kept, well preserved, little used, S.]

[WEIL-HAUDEN-IN, adj. Saved to good purpose, S.]

WEILL-HEARTIT, adj. 1. Hopeful, not dejected.

[2. Well disposed, liberal, willing to give, Banffs.]

WEILNESS, s. The state of being in good health, Clydes.

WEIL-PAID, adj. 1. Well satisfied, Buchan, Mearns. V. ILL-PAID.

[2. Severely beaten, well whipped, S.]

WEIL-PUT-ON, adj. Well dressed, S.

"I met ano very honest, fair-spoken, weel put-on gentleman," &c. Nigel, i. 77.

WEEL-SLEEKIT, adj. Well drubbed, S.

"If ye have ony wish for a weel-sleekit hide, ye can follow me out to the green fornent the amidy-door." Macrimmon, iv. 137.

In reference perhaps to the gloss produced on the skin of a horse by currying, as the E. v. to curry is used as signifying to beat, to drub.

[WEIL-SOCHT, adj. Very much exhausted, Banffs.]

WEIL TO LIVE, 1. In easy circumstances.

Well to live is given as E. by Sherwood, and expl. by Fr. Bien moyennée, aisé, riche.

2. Topsy, elevated with drink, half seas over.

WEEL TO PASS, In comparative affluence, S.

"Ye see, Ailie and me we're weel to pass, and we would like the lassies to hae a wee bit mair lair than oursells, and to be neighbourlike—that would we." Guy Mannering, ii. 321.

Well enough to pass is an E. phrase, but more limited in its sense than this.

WEILL-WAL'D, adj. Well-chosen; [syn. hand-waled.] V. WALE, v.

[WEIL-WAURT, adj. Well-spent, well bestowed; also, well deserved, as, it's weil-waurt ye want, you deserve to want, S.]

WEILL-WILLAR, s. A friend, a well-wisher.

"The earle of Huntlie—brunt the on syd of the toun,—bot spaired the other syd, be reasonn the greatest pairt thair of perteaned to his awin favoureris and weillwilleris." Pitcottie, Ed. 1814. Goodwillers, Edit. 1728.

"The said Admiral—sall gar the heidismen, capitanis, and mariucris of ilk ship, befor thair departing, sweir, that he sall weill and richteously govern, but doing damage to our soverane Loril's subjectis, friendis, allyais, favouraris or weill-willaris." Sea Lawis, Balfour's Pract., p. 632.

"Weillwillaris, wellwishers;" Aberd. Reg.

WEILL-WILLIE, WEILL-WILLIT, adj. 1. Liberal, not niggardly, S.

"Willy (as they say) ill willy, good willy, i.e., malevolent, benevolent, but mostly used for sparing or liberal." Rudd.

"Naething is difficult to a well-willed man;"—Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 26.

Su.-t. willic, willing, waehwillic, A.-S. wellwillenda, benevolus.

Well-wylled is given by Palagr. in a more general sense, being rendered, de bonne volonté. It is thus expl., Prompt. Parv., "Wel wyllynge or other gode wyl. Benevolus."

[2. Kindly disposed, very willing, Clydes., Banffs.]

TO WEILD, v. a. 1. To obtain, by whatever means; to manage, so as to accomplish.

Weild be his will, if he obtain his desire.

He rekkyis nowthir the richt, nor rekles report,
Al is wele done, God wate, weild be his wyl.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 233, a, 28.

2. To enter on possession of an estate; used as a n. v.

Gif any deys in this bataille,
His ayr, but ward, releff, or taile,
On the fyrst day sall Weid;
All be he neulr sa young off eld.

Barbour, xii. 322, MS.

A.-S. weald-an, potiri.

WEILDING, part. pr. Prob., running wild.

—"The inexpert student, in search of letters Weilding amidst infinite variety, is cast in such doubt of choice, that, tasting about, before hee happilie fall on ought worthy to feed on, appetite is spent, and he filled with hee cannot tell what." Bp. Forbes on the Revel. Dedie.

Apparently "running wild," or "bewildering himself;" like Su.-G. fara wild, a via aberrare, foerwillia, in errorem abducere.

WEILL, s. A calf.

"An article for slaughter of Weillis and lambis." Acts Ja. VI., 1581, Ed. 1814, p. 214. V. VEIL.

WEIN, s. Barbour, xv. 249. Leg. Wem, as in MS.

In tyme of trewys ischyt thai;
And in sic tyme as on Pasche day,
Quhen God rais for to sauf mankind,
Fra Wem of auld Adamys syne.

Weme, edit. 1620.

A.-S. Wem, Wemm, labes, macula. E. Wem signifies a spot; also, a scar. V. WEMMYT, UNWEMMYT.

[WEIR, s. Doubt, Barbour, iv. 222. V. WERE.]

WEIR, s. 1. A hedge, Galloway; used as synon. with E. Fence.

Now weir an' fence o' wattled rice
The hained fields inclose;
Poor Brawny presses 'gainst the thorn,
But cannot reach the rose.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 51.

Su.-G. Waer-ia, tueri; as a hedge is used for defence. A.-S. Waer, Wer, septum, sepimentum, retinaculum. (Flandr. Weer, id.); from Waer-ian, defendere. This seems originally the same with E. Weir. V. YAIR.

2. A term including cows and ewes giving milk, Roxb.

It occurs in this sense in Percy's Ballads; and is obviously, like Weir, a hedge, from A.-S. Waer, sepimentum, because cows or ewes, giving milk, were formerly inclosed in a fold.

To WEIR, v. a. To herd, to keep, to watch over, Roxb.

He tether'd his tyke ayont the dyke,
And bad it Weir the corn.

Old Song.

V. WER, &c., also WEAR, v. to guard.

WEIR-BUSE, s. A partition between cows, Clydes.; q. a partition for defence. V. BUSE.

WEIR, s. WER; WEIR-MEN, WEIR-HORS, WEIRLY, WEIR-WALL. V. WERE.

WEIR of Law. The act of a person, charged with a debt of which there is no legal evidence, whether by contract or by the presence of witnesses, who engages, in the next court, to clear himself of it by his own oath, supported by the oaths of five compurgators, who shall attest their belief that he swears truly.

This is synon. with the E. forensic phrase, Wager of Law: (V. Jacob's Dict.) and L.B. caliare legem. The E. phrase is from O. Fr. gagiere, gaigiere, act, promise, engagement; corresponding with L.B. radium, gagium. V. Roquefort. Ours seems to be immediately from A.-S. Waere, foedus, pactum; whence, as Lye observes, Waer-borh, Wer-borh, fidejussor, sponsor.

There is the near affinity between the latter, and the language in the Act of Ja. I., "a borgh—foundin is a Weir of law."

"Quhare twa partiis apperis at the bar, and the tane strek a borgh apone a Weir of law, the tothir party sall haf leif to be avisit, gif he will ask it, quethir he will reconter it or nocht:—And gif he reconteris the borgh, & strenthis it with resonnis, he & his party removit the court." Acts Ja. I., A. 1429, Ed. 1814, p. 18, c. 7.

The language of Quon. Attach. on this head is; Et si non habeat probationem, pars negans suum debitum, faciat legem suam, ad proximam Curiam cum se sexto. Cap. 5, sect. 5.

It might seem that the phrase had an intimate connexion with A.-S. Wer-ian, defendere; Germ. Wer, Alem. Waere, Wera, uera, defensio; Su.-G. Waer-ja, sensu forensi juramento purgatorio sese defendere, corresponding with Isl. Waernar ed, juramentum defensorium, the synonym of which, as given by Verelius is Sw. Waerje eed.

It may be subjoined, that Schilter explains Alem. gewaer as signifying, testis; vo. Waere. He at the same time gives sponso as the primary sense of Waere, and renders kenuaro, spondeo, constituo, pro me vel pro alio. L.B. garire also signifies, tueri, protegere, evidently formed from the Goth. terms bearing this meaning; and O. Fr. garir, guar-ir, garantir, se mettre en sureté, and garieur, caution, répondant, garant. Roquefort.

This has, however, most probably been meant, although inaccurately, as a translation of L.B. Wer-lade, A.-S. Wer-lade, compounded of Wer, aestimatio capitis, and lada, purgatio, excusatio. It denoted the act by which a man, accused of homicide, offered to purify himself by witnesses of the crime charged against him, or by ordeal; in consequence of which he became free from payment of the were or pecuniary mulct due to the relations of the person slain. Sometimes thirty witnesses were required. But the number varied according to the rank of the person accused; a greater number of witnesses being requisite for the purgation of a great man, than for that of one of inferior station. When witnesses were admitted, he was said to be purged more canonico: if he appealed to ordeal, or the judgment of God, it was denominated a purgation more vulgari. Lade is from A.-S. lad-ian, purgare, culpa liberare. V. Spelm. Gl. vo. Lada and Wer-lada. The term was used as early as the reign of Canute V. Lye, and Du Cange.

—"A Borgh is foundin in a court vpon a Weir of law," &c. Acts Ja. I., 1429, c. 130. V. BORH, &c. Perhaps from A.-S. Waer, Wer, foedus, pactum; whence Waer-borh, Wer-borh, fidejussor, sponsor.

To Strek a Borgh apone a Weir of Law, apparently signifies, to enter into suretyships that the person shall legally purge himself from the crime charged against him.

WEIRD, WERD, WERDE, WEERD, s. 1. Fate, destiny, S.

Now will I the werd rehers,
As I fynd of that stane in wers;
Ni fullat fatum, Scoti quocumque locatum
Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.
Bjukt gyf werds falyhand be,
Quhare-eyr that stane yhe segyt se,
Thare sall the Scottis be regnaud,
And Lordlys hale ours all that land.

Wyntoun, iii. 9, 43, 47.

How euer this day the fortoun with thame standis,
Bruke wele thare chance and werd on athir handis.
Doug. Virgil, 317, 18.

But they'll say, She's a wise wife that kens her ain werd.
Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 129.

2. Used as equivalent to prediction.

Altho' his nither, in her werds,
Foretald his death at Troy,
I soon prevail'd wi' her 'o send
The young man to the play.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 18.

Weird Sisters, the Fates. This corresponds to Lat. Parcae.

The remanant hereof, quhat euer be it,
The werd sisteris defendis that suld be wit.
Doug. Virgil, 80, 48.

i.e., forbid that it should be known.

The werd sisters wandring, as they were wont then,
Saw ravens rugand at that ratton by a ron ruit.
They mused at the mandrake unmade like a man,
A beast bund with a buneward in an auld buit.
Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 12.

They are sometimes denominated the Weirds.

Wo worth (quoth the Weirds) the wights that thee wrought;

Threed-bair be thair thrift, as thou art wanthrevin.
Ibid., p. 14.

3. Used in the sense of fact, as denoting something that really takes place.

"After word comes Weird; fair fall them that call me Madam;" S. Prov. "A facetious answer to them who call you by a higher title than your present station deserues; as calling a young clergyman Doctor, or a young merchant Alderman, as if you would say,
"All in good time." Kelly, p. 2.

The general idea conveyed by this common Prov.
is, that things which are talked of, although perhaps only in jest, often eventually prove to be true.

This corresponds to one of the senses given to the
A.-S. word.

4. Fate is also personified under the name of Weird used in the singular.

Quhom suld I warie bot my wicked Weird,
Quha span my thrifles thraward fatal thread?
Montgomery.

V. WIDDERSYNNIS.

A.-S. wyrd, fatum, fortuna, eventus; Wyrde, Fata, Parcae; Franc. Urdi. Isl. Urd is the name of the first of the Fates, which G. Andr. derives from werd, so, werd-a, fieri, in the same manner as our weird, werd, seems to be from Teut. werd-en, A.-S. weord-an, wyrd-an, id. V. WORTH, v.

To WEIRD, WEERD, v. a. 1. To determine or assign as one's fate.

An' now these darts that weered were
To tak the town o' Troy,
To get meat for his gabb, he man
Against the birds employ.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 6.

The part. pa. is commonly used, S.B.

2. To predict; to assign as one's fate in the language of prophecy.

I weird ye to a fiery beast,
And relieved sall ye never be,
Till Kempion, the kingis son,
Cum to the crag, and thrice kiss thee.
Minstrelsy Border, xi. 103.

And what the doom sae dire, that thou
Doest weird to mine or me?
Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 238.

3. To make liable to, to place in the state of being exposed to, any moral or physical evil.

Erlinton had a fair daughter,
I wat he weird her in a great sin,
For he has built a bigly bower,
An' a' to put that lady in.

"Placed her in danger of committing a great sin."
N. Minstrelsy Border, iii. 235.

Weird seems to be used for weirded.

There is a sense in which the Isl. v. is used, which is nearly allied to this; cogi, teneri, Halderson. As
G. Andr. gives the latter sense, he adds; Verdung, obligatio, qua quis ad aliquid agendum tenetur.

WEIRDIN, WIERDIN, part. adj. Employed for the purpose of divination, S.B.

Jock Din is to the yard right sly,
To saw his wierdin piz.

Tarras's Poems, p. 68.

i.e., pease.

"Which he does in this form:—One for each sweetheart he may have occasion to have, or has in view; when the first briered [sprung] pea foretells, with undoubted surety, his unavoidable alliance with the girl it represents." N. ibid.

The pea seems to be of great importance in divination. For it is also used in the bannocks baked for this evening.

They wyle the bannock for the weird,
The pea that grannie set."

"As there was a pea dropped amongst part of the bannocks, each receives one [bannock,] and must eat it before the company; and whoever has the good luck of catching it, has also decided their fate as to the surety of wedlock." N., ibid. p. 73.

We learn from Grose, that a superstition, nearly allied to this, prevails, A. Bor. "Scadding of Peas; a custom in the North of boiling the common grey pease in the shell, and eating them with butter and salt. A bean, shell and all, is put into one of the pea-pods; whosoever gets this bean is to be first married."
Gl.

Gay, in his "Spell," refers to the use of a peascod, containing "three times three," as a charm for divining the future lot in marriage. V. Ellis's Brand,
i. 303.

"In the old Roman Calendar," says Brand,—"I find it observed on this day, that a dole is made of soft beans. I can hardly entertain a doubt but that our custom is derived from hence.—Why we have substituted Pease I know not, unless it was because they are a pulse somewhat fitter to be eaten at this season of the year. They are given away in a kind of dole at this day." Ibid. i. 97, 98.

There can be no doubt that this learned writer justly traces the origin of this custom to heathenism. "Beans were given away," as he remarks, "in the funeral ceremonies of heathen Rome." According to Pliny,
"Pythagoras expressly forbid to eat beanes: but as some have thought and taught, it was because folke imagined, that the soules of such as were departed had residence therein: which is the reason also that they be ordinarily used and eaten at the funerals and obsequies of the dead. Varro also affirmeth, that the great priest or sacrificer, called the Flamine, abstaineth from beanes both in those respects aforesaid, as also for that there are to be scene in the flower thereof certaiue letters and characters that shew heaviness and signes of death." This rather betokens bad luck. But something follows, which proves that they also carried in them a more favourable omen. "There was observed in old time a religious ceremonie in beanes; for when they had sowed their ground, their manner was, of all other corne to bring backe with them out of the field some beanes for good lucke sake; presaging thereby, that their corne would returne home againe unto them.—Likewise, in all port sales it was thought, that if beanes were entermingled with the goods offered to be sold, they would be luckie and gainefull to the seller." Hist. B. xviii. c. 12.

By the Egyptians, this species of pulse was venerated as a deity, and accounted so sacred that they neither sowed nor eat beanes, and were even afraid to look on them. Plutarch Sympos. ap. Pierii Hieroglyph. Fol. 413, a.

WEIRDLESS, WIERDLESS, adj. 1. Thriftless, not prosperous, S. It is applied to those with whom nothing prospers; and seems to include both the idea of their own inactivity, and at the same time of something cross in their lot.

2. Destitute of any capacity to manage worldly affairs, S.

WEIRDLESSNESS, s. Wasteful mismanagement, S. B.

WEIRDLY, adj. Happy, prosperous, South of S.

In thy green and grassy crook
Mair lies hid than crusted stanes;
In thy bein and weirdly nook
Lie some stout Clan-Gillian banes.
Jacobite Relics, ii. 189.

But Harden was a weirdly man,
A cunnin tod was he;
He lockit his sons in prison straung,
And wi' him bore the key.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 46.

WEIRIEGILLS, WEERIGILLS, s. pl. Quarrels. In the weiriegills, in the act of quarrelling, Mearns.

At the weiriegills is the phrase, as used in Berwicks.; expl. "in a state of wrangling, brawling so as to appear to be on the point of fighting."

It has been conjectured that this may be from weir, war, and gills, q. a strife of lungs. Can it be an oblique use of the ancient term A.-S. wer-gild, Teut. were-gheld, L. B. werigeld-um, pretium quo vir occisus aestimatur; "the price or value of man's life, or of a slain man?" V. Somner. Many quarrels were doubtless occasioned by the unreasonable demands made on the one side, and the provoking depreciation on the other.

WEIRS. In weirs. V. WIERS.

To WEISE, WYSE, v. a. 1. To use caution or policy, for attaining any object in view; to prevail by. prudence or art, S., pron. as E. wise.

He warily did her weise and wield,
To Collingtoun-Broom, a full good beild,
And warmest als in a' that field.

Watson's Coll., i. 41.

2. To guide, to lead, to direct, S., "to train," Gl. Shirr. To wyse a-jee, to direct in a bending course.

Driving their baws frae whins or tee,
Their's no nae gowfer to be seen;
Nor dousser fowk wysing a-jee
The hyast boulds on Tamson's green.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 205.

In this sense, to weise a ball is to aim a bullet with such caution as to hit the mark, S.

"Ye ken yersell there's mony o' them wadna mind a hawbec the weiseing a ball through the Prince himsell, an the chief gae them the wink; or whether he did or no, if they thought it wad please him when it was done." Waverley, iii. 132.

"I'll uphad it, the biggest man in Scotland shouldna tak a gun frae me or I had weiseid the slugs through him, though I'm but sic a little feckless body." Guy Mannering, ii. 185.

3. "To turn, to incline;" Gl. Sibb., S.

To weise a stane, to move it when it is a heavy one, rather by art than by strength.

"Every miller wad wyse the water to his ain mill." Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 25.

"Weise yoursel a wee easel-ward—a wee mair yet to that ither stane." Antiquary, i. 162.

4. To draw or let out any thing cautiously, so as to prevent it from breaking; as, in making a rope of tow or straw, one is said to weise out the tow or straw, S.

5. To Weise in, or out, to allow to go in or out, by removing any impedient; as, by opening a door, Roxb.

"There was a necessity for some reformation in the office, and I foresaw that the same would never be accomplished, unless I could get Mr. M'Laure weiseid out of it, and myself appointed his successor." The Provost, p. 24.

From Teut. wys-en, Su.-G. weis-a, docere, ostendere, whence wise, dux; Alem. weis-en, Germ. weis-en, ducere. Dies dine scap uisen ad pascha eitar; Who lead thy sheep to the pastures of life; Willeram., i. 7.

This word may have been originally borrowed from a pastoral life. To weise the sheep into the fould or bught, is a phrase still used by our shepherds.

To WEISE, WYSE, v. n. To incline, S.

But see the sheep are wysing to the cleugh;
Thomas has loos'd his ousen frae the pleugh.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 7.

[Synon. airtin.]

WEIST, s. The west, Aberd. Reg.

To WEIT, v. n. To try, to make inquiry.

Refreschit he wes with meit, drynk, and with heit,
Quhill causyt him throuch naturall cours to weit,
Quhar he suld sleipe, in sekynes to be.

Wallace, v. 346, MS.

This v. is undoubtedly formed from that which signifies to know, S. weit, wait, E. wit, not. The same formation occurs in other Northern languages. Su.-G. wit-a, to prove, is formed from wit-a, to know; Germ. wiss-en, certificare, facere ut cognoscat, from weis, certus. Mos.-G. wit-an, to know, is also used as denoting observation and watching. A.-S. wit-an as prize.

arily signifies, scire; in a secondary sense to take care, curare, providere. Wachter indeed denies the affinity between the two ideas. "It is one thing," he says, "to know, and another to verify." But the observation made by Ihre is unanswerable. Speaking of weil-a, probare, he says: Est verbum facessans a weil-a, scire; quid enim aliud est argumentis probare, quam facere, ut alter rem certo resciscat?

WEIT, WEET, WEETY, adj. Wet, S. [V. WEET.]

WEIT, WEET, s. Rain, S.

Skurs was this said, quhen that ane blak tempest
Brayis but delay, and all the lift ouerkest,
Ane huge weil gan down poure and tumbill.

Doug. Virgil, 151, 6.

—To the weil my ripen'd aits had fawn.

Fergusson's Poems, xi. 6.

A.-S. waeta, humiditas, Isl. vaeta, pluvia. This seems radically the same with Moes.-G. wate, aqua, whence water.

To WEIT, WEET, v. a. To wet, S.

"Ye breed of the cat, you wad fain hae fish, but you hae nae will to weil your feet." Ferguson's S. Prov., [p. 35.

White o'er the linns the burnie pours,
And rising weets wi' misty showers
The birks of Aberfeldy.

Burns, iv. 271.

To WEIT, WEET, v. n. To rain; as, "It's ga'in to weil," the rain is about to fall; "It's weelin'," it rains, S.

Su.-G. waet-a, Isl. vaet-a, humectare.

To WEIZE, v. n. To direct. V. WEISE.

WELANY, s. Damage, injury; disgrace.

Bot Schyr Amery, that had the skaith
Off the bargane I tauld off er,
Raid till Ingland till purchases ther
Off armyt men gret cumpany,
To weng him off the welany
That Schyr Edunare, that noble knyght,
Him did by Cre in the fycht.

Barbour, ix. 545, MS.

In like manner, Hardyng says of the battle of Cressay:

The kyng Edward had all the victory,
The kyng Philip had all the wilany.

Chron., Fol. 183, a.

L. B. villania, injuria, probrium, convicium; Du Cange.

[WELANYS, adj. Villanous, disgraceful, Barbour, xix. 106.]

[To WELCOM, WEECUM, v. a. To welcome, Barbour, xi. 256.]

WELCOME-HAIM, s. 1. The repast presented to a bride, when she enters the house of a bridegroom, S.

The entertainment given, on this occasion, is in Isl. called hemkomsel, from hem, home, kom-a, to come, and oel, a feast, literally, ale, (cerevisium); q. the feast at coming home. Convivium, quod novi coninges in suis aedibus instrunt; Ihre, vo. Jul.

2. A computation among the neighbours of a newly-married pair, on the Monday after they have been kirked, S.

"On Monday evening, just about gloamin, the husbands and wives of the village assemble at the house of the newly-married couple, to celebrate the welcome-hame, by a good drink and funny crack." Edin. Mag. Nov. 1818, p. 415.

[WELCUMMYNE, s. Welcome, Barbour, xix. 794.]

To WELD, v. n. To possess. V. WEILD.

[WELE, adj. and adv. V. WEIL.]

WELE, WELL, s. Good; nearly the same with E. weal.

"The wise man Solomon, the mirrour of wisdom, and wondir of the world, was sent into this world as a spye from God for the weil of man." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 477, 478.

WELE IS, WELL IS. An old phraseology expressive of the happiness of the person concerning whom it is used, S.

"Weil is that man in whose mouth this word is put: and weil is that people that hes a man in whose mouth the Lord hes put his word; the busnesse and infirmite of the man will not be able to hinder the power thereof." Rollock on 2 Thes., p. 84. V. WEIL, s. Prosperity.

WELE, WELL, WEIL, s. A whirlpool, an eddy, S. pron. wiel, wheel; Lancash. weal.

Amydyss quham the flude he gan espy
Of Tyber flowand soft and esely,
With swirland weels and mekill yellow sand,
In to the sey did enter fast at hand.

Doug. Virgil, 205, 28.

My mare is young and very skiegh,
And in o' the weil she will drown me.

Minstrelsy Border, i. 202.

Whyles in a wiel it dimpl't.

Burns, iii. 137.

"In the Firth are several places remarkable for their danger, as the Wells of Swinna.—They are like unto the whirl-pools, turning about with such a violence, that if any boat come nigh unto them, they will suck or draw it in, and then turneth it about, until it be swallowed up: but these wells are only dangerous in a calm, and sea-men or fishers, to prevent their danger thereby, use when they come near them to cast in an oar, barrel or such like thing, on which the wells closing, they safely pass over." Brand's Orkn., p. 141, 142. V. WELE.

A.-S. wael, Teut. weel, wiel, vortex aquarum. These terms might seem to have a common origin with wall, a wave; A.-S. weall-an, Germ. wall-en, to boil, to bubble up; wallen des meers, the swelling of the sea. It must be observed, however, that Teut. wiel seems the same with the term corresponding to our wheel. Hence Kilian renders it: Profundus in amne locus quo aqua circumagitur. V. WELL-EY. Hence,

WEIL-HEAD, s. The same with weil.

They douked in at ae weil-head,
And out ay at the other.

Minstrelsy Border, xi. 47.

To WELL, WALL, v. a. 1. To forge, in the way of beating two or more pieces of metal into one mass, by means of heat, S.; weld, E.

Ane huge grote semely targett, or ane scheild,
Quhilk onlie micht resisting feild

Agane the dynt of Latyn wappinnis all,
In euery place seuen ply they well and cal.

Doug. Virgil, 258, 16.

Rudd. refers to A.-S. well-en, furere, aestuare; "because, before the separate pieces can be incorporated, they must be almost boiling hot." This learned writer does not seem to have observed, that the A.-S. v. signifies to be hot, or very hot, in general. Hence weallende fyr, fervens ignis. Bryne the weallth on helle, Incendium quod fervet in inferno; Lye. As far as we can judge from analogy, this seems to be the origin. For Su.-G. weall-a, aestuare, is used in the same sense, signifying also to well. Scen., however, thinks that it may be traced to Isl. raul-r, rol-r, jugum in cultro, verus aciem; as in Sw. arggwellla yxor, ferrum securibus jungere, ut apta fiat acies.

2. In a neut. sense, to be incorporated; used metaph.

Thy Lords chaste loue, and thy licentious lusts
From thy divided soule one other thrusts,
Pleasure in him, and fleshlie pleasure fall
So foule at strife, they can, nor mix nor weall.

More's True Crucifixe, p. 200.

I find that the O. E. v. was used in a sense very nearly allied to this. "Wellyn, mylke. Coagulo.—Wellyl, as mylke. Coagulatus. Inspissatus." Fr. Parv.

3. To Wall to. To comply with, to consent to; from the idea of uniting metals into one mass; Fife.

As v. a. it is also used literally. Coals are said to weall, S., when they mix together, or form into a cake.

Fraunces does not define the O.E. word quite accurately. "Well-yn metell. Fundo.—Wellud as metell. Fusus. Conflatilis." Prompt. Parv. Now, this is effected by beating when sufficiently heated. V. Weld, Johnson.

- WELLIT, part. [Set, mixed, blended.]

The wayis quhair the wicht went wer in wa wellit,
Wee nane as sture in the steid mycht stand him astart.
Houlate, ii. 15.

[Evidently implying mixed or blended.]

This may either signify, drowned in sorrow, from A.-S. weall-an, aestuare; or, vexed with sorrow, Su.-G. weall-a, angere, A.-S. waeled, waclid, vexatus.

- [WELL, s. Good. V. under WELE.]

- WELLE, s. Green sward.

Al in gleteland gokle gayly ho glides
The gates, with Sir Gawayn, bi the grene welle.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., i. 3.

It seems evident that this is originally the same with Fail, q. v.

- WELL-EY, WALLEE, s. That part of a quagmire in which there is a spring; S. wallee.

"Thay know nocht the ground, and fell sumtymes in swardis of mossis and sumtyme in Well Eys."
Bellend. Cron., B. v., c. 3.

Qu. the ee or eye of the spring. V. WELE, s.
[It may be noted that Heb. ain signifies both eye and fountain.]

- WELL-GRASS, WELL-GIRSE, WELL-KERSES, s. Water-cresses, S.

"Nasturtium aquaticum, well-grass." Wedderb.
Vocab., p. 18.

A.-S. wille-cerse, rivorum, i.e., aquaticum nasturtium; from wille, scaturigo, rivus, and cerse, nasturtium.

- WELL-HEAD, s. The spring from which a marsh is supplied, Lanarks.

"The charger on which he was mounted plunged up to the saddle-girths in a well-head, as they call the springs which supply the marshes." Tales of my Landlord, iii. 32, 33.

- WELL-MAKER, s. One who digs or forms wells; synon. well-shanker, Clydes.

"Aquilex, aquilegis, a well maker." Despart. Gram. C. 3, a.

- WELL-STRAND, s. A stream from a spring, S. A.

"The designation of the smallest rill of water is a syke or a well-strand, if from a spring-well. If the water is of quantity sufficient to drive a small water-wheel for light machinery, it is called a burn." Agr. Surv. Peeb., p. 16.

- WELL-SET, WELL-SITTING, part. adj.
Well-disposed, partial.

"The marquis of Huntly, and some well-set friends settled this feud." Spalding's Troubles, i. 8.

"If there was not a favourable juncto at one time, why, in so long a tract, did not one opportunity, one occasion, offer, of a well sitting Sheriff?—Surely no reason can be assigned for this but the monstrous enormity and inequality of these grants," &c. Fount. Dec. Suppl., ii. 647.

- WELL-WILLAND, s. A well-wisher.

—All othire gudis halyly,
That langyd til hym, or til hys men,
And of his well-willandis then,
Of this Erle the mychty kyn
Had gert bathe hery, wast, and bryn.

Wynlowen, vii. 9, 562

V. WEIL-WILLIE.

- WELL-WILLING, adj. Complacent.

"They came in a loving & well-willing manner to enquire."—Mr. Ja. Melville's MS. Mem., p. 298.

- WELSCHIE, adj. Insipid. V. WALSH.

- To WELT, v. a. 1. To throw, to drive.

For the Trojanis; or euer thay wald ceis,
Thare as the thekest rout was and mait preis,
Ane huge wecht or hepe of mekil stanyis
Ruschis and weltis down on thame attanis.

Doug. Virgil, 295, 32

2. v. n. To roll, [to totter.]

And than forsoith the granyis men micht here
Of thaim that steruyng and doun bettin bene,
That armour, wappinnis, and deile corps belene,
And stedis thrawand on the ground that weltis,
Mydlit with men, quhilke yeld the goist and sweltis.

Doug. Virgil, 337, 1.

i.e., which roll on the ground in agony, or in the throcs of death.

A. Bor. to well, to totter, to lean one way; to overthrow. Mocs.-G. wealt-ian, A.-S. wealt-an, Isl. veilt-a, Dan. vaelt-er, volvere, Lat. rotut-are. Welter has the same origin; although more immediately allied to Teut. welter-en; Sw. weltr-a, Fr. veault-er.

- To WELTER, v. a. 1. To roll, [to turn over.]

To welter a cart, S. to turn it upside down. The E. v. seems to be used only in an active sense; although O. E. waultre is synon. with wallow; Huloet. V. WELT.

For sum welteris ane grete stane vp ane bra,
Of quhom in noumer is Sisyphus ane of tha.
Doug. Virgil, 186, 12.

2. To overturn.

There is na state of thare style that standis content,
Knycht, clerk nor commoun,
Burgis, nor barroun,
All wald haue vp that is down,
Welterit the went.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, a. 20.

WELTERER, WALTERAR, s. One who overturns by violent means.

—"Sindrie were broght hame that war the kingis enemeis, walterari: of his kingdome, and enemeis of religione, which was ane appearand danger to his persone and realme." Bannatyne's Journal, p. 500.

A.-S. wem-leas, faultless. V. WEM.

WEMMYT, part. pa. Disfigured, scared.

So fast till hewyn was his face,
That it our all ner wemmyt was.
Or he the Lord Douglas had sene,
He wend his face had wemmyt bene.
Bot neur a hurt tharin had he.
Quhen he wemmyt gan it se,
He said that he had gret ferly
That swilk a knycht, and sa worthi,
And prysyt of sa gret bounte,

And he answard thar to mekly,
And said, "Lowe God, all tym had I
"Handis my hede for to wer."
Barbour, xx. 368, 370, MS.

Mr. Pink. expl. v. 368. "His face was all hewed as with a chissel, scared with wounds." This is undoubtedly the sense. But neither in his, nor in any former edition, as far as I have observed, is the reading of the MS. given. He gives wonnyt, and unwonnyt.
In other editions we find wounded and unwounded.

Wallace, i. 330, MS.

Hys malch Pompey sall stretch agane him went
With rayit oistis of the oryent.
Doug. Virgil, 196, 29.

This seems formed from A.-S. wend-an, ire, pro-cedere; whence O. E. wend, commonly used by our writers. Alem. went-en is synon. with wend-en, vertere.

To WENDIN, v. n. To wane, to decrease.

Than will no bird be blyth of the in boure;
Quhen thy manheid sall wendin as the mone,
Thow sall assay gif that my song be seur.
Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 132.

From Teut. wend-en, vertere, or A.-S. wan-ian, decreasere, whence E. wane.

WENT, s. 1. A way, course in a voyage.

And now agayne ye sall torne in your went,
Bere to your Prince this my charge and commandment.
Doug. Virgil, 214, 55.

Doug. Virgil, 482, 33.

2. Apprehension, fear; I haif na weir of that,
I have no fear of it, S. B.

This seems evidently the sense in the following passage, in which Dunbar represents the devil as going off in fiery smoke—

With him methocht all the house end he towk,
And I awoik as wy that wes in weir.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 28.

In wehere, as used by R. Brunne, although expl.
"cautious, wary," Gl. evidently signifies, in fear.

Mykelle was the drede thorgh out paemie,
That Cristendam at nede mot haf suilk chenalrie.
The Soudan was in wehere the cristen had suilke oste,
Sir Edward's powere ouer alle he dred moste.

P. 223.

Were is used by Gower, apparently in the sense of doubt.

Ha father, be nought in a were.
I trowe there be no man lesse
Of any maner worthinesse,
That halt hym lasse worthy than I
To be beloued—

Conf. Am. Fol. 18, b.

It is also used by Chaucer, Rom. Rose, v. 5699, as signifying confusion, according to Tyrwhitt, who derives it from Fr. guerre, which is the term used in the original. This is analogous to the idea thrown out by Rudd. "Perhaps it may be nothing else but the S. weir, i.e., war." In sense second, however, it might seem allied to Belg. vaer, fear. Nor is the conjecture made by Skinner unnatural, that were, as signifying doubt, may be from A.-S. waere, ware, cautio; butan ware, sine cautio: for says he, he who doubts exercises caution. It may be added, that the A.-S. phrase greatly resembles our but were.

Their weremen tuk off venysounes gud wayn.
Wallace, viii. 947, MS.

WERE-WALL, WEIR-WALL, s. A defence in war, murus bellicus; a name given to the gallant and illustrious house of Douglas.

—Off Scotland the weir-wall, wit ye but wene,
Our fais forses to defend, and unselyeable.
Houlate, ii. 6, MS.

The same designation is given to this family, Bellend. Cron., B. xiv. c. 8.

WERIOUR, WERYER, s. 1. A warrior.

There anerdis to our nobill to note, quhen hym nedis,
Tuelf crounit kingis in feir,

Doug. Virgil, 133, 43.

To WERRAY, v. a. To make war upon.

I trow he sall nocht mony day
Haif will to werray that countré.
Barbour, lx. 646, MS.

This is radically the same with Here, Su.-G. haer, exercitus.

WERING, s. Prob. measurement or estimation.

"Item, Tirepressy is and ay has bene twa davach of land, into the bishchapis rentale, and to the Kingis wering." Supposed to be written A. 1390, Cart. Aberd., Fol. 46.

This may signify measurement. L. B. wara, modus agri apud Anglos; Monast. Angl. tom. 2, p. 128; Du Cange. Wara also signifies valor; ibid.

Or it may signify estimation, from A.-S. wer, properly, capitis estimatio [V. VERGELT], used in an oblique sense.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 238, b. 53.

Perhaps from A.-S. georn, avidus, cupidus, geornor, avidior. It may, however, be from Su.-G. warna, to defend, q. one who anxiously guards his property; or who lays up in store. V. WARNSTOR.

* Radd. views this as probably the same with Warnard, O. E.

Wel thou wotest warnrad, but if thou wilt gabbe,
Thou hast hanged on me, halfe a leuen times,
And also griped my gold, gise it wher the liked.

He trawalyd all day, quhill the nycht
Hym partyd fra hys company.

Wynlowen, vi. 16.

Mr. Macpherson views it as perhaps an error "for corselet, a light kind of armour for the body, such as might be proper to wear in hunting." But the corselet must rather have been an incumbrance in hunting. The connexion would indicate that the term denotes a quiver, perhaps from Belg. weer, arms, or wyr, an arrow, and sluyt-en, to inclose, q. an implement for holding arrows. Or, light raiment, Su.-G. war, tegmen, (Isl. ver, substatem), and laett, levis, or laett, simplex; as we still say, a licht wear.

WERTEWS, s. pl. Accomplishments, particularly in relation to music.

"The singeir to pas & remane in Pareis for ane yeir to leir wertewa." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.
Fr. vertue, "worth, perfection;" Cotgr.

WERTH, s. Fate, destiny; for werd or weird.

— Al mirth in this yerth
Is fra me gone, soche is my wickid werth.
Henryson's Test., Creside, Chron. S. P., i. 169.

WERTHY, adj. Worthy; werthar, more worthy.

I wou to God, ma I thi maistyr be
In ony feild, thou sall fer werthar do
Than sall a Turk, for thi fals cruell wer;
Pagans till ws dois nocht so mekill der.

Wallace, x. 494, MS.

These are the words of Wallace to Bruce, at their pretended interview on the banks of Carron. He declares, that Bruce deserved death more than a Turk. In edit. 1646, rather is substituted. Moes.-G. wairtha, Su.-G. waerd, werd, Germ. wert, A.-S. weorth, dignus, weorthra, dignior. Junius inverts the etymon, deriving the substantive from the adjective. V. WERDY.

"Gif Appius desirith thame to haisty thare passage, thay past huly.—Quhen he past by thame, thay weryit him." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 198. Prætereuntem cecerrat, Lat.

WERY, adj. 1. Infirm from disease.

"Than wes Ebucius, ane of the consullis, dede in the ciete; and his colleig, Servilius, sa wery that he nicht skarslie draw his sind." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 215. Exigua in spe trahebat animam, Lat.

[2. Weary, tired, faint, Barbour, ii. 441.]

3. Feeble, in a political sense.

"The ciete was nocht sa wery, that it might be dantit with sic remedis as it wes wont to be." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 236. Aegra, Lat. V. WEARY.

To WERY, WERRY, WYRRIE, v. a. 1. To strangle.

—The first monstres of his stepmoder sle
Ligging ane bab in creddil stranglit he,
That is to say, twa grete serpentis perlay,
The quhilk he weryit with his handis tway.

Doug. Virgil, 251, 31.

Children I had in all vertewis perfyte,
To Peice and Justice was thair haill delyte,
Sum of displeasure deit for wo and cair,
Sum wyrrit was, and blawin in the air;

And sum in Stirling schot was to the deid,
That mair was govin to peies nor civile fald.

Lament. L. Scotland, A. iii. a. 6

In that verse, Sum wyrrit, &c., the author evidently alludes to the murder of Darnly.

2. To worry.

It happynye syne at a huntynge
Wytht wolwys hym to weryde be.

Wynlowen, iii. 3. 129.

— He has sum younge grete oxin slane,
Or than werryit the noithird on the plane.

Ibid. viii. 629, MS.

To WESCHE, v. a. To wash; part. pa. weschyn.

All blude and slauchter away was weschyn clene.
Doug. Virgil, 307, 49.

WESCHE, s. Stale urine. V. WASH.

WESCHELL, VESCHELL, s. A collective term denoting all the plate, dishes, &c., used at table in a great house.

"William Murray, keipar of Weschell." Chalmers's Mary, i. 179. Veschell, p. 177.

WESCHALE-ALMERY. An ambry for holding vessels.

"Thomas Kirkpatrick—sall restore—twa met burdes, a weschale almary, a cop almary," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1488, p. 98.

This is distinguished from an ambry used for holding cups, or a cupboard.

WE'SE. We shall, S. I'se, I shall; Ye'se, ye shall.

"We'se no has a lamb-cloot on a' the Caulside o' Dunsicro, if we thrapple the gudeman o' the flock." Blackw. Mag., May, 1820, p. 159.

Se is often used in this manner; as in I'se, I shall. Ye'se, ye shall, He'se, he shall, &c., S., like he'd for he wad or would.

WESELY, adv. Cautiously.

And with them baid in that place hundrys thre
Off westland men was oysyt in jeperté,

"Our westland shires had, in the rates of monthly maintenance in bygone times, been burthened above other shires." Baillie's Lett., ii. 344.

From the use of westland by Blind Harry, (V.
WESELY above), the origin is obvious.

WESTLANDER, s. An inhabitant of the west of Scotland, S.

"The westlanders—were all poor ignorant creatures, taken from their husbandry, and brought forth only to make a show, as also multitudes of them every day running home to get in their harvest." Guthry's

2. To visit, Reg. Aberd.WET FINGER. With a small effort.

"I'll make you sensible that I can bring mysell round with a wet finger, now I have my finger and my thumb on this loup-the-dyke loon." Redgauntlet, iii.
295.

This phrase is used in E., and is explained in Archdeacon Nares' Glossary. He supposes, [with great appearance of truth, that it "alludes to the vulgar and inelegant custom of wetting the finger, to turn over a book with more ease;" subjoining the following passage; "I hate" brawls with my heart, and can turn over a volume of wrongs with a wet finger." G.

WETHIR, s. A wether, Barbour, vii. 162.
V. WEDDIR.]WETHY, s. A halter. V. WIDDIE.

Yhit swa werayid he thame then,
That thai, that provyd war til hym fals,
Wyth rapps and wethys abowt thare hals,
Put thame in-to the Kyngis will,
Qubhat-ewyre hym lykyd to do thame til.

Wyntown, vii. 9. 388.

Perhaps the nominative is weth, like rape, and E.
withe.

Than xx men he gart fast wetheis thraw.

Wallace, vii. 410, MS.

WETING, s. Knowledge, S. wittings.

"A!" quod Waynour, "I wys yit weten I wolde,
"What wrathed God most, at thi weting!"

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 19.

provoked God?"

A.-S. wet-an, to know, to wit.

WEUCH, s. Wo, mischief, evil. V. WOUCH.To WEVIL, v. n. To wriggle, S. It seems to have the same origin with WEFFIL, q. v.WEWLECK, WEWLOCK, s. An instrument for making ropes of straw, Teviotd., Eskdale, Ettr. For., also Weulock; synon. Thraw-
-crook, Wyle, Wylie.

This, from its form, might seem allied to Teut.
vlecht-en, to twist, to plait. But see WYLE, s. id.

WEWPIT, part. pa. Bound. "The neif

Wallace, x. 874, MS.

Clyp is the grappling-iron used in boarding. Wey may therefore be allied to Su.-G. waeg-a, weg-a, percutere, ferire.

To WEY, v. a. To be sorry for, to bewail;
Wallace.

Belg. wee, sorrow.

[To WEY, v. a. To weigh, &c. V. WE.]WEYAGE, s. The charge made for weighing goods.

—"Exceptand—tolles, pettie dowteis, customes—weyages and heaven [haven] dewteis dew—in harboreis,

WEY-BAUK, WEIGH-BAUK, s. 1. A balance,
S.

They'll sell their country, &ae their conscience bare,
To gar the weigh-bauk turn a single hair.

Ferguson's Poems, li. 88.

2. Used metaph. One is said to be in the weigh-bauks, when in a state of indecision, S.

Teut. waegh-balck, librile, scapus librae, jugum; from waeghe, libra, and balck, traba, q. the balance-beam.

WEY-BRODDIS, s. pl. Boards used for weighing.

"Ane pair of wey broddis garnist with yron for weying of mettall with thair towis." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 255.

WEYES, WEES, s. pl. A balance with scales for weighing.

"The heire sall haue—ane stule, ane furme, ane faill, the weyes, with the wechts, ane spaid, ane aix."—Burrow Lawes, c. 125, § 3. Stateram, cum ponderibus, Lat.

Behald in euerie kirk and queir,— Sanct Peter caruit with his keyis,
Sanct Michael with his wingis and weyis.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 65.

Correspondent to the account here given, Wormius has this note concerning St. Michael; Michaelis libra, qua depingi solet archangelus; Fast Dan., p. 116.

"A pair of balances is often termed the weights in the modern Sc. of the South." Gl. Compl., p. 382, vo. VEYE.

A.-S. waeg, weg, Teut. waeghe, libra, trutina, statera. Junius in his Goth. Gl., vo. Wagid, agitatus, throws out a very ingenious idea as to the origin of waeghe, libra, trutina. He derives it from wag-an, weg-an, movere. And indeed, the use of a balance is, in consequence of its being properly adjusted, to move backwards and forwards, till what is put into the one scale be equal to the weight on the other.

To WECHT, WEIGHT, v. a. 1. To weigh, S.

2. To burden, to oppress, S.

"However this silence sometimes weighted my mind, yet I found it the best and wisest course."—Baillie's Lett., ii. 252.

"There hath been as much guiltiness in me, as might and would have weighted down to the pit the whole world; but my lovely Lord hath shewed me warm blinks of his love." Test. J. Robertson, Cloud of Witnesses.

WECHTS, WEIGHTS, s. pl. Scales, S.

"Dauid in this time put them in the weights together, —saying, Surely men of low degree are vanitie & men of high degree are a lye," &c. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 499.

WEYR, s. Doubt, Barbour, vii. 219. V. WERE.]

WEYSE, VISE, s. The indication of the direction that a mineral stratum has taken, when interrupted in its course.

"Where the coal is not quite cut off by the gae, but hath its course only altered, you are to consider, in searching for it, before you pierce your gae, that which the coal-hewers term the rise, or some of them the weyse of the gae [i.e., dyke] which in effect is nothing else, but a dark vestige of the dipp or rise, that the body which now constitutes the gae, should have had naturally, if it had been perfected." Sinclair's Hydrost. Misc. Obs., p. 231.

Evidently from Teut. weys-en, &c. ostendere; whence weyer, monstrator. V. the etymon of WEISE, &c.

WEYSH, WYSHE, interj. A term used for directing a horse to turn to the right hand, Mearns; Houp, S.A.

"The horse must do what he is commanded, without other direction than the weysh, (pronounced long, and means to hold off) and to korne hither; and the ay, (go on) and the woy (stand still)." Agr. Surv. Kincard., p. 424.

If not merely a factitious term, perhaps from the same origin with Weise, &c.

WEZ, WES, pron. Us; in some places, we; Orkn.

Sa.-G. oss, Isl. oss.

WHA TO BE MARRIED FIRST. A game at cards, Gall.

Mactaggart has given us a curious list of a variety of old names of a similar appropriation.

"The chief Galloway games at cards are, Catch the Ten, or Catch Honour, Lent for Beans, Brag and Pair, for Slaes, Beggar my Neebour, Birkie, Love after Sleep, and Wha to be married first. These are the genuine rustic games." Gall. Enc., vo. Voud.

[WHAAL, WHAAL-SKATE, s. A species of cuttle-fish of enormous size, Shetl.]

[WHAALS, s. pl. Long undulating unbroken waves.

So called from their resemblance to a whale. They are often seen in the Northern seas during fine summer days. Gl. Orkn. and Shetl.]

WHAAP, WHAP, s. A curlew. V. QUHAIP, QUHAUP.

WHAAP-NEB, s. The auld whaap-neb. V. WHAUP-NEB.

To WHACK, v. n. 1. To quack, South of S.

The ducks they whackit, the dogs they howled,
The herons they shreikit most piteouslie,
The horses they snorkit for miles around,
While the priest an' the pedlar together might be.
Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 20.

Isl. kuak, garritus avium; Ranolf. Ion.

[2. To make a slucking noise while drinking, to drink copiously, Clydes.]

[WHACK, s. A great number, a large quantity, Banffs.]

WHACKER, s. Any thing uncommonly large of its kind, Dumfr.; synon. Whapper. It seems to be the same origin with Whauk, v., q. something that has power to give a stroke.

WHAÆ, pron. Who; S. B.

For many year nae force cude stand him,
Whae ever try'd, their master fand him.
Hogg's Scottish Pastorals, p. 14.

V. QUUA.

[To WHAILE, v. a. To beat, thrash, West of S.]

WHAILIN, s. [A thrashing.] "A lashing with a rope's end,—from the name of a rope called a whale-line, used in fishing for whales;" Gall. Enc.

To WHAINGLE, v. n. To whine, S. B., a dimin. from QUHYNGE, q. v.

To WHAISH, v. n. To wheeze as one who has taken cold, Roxb.

A.-S. hwæc-an, Isl. Su.-G. hwæc-a, E. wheeze. Whaish denotes a shriller and more continued wheezing than Whaish. When Whaish is conjoined with Wheele, according to the alliterative idiom of the Scottish, it becomes Whaishle; as, "That pair dune bodie boichs a' nicht, and gangs whaishlin' and wheelin' a' day." V. WHAISLE.

To WHAISK, WHESE, v. n. 1. To speak with a husky voice, to speak with difficulty from any affection in the throat, Roxb.

2. To emit a noise like one who strives to dislodge any thing that has stuck in his throat, to hawk, Tweedd.; synon. Hask.

3. Also expl. "to gasp violently for breath," Tweed.

Prob. a frequentative from A.-S. hwæc-an, Su.-G. hwæc-a, raucere, to wheeze, Isl. hwæc-a, fessus anhelare.

WHASKIN, s. The act of speaking with such a voice, ibid.

To WHAISLE, WHOSLE, v. n. To breathe, like one in the asthma, S.; [whassle-wheesle, Shetl.]

He whaished an' hostit as he cam in,— Synne wytit the reek an' the frosty win'.
Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 247.

WHAISLE, WHEASLE, s. The wheezing so u n emitted by the lungs, when one has a sev e cold, S.

WHAM, s. 1. A wide and flat glen, usually applied to one through which a brook runs, Tweed. V. QUHAM, and WHAUM.

[2. A crook, a bend, Shetl.]

WHAM, WHAUM, s. A blow, S.B.

"A meikle man," co' he, "foul faw him,"
But kent na it was Tammie,
Rax'd me along the chafts a wham,
As soon as e'er he saw me,
And made me blae

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 125.

In Aberd. Edit., 1805, whaum.

Allied probably to Isl. hwim, motus celer, hwim-a, cito movere.

WHAMPLE, s. [A cut, a chip;] a stroke, a blow, Tweedd.; synon. Whap.

"Ony man that has said to ye, that I am no gratefu' for the situation of Queen's cooper, let me hae a whample at him wi' mine cathe." Bride Lam., ii. 278.

To WHAMBLE, v. a. To overturn, Fife. V. QUHEMLE.

WHAMLE, s. The state of being turned upside down, Ayrs.

"The chaise made a clean whamle, and the laird was lowermost." Sir A. Wylie, iii. 293.

"The vessel heel'd o'er, till I thought she would hae coupit, and made a clean whamle o't." The Steam-Boat, p. 267.

WHAN-A'-BE, WHEN-A'-BE, adv. However, notwithstanding, Loth., S. O.

The master—vows—that he will share
His staff among them, and no spare
Sic daft fool-folk;

Whan-a'-be, they but kemp the mair.

The Har'st Rig, st. 63.

A low term, awkwardly compounded of when, all, and be, q. although all be, or although be so.

WHANG, s. 1. A thong, S., metaph., a slice.

"Many one times the half-merk whinger for the half-penny whang;" S. Prov.; "spoken when people lose a considerable thing, for not being at an inconsiderable expense." Kelly, p. 248, 249. "Mony ane," &c. Ferguson's Prov.

Kelly expl. half-merk as equal to sixpence. But its proper value was six shillings and eightpence Scots. V. QUHAING.

2. "A blow, or rather—a lash with a whip;" Gall. Enc. V. QUHAING.

To WHANG, v. a. 1. To flog, S.

2. To cut down in large slices, S.

At last, came cheese to crown the feast;—
My uncle set it to his breast,
And whang'd it down.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 3.

WHANG-BIT, s. A bridle made of leather, apparently as distinguished from Branks, Tether, and perhaps also Snyfle-bit.

My daddie left me gear enough—
A whang-bit and a nylle-bit, &c.

Herd's Coll., ii. 143.

TO WHANK, v. a. 1. To beat, to flog, Roxb.
Whauk, synon.

But tho' I get my hurdies whankit—
I will be laith

To quat the muse, while ae auld blanket
Can hap us baith.

Ruickie's Way-side Cottager, p. 175.

2. To cut off large portions, Tweedd.

This seems to be a frequentative from the v. to Whang, Quhang, id. It affords a strong presumption in favour of this idea, that as S. whang, in a secondary sense, denotes a slice, A. Bor. whank has the same application: "Whank of cheese, a great slice of cheese;" Grose.

WHANK, s. A stroke; the act of striking, properly with the fist; as, "a whank aneth the haffets;" Roxb.

WHANKER, s. Something larger than common, Roxb.; synon. Whuller.

WHAP, s. A stroke, blow, [dash], S.

This is not merely Wap, id., aspirated; it is an old C.B. word. Chwap, a sudden stroke or blow; chwap-iaw, to strike smartly. This perhaps is the proper origin of Wap itself, as bearing this sense.

[TO WHAP, v. a. To beat or dash violently, Clydes., Banffs.]

WHAPIE, s. Used as dimin. from whelp, S.
whalp.

They stood in rows, like whapies doll'd,
Set up upo' their end.—

Lintoun Green, p. 15.

"Whelps confused," N. ibid.

TO WHARLE, v. n. To pronounce the letter r with too much force, Ettr. For.; to Whur, E. Synon. Haur, Burr.

[WHASAY, s. An unfounded report, Shetl.]

WHATEN, adj. What kind of. V. QUHATKYN.

[In the West of S. whatna, whatena, is still used for which or what; as, "Whatna book do ye want?" Whatena ane said aae."]]

WHATFOR, adv. For what reason, why, wherefore, S.

"The women wept, the men looked doure, and the children wondered whatfor an honest man should be brought to punishment." R. Gilhaize, ii. 323. V. FYKERIE.

"What for are ye greeting, mother?" said Margaret;
"Let us hope the best." M. Lyndsay, p. 85.

WHAT-LIKE, adj. Resembling what, used interrogatively; as, What-like is't? What does it resemble? What-like is he? What appearance has he? S.

This is perfectly analogous to Moes-G. quheleiks, qualis, formed from quhe, cui, and leiks, similis. V. Hermes Scythicus, p. 173. 194.

WHAT-RACK, WHAT-RAIKS. An exclamation expressive of surprise. V. RAIK, s. Care.

WHATRECK, conj. Expl. "notwithstanding;" Gl. Surv. Ayr. V. RAIK, ut sup.

WHATY, adj. Expl. "indifferent."

—A quarter of whaty whete is chaunged for a colt of ten markes.

Prophecy, Thomas of Ercildone, Earl. MSS.

"The mention of the exchange betwixt a colt worth ten markes, and a quarter of 'whaty (indifferent) wheat,' seems to allude to the dreadful famine, about the year 1388." Minstrelsy Border, ii. 284.

TO WHAUK, v. a. 1. To strike, to beat, properly with the open hand, S. thwack, E.

2. Used metaph.

And why should we let whimsies bawk us,

When joy's in season,

And thole aae aft the spleen to whauk us

Out of our reason?

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 349.

3. To slash, or cut severely with any sharp instrument. When a culprit is scourged, he is said to be whaukit, S.A.

4. To Whauk down, to cut in large slices. The phrase is often applied to a cheese, ibid.

Whang is synon.; and it is worthy of remark that they both primarily denote corporeal correction.

WHAUK, s. 1. A smart stroke, the act of thwacking, S.

2. A large slice, ibid.

WHAUM, s. 1. A hollow part of a field, Roxb.

2. A glen.

This is distinguished from Howm, also used in the same district, but as denoting flat ground, or a plain on the side of a river.

This would seem more nearly allied, than Hobbe, Howm, to Isl. huamm-r, convallacula, seu seminalla, referred to under Holme. The terms by which the Isl. word is rendered, appear to be the most proper that could be employed for denoting a glen of this description. Halderson expl. it; Convallacula decliva, adding, in Dan., "a little dale, or depression."

3. A hollow in a hill or mountain; synon. with Gael. corri. V. CORRIE.

TO WHAUP, v. n. To send forth pods, S.B.; synon. Swap, S. Hence, WHAUP, s. A pod, a capsule, S.B.; synon. Swap, Shaup, S.

TO WHAUP, v. n. To wheeze, Fife.

Perhaps an oblique use of E. whoop; or from A.S. hwoop-an, clamare, ejulare; Moes.-G. wrop-jan, clamare.

WHAUP, s. A curlew. V. QUHAIP.

WHAUP-NEB, WHAAP-NEB, s. 1. The beak of a curlew, S.

2. The auld whaap-neb. A periphrasis for the devil, S.B.

"These Indians wad devour the auld whaap-neb himsel gin he were weel cooked, and sup the broth after." Pearse's Journal, iii. 93, 94.

- WHAUP-NEBBIT, adj. Having a long nose, Roxb.; in allusion to the Quhaup or curlew.

"Whaup-nebbed Samuel fell aff the drift too." Gall. Enc., p. 284.

- WHAURIE, s. A term applied to a mis-grown child, Ang. C. B. chuaræ, Arm. hoari, Iudere?

- WHAWKIE, s. A low term for whisky, S.

—I was musin' in my mind—
On hair-mould bannocks fed an' barefoot kail,
Withoutten whawkie or a nog o'ale.
Taylor's Scots Poems, p. 2.

- To WHEAK, WEEK, v. n. 1. To squeak, S.

2. To whine, to complain.

"Feaking, fretfulness, peevishness, Exm." Grose.

3. To whistle at intervals, S.

Isl. quat-a, leviter clamitare.

- WHEAK, WEEK, s. The act of squeaking, a squeaking sound, S.

- To WHEASLE. V. WHAISLE.

- WHEEGEE, s. 1. A whim, a maggot, S.

2. In pl. Superfluous trappings, ornaments of dress, Fife, Ayr.

C. B. gudg, vain, frivolous; guegi, vanity; levity. Isl. veig is expl. ornamentum peculiare; G. Andr.

- WHEEGIL, s. A piece of wood used, on the harvest field, for pushing in the end of the straw-rope with which a sheaf is bound; Loth.

- [To WHEEGLE, v. a. To wheedle. V. WHEGLE.]

- WHEEL, s. A whirlpool or eddy, Ang.

"It widna be Christian-like to stay coosie at hame, an' a' the country-side on the Wheel.—The Wheel o' Clackriach has made mony watery es afore now." St. Kathleen, iii. 216, 217.

This is the same with Wele, q. v., only aspirated.

- WHEELIECRUSE, s. A church-yard, Orkn.

Some of the more intelligent inhabitants of the country say that in the old language this term signifies "a place of stopping or resting." And indeed their interpretation has great plausibility. For Isl. avil-a signifies quiescere, avila, lectus, cubila, avild, quies; and kro-a (pron. krou-a), circumsepire, includere; q. to inclose in the bed of death, or to inclose the place of rest; unless we deduce the last syllable from kros crux, q. the rest of the cross, i. e., in consecrated ground.

- WHEELIN, s. Coarse worsted, S. V. FINGERIN.

- To WHEEMER, v. n. [To grumble, to mutter, Clydes.] To go about muttering complaints and disapprobation, Roxb.; Flyre, synon.

C. B. chwimiaw, one who stirs about briskly; or changed from achwymar, a complainer.

- WHEEN, s. 1. A number, a quantity, S. V. QUHEYNE.

This s. is sometimes used in the plural; as, "Wheens focht, and wheens fled." "How many wheens war there?" i. e., How many parties were present? "There war a gay twa-three wheens;" Clydes.

2. A division, Clydes.

"They rade furth in three wheens; the first muntit on black ponies; the neist on grey, an' syne the last on bonnie wee beasties white as the driftit snaw." Edin. Mag., Sept. 1818, p. 155. V. QUHEYNE, adj.

- WHEEN, s. Queen, Shetl.; wh, or perhaps rather hw, being always substituted for qu.

- To WHEEP, v. n. 1. To give a sharp whistle at intervals, S.

2. To squeak, S.

Sa.-G. hwip-a, to hoop or whoop; Isl. cep-a, clamare; Moca.-G. wop-jan, id. A.-S. hweop, clamor.

- To WHEEPLE, v. n. 1. "To whistle like a whaup;" Gall. Enc., vo. Whaup.

C. B. chwiban, a whistle, a trill; chwibiaw, to trill, to quaver; chwibiaul, of a trilling quality; from chwib, a pipe.

2. To whistle with a shrill melancholy note, as plovers, &c., Roxb., Clydes.

The fairy houndis are liting on,
Like redwings wheeping through the mist.
Hogg's Hunt of Eildon, p. 323.

3. To make an ineffectual attempt to whistle; also, to whistle in a low and flat tone; S. Sowf synon.

This term is evidently allied to E. whistle, as sometimes signifying to whistle, tibia canere; Seron.

- WHEEPLE, s. A shrill intermitting note, with little variation of tone, S. also wheeffle.

"I wad na gie the *wheep*le of a whaup for a' the nightingales that ever sang." Statist. Acc., vii. 601, N. V. QUHAIP.

- WHEEPS, s. pl. An instrument for raising what are called the bridgeheads of a mill, S. B.

- WHEERIKINS, WHIRKINS, s. pl. The hips. "I'll whank you wheerikins," I will beat your breech for you, Lanarks., Edin. This in Roxb. is thus expressed; "I'll whither your whirkins to ye."

This may be connected with Hurkle-bane, coxa, q. v., or Teut. horck-en, hurck-en, inclinare se, whence Hurkle-bane has originated. Or it may have been formed from A.-S. hweorfa, verticillum, like hweorban, E. whirl.

bone; because here the bones so meet that they may turn. Whither seems to claim affinity with Isl. hvidr-a, cito commoveri.

WHEERIM, WHEERUM, s. Any thing insignificant; [a trifling excuse; also, a toy, a play-thing, S.]

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. icurm, a whim or whimsey; or to A.-S. hwærf-ian, circumvolitare, Su.-G. hvoerfu-a, in gyrum agere, teyr-a, in orbem movere.

[To WHEERIM, WHEERUM, v. n. To trifle, to work in a trifling manner; to play fast and loose, Banffs.]

[WHEERIMIGO, s. A gimcrack, a gaudy trifle; also, an insignificant person, ibid.]

WHEERNY, s. A very gentle breeze, Orkn.

WHEESHIT, interj. and s. This is the common S. pronunciation of what is Whist in E.

"Wheeshit, an order for silence. Haud your wheeshit, be silent;" Gall. Enc.

To WHEESK, v. n. To creak, but not very harshly, Roxb.

WHEESK, s. A creaking sound, ibid.

"Thilk dor gyit ay thilk tother wheesk and thilk tother jerg." Wint. Ev. Tales, ii. 42. V. WHAISK.

WHEETIE, QUHEETIE, adj. Low, mean, scurvy, shabby, Aberd., Mearns; synon. with Fouty.

WHEETIE, s. The Whitethroat, Motacilla sylvia, Linn., Loth.; Wheetie-whitebeard, Lanarks.; supposed to receive its name from the whiteness of its throat.

To WHEETIE, WHEETLE, v. n. and s. A term to denote the peeping sound emitted by young birds.

This seems to be a very ancient term; apparently the same with old Teut. quedel-en, thus defined by Kilian; Garrire, modulari: minutizare, vernare, gutturare, queri. Ovid. Dulce queruntur aves; et Horat. Queruntur in silvis aves. This verb is a diminutive from Su.-G. quaed-a, Isl. kred-a, Germ. qued-en, canere, or Su.-G. quid-a, A.-S. cwyth-an, ejulare. Alem. quidil-on is given by Ihre as synon. with quaed-a; though I have not observed that it is mentioned by Schilter.

WHEETIE, WHEETLE, s. A young duck; [also, as an interj., a call to ducks.]

To WHEETLE, v. n. To wheedle.

"Ye wad wheetle, an' whushie, an' blaw i' the lug o' Sathan to tryt a bein neuk at the cheek o' his brunstane ingle, ye warlock-face't elfs." Saint Patrick, ii. 191.

Johnson says he "can find no etymology" for the E. word. Seren. derives it from Isl. racl-a, decipere. But I am convinced that the origin is the same with that given under the preceding verb.

VOL. IV.

WHEEZAN, s. The noise of carriage-wheels in rapid motion. Su.-G. hwæz-a, stridere.

WHEEZE, s. An act of whizzing produced by flame, Clydes.

To WHEEZIE, v. n. To blaze with a whizzing noise, ibid.

These terms are not derived from any root denoting flame, but have a common origin with E. to Whiz, of which Johns. merely says, "from the sound that it expresses." He ought to have observed, that it occurs in various northern dialects, as indeed radically the same with Wheeze, A.-S. hwæz-an, Serenius gives Sw. hwæz-a as signifying to whizz, although it is also expl. sibilare, to hiss. Indeed, wheezing, whizzing, and hissing, are all congenious; suggesting a common idea as to the sound caused by the action of the air. Thus, Isl. hwæss, formed from hwæz-a, fæssus anhelare, significat ventosus, and hwæssir, surgit ventus.

To WHEEZIE, v. a. To pull pease by stealth, Clydes.

WHEEZIE, s. The act of pulling pease by stealth, ibid.

Shall we trace this to C.B. chwic-ian, to pilfer, chwicgi, a pilferer?

[To WHEEZLE, v. n. To wheeze, S.]

WHEEZLE, s. The act of wheezing, S.

"I lost all power, and fell on the ground in a convulsion of laughter, while my voice went away to a perfect wheezle." Perils of Man, ii. 346. V. WHAIZLE, c.

WHEEZLOCH, s. The state of being short-winded; from the same origin as E. Wheez, "to breathe with noise."

She had the caulk, but an' the creak,
The wheezloch, an' the wanton yenk;
On ilka knee she had a breuk.

A Mile aboon Dundee, Old Song.

Edin. Month. Mag., June 1817, p. 238.

A.-S. hwæz-an, expumare; Isl. Su.-G. hwæz-a, graviter anhelare.

WHEEZLE-RUNG, s. A stick often used by the country-people for lifting a large boiling pot off the fire, Ayrs.

To WHEGLE, WHEEGLE, v. n. To wheedle, to cajole, Berwicks. Isl. hwæck-ta, decipere.

WHELEN. [Prob. an errat. for wheelen, who, which.]

Whelen is the comli knight,
If hit be thi wille!

Sir Gawain and Sir Gah., ii. 2.

Who, as Mr. Pink. conjectures. If this be the meaning, it is probably an error of some transcriber for wheelen; Su.-G. hwilken, id.

WHENA'BE, adv. However, after all. V. WHAN-A'-BE.

To WHESK, v. n. V. WHAISK.

B 5

To WHEW, v. n. To whistle with a shrill pipe, as plovers do, S. A.

"Ilka bag, and den, and todhole round about, seemed to be fu' o' plovers, for they fell a' to the whistling an' answering ane another at the same time. I had often been wondering how they staid sae lang on the heights that year, for I had them aye whewing e'en and morn." Brownie of Bodebeck, i. 49.

This seems from the same origin with E. whiff, a blast; properly the act of breathing with the mouth; perhaps C.B. chwyth, halitus. Isl. hwi-a, however, signifies to neigh; adhinnire equorum lascivientium, Haldorson.

[WHEY-BEARD, s. The White-Throat, Curruca sylvia, S.]

WHEY-BIRD, s. The wood-lark, Alauda arborea, Linn., Lanarks.; a name probably from Isl. hwei, colliculus, q. the hill-lark, if not corr. from the Cimbric name of this bird, heede-lerke, as given by Penn. Zool., ii. 236. Heede seems the same with Isl. heide, sylvia, q. wood-lark.

WHEY-DROP, WHEY-DRAP, s. A putrifying hole in a cheese, resembling an ulcer, S. O.

"If the milk is either allowed to cool too much, before it is made into curd, or not brought to the proper temperature, when the rennet is mixed into it, the curd is soft, does not part with the whey, and the cheese is soft, brittle, and difficult to be kept together; and even when the utmost pains have been taken to press out the serum, (r. whey) it will, several weeks after the cheese has been made, burst out in putrifying holes, which, in the dairy language of Ayrshire, are termed whey-drops." Agr. Surv. Ayr., p. 452.

WHEY-EYE, WHEY-EE, s. Synon. with Whey-drop, Ayr.

"Whey-springs, or eyes, are seldom met with in the cheeses of Ayrshire." Agr. Surv. Ayr., p. 455.

WHEY-SEY, s. A tub in which milk is curdled, Lanarks.; from E. Whey, and S. Say, Saye.

WHEY-WHULLIONS, s. pl. Formerly a very common dish for dinner among the peasantry of S.; consisting of flummery prepared by collecting all the porridge left at breakfast, which was beat down among fresh whey, with an additional quantity of oat-meal. This, being boiled for some hours, was eaten, or according to our vernacular phraseology, suppit, with bread, instead of broth.

Whullion seems to be merely the aspiration of Su.-G. waelling, the definition of which has the closest analogy, as it denotes a thinner sort of porridge; Pultis liquidioris genus. To this agree Isl. velling, puls fervide cocta, diuque parata; G. Andr., p. 252.—Puls tenerior, sorbitio, (Haldorson), what our peasantry would call suppable- or spoon-meat; Dan. velling, "porridge, broth," Wolff. The word is also, with some slight variation, to be found in the German dialects; Teut. wollinck, farraceum; ex alica farris edulium, Kilian; Mod. Sax. welgen, id. A.-S. weall-an, Alem. uwall-an, Su.-G. waill-a, Isl. vell-a, Teut. well-en, Germ. wall-en, all signify to boil.

WHEYLKIN, s. Expl. "lively, coy motions," Shetl.; by insertion of the aspirate, from Isl. velking, contractatio, velk-a, contractare, volvere.

WHEZLE, s. The vulgar name for a weasel, mustela, Loth.

[To WHICH (gutt.), v. n. To rush or dash with a soft whizzing sound, Banffs., Clydes.]

[WHICH, s. A soft whizzing sound; also, a blow causing, or accompanied by, such a sound, ibid. It is also used as an adv.]

WHICKIE, adj. Crafty, knavish, Clydes.

Isl. hweck-in, decipere, hweck-r, dolus, impostura, hweckiot-r, subtilus, vafer. Perhaps the root is hwik-a, Su.-G. hwik-a, hwick-a, vacillare. G. Andr. gives as one sense of hwecke, celeriter subtrahere.

WHICKING, s. A term used to express the cry of pigs.

"The whicking of pigs, the gushing of hogs." Urquhart's Rabelais. V. CHEEPING.

This seems the same with whacking. V. WHEAK, WEEK. Haldorson renders Isl. qrak-a, minurizare, to chirp.

To WHID, v. n. 1. To move nimbly and lightly, without noise. To WHID back and forret, to whisk backwards and forwards with a quick motion, S.

"That creature whids about frae place to place, like a hen on a het girdle, clip, clipping wi' a tongue that wad clip clouts." Saxon and Gael, iii. 104, 105.

Whidding "like a hen on a het girdle," is not quite an appropriate conjunction; as this allusion refers to a timorous and unsteady motion, as that of one who has tender or gouty feet. "Whidding, scudding;" Gl. Antiq. V. QUID, v.

2. To fib, to equivocate, S. It conveys the idea of less aggravation than that which is attached to the term lie.

WHID, WHUD, s. [1. A whisk, a rapid, noiseless movement, S.]

2. A fib, a falsehood of a less direct kind, an untruth, S.

Ev'n ministers they has been kenn'd,—

A rousing whid at times to vend,

And nail't wi' scripture.

Burns, iii. 40.

A rousing whid is not a common, nor a correct, phrase. It suggests the idea of a more gross infringement on truth than is warranted by the determinate use of the term.

Upo' their tongues the rising topics swell,

An' sometimes mix'd too wi' a lusty whid, &c.

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 161.

Here also the term is used in a stronger sense than what properly belongs to it.

For the probable origin, V. QUID, WHID.

WHIDDER, s. A gust of wind, Shetl.

The term is used in this sense by Gavin Douglas.
V. QUIDDER, s.

WHIDDIE, s. A name for a hare, Banffs.;
pron. Fuddie, Aberd.; wh being changed into f.

Rob than to her did hunt his dogs,
Thro' glens an' shaws, thro' muirs an' bogs;
But Whiddie, wi' her cockit lags,
Said, Kiss your luckie.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 91.

Most probably from its quick motion. V. QUID, s.

To WHIDDLE, v. n. To proceed with a light rapid motion, Kinross.

WHIDDY, adj. Unsteady, unstable; as, a whiddy wind, i.e., one that shifts about;
Orkn.

Isl. Avida, cita commotio aeris; Haldorson. V.
QUID, v. and s.

[WHIDDER, conj. Whether, Shetl.]

[WHIFER, WHIFFER, s. A fifer, Aberd.]

WHIFFINGER, s. A vagabond. V. WAF-FINGER.

To WHIG, v. n. 1. To go quickly; Loth.
(synon. Whid.) perhaps the same with Whihh, Ang., to go quickly, with a whizzing motion; C.B. churiv-ian, to turn, or dart about, to fly here and there.

"Whigging, jogging rudely; urging forward;" Gl.
Antiq.

[2. To work nimbly and heartily, Clydes.

3. To drink copiously or quickly; generally followed by aff or out; like E. swig.]

To WHIG Awa', v. n. To move at an easy and steady pace, to jog, Liddesdale.

—"When I had gotten just in again upon the moss, and was whigging cannily awa hame, twa landloupers jumpit out of a peat-hag on me or I was aware, and got me down, and knevelled me sair aneuch." Guy Mannering, ii. 39.

"To Whig awa' with a cart," remarks Sir W. Scott, in a note to Dict., "signifies to drive it briskly on.
I remember hearing an Highland farmer in Eskdale, after giving minute directions to those who drove the hearse of his wife, how they were to cross some boggy and, conclude; 'Now, lads, whig awa' wi' her.'"

Allied perhaps to Isl. kvick-a, vacillare, Sw. vick-a, to joggle.

WHIG, WHIGG, s. 1. A thin and sour liquid, of the lacteous kind. V. WIGG.

2. A name, imposed on those in the seventeenth century, who adhered to the Presbyterian cause in S. By rigid Episcopalians, it is still given to Presbyterians in general;
and, in the West of S., even by the latter, to those who, in a state of separation from the established church, profess to adhere more strictly to Presbyterian principles.

The origin of the term has been variously accounted for, by different writers.

"The South-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year: and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north: and from a word Wiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the Whiggamors, and shorter the Whiggs. Now in that year (1648), after the news came down of Duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise, and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching on the head of their parishes, with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The Marquis of Argyll and his party, came and headed them, they being about 6000. This was called the Whiggamors inroad: and, ever after that, all that opposed the court, came, in contempt, to be called Whiggs: and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction." Burnet's Own Times, i. 58.

"The poor honest people, who were in railery called Whiggs, from a kind of milk they were forced to drink in their wandrings and straits, became name-fathers to all who espoused the interest of Liberty and Property through Britain and Ireland." Wodrow's Hist., i. 263.

The latter is the etymon generally adopted. But the former is more probable, even in the opinion of Wodrow, who adds; "If the reader would have another, and perhaps better origination of the word, he may consult Burnet's Memoirs of the House of Hamilton." Ibid.

The common etymon is liable to this objection, that it is founded on a fact which was posterior to the use of the term. The other receives confirmation from the title of a ludicrous poem in MS. penev auct. "The Whiggam Road into Edinburgh." To the tune of Graysteell; 28th November, 1648." It bears the same date at the end.

A. Bor. whig, is expl., "a beverage made with whey and herbs;" Gl. Grose.

To WHIG, v. n. Stale churned milk, when it throws off a sediment, is said to whig, Nithsd.

WHIGAMORE, s. A cant term of the same meaning with Whig, as applied to the old Presbyterians, but apparently more contemptuous.

"There was he and that sour whigamore they ca'd
Burley—if twa men could hae won a field, we wadna hae gotten our skins paid that day." Tales of my Landlord, iv. 164.

WHIGGERY, s. The notions or practices of a Scottish Presbyterian, S.

"Gang awa' wi' your Whiggery, if that's a' ye can do; auld Curate Kilstouk wad hae read half the Prayer-Book to me by this time." H. M. Loth., i. 195.

"That's a' your whiggery," re-echoed the virago,
'that's a' your whiggery, and your Presbytery, ye cut-tugged graning carles.'" Waverley, ii. 122.

WHIGMELEERIE, s. 1. The name of a ridiculous game which was occasionally used, in Angus, at a drinking club. A pin was stuck in the centre of a circle, from which there were as many radii as there were persons in the company, with the name of each person at the radius opposite to him.

On the pin an index was placed, and moved round by every one in his turn; and at whatsoever person's radius it stopped, he was obliged to drink off his glass.

This is one, among many expedients, that have been devised for encouraging dissipation.

As the term has most probably had a ludicrous origin, it may have arisen from contempt of the Whigs; as the people of Angus were generally not very friendly to them, and might thus intend to ridicule what they accounted the austerity of their manners.

2. In pl. Whigmeleeries, "whims, fancies, crotchets," Gl. Burns, S.

But gin ye be a brig as auld as me,—
There 'll be, if that date come, I'll wad a boddle,
Some fewer whigmeleeries in your noddle.

Burns, iii. 54.

3. A fantastical ornament in masonry, dress, &c., S.

"Ah! it's a brave kirk, nane o' yere whigmeleeries and carlewurries about it." Rob Roy, i. 127.

WHIGMALEERIE, adj. 1. Dealing in gimcracks, S.

2. Whimsical, S.

"I met ane very honest, fair-spoken, weel put-on gentleman,—that was in the whigmaleery man's backshop." Nigel, i. 77.

WHIG, WIG, s. A species of fine wheaten bread.

"Whigs, Chelsea buns." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 151. V. WYG.

[WHIGGA, s.] Couch-grass, Triticum repens, Shetl.]

To WHIGGLE, WHIGGLE alang, v. n. 1. To wriggle, to waddle, Fife; the same with Wiggle. V. WAIGLE.

- [2. To work in a listless, heartless manner; to idle about, Clydes.] To trifle, Fife.

WHIGGLE, s. A trifle, a toy, a kickshaw, a gimcrack; used to denote any thing that ministers more to conceit than to utility, Fife.

Isl. hvikull, inconstans, from hrika, cedere. Or, Belg. huyghelen, to dissemble, to play the hypocrite; synon. with E. juggle.

[WHIG-MIG-MORUM. V. WHIP-MEG-MORUM.]

WHIHE (gutt.), s. "The sound of an adder, her fuffing noise, when angered;" Gall. Enc.; slightly changed from C. B. chweif, a hiss, or chwith-u, to hiss.

To WHIHER, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed way, to titter, Ang. To wicker, to neigh or whinny, A. Bor.

WHIILE, conj. Until, S.

"Still the covenanters could not be pleased while their cup was full, conform to the conclusion between them and the covenanters or malecontents of England," &c. Spalding, i. 81. V. QUHILL.

WHILEOMS, WHILES, adv. At times, sometimes, occasionally, S.

Whileoms they tented, and sometimes they play'd,
And sometimes rashen hoods and buckies made.

Ross's Helenore, p. 14.

V. QHYLUM.

"He offered him to prove that though she took whiles fits of distraction, yet that she had delucida intervalla, and that it was in one of these that she granted the said assignation." Fount. Dec. Suppl., ii. 460.

"He lies a' day, and whiles a' night, in the cove in the dern hag." Waverley, iii. 237. V. QUHILE, QUHILES.

Perhaps this term is the genitive sing. of A.-S. hwil, tempus, which is hwiles, q. "of a time she took fits," &c. It would seem indeed that A.-S. hwitum, (retained in O. E. Whilom), signifying aliquando, is merely the same A.-S. noun in the dative or ablative plural, q. by, or in times.

[WHILK, pron.] Which. V. QUHILK.]

[To WHILK, v. a.] To gulp, to suck up quickly, Shetl.; syn., to whig.]

WHILLIE-BILLOU, s. A variety of Hilliebalou, Gall. Whilly-baloo, Dumfr.

"Whillie Billou, a noisy commotion, as when the fox is up, started for chase;" Gall. Enc.

Can this have any connexion with C. B. chwyltwibaw, apt to wander about, from chwyltwib-iaw, to wander round about, and this again from chwyltwib, orbit, motion?

[WHILLIEGOLEERIE, s.] V. under WHILLY.]

WHILLILU, s. An air in music, Ettr. For.

"And all the while he was full earnestly whistling a tune.

List me, my son, What whillilu is that Thou keep'st a trilling at?"

Hogg's Tales, i. 162.

Isl. hvell-a, sonare, hvell-r, sonitus, and lu, lassitudo; q. a dull or flat air.

[WHILLY, s.] A small skiff, Shetl.]

To WHILLY, WHULLY, v. a. To cheat, to gull, S. Properly by means of wheedling.

They spoil'd my wife, and staw my cash,
My Muse's pride murgullied;
By printing it like their vile trash,
The honest leidges whully'd.

Ramsay's Address to Town Council of Edinburgh, A. 1719.

"Wise men may be whilly'd with wiles;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 79.

"Let me alane for whillying an advocate;—it's nae sin to get as muckle frac them as wi' can—after a' it's but the wind o' their mouth—it costs them naething." Heart M. Loth., i. 328.

"Whillying, bamboozling; deceiving with specious arguments;" Gl. Antiq.

Shirrefs writes whilly, Gl. V. next word.

WHILLIEGOLEERIE, s. A hypocritical fellow, a wheedler, one who speaks fair from selfish motives, Roxb.; synon. with Whillie-wha.

The first part of the word is evidently the same with Whilly, Whully, v.

This, if traced to Goth. may be deduced from Su.-G. kwil-a, cunctare, to delay, and Teut. laerie, mulier vaniloqua, stulta, laeri-en, ineptire, nugas ineptiasque dicere, A.-S. ge-laer, Germ. leer, vacuus. Or it may be from C. B. chwiliaw, to pry about, and llewyg, radiance, conjoined by the particle go, denoting progress towards, q. one who pries about, exhibiting a fair and flattering appearance.

WHILLIE-WHA, WHILLY-WHAE, s. 1. A person on whom there can be no dependance; who shuffles between opposite sides, delays the performance of his promises, or still deals in ambiguities.

We fear'd no reavers for our money,
Nor whilly-whaes to grip our gear.

Watson's Coll., i. 12.

Alas he's gane and left it a';
May be to some sad whilliecha
Of fremit blood.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 223.

"A kind of insinuating deceitful fellow," Gl.

Perhaps from Isl. ryl-a, dubitare, baerere suspensio animo; or, as implying the idea of intentional procrastination, from Su.-G. kwil-a, il-a, quiescere, punctare; wa, cunctator.

2. A cheat, S.

If ye gang near the South-sea house,
The whilly-whas will grip your gear.

Herd's Coll., ii. 40.

3. A wheedling speech, coaxing language, South of S.

"I wish ye binna beginning to learn the way of blawing in a womaff's lug, wi' a' your whilly-wha's." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 105.

"Whilly-whas, idle cajoling speeches; flummery;" Gl. Antiq.

Perhaps rather allied to C. B. chwilyi, a searching dog; a busy body; chwiliaw, chwiliach, to pry about; chwiliat, a pryer, Owen.

WHILLIE-WHAW, adj. Not to be depended upon, S.

"Because he's a whilly-whaw body and has a plausible tongue of his own,—and especially because nobody could ever find out whether he is Whig or Tory, this is the third time they have made him Provost." Redgauntlet, ii. 277.

To WHILLY-WHAW, v. n. To talk in a kindly and cajoling way; used to express the conversation of two young persons supposed to have a mutual attachment.

"What, man! the life of a king, and many thousands besides, is not to be weighed with the chance of two young things whilly-whawing in ilk other's ears for a minute." Q. Durward, iii. 217.

To WHILLYWHA, v. a. To cajole, to wheedle, S.

"I'm ouer failed to tak a help-mate, though Wylie Macrickit the writer was very pressing and spak very civilly; but I'm ouer auld a cat to draw that strae before me. He canna whillywha me as he's dume mony a ane." Tales of my Landlord, iv. 246.

WHILLYWHÄING, WHULLYWHÄING, s. The act of wheedling, S.

"My life precious!" exclaimed Meg Dods; "name o' your whullywhäing, Mr. Bludloose." St. Ronan, ii. 11.

To WHILLIEWHALLIE, v. a. To coax, to wheedle, Perth.

To WHILLIE-WHALLIE, v. n. To dally, to loiter, S. B. V. WHILLIWHAW.

WHILLOCK, WHILEOCK, WHILLOCKIE, s. A little while, S. O., Dumfr., Perth.

"I'll wauget half-a-croon that he's no at the point o' death, and wunna be for a whileock." M. I. Indsay, p. 145.

Ock is the mark of diminution, as in many other words. V. the letter K, also Oc, termin.

Teut. wijlken, parvum temporis spatium, is formed in a similar manner, by the addition of ken, the mark of the diminutive, from wijle, momentum.

WHILPER, s. Any individual larger than the ordinary size of its genus; as, "What a whilper of a trout!" Dumfr.

Whulper is used in some other counties.

WHILT, s. A-whilt, having the heart in a state of palpitation; in a state of confusion or perturbation.

My page allow'd me not a beast,
I wanted gilt to pay the hyre;
He and I lap o're many a syre,
I heuked him at Calder-cult;
But long ere I came to Clype-myre,
The ragged rogue caught me a-whilt.

Watson's Coll., i. 12.

Hence,

WHILTIE-WHALTIE, adv. In a state of palpitation. My heart's aw playin whiltie-whaltie, S.

Isl. vellt, valtt, yllt, volutor; or hæll-a, resonare.
The Danes use kullert og bullert in the sense of upside down.

To WHILTIE-WHALTIE, v. n. 1. To palpitate, Ayr.

"A kin' o' nettling ramfeezalment gart a' my heart whiltie-whaltie." Ed. Mag., Ap. 1821, p. 351.

2. To dally, to loiter; given as synon. with Whilly-whally, S. B.

To WHIMMER, v. n. To cry feebly, like a child, Roxb.

This seems radically the same with E. to Whimper; only retaining the form of Teut. wimmer-en, obvagare, clamitare prae dolore vel gaudio. (V. Skinner, vo. Whimper.) Germ. wimmer-en, "to whimper, or whine, as a little child;" Ludwig. Wachter views it as the same with Germ. jammern, ejulare, w being prefixed. This must be the same with Whimmer.

WHIMWHAM, s. 1. A whim, a whimsey, Loth., as used by O. E. writers.

2. A kickshaw, in relation to food.

They brought to him a good sheep's head,
A napkin, and a towel,—
Gae, tak your whim-whams a' frae me,
And bring me fast my gruel.

Ballad Book, p. 17.

C. R. chym, motion, impulse, Owen; a whimsey, Richards. The Isl. exactly corresponds. Hwim, motus celer; Awim-a, cito movers.

WHIN, s. A few. V. QUHEYNE.

It is also improperly given in the form of Whine, under JOE-TROT.

WHIN, WHINSTANE, s. That in England called toadstone, or ragstone, S.

"Whin-stone, or porphyry, (called toad-stone, rag-stone, &c., in England) differs from moor-stone in this, that the former contains iron and also some lime." P. Dalmeny, Statist. Acc., i. 257. V. QUHYN.

[WHIN-CHACKER, s. The Whin-chat, Saricola rubetra, S.]To WHINGE, v. n. To whine, S.

Poor cauldrie Coly whing'd aneath my plaid.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 389.

V. QUHINGE.

"Mr. William [Guthry] said, 'I'll tell you, Cousin, what I'm not only thinking upon, but I am sure of it, if I be not under a delusion; and it is, that the malignants will be your death, and this gravel will be mine, but ye will have the advantage of me, for ye will die honourably before many witnesses with a rope about your neck, and I will die whinging upon a pickle of straw.'" Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 174.

WHINGER, WHINGAR, s. A sort of hanger, which seems to have been used both at meals, as a knife, and in broils.

"Wherefore said he [James V.] gave my predecessors so many lands and rents to the kirk: was it to maintain hawks, dogs and whores to a number of idle priests? The king of England burns, the king of Denmark beheads you, I shall stick you with this whingar. And therewith he drew out his dagger, and they fled from his presence in great fear." Melvil's Memoirs, p. 4.
"Many ane time the half-merk whinger for the half-penny whang." Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 25.

And whingers, now in friendship bare,
The social meal to part and share,
Had found a bloody sheath.

Lay of the Last Minstrel, C. v. 7.

This may be merely a corr. of E. hanger. It must be observed, however, that E. whiniard, whinyard, is used for a short sword; which Seren. thinks may be from Isl. Awia, furunculus, and yard, ulnus, q. the instrument used clandestinely.

Whiniard is expl. by Phillips, "a kind of crooked sword." Minshew and Skinner also give the same word; so that it is probably O. E. Jacob derives it from A.-S. wian, to get, and are, honour.

WHINGICK, s. A snuff-box, Shetl.

To WHINK, v. n. 1. A term used to denote the suppressed bark of a shepherd's dog, when from want of breath he is unable to extend his cry; or his shrill impatient tone when he loses sight of the hare which he has been in pursuit of; Ettr. For.

"He saw—the malignant collics whinking after him." Perils of Man, ii. 22.

The word, I am informed, is confined to the Collie; and used only in relation to his pursuit of game.

2. To bark as an untrained dog in pursuit of game, ibid., Tweedd.

I never thought, for a' your ruse,
That e'er he was for muckle use,
Except for drivin' nout to fairs,
Or rinnin' whinkin' after hares.

Hogg's Scot. Pastorals, p. 20.

WHINK, s. The suppressed bark of a shepherd's dog as above described, ibid.

Isl. queink-a, frequenter lamentari, is the only word that appears to have any resemblance. Su.-G. hwink-a, vacillare, is indeed perfectly similar. But it refers to motion, not to sound. The same thing may be observed of Teut. quack-en, dubio et tremulo motu ferri.

WHINKENS, s. pl. Flummery, S. B. sowens, synon.

Perhaps from Su.-G. hwink-a, vacillare, to move backwards and forwards, because of their flaccidity. The E. term flummery is, in like manner, applied to any thing that is loose or wants solidity.

To WHINNER, v. n. To pass with velocity, S. B.

Isl. Awyn-a, resonare, sonum edere obstreperum; Awia, voces obstreperas et resonabiles; G. Andr., p. 128.

WHINNER, s. 1. The sound caused by rapid flight or motion, whizzing noise, S. B., Loth., Dumfr. Whunner, Gall.

"Whunner, a thundering sound," Gall. Enc.

2. "The blow which causes such a sound;" ibid.

At last the beggars cleared the field,
For wha could stan' their whinners?
The very ploughmen had to yield,
Wi' hides as black as shuners.

Ibid. p. 268.

3. A smart resounding box on the ear, Dumfr.

Isl. Ariar, sonus ex vibratione; fremitus venti; Halderson.

WHINNERIN', part. adj. A whinnerin' drouth, a severe drought, accompanied with a sifting wind. It is applied to any thing so much dried, in consequence of extreme drought, as to rustle to the touch; as, "The corn's a' whinnerin'," Clydes.

WHIN-SPARROW, s. The Field or Mountain sparrow, S.; Fringilla montana, Linn.; denominated, as would seem, from its being often found among whins or furze.

WHINYARD, s. A short crooked sword, synon. Whinger.

"Ruthven, with his complices—struck him over our shoulder with whin-yards," &c. Chalmers's Mary, i. 164.

WHIP, s. [Time, term, period; a whip o' dearth, a time of dearth, Perth.] In a whip, adv. In a moment, S.

Alern. unipphe, O. Tent. wap, nictus oculi. Sw. wippen is equivalent to our word: paas wippen, upon the point of doing any thing; Mod. Sax. up de wippe, id. Inre views the Su.-G. v., mentioned under the preceding term, as the origin. We also say, He was within a whip of such a thing, S. B.

Kilian, however, gives fax, lumen, vibratio luminis, as the primary sense. According to this, the term originally conveys the very same idea with blink, S. In a blink, i.e., in a twinkling. The v. wippen also signifies to glance, to shine at intervals. Kilian views that as the same word, used in a secondary sense, which signifies to vibrate, to be agitated with a tremulous motion.

On this ground, whip is to be classed with that variety of terms, denoting a moment, or the smallest portion of time, which are borrowed from the motion of light, or refer to it; as, Blink, Glint, Glist, Gliff, Gliffin, &c.

C. B. chwiip, a quick flirt or turn; also quickly, instantly; chwiip-iaur, to move briskly; Owen.

To WHIP off, or awa', v. n. To fly, to get off with velocity, S. sometimes pron. whoep.

Isl. hwappast, repente accidit; Su.-G. wipp-a, motitare se, sursum deorsum celeriter ferri.

WHIP-LICKER, s. One who has a cart and horse for hiring, Fife; a cant term.

WHIP-MAN, s. A common carter, Loth., Perth.

But waes me, seldom that's the case,
Whan ruthless whip-men, scant o' grace,
Baghash and bann them to their face.

The Old Horse, Duff's Poems, p. 84.

[WHIP-MEG-MORUM, s. The name of a tune.

So well's he kept his decorum,
And all the stots of whip-meg-morum.

Piper of Kilbarchan.

In the following quotation it seems to be modified to signify party politics:—

Let Whig and Tory all agree,
To drop their whig-mig-morum.

Skinner's Amusement of Leisure Hours, 1809.]

[WHIPPACK, s. A small fishing-rod, Shetl.]

WHIPPER-SNAPPER, s. 1. A little presumptuous fellow; a very contemptuous term, S. This is also cant E., expl. "a diminutive fellow;" Class. Dict.

2. A cheat, Dumfr.; pron. Whopper-snapper.

3. A fraudulent trick, ibid.

It might be deduced from Isl. hwipp, saltus, celer cursus, and snapp-a, capture escam; as originally denoting one who manifested the greatest alacrity in snatching at a morsel.

WHIPPER-TOOTIES, s. pl. Silly scruples about doing any thing, frivolous difficulties, S.

This is probably corr. from the Fr. phrase, après tout, after all; pour dire, Après avoir bien considéré, bien pesé, bien examiné toutes choses. Omnia per-pensia; Dict. Trev. One, attached to Gr. etymons, might deduce this from trep, propter, and tōra, hoc.

WHIPPERT, adj. Hasty and tart in demeanour, or in the mode of doing any thing. Hence whippert-like, indicating irritation, by the manner of expression or action, S.

Isl. hwop-a signifies lightness, inconstancy. But perhaps it is rather formed from the v. Whip, q. v.

WHIPPY, s. A term of contempt applied to a girl or young woman; a malapert person; sometimes implying the idea of lightness of carriage, Lanarks.

"Go! ye idle whippy!" said her mother, 'and let me see how weel ye'll ca' the kirm.'" Cortagers of Glenburnie, p. 200.

Isl. hwopa, levitas; whence hwopulegr, levis et inconstans; G. Andr., p. 127; hwippin, ultro citroque vagari. C. B. chwiip-iaur, to move briskly.

WHIPPY, WHUPPY, adj. Active, agile, clever, Lanarks.

To WHIR, WHIRKY away, v. n. To fly off with such noise as a partridge or moorcock makes, when it springs from the ground, Roxb.

"Or I gat his grave weel howket, some of the quality, that were of his ain unhappy persuasion, had the corpse whirried away up the water, and buried him after their ain pleasure doubtless." Monastery, i. 49.

Whirring is used as a part. in this sense in E. Serenius traces it to Su.-G. hurr-a, cum impetu circumagi. Hwerfu-u, in gyrum agere, is nearly allied.

WHIRKINS, s. pl. The posteriors. V. WHEERIKINS. [Cont. where I ken.]

WHIRL, WHURL, s. The apple; also denominated the Thorle pippin, Roxb.

The name is still the same; the difference arising solely from the various modes of pronouncing the same term. V. WHOBLE.

WHIRLIWHAW, s. A whirligig, S. [Whirligigum is another form.]

"There's mair gold about the whirlt-whaw o' that se button-hole than in the whole bouk o' a rose noble." Rothelan, i. 213.

[To WHIRLIWHAW, v. a. To mistify, to gull, Loth.]

[* To WHIRR, v. a. and n. 1. To move off or along with great speed, to vanish; as, "He whirred by like stour," Clydes; whirm, Shetl.

2. To throw, strike, or dash suddenly, ibid.]

WHIRR, WHIRRET, s. A smart blow, apparently as including the idea of the sound caused by it.

"Then did the monk, with his staffe of the crosse, give him such a sturdie thump and whirret betwix his neck and shoulders,—that he made him lose both sense and motion, and fall down stone dead at his horse's feet." Urquhart's Rabelais, B. i. p. 192.

Bailey gives Wherret in the same sense. Perhaps, as denoting the sharp sound of the stroke, from Quhir, v., to whizz, q. v.

It seems to be merely a provincial term. "Wherret, a great blow; perhaps a back-handed stroke;" Grose.

To WHIRRY, v. a. Similar to E. Hurry.
["Whirry Whigs awa man;" Old Song.]

"See now, mither, what ye hae dunc," whispered Cuddie; "there's the Philistines, as ye ca' them, are gaun to whirry awa' Mr. Harry, and a' wi' your nash-gab." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 194.

WHIRROCK, s. A knot in wood, caused by the growth of a branch from the place; Tweedd.; whirlock, Shetl. V. VIRROCK.

[To WHISH, WHUSH, v. n. To whizz, to rush with a whizzing sound, S.]

To WHISH, v. a. To hush; part. pa. whist.

"The keeping of the castle of Edinburgh was the last act of opposition, and with the yielding of it, all was whist." Hume's Hist. Doug., p. 246.

Seren., vo. Hush, refers to Sw. visch, interj. used by nurses when lulling their babes; and hwiak-a, to whisper.

WHISH, WHUSH, s. 1. A rushing or whizzing sound, S. B.

2. A whisper, S. B. Whisht, Loth.

Lat her yelp on, be ye as calm's a mouse,
Nor lat your whisht be heard into the house.

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 2.

Su.-G. hwaes-a, to whizz; vis-a, Isl. kris-a, susur-rare, quis, susurru; G. Andr., p. 157.

Hwijsk-a, mussitare, ibid., p. 127.

[WHISHIE, s. A slight sound, or whisper; as, "Noo, not a whishie," i.e., perfect silence, Clydes., Perth.]

WHISHT, interj. Hush, be silent, S. hist, whist, E. Chaucer, huiste. It seems to be properly the imperat. of the v.; q. be hushed.

But whisht, it is the knight in masquerade,
That comes hid in this cloud to see his lad.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 111.

Clav. Yorks., "Whesht, whesht, is peace, peace."

Ben Jonson frequently uses husht precisely in the same sense with our whisht.

"Whisht, gudewife; is this a time, or is this a day, to be singing your ranting fule-sangs in?" Waverley, ii. 122.

This is sometimes used as a v., S. B.

They'd better whisht, reed I sud raise a fry.

Ross's Helenore, p. 18.

This is nearly allied to Fr. houische, which Palsgr. gives among "Interjections betokening keepyng of sylence;" F. 473, a.

WHISKER, WHISCAR, s. 1. A bunch of feathers for sweeping any thing, Moray. E. whisk, a small besom or brush.

2. The sheath, at a woman's side, used for holding the end of a wire, while she is knitting stockings, ibid.

Sw. hvisku, scopae; Seren. Teut. wissch-en, tergere.

WHISKER, WHISQUER, s. "A blusterer."

"March whisker was never a good fisher," S. Prov.; "an old proverb signifying that a windy March is a token of a bad fish year." Kelly, p. 254. Ferguson writes whisquer.

Isl. hviu-a, anhelare; hwaess, ventosus; hwaess-widri, ventus acer; nii er hwaest, ventus spirat.

WHISKIE, WHISKY, s. A species of ardent spirits, distilled from malt, S.

[WHISKIN, s. Palpitation of the heart, Shetl.]

WHISKIT, part. adj. A whiskit mare, apparently a mare having a switched tail, Perth.; q. one adapted for whisking off the flies.

WHISKS, s. pl. A machine for winding yarn on a quill or clue; of more modern construction than Windles, Renfr.; probably from E. Whisk, because of the quick motion.

WHISSEL, WHISTLE, s. 1. A pipe, a shepherd's pipe; also, a fife, a small flute, S.

"Whissels for Taberners, the dozen—xxiiijs." Rates A. 1611.

2. Used metaph. for the throat, in the phrase, to weet one's whistle, to take a drink, sometimes applied to tipplers, S.

It is, however, O. E. "I wete my whystell as good drinkers do;" Palsgrau.

[To WHISSEL, WHISTLE, v. n. To play on a reed, pipe, fife, or flute, S.

I'll break my reed an' never whistle mair.

Ramsay, Gentle Shepherd.

2. To wheedle, cajole, wile; as, "He'd whissel a levrock fra the lift."

Whistle is also used in the sense of be silent, think what you please but ask no questions, as in Burus' pawky song,

First when Maggy was my care,
Heaven, I thought, was in her air;
Now we're married—speir na mair—
Whistle owre the lave o't.]

WHISTLE-BINKIE, s. One who attends a penny-wedding, but without paying any thing, and therefore has no right to take any share of the entertainment; a mere spectator, who is as it were left to sit on a bench by himself, and who, if he pleases, may whistle for his own amusement; Aberd.

WHISTLE-THE-WHAUP. A phrase addressed to one who is supposed to play upon another, West of S.

Q. "if you are for sport, call upon the curlew;" referring, probably, to the folly of such an attempt, because this bird delights in sequestered places.

WHISTLER, s. A bird so named, Kinross. V. LOCH-LEAROCK.

WHISTLERS, s. pl. "These farmers upon a very extensive estate, who give the common enemy, i.e., the proprietor, information as to the rent or value of their neighbours' farms, when he is about to raise his rents." South of S. Sir W. S.

WHISTLE, s. Change of money, S.

— Now they've got the whistle of their groat.

Ramsey's Poems, i. 56.

V. QUHISSEL.

To WHIT, v. a. To milk closely, to draw off the dregs, Ettr. For.; Jib, synonym.

I see no analogous term except perhaps C. B. chwyd-u, to eject, chicyd, ejection.

WHITTINS, s. pl. The last part of what is called "a male of milk;" which is considered as the richest, and is usually milked by a thrifty housewife into a vessel by itself, and put among the cream reserved for making butter, Tweedd.

To WHITE, v. a. To cut with a knife, S.

For he's far aboon Dunkel the night,
Maun white the stick and a' that.

Burns, i. 363.

V. QUHYTE.

This appears in O. E. in the form of Thwytytyn and Twytytyn. "Telwyn or twytytyn. Abseco. Reseco." Prompt. Parv. The s. is also given as Thwytynge, and "Theytinge. Scissulatus." Ibid.

WHITER, s. 1. One that whittles, S.

2. A knife, in respect of its being ill or well adapted for this purpose; as, "a gude whiter," "an ill whiter," S.

WHITINS, s. pl. Thin slices cut off with a knife, Clydes.

To WHITTER, v. a. To lessen by taking away small portions, to fritter, Roxb.

Shall we view this as a frequentative from the v. to White, to cut with a knife, as perhaps originally applied to the manual operation of children?

To WHITE, v. a. To flatter, Galloway.

"To White, to flatter for favour;" Gall. Enc. C. B. hud-o, to wheedle, chwyd-aw, to trick. Hence, WHITE FOLK. A name given to wheedlers, S.

"You are as white as a loan soup. Spoken to flatterers who speak you fair, whom the Scots call White Folk." Kelly's S. Prov., p. 371.

A similar metaphor is in the Fr. phrase, C'est le cheval aux quatre pieds blanc, which Cotgr. says, "is most used to express a companion that promises much, and performs nought."

Another Fr. phrase conveys the same idea: Ils sont tout blanc, au-dehors, & tout noirs au-dedans; c'est-à-dire, qu'ils sont vertueux en apparence, mais qu'au fonds ce sont des méchants. Dict. Trev.

WHITE-LIVER. A flatterer, Roxb.

White is used by our old writers as signifying hypocritical. V. QUHYTE, adj.

VOL. IV.

WHITE-WIND, s. Flattery, wheedling; a cant term. To blaw white wind in ane's lug, to flatter one; Clydes., Roxb.

* WHITING, s. The name of this fish is metaph. used for the language of flattery, S.

"He gave me whitings, but [without] bones," S. Prov.; "That is, he gave me fair words. The Scots call flatteries whitings, and flatterers white people." Kelly, p. 153. V. WHITE FOLK.

The phrase to Butter a Whiting, is used in the same sense, S.

WHITIE, WHITELIP, s. A flatterer. "An auld whitie, a flatterer; the same with whitelip;" Gall. Enc. V. WHITE FOLK.

WHITE-ABOON-GLADE. The Hen-harrier, Stirlings. Falco cynaeus, Linn.

"But of all the birds of prey amongst us, the hen-harrier, or white-aboon-glade, as he is called, is the most destructive to game, both partridges and murr-fowl." P. Campsie, Statist. Acc., xv. 324.

This name corresponds to that of Lanius albus, Aldrov., Le Lanier cendré, Brisson, and Gras-wiese, Geyer of Frisch. V. Penn. Zool., p. 193.

WHITE BONNET. A name given to the person, who, in a sale by auction, bids for his own goods, or who is employed by the owner for this purpose, S.

This metaph. term seems to signify a marked person, or one who deserves to be marked; in allusion, perhaps, to the custom in Italy by which the Jews are obliged to wear yellow bonnets for distinction, or of bankrupts wearing green bonnets, according to the laws of France. The term is most probably a literal translation of a Fr. phrase, the meaning of which is now lost. For the expression, Bonnet blanc, ou blanc bonnet, is still proverbially used to denote the things that are exactly alike, and which may be indifferently put the one for the other.

WHITE-CRAP, s. A name applied to grain, to distinguish it from such crops as are always green, S.

"White-crops, corn, as wheat, barley, &c., Gloze" Grose.

WHITE-FEATHER. To have a white feather in one's wing, a proverbial phrase denoting timidity or cowardice, South of S.; analogous to E. White-livered.

"He has a white feather in his wing this same West-burnflat after a'," said Simon of Hackburn, somewhat scandalized by his ready surrender. "He'll ne'er fill his father's boots." Tales Landl., i. 180.

WHITE FISH. V. under QUH.

WHITE FISH IN THE NET. A sport formerly common in Angus, although now almost gone into desuetude. Two persons hold a plaid pretty high. The rest of the company are obliged to leap over it. The object is to entangle in the plaid the person who takes the leap; and if thus intercepted, he loses the game.

C 5

WHITE HARE. The Alpine hare, S.

"Lepus variabilis. Alpine Hare.—S. White hare." Edin. Mag., July 1819, p. 507.

WHITE HAWSE. "A favourite pudding; that which conducts the food to the stomach with sheep;" Gall. Enc.

WHITE-HORSE. A name given to the Fuller ray, a fish.

"Raja fullonica, the White-horse;" Sibb. Fife, p. 119.

WHITE-IRON or AIRN, s. Tin-plate, S.

WHITE-IRON SMITH, a tin-plate worker, S.

"We observed two occupations united in the same person, who had hung out two sign-posts. Upon one was, 'James Hood, White Iron Smith,' (i.e., Tinplate Worker.) Upon another, 'the Art of Fencing taught by James Hood.'" Boswell's Journal, p. 54.

WHITE-LEGS, s. pl. The smaller wood, such as branches, &c., of a hag, or cutting, Berw.

"The smaller wood, provincially termed white-legs, is sold for temporary fences, or fire wood." Agr. Surv. Berw., p. 334.

[WHITE-MAA, WHITE-MAW, s.] The herring gull, Larus canus, Shetl.]

WHITE-MEAL, s. Oat-meal; as distinguished from what is made of barley, called Bread-meal, Clydes.

WHITENIN, s. The chalk used for making walls or floors white, S.

WHITE PUDDING. A pudding made of meal, suet, and onions, stuffed in one of the intestines of a sheep, S.

And first they ate the white puddings,
And then they ate the black.

Herd's Coll., II. 159.

V. BLACK PUDDING.

WHITE SHOWER. A shower of snow, Aberd.; pron. Fite shower.

WHITE-SILLER, s. Silver money; as, "I'll gie ye white siller for't," I shall give you a sixpence at least, S.

The phrase huit seolfer occurs in A.-S., but as signifying pure silver; Lye, vo. Seolfer. Sw. hvitit penningar, silver money.

WHITE WAND. V. WAND OF PEACE.

WHITE-WOOD, s. The white and more decayable wood on the outside of a tree, S. [Alburnum, sap-wood.]

"The oaks [in the mosses] are almost entire; the white wood, as it is called, or the outermost circles of the tree only are decayed." Agr. Surv. Stirl., p. 40.

To WHITHER, v. a. To beat, to belabour, Roxb.

WHITHER, s. A stroke, a smart blow, ibid.

Isl. hvidr-a, cito commoveri.

To WHITTHER, v. n. To whirl rapidly with a booming sound, Teviotd. V. QUHIDDIE, v.

WHITHER-SPALE, WHUTHER-SPALE, WITHER-SPALE, s. 1. A child's toy, composed of a piece of lath, from seven inches to a foot in length, notched all round, to which a cord is attached. This, when whirled round, produces a booming sound, Roxb. [V. THUNNER-SPEAL.]

From Whither, to whizz, (V. QUHIDDIE, QUHETHYR,) and Spale, spail, a lath, or shaving of wood, q. "a whizzing" or "booming spail."

2. Light as straw or down. "He would steal it, if it were as light as a whither-spale," ibid.

3. A thin, lathy person, ibid.

4. One who is of a versatile cast of mind, who is easily turned from his opinion or purpose, ibid.

WHITTIE-WHATIES, s. pl. Silly pretences, from a design to procrastinate, or to blind; frivolous excuses, circumlocutions, meant to conceal the truth, S.

Whittie-Whaws is used in the same sense, Aberd.

It's them that fley me wi' their taws,
Their cankart cuffs, and whitty whaws.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 179.

Isl. vaettuge, quod nullius est ponderis, atomon, quod non potest librari; G. Andr. C. B. chwoichuat, a sly pilferer; Owen: chwoylawiaeth, nugatio, gesticulatio; Boxhorn.

Perhaps the last part of this reduplicative term is the radical one, from A.-S. hwata, omina, divinationes, auguria; "gesses, forespeakings, luck good or ill; divinations, soothsayings;" Somner. Warna the that thu ne gime drycraefsta, ne uerfaena, ne hwatena; Take care that thou do not follow incantations, or dreams, or divinations; Deut. xviii. 10.

Thus it might originally be equivalent to freits. Isl. thwaelt-a, however, signifies nugari; thwaeltling-r, nugamenta; G. Andr., p. 268. Belg. wisiercasie, seems to have been formed on the same plan; "fiddle-faddle, whim-wham;" Sewel. This has much the appearance of an Alem. origin, s in that language, being frequently substituted for t in other dialects. Germ. waschen, garrire; Wachter. V. WISHY-WASHIES. Dry-craefsta, in the quotation, is from dry, a magician, and craefsta, craft. According to Somner, and Wachter, (vo. Druiden), the term dry had found its way into Germany from the name of the Druids, to whom great skill in magic was ascribed.

WHITTLING, WHITING, WHITEN, s. A species of sea-trout, S.

"In some parts of the Ern, there are pike; and, in some seasons of the year, great numbers of sea-trouts, from 3 lb. to 6 lb. weight. The fishermen call them whittlings, on account of the scales they have at their first coming up the river from the sea." P. Muthil, Perth. Statist. Acc., viii. 488.

"There is also in this river a larger sort of a fish called a whitting; it is a large fine trout, from 16 inches to 2 feet long, and well grown; its flesh is red, and high coloured, like salmon, and of full as fine a flavour." P. Dunse, Berwick's. Ibid. iv. 390.

"From the end of June, till close-time, there is abundance of fish, after floods, in Esk, and the lower end of Liddel; such as salmon, grilse, sea trout, and whitens, as they are named here, or herlings, as they are called in Annandale." P. Cannobie, Dumfr. Ibid. xiv. 410.

It is sometimes written whiting.

"The fish is well known to those who fish in the Annan and the Nith by the name of the hirling. But it is called by other names in other parts of the country. In the Esk, in Dumfries-shire, and in the Elen at Carlisle, it is termed the whiting, from its bright silvery colour. In the Tay, above Perth, it is called the Lammas whiting, from its appearance in the river at that season. In Angus, the Mearns, and Aberdeenshire, it goes by the name of the Phinoc." Dr. Walker, Transact. Highl. Soc. S., ii. 354.

Whiting or whiten would seem to be the same with whirling. But, according to Dr. Walker, the whiting or hirling, after passing the winter in the sea, on its return to the river in March and April, is "called the whirling, or, as it is commonly pronounced, the whirling;"—in the Spey and other rivers in the North, —known by the name of the white trout." Ibid., p. 355.

This learned naturalist views the whiting as a salmon; which he supposes to pass through the different states of the samlet, hirling, whirling, and grilse, before it comes to maturity. Ibid. p. 363. It has, however, been urged with great probability, that they are different species; because the whittings or hirlings have roes, and of course are understood to spawn; Ibid. p. 354. N. Besides, the phinoc, which Dr Walker views as the same with the whiting, is said "always to retain the distinctive mark of yellow fins, as well as particular spots greatly different from those on salmon." Mackenzie, Ibid. p. 377, 378.

Sw. whirling signifies a whiting.

WHITLIE, QUHITELIE, QUHITELY, adj.
Having a delicate or fading look, S.
Whitely has been used O. E. as equivalent to livid.

The seconde stede to name hicht Ethiose,
Quhitely and pale, and somecle ascendent.

Henryson's Test. Cresside, Chron. S. P., i. 164.

"Whitely things are ay tender;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 78.

"As for the earle of Bothwell he wes fair and quhitlie, hinging shouldered, and went something forward." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 423. Whitely, Ed. 1728.

"Alas are these pale cheekes, and these whitely lippes the face of my nephew, and the fauour of my beloved Narbonus?" Narbonus, Part II., p. 35.

From A.-S. hwit, albus, and lie, similis.

[WHITRACK, WHITRECK, WHITTRET, s.
A weasel. V. QUHITRED.]

WHITRACK-SKIN, s. A purse made of the skin of a weasel, Moray.

Her minnie had hain'd the warl,
And the whitrack-skin had routh.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 294.

WHITTER, s. "A hearty draught of liquor;" Gl. Burns, S.O.

Syne we'll sit down an' tak our whitter,
To cheer our heart.

Burns, iii. 240.

Perhaps q. whetter, from E. whet, applied to a dram, as supposed to sharpen the appetite.

WHITTER, s. "Any thing of weak growth is a whitter;" Gall. Enc. Twitter, q.v., is elsewhere used in the same sense.

[To WHITTER, v. a. To fritter. V. under WHITE, v.]

To WHITTER, v. n. To move with lightness and velocity; as, Whitterin down the stair, Ayrs.

It must be the same word with that given by Mactaggart. "Whittering, running about in a strange simple manner. The way a modest lover haunts his mistress;" Gall. Enc. Apparently a diminutive from Quhid.

To WHITTER, v. n. To speak low and rapidly, Roxb.

Here objects charm on every hand,
The winking swankies whitter,
And fondly ee some female band
Sail by in smirking titter.

St. Bonnell's Fair, A. Scott's Poems, p. 56.

WHITTER, s. Loquacity, prattle. "Hold your whitter," be silent, Roxb.

WHITTER-WHATTER, s. 1. Trifling conversation, chattering, Roxb.

Hout, man, it's ablin's but a clatter:
What need we heed sic whitter-whatter,
Or 'tween us twa what need we care,
Tho' a' the French were stanin there!

A. Scott's Poems, p. 47.

2. A woman who is very garrulous, is said to be "a perfect whitter-whatter," ibid.

This reduplicative term, more forcibly expressing continuation, is formed from a v. primarily denoting the chattering of birds. V. QUHITTER, r.

To WHITTER-WHATTER, v. n. To converse in a low tone of voice, Roxb. V. QUHITTER.

[WHITTIE, adj. Shabby, mean, vague, evasive, Mearns. V. WHEETIE.]

WHITTIE-WHATTIE, s. 1. Vague, shuffling, or cajoling language, S.

"Your reluctant brethren—may essay to keep you back by telling you some new stories (when they find you cannot be charmed or enchanted into a forbearance by the old Spring of Prudence) of they themselves know not what. But the sense and substance of all this whittie whattie, to be sure, will be only, 'O be quiet, let nothing be heard, that may provoke his Highness.'" M'Ward's Contend., p. 363.

2. Applied to a person, as denoting one who employs every kind of means to gain an end, Fife.

To WHITTIE-WHATTIE, v. n. 1. To talk frivolously, to shilly-shally, S.

"What are ye whittie-whattieing about, ye gowk," said his gentle sister, 'gie the ladic back her bowie cie there, and be blithe to be sae rid on't.'" The Pirate, i. 136.

2. To form frivolous pretences or excuses, S.

- WHITTLE, s. 1. A knife, S. as in E.
2. Applied to the harvest-hook, S. V. QUHYTE.

Rise, rise, an' to the whittle,
In haste this day.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 138.

- [3. Applied to the stone used for sharpening a scythe, West of S., Shetl.]

WHITTRET, s. The weasel. V. QUHITRED.

WHITWRATCH, s. The name formerly given in S. to a terrier.

"But before they departed from these ugly earth-holes, an ill-contrived urchin, or a cur out of shape, and deform'd, (as they described him), but call him a Tarrier, and they by the name of a Whitwratch (bastard-brood of the Fox) as the servants apprehended; so might any man as well as they rationally conclude, as by the circumstances given us by their description." Frank's Northern Mem., p. 136.

Apparently q. white ratch. V. RACHE. The Icelanders call a fox moelrache; G. Andr. vo. Rache, p. 194.

[To WHIZ, WHIZZ, v. a. To inquire, cross-question; part. pr. whizzin; Clydes., Shetl. Like E. quiz.]

WHON, WHUN, s. A vulgar name for a worthless character, Teviotd.; synon. Scamp. C.B. chueyn denotes a chaos, also weeds; chwynu, a grub.

WHOOGH, interj. An exclamation, especially used by dancers, for mutual excitation, Mearns, Ang.

—At lika thud and sough,
They cried, "Weel-done!—hey! hilloa! whoogh!"
Beattie's John o' Arnha, p. 58.

"Who! who! an interjection, marking great surprise. North." Grose.

WHOPIN, WHAUPIN, WHUPPIN, part. adj. Large, big; A whaupin pennyworth, a good bargain for the money, Lanarks.

WHORLE, s. 1. A very small wheel, as that in a child's cart, S.

2. The fly of a spinning-rock, made of wood, of lead, or a hard stone, S. whirl, E.

"In one of them [graves] was found a metal spoon, and a glass cup that contained two gills Scotch measure; and in another, a number of stones, formed into the shape and size of whorles, like those that were formerly used for spinning in Scotland." Barry's Orkney, p. 206. He adds, in a note, "A round perforated piece of wood, put upon a spindle."

Wi' cauk and keel I'll win your bread,
And spindles and whorles for them wha need.

Gabrielunys Man, Herd's Coll., II. 51.

O.E. "Whorle of a spyndyl. Vertebrum." Prompt. Parv.

It appears from Minshew, that wharle and whorle were formerly used in this sense in E.

"O. E. wharle for a spyndell, peson," Fr. Palagraue. Sa.-G. harfrel, hwirfwel, id. verticillum; from hwirf-a, to be whirled round; O. Sw. hworla, rotare.

WHORLE-BANE, s. The hip-bone or joint, Fife.

Test. wervel-been, vertebra, spondylus. E. whirle-bone denotes the knee-joint. But in O.E. whyrlbeon had the same signification with the S. word. "Joynt or hole of the knokyll bone cleped, the whyrlbeon. Ancha." Prompt. Parv. Ancha is expl. as synon. with Coxendix; Du Cange. Knokyll bone is afterwards rendered, not only by the more general term Condilus, but by Coxa, the hip-bone.

To WHIOSLE, WHOZLE, v. n. To blow, to breathe hard, to wheeze, Aberd.; whozle, Dumfr.

"Ye wou'd hae hard the peer bursen belchs whoslin like a horse i' the strangle a riglenth e'er you came near them." Journal from London, p. 6, 7.

—Whozling sair and cruppen down
Auld Saunders seem'd.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 42.

"Whozling, breathing hard, as from asthma;" Gl. ibid. p. 153. V. WHAISLE.

WHOW! WHOUGH! interj. An exclamation of surprise or admiration.

Perhaps like Lat. eho, expressive of admiration. Dan. ho! ho! aha, hold a little. V. WHOUGH.

WHO-YAUDS, interj. A term used to make dogs pursue horses, Lanarks.

Who seems the same as Hou in HOU-SHEEP, q. v. V. YAD.

WHUD, s. A lie, South of S. V. QUHID.

To WHUDDER, v. n. To make a whizzing or rushing sort of noise. "The wind in a cold night is said to whudder;" Gall. Enc.

WHUDDER, s. A noise of this description, ibid. V. QUHIDDIR.

WHULLILOW, s. "The same with Whillie-billou;" Gall. Enc.

To WHULLY, v. a. To circumvent by wheedling. V. WHILLY, v.

WHULLIGOLEERIE, s. A wheedling fellow. V. WHILLIEGOLEERIE.

To WHULLUP, WHOLLUP, v. n. To fawn, to wheedle, to curry favour by bestowing small gifts, Roxb.; perhaps contr. from Whully up. V. WHULLY.

WHULT, s. "A blow received from a fall, or the noise attending such a fall. 'He gat an unco whult from falling,' and, 'He fell with an unco whult;" Gall. Enc.

C. B. chwelyd, to overturn; chwil, a turn. The S. word may have been primarily used to denote the act of falling, or a kind of somersault.

WHULT, s. [A large piece or portion, S.:] "any thing larger than expected;" Gall. Enc.

This may have been changed perhaps from C. B. helaeth, chelaeth, large, helaeth-u, to amplify. Gwata also signifies fullness, and gwataed, a making full.

WHULTER, s. Any thing that is large of its kind; as, "What'n a great whulter! or, a muckle whulter," S.

"A large potato is termed a whulter," Gall. Enc.
Perhaps from the same origin with the v. Wolter, Teut. woll-r-en, to overturn; q. something ready to overturn another object.

WHUMGEE, s. Expl. "vexatious whispering; also, trivial trick;" Gall. Enc.

Allied perhaps to C. B. chvim, impulse, chvim-ia-v, to move round briskly, chvimeth, nimble, speedy. Isl. hivuma, however, is expl. repressae vocis sibilus; Halderson.

To WHUMMIL, WHOMEL, v. a. To turn upside down. V. QUHEMLE, WHAMBLE.

WHUMMILS, s. pl. A scourge for a top, Aberd. V. FUMMILS.

WHUMMLE, s. Overthrow, overturning, S.

"Nae doubt—it's an awfu' whumml—and for aye that held his head aye high too." Rob Roy, ii. 194. V. QUHEMLE.

WHUMPIE, s. A wooden dish which contains as much sordid food as suffices for two persons; otherwise expressed, a ticcum bicker, Berw.

Probably transmitted from the Danes of Northumberland; Dan. humper, signifying a bowl.

WHUN, s. Furze, S. Whin, E.

The waving flags, and mony a gunn,
Buskit wi' flow'rs and yellow whun—
Stream'd like a rainbow—
Mayne's Siller Gun, Canto v. 6.

WHUNLINTIE, s. The red linnet; or rose lintie.

"They are of different sorts, though all of the linnet tribe. Whunlinties form the greatest number." Gall. Enc. vo., Havoc-Burda.

WHUNCE, s. "A heavy blow, or the noise of such a blow, as when two channle-stanes strike one another;" Gall. Enc.

Corr. perhaps from E. Wince, as denoting the effect produced by such a blow. C. B. gwing-o, signifies to wince.

WHUNN, s. The stone called Trap, &c.

Back from the blew payment whunn,
And from ilk plaster wall,
The hot reflexing of the sunne
Inflames the air and all.

A. Hume, S. P. iii. 389.

V. QUHIN.

To WHUNNER, v. n. To strike with force so as to cause a loud noise, S.

"Yonner a gatherin' o' the Pehts whunnerin' at the dyke wi' a' their berr; as if they wadna lea' a clod o't tae haud out a stirk." Saint Patrick, iii. 84. V. WHINNER, v.

WHUPPIE, s. Synon. with Gipsy, Cuttie. V. WHIPPY.

WHURAM, s. 1. A term applied to slurs or quavers in singing, Roxb.

2. Any ornamental piece of dress, ibid.; a variety of Wheerum, q. v.

To WHURKEN, v. a. To strangle, Teviotd. "Whirkened, choaked, strangled," A. Bor. Grose.

Isl. kyrk-ia, strangulare, from kyrk, greek, the throat; kyrking, strangulation; Su.-G. qvarke, gutter; whence the term is transferred to that disease in horses in which they labour under a cough and phlegm, q. "the disease of the throat."

WHURLIE-BIRLIE, s. "Any thing which whirleth round. Children have little toys they spin, so termed;" Gall. Enc.; probably a ludicrous name corr. from E. Hurly-burly.

To WHURLIWA, v. a. To gull.

"I can read the bright winkin' o' yer een,—though these gowks canna. It does aye's heart gude to see how ye whurlieha a' round ye." Corsspatrick, ii. 209. The proper orthography, doubtless, is Whullieha.

To WHURR, v. n. To make a whirring noise, S. V. QUHIRR.

WHUSH, s. 1. A rushing noise, Ettr. For.

"The roar of the water-fall only reached his ear now and then wi' a loud whush, as if it had been a sound wandering across the hills by itsel." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 318. [V. WHISH.]

2. A rumour, [a subject for talk.] "A marriage makes a whush for a while on a kintra side;" Gall. Enc.

WHUSHER, WHUSHERING, WHUSHIE, s. A whisper, whispering, Gall. Enc.; C. B. husting, id.; hust, a low or buzzing noise. V. WHISH.

To WHUSHIE, v. n. To soothe, to mitigate; synon. with E. Hush.

"Ye wad wheetle an' whushie, an' blaw i' the lug o' Sathan," &c. Saint Patrick, ii. 191.

Viewed as a variety of Hushie, to lull a child. V. WHEETLE, v.

WHUT-THROAT, s. The weasel, or whit-tret.

"The whut-throat or weazle, and the hoodie, have often bloody wars with each other about a piece of food they both relish, such as the egg of a hen." Gall. Encycl., p. 375.

"Whut-throat suffing, confab of weazles;" Ib. 306.

O! hatefu' it's to hear the whut-throat chark,
Fras out the auld taffyke. Ibid. p. 411.

This is merely a corr. of the old S. name Quhittrel, Whitred, q. v.

WHUTTLE-GRASS, s. Common Melilot, Trifolium Melilotus-officinalis, Linn., Roxb.; called also Kings-claver.

Perhaps from some supposed resemblance in form to a whittle or knife.

To WHYRIPE, v. n. To mourn, to fret, Gall.; [wherip, to whimper, Ayrs.]

"One always railing against this world, whyripes, frets, &c.—I know some who are ever whyripping on their poor husbands." Gall. Enc.

Changed, perhaps, in transmission, from C. B. chwer-i, to fret.

WI, prep. 1. Commonly used for with, S.

2. From, owing to, in consequence of; as, "Wi bein' frae hame, I miss'd him."—"He turn'd sick, wi the kirk bein' sae fu'," S.

3. Sometimes, though rarely, used in the sense of for, by means of; as, "The horse winna gang to the water wi me," S.

4. Conjoined with the active voice of active transitive verbs; as, "That buik winna read wi me," That book I cannot read, S.

5. Equivalent to by; as, "He was prann'd wi a horse," Aberd.

By Sir D. Lyndsay, "with is used in the sense of by." Chalmers' Lynds., i. 160, N.

WIAGE, WYAGE, s. A military expedition or incursion; a voyage, a journey.

For Rome quhilum sa hard wes stad,
Quhen Hannibal thaim wencusyt had,
That off ryngis with rich stansys,
That war off knyghtis fyngyris taneys,
He send thre bollis to Cartage;
And syne to Rome tuk his wiage,
Thar to destroye the cite all.

Barbour, iii. 212, MS.

Woege, ed. Pink.

All worthy Scottis allmychty God yow leid,
Sen I no mor in wyage may yow speid.

Wallace, ii. 198, MS.

The knyght Fenweik conwoide the caryage;
He had on Scottis maid mony schrewide wiage.

Ibid. iii. 118, MS.

Wyage is still used S. B. in its primary sense, for a journey; Fr. voyage, id. from roye, a way, Lat. via. Viage occurs in the same sense, R. Brunne, p. 315.

To Scotland now he fondeis, to redy his wiage,
With thritti thousand Walsh redy at his banere.

WIBROUN, s. A designation given to the Gyre Carling.

For this wild wibroun wich thame widlit sa and wareit;
And the same North Berwik Law as I heir wyvis say,
This Carling, with a fals cast, wald away careit.

Bannatyne MS., Minstrelsy, ii. 201, N.

Perhaps a dimin. from Quebre, a name given by the Persians to an infidel. V. Dict. Trev. The word might be introduced during the Crusades. Or from Fr. guespiere, guespiere, a wasp's nest, like guespine, a waspish dame, (Cotgr.)

To WICHESAUF, v. n. To vouchsafe.

"The lordis baronis walde beseke our souerane lorde, that he walde wichesauf, of ilk state to tak twa personis of wisdom, conscience, and knowlege, for the cleirnes of the said materis to be had," Acts Ja. III., A. 1473, Ed. 1814, p. 105.

WICHT, adj. 1. Strong, powerful.

Schir Jhon the Grayme, with Wallace that was wycht,
Thom Haliday, agayne retorneit rycht
To the Torhall, and thar remanyt but dreid.

Wallace, v. 1057, MS.

This seems to be the sense, in which the term is generally used concerning Wallace, although rendered bold by Mr. Ellis, Spec. I. 352.

Is nane sa wicht, sa wyse, na of sik wit,
Agane his summond suithly that may sit.
Suppose thay [thow] be als wicht as ony wall,
Thow man ga with him to his Lord's [Lordis] hall.

Priests Pebilis, S. P. R., i. 45.

Sa pasand was this cote, that skarsly mycht
Phegeus and Sagaris, tua seruandis wicht,
Bere it on thare nek chargit many fald,
Bot tharwith cled Demoleo ryn fast wald.

Doug. Virgil, 136, 29.

"A wicht man never wanted a ready weapon," S. Prov. Hence,
Worthit wycht, was in a state of convalescence, recovered from disease, regained strength.

In presence ay scho wepyt wndyr slycht;
Bot gudely meytis scho graithit him at hir mycht.
And so befel in to that sammyn tid,
Quhill forthiruar at Wallas worthit wycht.

Wallace, ii. 286, MS.

"Su. G. wig, proprie notat bello aptum, potentem, qui arma per aetatem aut vires ferre potest;" Ihre. A.-S. wiga, heros, miles; V. Wy. Moes.-G. A.-S. wig-an, to fight. Alem. wig, bellum, wich, militia, wiger, pugmans, wuigant, pugnator, wigliet, carmina bellica.

2. Active, clever, S.

Schyre Patryke the Grame, a nobil knyght,
Stowt and manly, bawid and wycht;
And mony othir gentil-men
Thare war slayne, and wondyt then.

Wyntown, viii. 141, 18.

Syne Alysawndyr the Ramsay,
Wyth syndry gud men of assay,
In-til the cove of Hawthorne-den
A gret resset had made hym then,
And had a joly company
Of wycht yhoung men and of harly.

Ibid. viii. 38, 110.

Su.-G. wig, alacer, agilis, vegetus.

3. Denoting strength of mind, or fertility of invention.

For he wes rycht wycht at devys,
And of rycht gud cownsale, and wys.

Wyntown, viii. 31, 123.

4. Strong, as applied to inanimate objects.

The Wardane has this castelle tane,
A wycht hows made of lyme and stane.

Wyntown, viii. 37, 170.

On ilka nycht thai spoyleid besyle;
To Schortwode Schaw leide wittail and wyn wicht.

Wallace, iv. 501, MS.

Flakis thai laid on temyr lang and wicht.

Ibid. vii. 784, MS.

In this sense Dunbar opposes wicht fowlis to those that are weak and diminutive in size.

Syne crownit scho the Egle King of Fowlis,—
And bad him be als just to awppis and owlis
As unto pakokkis, papingais or crenis,
And mak a law for wicht fowlis and for wrennis.

Thistle and Rose, Bannatyne Poems, p. 5.

i.e., one law for both.

It is also used to denote the strength of wine.

And ay besydis he fillis his guttis,
Waching the wyne, for it was wycht.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 333.

Ihre observes, that Su.-G. wig is used to denote whatsoever in its nature is powerful or firm; wigir gard, a compact hedge. Owig expresses the opposite idea; owig bro a decayed or ruinous bridge.

Wight, as used by Chaucer, conveys the idea of active.

—She could eke
Wrastlen by veray force and veray might,
With any yong man, were he never so wight.
Monkes T., v. 142, 73.

Thus it is used by Gower.—

And cryed was, that they shulde come
Unto the game all and some
Of hem that ben delyuer and wyght.
Conf. Am., Fol. 177, b.

It has also been rendered swift, in reference to that passage in Chaucer—

I is ful wight—as is a ra.
Reves T., v. 4084.

Wight seems to have been also used in O. E. in the sense of strong.

Help him to worke wightlye, that winneth your fode.
P. Ploughman, Fol. 31, a.

Different writers have remarked the affinity of this term to Lat. vig-eo, q. I am wight; veyet-us.—Hence, WICHTLIE, WICHTELY, adv. 1. Stoutly.

This being said, commandis he enery fere,
Do red thare takillis, and stand hard by thare gere,
And wichtlie als thare airis vp till haile.
Doug. Virgil, 127, 45.

2. With strength of mind, or fortitude.

Paul witnessis, that nane sall wyn the croun,
Bot he quiblk duellie makis him redy boun,
To stand wichtely, and fecht in the forefront.
Doug. Virgil, ProL 355, 20.

WICHTNES, WYCHTNES, WIGHTNESS, s.
Strength, S. B.

The next chapitire schall onone
Tell the wychtnes of Sampson.
Wyntown, iii. 2. Rubr.

But gin my wightness doubted were,
I wat my gentle bleed,
As being sin to Telamon,
Right sickerly does plead.
Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 3.

WICHTY, adj. Powerful.

Put on, put on, my wichty men,
Sae fast as ye can drie.
Adam o' Gordon, Pink. Trag. Ball., i. 50.

Evidently a dimin. from Wicht, id.; although I do not find it in any other dialect.

WICHT, s. A man or person, S. Wight, E.

Was neuer wrocht in this world mare woful ane wicht.
Doug. Virgil, ProL 238, a. 11.

Ealle ewice wihta, all living creatures; Oros. ii. 1.
A.-S. wiht, creatura, animal, res; Moes.-G. waihts,
Alem. wuht, res quævis.

WICK, Wic, s. 1. An open bay, Shetl.

By air, and by wick, and by helyer and gio.
The Pirate, ii. 142.

V. AIR.

2. A word used in the termination of the names of places, signifying a kind of bay, S.

"Where wick is the terminating syllable, the place is not only maritime, but there is always, in its vicinity, an opening of the coast larger than a creek, but smaller than a bay, whose two containing sides form an angle, similar to that of the lips, terminating in the cheek. It is remarkable, that in the Scotch dialect, this is always termed the wick of the mouth. It does not therefore appear, that there is the least affinity betwixt wick and vicus. The former vocable is for the most part, if not always, maritime: the latter, from the meaning of the word, can have no possible respect to local situation." P. Canisbay. Caithn. Stat. Acc., viii. 162, N.

"All those places, whose names terminate in ic, which, in the Danish language is said to signify a bay, as Tosgie, Cuic, Dibic, and Skittic, hath [have] each of them an inlet of the sea." P. Applecross, Ross. Statist. Acc. iii., 381.

It is perhaps the same term that occurs in the names Greenock, Gourrock, &c., especially as there is the bay of Gourrock. It has been said, indeed, that the former is from Gael. Grianeg, the Sunny Bay, or the Bay of the Sun. Statist. Acc., v. 559, 560. But I can observe no similar Gael. word signifying a bay. Su.-G. wik, angulus; sinus maris: A.-S. wic, sinus maris, fluminis sinus; portus. Franc. in giuniggia strazzono, in the corners of the streets. V. WEIK.

WICK, s. In the game of curling, a narrow port or passage, in the rink or course, flanked by the stones of those who have played before, S.

"To inwick a stone is to come up a port or wick, and strike the inring of a stone seen through that wick." Gall. Encycl., p. 230.

Teut. wick, flexio; A.-S. wic, portus. This appears to be the primary sense of the term, secondarily applied to a bay because of its bending form.

To WICK, v. n. "To strike a stone in an oblique direction, a term in curling;" Gl. Burns, S., q. to hit the corner.

Or couldst thou follow the experienc'd play'r
Through all the myst'ries of his art? or teach
The undisciplin'd how to wick, to guard,
Or ride full out the stone that blocks the pass?
Græme's Poems, Anderson's E. Poets.

To WICK a bore in curling and cricket, is to drive a stone or ball dexterously through an opening between two guards, S.

He was the king, o' a' the core,
To guard, or draw, or wick a bore.
Burns, iii. 118.

Su.-G. wik-a, flectere; wika af, a via deflectere; thre; Vika paa sida, to turn aside, Widæg; A.-S. wic-an, Teut. wyck-en, Germ. weych-en, recedere; perhaps from Su.-G. wik, angulus, or Teut. wyck, flexio, cessio.

WICK, adj. [Quick, sharp, ready; hence, fit, fond, eager.]

Tristrem thi rede thou ta,
In Ingland for to abide;
Morgan is wick to slo;
Of knightes he bath gret pride.
Tristrem thei thou be thro,
Lat no men with the ride.
Sir Tristrem, p. 44, st. 71.

"Wight, fit for war. Sax. wig-lig, bellicosus;" Gl. Trist. V. WICHT, adj.

WICKER o' A SHOWER. A quick sharp shower, conveying the idea of the noise made by it on a window, Ayrs.

Allied perhaps to Isl. rekr-a, accelerare, from rakr, velox, as denoting a sudden fall of rain.

To WICKER, v. a. To twist the thread overmuch, Clydes.

• WICKET, s. The back-door of a barn, Ang.

Belg. wincket, winket, portula, Fr. guichet. Spegolius derives the term from Su.-G. wick-a, itare, domum saepius introire et exire, a frequentative from lal. wik-a, incedere. C. B. gwichet, postica, has been traced to gwich, stridor.

[WICTAILL, s. Victual, provisions, Barbour, x. 319.]

[WICTOUR, WICTORY, s. Victory, Barbour, viii. 288, i. 473.]

[WID, adj. Wide, great, Barbour, iii. 23.]

[WIDCOK, s. A woodcock, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 3540.]

WIDDE, s. Prob., a band, a chain. "I ressauit agane fyfte aucht wilde irne fra him." Aberd. Reg., V. 16. [V. WIDDIE.]

Su.-G. widja, and Dan. widde, signify a band, a chain. laerwidiur, catenae ferreae; Ihre.

WIDDEN-DREME, WINDREM, WIDDRIM, s. In a widden dream, or windrem, all of a sudden; also, in a state of confusion, S. B.

"At last we, like fierdy follows, flew to't slaughter, thinkin to raise it in a widden-dream." Journal from London, p. 5.

Bess out in a widden-dream brattled,
And Hab look'd as blate as a sheep.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., l. 297.

One is said to waken in a widdrim, when one awakes in a confusion or state of perturbation, so as to have no distinct apprehension of surrounding objects for some time. Sibb. explains it, "a sudden gust of passion, without apparent cause;" Gl.

Could we be assured that windream were the more ancient pronunciation, the term might be traced to A.-S. wyn-dream, "gaudium, jubulum, jubilatio; joy, jubilation, great rejoicing," Somner; from wyn, joy, and dream, jubilation. Thus, it might be used to signify the confusion produced by the noise of great mirth, especially when heard unexpectedly. Sibb. refers to Wod as the origin. And indeed A.-S. woda-dream is rendered, furor, madness; Somner. Thus the term may have some relation to Wodin or Oden, that deity of the Germans and Goths, who was believed to preside over the rage of battle, and whose name has been rendered by Lat. furor. V. Adam. Bremens., ap. Ihre vo. Oden. Thus A.-S. woda dream, S. widdendeme, might be viewed as originally denoting a dream proceeding from the inspiration of Oden; as the term implies the idea of confusion or distraction of mind. In Gl. Popul. Ball. it is, in like manner, supposed to allude to "the dream of a madman."

WIDDERSINNIS, WEDDIR SHYNNYS, WIDDERSINS, WIDDERSHINS, WITHERSHINS, WODDERSHINS, adv. The contrary way, S.; [widderwise, Shetl.]

Abasit I wox and widdirsynnys stert my hare.

Doug. Virgil, 64, 32.

Say that nocht, I haue myne honeste degraid.—

Bot fenyete fablis of ydolatri,
With sic myscheif as aucht nocht named be,
Opynnand the gravis of scharpe iniquite,
And on the bak half writis *weddir schynny*s
Plenté of leisingis, and als perseruit synny.

Doug. Virgil, 481, 42.

Quhom suld I warie bot my wicked Weard,
Quha span my thrifles thraward fatal threed;
I wes bot skantlie entrit in this eard,
Nor had offendit quhill I felt hir feed.
In hir unhappy hands sho held my heill,
And stralkit bakward weddershins my hair,
Synne prophecyed I sould aspyre and speid;
Quhillk double sentence wes baith suith and sair.

Montgomery, MS. Chron. S. P., iii. 508.

"The word Widdirsins, Scot. is used for contrary to the course of the Sun, as when we say, to go or turn widdirsins about, i.e., to turn round from West to East: a Belg. weder, weders, A.-S. with, withen, contra, and Sonne, Sunne, Sol, Scot. Bor. Sin." Rudd.

According to this idea, Belg. wederschym, Germ. widerschein, a reflected light, the reflection of brightness, might seem allied. The term is indeed used to denote what is contrary to the course of the sun; this being the most obvious emblem of any thing opposed to the course of nature. But neither sonne, nor any word conveying the idea of light or shining, can properly be viewed as entering into the composition of this term. It is merely Teut. wedersins, contrario modo, Kilian. This is the sense, as used in both passages by the Bishop of Dunkeld. In the first, indeed, Rudd. too strictly adhering to the original, Steteruntque comae, renders it, straight up, upright. But Doug. means literally to say that the hair of Aeneas stood the wrong way, or the way contrary to nature.

In Sw. raettayles denotes that which follows the course of the sun. The term, expressing the reverse, is andstiles.

Our ancestors ascribed some preternatural virtue to that motion which was opposed to the course of the sun, or to what grew in this way. This was particularly attended to in magical ceremonies.—Hence Ninevin, the Hecate of the Scots, and her damsels are thus described.—

Some be force in effect the four winds fetches,
And nine times weddershins about the throne raid.

Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 17.

V. CATINE.

This is gravely mentioned as the mode of salutation given by witches and warlocks to the devil.

"The women made first their courtesy to their master, and then the men. The men turning nine times widder shines about, and the women six times." Satan's Invisible World, p. 14.

Ross, in his Additions to that old song, The Rock and the Wee Pickle Tow, makes the spinster not only attend to the wood of her rock, that it should be of the rantrre, or mountain-ash, that powerful specific against the effects of witchcraft, but also to the very direction of its growth.

I'll gar my ain Tammy gae down to the how,
And cut me a rock of a widdershins grow,
Of good rantry-tree, for to carry my tow,
And a spindle of the same for the twining o't.

Ross's Poems, p. 134.

The inhabitants of Orkney ascribe some sort of fatality to motion opposed to that of the sun. "On going to sea, they would reckon themselves in the most imminent danger, were they by accident to turn their boat in opposition to the sun's course." P. Kirkwall, Statist. Acc., vii. 560.

Among the Northern nations, a similar superstition prevailed. Helga, a Scandinavian sorceress, when wishing to give efficacy to some Runic characters, for doing injury to others, observed this mode. "Taking a knife in her hand, she cut the letters in the wood, and besmeared them with her blood. Then singing her incantations, oc geck anflug rangaelis um treit, she went backwards, and contrary to the course of the sun, around the tree. Then she procured that it should be cast into the sea, praying that it might be driven by the waves to the island Drangsa, and there be the cause of all evils to Gretter." Hist. Gretter, ap. Bartholin. Caus. Contempt. Mortis, p. 661, 662.

This is opposed to the Deasil of our Highlanders, which has been considered as a relique of Druidism.

"The Deasil, or turning from east to west, according to the course of the sun, is a custom of high antiquity in religious ceremonies. The Romans practised the motion in the manner now performed in Scotland. The Gaulish Druids made their circumvolution in a manner directly the reverse.

"The unhappy lunatics are brought here [to Strathfillan] by their friends, who first perform the ceremony of the Deasil, thrice round a neighbouring cairn; afterwards offer on it their rage, or a little bunch of heath tied with worsted; then thrice immerse the patient in a holy pool of the river, a second Bethesda; and, to conclude, leave him fast bound the whole night in the neighbouring chapel. If in the morning he is found loose, the saint is supposed to be propitious; for if he continues in bonds the cure remains doubtful." Pennant's Tour in S., 1772, P. II., p. 15.

"On the first of May the herds of several farms gather dry wood, put fire on it, and dance three times southwards about the pile.—At marriages and baptisms they make a procession round the church, Deasoil, i.e., sunways, because the sun was the immediate object of the Druids' worship." Id. Tour in 1769, p. 309.

"That the Caledonians paid a superstitious respect to the sun, as was the practice among many other nations, is evident, not only by the sacrifices at Baltein, but upon many other occasions. When a Highlander goes to bathe, or to drink water out of a consecrated fountain, he must approach by going round the place, from east to west on the south side, in imitation of the apparent diurnal motion of the sun. When the dead are laid in the grave, the grave is approached by going round in the same manner. The bride is conducted to her future spouse, in the presence of the minister, and the glass goes round a company, in the course of the sun. This is called, in Gaelic, going round the right, or the lucky way. The opposite is the wrong or the unlucky way. And if a person's meat or drink were to effect the wind-pipe, or come against his breath, they instantly cry out, Deisheal! which is an ejaculation praying that it may go by the right way." P. Callander, Perth. Statist. Acc., xi. 621, N.

The custom of sending drink round a company from left to right, is by many supposed to be a vestige of the same superstition. There are still some, even in the Lowlands, who would reckon it unlucky to take the opposite course.

Pennant derives the term from Gael. Deas, or Des, the right hand, and Syl, the sun. When referring to this motion as practised by the Romans, he quotes Plin. Hist. Nat. Lib., xxxviii. c. 2. But this is undoubtedly an error for xxviii. 2. For the passage referred to seems to be this:—

In adorando dexteram ad osculum referimus, totumque corpus circumagimus: quod in laevum fecisse, Galliae religiosius credunt.

WIDDIE, WIDDY, WUDDIE, s. 1. Properly, a rope made of twigs of willow or birch; a halter, S.

He had purgation to mak a theif
To die without a widdie.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 20, st. 6.

"When justice," as Sibb. observes, "was executed upon the spot, the first tree afforded an halter. It was an ingenious idea of a learned person on the continent, to examine the analogy between language and manners." Cron. S. P., II. 6, N.

"An Irish rebel put up a petition that he might be hanged in a with, and not in a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels." Bacon. V. With, Johns. Dict.

VOL. IV.

It is sometimes improperly written Woodie.

"Instead of ropes for halters and harness, they generally make use of sticks of birch twisted and knotted together; these are called woodies." Bart's Letters, i. 87.

The rope, called a widdie, is in Perth. and other places often made of birchen twigs.

2. This name is given, in Caithness, to a twig, having several smaller shoots branching out from it; which being plaited together, it is used as a whip, the single grain serving for a handle.

3. [The gallows:] as, to cheat the widdie, to escape the gallows, when it has been fully deserved, S.

"Ye's hao the hale crew in yer hands afore nicht an' may hang them a' in ae tow, an' Nan o' Gabor at the end o't, sae be as ye dinna let Elliöck Jamieson cheat the widdie." Corpatrick, i. 168.

This Proverb is of veritie,
Quhilk I hard red intill ane letter;
Hiest in court nixt the widdie,
Without he gyde him al the better.

Lyndsay's Works, 1592, p. 303.

The term is vulgarly understood in S. as if it denoted the gallows itself. But it is merely such a with as had formerly been employed at the gallows, and is accordingly distinguished from the fatal tree.

Ane stark gallows, a widdy, and a pin,
Theheid poynt of thy Elders arms are;
Written abune in poyse, Hang Dunbar.

Kennedie, Evergreen, ii. 69.

There is a proverb which every Scotaman has heard, "The water 'll no wrang the widdie," conveying the same idea with the E. adage, "He who is born to be hanged will never be drowned." Kelly gives this in a form that is not so well known; "The water will never warr the widdie," i.e., outrun it. Prov. p. 304.

Teut. wede, wyl, wiede, salix, vimen. Su.-G. widia, vimen, vinculum vimineum, from wide, salix: A.-S. withig, id. E. withy. Moes.-G. with-an, conjungere copulare. V. WETHY.

Fr. har, hard, a with, is used in the same sense. Sur peine de lar har; on pain of the halter. Tu merites la hard; you deserve the gallows; Fontaine.

WIDDIFOW, VIDDIFUL, s. 1. It properly signifies one who deserves to fill a widdie or halter. This appears from the Prov.

"Ye're a widdy-fou against hanging-time;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 85.

Now, my lord, for Goddis saik lat nocht hang me,
Howbeid thir widdy-fowis wald wrang me.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 153.

Thou art but Glunnschoch with the giltit hipps,
That for thy lounrie mony a leisch has fyld;
Vain Widdifow, out of thy wit gane wyld.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 53.

2. Equivalent to brave boys, in sea language.

"Viddefullis al, viddefuls al. grit and smal, grit and smal. ane and al, ane and al. heisau, heisau. nou mak fast the theyrs." Compl. S., p. 63.

3. A romp, S.

[4. A cantankerous, spiteful person, of small stature, Banffs., Clydes.]

In Gl. Compl. and Sibb. it is deduced from Teut. wood, rabies, woodlygh, furiosus. But the phrase,

D 5

All a widdie, being still used with respect to one who, it is thought, will come to a violent death, this seems the most probable origin. The Swedes have an analogous term. They call a rogue Galgest, i.e., one who will soon have the gallows for his mate or companion; Ihre, vo. Mat. Dunbar, indeed virtually expl. the term as equivalent to gone wild out of one's wit. But this might be merely for the sake of the alliteration. At any rate, it only proves his own idea of the signification.

WIDDIFOW, adj. Expl. "wrathful. A widdifow wicht, is a common expression for a peevish angry man;" Gl. Compl.

The laird was a widdifow bleirit knurl;
She's left the gude-fellow and taen the churl.
Burns, iv. 54.

The widdifow wardannis tulk my geir,
And left me nowdir hors nor meir,
Nor erdly gud that me belangit:
Now walloway I mon be hangit!
Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 186.

This seems merely an oblique sense of the preceding term, used as an adj.

[WIDDY-WAAN, s.] A twig used for making ropes, Banffs., Loth.]

To WIDDILL, v. n. pron. wuddil. 1. The sense of this v. is rather indeterminate. It is generally used in connexion with some other v., as, to widdil and ban, to widdil and flyte, &c., S.

Lyke Dido, Cupido
I widdil and I warie,
Quha reft me, and left me
In sic a feirle-farie.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 18.

i. e., I break out into cursing against Cupid. It is evidently intensive. For it is thus translated, Lat. vera 1631.

—Sceleratum taliter arcum, Cradelemque Deum, diris ter mille dicavi.

May it be viewed as a derivation from wod, furiosus, or wed-as furere; q. I wax wroth?

"Quha brekis the secund command? Thai that sweris be the name of God fulehardie, nocht taking tent of an euil vse, thai that sueris ane lesing, main-sueris thame self, waris, bannis and widdillis thair saule, to excuse thair fault, or for ony vaine mater.—Thai that will nocht chasteis or snibe thair barnis fra lesingis, sweiring, banning & widdling, and techis thame nocht to love God and thank him at al tymes." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, 1532, Fol. 31, b. 32, a.

2. We also use this v. S. in the same sense with E. wriggle or waddle; [also, in the redup. form widdil-waddle, to waddle about, to totter like an old person, Clydes.]

3. To attain an end by short, noiseless, or apparently feeble but prolonged exertions; as, "He's made a hantle siller in his sma' way o' doing; he's a bit wuddling bodie."

4. It has also an active sense, like E. wriggle, as signifying to writhe, to winch, to introduce by shifting motion, or (metaph.) by circuitous courses, S.

It's Antichrist his Pipes and Fiddles,
And other tools, wherewith he widdles

Poor caittiffs into dark delusions,
Gross ignorance and deep confusions.
Cleland's Poems, p. 80.

The term, therefore, as used in sense 1, may literally signify, to writhe one's self from rage. A. Bor. to widdle, to fret.

Germ. wedel-n, which signifies caudam motitare, q. to shake one's tail.

WIDDLE, WIDDIL, s. 1. Wriggling motion; metaph., struggle or bustle, S.

Lang may your elbuck jink and diddle
Tae cheer you thro' the weary widdle
O warly cares!

Burns, iii. 375.

Or is't to pump a fool ye meddle,
Wi' a' this bloust o' straining widdle,
An' deem my skull's as toom's a fiddle,
An' void o' brain?

A. Scott's Poems, p. 131.

2. A contention; as, "They had a widdil the-gither," Kinross.

WIDDRIM, s. V. WIDDENDREME.

WIDE-GAB, s. The Fishing-frog, Lophius piscatorius, Linn. Shetl.

"L. piscatorius.—Frog-fish; Toad-fish; Mutrein. The uncouth appearance of this animal has procured it many expressive English and Scottish names.—In the north isles of Scotland it is very characteristically termed the Wide-gab, the mouth being hideously large, extending entirely across its disproportionately great head, which is bigger than all the rest of the body." Neill's List of Fishes, p. 23. V. GAB, s.

* WIDOW, s. A widower, S.

"Our Bridegroom cannot want a wife: can he live a widow?" Rutherford's Letters, P. II., ep. 15.

By many it is believed that if a widow be present at the marriage of young persons, the marriage will not be prosperous, it being supposed that the bride will not live long.

WIE, adj. Little. V. WE.

WIE-THING, s. A child, Dumfr.

—Wie-things giggling i' the arms
O' their fond mither—
Meanwhile like midges i' the sun,
Frae tent to tent the wie-things run.
Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 36. 58.

WIE, WY, WYE, s. A man or person.

Ane leuar wycht na mare pynit I ne saw,
Nor yit sa wrechitty besene ane wy.
Doug. Virgil, 88, 23.

Some slade scho doun, vnsene of ony wye.
Ibid. 148, 11.

And I awolk as wy that wes in weir.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 26.

Thair is no wie can estimie
My sorrow and my sichingis sair.
Scott, Chron. S. P., iii. 169.

It is written wighe, O. E.

Coudat thou not wish vs the wai, whers the wighe wonnith?
P. Ploughman, Fol. 29. a.

Su.-G. wig, anciently wig-er, which primarily signifies fit for war, is used, in a secondary sense, to denote an adult; in the same manner as A.-S. wiga, of which the primary sense is heros, miles, is used to denote a man of any condition. The origin is wig, battle, contest. For our Goth. ancestors, as Ihre observes, scarcely acknowledged any other virtue than that of valour or strength for war.

WIEL, s. A small whirlpool. V. WELE.

[WIERD, adj.] Troublesome, mischievous; as, "O but ye're a wierd laddie," Ayrs.; syn. weary, q. v.]

An' then ye're gaun away —
To houk the pots o' goud, that lie
Atween the wat grund an' the dry,
Where grows the weirdest an' the warst o' weeds,
Where the horse never stops, an' the lamb never feeds.
Wint. Ev. Tales, i. 310.

WIERDIN, part. adj. Employed for divination, S. B. V. WEIRD.

WIERS, s. pl. In wiers, in danger of, Buchan.

—Our gray beard pigs wi' dreadfu' durd
In flinners lung,
And lums in wiers to get a durd
Or downward flung.

Tarras's Poems, p. 42.

This literally signifies, in apprehension of. V. WERE, s. id.

WIEVE, adj. Lively.

"For his good service in defence of his cuntrey, Earle William caused a huriall place to be assigned vnto him in the queir of the cathedrall church at Dornogh, with his statue and wieue image armed at all peeces, maid of fyne stone, which doth remayn ther vnto this day." Gordon's Hist. Earls of Sutherland, p. 33. V. VIVE.

• WIFE, WYF, WYFE, s. A woman, whether married or single, S.; [pl. wifis.]

Makbeth turnyd hym agayne,
And sayd, 'Lurdane, thow pryks in wayne,
'For thow may noucht be he, I trowe,
'That to dede sall sla me nowe.
'That man is nowcht borne of wyf
'Of powere to rewe me my lyfe!'

Wynntown, vi. 18. 393.

Sir Common-weill, keep ye the bar,
Let nane except yourself cum nar.
Johns. That sall I do, as I best can,
I sall hauld ont baith wyfe and man.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 223.

"An old wyfe; an old woman. None are wives but such as are married, which old women sometimes are not." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 53.

This term, as Sibb. observes, is generally applied to a woman past middle age.

A.-S. Su.-G. wif, mulier, foemina. Of this word various etymons have been given. Ihre derives it from Su.-G. wif, hwif, a woman's coif or hood, as gyrdel, cingulum, and linda, baltheus, are used for man and woman, in the Laws of Gothland; and, among the Ostrogoths, hatt and haetta, pileus et vitta, had the same signification. Wachter and others derive it from wefu-a, to weave, this being the proper work for females. V. Jun. Etym.

WIFE-CARLE, s. A cotquean; a man who attends more to housewifery than becomes his sex; Loth.; synon. Hizzie-fallow.

"Are things no dear enough already, that ye maun be raising the very fish on us, by giving that randy, Luckie Mucklebackit, just what she likes to ask?—An ye will be a wife-carle and buy fish at your ain hands, ye suld never bid mickle mair than a quarter." Antiquary, i. 310, 311.

WIFFIE, s. A little wife, a fondling term, S. wifie.

—"Elizabeth Gordon, heyre of Huntlie and Strathbogy, died at Strathbogy.—She was a judicious wife, and prudent woman, verie careful that the surname should continue." Gordon's Hist. Earls of Sutherland, p. 68.

This is the earliest proof I have met with of the use of this diminutive, [A. 1639.]

WIFLIE, WYFELIE, adj. Feminine, belonging to woman.

The noyis ran wyde out ouer the ciété wallis,
Smate all the toun with lamentabill murning;
Of greting, goulung, and wyfelie woumenting
The ruffis did resound.—

Doug. Virgil, 123, 32.

"Thocht I may no wayis deuoid me of wiflie ymage, yit I sall nocht want mannish hardyment." Bellend Cron. Fol. 41 a.

A.-S. wiflic, muliebris, foemineus.

WYFOCK, WYFOCKIE, s. A little wife; fondling terms. V. Oc, OCK.

[There was a wee bit wyfockie, an' she gaed to the fair,
She gat a wee bit drapockie, that bred her muckle care.
Dr. A. Geddes.]

WIFFIN, s. A moment, Dumfr. the same with Weavin, S.B., q. v. "In a Whiff, in a short time," A. Bor., Gl. Brockett.

[WIG, s. V. Sow's Mou.]

WIG, WEIG, WHIG, WYQ, s. A small oblong roll, baked with butter and currants; sometimes corr. pron. whig, S.

The word is retained, A. Bor. "Wig. A bun or muffin. North." Gl. Grose.

This word had been used in O.E. For in Ortus Voc. Pastilla is rendered, "a cake, cracknell or wy."

"You may make wigs of the biscuit dough, by adding four ounces of currans well cleaned to every pound of dough." Collection of Receipts, p. 2.

—"Plates of wigis, cuckies, and petticoat-tails, contended with buttered bread and jellies the preference of being eaten." Edin. Mag., March 1821, p. 196.

Wachter expl. wick, panis oblongus, deriving it from Phrygian bek, bread, which word, he says Herodotus has rescued from oblivion. He adds that b and w are convertible letters.

Teut. wegge, panis triticeus; libum oblongum, et libum lunatum; Kilian. Su.-G. helweg, a kind of hot bread, baked with various kinds of aromatics, and eaten on the day preceding Lent. Ihre derives the word from het, hot, and wick-en, which in Mod. Sax. signifies a round sort of bread. Germ. wick, id. Kilian gives wegge as synon. with Maene. V. MANE, Breil of Mane.

WIG, WYQ, s. This seems to signify a wall.

A thing is said to gang frae wyg to waer, when it is moved backwards and forwards from the one wall of a house to the other. q. at full swing. S. B.

Mind what this lass has undergane for you,
Since ye did her so treacherously forhow,
How she is catch'd for you frae wig to waer!

Russ's Helenore, p. 104.

A. Bor. wogh, wall. A.-S. wæg, Su.-G. wæg, anciently wag, waegh, Belg. waeg, wæg, paries. Akrum aer gardir wagh, oc himil at thackj; The hedge serves for a wall to the fields, and the heaven for a roof; Leg. Dalecarl. ap. Ihre in vo.

Perhaps wig, properly denotes a partition, as distinguished from a proper wall. This idea is suggested by the signification of Yorma. wogh; "any partition, whether of boards or mad walls, or laths and lime; as a boardshed-wogh, studded wogh." Thoresby, Ray's Lett., 341. Isl. wogg-r, paries.

[To WIG, WIGO, v. a. and n. 1. To move, shake, wag, Shetl.

2. To beat or strike sharply, S.]

[WIGGIN, s. The act of beating, a sharp beating, S.]

WIGG, WHIG, s. The thin serous liquid, which lies below the cream, in a churn, after it has become sour, and before it has been agitated, S. B.

"They sent in some smachry or ither to me, an' a pint o' their scuds, as sower as ony bladoch or wigg that comes out of the reem-kirn." Journal from London, p. 9. V. WHIG.

"Cream, too long kept, and purified by drawing off the thin part, or wig, for drink, was converted into butter by the operation of the hand." P. Montquhitter, Stat. Acc., xxi 242.

WIGGIE, s. A name given to the devil, S. B.

Sprush i' their graith, the ploughmen louns,
To see their foes fu' giggle,
Cock up their bonnets on their crowns,
And dreel their cares to Wiggie,
Clean aff that night.

Tarras's Poems, p. 64.

"One of the many names of the Devil;" GL ibid.

If this be not a ludicrous designation, it may refer to his character as the destroyer: A.-S. Su.-G. and Isl. wig, Teut. wieg, wijgh, signifying war, battle; A.-S. wiga, a hero, a demi-god; and Su.-G. wegande, a homicide. We learn from Ihre, that Mars was denominated Wig, and that Odin was also called Wigner, i.e., the warrior. In the Notes to the Edda Saemundina, Wigg is viewed as the same with Hela, the goddess supposed to preside over death, whence our word Hell. Thus, like Nick, the name of the northern Neptune, Wiggie may have been transmitted to us, in the mouths of the northern peasantry, from the times of heathenism.

To WIGGLE, v. n. To wriggle. V. WAIGLE.

WIGHT, s. The Shrew mouse, Orkn. Sorex araneus, Linn.

"The wild quadrupeds of this parish are, rabbits, the brown or Norwegian rat, the short-tailed field mouse, common mice, and a small species of mice, commonly called here wights, which I have never observed in Scotland." P. Birney, Statist. Acc., xiv. 317.

This animal is very particularly described in Museum Wormian., p. 321, &c. It seems to have received its Orcadian name from the smallness of its size; as Su.-G. wickt denotes any thing that is very small in its kind, being radically the same with wact, aliquid; A.-S. wikt, a creature.

Or its name might originate from its supposed noxious qualities; as the ancients believed it to be injurious to cattle, an idea now exploded. Wormius mentions its bite as venomous, whence the name, Sorex aranea; as resembling the spider for poison. Now, Ihre observes that the Su.-G. term, already referred to, is especially used in relation to noxious and monstrous animals. Hence, perhaps, its E. name.

WIGHT, adj. Strong. V. WICHT.

"The king gart shoot a cannon at her, to essay her if she was wight, but it deared her not." Pittscottie, Ed. 1768, p. 168. V. WICHT.

WIKKIT, adj. 1. Unjust.

—Eneas thy brother but dout
Is blawin and warpit euery coist about
Of wikkie Juno throw the cruell enuy.

Doug. Virg., p. 34.

Iniquae, Lat.

2. Rugged, unequal.

"Eftir him followit the laif, ill-rane helpand and ber-and up uthir, quhare ony strait or wikkie passage wes, ay as the place requirit." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 472.

This is the translation of—ubi quid iniqui, esset.

[WILCOCK, s. The Razor-bill, a bird, Shetl.]

WILD BEAR. Shoein' the Wild Bear, a game in which the person sits cross-legged on a beam or pole, each of the extremities of which is placed or swung in the eyes of a rope suspended from the back-tree of an outhouse. The person uses a switch, as if in the act of whipping up a horse; when, being thus unsteadily mounted, he is most apt to lose his balance. If he notwithstanding retains it, he is victor over those who fail in making the attempt, Teviotd.

I suppose that the wild boar is referred to, an animal with which our fathers were well acquainted. The word was anciently written Bar and Bair; and pronounced like E. Bear.

WILD BIRDS. All the wild birds in the air, the name of a game, in which one acts the dam of a number of birds, who gives distinct names of birds, such as are generally known, to all that are engaged in the sport. The person who opposes tries to guess the name of each individual. When he errs, he is subjected to a stroke on the back. When his conjecture is right, he carries away on his back that bird, which is subjected to a blow from each of the rest. When he has discovered and carried off the whole, he has gained the game.

This sport seems only to be retained in Abernethy, Pertha; and it is probable, from the antiquity of the place, that it is very ancient.

WILD COTTON. Cotton-grass, a plant; S. B. also called Moss-crops, S. Eriophorum polystachion, Linn.

WILD-FIRE, s. The common name for the Phlyctenac of Sauvages, S. vulgarly wullfire. A.-S. wild-fyr, erysipelas.

WILDFIRE (pron. Willfire), s. The plant Marsh Marigold, Caltha palustris, Mearns.

• WILDFIRE, s. Metaph. used to denote false zeal.

"Men ought to beware to put false names upon things, and to call that wild-fire and fury, which the Lord will own as a fervour and zeal for him, and his interest, true for its kind, and kindled by himself." M'Ward's Contendings, p. 55.

To WILE, WYLE, v. a. To accomplish by caution or artful means; [to entice]; as, I'll try to wile him awa', I will endeavour to get him enticed to go with me. The prep. frae or from is generally added, when it refers to things; as, I'll wile't frae him, I will gain it from him by artful means; synon. Weise, q. v.

Belief ye that we will begyle yow,
Or from your vertew for till wyle yow?

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 32.

Here's three permission bonnets for ye,
Which your great gutchers wore before ye;
An' if ye'd hae nae man betray ye
Let naething ever wile them frae ye.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 544.

Thus fortune aft a curse can gie,
To wyle us far frae liberty.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 37.

Su.-G. wel-a, to deceive, Isl. vacl-a, callidus esse, G. Andr.; curam gerere, Verel. Su.-G. wel denotes art, stratagem; used, as Ihre says, in a good as well as in a bad sense. Isl. vel, id. Verel. Hence Fr. guile, g being prefixed.

To WILE, WYLE, v. a. To select.

WILE, s. Choice, selection. V. WALE.

WILE, WYLIE, s. An instrument for twisting straw ropes, Dumfr.; synon. Thraw-crook. Supposed to refer to the caution or wylie-ness exercised in the mode of drawing the ropes.

"Wyle—a rope-twister;" Gall. Enc. — Throok is given as synon. with "the wyle, the thraw-crook, the twister." Ibid. p. 446.

Tout. wiel, a wheel, A.-S. hweol, Isl. hioi, id. C. B. chwel-ed, to turn, chwyl, versio, as being turned round in the hands in the act of twisting. V. WEWLOCK.

Might this be viewed as a variety or corr. of the Clydes. term Warelock, used in the same sense?

[WILES, s. pl. The gunwales of a boat, Shetl.]

WILIE-COAT, WALYCOAT, WYLECOT, s. 1. An undervest, generally worn during winter, S., wylie-coat, a flannel vest, A. Bor.

It is also written Waly-coat.

"But she (the queen) gets up out of her naked bed in her night wylcoat, bare-footed and bare-legged, with her maids of honour," &c. Spalding, ii. 74.

In this congelit season sharp and chill,
The callour are penetrative and pure—
Made seik wafin stous and bene fyris hote,
In doubill garment cled and wylcote.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 201, 40.

"We can shape their wylie-coat, but no their wierd;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 75.

2. An under petticoat.

Sumtyme thay will beir up thair gown,
To schaw thair wylcot hinged down,
And sumtyme baith thay will upleir,
To schaw thair hois of blak or brown.

Mailland Poems, p. 327.

"The kirtle, or close gown, was rarely accompanied either with the wylcot or under petticoat, or with the mantle; and the feet were bare." Pinkerton's Hist. Scotl., i. 154.

Rudd. thinks that the designation may perhaps be from E. wily, "because by its not being seen, it does as it were cunningly or slyly keep men warm." The origin seems quite uncertain.

• WILL, s. [1. Wish, desire, request; in will, desirous, Barbour, xii. 229.] What's your will? a common Scotticism for, "What did you say?" It is also given as a reply to one who calls. It is used by Foot; and is perhaps common in low E.

This is at least as old as the time of Gawin Douglas. "May thow not heir? Langan how I cud schout?"

"What war your will?" "I will cum in but doubt." King Hart, ii. 2.

2. O' will, spontaneously, S. Thus it is used in the S. Prov.: "It's a gude wall [well] that springs o' will."

This exactly corresponds with the A.-S. idiom, in the use of willes, the genitive of will; Voluntatis: cum voluntate, sponte, ultro. V. Lye.

3. At a' will, to the utmost extent of one's inclination or desire; as, "I'm sure ye've gotten claith to make that coat wi' at a' will," i.e., You have got as much cloth as you could wish, you have had your will of it.

4. To tak' one's will o'. 1. To treat or use as one's pleases, S. 2. To take as much of any thing as one pleases, S.

5. In the sense of hope. "I hae na will o' that," I hope that is not the case. "I hae na will that he ken;" I hope he does not know, Aberd.

Perhaps this strictly signifies nothing more than inclination or desire.

[WILFULL, WYLFULL, adj. Willing, Barbour, xi. 266.]

[WILLIN, WILLAND, adj. Willing; wyll-willand, well affected, Barbour, v. 41.]

WILLIN'-SWEERT, adj. Partly willing, and partly reluctant; or perhaps, affecting reluctance, while inwardly willing, S. O.

Will ye sit down upo' the flowery grass!—
What if I may, quo' she, a wee recline!
But honest shepheril, 'deed I scarcely can;
Sae willin'-sweert, aneath the noon-day shine
She sat her down.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 163.

V. SWEIR. It may be observed, that weert is the more general pronunciation of the west of S.

WILLY, adj. Self-willed, wilful, S. B.

"Aweel, if ye're positive, ye maun just hae ye'r ain we [way].—Ye was aye a willy chield, and ane might as weel speak to the wind, whan ye tak ouey maggot." St. Kathleen, iii. 183.

"Drouthy was a willy chield, an' in place o' takin' a gude advice, staggered awa to the orchard." Ibid., p. 211.

WILSUM, adj. Wilful, Ettr. For.

"Heiryne [hearing] that scho was wilsum and glunchye, I airghit at keuillyng withe hirr in that thraward paughty mode." Wint. Ev. Tales, ii. 41.

This word we find in O.E. It has, therefore, although long forgotten, been rightly recalled by Mr. Todd. "Wylsom. Effrenatus; vel propriam voluntatem solum sequens. Wylsomnes. Proprie voluntatis sequela." Prompt. Parv.

WILFULLY, adj. Willingly.

Their frendschip woux ay mar and mar;
For he serwynt ay lelely,
And the tothir full wilfully.

Barbour, ii. 172, MS.

Of Rainfrwe als the barowny
Come to thare pes full wilfully.

Wyntown, viii. 29, 240.

WILL, s. Apparently, use, custom; pl. willis.

And on the morn, quhen day wes lycht,
The King rais as his willis was.

Barbour, xiii. 515, MS.

Use, edit. 1620.

It may, however, merely mean, study, endeavour; A.-S. will, Tent. willā, studium.

WILL, aux. v. 1. "Be accustomed, make a practice of;" Gl. Wyntown.

Bot the few folk of Scotland,
That be dry marche ar lyand
Nere yhow, that kepe thair awyne,
As til ws is kend and knawn,
And will cum wyth thare powere
Planly in yhoure land of were,
Oure day and nycht will ly thare-in,
And in yhoure sycht yhour land oure bryn,
Tak youre men, and in presowne
Hald tham, quhill tha pay ransowne.

Wyntown, ix. 13, 53, 55.

This is still a common idiom in S. But, as far as I have observed, it is especially used by those who border on the Highlands, or whose native tongue is Gaelic.

2. It is often used for shall, S.

This peculiar idiom, with more reason than some others, has afforded a good deal of harmless mirth to our southern neighbours. An English friend of mine, who has a considerable portion of dry humour, was dining one day at the house of a near connexion of his own in S., with whom of course he could use freedom. "Will I help you," said his host, "to a slice of this beef?" "I don't know, Sir," said the visitor; "that depends on your good pleasure."

It is pretended, that the peculiar use of this auxiliary v. proved fatal to a poor fellow, who, having fallen into a river, was making his danger known in the best way he could, still bawling out, "I will be drowned, I will be drowned." An Englishman, who had run to give him assistance, when he was near enough to hear what he said, unluckily interpreted his language according to his own idiom; and supposing that the poor man was determined to resist all attempts to save him, turned away, saying, "Then, friend, if you are resolved to be drowned, I can't help it; you must have your own way."

3. It is sometimes equivalent to must; as implying the idea of constraint or necessity.

These peculiar uses seem quite anomalous. I have not remarked any thing analogous in any of the other northern languages.

WILL BE. Used to express what is meant only as a probable conjecture, S. It is nearly equivalent to may be, but somewhat stronger.

"Baldone—is seated in the Park, and will be about a short mile from the kirk to the northward.—The whole parish of Kirkinner—is about four miles and an half in length;—the farthest part from the kirk will be about three miles and a half." Symson's Galloway, p. 44.

WILL, WYLL, WIL, WYL, adj. 1. "Lost in error, uncertain how to proceed," S.

And the myrk nycht suddany
Hym partyd fra hys company.
And in that myrk nycht wawerand will,
He hapnyd of cas for to cum til
That ilke new byggyd plas,
Qubare that Erie than duelland was.

Wyntown, vi. 13, 105.

To go wyll, to go astray, S.

Sche thame fordruius, and causis oft go wyll
Frawart Latyn (quhilk now is Italy.)

Doug. Virgil, 14, 5.

It is very frequently conjoined with a s. As, will of reile, at a loss what to do, inops consilii; V. REDE, s. Will of wane, at a loss for [an opinion, i.e., not knowing what to do.]

Then wes he wondir will off wane,
And sodanly in hart has tane,
That he wald trewaile our the se,
And a quhile in Parys be.

Barbour, i. 323, MS.

It is used by Blind Harry [also in the same sense.]

The woman than, quhilk was full will off wayne,
The perell saw, with fellone noyis and dyn,
Gat wp the yett, and leit thaim entir in.

Wallace, vi. 179, MS.

"Scot. I'm will what to do. It. He's so will of his wedding, that he kens na where to woo; Prov. Scot. i.e., There are so many things which he may obtain, that he is in doubt which of them to choose;" Rudd.

Ramsay gives it differently; "Ye're sae will in your wooing ye watna where to wed;" S. Prov., p. 85.

Su.-G. will, also willt, willae, Isl. vill-ur, id. vill-a, Sw. villa, error; Isl. vill-a, Su.-G. foerwill-a, to lead astray. These terms are also transferred to the mind.

2. Desert, unfrequented.

Himself ascendis the hie band of the hill,
By wentis strate, and passage scharp and wil.

Doug. Virgil, 332, 5.

Art thou sa cruel! I put the cais also,
That to nane vncouth landis thou list go,
Nouthir to fremmyt place, nor stedis wyl,
Bot at auld Troy war yet vpstandil stail:
Aucht thou yit than leif this wellfare and loy?

Ibid. 110, 31.

Isl. vill is also used in the sense of ferus; as, villae goltr, a wild boar; Su.-G. villa diur, wild animals.

The word is undoubtedly radically the same with E. wild. The Su.-G. term is often thus written; and S. to gang wild, is synon. with will. It is probable, that the primary sense is that first given above. Animals might be denominated wild, from their going astray.

WILL-GATE, WULL-GATE. 1. An erroneous course, literally used, S.

2. In a moral sense, any course that is improper.

This phrase is also found in O. E.; although it would be quite unintelligible to the bulk of E. readers; "Wyl gate or wronge gate. Deviatio." Prompt. Parv.

WILSUM, adj. In a wandering state, implying the ideas of dreariness, and of ignorance of one's course, S. pron. wulsum.

Vpoun sic wise vncertainlie we went
Thre dayes wilsum throw the mysty streme,
And als mony nycthes but sterneys leme.

Doug. Virgil, 74, 22.

He blew, till a' the wulsome waste
Rebellowin' echoed round.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 244.

Sw. en villsam vaeg, an intricate road or way; a road, where one may easily go astray; Wideg.

WILLYART, WILYART, adj. 1. Wild, shy, flying the habitations and society of men.

For feir the he fox left the scho,
He was in sick a dreid;
Quibbles louping, and scowping
Ouer bushes, banks, and brais;
Quibbles wandring, quibbles dandring,
Like royd and wilyart rais.

Burcl's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 18, 19.

2. Sometimes applied to one of a bashful and reserved temper, who avoids society, or appears awkward in it, S.

But O for Hogarth's magic pow'r
To show Sir Bardy's wilyart glowr,
An' how he star'd and stammer'd.

Burns, i. 139.

3. Obstinate, wilful, unmanageable, Loth., Berw.

"'He's a gude creature,' said she, 'and a kind—it's a pity he has sae willyard a powney.'" Heart M. Loth., iii. 29, 30.

From the adj. and Belg. geaard, q. of a wild nature or disposition. V. ART.

WILLAN, s. The willow or saugh, S. B.

WILLAWACKITS, interj. Welladay, Buchan.

Whan bless'd wi' him, ye thrive, an grew,—
But willawackits for ye now,
Aul' Saulie's dead!

Tarras's Poems, p. 141.

From A.-S. wal-a, or wa-la wa, prob dolor! The termination may be merely arbitrary, or we might view the word as resolvable in the following way; Wa-la wac it is, q. "alas how weak it is!" from wac, infirmus, debilis.

WILL-A-WAES, interj. Wellaway, Ang.

"Will a waes, man, but ye hae a lang account to settle, an' the sunner ye begin to look ower it, the sunner ye'll hae it dune." St. Kathleen, iv. 116.

WILLAWINS, interj. Welladay, S.

O willawins! that graceless scorn
Should love like mine repay!

Lady Jane, Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 81.

Ah! willawins for Scotland now,
Whan she maun stap ilk birky's now
Wi' eistacks. —

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 78.

A.-S. wyn, wein, signifies labor, infortunium, calamitas; q. wa la wyn, cheu calamitas!

[WILL-BE, s. A guess, conjecture, S. V. under WILL, aur.]

WILLCORN, s. Wild oats; that which grows without culture, S. B., Roxb.; q. wild corn.

WILLICK, s. 1. The name most commonly given, by seamen on the Frith of Forth, to the Puffin or Alca Arctica. They sometimes, however, call it the Cockandy.

"In the south of Scotland it has various names, Willick, Bass-cock, Ailsa-cock, Sea parrot, Tomnoddy, Cockandy, Pope," &c. Neill's Tour, p. 197.

2. The name for a young heron.

The term Sea-Parrot, corresponds to its Germ. name, See-Papagey. It is also called Islandic Papagey, i.e., the Islandic Parrot. V. Penn. Zool., p. 512.

WILLIE-FISHER, s. The Sea-swallow, Sterna hirundo, Linn., Ang.

"Sterna hirundo; the Sea-swallow. In Scotland particularly in Angus-shire, it is called Willie-Fisher; common on the water of Esk." Agr. Surv. Forfar. App., p. 43.

This name is given to a water-fowl, also called Dowkar, Dumfr.

[In Banff, a notorious liar is called a Willie-fisher, V. Gl.]

WILLIE-JACK, s. A go-between in a courtship, Mearns; synon. Black-Foot and Mush.

Probably from the name of some person in the north, who was celebrated for his services in this way.

WILLIE-POURIT, s. The spawn of a frog before it assumes the shape of one, a tadpole, Fife. Pourit is merely a corr. of Powart, id., q. v. [Syn. pow-head.]

WILLIE-POWRET, s. The name given by children in Fife to the Seal-fish.

WILLIE-WAGTAIL, s. The water-wagtail, Dumfr.

WILLIE-WAND, s. A rod of willow, Roxb. [Willie-waun, Clydes.; syn. saugh-waun.]

"What wad my father say,—if I were to marry a man that loot himsel' be threshed by Tommy's Poet—wi' a back nae stiffer than a willy-wand." Water Ev. Tales, ii. 292.

An' Fortune's cudgel, let me tell,
It's no a willie-waun, Sir.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 129.

WILLIE - WASTELL. A game. V. WASTELL.

WILLIE WHIP-THE-WIND, a species of hawk, Ang. V. STANCHELL.

This is the Falco tinnunculus. Its old E. name was nearly allied to ours. For we learn from Phillips, that it was called the Wind-vanner. He justly observes that it is the same with the Kestrel. Vo. Tinnunculus.

[WILLIN-SWEERT, adj. V. under WILL.]

WILLKAIL, s. The name for wild mustard, Lanarks.; q. wild kail.

WILLOW-WAND. A peeled willow-wand, a mark formerly placed against the door of a house in the Highlands, as an intimation that those within wished to be alone, and a prohibition to any person to enter.

"Andrew was the first to observe that there was a peeled willow-wand placed across the half-open door of the little inn. He hung back, and advised us not to enter. 'For,' said Andrew, 'some of their chiefs and grit men are birling at the usquebaugh in bye there, and dinna want to be disturbed; and the least we'll get if we gang ram-stam in on them, will be a broken head, to learn us better havings, if we dinna come by the length of a cauld dirk in our wame, whilk is just as likely.'" Rob Roy, iii. 8, 9.

This custom reminds one of the account given of tabooing in the Tonga islands. The following passage regards the sport of rat-shooting.

"If in their way they come to any cross roads, they stick a reed in the ground in the middle of such cross roads, as a taboo or mark of prohibition for any one to come down that way, and disturb the rats while the chiefs are shooting: and this no one will do; for even if a considerable chief be passing that way, on seeing the taboo, he will stop at a distance, and sit down on the ground, out of respect or politeness to his fellow chiefs, and wait patiently till the shooting party has gone by: a petty chief, or one of the lower orders, would not dare to infringe upon this taboo at the risk of his life." Mariner's Tonga Islands, i. 230.

This custom seems to have a reference to what in Law Latin is denominated Baculus Regius. According to the constitutions of France, where the King's rod was placed, it intimated that the object was immediately under the protection of the sovereign, in signum salvæ guardiæ, and that no one had a right to touch it. V. Brando, Du Cange, and Baculus, Hoffman.

Baculorum erectio et appositio—protectionis et tutelæ symbolum fuit; Carpentier.

[WILLY, WILSUM, adj. V. under WILL.]

[WILN, s. Part of the intestine of a sheep, Shetl.]

WILRONE, s. A wild boar.

The bich the cur-tyk fanniss;
The wolf the wilrone usis;
The muill frequentis the annis,
And hir awin kynd abusis.

Scott, Chron. S. P., iii. 147.

This word is overlooked by Sibb. It is evidently very ancient. Su.-G. wild, and rune, a young boar. V. Ihre, vo. Ron, pruritius. Isl. rune, verres non castratus; Verel. The poet is here describing unnatural attachments.

WILSHOCH, adj. Perverse, Upp. Clydes.

It might almost seem as if it had been formed from A.-S. will, voluntas, and seoc, aeger, q. sick from the indulgence of his own will.

WILTED, part. adj. "Shrunk,—wasted;" given as synon. with Wizzen'd, and as explaining it; Gall. Enc.

C. B. gwyllt signifies waste, wild, savage. But this suggests a different idea.

WILTUNA. Wilt thou not? S.

O sleepy body,
And drowsy body,
O wiltuna waken and turn thee!
Herd's Coll., ii. 98.

[WILYART, adj. V. under WILL, adj.]

WIMBLEBORE, s. A hole in the throat, which prevents one from speaking distinctly, S. in allusion to a hole bored by a wimble.

[WIMEGIRTH, s. The girth that secures the clibber on the back of a horse, Shetl.]

WIMMEL, s. A term sometimes used to denote the wind-pipe or weasand, Mearns.

WIMMELBREE, WIMMELBREIS, s. The same dish as the Haggis, composed of the lungs, heart, &c. of an animal, with this difference that the latter is made in a sheep's maw, whereas the former, being made thin, is used as a soup, Mearns.

Bree is obviously the provincial pronunciation of Brue, and Breis of Brose, q. v. Fancy might suggest various sources of derivation for the first part of the word. Isl. wembill seems the most probable origin. By Halderson it is explained, Abdomen; (Dan.) wom, mare. Now, wom signifies the paunch, mave, "the ventricle, the stomach," Wolff. Thus wembill-breis would signify potage made in the maw of an animal. For it is most likely that it was originally made in the same manner as the haggis; and that, although want of opportunity might produce a change in the mode of operation, the ingredients being the same, the ancient name would be retained.

To WIMPIL, WYMPIL, WOMPLE, v. a. 1. To wrap, to fold, S.

Thare capitane, this ilk strang Arentyne,
Walkis on fute, his body wynplit in

[First come the men o' mony wimples
In common language ca'd Da'rymples.
Lord Auchinleck.]

3. A winding in a road, South of S.

"He took the straight line for Dunse, over hill and dale, as a shepherd always does, who hates the wimples, as he calls them, of a turnpike." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 225.

WIMPLER, s. A waving lock of hair.

Doun his braid back, frae his quhyt head,
The silver wimplers grow.

Vision, Evergreen, i. 214.

V. WYMPIL.

WYMPLED, adj. Intricate.

The Gentle Shepherd's nae sae easy wrought,
There's scenes, and acts, there's drift, and there's design:
Sic wymp'd wark would crack a pow like thine.

Ross's Helenore, Introd.

WIMPLEFEYST, s. A sulky humour. V. AMPLEFEYST.

WIN, s. Delight.

Wed ane worthie to wyfe, and weild hir with win.
Rauf Coilyear, D. iij. a.

WIN, s. The quantity of standing corn that a band of reapers can take before them, Clydes.

V. the origin, vo. LANDIN.

To WIN, v. n. To dwell. V. WOX.

To WIN, WYN, WINNE, v. a. 1. To dry corn, hay, peats, &c., by exposing them to the air, S. Sibb. writes won as v. But this is properly the pret., anciently wonnyn.

It fell about the Lammas tide
When yeoman wonne their hay,
The doughtie Douglas gan to ride,
In England to take a prey.

Hume's Hist. Dougl., p. 104.

"Little attention is paid, by the general run of farmers, to winn the grain in the stook." P. Wattin, Caithn. Statist. Acc., xi. 267, N.

"The place quhar he winnies his peitts this year, ther he sawis his corne the next yeire, after that he guidds it weill with sea ware." Monroe's Isles, p. 46. This respects the island of Lewis.

"Cutting, winning, and carrying home their peats, however, consumes a great deal of time." P. Wattin, Caithn. Statist. Acc., xi. 268.

VOL. IV.

2. Often used to denote harvest-making in general.

For syndry cornys that thai bar
Wox ryp to wyn, to mannys sul:
That the treys all chargyt stod
With ser frutia, on syndry wys.
In this suete tyme, that I dewys,
Thal off the pele had wonnyn hay,
And with this Bunnok spokyn had thai,
To lede thair hay, for he wes ner.
And sum that war with in the pele
War ischyt on thair awne wusele,
To wyn the herwyst ner tharby.

Barbour, x. 189. 196. 219, MS.

"The labourers of the ground—might not sow nor winn their corns, through the tumults and cumbers in the country." Pit-cottie, p. 10.

"Beccaus kyng Henry was this tyme in France, and the corne to be won, thay war content on all sydis to defend thair awin but any forthir invasion of othir quhill the next yeir." Bellend. Cron., B. xiii. c. 4. Jam messis instaret; Boeth.

Su.-G. wann-a, Alem. wann-on, Belg. winn-en, A.S. wind-wian, ventilare. Su.-G. Isl. winn-a, to wither. In Isl. it is used especially with respect to herbs and flowers. Forcyned is an O. E. word of the same meaning, mentioned by Skinner, and expl. marcidus, arefactus. But he erroneously derives it from A.S. drygan, tabescere. Ihre gives Wiana as synonym with Wia-c. V. WIZZEN.

Teut. winn-en, corresponds to sense 2; colligere fructus terrae. The origin of the A.S. windwian, is wind, ventus; and, as it is a compound v., perhaps Teut. wij-en, pargare. V. WECHT.

To WIN, v. a. 1. [To work, to labour]; to raise from a quarry, S. won, part. pa.

"Gif onie person be not infest with sik priviledge, hee may na-waies forbid, trouble or molest the King, or any of his lieges to do the premisses: Or to win staines, quarrell, or to exerce any vther industrie to thair awin profite and commoditie, within the flood marke of the sea." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Here.

"Narrest Seunay layes ther a little iyle callit in Erische leid Ellan Sklait, quherin there is abundance of skalyie to be won." Monroe's Isles, p. 10.

"On the 9th instant, at a stone quarry near Auchtermuchty, while James Ranken, mason, was winning some stones, the upper part of the quarry giving way, he was killed on the spot." Edin. Even. Courant, March 21, 1805.

2. To dig in a mine of any kind.

Bellenden gives the following curious account of pit-coal.

"In Fife ar won blak stanis (quhilk hes sa intollerable heit quhen thai ar kendillit) that thai resolve & meltis irnc, & ar thairfore rycht profitable for operation of smythia. This kynd of blak stanis ar won in na part of Albion, bot allanerlie betuix Tay and Tyne." Descr. Alb., c. 9. Efoditur ingenti numero lapis nigri; Boeth.

"In Clidistail is ane riche myne of gold and won but any lanbour." Ibid. c. 10.

Elsewhere he uses the word both as to quarries and mines. V. TYLD.

"The convention of estates—made an act,—that no coals should be transported to any burgh of Scotland, or to any foreign country, but all to be winn and sent to London." Spalding's Troubles, II. 107.

"Hir Grace hes grantit and gevin licence to us our partinaris and servandis in ourre name, to wirt and wyn in the leid-mynis of Glengoner and Weak, samekill leid-ure as we may gudlie, and to transport and carie fut of this realme to Flandris, or any other partis beyond sey, twenty thousand stanewecht of the said leid-ure." Sedl. Counc., A. 1562, Keith's Hist. App., p. 96.

A. S. winn-an, Su. G. winn-a, Isl. riinn-a, laborare, labore acquirere; because of the toilsome nature of the work. Hence,

3. To give, [bestow]; used in regard to a stroke, Roxb.; as, "I'll win ye a breeze or blow."

Wi that he wan 'im sic a clank
Between the shou'lders an' the flank;
That far an' neer was heard the yank.

Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 50.

4. To reach, to gain. To win the door, to reach it, Aberd.

"Bainadalloch followed his counsel, shook himself loose, and wan the kilnlogie door." Spalding, i. 39.

—With what pith she had she takes the gate,
And wan the brae; but it's now growing late.

Ross's Helenore, p. 62.

5. To receive permission to go from one place to another; as, to win hame, S.

"However Haddo, upon caution that he should, under great sums of money, compare again before the justice the 24th of June, wan home." Spalding, ii. 2. i.e., "He was permitted to depart homewards."

To WIN ane's bread. To gain it, properly by labour, S.

To WIN OUT. To raise as from a quarry; metaph. used.

"Years and months will take out now one little stone, then another, of this house of clay, and at length of time shall win out the breadth of a fair door, and send out the imprisoned soul to the free air in heaven." Rutherford's Lett., P. I. ep. 129.

To WIN THE HOISS. To gain the prize. V. HOISS.

WIN, s. Gain.

He sailit over the sey sa oft and oft,
Quhil at the last ane semelic ship he coft;
And waxe sa ful of warldis welth and win,
His hands he wiah [washed] in ane silver basin.
Priests Pebbis, S. P. R., i. 10.

It is elsewhere used in the same poem. V. BVD.

They tane thir steps, all thay quhaevir did sin
In pryde, invy, in ire, and lecherie;
In covetice, or ony extreme win.
—And covetice of warldly win
Is bot wisdom, I say for me.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., i. 246, 247.

A. S. win, signifies labour, the proper source of gain. But I do not find that it ever occurs as denoting gain itself. Germ. winne, is used in the latter sense; as well as Belg. Sw. winst, from winn-en, winn-a, lucrari.

To WIN, WYN, WON, pron. wun, v. n. To have any thing in one's power, to arrive at any particular state or degree with some kind of labour or difficulty, S. corresponding to E. get, v. n. pret. wan. I wil cum, gin I can win; I will come, if it be in my power: I coud na win; It was not in my power to come, S.

"What so his wille ware,
Ferli neighe he wan,
Sothe thing:
So neighe come never man,
Bot mi lord the king."

Sir Tristrem, p. 125, st. 105.

And aye the o'er word o' the sang
Was—"Your love can no win here."

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 9.

"It was said the marquis of Huntly was desired by Argyl's letter to meet him at Brechin, but the marquis excused himself, saying, he could not win." Spalding's Troubles, i. 113.

—His stile is Bonnyha;

And bonny is't, and wealthy, wealthy he,
Well will she fa' that wins his wife to be.

Ross's Helenore, p. 78.

It is often joined with an adj.; as, to win free, to win loose; sometimes with a s., as, to win hame, to get home, S.

It is also used with a great variety of prepositions.

To WIN ABOON. To get the pre-eminence; also, to obtain the mastery, to get the better of, to overcome, as, I have won aboon all my fears, S. He's no like to win aboon't, It is not probable that he will recover from this disease, S. It also signifies to recover one's spirits after some severe calamity, S.

But thus, poor thing! to loose her life
Aneath a bloody villain's knife,
I'm really fley't that our guidwife
Will never win aboon't ava.

Ewie, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 146.

To WIN ABOUT. To circumvent in any way; especially by wheedling, S.

To WIN AFF. 1. To get away; implying the idea of some obstacle or danger, in one's way, S.

Fat chance he furdur had she cud na tell,
But was right fain, that she wan aff hersell.

Ross's Helenore, p. 40.

2. To be liberated from prison, or acquitted in a judicial trial, S.

"Tam Linton was apprehended, and examined on oath afore the sheriff; but there was nae proof could be led against him, and he wan off." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 318.

[3. To dismount, to be able to dismount; as, "He's on the horse, but he canna win aff." S.]

To WIN A-FLOT. To break loose, or be set adrift; applied to a vessel at sea.

"And sicklike, of all shippis, gudis, and merchant-dice, that are perisht and win *a-flo*t in the sea,—ane third part of all pertainis to him or thame that drawis and sailis the samin." Sea Lawis, Balf. Pract., p. 633.

To WIN AFORE, or before. To outrun, S.

And nethes hale before wan scho nocht.

Doug. Virgil, 133, 41.

To WIN AT. To reach to, S. I coudna win at it; used both literally, as to what is beyond one's reach, and also metaph. with respect to expense.

It is sometimes used in this sense as a r. a.

"These things are indeed very difficult, and all most impossible at the first hand to be won at by those who are serious; whilst natural atheists, and deluded hypocrites, find no difficulty in asserting all those things." Guthrie's Trial, p. 105.

"Oh! Sir, if I could win at that greatest of trembling and fear,—to see how these blessed scriptures, the general commands of love are mistaken, yea, and abused, in the present case." M'Waril's Contend., p. 80.

To WIN AT LIBERTY. To get free, to be released from restraint.

"The tolbooth of Aberdeen was broken on the night. —The gentleman winning at liberty address himself unwisely to his father's house at Birsacks Mill." Spalding, ii. 114.

To WIN AWAY. 1. To get off; often, to escape, to get off with difficulty, S.

The Inglis men, that won away,
To thair schippis in by went thair;
And saylt hame angry and wa,
That thair had bene rebutyt ana.

Barbour, xvi. 655, MS.

The worthi Scottis did nobilly that day
About Wallace, till he was woun away.

Wallace, iv. 668, MS.

Balth here and thare sone vmbeset haue thay
The outgatis all, thay suld not win away.

Doug. Virgil, 289, 10.

Win away occurs in Ritson's R. Hood, i. 107. But the poem, as he conjectures, is undoubtedly Scottish.

2. To set off, as opposed to delay, S.

"Come ben me [my] Joes, and won awaugh; span your ground ore this silly bourn." Franck's Northern Memoirs, p. 61.

3. It also sometimes signifies to die; as, He's won awa', q. he has obtained release from the sufferings of the present life, S.

"I look not to win away to my home without wounds and blood." Rutherford's Lett., P. III., ep. 24.

To WIN BACK. To have it in one's power to return from a place, S.

We'll gang nae mair to yon town,
For fear we win na back again. Old Song.

To WIN BEFORE. To get the start of, S.

No travel made them tire,
Til they before the beggar won,
And cast them in his way.

Ritson's R. Hood, (Scot. Poem), i. 106.

To WIN BEN. To be able to go to, or to obtain admittance into, the inner apartment; to win butt, to be able to go to the outer apartment, S.

"Ye're welcome, but ye winna win ben;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 85.

[To WIN BUT. To be able to go to the outer apartment of a dwelling, S.]

To WIN BY, v. a. 1. To get past; used in a literal sense, S.

2. To escape, in relation to any danger, S.

"Ye're breezing awa' about marriage, and the job is how we are to win by hanging." Tales of my Landlord, iii. 123.

3. Often used in relation to one's lot or destiny, with a negative; as, "He could na win by't," i.e., It was his fate, so that he could not possibly avoid it, S.

To WIN DOWN. 1. To reach, to extend downwards.

"He—had style red yellow hair behind, and on his haffits, which won down to his shoulders." Fitzcarrine, p. 111.

2. To get down, S.

"As he is wakening him, the timber passage and fitting of the chamber hastily takes fire, so that none of them could win down stairs again." Spalding i. 10.

"They won away upon the 4th of November by an iron, whereby they made a hole in the wall of the high tolbooth, and won all down upon planks, except one who was taken." Ibid. ii. 253.

To WIN FARRER, or FARTHER BEN. To be admitted to greater honour, to be further advanced, S.

"They are but in the court of the gentiles and will ne'er win farther ben. I doubt they are but little better than the prelatists themselves." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 166.

To WIN FORRAT. To get forward, S.

To WIN FREE, v. n. To obtain release, S.

"He rode south with Marischal once upon his own expences, but never more, so won free of fine and going to the Bowlroad."—"Thus were the Oldtown soldiers armed, and the town won free." Spalding's Troubles, i. 241. V. WINFREE, v. a.

To WIN GAN. To break loose, to obtain liberation, Buchan.; q. to be allowed to go.

This of my quiet cut the wizen,
When he won gae.

Dominie Depoid, p. 31

To WIN IN. 1. To obtain access, S.

Pallas was true as the steel,
And keepit bidding wonder weel:
And at the door received him in,
But none in after him might win.

Sir Egir, p. 31

"If my one foot were in heaven, and my soul half in, if free-will and corruption were absolute lords of me, I should never win wholly in." Rutherford's Lett., P. I., ep. 68.

2. To be able to return home.

Come kiss me then, Peggy, nor think I'm to blame;
I weel may gae out, but I'll never win in.

Baron of Brackley, Jamieson's Pop. Eull., i. 106

To WIN INTO. To get the benefit of, S.

"The President alleged, 'if that were all the meaning of it, then the remedy the people had of winning into decreets, where they were truly lesed, by the mistake of the Lords or otherwise, would be altogether evacuated.'" Fount. Dec. Suppl. iv. 132.

To WIN NERE. To get near, S.

Be this thair won nere to the renkis enl,
Irkit sum dele before the mark wele kend.

Doug. Virgil, 133, 2

To WIN ON. To be able to ascend, or to mount, as on horseback, S.

"Our greatest difficulty will be, to win on upon the rock now, when the winds and waves of persecution are so lofty and proud." Rutherford's Lett. P. III. ep. 18.

To WIN ON AHINT one. To get the advantage in a bargain, to impose on one, S. apparently in allusion to one leaping on horseback behind another, and holding him as prisoner.

To WIN OUR, or OVER. 1. To get over, in a literal sense, to be able to cross; implying difficulty, S.

With that word to the dik he ran,
And our aften the king he won.

Barbour, ix. 405, MS.

"Lieutenant Montrose begins to march towards Speyside, but could not win over the water, the boats being drawn on the other side, and Murray conveyed in arms." Spalding, ii. 246.

2. To surmount, metaph. S.

"But when they found that several were winning over their oaths, and giving obedience to the Estates Orders, it gave them new provocation." Account Persecution of the Church in Scotland, p. 33.

To WIN OUT. To escape; as, from a field of battle, &c.

The Ingliss men, at durst thaim nocht abid,
Befor the oot full ferdly furth thai fle
Till Dwnattor a snuk within the se.
Na ferrar thai mycht wyn out off the land.

Wallace, vii. 1044, MS.

V. SITHENS.

Doug. Virgil, 348, 34.

To WIN THROW. 1. To get through, S.

"Ye mauna think to win through the warld on a feather-bed;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 83.

. To cross a river, S.

"Had his Majestie not gotten the blacksmith, or some other like unto him, to have bene intelligencer and guide to winne through the shallow trinkets he led us, to the damme upon the head of their watch, who were surprized; hardly could we have overcome this towne, on such a sudden." Monro's Exped. P. II. p. 41.

3. To be able to finish any business, S.

"Our progress in the assembly is small; there is so much matter yet before us, as we cannot win through for a long time after our common pace." Baillie's Lett., ii. 42.

4. Metaph., to recover from disease, S.

To WIN TO. 1. To reach, S.

—Mycht no man to it wyn—

Wallace, vi. 802, MS.

"Thinke ye, Sir, that before a man win to heauen, that he must be racked and riven as I am with fearful temptations?" Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 140.

Ere any of them to him won,
There he slew an his kinned man.

Sir Egeir, p. 33.

See gin you'll win unto this stryple here,
And wash your face and brow with water clear.
Ross's Helenore, p. 15.

"Win up, my bonny boy," he says,
"As quickly as ye may;
"For ye maun gang for Lillie Flower,
"Before the break of day."

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 22.

Won up, won up, my good master;
I fear ye sleap o'er lang.

Glenkindie, Jamieson's Popul. Ball., l. 95.

3. To rise from one's knees.

O when she saw Wise William's wife,
The Queen fell on her knee;
"Win up, win up, madame!" she says:
"What needs this courtesie?"

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 85.

To WIN UP TO, or WITH. To overtake, S.

To WIN WITHIN. To get within.

The menstral won within ane wanis,
That day full weil he previt,
For he come hame with unbirsit bairns,
Quhare fechtars wer mischevit.

Chr. Kirk, st. 15.

This term has been occasionally used, in some of these senses, by O. E. writers.

—That no schyppe sholde in wynne.

Rich. Cœur de Lyon.

—"That no creature might wynne to her."

Fabyan's Chron.

Syns at our narrow doores they in cannot win,
Send them to Oxforde, at Brodgate to get in.

Heywood's Epigrams, Warton's Hist. E. P. iii. 80.

Warton renders it enter in, observing that win is probably a contraction for go in. To winne to, to attain, Chaucer, Rom. Rose, v. 3674. Palsgrau mentions this word. "I winne to a thing, I retche to it." He subjoins, however; "This terme is farre northern."

A.-S. Alenn, winn-an, Germ. winn-en, signify in general, to obtain, to acquire. But our term, although perhaps originally the same, is rather to be traced to Su.-G. and Isl. In these languages, the v. assumes different forms; Su.-G. inna, hinna, hvincn-a, winn-a, Isl. winn-a. But lhre reckons winn-a the most ancient; viewing win, labor, as the root. In Su.-G. it is sometimes used without, at other times with, a preposition. Jag wet ej huru laangt jag hvinner i dag; Nescio, quatenus hodie pergero valeam; lhre, vo. Hinna. I wet na how fer I may win, the day, S. I know not how far I may be able to proceed on my journey to-day, E.

*Erke Biskopen tha ey laengre waan,
An til Nykoepping, ther do hann.*

Archiepiscopus ulterius ire non valuit.

Chron. Rhythm., p. 303, Ibid.

"The Archbishop wan na ferrer than til Bykoping," &c., S.

Hinna upp en, aliquem prægressum assequi; Ibid.; to overtake one who has gone before, E. to win up to him, S. Laga at du kinner up din broder i studier; Take care to equal your brother in learning, Wideg. Tak care to win up to, or with, your brother, S. Han skall komma, om han hinner; He shall come, if he has time, Wideg.; according to the S. idiom, If he can win. Hinna til corresponds to win to, or til, S. Han sprang, men hann icke til maalet; He ran, but did not reach, (win to) the goal. Hinna aat, to reach; Jag kan icke hinna aat baegaren; I can't reach, E. (I can na win at, S.) the pot.

To WIN, v. a. To wind (yarn), S., corr. from the E. word.

An' ay she win't, an' ay she swat,
I wat she made nse jaukin.

Burns, iii. 130.

To WIN one a PIRN. To do something injurious, or what will cause regret to one. V. PIRN.

WINNLES, WINDLES, s. An instrument used by women for winding yarn.

"I suppose you will not be able to wind a clue for me in Dunlara now, without the low-country-woman's dochter's windles." Saxon and Gael, iii. 161.

Qu. corrupted from E. windlass?

WINACHIN. This term is equivalent to winnowing, in the Buchan dialect. But as used by Forbes, the meaning must be different. [Winding, boasting.]

For Agamemnon winachin,
Diana's wench had stown;
An' wad na gie her back again,
Bat kept her as his own.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 20.

WINARE, s. One who sells wines.

"He aucht to haue ane skair thairof as the laif of the winaris of the same gat [street]." Aberd. Reg., A. 1548, V. 20.

Lat. vinarius, a vintner.

WINCH, s. The act of wincing, S.

Poor Petrie gae a weary winch,

He could na do but bann.—

Christmas Basing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 129.

Su.-G. wink-a, motitare; whence Fr. guinch-er, to wriggle, to writhe.

WINCHEAND, part. pr. Wincing. V. WINSE.

He stert till ane broggit stauf,

Wincheand as he war woode.

Pebbles to the Play, st. 13.

To WIND, WYND, v. n. 1. To turn towards the left; a term applied to animals in the yoke, when the driver wishes them to come towards him, S.

This term is opposed to haup, q. v.

2. Metaph. applied to a person. Of one who is so obstinate that he can be influenced or managed by no means whatsoever, it is said, "He'll neither haup nor wynd;" S. Prov.; i.e., He will turn neither to the right nor to the left.

To WYND AGAIN, v. n. To turn to the left, when it is meant that the plough or cart should be turned round and proceed in an opposite direction, S.

WIND, WYND, s. An alley, a lane, S.

—Thai til Edynburgh held the way;

In at the Frere Wynd entryd thai,

And to the Crag wp throwch the town

Thai held thare way in a rawdown.

Wynloven, viii. 30. 43.

"There is little or no change made on the other passages called wynds and raws. Only it is to be observed, that in all those which have been made in the city or suburbs for at least fifty years past, we have neither gates nor wynds; they are all streets and lanes." Statist. Acc., (Aberdeen) xix. 183.

"Edinburgh and Stirling, two of the principal towns in Scotland, are situated on hills, with one wide street, and many narrow lanes leading from thence down the sides of the hills, which lanes, from their being generally winding, and not straight, are called winds." Sir John Sinclair's Observ., p. 165.

To WIND, v. a. To dry by exposing to the air.

—"With power and libertie to pow heather, and to cast and wind peitis, turris, fewall, fail, and devotte, in the common mwire and mossis of the said brugh." Acts Cha. I. Ed. 1814, V. 591.

"Casting and winding of peittes." Ibid. p. 592.

This corresponds with the etymon given of the v. as now used. V. WIN, WYNN, WINNE.

To WIND, v. n. To magnify in narration, to tell marvellous stories, S.; perhaps from wind, ventus, as by the same metaph. a person of this description is said to blow. Hence, WINDER, s. One who deals in the marvellous, S.

Nearly synon. is Germ. windmacher, a braggadocio, a noisy, pretending, swaggering fellow.

WINDAK, s. A window, Aberd. Reg.

WINDASSES, s. pl. Fanners for winnowing grain, Roxb.

—He did his point maintain,
That it was lawfu', just, an' right,
Wi' windasses folks' corn to dight.
Ja. Hogg's Poems, p. 104.

O. Teut. wind-en, synon. with wacy-en, ventilare. It may have received the termination from being confounded, in pronunciation, with the term used to denote a windlass.

WIND-BILL, s. "A bank-bill where there is no corresponding value of commodities in existence; but which must be discounted before it becomes due," S. Agr. Surv. Forfars., p. 589.

WINDCUFFER, s. The name given to the Kestrel, Orkn.

"The Kestrel (falco tinnunculus, Lin. Syst.) which from its motion in the air, we name the windcuffer, may frequently be observed, as if stationed with its eyes fixed on the ground to discover its prey." Barry's Orkney, p. 312. V. STANCHILL.

WINDFLAUCHT, adj. With impetuous motion, as driven by the wind, S.

—Yit then
Foryettis he not Eurialus luf perfay,
Bot kest him ein ouerthortoure Salius way,
Graffing as he micht apoun the sliddry grene,
Maid him licht windflaucht on the ground vncleue.
Doug. Virgil, 138, 47.

Teut. wind-slaephe, turbo, procella.

WINDIN, s. The smallest matter; "He wadna do a windin without payment," i.e., he would do nothing, how trifling soever, Loth.

This word is now nearly obsolete; and has probably been transmitted from the Anglo-Saxons. It might be traced either to windonge, pl., signifying twigs or rushes of which baskets are made; or to windung, palea, chaff, unless we should suppose that, as denoting an act, it is from wind-an, torquere, q. "he would not twist a rope."

• WINDING-SHEET.

"It disturbed the ghost of the dead, and was fatal to the living, if a tear was allowed to fall on a winding-sheet. What was the intention of this, but to prevent the effects of a wild or frantic sorrow." P. Montquhitter, Stat. Acc., xxi. 147.

WINDIS, s. A pulley.

"The master of the ship sould schaw the merchandis the taikillis, or his windis and his cordis:—For gif ane tun or pipe be tint in the winding or heising, in fault of the cordis, in time of laiding or lousing, the masteris and marineris amangis thame sould pay the merchand thairfoir." Ship Lawis, Balfour's Pract., p. 620.

O. E. "Wyndace. Troclea.—Wyndyngs with wyndace. Obsolete." Prompt. Parv.

Evidently the same with Teut. wind-as, wind-ass, Belg. wind-ace, trochlea, rechamus, a windlace; from wind-en, torquere, and perhaps asse, an axis.

To WINDLE, v. n. To walk wearily in the wind, Dumfr.

This might at first view appear to be a derivative from wind, ventus. But it seems rather allied to Teut. wendel-en, windel-en, circumagere, circumvolvere; as denoting the tossing action of the wind.

To WINDLE, v. a. To make up (straw or hay) into bottles, S. Teut. windel-en, fasciis vel fasciolis involvere; Gl. Sibb. Hence, WINDLEN, WONLYNE, s. A bottle of straw or hay, S.

"Let the muckle horse get the muckle wonlyne;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 50. V. STRAE.

It is now written windlen, which more properly marks its origin. V. KEMPLE.

"Ye start at a strae, and let windlens gae;" Prov. South of S. "You regard trifles, and neglect things of far greater importance."

This is the same with Isl. voendull in hey-roendull, defined by Halderson, "a bundle of hay, as much as can be grasped by the hand [arm] extended, between the armpit and under the haunch." He says that voendull properly signifies volumen.

[WINDLES, WINNLES, s. An instrument for winding yarn. V. under WIN.]

WINDLESTRAE, WYNDLE-STRAY, s. 1. "Smooth crested grass, S., A. Bor." Rudd. Crested dog's-tail grass, Cynosurus cristatus, Linn. [Wingle-strae, Banffs.]

Branchis brattling and blaiknyt schew the brayis,
With hirstis harak or waggand wyndil strayis.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 202, 29.

Now piece and piece the sickness wears away;
But she's as dweble as a windle-strae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 56.

This term occurs in what has evidently been used, as a proverbial phrase, by our ancestors, denoting the total insufficiency of the means prescribed or employed for accomplishing an end in view.

"To restrict him to the fifth part of the rent, was to send him to lift the rest of his stipend from windle-straws and sandy laverocks." Fount. Dec. Suppl. iv. 793.

2. Metaph. used to denote any trifling obstacle.

"He that is red for windlestraws should not sleep in lea." Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 14.

"No windlestraws, no bits of clay, no temptations, which are of no longer life than an hour, will then be able to withstand you."—Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 214.

A-S. windle-stroewe, "calamus; a reed, a cane, a wheate or oaten straw, of some at this day called a windel-stroew;" Somner. Calamus, ex quo conficiuntur sportae, Lye; from windel, sporta, a basket, Lancash. a windel.

WINDOCK, WINNOCK, s. A window, S.

"Faill not, but ye tak guid heyd that neither the dasks, windocks, nor duris, be ony ways hurt or brokin—eyther glassin wark or iron wark." Letter, Ergyll, Stewart, &c. Statist. Acc. (P. Dunkeld) xx. 422, N.

"When poverty comes in at the door, friendship flies out at the winnock." Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 77.

"Name vtheris in thair names comperand to the effect foirsaid, thair being oftymes callit at the tolbuith windot to the saym effect." Acts Mary, 1546, Ed. 1814, p. 478.

"The foirsaidis—wer diuers and syndrie tymes callit at the tollbuith windok." Acts Ja. VI., 1581, Ed. 1414, p. 289.

I think, you rising genius, Tannock,
May gain a niche in fame's heigh winnock.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 105.

This at first view may appear a gross corruption. But it approximates, more than the E. word, to Su.-G. winauge, windoe-ga, Isl. vinlaunge, id. from wind, the higher part of a building, (as some deduce the term, this being most exposed to the wind), and oe-ga, auge, oculus; the window being as it were the eye of this upper part, as introducing light.

Isl. vinlaunge, windoega, Su.-G. windoega; according to Ihre, from wint, the higher part of a house, and oe-ga, an eye, because of the round form of the window. And indeed, round windows are often used in the upper part of buildings.

WINDOW-BOLE, s. "The part of a cottage window that is filled by a wooden blind, which may occasionally be opened;" Gl. Antiq. V. BOAL.

WINDOW-BROAD, s. A window-shutter, S.

It was in and through the window-broad,
And a' the tirlie-wirlies o'd,
The sweetest kiss that ever I got,
Was frae my dainty Davy;
Dainty Davie, Herd's Coll., ii. 215.

[WIND-RAWIN, WIND-ROWING, s. V. under WINRAW.

WIND-SKEW, s. An instrument used for preventing smoke. It consists of a broad piece of wood, to which is fixed a long handle. This is placed on the chimney-top, and the handle hangs down the vent. It is altered from its former position, according to the change of the wind; Mearns.

Perhaps from Su.-G. wind, and skufw-a, sky, vitare, Alem. scu-an, scuk-en; q. what eschews the wind. Or wind may be from Su.-G. wint-a, torquere, because of its change of place.

This, in Ang., is called a wriggle, perhaps q. wriggle, from Teut. wringh-en, torquere; or from Su.-G. wrick-a, id. The reason of both designations may thus be viewed as nearly the same.

There is a possibility, however, that windskew may be originally the same with Isl. Su.-G. windsked, a little varied in signification; Asseres tecti, qui culmen et corticem tegunt, ne a vento dissipentur; Verel. p. 294. Asser prominulus, qui a pariete pluviam defendit; a sked, assula; Ihre. He views wind as here signifying the higher part of a house.

WIND-SUCKER, s. The name given to a horse that is accustomed to fill his stomach with wind, by sucking the manger, Ettr. For.; in E. called a Crib-biter.

WINDUSMAN, s. One employed about a coal-heugh at the windlass, Loth.

"That na persone sall hyre or seduce any wattermen & windusmen—without ane testimonial of the maister quhome they serve." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, v. 509. V. WINDASS.

WINDWAVED, part. adj. Having the stem whirled about by the wind, so that the roots become loosened in the earth, S.

"In years of peculiarly windy weather, the stem, where it enters the earth, is often blown about in a whirling manner, forming a kind of [inverted] conical hollow, and the coronal roots become detached from their connexion with the soil, this is provincially called wind-waved." Agr. Surv. Berw., p. 133.

* WINDY, adj. 1. Vain, ostentatious, S.

2. Gasconading, boastful, S.

"Your wind shakes no corn," S. Prov.; "spoken to boasting and pretending people whom the Scots call windy people." Kelly, p. 370.

"But though he is a windy body when he gets on his auld warld stories, he has mair gumption in him than most people." Redgauntlet, ii. 224.

WINDY-WALLETS, s. pl. 1. A ludicrous designation for one who is accustomed to break wind backwards; pron. wundy-wallets, Roxb.

2. One who is habituated to fibbing, S. whidd-ing, or to magnify in conversation, ibid.

WINE-BERRY, s. 1. The common currant, S. B.

She led hym in to a fayr herbere,
That frute ground was gret plente;
The fygge, and also the wynne berry.

True Thomas, Jamieson's Popul. Ball., ii. 20.

"In the north of Scotland, the common currant is called the wine berry." N. Ibid.

2. This term had been formerly used in S. for grapes, as distinguished from currants.

"Uvae, wine-berries, Vaccinia nigra & rubra, black and red berries." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 17.

According to Thoresby, in Yorks. wine-berries are "not grapes, but gooseberries;" A.-S. win-beria is used in the former sense. V. Ray's Lett., p. 341. In sing. win-berie, uva; Lye.

WINED. Wall. v. 384. Edit. Perth. V. URN.

To WINFREE, v. a. 1. To raise from the ground, to disentangle, Aberd. Winfreed, raised from the ground, Gl. Shirr.

"Twa or three o's winfreed the wife, and gat her out." Journal from London, p. 5.

2. To liberate, to set free, in a general sense, Clydes.

"—This I budo to do, while I was winfreed by a mare powerfu' being nor himsell." Edin. Mag., Sept. 1818, p. 155.

Perhaps we have the original form of this phrase in the language of Harry the Minstrel:

Wallace answered; "Or we wyn Scotland fre, Baith ye and I in mar perell mon be."

Wallace, [Fol. 39, a. MS.]

This v. seems composed of Win, to have in one's power, q. v., to which an active sense is improperly given, and fre, q. to get loose from any entanglement

WINGED ROW. The name formerly given to a half-peppery roll baked with flat sides like wings, S.

WINGEL, s. A tumor or soft growth, Renfr.; obviously corr. from E. Wind-gall.

To WINGLE, v. n. 1. To move with difficulty under a load, Fife.

2. To wriggle, to walk feebly, Gall.

"I gaed [gave] a glent—alang by the scarrow o'e hill, and did see him winglan awa by the back-side o' the auld sangh Lochan." Gall. Enc., p. 483.

3. To hang loosely, and nearly in a detached state, Dumfr.

Perhaps originally the same with Wiggle, with the insertion of the letter a; or allied to Isl. vingull, mobile quid pendens. Su.-G. wankl-a, fluctuare, A.-S. wanci, instabilia, vacillans.

The latter term is obviously retained in "wankle, weak, unstable,—as a wankle seat; limber, fickle, wavering. North." Grose.

To WINGLE, v. a. To carry in a dangling way, Fife.

"Here hae we travelt up to this town, what wi' wingling flails, and cutters, and barrowtrams,—nae little forjeskit." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 14.

WINK, s. In a wink, in a moment, S.B.

Snap went the sheers, then in a wink,
The fang was stow'd behind a blink.

Morison's Poems, p. 110.

This is analogous to BLINK, q. v.

Again the fleeting taper glanc'd;—
It scattered a bewildrin' light,
And in a wink the glim'rin' ray
Flashed on his sight, then died away:
Aye! Willie-an'-the-Wisp was there,
Shedding forth his nightly glare, &c.

Beattie's John o' Arnha', p. 28.

WINKERS, s. The eye-lashes, S.

To WINKLE, v. n. [To sparkle.]

What though she has twa little winkling een,
They're better than nane, and my life it is sweet.
Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 63.

Apparently a diminutive from the E. v. to wink.

WIN-KILL, s. A hollow in a stack of corn, hay, &c., for preventing it from being heated; perhaps q. wind-kill, Moray; synonym. Fause-house.

WINKIT, adj. Somewhat turned; a term applied to milk, when it has lost the sweet taste; Loth. Wyntit, Dumfr., A. Bor. wented, id. Blinkit breezed, synonym. S.

If winkit be the original term, it may refer to the supposed influence of an evil eye; as milk, more than any other species of food, has been considered as under the power of witchcraft. If wyntit be the true pron., perhaps from wind, as denoting the effect of exposure to the air. Alem. wuint, aura.

WINKLOT, s. A young woman, a wench.

Ane winklot fell,——
Wow, quod Malkin, hyd yow;
Quhat neldis you to maik it sua?
Pebbis to the Play, st. 8.

A.-S. wencle, wincle, a handmaid, a maid servant.

WINNEL-SKEWED, adj. Under the influence of an illusion in sight.

"'Hoot, hoot, man,' said Bell, who was standing by, 'the boy is winnele-skewed, as I thought myself when you shewed me a' that gear yonder in the neuk. It is a saying among our people in Scotland, whenever they mistake one object for two, that the moon is in the hallior or clouded, and at such times they are winnele-skewed, or their eyes deceive them.'" Penrose's Journal, iii. 83.

Isl. vindöld signifies tempestas ventosa, and skeif-r, Dan. kiaer, obliquus, q. driven awry by stormy wind. It can hardly be viewed as allied to vindoyed, Su.-G. windoygd, squint-eyed.

WINNING, s. Habitation, residence.

"Gif ony man will accuse ane uther of Hame-sucken, it is necessar that he alledge that he assailyeit him in his awin proper house, quhair he has his winning, rising, and lying day and nicht, for na man may challenge ane uther of hame-sucken, bot for assailyeng him at his awin proper house and dwelling-place." Balfour's Pract., p. 541.

The proper orthography is Winning. V. Wox.

WINNING, s. Conquest, attainment.

"Aboyn's frende—hearing of the winning of the bridge, came no farther than Legatsden." Spalding, i. 175.

WINNLE, s. The same with Windlen, a bottle of straw, Lanarks. [V. under WIN.]

This term very nearly resembles the Norw. synonym, which affords a striking proof of great antiquity. Vandel, vaandul, vannit, "a portion of hay or straw; as much fodder as a beast eats at once." Hellager's Norsk Ordsamling.

WINNOCK, s. A window, West of S. V. WINDOCK.

WINNOCK-BROD, s. The window-shutter, S. O.

Loud thro' the street the piper bums,

In Highlan' vigour gay,

Doors, hatches, winnock-brods are steerin.—

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 82.

WINNOWSTER, WINNISTER, s. A machine for winnowing corn, Aberd.

In Moca.-G. this is called winthi-skauro, and in A.-S. windwig syfe, windwiscaful, windwefonn, windfone, and windwingla. But the last part of all these words has a different formation.

WINRAME'S BIRDS.

Of a tiresome tale it is said, "It's like Winrame's birds, unco langsum. The head o't gaed by the day, and the tail o't the morn." Prov. Berwicka.

WINRAW, s. "Hay or peats put together in long thin heaps for the purpose of being more easily dried," S. Gl. Sibb. q. a row for winning. V. WIN, v. to dry.

A similar idea is conveyed by Yorks. wind-row; "grass or hay raked into long rows for drying." Thoresby, Ray's Lett., p. 341.

To WINRAW, v. a. To put in rows for winning or drying, Teviotd.

"To Windrow, to rake the mown grass into rows, called windrows. Norf. and Suff." Grose.

WINRAWIN, WIND ROWING, s. The act of building up peats in narrow heaps, in order to their being dried, S.

"After this [the act of footing the peats] comes the operation of wind rowing, or the building them up in narrow heaps, or fragments of dykes; in which state they remain till carried home and put into a winter stack." Agr. Surv. Peeb. V. Pennecuik, p. 72, N. That is, putting them in rows for the purpose of being properly exposed to the wind.

WINS. Sometimes used as a termination, as in Willawins, q. v.

WINS, prep. Towards, in the direction of, pointing out the quarter, Ang., as, Dundee-wins, in the direction of Dundee.

WINSEY, WINSIE, adj. Of or belonging to wool, S.B. apparently corr. from E. woolsey. Cotton-winsiey denotes what is made of cotton and wool; Linen-winsiey, of linen and wool, linsey-woolsey.

Her winsies war made by sweet Modesty's rule,
An' bespak baith her wisdom an' wealth.
Now Bertha seem'd proud o' her new fashioned gown,
Her slippers, an' silk parasol,
But look'd on her sister, Kinnoul, wi' a frown,
And observed that her winsies look'd droll.

Duff's Poems, p. 2.

WINSH, s. A windlass, Caithn. This seems the same word with that written Windis.

WINSOME, adj. 1. Gay, merry, cheerful, S.B.

Near what bright burn or crystal spring,
Did you your winsome whistle bring?

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 108.

I gat your letter, winsome Willie. —
Burns, iii. 248.

This seems the more ancient sense. A.-S. winsum, wynsum, jucundus, laetus, amoenus, gratus; suavis, dulcis; Franc. wunnisam; hence wunnisam feld, Paradisus; Otfrid. ap. Schilter. O. Teut. wonsam, jucundus, laetus; Kilian. Lye derives the A.-S. word from wyn, joy; Alem. wunne, Teut. wonne, winne, id.

2. Comely, agreeable, engaging, S.

Nane eir durst meet him man to man,
He was sae brave a boy;
At length wi' numbers he was taen,
My winsome Gilderoy.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 27.

The Galliard to Nithside is gane,
To steal Sim Crichton's winsome dun.

Minstrelsy Border, i. 284.

A. Bor. wunsome, not only signifies, "lively, joyous," but, "smart, trimly dressed;" Grose.

The Franc. phrase used by Otfrid, wunnisam aoni, approaches to this; delectabilis pulchritudo, Schilter.

VOL. IV.

It is possible, however, that the word in this sense may be radically different. For Su.-G. waen, Isl. vaenn, signify beautiful, pulcher, amoenus. Hun wir miog waen piika ok frid; Erat puella admodum pulchra et venusta; Biblia Isl. Gen. 24.—Ihre views this word as very ancient; as allied to A.-S. wine, delectus, to Lat. venustus, and also to the name of Venus.

WINSOMELIE, adv. In a cheerful and engaging way, S. A.-S. winsumliee, suaviter, jucunde.

WINSOMENESS, s. Cheerfulness and engaging sweetness, S. For the ideas are conjoined, as has evidently been the case in the use of the A.-S. terms.

A.-S. winsumnesse, jucunditas, amoenitas.

WINSTER, s. A disease of sheep, Shetl.

"The winstler is a fatal distemper amongst sheep kept in rich pastures. It is occasioned by springing, or running hard when the animal is fat. The blood vessels of the kidneys then burst, and flow through the intestines, which occasions an instant suffocation, and proves immediate death. It resembles in its effects an apoplexy. The only preventative known for this distemper, is to turn the lambs, about the month of August into a poor pasture, in order to reduce the extraordinary fatness, which occasions this disease." App. Agr. Surv. Shetl., p. 47.

This has some resemblance to the name given to the dropsy; Isl. vind-syki, Dan. windsoot.

WINT, v. impers. Befall. As, "Wae wint ye," equivalent to "Wae worth ye," Aberd.

I observe nothing to which this can be allied, unless perhaps to Dan. vent-er, to wait or attend, or riad-er, to reach to.

WINT, pret. v. Weened.

"Then James Douglas, seeing the King in his bed, wint that all had been sicker enough, and past in like manner to his bed." Pitcottie, p. 140.

* WINTER, s. 1. The last cartful of corn that is brought home in harvest, Loth.

For now the maiden has been win,
And Winter is at last brought in;
And syne they dance and had the kirm.

The Har'et Rig, st. 136.

It is also expl. "the state of having all the grain, on a farm, reaped and inneed," S.B.

2. The autumnal feast, when it is postponed till the complete ingathering of the crop, Buchan. V. CLAAICK.

3. An implement which is sometimes made to hang on the grate, and sometimes with feet to stand before the fire, for the purpose of keeping the tea-kettle warm, S.; synon. Footman. The latter term properly denotes such an implement as has feet.

This term Winter might originate from its being originally appropriated to the season of the year in which fire is kept in the parlour.

To WINTER, v. a. To feed cattle, &c.. through the winter, S.

"It occurs very seldom, that cattle are fed on the same ground for twelve successive months, or summered where they have been wintered." Agr. Surv. Dumbart., p. 211.

WINTER-DYKES, s. pl. 1. A designation properly given to those wooden frames, which are erected out of doors, for drying clothes, S. q. winter-walls.

2. Improperly applied to a screen or frame used for drying clothes, within doors, before the fire, S.O. V. WYNTYR and DIKE.

WINTERER, s. Horse, sheep, or cows, kept to feed in a particular place during winter, S.

"In farms where no winterers are kept, the dunghill is placed behind the stable out of view." Agr. Surv. of Mid-Lothian, p. 41.

WINTER-FISH. A term applied to a particular description of fish, Shetl.

"The ling caught at this season [before the 12th of August] are split, and laid in salt, and they remain in the brine until the end of spring, when they are taken out, washed, and dried for exportation. They are known by the name of winter-fish." Edmonstone's Zetl. i. 240.

WINTER-HAINING, s. The act of preserving grass from being fed on during winter.

"The dung of these in summer, with winter-haining, will keep the ground in good heart." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 37.

WINTERIN, WINTERLING, s. An ox or cow of one year.

["Gin he gets the cauf e'now, he cud pit it in amo' his ain winterin," Buchan.]

Isl. vetrungr, juvenis annulus, literally, a heifer that has passed one year; from vetr, winter.

WINTER-SOUR, s. Soft curds and butter mixed together, and laid on bread, or eaten with it by way of kitchin, Teviotd. This in Upp. Clydes. is defined, Curds, made of soured milk, mixed with butter.

[WINTROUS, adj. Wintry, stormy, Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 283.]

To WINTLE, v. n. 1. "To stagger, to reel;" Gl. Burns, S. O.

—Now ye dow but hoyte and hoble,
An' wintle like a saumont-cobla.

Burns, lll. 142.

2. To wind round, Upp. Clydes.

Belg. wentel-en, to turn round about, to roll, to wallow, to welter; evidently a derivative from wend-en, to turn, E. to wind.

3. To wriggle, to writhe; as, "He'll wintle in a widdie yet," i. e., he will writhe in a halter, Roxb.

This more properly expresses the sense of the Teut. term given in etymon. The radical verb is most probably Teut. wind-en, wend-en, Su.-G. wind-a, Alem. wint-an, torquere.

WINTLE, s. A staggering motion, S. O.

He by his shonther gae a keek,
An' tumbld wi' a wintle,
Out-owre that night.

Burns, lll. 134.

WINTON-MONEY, s. Money given to a herd to induce him to take care of cattle, when put under his charge for grazing, S.A.; perhaps q. drink-money, from A.-S. wintun, vini toberna.

WINZE, s. A curse or imprecation, S. To let a winze, to utter a curse.

He—loot a winze, an' drew a stroke.

Burns, lll. 136.

Teut. wensch, signifies not only, votum, desiderium, but imprecatio, Kilian. Germ. wunsch-en, adprecari. V. WINCHEAND.

WINZIE, adj. [Prob. winsome.]

But waes me for gallant M'Kenzie,
Wha fell in the first o' the fray;
I wat he was warlike an' winzie,
An' show'd them some rare Highland play.

Dug's Poems, p. 138.

To WIP, WYP, v. a. To bind round; as, to wip the skair of a rod, to bind a division of a fishing-rod with thread frequently and tightly brought round it, S. Wypit, part. pa.

Thair bricht hair hang glitterand on the strand
In tressis cleir, wypit with gouldin threidlis.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 10.

To the, Bacchus, sche raist eik on hie
Grete lang speris, as thay standartis were,
With wyne tre branchis wippit in thare maners.

Doug. Virgil, 220, 30.

V. the s.

WYP, s. A wreath, a garland.

With lynning valis, or lyke apronis lycht,
Thay war arrayit, and thare helis dycht
In wypys of the haly herb varuane.

Doug. Virgil, 411, 3.

Varuane is the herb vervain, much used by the Romans in their sacred rites. Wyp seems to be originally the same with Moes.-G. waip, wippja, corona, the term used to denote the crown of thorns plaited by the Roman soldiers (Joh. xix. 5.), apparently in resemblance of the wreaths or chaplets given to victors. This is nearly allied to Oor, q. v.

WIPPEN, s. That with which the handle of a golf-club is wound, q. Wipping, from WIP, v., q. v.

"Baculi caulis, The club shaft. Baculi manubrium, The handle where the wippen is. Baculi filum, The wippen." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 38.

WIPE, WYPE, s. A blow given by accident, or in a careless manner, S., from the same origin with the E. s., if not from O.Teut. wippe, flagrum, flagellum.

[To WIPE, v. a. To strike, to whip; part. pr. wipin, used as a s., a severe beating, Clydes.]

[WIPER, s. A severe blow; also, a sharp rejoinder or taunt, Banffs.]

[WIR, pron. Our; as, wir nain, our own; often contr. into wirn, Shetl.]

[WIRS, WIRZ, pron. Ours, ibid.]

WIRDIE, adj. Weighty, important, q. metaph. sense of Worthy.

—"The bruch of Jedburgh, narrest adjacent to the border of England, wes be his hienes meist nobill predicatoris for wirdie considerationis erected ane frie burch regall, dottit with the common landis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1597, Ed. 1814, p. 150. V. WERDY.

To WIRK, WYRK, v. a. 1. To work, to cause, to accomplish.

The wyis wrought uther grete wandreth and weuch,
Wirhand woundis full wyde, with wapnis of wera.
Gawan and Gol., iil. 5.

Thus the high fader almyghty in cavis dirk,
Their [Thir] wyndis hid, for drede sic wrangis thai wirk.
Doug. Virgil, 15, 2.

Than Patience says, "Be na agast;
"Hald hoip and treuthe within the fast;
"And lat Fortoun wirk furthe hir rage.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 126.

2. To make, to form, to contrive.

Qahat sall I do? Alace that I was wrought!
Get Symon wit it war my undoing.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 78.

Moes-G. waurk-jan, facere; A.-S. wirc-an, wyre-an, id. used with respect to creation; Uton wircean man; Let us make man, Gen. i. 26. Alem. wuirch-on, Isl. wirk-ia, werk-a.

Perhaps these words appear in a more radical form in Isl. yrke, yrk-ia, arare, colere terram; from yr-ia, id. glebam radere. V. G. Andr., p. 137.

WIRK, WERK, s. Work.

—Gyff he will nocht, racunnyss all his land
On to the tyme that he this werk haiff wrought.
Wallace, iil. 277, MS.

WIRL, s. 1. A small rickety child, or any stunted animal, Perth.

2. A diminutive and harsh featured person, Upp. Clydes.; also Wirle, synon. Wurl. V. WARWOLF.

[To WIRL, v. n. To fret, to whine, Shetl.]

WIRLIN, adj. Querulous, peevish, Shetl.; perhaps having the humour of a Wirl, q. v.

[To WIRN, v. n. To become, Shetl.]

To WIRR, WIRL, v. n. 1. To gnar, to growl as a dog, S.; [to tirr wirr, to quarrel, Clydes.]

—They winna let alane,
Wirrin' like twa dogs fightin' for a bone.
Donald and Flora, p. 40.

V. YIRR.

2. To fret, to whine, Aberd.; [wirl, Shetl.]

WIRR, s. [1. The growl of a dog; an angry answer, S.

2. Haste, hurry, worry; implying anger also, Clydes., Banffs.]

3. A crabbed fellow, a diminutive peevish person; as, "a cankered wirr," Aberd. Mearns.

WIRABLAA, s. A violent and short exertion, Shetl. Blaa seems to signify a blast. Perhaps wirra may be traced to Isl. verra, hirrire.

WIRRIE-CARL, WIRRY-COW. s. 1. A bugbear, a scare-crow, S.

"Wirry-carl, bugbear; a person who is dreaded as a bugbear;" Gl. Sibb.

Blyth to win aff aise wi' hale banes,
Tho' mony had clow'd paws;
And dragg'd aise 'mang muck and stanes,
They look'd like wirrycows.

Ramsay's Works, i. 260.

2. Any frightful object, or awkward looking person, S.

"Fulebody! if I meant ye wrang, could na I clod ye owre that craig, and wad man ken how you can by your end mair than Frank Kennedy? Here is that, ye worricow!" Guy Mannering, iil. 128.

The French translator has not been very fortunate in his version of this passage. M'entends-tu bien, poltron? Tom iv. p. 31. This is much of a piece with his reddition of a passage in the preceding page. "Is the carl daft," she said, "wi' his glamour?" "Est-il donc fou, de crier ainsi!" dit Meg.

One can scarcely account for this blunder, but by supposing that the translator, or one of his friends, had looked into the Scottish Dictionary for the meaning of this term, and fixed on Glamor, the second word which appears under this form, and which is rendered noise, instead of that preceding it, denoting "the supposed influence of a charm," &c. [or mistook it for clamour.]

3. The devil, Gl. Shirr.

Hamilton evidently uses the term in this sense, in one of his Epistles to Ramsay.

Lang may thou live, and thrive, and dow,
Until thou claw an auld man's pow;
And thro' thy creed,
Be keeped frae the wirricow,
After thou's dead.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 346.

Frae Gudame's mouth auld world tales they bear,
O' warlock's louping round the Wirricow.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 57.

From wirry, to worry, (V. WERY) and Cow, q. v.

The worrycow gid sic a yell,
That rair'd frae dale to doon;
He got the spuilie to himsel',
As they fled hame to toon
Like drift, that day.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 122.

From Cow, a hobgoblin, q. v., and Worry, the goblin that would devour one.

4. A goblin of any description, South of S.

"Wha was to hae keepit awa the worricows, I trow! Aye, and the elves and gyre carlings frae the bonnie bairn, grace be wi' it?" Guy Mann., i. 37.

"To be sure they say there's a sort o' worricows and lang-nebbed things about the land; but what need I care for them?" Tales of my Landlord, i. 54.

[WIRRIK, adj. Crabbed, sour-tempered; used also as a s. Banffs.]

WIRRY HEN. [Prob. a cheat, a swindler.]

Ane dyvour coffe, that wirry hen,
Destroyis the honor of our natioun;
Takis gullis to friat fra frenit men,
And brekis his obligatioun.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 171, st 6.

Worry-hen, Evergreen, ii. 221.

Perhaps, one who swallows up the property of others, as a hen gobbles up what is thrown out; or, from A.-S. werig, wyrig, wicked, malicious, cursed.

WIRSCHIP, s. V. WORSCHIP.

[To WIRSLE, v. n. To struggle hard; to wirle-warsle, to struggle hard and long, Clydes., Banffs.]

[WIRSLE, s. A hard struggle; a wirle-warsle, a continuous hard struggle, ibid.

Wirle implies a harder struggle than warsle, q. v.]

[WIRZ, pron. Ours, Shetl. V. WIR.]

• To WIS, v. n. To know; pret. wist, S.

"Thir ar the names of thame that wist of the said box quhen it was in the myre; James Averie," &c. Inventories, A. 1588, p. 14.

Johns. gives Wis as an E. v. now obsolete, signifying "to think, to imagine." But all the examples, quoted by him, may be viewed as bearing the sense, either of knowledge, or of persuasion.

Germ. wiss-en, scire, noscere, intelligere.

To WIS, WISS, v. n. To wish, S.

"There was nae need o' her to wis to mak me daft." The Entail, ii. 190.

Thae firds o' gauze brought o'er the seas,
I wiss they a' war in a breeze.

Picken's Poems, i. 123.

WIS, WISS, s. A wish, S.

"I hae had a sort o' wis to see my grandchilder, which is very natural I should hae." Entail, ii. 234.

May ne'er my bairns sic beverage prie;
That's the best wiss it has frae me.

Picken's Poems, i. 131.

A.-S. wiss-an, Isl. oesk-a, to wish. Serenius, having mentioned these verbs, remarks, that he views oesk-a, as the most ancient, supposing it to be derived from Goth. As, Aes, Oes, Deus; and thus that oeska is equivalent to—Deos adpellare. Thus, he adds, in Isl. Oeske is Odin. The primary sense of the Isl. v. indeed seems to be vovere, and of oeske, votum.

WISCH, pret. v. Washed.

The Pape beginnis to grace, as greablie ganit,
Wisch with thir wirchypis, and went to counsals.
Houlate, iii. 17.

To WISCHEAF, v. a. To vouchsafe.

"It has bene our said souerane lordis maiesteis guid pleasour to grant ane generall restitution to his hienes hail nobilitie,—and to redress sic lossis as they haue suffurit be the iniurie of the tyme, and that our said souerane lord wald wischeaf, amangis the greit and common benefites impartit to thame, to appoint," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1585, Ed. 1814, p. 408.

WISCHELL-BUIK, s. "Ane wyschell buik;" Aberd. Reg. V. 19. Can this signify a book on the exchange of money, as noting the different rates? V. WISHILL, v.

WISE-HORN, s. The gizzard, Galloway.

—Upo' the aged oak,
The crow spreads out his feathers to the sun;
While, hid among its leaves, the gawk sits mute,
Wi' wise-horn dry, waiting the caller tide,
Wherein to please his mate by's auld cuckoo.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 62.

The same with Guehorn, q. v.

To WISEN, WISSEN, WIZZEN, WYSSIN, v. n.

1. To wither, to become dry and hard, S. pron. wizzen; A. Bor. id.

Fast by my chalmers on hie wisnit treis
The sary gled quibissilis with mony ane pew,
Quharby the day was dawing wele I knew.

Doug. Virgil, 202, 19.

2. To be parched, in consequence of thirst.

His wysagt throte, hauand of blude sic thirst,
Generis of lang fast sic ane appetite,
That he constrenit is in extreme syte.

Doug. Virgil, 276, 5. Siccae fauces, Virg.

The following extract has been communicated as a proof that this word seems to be used in different parts of England.

"However she may set her weazen face against it, she likes at the bottom of her heart a young fellow of spirit." C. Smith's Old Manor House, V. I.

A.-S. wiss-an, weosn-an, for-weosn-an, tabescere, languescere, marcescere; "to pine, fade, or wither away." The Lancastrians to this day have it, to wisen away, Somner. Isl. win-a, id. Oyhans koend wisnade; And his hand withered; Isl. Bibl. 1 Kings xiii. 4. Su.-G. wien-a, foerwien-a, primarily denote the withering of flowers. Win-a, which I have views as more ancient, is used in the same sense.

To WISEN, v. a. To wither, to cause to fade, or make dry.

Sam stentit bene in wisnand wyndis wake:
Of sam the cryme committit clengt be
Vnder the watter or depe hiddulous se.

Doug. Virgil, 191, 34.

V. v. a.

WISEN WYND, a ludicrous designation for the wind-pipe, the weasand being represented as an alley or narrow passage, South of S.

An' sometimes I detachments pour,
Down wisen wynd to travel,
Kicks health an' vigour to the door,
By dreadfu' stone or gravel.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 17.

To WISHILL, v. a. To exchange.

"Thou scarnes in the beginning, to schaw thy vn-willingnes to wishill wordis in our querrall, as that thou thoughtis ewill of the drying of tyme." Bannatyne's Journal, p. 202. V. WISSEL, v.

WISHT, interj. Hist, Hush, Aberd.

WISHY-WASHIES, s. pl. "Bustling in discourse; a cant term for being slow in coming to the point," S. B. Gl. Shirr.

Mirth does o'er plainly i' your face appear,
For me to trow that Simon isna near.
Nae wishy washies, lad, lat's hear beedeen;
Ye've news, I'm sear, will glad mair hearts than aye.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 31.

This seems precisely synon. with Whitie-whaties, q. v. It is nearly the Belg. term.

WISHIE-WASHIE, WISHY-WASHY, s. Any sort of thin blashy drink, as very weak tea, beer, negus, &c., Roxb., Gall.

"Wishie-washie, small drink; ale without foam, whisky without bells;" Gall. Enc.

This is one of those reduplicative terms, common in the Gothic languages, which are used to denote a defect in the object, or contempt of it. V. ihre, vo. Fickfack. The origin seems to be E. Wash, or Teut. wasch-en, ablucere. For, more generally, the reduplication is formed by a play on a single word, as in E. shall-I—shall-I.

WISHIE-WASHIE, adj. Delicate, of a soft habit; applied to the constitution, S.

E. washy, synon.; "weak, not solid."

To WISK, v. a. 1. To give a slight brushing stroke with any thing pliant, as twigs, hair, a piece of cloth, &c., S.

2. To hurry away, as if one quickly swept off any thing with a besom.

To WISK away, v. n. To move off nimbly, S. whisk, E.

Bot suddenly waay they wisk ilkane

Furth of our sicht, hie vp in the sky.

Doug. Virgil, 75, 50.

WISK, WYSK, s. 1. A slight brushing stroke with any thing pliant, S.

Bot quhen I walknyt, al that welth was wiskit away.

Doug. Virgil, 239, b. 15.

The E. v. whisk, is now used in the same way, S. Germ. wisch-en, to wipe; Su.-G. wiska, hviska, a besom.

2. A quick motion, S. whisk.

Bot the King, that him dred sum thing.

Waytyt the sper in the cummyng,

And with a wysk the hed off strak.

Barbour, v. 641, MS.

With ane wysk, may be viewed as used adv. in the sense of quickly.

Fresch Bewtie with ane wysk come [up] belyve,

And thame all reistit war thai never so kene.

King Hart, l. 25.

[WISKER, s. V. WHISKER.]

WISP, s. Prob. a wreath of any kind.

Et per empcionem de lie wispiss lie steill, &c. x. s. Compota Episc. Dunkel. 1514. Lie wispis Calebis. Ibid. 1513.

It would seem that in O. E. Wisp was used with greater latitude than now. For Fraunces expl. "Wyspe. Torques. Torquillum." In Ort. Vocab. Torques is rendered by chain.

To WISP the Shoon. To put a handful of straw into the shoes or brogues worn by the peasantry, in order to keep the feet comfortable, Roxb.

WISP, s. An ill-natured person, Shetl.; perhaps from Germ. wespe, a wasp.

WISS, s. Use, Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

[WISS, s. Wise, way, Barbour, ii. 549.]

WISS, s. The moisture that exudes from bark, in preparing it for tanning; Perth.

Isl. vaca, voe, humiditas. V. WESSE, s.

[WISS, WYSS, adj. Wise, Barbour, viii. 162.]

To WISS, v. n. To wish. V. WIS.

WISS, s. A wish, S. V. WIS.

To WISS, WISSE, v. a. To wiss one to any place or thing, to direct, to guide, to put in the way of obtaining it, S. Can ye wiss me to the way? Can you direct me to it?

Wisse, is used as signifying to guide, Sir Tristrem.

To Crist his bodi he yald,

That don was on the tre;—

—“Lord, mi liif, me bi hold,

In world thou wisse me,

At wille;

Astow art lord so fre,

Thou let me never spille.

P. 27, s. 26.

“Dame,” said the king, “wald thow me wiss

To that place quhar thair repair is,

I sall reward the but lesing.”

Barbour, iv. 478, MS.

In S. wiss is often used for E. wish. But there is no affinity to this v.

Wissa, is the imperf. and pret. of Moes.-G. wil-an, scire; A.-S. wis-an, wisa-ian, docere, instruere, monstrare, dirigere: Ladmenn thut the wegas wissaga; Conductores qui tibi vias monstrent; Gen. xxxiii. 13. Isl. vys-a, Dan. rys-er, Alm. uuz-an, Germ. wiss-en, (certificare), Su.-G. wis-a, id. ostendere. Wiss rozes, viam ostendere.

To WISSEL, WISTEL, v. a. and n. 1. To exchange.

“Cambio,—to wissel or change money.” Desput. Gram. E. 8, b.

2. To join in paying for drink, to club, Ang. Aberd.; synon. Birle.

I was as fain as any there

To weet my drouthy throat;

An' for a wee to banish care

By wissla o' my'groat,

Wi' glee that night.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 117.

3. To wager, to stake, to bet; Ang. an improper use of the v. Quhissel, to exchange.

WISSEL, s. Change. V. QUHISSEL.

WISSLER, WISLARE, s. One who exchanges money.

“That his hienes deput—ane vthir to be wisslar & changeour, and haue thiare feis, as was visit to be gevin to the maisteris of money, wardlanis, and changeours in alde tymes.” Acts Ja. III., 1487, ii. 182. V. QUHISSELAR.

To WISSE WORDS. 1. To talk, to hold discourse, Perth.

“He—aware a gryte aith, that he wad never wiss words wi' him till he changed his mind.” Campbell i. 332.

2. To bandy words of strife.

"Some wordis war scissellit at the first betuix the erle of Mar and lord Lyndsay, quhilke could not be quenched a long tyme, quhill the lord Vchiltres desyred the lord Lyndsay to have patience," &c. Belhaven MS. Men. Ja. 6. fol. 74. c.

To WISTER, WYSTER, v. n. To be engaged in a broil or scuffle, accompanied with high words, Perth.

WISTER, WYSTER, s. A scuffle of this description, ibid.

Isl. voes-a, inquietare, vas-a, cum impetu ferri, vas, tumultuarius impetus et guestas, voesud-r, turbulentus impetuosis homo.

To WISY, v. a. To examine, &c. V. VEST.

To WIT, WITT, v. a. To know, part. pa. wit.

At the set trist he entrit in the toun,
Wittand no thing of all this fals tressoun.

Wallace, iv. 732, MS.

The remanent hereof, quhat ener be it,
The weird sisteris defendis that suld be wit.

Doug. Virgil, 80, 43.

Moca.-G. A.-S. wit-an, scire, noscere.

WIT, WITT, s. Intelligence, information, tidings. To get wit of a thing, to obtain information with respect to it; to let wit, to make known, to communicate intelligence; [out of wit], deprived of reason, S.

Thai left him swa, and furththar gait can gang,
With hewy cheyr and sorowfull in thoct;
Mar witt of him as than get counth thai nocht.

Wallace, i. 252, MS.

So Landy thair mycht mak no langar remayn,
Besouth Tynto lugis thai maid in playn.
Schyr Jhon the Graym gat wit that he was thar.

Ibid. ix. 615, MS.

A.-S. wit, ge-wit, scientia, notitia. This is perhaps the primary sense.

[* WITCH, s. The name given to the nocturnal Lepidoptera, Banffs.

WITCH-BEADS, s. pl. The name given to Entrochi, S.

"The Entrochi comprehend a class of fossils.—They have obtained various names, as Screw-stones, Fairy-beads, of the vulgar in England; Witch-beads, of the vulgar in Scotland." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 318, 319.

WITCH-BELLS, s. pl. Round-leaved Bell-flower, S. Campanula rotundifolia, Linn.

There is considerable analogy between this and its Sw. name in Dale-karla. This is Maerbiael, i.e., the Mare's bell; the night-mare being viewed as an incubus or evil genius. They are also called Thimbles, S. B., i.e., thimbles, which corresponds to their name in Gothland, Fingerhatt, q. a covering for the finger.

WITCH-CAKE. A cake, according to the tale of tradition, prepared for the purposes of incantation, S.

"The baking of the witch cake, with his pernicious virtues, is a curious process, recorded in a traditional song, which we here give entire." Cromek's Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 282.

WITCH-GOWAN, s. Said to be the Dandelion, or Leontodon taraxacum, Linn. Dumfr.

The description given of the Witch-gowan corresponds with that of the Dandelion, of which Lightfoot says; "The plant has a bitter milky juice." Flor. Scot., p. 432. V. under GOWAN.

WITCH-SCORE, s. The mark given with a sharp instrument, to a supposed witch above her breath, S.

"Witch-score. Anciently, witches were scored or cut above the eyes, to prevent their cantripts taking effect." Gall. Enc. V. SCORE, v.

WITCHES BUTTERFLY. A very large thick-bodied butterfly of the moth tribe, and of a drab or light brown colour, S.

WITCHES KNOTS. A sort of matted bunches, resembling the nests of birds, frequently seen on stunted thorns or birches; a disease supposed to be produced by a stoppage of the juices, Roxb.

I need scarcely add, that during the reign of ignorance and superstition, every thing that could not be immediately and obviously traced to secondary causes, was without hesitation ascribed to supernatural agency.

WHITCHES THIMBLES. A name for the flowers of Fox-glove, Teviotdale.

"The mother went to the crags, and pulled some witches thimbles, or foxglove, (Digitalis purpurea), a plant which still grows very plentifully upon them." Edin. Mag., April 1820, p. 344.

WITCHING DOCKEN. A name given by old women to tobacco, Ayrs.

WITCHUCK, s. The Sand-Martin, a bird, Orkn.

"Sand-Martin, or Shore-Bird.—Ork. Witchuck," Low's Fann. Orkad., p. 74.

To WITE, WYTE, v. a. To blame, to accuse; the prep. with being often added, as, Ye need na wite me with that, S. For is also used.

S. Prov. "Wite your self, if your wife be with bairn;" spoken when people's misfortunes come by their own blame;" Kelly, p. 357.

It is used in an improper construction, in another emphatic Prov. "As a thing wites, where nae thing weil fares;" i.e., Every thing is blamed, where nothing prospers." V. Kelly, p. 26.

A.-S. wit-an, Moca.-G. wit-eit-jan, imputare, ascribere, exprobrare. Su.-G. wit-a. Wit thek uk sielfcum, at tu owislika biles; Id tibimet imputa, quod imprudenter petas; Kon. Styr. ap. Ihre. Belg. Zij zich zelven to wyten hebben; the same idiom as the S. "They have themselves to wite." This word is used both by Chaucer and Gower. A. Bor. id.

"Wyt-yn or rettyn. Imputo." Prompt. Parv.

WITE, WYTE, s. Blame, S.

Beside Latyne our langage is imperfite,
Quhilke in some part is the cause and the wyte,
Quhy that Virgilis vers the ornyte bewté
Intill our tounge may not obscurit be.

Doug. Virgil, 2, 40.

A.-S. Su.-G. wile is used, in a secondary sense, for the consequence of blame, that is, punishment. In A.-S. it denotes both civil and corporal punishment. Hence Flit-wyle, the fine paid for a broil, S. fliting. Blogwyte, &c. Isl. vijte, noxa; vyt-a, vitii notare aliquem, vyt-ur, vitii notatus; G. Andr., p. 256. This writer seems to view it as allied to the Lat. term.

WITER, s. One who blames another, Clydes.

WITEWORDIE, adj. Blameworthy, Clydes.

WITELESS, WYTELESS, adj. Blameless.

"If all be well, I's be wyteless." S. Prov.—"spoken with a suspicion that all will not be well; and if so, I have no hand in it;" Kelly, p. 202. "They wyle you, and you no wyteless;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 72.

WITH, Wī, prep. 1. As signifying against. To be wī a person, to be avenged on one; as, "I'll be wī him for that yet," Roxb.

A.-S. with, Su.-G. wid, contra, adversum.

2. In the sense of, according to; as, "Wī his tale." V. TALE, s.

3. As expressive of sufferance or any degree of approbation; an elliptical idiom. With the negative prefixed, it expresses disapprobation, or rather dislike, S.

Italian trills he cud na wī them;
Wī dear strathapeys he aft wad glee them.

Tarras's Poems, p. 12.

4. To gae with, v. n. To miscarry, to fail, to go contrary to inclination or expectation, S. It is used both with respect to persons and things: He's gane with aw the gither; He has completely gone wrong; either as respecting one's circumstances, or moral conduct.

With is here used as in A.-S. and as Su.-G. wid, signifying against. A.-S. with-ga-en, wīh-ya-en, to oppose.

WITH THIS, Wī THIS, adv. Upon this, hereupon, S. V. Wī.

WITH THAT, adv. 1. Upon that, thereupon; denoting one thing as the consequence of another.

Tresoun thair cryt, traytouris was thaim amang.
Kerlye with that fled out sone at a side.

His falow Stewyn than thocht no tyme to bide.
Wallace, v. 153, MS.

[2. By that time, just then, Barbour, xv. 168, Camb. MS.]

Isl. vid that is synon. Fluga fuglar upp hia theim, vid that faeldust hestur theirra, oc fellu menn af baki, sumer bruto hendur sinar, enn sumer fuctur, eda skeindust a vopnum sinom, fra sumum liopo rossin, oc foro their vid that heim aptur: Literally, "Fowls flew above them; with that," or, "in consequence of that, their horses took fright, and men fell from their backs. Some broke their arms, and others their legs. Some were wounded by their own weapons: from some their horses fled; and with that they returned home."—Kristnisag., p. 24.

In the Gl. this phrase is rendered, ideo, his factis.

WITH THī, conj. 1. Wherefore; Barbour. It seems to have been used so late as the reign of Ja. VI.

Bot thy greit grace has mee restord,
Throw grace, to libertie;
To thy mercy with thee will I go.

Poems Sixteenth Century, p. 111.

With thee is undoubtedly an error for with thi.

2. Provided, on condition.

And gyff that ye will trow to me,
Ye sall ger mak tharoff king,
And I sall be in your helping:
With thi ye gif me all the land,
That ye haif now in till your hand.

Barbour, i. 493, MS.

Withy seems synon.

I shall dight the a Duke, and dubbe the with honde;
Withy thou saghtil with the Knight,
That is so hardi and wight,
And relese him his right,
And graunte him his londe.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 26.

A.-S. with, propterea, and thy, quod.

To WITHER, v. n. To fret, to whine, to whimper, Aberd.; A.-S. hwother-an, murmurare, "to murmur, to mutter," Sommer; wither-ian, certare, resistere.

[WITHER-GAW, s. V. WEDDER-GAW.]

WITHERGLOOM, s. The clear sky near the horizon, Ettr. For. [Wither-glavin, course or direction of the wind, Banffs.]

"Clap close, and keep an ee on the withergloom."
Perils of Man, iii. 253. V. WEDDIE-GLIM.

[WITHERIPS, s. Woodruf, Asperula odorata, Banffs.]

WITHERLOCK, s. That lock of hair in the mane, of which one takes hold when mounting on horseback, Roxb.

It seems to signify "the lock which lies the contrary way," from Teut. weder, A.-S. wīther, contra [Rather, the lock on the withers.]

WITHERON, WITHEROU, s. A rogue. "A guild witherou," expl. a great rogue, Orkn.

[WITHERS, s. pl. Contraries; withers o' wind, gusts of wind, Shetl.]

WITHERSHINS, adv. In the contrary direction; properly, contrary to the course of the sun. V. WIDDERSINNIS.

"As it was supposed that witches always acted in contrariety to the laws of nature, we hear of their going thrice withershins round a thing to render it subject to their power." Edin. Mag., June 1820, p. 533.

WITHERSPAIL, s. Goosegrass or clivers, Galium Aparine; pron. Whitherspail, Roxb.

This weed is called in Swed. wid-haenga, q. what adheres to.

WITHERWECHT, s. The weight thrown into one scale, to counterbalance the paper, or vessel, in the opposite scale, which contains the goods bought: the witheroecht being adjusted before these goods are put into the other scale, S. B.

A.-S. withēr, against, and wiht, weight, q. opposite weight.

Moss.-G. withra, also signifies contra, adversum. Saci nist withra izwis faur izwis ist; Ho who is not against us, is for us; Mark 9. 40. As A.-S. with has the same meaning, it is probable that this prep. primarily bore this form in ancient Gothic, although we have no evidence of this in Ulphilas. The observation of Verelius on the Isl. prep. deserves our attention. It appears both as vid and vidur. Vid notat contra, adversus. Vidur idem plane est. et in compositis variatur ob euphoniā; Ind. in vo. Su.-G. wid, anciently wider, ad, apud; contra; Ihre.

WITH-GANG, s. Toleration, permission to pass with impunity; Skene.

From gang, to go, and the prep. with. In the same sense, we say, S. that one should not be allowed to gang with a thing, when it is meant that one's conduct in any instance ought not to be tolerated, S.

WITH-GATE, WITH-GAIT, s. Liberty, toleration.

—"Procuring thereby not onlie private grudges, but publicke exclamations, against the with-gate and libertie granted unto such shameful scafferie and extortion."—Acts Ja. VI., 1621, c. 19.

—"Thair hes bene diuersis actis of parliament and conventionis maid heirtofoir aganis the withgait and libertie quhilk sindry avaricious and godles persones hes tane to exact and lift sik exorbitant & intolerable profite & vsurie for the leane of thair money," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1598, Ed. 1814, p. 187.

—"The dew punisichement inflictit to tratouris and rebellis—is ane terroure to the ewill disposit to give withgait to thair inclinatioun." Ibid. 1606, p. 284.

This, although synon. with With-gang is formed from the s. gate, A.-S. gat, via, instead of the v.

To GET THE WITH-GATE. To gain the advantage, to get the better of, to overcome by some false pretence, to overreach, Ayrs.

The term, as thus used, cannot be formed by means of with in the sense of Lat. cum. Perhaps it should rather be traced to A.-S. with-gan, contraire, oppugnare.

To WITHHALD, v. a. 1. To withhold, S. / quiescent.

2. To hold, to possess.

The Kyngis palice and all that rial hald
All hir allane ane douchter did withhald.
Doug. Virgil, 206, 22.

The goldin palyce now, with sternes brycht,
Of heuyn, in sete ryall, wythhaldis that wicht.
Ibid. 212, 38.

This v. resembles A.-S. with-hæbban, which not only signifies resistere, but continere, retinere.

WITHLETTING, s. [Errat. for Withsetting, setting ambush. V. WITHSET.]

"The following is the title of one of the sections of Barbour's Bruce, edit. 1620. "The withletting of the Passe of Endnellane," p. 272.

WITHOUTYN, prep. Without.

Thai gart aerwandys, with outyn langer pleid,
With schort awiss on to the wall him bar:
Thai kest him our out of that bailfull steid.
Wallace, ll. 252, MS.

This in MS. is generally written as two words.

The acute Mr. Tooke rejects all former derivations of without, affirming that "it is nothing but the imperative wyrthutan from the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic verb weorþan, wairþan,—esse." Divers. Purley, i. 217. Thus he views it as literally signifying, Be out; as analogous to But. This, however, seems to be too great a sacrifice to hypothesis. Even, on his own ground, it would have been more natural to have deduced this term from A.-S. witan, discedere, to depart, to go away, to go forth. For ut witan, is expressly rendered, Foras discedere, exire; Boet., p. 186, Lye.

It appears, however, that it is composed of A.-S. with, versus, denoting motion towards a place, and witan, extra; as with westan, versus occidentem, Oros. i. 1. V. OUTWIT.

To WITHSAY, v. a. To gainsay, to oppose, to speak against.

Barbour gives the following account of the conduct of the English, under Edw. I.

And gyff that ony man thaim by
Had ony thing that wes worthy,
As hors, or hund, or othir thing,
That war plesand to thair liking;
With rycht or wrong it have wald thai
And gyf ony wald thaim withsay,
Thai suld swa do, that thai suld tyne
Othir land, or lyff, or leiff in pyne.
The Bruce, l. 210, MS.

The passage is quoted, Wyntown, viii. 18. 44.

A.-S. with-sægg-an, "inficiari, to deny, to gainsay;" Somner. Chaucer, id.

To WITHSET, v. a. To beset, to block up, to stand in the way of.

O.E. "Withset-yn. Obsisto. Obsto.—Withsettyngc. Obastentia." Prompt. Parv.

And ane othyr, bat Makartane,
With set a pase in till his way.

Barbour, xiv. 107, MS.

A.-S. with-sett-an, to resist.

To WITHTAK, v. a. To lay hold of, to seize.

"And last of all, some violentlie intromettit, with-taken, and yet uphaldis the yronis of our Cunyeuous, quhilk is ane of the chief pointis that concernis our croun." Proclamation, Francis & Mary, Knox's Hist., p. 147.

A.-S. with-tæc-an, ad capere.

[WITTAIL, s. Victuals, Barbour, iv. 170.

Wittle, Vittle, as a term for provender, is applied to the crop and to the grain; thus, "Our vittle's a' cut," i.e., our grain crop, &c.; and "Vittle's fell dear noo," i.e., grain is high-priced.]

WITTANDLIE, WITTANLIE, adv. Knowingly, E. wittingly.

"Siclik of thame that makis fals instrumentis, or causis mak ony fals instrumentis, or visis the samin wittandlie, that all sic personis in tymes cuming be pvnist in thar personis and gudis," &c. Acts Ja. V. 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 360.

—"Mony persounis wittanlie knawand thame selfis vnder the proces of cursing, and beand chargit to remoue fra deuine service, wilfullie enteris thame selfis thairto, and will not remoue, quhairthrow thay stop the remanent Christin pepill fra deuine service," &c. Acts Mary, 1551, Ed. 1814, p. 435.

A.-S. witendlic, scienter.

To WITTER, WYTYR, v. a. To inform, to make known; [also, to ward, advise.] Witteryt, wytryd, informed.

For he said thaim that the King was Logyt in to sa -trayt a place,
That horsemen mycht nocht him assaile.
And gif fute men gaiff him bataile,
He suld be hard to wyn, gif he Off thair cummyng may witteryt be.

Barbour, vii. 533, MS.

Edit. Pink. wittyt.

For thai thowcht wytht swylyk a wyle
This Makbeth for til begyle;
Swa for to cum in prewate
On hym, or he suld wytryd be.

Wyntown, vi. 18. 378.

Su.-G. witr-a, id. Notum facere, indicare, Ihere. Isl. vitr-ast, innoscere, apparere et praemonere. In Isl. it seems especially to respect the manifestation of a person. Hence witran, an apparition; Witrur, a term synon. with Alfar, Elfur, our Elves or Fairies, because these little demons (daemonioli) sometimes made their appearance. Verel. Ind., p. 295.

WITTER, WITTIR, s. 1. A mark, a sign, i.e., an indication.

In this place stikkit hich the prince Enee
Ane mark or wittir of ane grene aik tre,
In terme and taikin vnto the marineris,
Quharfor to turn agane as thaym offeris.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 48.

Now is he past the wittir, and rollis by
The rooche, and haldis souirly throw the se.

Ibid. 133. 14.

Meta, Virg.

2. In curling, the mark towards which the stones are shoved, Galloway; synon. Tee.

Next Robin o' Mains, a leader good,
Close to the wittir drew;
Ratcliff went by, an' cause he miss'd,
Pronounc'd the ice untrue.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 166.

3. A pennon, a standard.

"He snatched away his spear with his guidon or wittir." Hume's Hist. Doug., p. 98. V. GUIDON.

4. A tree reserved in a general cutting, or in what is called a Hag, Clydes.

"It has long been the custom to leave 20 or 25 select trees, called reserves or witters, in an acre, at each cutting." Agr. Surv. Clydes., p. 138.

Prob. the name was originally given to a particular tree reserved as a memorial or mark of the height of the wood, or of the place where the felling commenced, for as bearing the mark of reservation.]

WITTERING, WITTRYNG, WYTRYNG, s. 1. Information, knowledge.

For Schyr Eduard in to the land
Wes with his mengnè, rycht ner hand,
And in the mornyn rycht arly
Herd the countre men mak cry;
And had wittryng off thair cummyng.

Barbour, ix. 564, MS.

Erth the first molder maid ane takin of wo
And eik of wedlok the promuba Juno,
And of thare cupling wittering schews the are,
The flam of fyreflaucht lichting here and thare.

Doug. Virgil, 105, 40.

2. It sometimes denotes information with respect to future events, or of a prophetic kind.

VOL. IV.

A priue speik till him scho made;
And said, "Takis gud hep till my saw,
"For or ye pass I sall yow schaw
"Off your fortoun a gret party.
"Bot our all speceally
"A wytryng her I sall yow ma.
"Quhat end that your purpos sall ta.
"For in this land is nane trewly
"Wate thingis to cum sa weil as I."

Barbour, iv. 642, MS.

A. Boc. wittering, a hint. Isl. vitr-a is given by Verel. as synon. with Sw. forebola, to prognosticate; and, as we have seen, is frequently used to denote pre-natural appearance. It seems derived from Moes.-G. wit-an, scire; and is thus allied to the various terms respecting prophecy or divination, mentioned under the article WYSS WIFE.

WITTERLY, WITTRELY, adv. According to good information, certainly.

For I can noucht reherss thaim all.
And thought I couth, weil trow ye sall,
That I mycht nocht suffice thar to,
Thar suld sa mekill be aido.
Bot thai, that I wate wyttrily,
Estre my wyt reherss sall I.

Barbour, x. 350, MS.

It occurs in O.E. in the sense of wisely, knowingly.

Whan ye witten wittirly, where the wrong lyeth,
There that mischiefe is grett, Mede may helpe.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 14, b.

WITTER-STONE, s. Apparently, a stone originally placed as a wittir or mark.

"—Find, that the mill-dam and mill-land of Pitlessie have been past memory as it now is, and that it is not the occasion of the regorging of the water upon the mill of Ramorney; and that the stone called the witterstone is not a stone for the regulating thereof." Fountainhall, i. 66.

WITTER, s. The barb of an arrow or fish-hook, S.

Thus it is applied to the barbs of a trident or spear for striking fish.

"'Aukward!' returned a shepherd looking up, (the same stout fellow who had speared the salmon) 'he deserved his paiks for't—to put out the light when the fish was on ane's witters!'" Guy Mannering, ii. 69.

Allied perhaps to Teut. wette, waste, acies cultri.

WITTERT, part. adj. Barbed, S.A.

To WITTER, v. n. 1. "To fight, to fall foul of one another;" Gl. Sibb.; perhaps to take one by the throat. V. WITTERS.

Belg. veter, a point; Teut. wette, acies cultri.

2. To struggle in whatever way; often, to struggle for a sustenance. A person, adopting projects beyond his means, and struggling with poverty, in attempting to gain the end in view, is denominated "a witterin body," Mearns.

Teut. weder-en, resistere, adversari; or perhaps allied to Isl. weidr-a, citò commovere.

[WITTEROUS, adj. Crabbed, quarrelsome, Banffs.]

WITTERS, s. pl. Throats.

"The queans was in sic a firryfarry, that they began to misca' ane another like kail-wives, an' you wou'd has thought that they wou'd hae flown in ither's wilters in a hand-clap." Journal from London, p. 8.

G 5

Ye'll get a laird o' lan', I'll wad
In spite o' a' their wilters,
An' craigs you night.

Tarras's Poems, p. 72.

This is expl. "the teeth;" Gl. Ibid. But, no doubt, the other is the proper meaning.
Corr. from Lat. guttur.

WITTING, WITTINS, s. Knowledge.
Without my wittins, without my knowledge, S.

"Ordanis him first to require—redress—at the cheiff of the clan, or chiftane of the cuntrie quhairin the saidis guidis salbe resett or remane for the space of twelf houris of his witting." Acts Ja. VI., 1585, Ed. 1814, p. 464.

This seems the E. part. in pl. used as a s., unless from the A.-S. part. willende, knowing.

WITTIS, s. pl. The senses, the organs of sense.

Myself is sound, but seiknes or but soir;
My wittis fyve in dew proportionn.

Henrysons, Bannatyne Poems, p. 132.

It is used in the same sense by Chaucer.

"This is to sayn the dedly sinnes that ben entred into thyn herte by thy five wittis." Tale of Melibeus, p. 284, edit. Tyrwhitt.

[WIZ, pret. Was, Shetl., Clydes.]

To WIZE, v. a. To entice away, Lanarks.

An' the fairies sent him to Craignethan's ha',
To wize his daughter him frae.

Mary o' Craignethan, Edin. Mag., June 1819, p. 528.

V. WEIZE.

WIZEN, s. The throat, S.

This word is used in a curious proverbial query, addressed to a hungry person. "Does your wame trow your wizen cuttit?" q. Are you so impatient for food, that your belly is disposed to believe that some fatal accident has befallen its purveyor the gullet? Roxb.

"It tasted sweet i' your mou, but fan anes it was down your wizen, it had an ugly knaggim." Journal from London, p. 3.

This is an improper use of E. weasand, the windpipe.

To WIZZEN, v. n. To become dry. V. WISSEN.

WIZZARDS, s. pl. Quick-grass, or other weeds, dried, withered, or wizzened, on fallow fields, Moray.

Supposed to be from the v. to Wissen, Wizen, Su.-G. wizen-a, perhaps with the addition of oert, herba.

WLISPIT, pret. Lisperd, Barbour. V. ULISPIT.

WLONK, adj. 1. Gaudily dressed; used in the superl. wlonkest.

Thus to wode arn thei went, the wlonkest in wodes,
Both the Kyng, and the Quene:
And all the douchti by dene;
Sir Gawayn, gayest on grene,
Dame Gaynour be ledes.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., l. 1.

2. Rich.

There he wedded his wife, wlonkest, I wene,
With giites, and garsons, Schir Galeron the gay.

Ibid. ii. 28.

It is also used as a s. like bricht, schene, &c., denoting a woman of rank, or splendidly dressed.

The wedo to the tother wlonk warpit thir werdis.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 50.

Here corrected from edit. 1508.

A.-S. wlonce, wlance, gay, splendid, rich; used substantively, to denote an elegant woman. Wlane wundenloce wagon; Splendidam tortam capillis (foemina) portabant; Lye. Wlonce monige, magnates plurimi, is a phrase also used.

It is not improbable, that this word gives us the origin of the vulgar term, Flunkie, universally used in S. for a servant in livery; q. one who wears a gaudy dress, as referring to his parti-coloured attire.

[To WMBESET, v. a. To beset, Barbour, ix. 706.]

[WNSEMBLY, adj. Unseemly. Barbour, v. 407.]

WO, interj. Addressed to draught-horses, when the driver wishes them to halt or stop altogether.

"Formerly, in speaking to their horses, carters employed hap and wind, in ordering them to either side; now mostly high-wo and jee; and in calling to stop, the incommunicable sound of proo, now wo, or woy." Agr. Surv. Berw., p. 503.

In Clydes. Wo is used in calling to a horse at a distance, or in giving the usual commands while at labour. Can Wo be changed from Ho, to stop?

WOAGE, s. A military expedition. V. WIAGE.

WOB, s. A web, S. wab.

Riche lenye wobbie naitly weiffit ache.

Doug. Virgil, 204, 46.

Thair is ane, callet Clement's Hob,

Fra ilk pair wyfe reiffis the wob.
Maitland Poems, p. 333.

Wob is still used, both in the North and South of S.

I thought ere I deod to have ance made a wob,

But still I had weers of the spinning o't.

Ross's Rock and Wee Pickle Tow.

WOBSTER, WOBSTAR, s. A weaver.

"Wobsters suld be challanged, that they make over many lang thrummes, to the hurt of the people." Chalmerlan Air, c. 25, §. 1.

Find me ane woblar that is leill,
Or ane wakar that will no steill.
(Thair craftines I ken ;)
Or ane millar that has na falt,
That will steill powder meill nor malt,
Hald thame for haly men.

Lyndsay's S. P. R., li. 191.

V. WEBSTER.

WOBAT, adj. Feeble, decayed; s. hairy worm.

I have ane wallidrag, ane worm, ane auld wobart carle.
Dunbar; Maitland Poems, p. 48.

It may be the same word which is frequently used, Ang., although generally pron. wobart, signifying feeble, decayed; as, a wobart, or wodat, bairn, a child that appears weakly or decayed. Wobart-like, having a withered or faded look.

It seems, however, to be properly a s. and the same with woubit, a hairy worm. V. VOWBET.

WOCE, s. Voice.

Than all answer with a cry,
And with a woce said generally
That nane for dout off deil sulde faile,
Quhill discumfyt war the gret bataille.

Barbour, li. 407, MS.

Quhy grantis thou not we nicht lone hand in hand!
And for to here and rander wocis trew?

Doug. Virgil, 25, 39.

To WOCHE, v. a. [To vouch.] Apparently to assert a claim to property, in the way of inviting those who oppose this claim to exhibit their objections.

—"Because the said Thomas clamit the said landis to pertene to Alane Kynnard of that ilke his faider in properte, and the said maister William to pertene to him as tennant and wassale to the said Alane; And that he walde woche thaim with the perell: The lordis therefore ordanis the said maister William to woche samekle of the said landis as he plessis in the said Alanis court at the law dais eftir Pasche." Act. Dom. Con., A. 1488, p. 108.

"The said Johne allegiit that all the saidis landis wer his fee & heretage, & wochit the samyn with the perell of law in presens of the lordis." Act. Dom. Con., A. 1491, p. 216.

O. Fr. voc-er, and vouch-er, signify legally to cite or call; from L. voc-are, Vouche, in the E. law, "signifies to call one to warrant lands, &c." Jacob.

[To WOCHLE, v. n. To walk with difficulty; to struggle. Wochle, a struggle; wochlin, struggling, Clydes. Banffs. V. WACHLE.]

WOD, WODE, WOUD, s. A wood; [woddy, woody.]

—In the first frost eftir heruist tyde,
Lewis of treis in the wod dois slyde.

Doug. Virgil, 174, 11.

Towart Meffen then gan thair far;
And in the woud thaim logyt thair.

Barbour, li. 304, MS.

A.-S. wudu, Belg. woud, id. The S. pron. is wud.

WOD, WODE, VOD, WUD, adj. 1. Mad, S. wud. One is said to be wud, who is outrageous, in a state of insanity.

Fra Butlar had apon gud Wallace seyn,
Throuh auld malice he wox ner wod for teyn.

Wallace, xi. 402, MS.

A wod dog, one that has hydrophobia, S.

"Quhen it [the sterne callit canis] ringis in our hemisphere, than dogis ar in danger to ryn rod, rather nor in ony vthir tyme of the year." Compl. S., p. 89. It also occurs in this sense, O. E.

—Bitten by a wood-dog's venom'd tooth.

Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess, Act ii.

This seems to be the primary sense, Moea-G. wodi is the term used in describing the demoniac, Mark v. 18, who was exceeding fierce. A.-S. wod, amens, insanus. Isl. od-ur, id. Belg. wodt. This sense is retained in O. E. woode.

"Tweye men metten him that hadilen develis and camen out of graves ful woode so that no man myghte go bi that wey." Wiclif, Mat. viii.

—"He wolde beare me in hande that the cove is woode;" Palsgr. B. iii. F. 141, b. "He barketh as a woode dogge doth;" Ibid. F. 163, a.

One form of the word in O. E. nearly approaches to that of Isl. od-ur, or ood-r. "Wolhe or Wool. Amens. Demens." Prompt. Parv. It also appears in the form commonly used in our writings. "Wode or madde. Amens. Demens. Insanus. Ferus. Firibundus. Furius." Ibid.

2. Furious with rage; denoting the act, S. It is sometimes conjoined with wraith or wroith, angry, q. angry to madness.

Maist cruell Juno has or this alsua
Sseit with the first the port clepit Scea,
And from the schippis the oistis on sche callis,
Standand wodwraith enarmed on the wallis.

Doug. Virgil, 59, 2.

Wod wroith he worthis for disdene and dispute.

Ibid. 423, 16.

An emphatical proverb is used in this sense in Fife; "Ye haud a stick in the wod man's e'e;" literally, "You hold a stick in the eye of a furious man;" i.e. You continue to provoke one already enraged.

3. Having a fierce or fiery temper; expressive of the habit. A wud body, a person of a very violent temper, S.

4. Ravenous; in relation to appetite.

Bot the vile bellyis of thay cursit schrewis
Haboundis of sen maist abhominabill,
And pail all tyme thare mouthis miserabill
For wod hunger and gredy appetyte.

Doug. Virgil, 75, 1.

5. Wild, as opposed to an animal that is domesticated. Hence wod catt, a wild cat. The term is used metaph. by Blind Harry.

Yon wod-cattis sall do ws litill der;
We saw thaim faill twys in a grettar wer.

Wallace, x. 809, MS.

V. WEDE, v.

ANCE WOD AND AY WAUR. Increasing in insanity or anger; waxing more and more furious.

Kelly gives this S. Prov. but does not seem to express its meaning properly. "Once wud and ay the warr." "They who have once been mad will seldom have their senses sound and well again." P. 271.

—"Lord Evandale wadna look at, hear, or speak wi' him, and now he's ance wud and aye waur, and roars for revenge againe Lord Evandale, and will bear nought of ony thing but burn and slay." Tales of my Landlord, iv. 285.

IN THE WUD O'T. An expression applied to a person, when eager to obtain or do any thing, or when greatly in need of it, S. B.

It seems merely an oblique use of A.-S. wod, Isl. od-ur, mente captus, q. having the mind so engaged, as to be able to attend to nothing else.

LIKE WUD. [Like one who is mad or infuriated.]

Lads oter lasses without fear,
Or dance like wud.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 46.

A.-S. wod, furiosus. Isl. od-ur is used both as signifying insanus, and ira percitus.

This is most probably the origin of the name Odin or Woden, the great God of the Northern nations, whence our Wednesday; from od-ur, or wod, furiosus. Some have viewed this deity as the same with the Mercury of the Romans. But as, like Mercury, he presided over eloquence, in other respects his attributes correspond exactly with those of Mars. For he is still represented as the God of battle, as dispensing the fate of it, and as feasting on the slain. V. Verstegan, p. 8. His name indeed seems to express the rage of battle; and his character is analogous to that of Mars, as described by the Poet.

Amyd the feild stude Mars that felloun syre;
In place of mellé wod bryn as ony fyre;
The sorrowful Furies from the firmament
By the goddis to tak vengeance wer sent.

Doug. Virgil, 269, 9.

WODMAN, s. A madman.

—"There is a breif of our souerane lordis chapell, maid & orlanit for the saufft of the alienacioun of —landis throw idiotis, and natural fulis, furious, and wodmen, in tyme of thare foly," &c. Acts Ja. III. 1475, Ed. 1814, p. 112.

WODNES, s. Fury, madness, S.

How mony Romanis slayne wes,
And wys men rageand in wodnes.

Wyntown, iv. 23. Rubr.

Vnsilly wicht, how did thy mind inuaid
Sa grete wodnes? Doug. Virgil, 143, 23.
Infelix, quae tanta animum dementia cepit!

Virg., v. 465.

"And whanne hys kynnes men hadden herd thei wenten out to hold him, for thei seiden that he is turned into wodness." Wiclif, Mark iii.

Uuotnissa, dementia; Isidor., iii. 4, ap. Schilter.

"Woodnes. Furia. Insania. Furor." Prompt. Parv.

WODSPUR, s. A forward, unsettled, and fiery person, S. used like the E. designation Hotspur, pron. wud-spur.

It has sometimes been adopted as a sort of soubriquet.

There was a wild gallant among us a',
His name was Watty wi' the wudspurs!—
It's I, Watty Wudspurs, loose the kye!
I winna layne my name frae thee!

Minstrelsy Border, i. 106.

"Wudspurs—Hotspur or Madspur;" N. Ibid.

WODDER, WODDIR, s. Weather. "Wynd & wodder;" Aberd. Reg.

This orthography is a deviation from that of all the northern dialects.

WODE, adj. Wode frie, void and free, i.e., without any armed men.

"Thir four—contracted, that the Congregation should leive the town of St. Johnstoun, wode frie, readie to ressaive the queene thairin," &c. Pittscottie's Cron., p. 534. "Void to the queen;" Ed. 1723, p. 204.

WODENSDAY, s. Wednesday, Roxb.

WODERSHINS, adv. The contrary way. V. WIDDERSINNIS.

WODEWALL, WOOD WEELE, s. "Expl. a bird of the thrush kind; rather perhaps a wood-lark;" Gl. Sibb. Prob. the green Woodpecker.

I herde the jay and the throstell,
The mavis menynd in hir song,
The wodewale farde as a bell
That the wode aboute me rung.

True Thomas, Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 11.

"Farde is beryl, made a noise," in another MS., which is certainly preferable. In the Gl. wodewale is expl. "redbreast."

This term occurs in O. E. "Wodale byrde. Supra in Reynfowle." Prompt. Parv. Reynfowle is expl. "Gaulus. Picus maior. Merops." Ibid. Merops is defined; "Avis quedam viridis coloris, que etiam apiaster dicitur, quia apes comedit: et etiam gallus dicitur metrops [r. merops] a wode whale." Ort. Vocab. Elyot gives a similar description of the Merops; Biblioth.

This must be the green Woodpecker, Picus Viridis, Linn. This bird, according to Willoughby, is "called also the Rain Fowl." V. Penn. Zool., p. 176. This is evidently the same with Reynfowle, which Fraunces has given as the synonyme. Its Sw. name is Wedknarr; Linn. Faun. Suec., No. 99. The first syllable signifies wood. The latter may be from knarr-en, to creak.

By the ancient Romans this bird was called the Martia Picus, rendered by Massey Whitwall. Some virtue had by the Romans been ascribed to it in warding off evil. It is at least conjoined with the she-wolf in the preservation of Romulus and Remus, in their mother Ilia's dream.

To cut them down my cruel uncle sought;
But their defence a wolf and whitwall took,
And warled off the dire impending stroke.

Ovid's Fasti, iii. v. 45.

"What I here translate a Whitwall, in the original is Martia Picus Avis. It is a little bird, which makes holes in trees, and picks her food from under the bark of them. It is also called, in some counties, a Woodpecker, a speckt, (which is the German name) a Frenchpie," &c. N. ibid.

[To WODGE, v. a. To shake, Banffs. V. WADGE.]

WODROISS, s. A savage.

The rouch wodroiss wald that bustouiss bare,
Our growin grysy and grym in effeir.
Mair awfull in all thing saw I nevere
Bayth to walk, and to ward, as wethis in weir.
That drable felloun my spirit affrayit,
So ferfull of fantesy.

Houlate, ii. 24, MS.

Here, as in Bann. MS. rouch, saw, wethis, are put for routh, sall, withis, in S. P. Repr.

It seems doubtful whether the word in MS. be not rather wodwiss, as ro and w are often undistinguishable.

According to this reading, the original term most probably is A.-S. wude-wase, in pl. wude wasau, satyra, fauns, Gl. Aelfric, p. 56, (unfael wihtu, synon.) from wudu, a wood. The origin of wasan is uncertain.

This A.-S. term seems to have been corr. into wode-house, O.E., used in a similar sense.

"Those [actors] said above to have been on board the city foyst, or galley, are called monstrous wilde men; others are frequently distinguished by the appellation of green men; and both of them were men whimsically attired and disguised with droll masks, having large staves or clubs, headed with cases of crackers. At the bottom of the thirty-second plate is one of the green men, equipped in his proper habit, and flourishing his fire-club; and at the top a savage man, or wode house, a character very common in the pageants of former times, and [which] probably resembled the wilde men." Strutt's Sports, p. 282. This immediately refers to the age of Henry VIII. V. p. 190, also 279, N.

Drable, mentioned by Holland, may signify servant; Tent. drevel, a servant, a drudge, a slave; mediastinus, Kilian.

WODSET, s. The same with Wadset, q. v.

"The vassals of any person or persons—shall not be prejudged anent their right & propertie of the lands, annual-rents, wodsets, &c. of the saids forfeited persons." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, VI. 143.

WODSET, adj. Let in wadset, S.

"A discharge—by the estates of Parliament,—shall be—als valid a liberation to the saids debitors, and to their lands and heritages, wodset for the saids summes," &c. Ibid. p. 144.

WODWARD, s.

"Item, a wodward of gold with a diamant." Inventories, A. 1488, p. 7.

Can this denote an ornament resembling a forester, as E. wood-ward signifies?

WOED, pret. Waded. V. WOUDE.

"Culan, and his men landed at an craig besydis Crammont, where they woed to thair waistis before they come to dry land." Bannatyne's Journal, p. 232.

WOFT, s. The woof in a web. V. WAFT.

WOIK, pret. v. Fled, wandered.

The voce thus wyse throwout the cietie woik.
Doug. Virgil, 89, 12.

Vagatur, Virg. ii. 17.

Rudd. refers to Ital. rog-are, Fr. rog-uer, to swim; viewing these as well as woik, as perhaps derived from Lat. ray-ari. But, undoubtedly, it is more probably the same with A.-S. woc, woce, ortus est, suscitatus est, from walc-an, suscitari; E. awoke. Or it may be from A.-S. weole, revolvit from walec-un. But the former is preferable.

WOISTARE, WOUSTOUR, s. A boaster, S. vouster; Rudd.

Bot war I know, as vmquible it has bene,
Ying as yone wantoun woistare so strang they wene,
Ye had know sic youtheid, traistis me,
But ony price I suld all redly be.

Doug. Virgil, 140, 40.

Sic vant of woustours with hairtis in sinful statures,
Sic brullaris and bosteris, degenerait fra thair naturis,—
Within this land was never hard nor sepe.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 43, st. 9.

Rudd. views this as the same with woaster, wo-tour, in P. Ploughman; probably led to adopt this idea from its being rendered by Skinner, Thraso, a hector. But the term there evidently signifies a spendthrift or prodigal. Those of this description were persons who songe at the nale, who would give no help to the Ploughman to erie, i.e., till, his half acre, but kyr troilly lous, Fol. 32, b. Therefore Peter thus addresses them—

Ye be woasters I wote wel, and Trueth wot the sothe,—
Ye want that men winnen, with trauayle and wyth tose,
And Truth shall teach you his tyme to dryue,
Or ye shal eat barly bread, and of the broke drinke.

It is indeed afterwards said;

—Than gan a woastoure to wrath & wolde haue fought,
And to Piers the Plowman he proferd his glone,
A britoner, a bragger, and bofeted Pierce also,
And bad him go pyse with his plow, forpynel schewe.

Fol. 33, a.

But the terms britoner, and bragger, shew that woastoure conveys a different idea. It is under the later character that this ancient writer lashes the clergy for their prodigality and indolence. V. VOSTR.

WOITTING, part. pr. Voting.

—"To haue voitt in parliament,—and in all ither lawful meittings—quhair burghes royall—hes piace of sitting and woitting." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 95.

WOK, WOLK, s. Week. "Euerilk wolk," every week; Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16. This orthography frequently occurs in these MSS.

WOKLY, adv. Weekly.

"That thair be wokly thre market dais for selling of breid within the said tounne." Acts Ja. V. 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 378. V. OWKLE.

WOLK, pret. Walked.

On salt strems wolk Derida and Thetis,
By rynnand strandes, Nymphes and Naiades.

Doug. Virgil, 402, 27.

WOLL, s. Wool. [Wolly, wolsy, woollen.]

"That Johne of Symontoun—shall content & pay to Andro Mowbray xxiiij stane of quhite woll but cot ter of falsis in wyne, & sall deliuer him the said woll fre in Edinburgh," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1478, p. 27.

Teut. wolle, A.-S. wulle, Su.-G. ull, id. But cot ter seems to signify without "a coat of tar." Falsis in wyne,—not understood.

The quality of this wool is still more particularly defined in another Act.

"That James Riddale of that ilke sall—pay Marionne Liddale—of Spittalefield—twa sek of woll, forest fyne, gude merchand gude, without cot & ter, ilka sek containand xxiiij stane." Ibid. p. 175. This in the same page, is described as "of the best of the forest."

WOLL, WOIL, s. A well.

Be syde the woil, at sundrie tymes, he slew thame;—
And poysonit woll to drink, quhat docht it!

See Edinburgh Castel, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 280.

Woil perhaps should be woll. This form of the word, which nearly gives the S. pronunciation, might seem formed from A.-S. weol, the pret. of the v. weall-an, to boil up, also, to flow; whence the E. term well is formed.

WOLROUN, s. [A fumbler, a poltroon.]

I have ane wallidrag, ane worm, ane auld wubat carle,
A waistit wolroun, na worthe bot wourdis to clatter.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 48.

In edit. 1508, it is crandoun, apparently the same with Crawdon, q. v. But wolroun appears preferable, because of the alliteration.

This word seems synon. with Culroun. It is well known that q and u are frequently interchanged. Now Su.-G. gall signifies testiculus, and Teut. ruyn-en, castrate. That gall was also written wall, is highly probable from the variety of similar terms, allied in signification; as Germ. wol, pleasure, luxury; Alem. welun, id. welig, voluptuous; Germ. wal-en, luxuriose crescere, wels, amia. V. WALAGEOUS.

WOLT, s. A vault.

"That name—hauaris of tauernis tak vpon hand to huid or hyde ony sic wynis, coft be thame, in thair houis and priuis places, bot that thay put the samin in thair commoun tauernis and woltis thair of, to be sauld indifferentie to our souerane Lalyis liegis," &c.
Acts Mary, 1555, Ed. 1814, p. 483. V. VOUT.

To WOLTER, v. a. To overturn.

Bewar! we may be wolterit or we witt;
And lykways lois our land, and libertie.
Maitland Poems, p. 162.

Teut. wolter-en, volutare. V. WELTER.
Wolter, id. Yorks. Ray's Lett., p. 341.

WOLTER, s. An overturning, a change productive of confusion, S. walter.

"The Papists constantlie loked for a wolter, and therefor they wald mak som brag of reasoning."
Knox's Hist., p. 318.

"I began nocht litill to mervel at sa haisty and sa sublane a wolter of this warld, in sa mony grete materie." N. Winyet, Keith's Hist., App. p. 218.
In MS. penes auct. Walter. V. the v.

WOLVIN, part. pu. Woven.

"Ane uther of wolvin silver upoun blak velvot laich nekit with bodies & burlettis." Inventories, A. 1578,
p. 221.

"Ten pair of wolvin hois of gold, silver, and silk.
Thre pair of wolvin hois of worstet of Garnsay." Ibid.
p. 236.

From this and similar accounts, in this curious collection, we may see what credit should be given to the traditionary jest on the poverty of the Scottish nation, that James VI., when he went to take possession of the English crown, found it necessary to borrow a pair of silk hose from one of his courtiers.

WOLWAT, WOLWOUSS, s. Velvet. "Blak wolwat."—"Cramasse wolcouss." Aberd. Reg. V. 16.

This term assumes a variety of forms, as Vallous, Vellous, Velvouis, Velvouis, &c.

[WOLX, pret. Waxed, became, Douglas.]

WOMAL, WUMMEL, s. A wimble, an instrument for boring, S. V. WOMBIL.

WOMAN-HOUSE, s. The laundry, S.B.

"David Browne—did poynt the wholle house of Landy,—the old lady's chamber, the woman-house, the sclat-girnell," &c. Lamont's Diary, p. 109.

"After a shower of rain in the morning he saw a great deal of water lying on the floors of the woman-house and kitchen, and which had come in, as he could observe, by the found of both these." State of Process Mrs. Forbes v. David Scot of Benholm, 1754.

The term often occurs in this sense, in old lists of furniture, &c., and in Scotch law cases.

WOMAN-MUCKLE, adj. Having the size of a full-grown female, Clydes.

—"The elf,—by anointing the crown of her head, and the palms of both hands, with a very fragrant oil, gart her grow woman-muckle in twathree days." Edin. Mag., Sept. 1818, p. 156.

WOMAN'S SONG. To Lay the Woman's Sang, an emphatic phrase denoting to change mirth to sorrow, for the loss of a husband, child or a lover.

It occurs twice in the Extracts from the Session-Records of Kirkaldy; in the account given of a trial for witchcraft.

—"He heard the said Alison say to him, 'Thou has gotten the woman's song laid, as thou promised; thou art over long living: it had been good for the women of Kirkaldy, that thou had been dead long since.'

—"Many pretty men has thou putten down both in ships and boats; thou has gotten the woman's song laid now." Stat. Acc., xviii. p. 634.

WOMBIL, WOMBILL, WOMYLL, s. A wimble, S.; pron. wummil. V. WOMAL.

"Four wombillis for boiring of the cannoun navis." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 255.

—"That—Schir James—sall content & paye to the said Robt. Hiltson for—ii wommil rii d." Act. Audit, A. 1478, p. 82.

—"A pare of woll camis, a pare of scheris price viij s., ij hewin axis, a womyll." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1485, p. 106.

WOMENTING, s. Lamentation.

O. E. wone, wun.

—Ther woned a man of gret honour,

Chaucer, Sompn. T., v. 7745.

A.-S. wonnan, Germ. won-en, Teut. won-en, id. Franc. won-an, manere, morari in loco. The primary sense thus seems to be the same as that of E. dwell, to tarry, to delay. Hence, WONNER, s. A dweller, an inhabitant, Roxb.

WONNYNG, WYNYNG, s. A dwelling.

And the lady hyr leyf has tayn :
And went hyr hame til hyr wonnyng.
Barbour, v. 177, MS.

Douglas uses a singular tautology.
Als swyftlye as the dow affrayit dois fle
Furth of hir holl, and richt dern wynnyng wane,
Quhare hir sueit nest is holkit in the stane,
So feirsly in the feildis furth scho spryngia.
Doug. Virgil, 134, 40.

A.-S. wunnunge, mansio. V. the v. and WANE, id. The term is still used to denote the chief house on a farm, or that which is occupied by the tenant, in contradistinction from those possessed by the cottars, hinds, herds, &c. It is also called the Wonnin-House or Wunnin'-House, Roxb.

WONED, pret. v. Prob., prepared.

They woned them wnto the dead,
As kirkmen could devys;
Synne prayed to God that they might speed
Off thair guid enterpryse.
Battel of Bairnnes, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 350.

The passage may signify that "they prepared themselves for death, according to the rites of the church;" and, as the noblemen mentioned were Roman Catholics, most probably by confession. O. E. woned signifies accustomed.

Thou wert aie woned eche lovir reprehende.
Chaucer's Troil., I. 511.

Perhaps, "familiarized themselves to the idea of death." Germ. won-en, manere, in its compound form, beiwon-en, denotes "to be engaged about any thing, as a feast, a piece of business, an address, a consultation, &c." Wachter.

WONT-TO-BE, s. A custom or practice that prevailed in former times, Ang.

—Mony wont-to-be's, nae doubt,
An' customs we ken nought about,
Were then in vogue, that's now forgotten,
An' them that us'd them lang syne rotten.
Paper of Patches, p. 7.

WONYEONIS, s. pl. Onions, S. "Apples & wonyeonis;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

WOO, s. Wool, S.

Humph, quoth the Deel, when he clipp'd the sow,
A great cry, and little woo.

S. Prov., "spoken of great pretences, and small performances." Kelly, p. 163.

Some worsted are o' different hue

An' some are cotton,

That's safter far na' ony woo

That grows on mutton.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, Shop Bill, p. 11, 12.

It's aw ae woo, S. Prov. It is all one, there is no difference. [It is uniformly the same.]

—Whether France be band or free,

It's a' ae woo to John.
Picken's Poems, ii. 123.

WOOLY, adj. Woolly, S.

He disna ken the ug-some gate

O' avarice or cheatin',

Wha owns a humble peasant's fate,

Whar wooly lambs gang bleatin'.

A. ii. 12.

WOODER, s. The dust of cotton or flax, Roxb. [V. OOZE, OUZE.]

WOODIE, s. 1. Two or three willow twigs twisted together, in a circular form, used for binding the end of a broom besom, Roxb.

2. A halter, for hanging a criminal, S.

Donald Caird, wi' mickle study,
Caught the gift to cheat the woodie.

Sir W. Scott's Song.

To CHEAT THE WOODIE. V. under WIDDIE.

CHEAT-THE-WOODIE, s. One who has narrowly escaped from being hanged; usually applied to a person who is believed to deserve this punishment, S.

In former times, people on a long journey, when crossing a river in a flood, impressed perhaps with an idea natural enough to those who lived on the border, that hanging was a death much more suited to their mode of life, and that he who was born to be hanged would never be drowned, used to cry out, "Woodie, Woodie, had your ain." Roxb.

It is to be observed, that Woodie is merely the modern, and indeed a corrupt, orthography; designed to express the sound, without any regard to the origin of the word. It indeed fails to do so; as it is pronounced q. wuddie. V. WIDDIE, WIDDY.

WOODIE-CARL, s. The name of a pear introduced into this country by the Cistercian monks, Roxb.

Corr. perhaps from O. Fr. gnault, "the name of an apple, that yields very pleasant and cleere cider;" Cotgr.

WOOD-ILL, WUDE-ILL. A disease to which black cattle are subject in consequence of eating some kind of herb, which makes them pass blood instead of urine, S.A. Mure-ill synon.

"When reared on open pasture, and afterwards carried to fields where there is heath or brushwood, they are frequently seized with a serious and alarming disease called the wood-ill. Their head swells, their eyes are inflamed, their urine is red, and they become very costive." Agr. Surv. Roxb., p. 150.

WOOD-LOUSE, s. A book-worm, Loth.

[WOODMAIL, s. A cloth payment anciently imposed on the peasantry of Orkney and Shetland as part payment of land rent. V. VADMELL.]

WOODRIP, s. The Asperula Odorata, E.; Woodruff, S.

The wholesome everans, which by proof we know
Exceeds in sweetness most of fruits that grow,
'Mongst woodrip rising, beautifies the show.

Don, a Poem: Leyden's Descr. Poems, p. 119.

"Woodrip is a kind of wild lavender, but has a much finer smell," N. ibid.

A.-S. wude-rofa, Asperula; according to others, Hastula regia. O. E. "Woodroue, herbe. Hastia regia." Prompt. Parv.

WOOPER-BAB, s. 1. The garter knotted below the knee with a couple of loops, formerly worn by a young man who was too sheepish to announce in plain terms the purpose of his visit. This was the known signal of his design to propose marriage, S.O.

The lads sae trig, wi' wooper-babs,
Weel knotted on their garten,
Some unco blate, an' some wi' gabs,
Gar lassies hearts gang startin.—

Burns's Works, iii. 126.

2. The neck-cloth knit with the lover's knot, so as to display the babs or ends, S.O.

WOOF, s. One of the names given to the Grey Gurnard on the Frith of Forth.

"Trigla Gurnardus. Grey Gurnard. Crooner.—It is known by a variety of other names, as Captain, Hardhead, Goukmerg, and Woof." Neill's List of Fishes, p. 14.

This, perhaps, should rather be written Wouf, the Scottish orthography of Wolf.

WOON-SWABS; s. pl. A great belly-full.

As swabs denotes food, this compound term is used in relation to a fellow who "courts for cake and pudding." Fife. Swabs is probably a cant word.

WOOLSTER, s. A woolstapler.

"Moreover for us our heirs and successors, disclaim from us, all use of buying, of brewing, or making malt, and of all other art or trade, viz. of shoemakers, cutlers, waukers, skinners, carpenters, and woolsters, to be exercised within our said barony of Kilmaurs; except in the said burgh of barony, and the liberties thereof." Chart. Earl Glencairn to Kilmaurs, ap. Agr. Surv. Ayra, p. 99.

WOONE, part. pa. of the v. Win, to dry.

"The upper scruffe is casten in long thicke turffes, dried at the sunne, and so woone to make fire of." Deser. of the Kingdom of Scotlande.

WOOSTER, s. A suitor, a wooer, Gallo-way.

An' whan ye hae finish'd this bridegroom darg,
Come like a blythe wooster an' hausel your sark.

Rem. Nithed, and Galloway Song, p. 121.

To WOOZE, v. n. To distil, E. Ooze.

"Prayer, when attended with mortification of flesh, is then most savory, and sweet; it's as it were the tears of a tree, woozed out, and how prevalent Peter's bitter tears were woozing from the bitterness of his heart is known." Annand's Mysteriam Pietatis, p. 132. V. WEESE.

[To WOP, v. a. To bind with a thread, cord, &c. V. WIP.]

WOP, s. A thread with which any thing is bound. "Ane wop of gold;" Aberd. Reg.; [also, a joining made by means of a thread, &c.] V. OOP.

WOR, pret. Guarded, defended.

Gud Wallace euir he solowit thaim so fast,
Quhill in the hous he entryt at the last;
The yett he wor, quhill cumin was all the rout,
Of Ingliss and Scottis he held na man tharout.

Wallace, iv. 487, MS.

V. WEE.

WOR, WAUR, adj. Worse.

"Johane Calayne—is repugnant in materis concernyng baith faith & religioun, tyl al the rest of thair factious men abone reherait, inuenting ane new factioun of his awin, quharethrow he wald be thoct singulare (as he is in deid) for thair hes bene bot fewe wor (in all kynd of wickit opinion) in the hale world." Kennedy's Catechisme, p. 92. V. WAR.

WORCHARD, WORTCHAT, s. An orchard; sometimes Wotchat, Roxb. Wotchat, A. Bor., Grose.

A.-S. wyrt-gard, hortus, fruticetum, pomarium; literally, a garden of herbs.

WORD, WORDIS, v. imp. It wordis, it behoves, it becomes.

Schir Amar said, Trewis it wordis tak,
Quhill eft for him prouisioun we may mak.

Wallace, iii. 271, MS.

—Truce it behoves you take.

Edit. 1648.

BEE WORDE OF occurs in the sense of become of.

"Then many shall wonder what can bee worde of such a blazing professor, when they shall see all his rootless graces withered and wasted." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 425.

WILL WORD of, occurs in the same sense, as signifying, will become of.

"Many has pored too much on that tentation, What will word of my wife? And will word of my bairns? And, What will word of my house? And, What will word of my goods and gear; how can I live in the world, if I do not this and that; how shall I do for my family?" W. Guthrie's Sermon, p. 14

Belg. word-en, ge-word-en, to become; Su.-G. waerd-a, anciently woerd-a, wird-a, Isl. verd-a, inter-esse, pertinere. Although A.-S. woorth-ian is not radically different, I do not find that it was used in this sense. V. WORTH, v.

- WORD, s. To get the word o', to have the character of; as, "She gets the word o' being a licht-headit queyn," i.e., it is generally said of her, S.

WORDS, pl. To mak words. 1. To talk more about any thing than it deserves, S.

- 2. To make an uproar, [to quarrel, S.]

WORDY, adj. Worth, worthy, S.

We thought that dealer's stock an ill ane,
That was not wordy half a million.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 334.

To WORK or WURK, v. a. 1. To sprain; to wurk one's shacklebane, to sprain one's wrist, Galloway.

- 2. To trouble, to vex, to torment, to plague, S. Thus the language of threatening is often expressed, "I'll wurk him for that yet."

Most probably allied to A.-S. waerc, weorc, dolor, cruciatus, pain, ache. V. WARK, v.

To WORK to one's self. A decorous phrase used by the peasantry in Loth., signifying to ease nature, as, He's wurking to himsell.

WORLD, WORLIN, s. A puny and feeble creature.

Worlin wanworth, I warn thee it is written,
Thou skyland skarth, thou has the hurle behind.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 57.

When that the Dames devoutly had done the devore
In having this hurcheon, they hasted them hame,
Of that matter to make remained no more,
Saving next how that Nuns that worlin should name.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 19.

"Orling, a stunted child, or any ill-thriving young stock; North." Grose. G. Andr., however, expl. Isl. yrfling-r, vermiculus! adding, Ita porro vocantur pulli bestiarum. He thinks that the term is more properly ormlingr, a diminutive from orm, vermis, q. "a little worm." Lex., p. 137.

Haldorson gives yrfling-r as synonym. with Lat. catulus.

This is merely a dimin. from wort, wurl, wroul, which are all corr. from Warwolf, q. v. There seems to be no good reason to doubt that A. Bor. "orling, urling, a stunted child, or any ill-thriving young stock," (Gl. Grose), has the same origin.

- WORM, s. 1. Used to denote a serpent; often one of a monstrous size.

In this sense the term remains in the traditionary legends of the vulgar.

VOL. IV.

Wool Willie Somervill
Killed the worm of Wormandaill,
For quhilk he had all the lands of Lintoun,
And six myles them about.

Memorie of the Somervills, i. 63, 64.

"It stands entire and legible to this very day, with remembrance of the place where this monster was killed, called the Serpent's Den, or, as the country people names it, the Worm's Glen." Ibid., p. 44.

[It is used in the same sense by E. writers:—"The mortal worm," Shak. "That false worm," Milt.]

- 2. A name given by old people, to the tooth-ache, Loth.; from the idea that the pain is produced by a worm in the teeth; synon. Onbeast, Ang.

It is probable that this name was formerly in pretty general use, as Wedderburn uses no other term.

"Laborat dolore dentium, he hath the worm." Vocab., p. 20.

- 3. The gnawings of hunger:—the hungry worm, S.

- [4. Sour water from the stomach, Moray.]

WORM-MONTH, s. A designation given to the month of July, Perth.

This name has obviously originated from the hatching of many kinds of reptiles in this month. The same month is in Denmark called Orm-manned. In Iceland silk is denominated ormtef-r; serica, Haldorson.

WORM-WEB, WORM-WAB, s. A spider's web, S. Moose-web, synon.

"Your Ledyship's character's no a gauze gown, or a worm web, to be spoiled with a spittle, or any other foul thing out of the mouth of man." Sir A. Wylie, i. 178.

As A.-S. wyrm, like Isl. orm, is a generic name for all those reptiles which are viewed as belonging to the serpentine race, this denomination may have been given to the web of a spider from the venomous quality of the animal.

[To WORN, WORRIN, v. a. A corr. of warrant, to assure; as, "I'se worn ye," or "I'll worrin ye," Clydes., Banffs.]

To WORRIE, v. a. To strangle.

"I juge that we troubyll not thame quha fra amangis the gentiles ar turnit to God, bot that we wryte that thay abstaine fra the filthynes of ydolis, fra fornicatioun, fra that is worreit, and blude." Kennedy's Catechisme, p. 11. V. WERY.

"One John Brugh, a notorious warlock, in the parochin of Fossoquhy, by the space of 36 years, was worried at a stake and brunt, 1643." Law's Memor., Pref. LIX:

To WORRIE, v. n. 1. To choke, to be suffocated, S. To be worried, A. Bor.

"Ye have fasted lang, and worried on a midge." Rarsay's S. Prov., p. 82.

- [2. To snarl and gibe, to dispute angrily, S.]

WORRY-CARL, s. 1. A snarling, ill-natured carl, who speaks as if he would worry one, Roxb.

- 2. A large coarse winter pear, also called Washwarden, ibid.

H 5

WORRY - COW, s. A bugbear, &c. V. WIRRYCOW.

WORRYOURIS, s. pl. Warriors.

That walit out worryouris, with wappinis to wald.
Gawan and Gol., l. 1.

Although some may suppose that this designation, as apparently allied to the v. worry, is but too applicable to many who have been celebrated as warriors, we ought certainly to read werryouris, as in edit. 1508.

WORSCHIP, WIRSCHIP, s. 1. A praise-worthy deed, a valorous act; [valour.]

Throw his gret worschip sa he wroucht,
That to the Kingis pess he brought
The Forest off Selcryn all hale;
And alsu did he Douglas Dale;
And Jedworthis forest alsua.
And quha sa weile on hand couth ta
To tell his worschippis, aue and aue,
He suld synd off thaim mony aue.

Barbour, viii. 423. 429, MS.

2. Honour, renown.

It is no wirschip for ane nobill lord,
For the fals tailis to put ane trew man doun;
And gevand credence to the first record,
He will not heir his excusatioun.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 136.

A.-S. weorthscipe, honour, estimation.

To WORSEL, WORSLE, v. n. To wrestle.

"According to your desire, Sir, we shall worsel with God in prayer that your end may be peace." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1073.

WORSLING, s. Wrestling.

"I cannot expresse what a worsling I finde within mee." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 12. V. WARSELL.

WORSET, WORSETT, WURSET, s. Corr. of E. worsted.

"On ilk ell of narrow cloth, serges, and other worset, or hair stuffs imported, at or above forty shillings the ell 2s." Spalding's Troubles, II., 141.

The word occurs in this form, in an Inventory of Vestments taken A. 1559.

"Item, a capin for the sepulture of damas, and ane other of double worsett with a great verdure that lays before the altare." Hay's Scotia Sacra, p. 189.

WORSING, s. Injury.

"He beand compleitlie paid bo the debtour of all and hail the debt auchtand to him, is haldin to restoir and re-deliver incontinent the wad to the debtour, without worsing or deterioration." Balfour's Pract., p. 195.

The v. to Worse is used by Milton.

WORSUM, s. Purulent matter. V. WOURSUM.

"It is not mixed with bloud as that chapter 8, much less with bloody worsum, as that chap. 16." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 15.

WORT, v. impers. Become, Ettr. For.; corr. from Worth, q. v.

"I was—considerin what could be wort of a' the sheep, when I noticed my dog, Reaver, gaun coursing away forrit as he had been setting a fox." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 38. V. WORDIS.

To WORT, WORT-UP, v. a. To dig up.

"Ane swyne that eitit corne, or wortis othir mienes landis, salbe slane but only redres to the awnar." Bellend. Cron., B. x., c. 12. Grunno subruentem, Boeth.

"What more is the rest troubled of a dead bodie, when the diuell carries it out of the graue to serue his turne for a space, nor when the witches takes vp and ioynts it, or when as swyne wortes vp the graues?" K. James's Daemonologie, p. 124.

"I wroote or wroule, as a swyne dothe;" Palagraue. From A.-S. wrot-an, versare rostro, "to roote, as the swine doth, to digge or turne up;" Somner. Lancast. to wroote. Belg. wroet-en, wroet-en.

Fraunces writes it "Wrot-yn, as swyne. Verro." Prompt. Parv.

To WORT, v. a. To waste any article, particularly of food, to be prodigal of it so as to put it to disuse, ibid. V. ORT, v.

The etymon is very uncertain. Isl. ovid-a signifies dishonestare, contemnere.

WORDS, s. pl. The refuse of straw, hay, or other fodder, which cattle will not eat, Teviotd.; Orts, E. Dumfr. Wort, id.

 WORTH, adj. Good, valuable, S.; without including the idea of comparison as in E.

"The lady marquis sent to Monro fifty golden angels to buy him a horse with, because she had not a worth saddle horse to send to him, as he desired her to do." Spalding, i. 235.

NAE WORTH. 1. Worthless, not good, Aberd.

2. Of no value, ibid.

3. Not trusty, ibid.

This nearly resembles the old Moes.-G. phrase, ni wairths. Ni im airths; Non sum dignus; Matt. 8, 18. In the A.-S. version it is, ne wyrthe.

To WORTH, WOURTH, v. n. 1. To wax, to become; part. pa. wourthin.

And sum of thaim nedis but fail
With pluch and harow for to get
And othyr ser craffis, thair mete.
Swa that thair armyng sall worth auld;
And sall be rottyn, stroyit, and sauld.

Barbour, xix. 175, MS.

And he for wo weyle ner worthit to weide.

Wallace, i. 437, MS.

Of Troiane women the myndis worth agast.

Doug. Virgil, 149, 23.

So clappis the breith in breistis with mony pant,
Quhil in thare dry throttis the aynd wourth skant.

Ibid. 134, 17.

This ilk Nisus, wourthin proude and gay,
And baldare of his chance sa with him gone,
Ane vthir takill assayit he anone.

Ibid. 291, 20.

Moes.-G. wairth-an, A.-S. weorth-an, weord-an, Alem. uuart-en, Teut. word-en, fieri, esse, fore.

2. It worthis, v. imp. It becomes; him worthit, it was necessary for him; [wa worth, woe be.]

Thir angrys may I ne mar drey,
For thought me tharfor worthit dey,
I mon sojourne, quhar euyr it be.

Barbour, liii. 322, MS.

And gif he nykis you with nay, you worthis on neid
For to assege yone castel.—

Gawan and Gol., ii. 2.

In presoun heir me worthis to myscheyff.
Wallace, ii. 199, MS.

V. WORDIS.

WORTHELETH. [Prob. errat. for wortheliche, worthy, honourable.]

The blissit Paip in the place prayd thame ilk ane
To remane to the meit, at the middlay;
And thay grantit that gud, but gruching, to gane;
Than to ane wortheleth wane went thay thair way:
Pasit to a palice of price plesand allane,
Was erectit ryelly, ryke of array.

Houlate, iii. 3.

Mr. Pink. reads this as one word, rendering it worthy. But in Bannatyne MS. it is worthelith, i.e., worthy, honourable, and at the same time lithe, warm, comfortable; unless corr. from A.-S. weorthlic, honorandus, insignis.

WORTHYHED, s. The same as worschip;
Barbour. Belg. waardigbeyd, worthiness.

[WORTIS, s. pl. Herbs, plants, S.]

WOSCHE, WOUSCHE, pret. v. Washed, S. woosh, pron. wush, S. B. weesh, Rudd.

Of his E dolpe the flowand blude and atir
He wosche away all with the salt watir.

Doug. Virgil, 90, 46.

Scho warmit wattir, and hir serwandis fast

His body wousche, quhill filth was of hym past.

Wallace, ii. 266, MS.

WOSLIE, WOZLIE, adj. A shrivelled, small-featured, and hard-looking person, Roxb.

WOSP, WOSPE, s. A measure, a certain quantity.

This term is used in various connexions. "Ane wosp of glas;"—"Ane wospe of malt;" Aberd. Reg.
Cent. 16. "Four wospe of malt;" Ibid. A. 1521, v.
11.

Allied, perhaps, to Isl. vasi, sacculus, locus, or Teut. wisse, vimen. As applied to malt, the term might seem to claim affinity to Sax. wispel, a measure of six Roman bushels.

WOST, pret. v. Wist, i.e., knew.

"And maid faith he wost not quhare it wes, nor yit couth nocht apprehend it. And maid faith he wost nocht of the said lettre, nor cuth nocht apprehend it, and that he put it nocht away in fraude of the said
Robert." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1492, p. 274.

Wust, the vulgar pronunciation; A.-S. wiess-an, scire, pret. wiste.

WOSTOW. Wotest thou, knowest thou.

Quhat wostow than? Sum bird may cum and stryve
In song with the, the maistry to purchase.

King's Quair, ii. 40.

WOST, s. Prob. same with Voust, Voist, a boast, q. v.

Quhat sal be said, bot al his ending he Frome on fair ymp fell down a widdlerit tre.
—The beginnyng thay say wes bot a wost.

Colkelbie Sow, Problem.

WOT, pret. Waxed; perhaps corr. from Worth, Clydes.

Mare fast they flew, while brichtir it grew,
While it wot till a flude o' day,

An' shaw't the leesome Fairy Lan's
That braid aneth them lay.

Ballad, Edin. Mag., Oct. 1818, p. 329.

WOT, s. Intelligence, S. wat, E. wit.

"Thay that speirs meikle will get wot of part,"
Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 31.

WOTHER-WEIGHT, s. The same with Witherwecht, South of S.

—"He'll never gie her till a lad that canny carry her through the burn, an' ower the peate knove, aneath his oter, an' she's nae wother-weight nouter."
Hogg's Wint. T., i. 270.

WOTIS, s. pi. Votes; Aberd. Reg., A.
1543.

WOTLINK, s. A wench; used in a bad sense.

I saw wotlinkis me besyd
The yong men to thair howses gyde,
Had better lagget in the stockis.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 109.

Dr. Leyden views it as comp. of wot and linkis, q.
mad wenches. Gl. Compl. vo. Fod., p. 383. Sibb.
thinks that it is perhaps a diminutive of cloutis, or wotkis, q. gaily dressed girls. But the origin is quite obscure.

WOUBIT, s. A hairy worm, S. A.

"Woubit, Oubit, one of those worms which appear as if covered with wool." Gl. Sibb.

Sibb. evidently views the term as formed from its fleecy covering. This may be originally the same with O. E. "Warbot worme," expl. "Omigramus." Prompt.
Parv.; if the latter be not rather synon. with Warble,
q. v.

To WOUCII, v. n. To bark, Gall.

I had a wee dog, and he wouchet at the moon;
If my saug be na lang, it's sooner dune.

Auld Say, Gall. Enc.

This is only a variety of Wouff, id.; the labial being changed, as in many instances in the pronunciation of Galloway, into the guttural sound. Of this we have a proof in the synonym of this v. Bouch for Bouff, q. v.
This might arise from the Celtic origin of many of the inhabitants of this district; as the Celts are undoubtedly partial to the guttural enunciation. Minsheu (to Barke) speaking of the synon. Lat. term bamb-ari, observes that it is "a fictitious term, from the sound made by dogs in barking, Bau, Bau." The childish name for a dog, Bow-wow (Grose's Cl. Dict.), which might seem to combine both Bouch and Wouch, has undoubtedly a similar origin.

WOUCH, s. The bark of a dog, Gall.

"Wouch, the same with Bouch, a dog's bark;" ib.

WOUCII, WOUGH, s. 1. Evil, pravity; in a general sense.

Sche crid merci anough,
And seyd, "For Cristes rode,
What have Y don wouch,
Whi wille ye spillie mi blode?"

Sir Tristrem, p. 102, st. 52.

2. Injustice, injury.

"—Vnjustice, and against the law, with wouch, wrag and vnlaw." Quon. Attach., c. 80. V. U.
LAW.

2. Trouble, fatigue; used obliquely.

Tristrem with Hodain,
A wilde best he slough;
In on erthe house thal layn,
Ther hadde thal joie y-nough,
Etenes, bi old dayn,
Had wrought it with outen wough.

Sir Tristrem, p. 149, st. 17.

i.e., "Giants, in ancient days, had erected it without any difficulty."

4. Woe, mischief; in a physical respect.

The wys wrought uther grete wandreth and wouch,
Wirkand woundis full wyde, with wapnis of were.
Gosson and Goll, iii. 5.

Hearne expl. wouch, as used by R. Brunne, "wo, grief, affliction, harm." In p. 123, the only place I have marked, it occurs as a v.

Geffrey of Maundenile to fele wrouh he wouch,
The deuille yald him his while, with an arrowen him slough.
i.e., "to great wrath he waxed." The writer seems to play on the designation of this Geffrey, in the second line.

A.-S. wo, woh, wohg, wroh, perversitas, pravitas, error. But its primary signification is curvatura, flexio; being transferred from that which is literally crooked to what is morally so. Wo, woh, wohg, wro, are also used adjectively; pravius, perversus. They also signify, crooked, distorted; curvus, tortus. Wough, in the quotation, sense 1, may indeed be viewed as an adj.

From wroh, in its literal sense, are formed woh-fotade, having distorted feet, woh-handede, &c.; in its metaphorical, woh-dom, unjust judgment, woh-full, full of iniquity, &c. Woge gemeta, unjust measure.

Isl. so simply signifies, a sudden or unexpected calamity; wolk, misery.

To WOUD, v. a. To void, q. to evacuate;
Fr. vider, id.

"To woud this gud toune, swa that scho be nocht fund tharin for yair & day." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.
"To woud the said biging of the gudis." Ibid.

WOUDE, pret. Waded.

Out of the myre full smertile at he woude;
And on the wall he clame full haistely
Was maid about, and all with stanis dry.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 84.

Wod is the imperf. of A.-S. wad-an, vadere, ire.

Wod on waeg-stream, ibat in aquarum fluentum, Caedm., 69. Isl. od, vadarit, from rad-a, vadere. I need scarcely remark the obvious affinity of the Lat. verb.

WOUF, WOUF, s. 1. The wolf, S.

The wouf and tod with sighing spent the day,
Their sickly stamacks scunner'd at the prey.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 498.

"Ye have given the wouf the wedder to keep;"
Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 82.

[2. The bark of a dog. S.]To WOUF, WOUFF, v. n. To bark, S.; [part.
pr. wouffin, used also as an adj., given to barking.]

—Curs began to wouff an' bark,
As strangers pass'd them by.

Tarras's Poems, p. 59.

I imagine that O. E. wapp, to bark, and the S. v. are allied, notwithstanding the difference of form.
"Wapp-yn or baff-yn as houndes. Nuto. Wappinge of houndis. Latratus, Baulatus." Prompt. Parv. It seems to strengthen this conjecture, that Baff is obviously a variety of S. Baff. "Baff-en as houndes. Baulo, Baffo," Ibid. Wolf is sometimes used in the same sense, Aberd., not as the s. is pron. in E., but according to the usual power of the letters. This has been viewed as a proof that such was the original form of the r. This would bring us near the sound of Su.-G. ulf-w-a, ululare.

Su.-G. wolf-a, ululare, to cry as a wolf, from ulf, a wolf. The common pron. of wolf, S. wooff, nearly approaches to that of the v. Belg. guyv-en, to howl as a dog.

To WOU, v. n. To howl, Moray.

—The wolf wou'd hideous on the hill,
Yowlin' frae glack to brae.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 234.

WOUK, pret. Watched; [kept watch.]

The quhethir ilk nycht him selwyn wouk,
And his rest apon dayis touk.

Barbour, ii. 552, MS.

Til ner mydnycht a wach on thaim he set;
Him self wouk weill quhill he the fyr sa ryas.

Wallace, vii. 476, MS.

[A.-S. wacian, to watch.]

WOUK, WOUKE, s. A week, S. B. ook.

Tristrem's schip was yare;
He asked his benisoun;
The haven he gan out fare,
It hight Carlioun:
Niven woukes, and mare,
He hobbled up and down;
A winde to wil him bare,
To a stede ther him was boun.

Sir Tristrem, p. 75, st. 4.

—All the folk off thair oot war
Refreschyt weill, and wouk or mar.

Barbour, xiv. 132, MS.

O. E. writers also used this term.

Unto Kyngeston the first wouke of May Come S. Dunstan, upon a Sonenday.

R. Brunne, p. 37.

Wormius observes that, even before the introduction of Christianity, the Gothic nations divided time by weeks; using for distinction Runic letters. Faast. Dan. Lib. i. 15. V. Mareschall Observ. De Vera. Gothic, p. 511.

A.-S. wuca, wic, wira, id. Dan. uge, wge, anciently wika, wiku. Seren. views Moes.-G. wik, ordo, as the origin of the terms denoting a week.

Fraunces gives this word with a different orthography; "Woke. Ebdomada. Septimana." Prompt. Parv.

• WOULD, the pret. of the v. to Will. 1.
Used by most of our old writers for should, like will for shall.

"For clearing of the matter further, it would be considered, 1. That we speak of these things as they are abused, &c., and particularly condemned in this church. 2. We would consider the end of the things themselves," &c. Durham X. Command., p. 375.

"The practique observed by Dury,—would be marked." Fount. Dec. Suppl.

It is thus used also by old E. writers.

2. Sometimes used for must, S.

"Imagining every good man had his attendant angel, they said it would have been Peter's angel that had knocked." Brown's Dict. Bible. Art. Peter.

WOUN, adj. "Woollen;" Ayrs. Gl. Picken.

WOUND. [Prob. errat. for woundir, frightfully.]

With that come girdand in greif ane wound gryn Sire.
With stout contenance and sture he stude thame beforne.
Gawan and Gol., i. 7.

This seems the pret. of A.-S. wand-ian, vereri, to dread, to be afraid; used for forming a superlative, Wond, veritus est, Lye; q. frightfully grim. Hence, most probably the provincial term, South of E., "woundy, very great."

WOUNDER, WONDIR, adv. Wonderfully.

The mene season this Anchises the prince,
In til ane wounder grene vale ful of sence
Saulis inclusit.

Doug. Virgil, 189, 6.

A.-S. wundor, miraculum, is often used adverbially, in the ablat. wundrum; as wundrum faest, surprisingly firm; wundrum faeger, wonderfully fair.

WOUNDRING, s. A monster, a prodigy.

Before the portis and first jawis of hel
Lamentacioun, and wraikful Thochtis fel
There lugeing had, and therat duellis eik
Witles Discord that wounding maist cruel,
Womplit and buskit in ane bludy bend,
With snakis hung at every harris end.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 2.

A.-S. wundrung, admiration. Wundor itself signifies a prodigy; ostentum.

[WOUNT, part. pa. Wont, accustomed, Barbour, i. 220. V. WOWN.]WOORSUM, WORSUM, s. Purulent matter, S. pron. wursum.

Thir wretchit mennis flesche, that is his fude,

Doug. Virgil, 89, 25.

O quhat manere of torment cal ye thys!
Droppand in worsum and fylth, laythlie to se
So miserabil embrasing, thus wise he
Be lang proces of dede can thaym sle.

Ibid., 229, 47.

Rudd. derives it from A.-S. worms, wyrms, pus, tabes; wyrmsig, putridus, wyrms-an, putrescere. Perhaps rather from A.-S. wyr, pus, (Fenn. veri, Sw. war, waras, id.) and sum, as denoting quality.

"Tabes—saniem sanguinemque corruptum significat, rotten and putrified blood and worsome." Despaut. Gram., D 4, a.

V. VULT.[WOUX, Wox, pret. Waxed, increased, Barbour, ii. 170, xix. 207, A.-S. weaxan, to grow.]To WOW, v. a. To woo or make love to.

Robeyns Jok come to woo our Jynny
On our feist-evin quhen we wer fow.

Bannotyne Poems, p. 158.

That this is from A.-S. wog-an, nubere, appears from the use of wogere, prociis, amasius, a wooer, a suitor;

S. wowar. Seren. thinks that E. woo has primarily signified the lamentation of love-sick swains, as being nearly the same with Sw. voi-a sig; queri, lamentari.

To WOW, v. n. To howl. V. under WOUF. WOW, Vow, interj. Denoting admiration, gratification, surprise, grief, S.

Out on the wanderand spretis, wow, thou cryis,
It seemys ane man war manglit, theron list luke.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 25.

V. Vow.To WOW, v. n. To wave, to beckon, S.

"He wow'd wi' his hat.—When I wow, stan' fast;"
Gall. Enc.

This must be allied to Isl. veif-a, vibrare; although it has undergone a considerable change.

WOWF, adj. In some degree deranged, [half-mad;] nearly synon. with Skeer, but denoting rather more violence, S.

"Woof, mad;" GL. Sibb.

"The callant's in a creel," quoth she. "In a creel!" echoed the pedlar, "he will be as wouf as ever his father was." The Pirate, i. 220.

"It is very odd how Allan, who, between ourselves—is a little wouf, seems at times to have more sense than us all put together." Tales of my Landlord, Third Ser., iii. 270.

This is said to be a term of pretty general use. It has been supposed that it may be traced immediately to the v. to Wouf, q. one who barks like a dog. Wofa, however, denotes spectrum, umbra, manes; wof-a, ober-rare, applied to the wandering of ghosts; and wof-r-a, spectri instar ferri. Woreif is rendered, periculum, woreif, inopinatum et repente; woreif, temere, precipitantes; from wo, malum insperatum, originally the same with E. wo, and wof-a, gyrare, q. to be hurried away, or whirled round by some unexpected calamity.

There can be no doubt, however, that this word, whatever more remote relation it may have to these terms, must be immediately traced to A.-S. wouf-ian, delirare. Lye gives only one proof of its use. This seems to be from the Life of St. Swithin. He woufode; deliravit. If St. Swithin, with whom corresponds our St. Martin of Bullion, vulgarly denominated the drunken Saint, had similar propensities, we can easily see how it might be justly said that he woufode, or was wouf. From this v. is formed A.-S. woufung, deliramentum, insania; blasphemia.

WOWFISH, adj. Approaching to a state of derangement, S.WOWFNESS, s. The state of being wouf, S.WOWN, s. Wont, custom.

—Nere in that land
Than was a yowman by duelland,
That wes cald Twyname Lowrysown;
He wes thowles, and had in wown
By hys wyf oft-sais to ly
Othir syndry women by.

Wynatoun, viil. 24. 166.

A.-S. wuna, Su.-G. wanz, Isl. vande, id. The same verbs, which anciently signified to dwell, also denoted custom or habit. Thus Alem. uon-en, manere, (whence Germ. wohn-en, habitare,) occurs with the prefix, ki-uonent, solent, ki-uonon, solito. Hence also wuna-heite, consuetudo, wuone, mos.

WOWNE, adj. Wont, accustomed.

—A gret ecleps wes of the sowne :
Thare-for folk, that wes not wowne
To se swilk a want, as thai saw thare
Abaysyd of that sycht thal ware.

Wynston, viii. 37. 72.

To WOWT, v. a. To vault, to arch.

"This year—the earl of Southerland did begin to repair the hous at Dunrobin, and finished the great tour the same year, wowting it to the top." Contin. Hist. Earls of Sutherl., p. 509. V. Vout.

[WOWT, s. An arch ; also, a vault, a well, S. V. Vout.]

[WOYD, adj. Void, empty, Barbour, xix. 755 ; to woyd, to leave empty, viii. 59 ; woydyt, free from, i. 26.]

WOYELEY, adv. [Wickedly.]

He shal be wounded, I wys, woyeley I wene.
Gawan and Gol., i. 24.

It refers to the treacherous manner in which King Arthur is said to have been slain. A.-S. wolice, prave, inique ; wo-lie, pravius.

WOYNE, s. [Prob., the post of danger or difficulty.]

The trone of tryell, and theatre trew,
Is for to regne, and rewle above the rest.
Who hes the woyne him all the world dois vew ;
And magistrat the man dois manifest.

Maitland Poems, p. 164.

This has been expl., difficult situation, difficulty ; Sw. wonda, difficultas. It may be allied to A.-S. wine, Su.-G. winne, labor, winn-a, wond-a, laborare, curare.

[WP, adv. Up, Barbour, x. 569.]

WRA, s. [1. A hiding-place, Douglas. Dan. vraae, a corner.]

2. "Company, society," Rudd.

Sathane, the clepe I Pluto infernalle,

Not God thereof, bot grettest wrech of all.
To name the God, that war ane manifest lee,—
Set thou to Vulcane haue ful grete resembling ;
And art sum time the minister of thundring ;
Or sum blynd Cyclopes, of the laithly wra,
Thou art bot Jouis smyth in the fire blawing,
And dirk furnace of perpetuall Ethna.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 161, 18.

From "Fr. fray, sperma piscium, [Isl. frae, semen,] whence the E. fry : or from the A.-S. wreath, grex." Rudd. Su.-G. wrath, signifies a herd of swine.

To WRABBE, v. n. [Prob. to warp, to writhe. Sw. varpa, id.]

Zogh [Thogh] I suld sitt to domysday
With my tong to wrabbe and wry,
Certenly all her aray
It beth neuyr descryuyd for me.

Prophecia Thome de Erseldoun, MS. Cotton, ap. Minstrelsy Border, ii. 275.

It seems properly to signify, writhe, as synon. with wry. It is perhaps allied to Moes.-G. wraiuu, curvus.

To WRABIL, v. n. "To crawl about."

Rudd. more properly, to move in a slow undulating manner, like a worm ; to wriggle ; S. warble, wurble ; as, to wurble in or out.

It is sometimes used actively, as to warble, or wurble, one's self out, to get out of confinement of any kind by a continuation of twisting motions.

About hir palpis, but fere, as thare modyr,
The twa twynnyis smal childer ying,
Sportand ful tye gan do wrabil and hing.

Doug. Virgil, 266, 1.

Warple is used in the same sense, S.B.

At greedy glale, or warpling on the green,
She 'clipt them a', and gar'd them look like draff.
Ross's Helenore, p. 17.

Teut. wurzel-en, Belg. werrel-en, gyros agere, in orbem versare. Belg. werrel is used in composition, to denote the joints of the back-bone ; as would seem, from their power of flexion. Perhaps these terms are allied to Su.-G. hwirfl-a, to move in a circle, in gyrum agere ; whence hwirfwel, vertex, hwirfla, in orbem cito agere ; Ibra.

[WRACHE, s. A wretch, Lyndsay, The Dreame, l. 1076. V. WRAIK.]

WRACHIIS, Doug. Virgil. V. WRAITH.

WRACK, s. Dog's grass, Gramen caninum, Triticum repens, Linn., Roxb.

Perhaps denominated Wrack, because, as it greatly infests some soils, it is harrowed out in the fall, and burnt. V. WRAK, s., sense 3.

[To WRACK, v. a. To worry, tease, torment, Clydes.

An' crabbit names an' stories wrack us,
An' grate our lug.
Burns, Scotch Drink, l. 3.]

To WRACK up, v. n. "This day's wrackin' up," it is clearing up, Clydes.; merely a provincial pronunciation of E. Rack, v.

WRACK-BOX, s. The oval vesicle full of air, growing on some species of seaweed.

"Wrack-boxes, little oval-formed boxes, full of air, —adhering to—sea-weed ;" Gall. Enc. [Bladder-wrack, Fucus vesiculosus.]

WRAIGHLY, adv. [Wretchedly. V. WREGH.]

The verray cause of his come I knew nocht the cace,
Bot wondir wraighly he wrought, and all as of were.

Gawan and Gol., l. 13.

"Untowardly," Pink. But it may signify, wretchedly, from A.-S. wraecca, wretched ; or rather strangely, from wraeclice, peregrine, "on pilgrimage, in a strange country, farre from home," Somner.

WRAIK, WRACKE, WRAK, s. 1. Revenge, vengeance.

O Turnus, Turnus, ful hard and heuy wraik
And sorouful vengeance yit sal the ouertalk.
Doug. Virgil, 228, 44.

2. Anger, wrath.

For paciently the Goddis wraik, him thoct,
Schew that by fate Ence was thiddir brocht.
Doug. Virgil, 369, 21.

3. Destruction ; wreck, E.

Fyfe wrakys syndry has oure-tayne
Of Goddis lykyng this Bretayne ;

Quhen Psychtys warrayd it stoutly,
And wan of it a gret party;
Syne the Romany try bute gate
Of Bretayne.—

Wyntoun, l. 13. 27.

It is sometimes written wrack.

"To make any publick dispute I thought it not safe, being myself alone, and fearing, above all evils, to be the occasion of any divisions, which was our certain wrack." Baillie's Lett., i. 132.

4. As denoting one who threatens or brings vengeance or destruction.

This vengeabil wraik, in sic forme changit thus,
Euin in the face and visage of Turnus
Can fle, and flaf, and made him for to growe,
Scho soundis so with mony hiss and how.

Doug. Virgil, 444, 19.

This is spoken of one of the Furies,—

Clept to surname Dire, wikkil as fyre,
That is to say, the Goddis wraik and ire.

Ibid. 443, 80.

This seems to determine the origin of E. wretch, as properly denoting one who is the object of vengeance.

[WRAIKFUL, adj. Revengeful, Douglas.]

A.-S. wraec, wraece, wracu, Belg. wraecke, ultio, vindicta. A.-S. wraecc-an, Su.-G. wraek-a, Moes.-G. wrik-an, ulcisci.

[WRAIT, WRATE, pret. Wrote, Lyndsay, Sq. Meldrum, l. 24.]

WRAITH, WRAYTH, WRAITHE, WRETH, s.

1. Properly, an apparition in the exact likeness of a person, supposed by the vulgar to be seen before, or soon after death, S. V. GL Sibb. A. Bor. id. also swarth.

This goddess than furth of ane bois cloude
In liknes of Enee did schape and schroude
Ane vode figure, but strenth or curage bald,
The quhilk wonderus monstoure to behald
With Troiane wappinnis and armour grathis sche,—
Sic lik as, that thay say, in diuers placis
The wraithis walkis of goistis that ar dede.

Doug. Virgil, 341, 42.

Thiddir went this wrayth or schado of Enee.

Ibid. 342, 21.

Imago, Virg.

Nor yit nane vane wrethis nor gaistis quent
Thy chare constrenit bakwart for to went.

Ibid. 339, 15.

It seems to be the same word that is elsewhere written wrachis, from the similarity of c and t in MSS.

And were not his expert mait Sibylla
Taucht him thay war bot vode gaistis all tha,
But ony bodyis, as waundlerand wrachys waist,
He had apoun thame ruschit in grete haist.

Ibid. 173, 27.

Mr. Tooke expl. this vapours, as synon. with rack, rak; justly commending Rudd. for not altering the text. But how can the learned writer excuse himself for using this liberty with respect to wrethis, Doug. Virgil, 339, 15; wrachis, 341, 42; and wrayth, 342, 21, which he alters to wrechis, wrachis, and wraych? V. Divers. Purley, ii. 393.

"Phi. And what means these kindes of spirits, when they appear in the shadow of a person newly dead, or to die, to his friends?"

"Epi. When they appear vpon that occasion, they are called Wraithes in our language: Amongst the Gentiles the diuell used that much, to make them beleue that it was some good spirit that appeared to them then, either to forewarne them of the death of their friend, or else to discover unto them the will of the defunct, or what was the way of his slaughter; as it is written in the booke of the histories prodigious." King James's Daemonologie, Works, p. 125.

"The wraith, or spectral appearance, of a person shortly to die, is a firm article in the creed of Scottish superstition. Nor is it unknown in our sister kingdom. See the story of the beautiful lady Diana Rich.—Aubrey's Miscellanies, p. 89." Minstrelsy Border, I. Introd. CLXVI.

This word is used in the same sense, A. Bor. Fitch synon.; only it seems restricted to "the apparition of a person living." GL Grose.

2. The term is sometimes used, but improperly, to denote a spirit supposed to preside over the waters.

The wraiths of angry Clyde complain.

Lewis's Tales of Wonder, No. 1.

Hence the designation, water-wraith, S.

Scarce was he gane, I saw his ghost,

It vanish'd like a shriek of sorrow;

Thrice did the water-wraith ascend.

And gave a doleful groan thro' Yarrow.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 155.

"I believe gin ye had seen me than (for it was just i' the glomin') ataakin about like a hallen shaker, you wou'd hae taen me for a water-wraith, or some gruesome ghaist." Journal from London, p. 4.

The wraith of a living person does not, as some have supposed, indicate that he shall die soon. Although in all cases viewed as a premonition of the disembodied state; the season, in the natural day, at which the spectre makes its appearance, is understood as a certain presage of the time of the person's departure. If seen early in the morning, it forbodes that he shall live long, and even arrive at old age; if in the evening it indicates that his death is at hand.

Rudd. says, "F. ab. A.-S. wraeth-an, infestare." Other conjectures have been thrown out, that have no greater probability.

The term might be allied to Su.-G. raa, genius loci, whence Sioeran, a Nereid, a Nymph. In Dalekaria, as Ithre informs us, (vo. Raa), spectres are to this day called raadend. But I rather incline to deduce it from Moes.-G. ward-jan, A.-S. ward-an, Alem. ward-en, custodire; as the apparition, called a wraith, was supposed to be that of one's guardian angel. A.-S. ward, Isl. ward, Alem. ward, all signify a guardian, a keeper. Now the use of swarth, S. B. shows that the letters have been transposed, in one or other of the terms; so that the original pronunciation may have been ward or wart.

When the maid informed the disciples, that the apostle Peter was standing before the gate of the house in which they were assembled, they said, "It is his angel," Acts xii. 15. This exactly corresponds to the idea still entertained by the vulgar. If literally rendered, in our language, it would be, "It is his wraith," i.e., his guardian angel. For the notion, that every one had a tutelary angel, who sometimes appeared in his likeness, was not peculiar to the Jews, but received by the ancient Persians, by the Saracens, and by many other Gentile nations. V. Wolf, Cur. Philol. in loc.

WRAITH, s. Prob. provision, food.

The yunger scho wond upon land weil neir,
Richt solitar beneath the buss and breir,
Quhyle on the corns and wraith of labouring men,
As outlaws do, scho maid an easy fen.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 144.

"Waste," GL Ramsay. But it seems rather to signify, provision, food; Su.-G. ward, Isl. ward, al;

A.-S. ge-weordung hus, refectory, Gl. Aelfric; from Su.-G. war-a, to eat.

WRAITH. As a s., wrath; as an adj., wroth.

WRACK, WRAIK, WRACK, WRECK, WREK, s.

1. Whatever is thrown out by the sea, as broken pieces of wood, sea-weed, &c., S.

2. It is often appropriated to sea-weed, S.

"The Polack—is frequently caught close by the shore, almost among the wrack or ware." Barry's Orkney, p. 295.

"Rackwick, near a place where sea wrack, or weed, is thrown in with impetuosity." Ibid. p. 224.

"The shores abound with plenty of fine broad leaved rich sea-weed or wreck for manure." P. Ballantrae, Ayr. Statist. Acc., i. 113.

This receives different names in different parts of S. "Button wrack, and lady wrack, are best for kelp, and the only kinds used, unless the price be very high. Except these two kinds, every other is very expensive in manufacturing, and produces but little kelp." P. Kilfinichen, Argyles. Statist. Acc., xiv. 181, 182.

"There are amongst them that will not suffer the wrack to be taken off their land, because (say they) it keeps the corn warm." Pennecuik's Tweeddale, p. 6.

"Cause pull up and gather carefully the wreck, or roots of weeds and grass, into heaps, upon the laboured ground, burn them, and spread the ashes." Maxwell's Sci. Trans., p. 11, 12.

"The kinds most prevalent are, the sheldrick in all its varieties, of wild radish, wild mustard, &c. the thistle, the dock-weed, and couch-grass, called here wreck." Agr. Surv. Mid Loth., p. 145.

4. Trash, refuse of any kind.

Ane wreche sall half na mair,
Bot ane schort scheit, at heid and felt,
For all his wrek and wair.
For all the wrak a wreche can pak,
And in his baggis imbrace,
Yet deid sall tak him be the bak,
And gar him cry Allace!

Blyth, Bannatyne Poems, p. 182.

Lord Hailes confounds this word with Frack, ready, q. v. But, in this poem, the wealth of a miser is represented as mere trash, because he can carry nothing away with him, when he leaves this world; and is therefore characterized by two metaph. terms; both used to denote the refuse cast out by the sea, wrek and wair. Wrak is used in the same sense in another poem.

Quhill I had ony thing to spend,
And stuffit weill with warldis wrak,
Among my friends, I wes weill kend.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 184, st. 2.

Su.-G. wrak not only signifies what in E. is properly denominated wreck, but any thing that is of little value, mere trash; Dan. wrag, id. This, however, has not been the original form of the word, but rak, rek. Thus wag-rek, bona naufragii, is from wag, waag, a wave, and rek-a, to cast away, to drive, q. what is driven ashore by the waves. Su.-G. rak is synon. with wagrek; Ihre, vo. Reka. Wagrek seems to be the origin of O. Fr. wareck, whence Skene improperly deduces ware; L. B. waret-um, waret-um, Jus warei. Isl. hrak, res abjecta; Olav. Lex Run.

WRAKER, WRACKER, s. A person appointed to inspect the barrels made for packing fish.

"That the saids preveist and baillies of Edinburgh, Aberdene, &c. sall appoint ane discrete man to be visitour, wraker, gager, and birnar of the saids treis." Acts Ja. VI., 1584, Ed. 1814, p. 302. Wracker, Ed. Skene and Murray.

This seems to denote one, who, as he had a right to inspect the treis or barrels made for packing fish, was authorised to reject those that were insufficient, or did not correspond with the standard: Teut. wrack, improbus, rëjculus, vilis; (Belg. wrak, naught, bad); wreck-en, to disapprove, to reject; judicare mercem non esse probam, Kilian; wracker, ultor; vindex.

To WRAMP, v. a. To sprain any part of the body, S. Cumb. I've wrampit my kute, I have sprained my ancle.

That this word has, in the Gothic dialects, signified to distort in general, appears from Belg. wrempen, although used in a restricted sense, to distort the mouth.

WRAMP, s. 1. A twist or sprain, S.

It will be better than swine seam
For any wramp or minyie.

Watson's Coll., i. 60.

2. Used to denote violence in a metaph. sense.

"It had been more pertinent for him to be grieved for the wounds and wramps, stabs and strokes his mother the church of Scotland hath received, and given by himself and others her untender children," &c. Society Contendings, p. 311.

WRANDLY, adv. Without intermission; or, with much contention, w used as a vowel.

The Scottis war hurt, and part of thaim war slayn;
So fair assay thair couth noch mak agayn.
Be this the host approachand was full ner;
Thus wrandly thair held thaim upon ster.

Wallace, iv. 644, MS.

Fris. wrant, a litigious person, wrant-en, to litigate.

WRANG, s. 1. Wrong, S.

And gyff that ony man thaim by
Had ony thing that wes worthy,—
With rycht or wrang it have wald thair.

Barbour, i. 209, MS.

2. It denotes such an injury as implies civil injustice; used as a forensic term.

—"Vnjustlie, and against the law, with wouch, wrang and vnlaw." Quon. Attach., c. 80.

The only word in the Lat. copy corresponding with "wouch and wrang" is injus.

3. One of the terms used S. B. to denote the supposed effects of witchcraft; synon. Ill.

The jizzen bod wi' ranty leaves was sauld--
 Jean's paps wi' sa't and water washen clean,
 Reed that her milk get wrang, fan it was green.
Ross's Helenore, p. 13.

WRANG, adj. 1. Not proper, unjust, S.

2. Injurious, S.

3. Left. Wrang hand, left hand.

"Because the riverse of Tiber severit thaim fra the Romane landis on thair richt handis, thay turnit thaim on thair wrang handis, and ran with feirs incursiounis throw the samin." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 25. Ad lac- sum, versal, Lat.

4. Not in the exercise of reason, insane; as,
 "He's quite wrang," i.e., completely deranged, S.

To WRANG, v. a. 1. To injure, to wrong, S.

2. To wrang one's sell, to be guilty of falsehood or perjury; a soft mode of expression,
 S. B.

WRANGOUS, WRANGWIS, WRANGWISS, adj.

1. Wrong, not proper.

Wyss men said, Nay, it war bot derysioun,
 To croun him King bot voice of the parlyment,
 For thair wyst nocht gyff Scotland wald consent.
 Othir sum said, it was the wrangwis place.

Wallace, viii. 649, MS.

2. In reference to play, used to denote a bad or false move, S. B.

If Lindy chanc'd, as synle was his lot,
 To play a feckless or a wrangous shot;
 Jeering they'd say, poor Lindy's mauchless grown.

Ross's Helenore, p. 17.

3. Wrongful, unjust; Wyntown.

"As God in nature is a just judge, euen so man by nature is a wrangous and vnjust judge." Rollock on 2 Thes., p. 19.

In this sense the phrase wrangous imprisonment is used in our law to denote what in E. is called "false imprisonment."

—For be thift,
 Oppyn refe, or wrangous gyft,
 Or wyth falshad, all I wan
 The gud, that I dyspendyd than.

Wyntown, VI. 13. 38.

Wise or wis is merely A.-S. wise, manner, used as a term, in many words in that language, forming the s, to which it is affixed into an adj., as riht-wise, whence E. right-cous. The Isl. term is vis; the Su.-G. wis, as raet-wis, righteous, fraeg-wis, inquisitive.

WRANGOUSLY, adv. Wrongfully, unjustly,
 Loth.

WRANGIS, WRAYNGIS, s. pl. "The ribs or floor timbers of a ship; Fr. varangues, id." Rudd.

The talloned burdis kest ane pikky low,
 Upblessis ouerloft, hetschis, wrangis, and how.

Doug. Virgil, 276, 33.

Thare cabillis now, and thare hede towis reparis,
 And gan to forge newlie wrayngis and aris.

Ibid. 153, 7.

VOL. IV.

To WRAPLE, [WARPLE,] v. a. To entangle, to warp, S. B. [Warple is more common.]

For Nory's heart began to cool full fast,
 When she fand things had taken sic a cast,
 And see throw ither wrapl'd were, that she Began to dreid atweesh them what might be.

Ross's Helenore, p. 84.

There seems to be no reason to doubt that this is originally the same with Wrabil, q. v.; although the term is here used in a metaph. sense.

WRAP-RASCAL, s. A kind of close great coat.

"His dress was also that of a horse-dealer—a closebuttoned jockey-coat, or wrap-rascal, as it was then termed, with huge metal buttons," &c. Heart of M.
 Loth., ii. 17.

Rascal-wrapper is used by some E. writers in the same sense.

WRAT, s. A wart or hard rough excres-cence, chiefly on the fingers, S.

"He who would rightly draw a mans portrature must paint his blemishes as well as his beautie: la such a case his wrats & his wrinkles must be wrought with the pinsell, that the image may bee like unto himselfe." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1051.

"Verruca, a wrat." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 19.

O. E. "Wrette. Ueruca." Prompt. Parv.

Black hairy wrats, about an inch between,
 Outthrow her fize were like mustaches seen.

Ross's Helenore, First El., p. 30.

WRATTIE, adj. Abounding with warts, S.

WRATTIENESS, s. The state of being warty,
 Clydes.

WRATACK, s. A dwarf, S. B.

There's wratacks, and cripples, and cranshaks,
 And all the wandoghts that I ken,
 No sooner they speak to the wenches,
 But they are taen far enough ben.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 149.

This would seem to resemble Gael. bridack, or cruitecan; both, according to Shaw, signifying dwarf.

[WRATCH, s. A wretch, S.]

To WRATCH, v. a. To fatigue one's self, to overstrain by any kind of exertion, Ettr.
 For.

From the same origin with E. wretch; A.-S. wrac-
an, agitare, infingere.

To WRATCH, WRETCH, v. n. To become niggardly, S. V. RICH, v.

Belg. wrek, wreckig, niggardly, covetous.

WRATE, pret. v. Apparently, died.

Nynteyn yhere held he his state,
 And in the twentyd yere he wrate.—
 Of his kynrik the twentyd yere
 He deyd, and wes brought on bere.

Wyntown, ix. 10. 44.

Sa fyftene yere he held that state,
 And in the sextend yere he wrate.

Ibid. 26. 18.

Perhaps Moes.-(t. wrat-on, to go, to make a journey.
 whence, most probably, Isl. rat-a, peregrinari; q. departed this life.

WRATWEL, VRATWELL, s. A small narrow slip of skin, that rises up on the side of the finger, near the nail, and becomes troublesome, sometimes inflaming, S. V. WARTWEILL.

WRAUL, s. A dwarfish creature, Fife; synon. Wirl, Wrout, Wurl. V. WARWOLF.

WREAD, WREATH, s. A place for inclosing cattle, S.

A.-S. wraeth, munimen, a fortification or inclosure. Sa.-G. wret, a small field, an inclosure, reit, Isl. reit-r, id. Nepnareit-r, naporum septum, a small inclosure for rearing rapes or turnips. West Goth. Laws, biugg reit, agellus hordeo consitus; Ihre, vo. Wret.

WREAT, s. 1. Writing; from the pronunciation in some counties, q. wrait.

—"And that thair said conference be put in wreat, and reportit to our said souerane Lord and thrie estates," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1578, Ed. 1814, p. 106.

2. In pl. writings, q. writs.

—"And all vthers wreats, richts, titills," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vol. v. 83.

• WREATH, s. 1. Wreath on a clue, a phrase used when one winds many threads in the same direction above each other, Dumfr.

2. Wreath of Snaw, Snaw—Wreath, Snaw-Wride, a snowdrift, a heap of snow blown up by the wind, S.

"Was that the same Tam Linton that was precipitated from the Broad Law by the break of a snaw wreath?" Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 320.

"Snaw wrides, wreaths of snow;" Gall. Enc.

KAIM'D WREATH. A wreath of which the top is turned, or as it were combed over, and the face of it straight, Ettr. For.

[WRECHITNES, s. Misery, Barbour, i. 224; cowardice, ix. 76, Edin. MS.]

WRECK, s. The roots of weeds gathered from arable land, piled up, in order to their being carried off or burnt, S. V. WRAK, s., sense 3.

WREDE, s. A wreath. V. WRIDE.

WREE, s. An instrument for cleansing grain, by separating that which is shelled from what retains the husks, Loth.; pron. also REE, q. v.

To WREE, v. a. To separate shelled from unshelled grain. As applied to pulse, to cleanse it from the sand, Loth.

This is distinguished from riddling; as in the latter operation, every thing is allowed to pass through the sieve except the straw. By the way, I may remark that, although Skinner naturally enough deduces A.-S. hriddel, a sieve, from hreidd-an, liberare, because grain is thus freed from the chaff, he does not seem to have observed that Teut. red-en, signifies to sift, whence Germ. reyter-en, id.

To WREE, v. a. To writhe. V. WRIT.

WREGII, s. Wretch; [wreghtly, wretchedly.]

A wregh to were a nobill scarlet gown;
A badlyng, furring pursillit wele with sable;—
It may wele ryme, bot it accoris nought.

Ballad, 1508, S. P. R., iii. 125.

A.-S. wraecca, an exile; also, a wretch; Somner. To this Isl. wary-r, exul, and Su.-G. wary, latro, are evidently allied.

To WREIL, WRELE, v. n. "To wriggle, turn about," Rudd.

Quha is attaychit vnto ane stak, we se
May go no farther, but wreil about that tre:
Rycht so am I to Virgyllis text ibound,
I may not fle, les then my fault be found.

Doug. Virgil, 8, 27.

And first Sorgesst behynd sone left has he Wreland on skellyis, and vndeippis of the sa.
Ibid. 134, 51.

Luctantem, struggling, is the word used by Virg. in the latter passage. In the former, wriggle seems correspondent, as there is an evident allusion to the barbarous custom of tying a cock to a tree, and throwing at it.

Rudd. views it as probably corr. from wriggle. It seems nearly synon. with O. E. wrall, which Junius renders, curam atque sollicitudinem alicui rei impendere. It occurs in a work ascribed to Chaucer.

In winning all their witts they wrall.

Ploughmans Tale, v. 349.

Junius derives it from Dan. wrolig, discurior animo, disquietor; wrolig sinde, mens distracta.

To WREIST, WRIST, WREST, v. a. To sprain any part of the body, S. wramp, synon.

Hay as ane brydlit catt I brank!

I haif wreistit my schank.—

Quhilk of my leggis, as ye trow,

Was it that I hurt now!

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 43.

"He, going through Aberdeen,—unhappily wrested his coot or leg." Spalding's Troubles, i. 287.

Like E. wrest, from A.-S. wraest-an, intorquere.

WRIEST, s. 1. A writhe or twist; in reference to the mode of tuning a musical instrument.

Their instrumentis all maist war fidillis lang,

But with a string quhilk neuer a wriest yeid wrang.

Palice of Honour, ii. 4.

2. A sprain, S.; wramp, synon.

First shear it small, and rind it sine,

Into a kettle clean and fine,

It will be good against the pine

Of any wriest or strienyie.

Watson's Coll., l. 60.

WREK, s. Refuse. V. WRAK.

WRETCH, WRECHE, s. A niggard, a covetous person, S.

Be not ane wreche, for oucht that may befall:

To that vnhappy vice and thow be thrall,

Till al men thow salbe abhominabill:

Kingis nor knightis ar neuer conuenabill

To reule pepil, be thay not liberall:

Was neuer yet na wreche to honour abill.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 258.

"Est valde avarus, he is a great wretch." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 23.

[WRETH, s. Wrath, Barbour, i. 167.]

To WRETH one's self, v. refl. To be wroth, or filled with indignation.

The King then wrethyt him encrely,
And said, "Schyr Byschop, sekirly
Gyff thou wald kep thi fewte,
Thow maid nane sic speking to me."

Barbour, l. 425, MS.

The Dowglas then his way has tane
Rycht to the hors, as he him bad;
Bot he that him is yhemself had,
Than warnyt him dispitously;
Bot he that wreth him encrely,
Fellit hym with a suerlys dynt.

Barbour, li. 138, MS.

A.-S. wraeth-ian, indigne. It may however be, wrethed himself, from A.-S. wreoth-inn, wreth-ian, in-torque, (Somner), used metaph.

WRETHLY, adv. With indignation, wrathfully.

He on his wayis wrethly went, but wene.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 133.

It is wiethly in p. 33; but wrethly in Passages not understood.

WRETT, WRITT, s. Writing, Aberd. Reg.

WREUCH, (gutt.), s. Wretchedness, Gl. Sibb.

WRIBLE, s. A quaver, the act of warbling; also written werble.

Throw the moist air dois snow qubyte swannis fle,— Wele sounding wriblis throw thare throttis lang.

Doug. Virgil, 233, 31.

Alem. wuerb-en, vertere, Teut. wervel-en, to twirl, literally, to turn round. V. WRABIL.

WRIDE, s. A wreath, as of snow, Gall.

"We say rees o' snow for wreaths of snow, and while wrides." Gall. Encycl.

—Gurly norlan' blasts wad blaw
And swarl in sneep white wrides the snaw.

Ibid. p. 352.

V. WREATH.

The word in Ang. is Wrede; as a wrede o' snaw. The s. in this form resembles Su.-G. wrid-a, torque.

WRIDY, adj. Forming wreaths, ibid.

At my ain ingle than my pawls I cud beek,

Whan that swaul'd the wridy snaw.

Song, Gall. Encycl., p. 411.

WRIG, s. 1. The youngest or feeblest bird in a nest, S.

2. A weak or puny child, or the youngest of the family, S.

A.-Bor. reckling seems to be a derivat., q. wrigling. It signifies "an unhealthy child, pig, or lamb; (also,) the nestling, or smaller bird in a nest." Wrecklin is evidently the same; "the least animal in a brood or litter;" Gl. Grose.

The origin may be Isl. wary, an exile. V. WALLI-DRAO.

WRIGGLE, s. V. WINDSKEW.

[* To WRIGGLE, v. n. To wrestle, to struggle, S.

WRIGHT, s. 1. A joiner. [Wright, Aberd.]

Wrightis walterand doune treis, wit ye but weir,
Orlanit hurdis ful hie in boltis as hair.

Gawson and Col., ii. 11

2. The general designation for all who work in wood, S.

"Wright in Scotland is the general name of all those who work in timber. The particular branch, which they pursue, is often prefixed to this name, as mill-wright, ship-wright, house-wright, wheel-wright, cart-wright, plough-wright, &c. Nothing is prefixed to it when it signifies a joiner." Agr. Surv. Roxb., p. 139.

O. E. "Wryghte. Carpentarius." Prompt. Par.

A.-S. wrighta, wurhta, a workman, one by whom anything is framed. It is evidently from wryc-an, to work.

To WRIK, v. a. To wreak, to avenge, King Hart.

A.-S. wric-an, id.

WRING, s. Deformity, blemish.

Ye sall him find but marke or wring,
Full sempill in ane criebe lying;
So lyis hee quihik yow hes wrocht,
And all this world made of nocht.

Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. G.

Qu. any deformity caused by a twist, from Teut. wring-en, torque.

WRINGLE, s. A writhing motion, S. B. either allied to E. wriggle, or to the following word. V: also WRINKLIT.

WRINK, WRYNK, s. 1. A turning or winding.

Als fele wrinkis and turnys can sche mak,
As dois the swallo with hir plumes blak,
Fleand and seirand swiftlie thare and here.

Doug. Virgil, 428, 31

2. A trick, a fraud, a subterfuge, as synon. with wyle.

Pardonaris gettis no cheretie,
Withowt that we debat it,
Amangis the wyvis with wrinkis and wylis;
As all my mervellis men begylis
Be our fair fals flattery.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 61

Now ar noucht thre may traistly trow the ferdie:
Welth is away, and wit is worthin wrynkis.

Ballade, 1503, S. P. R., iii. 131

i.e., Wisdom has become mere guile.

This is the same with O. E. wrenche.

O graceles, ful blind is thy conceite,
Fer nothing art thou ware of the disceite,
Which that this fox yshapen hath to thee;
His wily wrenches thou ne mayst not flee.

Chaucer's Fem. T., v. 1549.

She knewe eche wrenche and every gise
Of love, and every secret wile.

Rom. Rose, v. 431.

Wrenke occurs in the same sense.

The kyng com to London, with lawe to mote in beak,
Men sauh on the kyng's side ther was no gile, no wrenke.
R. Brune, p. 31.

A.-S. wrenc, wrence, fraud, dolus, stratagem. Isl. reinki, fraudulentus. The source is Teut. wrack-en, wreck-en, to bend, to turn. Hence wrink primarily, as we have seen, denotes a winding. Teut. rancke, rencke, is used in both senses; flexus, flexus viarum; also, fallacia, astutia; Germ. ranke. Hence, WRINKLIT, part. adj. Intricate, having many turnings.

Se, as thay say, vmquille the hous in Crete,
Hate Labyrinthus, with mony went and strete,
Had wrinklit wallis, ane thousand slichtis wrocht,
For to dissaue all vncouth therin brocht.

Doug. Virgil, 147, 20.

This same labyrinth is elsewhere described as Full of wrinklit ouerturnabil dissait.

Ibid. 163, 22.

WRITE, WRYT, s. 1. Writing, as contrasted with verbal communication, S.; [wryt, book, treatise, Barbour]; Writ, "any thing written," E.

"It is industriously and maliciously spread both by word and write." Walker's Peden, ix.

2. Used as expressing the size of the handwriting. Sma' write, small text; Grit, Big, or Muckle write, round text.

WRITER, s. An attorney, or solicitor, S.

I've been at drunken writers' feasts.—

Burns, l. 139.

WRITHNEB, s. The designation of a sow.

—Wrotok and Writhneb—

Colkelbie Sow, F. l. v. 163.

The origin is obvious.

WRO, WROO, s. A shelter for cattle, Ayrs., synon. cross-dykes.

Nere Sandforth ther is a wroo,
And nere that wro is a well;

A ston ther is the wel even fro.—

True Thomas, Jamieson's Popul. Ball., ii. 39.

"MS. Cott. broo, i.e., brow, brae, or rising ground." N. ibid.

[WROCHT, pret. and part. pa.] Worked, wrought, done, Barbour, i. 94, 471.]

WROIK, s. Spite, revenge.

—Saturnus get Juno,
That can of wraith and malice neuer ho,
Nor satisfyt of her auld furie nor wroik,
Has send adoun vnto the Troiane nauy
Iris—

Doug. Virgil, 148, 3.

WROKEN, part. pa. Revenged.

It wyll my mind assuage, for to be wroken
On hir quham by Troy birnt is and doun brokin.

Doug. Virgil, 58, 35.

From A.-S. wraec-an, ulcisci.

WROTOK, s. A sow.

—Wrotok and Writhneb,
Hogy ever in the eb.

Colkelbie Sow, F. l. v. 163.

From A.-S. wrot-an, subigere, rostro versare; "to roote, as the swine doth, to digge or turne up," Somner. Hence wrot, the proboscis of an elephant. Teut. wroet-en, wroet-en, suffodere.

WROUGHT-BANE, s. A sprained joint. "Wrought Banes, sprained bones with working," Gall. Enc.

Mactaggart evidently deduces this from the E. v. in its common signification, operari. But it seems rather from A.-S. weorc, dolor, cruciatus; or Teut. wroegh-en, torquere, angere; q. a bone that has been wreathed or twisted. V. WORK, v.

WROUL, s. An ill-grown person, or puny child, S. V. WARWOLF.

WRUNCH, s. A winch or windlass, Lan arks.; perhaps from Teut. wringh-en, torquere.

To WRY, WREYE, v. a. To turn, to twist.

Now the le scheyt, and now the luf thay slayk,
Set in ane fang, and threw the ra abake
Bayth to and fra, al dyd thare nokkys wry.

Doug. Virgil, 156, 17.

Wrie is used by Chaucer in a similar sense

This Phebus gan awayward for to wrien;

Him thought his woful herte brast atwo.

Manciples T., v. 17211.

"To turn, to incline;" Tyrwhitt. A.-S. wrig-an, tendere. Aelc geceast wrigath with his gecyndes; Omnis creatura tendit iuxta ejus naturam; Boet., c. 25.

To wreye is used by James I.

So tolter quhilum did sche it to wreye,
There was bot clymbe and rycht downward hye;
And sum were eke that fallyng had sore.

King's Quair, v. 13.

This is a description of the wheel of fortune. A.-S. to-writh-an, signifying detorque; perhaps we may rather trace the term to writh-an, than to wrig-an.

To WRY, v. a. To cover, to conceal.

This seems to be the meaning in the following passage, rather than, oppose, contradict, as expl. by Rudd.

—Quha sa vehement fyre
Draif from thare schippis thus wise birnand schire?
The dede is auld for to beleif or wry,
Bot the memor remains perpetually.

Doug. Virgil, 276, 44.

It is used by Chaucer in the literal sense.

He is ay angry as is a pissemire,
Though that he have all that he can desire,
Though I him wrie a-night, and make him warm.

Sompnours T., v. 7409.

A.-S. wre-on, wri-on, wrig-an, tegere, operire, celare, abscondere.

Fraunces gives this v. as synon. with Hyll, our Heal or Heild. "Wry-yn or hyllyn. Tego. Operio. Cooperia. Delo." Prompt. Parv.

[WSCHYNG, s.] Errat. for Yschyng, q. v. Barbour, vi. 363, Edin. MS.]

[WTELAUYS, s. pl.] Outlaws, Barbour, ii. 493.]

WTEW, prep. Without; for outwith; "Wtew the schyr;" Aberd. Reg. Cent. 16.

[WTOUTH, adv.] Outwards, forwards, Barbour, ii. 299.]

WUD, adj. Mad; furious, &c. V. WOD.

WUDLINS, adv. With great eagerness, Buchan.

Then ilka wanter wudlins jinks
To hear a tune.

Tarraz's Poems, p. 12.

V. WOD, WUD. In the wud o't. To wud is added the adverbial particle ins. V. LINGOS.

WUDSCUD, s. A mad romping boy or girl, Ang.

From wud, mad, and E. skud, to run away with precipitation, Sw. skutt-a, id.

WUDDIEFU', s. V. WIDDIE-FOW.

WUDDIEFU', adj. Cross-tempered, Dumfr.

Perhaps the term, as thus used, should be traced to Teut. woede, furor; q. full of wrath.

WUDDRUM, WOODRUM, s. 1. A state of confusion, especially what is caused by something sudden and unexpected, S.

2. A wild fit, an obstinate extravagant humour, Loth.; as, "He took a wuddrum, and nothing would serve him but he would leave his father's house, and tak on for a soldier." V. WIDDENDREME.

WUDWISE, s. "A yellow flower, which grows on bad land, and has a bitter taste;" Gall. Enc.

Perhaps the Genista Tinctoria, Dyer's weed or Wood-wazen, E.

WUFF, s. "A person of a flighty, fiery, disposition;" Gall. Enc.; perhaps from S. Wouf, a wolf, especially as Isl. ulfud, the derivative of ulf, lupus, signifies animus infestus, ferinus.

WUGGLE, s. A bog or marsh, S. B. V. WAGGLE.

WUISH, pret. Washed, Clydes.

WULD, WULL, adj. Wild, S. B.

—"He looks as wuld as a hunted tod whene'er he speaks aboot ye." St. Kathleen, iv. 96.

WULLCAT, s. A wild cat, S.

"The hale court was thunner-struck, an' glowred at ane anither like wullcats." Brownie o' Bodsbeck, ii. 24.

"He bad me be aff in a minute; an', fogs! I didna need a second bidden, for he lookit like a wulcat ready to eat me up, an' made his chains clank sae dowiely, that I thoct they war hingin aboot mysell." St. Kathleen, iv. 142.

To TUMBLE THE WULLCAT. To leap the somersault, to whirl heels over head, S.; syn. Catnaw.

To TURN THE WULLCAT. A phrase denoting "the art of grasping the bough of a tree with the hands, and turning the body through between it and the bough;" Gall. Enc., 453.

WULLIE-WAGTAIL, s. "The water-wagtail bird;" Gall. Enc.

Twa burdies, 'neath the easle o' an auld house,
Sat chirpling out their wail;

The tane o' them was the Robin Breestie,
And the tither the Wullie Wagtail.

Ibid., p. 412

WULLSHOCH, s. "A timid courter," Gall. Enc.

It is added; "Wullyart and Wullshoch are one." The termination shoch may be allied to A.-S. sec, used in composition as signifying avidus, appetens valde. V. Somner in vo.

WULLSOME, adj. Wild. V. under WILL, adj.

WUMMIL, s. An auger, S.A.; corr. from E. Wimble.

WUMMILTON, or WUMMILTON'S MUTCH, a name given to the Four of Clubs in the game of Whist, Teviotd.

WUND-BAND, s. An iron hoop put round any splintered or spliced work for the purpose of strengthening or holding it together, Roxb.

Teut. wind-en, torquere.

WUNGALL, s. A tumor on the sole of the foot, filled with a watery humour, occasioned by walking in tight shoes, Berwicks.

Evidently corrupted from E. windgall, a term properly applied to the fetlock of a horse.

WUNTLIN', s. The act of wriggling from passion, Dumfr.

"Patience! an' ye tak thae wuntlins and tirievies this way, we'll hae tae get the road postet tae hand ye up." Saint Patrick, ii. 267.

Teut. wendel-en, windtel-en, volvare, circumagere, circumvolvare.

To WUP, v. a. To bind with a thread or cord; [wuppit, bound.] V. OOP.

[To WUPPLE, v. a. To roll up, to roll tight, Shetl.]

[WUR, pret. Were, Clydes.]

To WURBLE, v. n. To wriggle, Tweed. V. WRABIL, v.

To WURBLE, v. a. To tie a broken thread; a term used by weavers, Renfr.

To WURDLE, v. u. To labour diligently without much prospect of success, Clydes.

Perhaps from Teut. wordel, verticillus, the whirl of a spindle, S. whorle; as referring to the slow progress made at the rock.

WURDY, adj. Worth, worthy, deserving. V. WERDY.

WURF, s. A puny, ill-conditioned child, Dumfr.; obviously from Warwolf, Wernwolf, q. v.

WURF-LIKE, adj. Having a stunted and puny appearance, ibid.

"Let go my arm this meenit, ye wyle wurf-like waddiefa o' sin." Saint Patrick, ii. 191. V. URR.

WURGILL, s. "A person of narrow mind, given to the world's care;" Gall. Enc.

Wurling is mentioned as synon. Wurling must here signify worldling. A.-S. orgylde denotes "one for whose life, as being justly taken from him, no satisfaction is due;" Somner. Isl. virgull, laqueus, a snare. But I question if the term has any affinity to either of these.

WURL, s. The same with Wroul, a dwarf-fish person. Hence, WURLIE, 1. Contemptibly puny, or small in size; as "a wurlie bodie," an ill-grown person, Fife, Loth.

There's nae a pilchard in my creel,
Nor wurlie sprat, nor garvie sma';
They're firm an fat, an' sheen like steel;
Come buy a wheen, an' let's awa'.

MS. Poem.

V. WROUL.

2. Rough, knotted; as, "wurlie rung," a knotted stick, S.

It is applied to a stick that is distorted, Lanarks. As this sense, however, is considerably remote from the other, the term may have had a different origin.

3. Wrinkled, applied to a person; as, a wurly body, Lanarks.

WURLIN, WURLYON, s. A child or beast that is unthriven Roxb.; synon. Cryle. V. WORLIN.

"Hand abye! ye scruntet like wurlyon o' the pit! hand abye!" Saint Patrick, ii. 313.

To WURN, v. n. To be peevish and still complaining, Loth. V. WIRM.

To WURP, v. n. To be fretful; wurpin', fretting, Upp. Lanarks.

WURP, s. A fretful peevish person, ibid.

WURPIT, part. adj. Fretful, peevish, ibid.

Obviously only a provincial deviation from the v. to Orp, q. v.

To WURR, v. n. To snarl as a dog, Fife; synon. with Yirr; [wurrin, snarling.]

Isl. verr-a, id. whence verre, a dog; also wrr-a, hir-rir, whence wrr, hirritus, and wrr, canis.

[To TIRR-WURR, v. n. To dispute angrily, Clydes., Perth.]

[WURR. 1. As a s., the snarl of a dog; a fit of bad temper, S.

2. As an interj., used to incite dogs to fight, S.]

WURSUM, s. Purulent matter. V. WOUR-SUM.

WUSS, s. Juice, moisture, Berwicks., Roxb.

Baccowuss, the juice produced by chewing tobacco. It is also said of this leaf, when it is very dry; "The wuss is a' out o' that tobacco." But the latter part of the word must be very ancient. For it is obviously the same with A.-S. wos, wose, liquor, succus; Isl. væsa, mador, humor, væsa, aqua, wos, udor vestium. It is evident, from A.-S. Ussa, also written Wusa, the name of the river Ouse, that C.B. Usc, from which it has been changed, properly signifying water, has had a common origin with the Goth. ternis.

[WUSS, s. and v. Wish, Clydes.]

WUZLIE, WOZLIE, WISLIE, adj. 1. "A wuzlie body," one whose face is meagre or much shrivelled, Roxb.

2. Applied to one who is dwarfish or stunted in growth, or who has not a healthful appearance; also Wuzlie-like, Loth.

Perhaps this is merely Dan. usal, miserable, sorry, wretched; Isl. osael, miser. Hence, osaelleg-r, used in the same sense with our word, aspectu miser, macer.

However, it may be a derivative from E. weasel; q. having the shrivelled appearance of that small animal. Or it may be the same with Ozelly, q. v.

[WY, s. A way, Shetl.]

WYANDOUR, s. A gud wyandour, one who lives or feeds well.

This Kyng wes wys and debonare;

Gud wyandour, and fed hym fare.

Wynetown, ix. 10, 40.

Fr. viand-er, to feed. Mr. Macpherson has observed, that Chaucer, "in the description of the Frankelein, has viended, well supplied with meat."

[WYCHT, adj. and s. V. WICHT.]

WYDE, s. A vacancy; for void.

"To oupmak all wydis and waistis." Aberd. Reg.

WYDE, s. Weed, dress. V. GIDE.

To WYF, WYIF, v. a. To weave; wyffin, woven.—"Wyf ane lynyng wob;" Aberd. Reg. V. 16.

"Yarne weill wyffin & wakkit at the myln." Ibid.

Although this is a deviation from the orthography of the northern languages, wyfe is the common pronunciation of Angus and the north of S.

WYILL, adj. Vile; Aberd. Reg.

WYLE, adj. Wicked, Aberd.; evidently a corr. of Vile.

[WYKKYT, adj. Wicked; wykkytly, wickedly, Barbour, i. 195, 222.]

[To WYMPIL, v. a. To wrap, &c. V. WIMPLE.]

[To WYN, v. a. To win. V. WIN.]

To WYN and TYNE. "A man able to wyn and tyne," a man of substance, or as otherwise expressed in S., a sponsable man; Acts Town Counc. Edin. as to the Guildry.

WYNAKIR, s. Vinegar, Aberd. Reg. A. 1535.

[WYNAN, s. The half of a field, Banffs.]

WYND, s. A warrior.

Then Schir Golograss, for greif his gray ene brynt,
Wod wrath; and the wynd his handis can wryng.
Gawan and Gok., ill. 10.

In edit. 1508, it seems to be, Wod wraithand, &c.
Gerrn. winn, winne, certator, bellator; winne, bellum,
A.-S. win.

To WYND, v. a. To separate from the chaff, E. to winnow.

"And see the same bair [bear] wyndit & dycht."
Aberd. Reg., A. 1538, V. 16.

O. Teut. wind-en, given by Kilian as synonym. with wacy-en, ventilare.

To WYND one a PIRN. To do something injurious, or that will cause regret, to one, S.

"The reason of Lorn's haste was talked to be a counsel, that his father (the earl of Argyle, who resided at court) gave the king, which was, to keep his son with him, and not let him return to Scotland, or else he would wynd him a pirn; that was his expression." Guthrie's Mem., p. 36. V. PIRN.

[WYND, s. A narrow lane, S.]

WYNDE, s. A certain length of cloth.

—"That is to say,—a cabok of cheiss takin for a halfpenny of custum, a wynde off quhite claith for a penny of custum," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1493, p. 176.

This is a certain length of cloth that cannot now be determined, as the term is obsolete. Perhaps it denotes as much cloth as might wrap or wind round the body; or rather, as much as the circumference of a reel, Dan. vinde, denoting a reel, and Isl. vinna, rota.

WYNE, s. Prob., end, termination. A ridge is said to be ploughed frae end to wynd, when completely tilled; a field of corn is said to be shorn frae end to wyne, when all cut down; Upp. Clydes.

The idea seems to be, from the place where the plough enters to that where the horses wyne, i.e., turn about.

WYNE, interj. The call given by drivers to their horses to turn to the left, S.

This is from the v. Wynd, q. v. V. also HAUP.

WYNE AND ONWYNE, adv. "To the right and left hand, every where," Gl. Ross.

Seek wyne and onwyne, miss no height nor how,
And cry whene'er ye come upon a know.

Ross's Helenore, p. 45.

WYNELL, s. An alley; for S. vennal. "Passage throw the said wynell;" Aberd. Reg. V. 17.

WYNER, s. In a team, the foremost ox on the right hand; Wyners, the foremost pair, abreast; Aberd. Qu. if from the act of winding or turning?

WYNE SECT, the wine called sack.

Whether hir malisone tuik effect,
Or gif it was the gude wyne sect,
Sik ane seiknes hes he tane,
That all men trowit he had bene gane.
Leg. Bp. St. Androis, Poems 16th Cent., p. 318.

Corr. from the Fr. designation, vin sec, sack. Or the phrase may denote what is called dry wine; as Fr. vin sec denotes wine which is not rich or unctuous; Diet. Trev.

To WYNIS, v. n. To decay, to pine away, S.B. A wynist bairn, a child decayed by sickness.

Either corr. from E. vanish, or from Belg. gyn-en, to decay.

WYNLAND, part. pr. Whirling, moving in a circular manner.

—Bot the gynour
Hyt in the aspyne with a stane
And the men that tharin war gane
Sum ded, sum dosnyt, come down wynland.
Barbour, xvii. 721, MS.

Teut. windel, wendel, trochlea; wind-el-en, wendel-en, volvere, circumagere, circumvolvere; from wind-en, torquere.

WYNSCOTT, s. Wainscot. "Wynscott rauchter, heland spar;" Aberd. Reg. V. 26.

WYNSIK, s. Covetousness.

He sall clim in, and thay stand at the dure.
For warldly wynsik walkis, quhen wysar wynkis:
Wit takes na worship, sic is the aventure,
Sen want of wyse men makis fulis to sit on binkis.
Ballade, S. P. R., iii. 133.

Teut. win ge-win, gain, and soeck-en, to seek. Thus ghe-win-soecker is rendered by Kilian, Lucric, homo quæstuosus.

WYNTIT, adj. A little souped. V. WISKIT.

WYNTYR, s. 1. Winter; Wyntown, i. 13. 72.

2. A year.

Thretty wynter and foure than Edan regnyd mac-Gowran.

Wyntown, iv. & 41.

Combust, as our story sayis,—
Wes twenty wyntyr Kyng regnand.

Ibid. v. 7. 337.

It is justly observed, Gl. Wyntown, that this mode of reckoning prevailed among all the nations in high latitudes, the greatest part being put for the whole; and that, for a similar reason, the southern nations computed by summers.

The learned Spelman asserts, perhaps rather fancifully, that in honour of the infernal gods, the ancient northern nations did not reckon by days and years but by nights and winters; according to that of Tacitus, Nox diem ducit. Hence, he adds, their nocturnal sacrifices. Vo. Herthus.

Moes.-G. wintr-us, hyems; also, annua. Be the warth twalib wintrus; When he was twelve years old; Luk. ii. 42. A.-S. winter has both senses. And thus the same passage is rendered, A.-S. version; And the he was twelf wintre. Hence gewintrad, grandis ætate, grown to full age, Su.-G. winter is used in both senses; and Isl. vetur; hiema, pro integro anno, Verel.

WINTROUS, adj. Wintry, stormy.

"The more wintrous the season of the life hath becom, looks for the fairer summer of pleasures for to come." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 283.

[WYPE, s. A blow given by accident. V. WIPE.]

WYR, s. An arrow.

"Than till his boy he said in hy,
"You men will slay us, and thail may.
"Qahat wapyn has thow?" "Ha Schyr, perfay,
"I half bot a bow, and a wyr."
He talsyt the wyr, and leit it fley,
And hyt the fadyr in the ey,
Till it rycht in the barnys ran.

Barbour, v. 595, 623, MS.

Fyre occurs in the same sense, O.E.

And as a cyrs
Whiche syeth out of a myghty bowe,
Awey he fiedde for a throwe,
As he that was for loue wode,
Whan that he saw howe it stode.

Gower, Conf. Am. Fol., 28. a.

Fr. vir signifies "the arrow called a Quarrell; used only for the cross-bow;" Cotgr. Arm. bir, an arrow. Isl. ær, telum, sagitta; G. Andr.

Our term might seem allied to Su.-G. waer-ia, Belg. ge-weer, Germ. wehr, ge-wehr, ge-waer, any kind of arms or warlike instruments, from waer-ia, weer-en, wehr-en, to defend.

To WYR, WYRE, v. a. 1. To turn, to move in a circle, to whirl about.

2. To "sling down," Pink. It is used to denote the circling motion of a crane, employed by those within the walls of a besieged town, to let down burning faggots on the works of the besiegers.

Johns Crab, that had his geir all yar,
In his fagaldis has set the fyre;
And our the wall syn gan thaim wyr,
And brynt the sow till brandis bar.

Barbour, xvii. 704, MS.

— Syppring, quills wyrring
My tender body to.

Burk's Pilgr.

V. Suourz.

Su.-G. wer-a, Mod. Sax. wyr-en, Fr. vir-er, Lat. gyr-are.

WYRINGING, s. Fretting, carking, Gall.

"Whyrping and wyrring are one;" Gall. Enc., p. 479.

This might seem nearly to resemble Teut. werringhe, contentiones, dissidia, from werr-en, bellare. But I suspect that it is rather allied to A.-S. wyregung, wyrgung, wirigung, maledictio, from wirg-ian, wir-ian, wyrrig-an, maledicere; whence wirigend, wirigend, "oblocutor, maledictus, obtrektor; a backbiter, a slanderer, a detractor;" Somner.

[WYRK, s. and v. Work. V. WIRK.]

WYROCK, s. A sort of corn on the foot. V. VIRROK.

To WYRRIE, v. a. To strangle. V. WERY.

[WYSAGE, s. Visage, Barbour, i. 383.]

WYSAR, s. The visor. V. WESAR.

[To WYSE, v. a. and n. To incline. V. WISE.]

WYSS, adj. 1. Wise, prudent, S.

Eduard past south, and gert set his parliament:
He callyt Balyonne till ansuer for Scotland.
The wys lordis gert hym some brek that band.

Wallace, i. 76, MS.

Willyam Wallace, or he was man of armys,
Gret pitté thoct that Scotland tuk sic harmys.
Mekill dolour it did hym in hys mynd;
For he was wys, rycht worthy, wicht, and kynd.
Ibid. ver. 184, MS.

2. Knowing, informed, as, "Ye want ay to be sae wys;" You are so anxious to know every thing, S.

Hence wysener, better informed; as, I did na mak him any wysser; I gave him no further information, S.

A.-S. wis, sapiens; wis geworlen, certior factus, Bode, ap. Lye; Tent. wis, ghewis, Su.-G. wiss, certus; whence wisshet, certitudo, wissat, certo, forwissan-a, certam fidem facere, wissa, certa indicia. V. the v.

3. In the full exercise of reason, generally used with a negative, S.

"Anes wood, never wise, ay the worse;" S. Prov. Ferguson, p. 5.

WYSS-LIKE, adj. 1. Possessing the appearance of propriety, prudent, decent, becoming.

"Talking, too, o' thrashin ripe rigs wi' the west wind,—may look very wise-like in rhyme, but commend me to the pine-tree floor." Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1820, p. 146. This orthography does not correspond with the sound of the word in S.

"She took a sly opportunity of whispering to her gademan, that they ought to hire a chaise, and gang in till Edinburgh wyselike." Blackw. Mag., Sept. 1822, p. 315.

"A that I hae for the present to observe to you, Girzy, is, to tak tent that the lad gangs our wiselike, at the gloaming, to Kilmardockle, in order to see Miss Betty anent the wedding." The Entail, i. 219.

2. Befitting one's situation or circumstances, S.

"Thomson pressed them with all the hearty frankness of a sailor; and honest Enneas said, it really did him good to see a man tak' a wise-like morning-piece." The Smugglers, i. 129.

[3. As an adv., properly, decently, suitably, S.]

A.-S. wis-lic, prudens; Germ. weislich, discreetly, judiciously.

WYSS WIFE, Wise-wife, s. A periphrasis for a witch, S.

"Most of this winter was spent in the discovery and examination of witches and sorcerers. Amongst these, Agnes Samson (commonly called the wise wife of Keith) was most remarkable, a woman not of the base and ignorant sort of witches, but matron-like, grave, and settled in her answers, which were all to some purpose." Spotswood, p. 383.

Wise woman is synonym. in E.

"Pray, wasn't not the wise woman of Brainford?" Shakspeare.

"At this daie it is indifferent to saie in the English toong; She is a witch; or She is a wise woman." Scott's Discoverie of Witchcraft, B. V., c. 9.

In the same manner, witches are in Germ. called weisen-frauen; in Belg. a witch is wille-vrouwe. Stylo Francorum et Alamannorum vaticinari dicuntur non solum divinitus inspirati, quos prophetas vocamus, sed etiam conjectores et hariolatos. Gloss. Keron. propheta, unizaga; Gloss. Pez. arioli, unizayun, pythonesse, unizaga; Wachter, vo. Weisagen, vaticinari. The Egyptian magicians are in the A.-S. version called wisdan widan, Gen. xli. 8, from the superl. wisest, wisust, sapientissimus. Wilega, wilga, denotes both a true prophet, and a diviner.

Isl. ví, knowledge, is used, in a secondary sense, to denote magical arts; and vætt, for a witch. Hence, says the author of Gl. Landnamab., our old term, víkt-r, a magician. To the same source he traces E. witch; although this has been generally referred to A.-S. wicca, id. Wice-ian, signifies to fascinate, to use enchantments. West-Goth. wit-a, to fascinate; Scren. vo. Wíck. E. wizzard, is evidently from Alem. wizz-an, scire.

These designations all equally originate from the claim made by witches and sorcerers to superior wisdom; or from the supposed extent of their intelligence, in the judgment of others. V. Keyser. Antiq. Septent., p. 504.

This mode of expression has been used very early. In Egypt, the term wise-men, seems to have been synon. with magicians. "Pharaoh called for all the magicians in Egypt, and all the wisemen thereof;" Gen. xli. 8, Ex. vii. 11. In our own country, whatever knowledge was ascribed to persons of this description, it was, however, generally believed that their own lot remained a secret to them. Hence the reflection, in that humorous Song, The Rock, &c. which seems to have been proverbially used in former times:

But they'll say, She's a wise-wife that kens her ain weerd.

V. Ross's Helenore, p. 129.

This gives the true pronunciation of the adj. as used in 8. For it is still sounded, as having a double s. V. SEKLPFULNESS.

[WYST, pret. Knew, Barbour, i. 141. V. WIST.]

WYSURE, s. Prob. wisdom, prudence.

For oft with wysure it hes bene said a forrow,
Without glaidnes awails no tressour.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 54, st. 1.

"Wisdom," Gl. Lord Hailes. But perhaps wysure, signifies, with men distinguished for wisdom; from A.-S. wisra, sapientior. It may, however, be referred to Belg. wyser, Alem. wiser, prudens.

[WYSYLLYT, pret. Errat. for Vissill, to exchange, Barbour, xii. 580. Isl. vísla, to cross.]

To WYT, v. a. To shun, to avoid.

It wes gret cunnandnes to kep
Thar takill in till sic a thrang;
And wyt sic wawis; for ay among
The wawys rest thair sycht off land.

Barbour, iii. 714, MS.

Lat. vī-are.

It may, however, be meant for wild, being written wy in MS.

[To WYT, v. a. To know, Barbour, i. 238. V. WIT.]

[To WYTE, v. a. To blame, Lyndsay; used also as a s. V. WITE.]

WYTENONFA, s. A name for a disease. V. WEDONYPHA.

[WYTH, prep. Against, Barbour, iii. 714.]

WYTHEST. Apparently for wychtest, most powerful.

It war my will worthy, thy schone that thou was,
And went with thir weryouris wythest in weir.

Rauf Coilyear, D. J. 1.

[WYTTER, WYTRYNG. V. under WITTER, v.]

[WYUCHLET, s. A thin, spare object or person, Angus.]

To WYVE, WYWE, v. a. To weave, Aberd. "Vder wobbis that he wyvis;" Aberd. Reg. V. 17. Wywe, V. 26.

—Ye'll nae mair nir wywe, nir spin,
Whan ance you're twenty-three.

Tarraz's Poems, p. 72.

Wywe is the common pronunciation of Angus and the northern counties.

WYVER, s. 1. A spider, Aberd.; [wyvers'-wobe, cobwebs.]

[2. A weaver, ibid.; syn. wobster.]

Y.

Y consonant corresponds to A.-S. G before a vowel. This has generally in S. been printed 3, from the resemblance of the A.-S. letter to the form of the Roman 3, although there is not the least affinity as to power. Sibb. has observed, that "the printers having no such character in their founts,—substituted 3 in many of the early printed books," whence "in the sixteenth century, it came to be written in its short form, or without a tail, and at last, in more instances than one, to be pronounced as if it actually had been s or z."

But this, however, must not entirely be laid to the charge of our typographers, but perhaps primarily to the inaccuracy, if not, in some instances, to the ignorance of the writers or copyists of MSS., who, in writing the A.-S. g, did not properly distinguish it in form from the long z, or 3. V. Macpherson's Rules for reading Wyntown's Chronicle.

This being a gross corruption, which can serve no end but to mislead or perplex the reader, it has been uniformly rejected in this Dictionary, even where the language quoted has been printed in this manner.

There can be no objection to this change, that would not be equally valid against the correction of any other error in orthography. For antiquity can never sanction absurdity.

Sibb. has justly remarked, that in some of the most ancient MS. copies of Wyntown's Chronicle, and Barbour's Bruce, the words year, yearn, young, &c., are written yhear, yhearn, yhing, &c., which ascertains the pronunciation beyond a doubt. This holds true, at least, in a variety of instances.

He also observes, that the power of the A.-S. g, in the instances referred to, "was uniformly gh." That it was so, is probable. But we have not sufficient evidence for asserting this without limitation. G, in the same connection, is aspirated in Belg. V. Sewel's Nether-Dutch Academy, p. 3. This seems to be the reason why Kilian writes the prefix ghe, as ghe-waer, certus, ghe-weer, arma, &c. But in Germ., before e and i, it is pron. as y consonant. G also, the seventh letter of the Moes.-G., being entirely different from the third, which is written precisely as the Gr. Gamma, seems to have been pronounced as y consonant. Thus Gr. γωρα is written by Ulphilas gota, γυδαίοι gudaioi, γυδας gudas, &c. The Northern writers, in rendering this letter, use j, which has the sound of y.

Rudd. observes that "it is very ordinary with old authors to prefix y or i to verbs, participles, and verbal nouns, for ornament or the verse's sake; which they have done in imitation of the Anglo-Saxons, who made the same use of their ge, afterwards changed into y or i."

But scarcely any of our writers have adopted this mode, except the Bishop of Dunkeld; and it is certainly foreign to our dialect of the Goth.; in which there is hardly a vestige of any prefix, similar to that of the A.-S., having been used.

There seems to be no necessity for particularizing these words; as, in most instances, the only thing that distinguishes them from common E., is the use of this prefix. Doug. uses ybaik for baken, ybe for be, yberied for buried, ybove for born, ybound for bound, ybrokin for broken, &c. Any, that deserve particular attention, will be found under the letter I.

It may be added, that, in the south of S., y consonant is prefixed to a variety of words which are elsewhere pronounced within it; as yaik for ache, yaiker, an ear of corn, yield, age, for eild, yill for ale, yesk, hiccup, for eesk, S. B. &c., &c. This must be attributed to the connexion of the southern counties with the Anglo-Saxons; as y, in this form, is merely the vestige of A.-S. ge prefix. It is not so easy to account for the similar use of this consonant, in some instances in Banffs. and Buchan.

In the Buchan dialect, Y is often prefixed to a word beginning with a vowel; as, to Yauve, to owe, Yaffu for awful, Yauvins for avens, the beards of corn, &c. It is also introduced between the initial consonant and a vowel. V. TYAUVE, v.

YAGGER, s. 1. A travelling pedlar, a hawker, Shetl. [V. under YAAAG.]

“I would take the lad for a yagger, but he has rather ower good havings, and he has no pack.” The Pirate, i. 107.

In Shetl., the word is pron. q. yaager, and properly signifies a person who purchases goods, chiefly fish, contracted for by another.

“They [the tenants] sold their fish to yaggers, by which cant phrase, derived from the vessels that attended the Dutch busses and took home the first herrings, an enterprising set of young men were designated, who, having few or no boats themselves employed at the Haaf, purchased fish from the natives at a higher price than that which landlords paid.” Hibbert’s Shetl., p. 571.

2. A clandestine purchaser of things unfairly disposed of, ibid.

In this sense it might seem allied to Teut. iagher, a hunter, used in an oblique sense.

YAGHIES (gutt.), s. The sound caused by the fall of a soft but heavy body, as of a man falling from a considerable height; as, “He cam down wi’ a yawfu’ yaghies,” Banffs.

This seems nearly synon. with Soas, s. V. DUNT, s. Perhaps from Ital. hiacca, feritare, pulsare.

This is merely a provincial pron. of ache.

2. To quiver, to shake.

I saw the ashtre and the aik,
That Aeolus gart yield and yaike
By his maist bitter blast.

Burd’s Pilgr., Watson’s Coll., ii. 16.

As it is written zaike, it may perhaps be z proper, and this be meant merely for shake.

YAIKE, s. A stroke or blow, S. Flandr. jacks, scutica, flagellum aurigarum; jack-en, flagellare scutica.

S. Prov.

This is given by Kelly, but far more feebly; “Sail, quoth the king; Hold, quoth the wind.” P. 285. For the etymon, V. YELLY, YEALTO.

YAIR, YAIRE, YARE, s. 1. An inclosure, commonly of a semi-circular form, built of stones, or constructed of stakes and wattled work, stretching into a tideway, for the purpose of detaining the fish when the tide ebbs, S.

“All they quha hes craves or yares, stanks, or mylnis in wateris, quhere the sea flowes and ebbes, or quhere salmon, troutcs, or the frye of anie fisch of the sea, or of fresch waters ascends and descends; that ilk becks of the craves sall be at the least twa inche wide.” 1 Stat. Rob., l. c. 11. s. 1.

Qui habent croas, vel piscarias, seu stagna, &c., Lat.

“There are a good number of salmon caught on the sea coast, sometimes by nets and cobles, called a stall fishing, but chiefly by means of yaires, or small enclosures, built in a curve or semicircular form near the shore. At high water the salmon comes within these yaires, and at low water is easily taken, having no way to escape.” P. Killearn, Ross. Statist. Acc., i. 282.

“The—Yair Fishings, so productive in this parish, seem to be almost peculiar to it. A yare is built of stones gathered from the tide water mark, about four feet in height, and of considerable length, and stretches out into the river in the form of a crescent, or of three sides of a square; but to give it a probability of succeeding, it must proceed from a point of land, so as to inclose a bay.” P. Cardross, Dunbarton. Statist. Acc., xvii. 217.

2. A sort of scaffolding, which juts out into a river or frith in a straight line, S.

“Upon the point of these inches, they erect what are called yares, a sort of scaffold projecting into the water, upon which they build little huts to protect them from the weather; from these scaffolds they let down at certain times of the tide, their nets, and are often very successful in taking the smaller fish, such as herrings, garries or sprats, sparlings or smelts, small whittings, haddocks, sea trouts and eels.” P. Alloa, Clackman. Statist. Acc., xviii. 597.

There seems scarcely any reason to doubt that yare, yair, is radically one with E. wear, “a dam in a river, fitted for taking fish.” Baillie; also, expl. “a net of twigs to catch fish,” Johns. This is from A. S. waer, wer, piscina, septum, piscatorium, piscium capiendorum et custodiendorum locus; “a place or engine for catching and keeping of fish;” Somner. Isl. fiskaver, fiskever, id. (piscina, G. Andr.) Franc. uiere, Belg. wijer.

Junius derives the Franc. word from Lat. vivarium. Somner, with more propriety, refers to A. S. be-wer-tan, cohibere, to restrain. Hence, he says, nostratium warren pro vivario;—Gallis, (G. pro W. amantibus) garenne. To these we may add L. B. gueren, vivarium piscium, as well as warenna, id. Du Cang.

We might conclude, from analogy, that yair and wear are from the same fountain; as various Goth. words, beginning with g, gu, and y, are to be viewed as belonging to one stock. Thus E. garden, S. garth, and yard, are not radically different from S. ward, L. B. wara, signifying an enclosure, a piece of ground fenced by a wall, hedge, ditch, or palisade.

But we have no occasion for analogical reasoning; as gaerd has been anciently used in the same sense with wer. For as the A. Saxons called a wear wer, fisc-wer, the Swedes give it the name of fisk-gaerd. In Legibus Patriis, dicitur decipula, confecta ex contis in orbem positis, ad decipiendos pisces, qui immissi exitum non inveniunt; Ihre, vo. Gaerd, sepimentum.

To this term our yare seems immediately allied, the g being softened into y. It is to be observed that fehgarth, although not mentioned by John, is a term used in the O. E. laws, as would appear, precisely in the same sense with weat and our yare. Skinner refers to the 23d Henry VIII., c. 18. It is also used, S. B.

"Tenants who live on the banks of a burn sometimes build a feh-garth or dam, with an opening to receive a kind of osier basket, or what they call an hose-net for catching fish." P. Peterculter, Aberl. Statist. Acc., xvi. 389.

It confirms the idea that weat, garth, and yare are all from the same root, that the Sw. term for a scarren is kasin-gaert, our cuningaire, in which the g is still retained, i.e., an enclosure for rabbits. Warren, indeed, in its primitive sense, denoted an enclosure for fishes and fowls, as well as for smaller quadrupeds.

It may be supposed that wer, and garth or yare, are derived from terms radically different, because we find not only Moes.-G. ward-jan, A.-S. weard-ian, custodire, be-wer-ian, defendere, and Su.-G. waer-ia, id.; but Moes.-G. garde, in aurtigards, hortus, as well as A.-S. geard, Su.-G. gaerd, Isl. gard-r, sepimentum. But the Moes.-G. and A.-S. nouns are, probably, to be traced to the verbs ward-jan and weard-ian. Su.-G. waerd-a, custodire, tueri, is undoubtedly from the same source with gaerd-a, sepire. The latter merely expresses a particular mode of keeping or protecting; i.e., by means of a fence. The difference of form only illustrates, what is well known as a characteristic of the Goth. dialects, that g and w are often interchanged; and shows that this has been the case in a very early period. Perhaps we may view the Ital. and Fr. mode of pron. as uniting the different forms of the Goth. dialects, in the combination of g with w. V. Cæuvz.

YAIR-NET, YARE-NET, s. A long net extending into the bed of a river, inclined upwards, and fixed by poles, S. B.

"Interrogated for the heritors, Whether the feith-nets, and conceit-net, and yare-net, are stent-nets? depones, That they are not; and that no net[s] can be counted stent-nets, unless such as cross the water." State, Leslie of Powis, &c., 1805, p. 78.

The contrary, however, is asserted on the other side. "The conceit, and yare nets extend at least three fourths across the channel of the river, and are fixed, stented, and immovable nets, which proprietors of the fishing are expressly discharged, by the foresaid decision, from using." Ibid., p. 356.

"That the yare-net is about thirty-six fathoms in length, and about two and one-half fathoms in depth; and the conceit-net is thirty fathoms in length, and two and one-half fathoms in depth; and the poles that fix each end of the yare-net may be about two fathoms and one-half in length." Ibid., p. 109.

YAKEE, s. A double tooth, whether in man or beast, Orkney. [V. YACKLE.]

This is undoubtedly allied to Isl. jazl, a grinder, dens molaris, G. Andr., p. 131; and to ialk-r, which denotes feeble manducation, munching, Ibid., p. 129.

To YALD, v. a. To yield; pret. yald.

So tyl hys hart stoundis the pryk of deith;
He woltis ouer, and yaldis vp the breith;

Doug. Virgil, 339, 40.

The gaist he yald with habundance of blude.

Ibid. 56, 50.

Isl. gialld-a, retribuere, luere.

YALD, YAULD, adj. 1. Sprightly, alert; active, vigorous, strong, S. A., Loth. A yauld ganger, a powerful walker.

When he was young, nae yalder chieft
Out o'er the sads could gae;
Now legs and feet benumm'd wi' eild
Could scarce step o'er a strae.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 12.

Bein' yald and stout, he wheelit about,
And klave his held in twaine;
Then calmly laide him on the grene
Niver to ryse againe.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 61.

2. Sharp; as respecting the temperature of the air; as, "a yauld nicht," when there is a snell frosty air, Ayrs.

This term is defined in Gl. Antiq. as if the scots compiler had viewed Yald, as derived from the v. to Yield, or some cognate term. For it is expl. "yield-ing; supple." But there is not the slightest evidence, that A.-S. gield-an, gield-an, gield-an, &c., whence the E. v. has originated, was ever used, in a literal sense, to denote bodily action. It is restricted to the idea of payment; solvere, pendere, tribuere. This is also the case as to Teut. gield-en.

Isl. gilld-r expresses the same idea; Viribus et virtute praestans; gilld-a, valere.

YALD, adj. Niggardly, parsimonious, S. B.

[YALDER, v. and s. Applied to the noisy barking of a dog when in pursuit of prey; yaldering, barking noisily, Shetl.]

[YALDRAN, YOLDRIN, s. The Yellowhammer, Clydes. V. YELDRING.]

YALLACRACK, s. Intemperate altercation, excessive noise of voices, Shetl.

Isl. jil-a, or rather gal-a, aures obtundere, vocem galli emittere; and Dan. krak, a noise, Isl. kracki is rendered dissidium, Halderson. If the word be inverted, it nearly resembles Yallacrack.

YALLOCH, s. A shout, a shrill cry; the act of yelling, S. also yalloch.

Vpstert Rutulianis samyn complayng
Wyth ane yalloch and carefull womentyng,
Quhil all the byllis rummesit thaym about,
And fer on brede thik woddis gaif ane shout.

Doug. Virgil, 441, 4

Su.-G. gal-a, to cry, to vociferate; gell-a, to resound; Belg. gill-en, to squeak, Sewcl.

YALTIE, adv. "Slowly, S. B."

YALTIE, interj. "Take leisure, S. B."

Probably these terms are merely oblique uses of Yellou. V. YELLY and YAIL.

YALTO, YALTOCO, interj. A common expression of surprise, or of defiance, among the vulgar, Aberd.

Most probably for "Yea, wilt thou? quoth" V. YELLY, YEAULTOU.

To YAMER, YAMMER, YAWMER, YACMORE, v. n. 1. To shriek, to yell, to cry aloud.

The birsit baris and beris in thare styis
Raring all wod furth quhrynis and wyld cryis,
And grete figuris of woltis eik in fere,
Youland and yammerand grislie for to here.

Doug. Virgil, 204, 54

Yamer, also yomerand, occurs, Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., i. 7, rendered "muttering" in Gl. But from the connexion it evidently conveys a stronger idea.

There come a Lele of the Lawe, in londe is not to layne,
And glides to Schir Gawayne, the gates to gayne ;
Yauland and yomerand, with many loule yelles,
Hit yaules, hit yamers, with waymyng wete.

2. To fret, whine, whimper, [grumble], S.

They ever and anon stand still,
And yamour sair ;
"We're sure we do our day fullil,
And meikle mair."

The Har'st Rig, st. 102.

[3. To urge with importunity, S.]

It cannot reasonably be doubted, that we have the same word, in a more primitive form, without the demonstrative prefixed, in Isl. amr, stridentis misera loquela; G. Andr., p. 11. Halderson gives this in the form of ambr. Am-a, molesto, augu, seems to be a cognate term.

It is surprising that Rudd. should say of a word, which has so many cognates: Vox, ut videtur, a sono confecta. Sibb. properly mentions Germ. jammer-en, plangere; jammer, luctus, plangtus; A.-S. geomr-ian, [geomer-ian, to groan, to grumble] and perhaps Lat. gem-ere.

It may be observed that yomerand most nearly resembles the A.-S. v., while yamer has greater affinity to the Germ.

To the terms already mentioned, we may add A.-S. geomer, plaintive; Su.-G. jaemmer, a groan, Isl. ymr, whence ymr-a, to groan heavily. Perhaps the root is retained in Isl. ym-ia, to emit a querulous voice, to groan, whence ymr.

YAMER, YAUMOUR, YAWMER, YAMERING, YA-MOURING, s. 1. A cry, a yell.

The air was dirkit with the fowlis,
That come with yawmers, and with yowlis.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 22, st. 16.

"The yamering was as huge, that few apperit othir to revenge the injuris of ennymes, or yit to defend their realme." Bellend. Cron., B. x. c. 13. Luctus, Boeth.

2. [A plaintive cry], whining, S.

—The weans, wi' mournfu' yaumour,
Round their sabbing mother flew.
A. Wilson's Poems, p. 13.

[YAMMEL, adj. Of the same age, born in the same year.] Yammils, twins, Orkn. and Shetl.

Equivalent to S. eildins, of the same age, as abbreviated from Dan. lige gammel, alike old.

To YAMPH, YAMF, v. n. To bark, S.

And sic a reird ran thro' the rout,
Gart a' the hale town tykes
Yamph loud that day.
Ramsay's Poems, l. 278.

And quhy dis oft the shepherd's dog,
Gif that ane lamikyne straye,
Ay yamf and yowl besyde the wud,
Nae farthir yn wil gaye!

Tannahill's Poems, p. 62.

Isl. gamb-r, gannitus, barking, yelping; gamb-ra, gannire. This is perhaps radically allied to the terms mentioned, vo. YAMER, v.

YAN, YAN'T, adj. Small, puny, Ayrs. Yan't seems to be properly the part. past.

YAN, s. [A small thing, a mite]; as, "Sic yans," such small creatures, ibid. [V. GANS.]

This seems to be a relique of the Cumbrian kingdom. C.B. guan, egwan, puny; weak, feeble.

YANK, s. A sudden and severe blow. To tak one a yank; to give one such a blow; as, "I'll tak you a yank o' the chafts," Ettr. For., Clydes. Lounder, synonym.

"I likit nae sic freedoms;—sae I took up my neive and gae him a yank on the haffat till I part his bit brass cap rattle against the wa'." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 18.

"The Laidlaws were the men for me; Pell-mell, yank for yank. Thresh on, Will." Perils of Man, ii. 243.

Allied perhaps to Flandr. jack-en, flagellare scutica. Su.-G. kank-a, pedes vel corpus cerebro motitare.

YANKER, s. 1. A smart stroke, synonym. Yank.

2. A great falsehood, [a bounce], S.

"Ay, billy, that is a yanker!" said Tam aside. "When ane is gaun to tell a lie, there's naething like telling a plumper at aince, and being done wi't." Perils of Man, i. 336.

3. An agile girl, Roxb., Gall.

"Yanker, the same with Spanker, a tall clever girl;" Gall. Enc.

4. An incessant speaker, ibid.

This is perhaps merely an oblique use of the third signification, as denoting activity in the tongue.

Prob. the term was formerly used to denote the alertness of youth in general; Teut. ionck-heer, Isl. ionkaeri, Dan. junker, juvenis nobilis. Isl. iank-a, signifies leviter annuere, q. to assent with promptitude.

YANKIE, s. A sharp, clever, forward woman.

YANKING, part. adj. Active, pushing; expl. as synonym. with Throwgáin, Teviotd.

"Ye'll be nae bag-man, then, after a'?" "No," said the traveller.—"Weel, I canna say but I am glad o' that—I canna bide their yanking way of knapping English at every word." St. Ronan, i. 35.

YAPE, YAP, YAIP, YAUP, adj. 1. Having a keen appetite for food, S.

Right yap she yoked to the ready feast,
And lay and eat a full half hour at least.
Ross's Helenore, p. 26.

2. Eager, having an earnest desire for anything, very ready, S.

I was, within thir sextie yeiris and sevin,
Ane freik on feld, als forss, and als fre,
Als glaid, als gay, als ying, als yaip as yie.

YAVE, s. Awe, [subjection], Banffs.

[To YAVE, v. a. To awe, to keep in subjection, to impress strongly, Banffs.]

YAVIL, YAVAL, ad. Flat, Aberd. Prone, or lying flat, and apparently in a state of insensibility, [unable to rise], Aberd., Banffs.

"For, thinks I, an' the horse tak a brattle now, they may come to lay up my mittens, an' ding me yaril an' as styth as gin I had been elf-shot." Journal from London, p. 4.

"Ding me yaril, lay me flat;" Gl. Perhaps merely AFALD, q. v., used literally, with y prefixed; as opposed to lying twafald. V., however, AUALE, AWAIL, and AWALT.

YAVIL, s. The second crop after lea, Moray; synon. Avil, Galloway. V. AWAT.

[YAVIL-BACHELOR, s. A widower, Banffs.]

To YAW, YAUW, v. n. 1. To whine, Selkirks.

2. To cry as a cat, to mew, S.; synon. Waur, S.B.

"Tae come down the cleugh yon gate, i' the night time, yawin like a whoen wulcats! I canna but think on the counarts yet." Saint Patrick, l. 162.

Isl. gey-a signifies latrare. Yauw may, however, like Mew, &c., be formed from the sound.

YAWFU', adj. The provincial pronunciation of E. Awful, Aberd.

—Wi' a yawfu' yark,

I hesitate as to the termination; perhaps from A.-S. idel tid, tempus vacuum, otiosum, as the phrase, spare time, is used.

YDRAW, part. pa. Literally, drawn; but metaph., advanced.

Isl. ida, vortex vel gurgis aquae, synon. with Sw. wattenheirfoel, a whirlpool; id-a, more fluentis aquae citus feror, vel circumcursito; Verel. G. Andr. This v. seems to be the same with Su.-G. id-a, agitare, from id, opus.

YE, YIE, term. (corr. printed zie.)

It has been supposed, that this had its rise among our ancestors, by the pronunciation of e mute, in words of Fr. origin, as is commonly done by the Dutch at present. In this manner chenyie is deduced from Fr. chaine, sainyie from saïne. Gl. Compl., vo. Chenyie.

But there is no evidence that the Scots ever pronounced e mute. The form of many of our terminations seems to have proceeded from an imitation of the liquid sound used by the French, in consequence of g preceding n in the original word; or, where this was not the case, in consequence of the S. noun following the form of the verb which retained the sound of the Fr. infinitive or participle; as en-chainer, en-chainie. Failie is merely Fr. faillir or failli; tailie, a abec. taillir or tailli.

In some instances, the term ye or yie has originated from the softening of ro, or re, the last syllable of some Lat. words. Thus assoilyie is from absolvere, the beginning of a prayer for the dead, in the Romish Litany.

YEARNIN, YIRNIN, s. Rennet, ibid.

The yirnin is the maw or stomach of the calf. But it is not generally known, that this is of no use unless the calf has received milk into its stomach before being killed. The stomach of a hare is that rennet which is quickest in its operation; that of a lamb next; and the calf's last. Where the yirnin is weak, it is customary to put into it a bush of stinging nettles in order to quicken it. V. EARNING.

Isl. gaed-a, ornare, q. to embellish in discourse; or rather A.-S. yedil-ian, canere, magnificare laudibus.
The noun ged, denotes a song, a proverb, a parable;
thus the A.-S. g is very often changed into y. This indeed seems to be the same word which occurs in Chaucer.

Wel coude he singe and plaien on a rota.
Of yeddinges he bare utterly the pris.

Prob. to Cant. Tales, v. 237.

"The Prompt. Parv. makes yedding to be the same as gede, which it explains thus, 'Geest or Romawnce.
Gestio.' So that of yeddings may perhaps mean of story-telling." Tyrwhitt.

The transition in signification here is abundantly natural; as the art of embellishment has been generally ascribed to story-tellers from the earliest age of minstrelsy downwards.

3. A subsidy.

Skene expl. yeilde, "a gift or donation;" Verb. Sign. in vo. "Yeild," he elsewhere says, "is called ane gift, tribut, or taxation, as in the auld actes of Parliament maid be King James the First, it is written that ane yeilde was gaddered for the reliefe of him out of England. And ane vther yeilde was collected for resisting the rebelles in the North;" vo. Herreyelda.

Skene evidently refers to the following passage.
—"That for the tynance and payment to be maid in Ingland, for our Souerane Lordis costage, and delyvering of his hostagois being in Ingland, thair salbe rasit ane yeild, or maas, gif it misteris, throw the hail kynrik.—For it wer greuous, and greit charge on the commonis to rais the hail finace at anis. It does not properly signify a gift : being evidently from A.-S. geld, gild, a tax, tribute, custom ; also, payment, compensation ; from gild-an, gild-an, to pay, to discharge a debt. Su. G. geld, what is expended, whether under the name of a fine or tribute ; geld-a, to pay. Hence, Germ. Belg. geld, money, geld-boete, a fine ; Germ. geldstrafe, id. V. YEIL.

YEILD, YIELD, YEILL, s. Age ; as denoting any particular stage of human life, S. B. cild, S.

Acts Ja. IV., 1513, Ed. 1814, p. 278. Eild, Ed. 1566.

This appears to be the last Act that was passed by James IV. It is dated at Twesilhauch in Northumberland, 24th August 1513. It was evidently meant to encourage his troops before the fatal battle of Flodden-field.

And as the billy had the start of yield,

[YEIRD, YIRD, s. Earth, soil, S. V. YERD.]

YEIRD and STANE. The mode of giving delivery of a feudal subject or land, is by putting earth and stone on that property, into the hands of the heir, or purchaser, or into those of his agent, S. [V. YERD.]

"The King—may direct his precept—to the Schirel, or his deputis, chargeand thame to pass incontinent to the principal message of the saidis landis, and thare to tak sasine thairfoir in his Hienes name, be deliverance of yeird and stane, as use is," &c. "Ex lib. Colles." Balfour's Pract., p. 482.

A similar custom has prevailed in Iceland. Hence Verel. explains Skotta : Certa ceremonia fundum redditum in potestatem emptoris transferre, ita ut potestatem fundi in gremium ejus conjiciat. Ind. Ling. Scando-Scyth. This is from Isl. skoet, sinus, gremium ; because the purchaser received part of the earth of the property into the lap of his garment. The same term occurs in the laws of Sweden. V. Ihre, vo. Skott, col. 618. Hence L. B. Scotatio, used concerning the act of transferring property, whether moveable or immovable.

Loccenius observes, that the shaking or throwing of part of the land sold into the bosom of the purchaser, constitutes a legal transference ; whence Sw. skotta, skoetleggja, skoetning, and L. B. scotatio and scotare. Antiq. Sueo-Goth., Lib., ii. c. 16.

Sometimes a stone was the only symbol. This was called Investitura per Lapidem. In other instances a turf was deemed sufficient ;—Investitura per Cespitem. This custom prevailed so early as the reign of the Saxon king Sigfrid. V. Cesper, Du Cange. A branch was occasionally joined with the turf ; and it was at times required that the branch should be growing out of the turf ;—per Ramum et Cespitem, also, per Herbam et Terram. V. Du Cange, vo. Investitura.

That the custom of giving seisin by means of a turf, or part of the earth of the property transferred, was used in Scotland in a very early period, appears from a remarkable passage extracted from the Old Register of the Priory of St. Andrews. This, the writer says, he gives as he found it in the ancient writings of the Picts.

It regards the gift of lands by Hungus, king of the Picts to the church of St. Andrew.

In memoriale datas libertatis rex Hungus cespitem arreptum, coram nobilibus Pictis, hominibus suis, usque ad altare S'ti Andree detulit ; et super illud cespitem eundem obtulit. In praesentia testium harum hoc factum est, Thalarig filii Ythernbuthi, Nactan filii Chelturan, Garnach filii Dornach, &c. Pinkerton's Enquiry, I. Append., p. 460.

This custom must be traced to the laws of the ancient Romans. In an early age, the praetor went with the parties, who disputed about any property, to the spot, and gave possession as he judged proper. After wards, in consequence of the increase of business, the parties brought from the ground, which was the subject of litigation, glebam, a turf, which was delivered to the person to whom the praetor adjudged the possession. V. Aul. Gell. xx. 10.

2. Not giving milk. A cow, although with calf, is said to gang yell, when her milk dries up, S.B. Thus, a yeld cow is distinguished from a ferry or farrow cow, which is one that continues to give milk for a longer time, as not being pregnant. In the same manner, a yeld nurse, signifies a dry nurse. This is an improper sense.

Yell is the pronunciation of Dumfr., Gall., [and Clydes.]

A cow in this state is said to be as "yell as the bill [bull]."

3. Cattle or sheep that are too young to bear, Dumfr.
4. Applied metaph. to broth.

"Any thing is better than the yell kail, S. Prov. An apology for having little, or bad, flesh meat. Yell is properly what gives no milk; here it signifies, boil'd without meat, or having no butter." Kelly, p. 42.

5. In a single state without a mate; applied to birds, Shetl.

"There is generally a considerable number of them, which, not paring [v. pairing] are called yeld kittie-wakes." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 280.

6. Used to denote sterility of soil. "A field is said to be yell when nothing will grow on it;" Gall. Enc. This corresponds with Isl. gellid, gall. V. etymon.

7. Applied as an epithet to hard rocks. "A rock is said to be yell when it will not quarry but with gunpowder;" ibid.

8. Bleak, cold; applied to the weather, as denoting that it has no tendency to fruitfulness, or that it threatens sterility, Fife.

The origin is Isl. gellid, gall, infaecundus, effactus; gellid aer, pecus sterile, non praebens, aer, signifying a ewe; gellid-aer, to give no milk, lactem cohibere; G. Andr. In like manner, gallvid, signifies wood, or a tree, that bears no fruit; and gallnoet, E. gallnut, q. a nut that has no kernel: argalli, Specul. Regal, anni infaecunditas, annona declinans, q. a yeld year. Dan. gald, Su.-G. gall, id. gallko, vacca sterilis, precisely our yeld cow. Ihre views Isl. galle, vitium, defectus, as the origin; whence gallad-ur, vitiosus. He has a suspicion, he says, that the Isl. word properly denotes that kind of defect which is caused by magical arts, and that it may thus be derived from galld-r, incantatio. This conjecture, indeed, may seem to have considerable connexion with our term, in one sense; as almost all the Northern nations have formed the notion, that milk is peculiarly under the influence of witchcraft, as well as cattle in general.

Germ. gall also signifies barren. But Wachter assigns to it a different origin; Sterilis, quia castrato similis.

[To YELD, v. a. To yield, Barbour, xi. 33.]
YELDE, s. A subsidy. V. YEILD.

YELDER-EE'D, part. adj. Having an evil or unlucky eye, Fife. He, who meets a person of this description on a journey, will, it is believed, be unfortunate in it.

This provincial term seems to have great antiquity, being evidently allied to A.-S. gealder-craestas, a term used to denote those who were supposed to exercise magical arts; Venefici, incantantes; Lye. Galdere has the same signification; incantator, augur, aruspex; galdor-craest, id., also incantandi ars; from galdor, incantatio. The origin is gal-an, canere, incantare; which also appears pleonastically in galdor-galan, incantare, divinare, hariolare. Hence also galdor-leoth, carmen, incantamentum. This term has been generally spread among the Gothic nations. Isl. galdur, signifies incantator, galdramadur, magus, galdralist, ars magica, galdrakunst, id., galdra kona, saga; galdra, fascinare. Ihre, Verelius, and G. Andr. agree in viewing Su.-G. and Isl. gal-a, canere, as the origin, as it also signifies incantare; evidently in reference to the rhymes used, from the remotest antiquity, in acts of incantation. Alem. galender, incantans.

"Citrinella, the Yellow Youlring." P. 18.

It is said in some parts of Scotland, to be "half taid," i.e., toad, "half puddock, half de'il's limb."

An ingenious friend has supplied the following account of the vulgar prejudice against this bird.

"The superstition of the country has rendered it a very common belief among the illiterate and children, that this bird some how or other receives a drop of the Devil's blood every May morning. Children hang by the neck all the yellow-hammers they can lay hold of. They often take the bare gorbals, or unfledged young, of this bird, and suspend them by a thread tied round the neck, to one end of a cross-beam, which has a small stone hung from the other: they then suddenly strike down the stone-end, and drive the poor bird into the air. This operation they call Spangie-heuit." Heuit seems derived from A.-S. heuet, heuod, the head. Spang is to fly off with elasticity; q. to make the head spring or fly off.

In other parts of S. this devoted bird's communication with the Devil is believed to be far more frequent. For it is said to receive three drops of his blood every morning.

The first part of the word is evidently from A.-S. geole, Su.-G. gul, yellow. The term rin, properly, as would seem, ring, may respect the yellow ring which at least partly adorns the neck of this bird. A.-S. geole wearte, luscinus, (for luscina), Gl. Aelfr.

"xx s. of euery yeman man as oft as thai be fund in faltousse." Acts Ja. V., 1540, ibid., p. 363.

"For euerie fewar fyve hundreth merkis, for euerie gentleman vnlandit tua hundreth merkis, and for euerie yeman man ane hundreth merkis." Acts Ja. VI., 1593, Ed. 1814, p. 18.

[YEMANRY, YHEMANRY, s. Yoemanry, Barbour, xvi. 80, Camb. MS.]

To YEME, YHEME, YYM, v. a. To keep, to take care of; [pret. yemyt, guarded, kept.]

And quhen de dede wis, as ye her,
Thai fand in till his coffer

A letter that him send a lady,
That he luffyt per drouery,
That said, quhen he had yemyt a yer
In wer, as a gude bachiller,
The awenturis castell off Douglas,
That to kepe sa peralus was ;
Than mycht he weile ask a lady
Hyz amowris and hyz drouery.

Barbour, viii. 493, MS.

For how grissle and how grete I you sane,
Larkis Polyphemus yymmand his beistis ouch.
Doug. Virgil, 90, 2.

The fair Io that lang was wo-begone,
Argus her yimmil, that ene had mony one.
Pallice of Honour, i. 69.

Geme, s. is used by Chaucer, Gamelyn, v. 1633.

Take, yonge meine; geme.

A.-S. gem-an, gym-an, to take care of, to keep, to observe, to attend; Isl. geym-a, Su.-G. goem-a, anc. gym-a, animum attendere, custodire; Ihre. Franc. goum-a, Alem. goum-a, koum-a, Teut. goom-en, id. These verbs are nearly allied to Moca.-G. gaum-ja, videre. For seeing and preserving, have been evidently viewed as cognate ideas. V. WER, v.

The various northern verbs, which are synon. of geme, have been traced to Isl. gaa, attendere, prospicere; also, as a s. cura attenta. V. Ihre, vo. Goem, and Gl. Gunnlaug, S.

YEMAR, YHEMAR, s. A keeper, one who has any object in charge. This designation is given to a groom.

And gyff hys yhemar oucht gruchys,
Luk that thow tak hym manre his.

Barbour, ii. 124, MS.

YEMSELL, YHEMSELL, s. 1. The act of keeping, custody.

And Waltra Stewart of Scotland,
That than was young and awenand,
And syne in laucht wes to the King,
Haid sa gret will and sic yarning
Ner hand the marchis for to be,
That Berwik to yemsell tuk be.

Barbour, xvii. 222, MS.

Bot he that him in yhemsell had
Than warnyt hym dispitously.

Ibid. ii. 136, MS.

"Yemsel, of ane castell, the custodie and keeping of ane castell.—For yeme, in our auld language, is to observe and keepe, as quhen in time of singular battell, they quha standes by, and behaldes, ar commanded to keepe, & yeme the time of the derenyie, the weapons fra the hands of the appealer and defendour." Verb. Sign. in vo.

2. It is used nearly in the same sense with mod. wardship, guardianship, tutorage.

And syne the thrid bataill thair gaff
Till Waltra Stewart for to leid ;
And to Douglas douchty of deid.
Thair war cosyngis in ner degre,
Tharfor till him betaucht wes he.
For he was young, bot nocht for thi
I trow he sall sa manlily
Do his dewoir, and wrik sa weill,
That hym sall nede ne mar yemseill.

Barbour, xi. 329, MS.

Yemseill, Ed. Pink.

Skinner ludicrously derives this s. from the A.-S. and Teut. particle ge and mese, a table. But it retains the very form of Isl. geimsala, Su.-G. goemseel, custodia. As Su.-G. goema obliquely signifies, to hide, goemseel also denotes a lurking place.

[YENOO, adv. Now, just now; also, immediately, Clydes.]

YEPIE, s. A blow, as with a sword. V. EPIE.

YERD, YERTH, s. Earth, soil. V. ERD.

Yerthe sometimes occurs in O. E.

"I take one out of the yerthe that was buried;" Palagraue.

To YERD, v. n. To bury; [to plant]. V. YIRD.

Spalding uses the term in sense 3.

"They found yerded in the yard of Drum, a trunk filled with silver work," &c. Troubles, ii. 184.

CAULD YIRD. "The cauld yird, the grave;" Gall. Enc.

YERD-FAST, adj. Firmly fastened in the ground, S.

—Now thy groans in dowy dens

The yerd-fast stanes do thirle.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 6.

Some magical influence is, by the grossly superstitious, ascribed to a stone of this description.

Her feet firt 'gainst a yird-fast stane,

Her back leant to a tree,

An' glowrin up, she made her mane;

"O, new Moon! I hail thee."

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 32.

V. MONE.

Dr. Leyden, in his beautiful Poem, The Court of Keel-dar, refers to other superstitions of a similar kind.

The axe he bears, it hacks and tears,

'Tis formed of an earth-fast flint:

No armour of knight, tho' ever so wight,

Can bear its deadly dint.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 392.

"An earth-fast stone, or an insulated stone, inclosed in a bed of earth, is supposed to possess peculiar properties. It is frequently applied to sprains and bruises, and used to dissipate swellings; but its blow is reckoned uncommonly severe." N. ibid., p. 404.

YIRD-FAST, s. A stone well fastened in the ground. "Yird-fasts, large stones sticking in the yird, or earth, that the plough cannot move;" Gall. Enc.

A.-S. earde-fast is used in a general sense, as signifying, "placed, planted, settled, founded, grounded;" Somner. Hence, eardefast beon; in loco habitationis suae perdurare; Oros., 5. 4. ap. Lye. Isl. iardfastr stein, saxum in terra immotum.

YERD-HUNGER, s. 1. That keen desire of food, which is sometimes manifested by persons before death, viewed as a presage that the yerd, or grave, is calling for them as its prey, S.

2. Voraciousness, used in a general sense.

YERD-HUNGRY, adj. Voraciously hungry; properly applied to those who have the unnatural appetite mentioned above, ibid.

YERD-MEAL, s. "Earth-mould, church-yard dust," Aberd., Gl. Shirr.

YERD-SILVER, s. Prob. lair-silver, grave-money. "Tuelf pennis Scottis of yerd-silver;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1545, V. 19.

[YERE, YEER, s. A year, Barbour, vi. 188; pl. yer; as, sax yer, six years, i. 39.

This plural form is still common in Clydes., and the South of S.]

YERE, adv. Certainly. To yere, too surely, or truly.

Or quhat bettir may I beleue, than he has said ?—
Quhiddir gif he for reuth furth yet anis ane tere ?
Or of his luf had pieté ? Na not to yere.

Doug. Virgil, 112, 42.

A.-S. geare, gere, certo. Geare is also used as an adj. He wiston geare; They were sure; Luk. xx. 6.

[YERFAST. Chains, ropes of straw, &c., used for securing corn or hay during a gale of wind, Shetl.]

YERESTRENE, s. "The night before last," Gl. Sibb., corr. of Here-yestreen, q. v. also Here-yesterday.

To YERK, YARK, v. a. 1. To beat, to strike smartly, S. jerk, E. yark, A. Bor., Aberd. yark.

But ere the sport be done, I trow
Their skins are gayly yarkit
And peel'd thir days.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 74.

—Horrid peltin' they did thole.—
In ilka house the sticks did yark,
The plaister down cam hurlin'.

D. Anderson's Poems, p. 83.

A.-S. gerecc-an, to correct, to punish; Isl. hreck-ia, to beat, palsare; järke, pes feriens.

[2. To swing, to shut with force, to slam; as, "He yerkit to the yett wi' a bang," Clydes.]

3. To bind tightly, as with a small cord, S.

"But he is my sister's son—our flesh and blood—and his hands are yerked as tight as cords can be drawn." Heart. M. Loth., iv. 367.

"We found—eight horses, all well loaden, and every one with its head yerked to the tail of the one before him." Perils of Man, ii. 269.

To YERK, YARK, v. n. Figuratively applied to the rays of the sun, when they beat powerfully on any object, Mearns.

YERK, YARK, s. A smart blow, [a quick movement of any kind], a jerk, S.

But wi' a yark Gib made his queet
As dwable as a flail.

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 126.

YERKER, s. A sudden and very severe blow, Dumfr.

YERKIN, s. The seam by which the hinder part of the upper leather of a shoe is joined to the forepart, Berwick's., Dumfr.

To YERK, v. n. 1. To be in a state of fermentation, a term applied to beer, Ang.

Perhaps a frequentative from Germ. gaer-a, Sa.-G. gaer-a, effervescere. Drickat goeres; cerevisia addito fermento, effervesceat. It may, however, be merely a peculiar use of the E. v. because of the quickness of motion.

2. "To do any thing with agility," Gl. Shurr, S. B. This differs from the E. v. only as being used in a neut. sense.

3. To be engaged in any work that requires much exertion, to be laboriously and earnestly engaged, S.

'Twas on a time, as stories tell,
Hard working in his smiddie,
A smith there was, name but himself,
Loud yerking at the studdie.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 144.

4. To be busy, keenly engaged, applied to the mind.

"I will say nothing, but I will yerk at the thinking," S. Prov., Kelly, p. 182.

Sa.-G. yrt-a, however, has a sense somewhat analogous; postulare, insistere; Seren. vo. Jerk.

[YERN, v. and s. V. YEARN, and EARN.]

[YERNIN, s. Rennet. V. EARNING.]

YERN-BLITER, s. The snipe, S. B. sometimes pron. yern-bluter. It appears to be the common snipe, or Scolopax Gallinago of Linn.

"The mist morning they had me up afore the sky, an' I believe afore the lavrick or yern-bliter began to sing, an' hurl'd me awa to Portsmouth." Journal from London, p. 9. V. EARN-BLITER.

To YESK, v. n. To hiccup, S. V. YEISK.

YESK, s. The hiccup, S.

"Singaltus, the yesk." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 20.

To YESTER, v. a. To discompose. I never yester'd him; I never gave him any disturbance, Ang.

This is perhaps the same with Gaster, Emet, to startle, scare, or affright suddenly; or with Gaster'd, as used by Beaumont and Fletcher.

"If the fellow be out of his wits, then will I never have any more wit whilst I live; either the sight of the lady has gaster'd him, or else he's drunk." V. Divers. Parley, p. 461.

Mr. Tooke mentions Gaster in connexion with Apat. It may be allied to Su.-G. gater, feroc, or A.-S. ge-styr-as, turbare. Seren. derives ayast from A.-S. gast, spectrum, q. terrified in consequence of seeing a spectre. Junius gives the same etymon.

YESTREEN, YISTRENE, s. Yesternight, S.

Lat vs go birn : for in my sleip yistrene
The figur of Cassandra prophetes
Gaif me birnand fyre brandis.—

Doug. Virgil, 149, 9.

But originally it signifies yesterday. V. HIN-YESTERDAY.

YET, YETT, YHATE, s. A gate, S. A. Bor. yete.

At ather yete bene ruschit in sic ane sort
Sa many thousandis came neuer from Myce nor Arg.—
Doug. Virgil, 50, 14.

The Sothbroun socht quhar Wallace was in drede ;
Thai wyst nocht weylie at quhat yett he in yeide.
Wallace, l. 246, MS.

Come I are, come I late,
I fand Annot at the yhale.
Wyntonson, viii. 33, 144.

YET chekis, door-posts.

This cruell dochter of the auld Saturne
The meikil hirst can welter and ouerturne,
And strang yet chekis of wrefare and battell.
Doug. Virgil, 229, 55.

A.-S. geat, O. Belg. gat, id. Su.-G. gaatt, postis januae; Isl. gat-r, gaett-er, ostium, janua, Verel. gaatt, gaett, ante latus, latera ostii, G. Andr., p. 84. The origin is probably gat, foramen, from gat-a, perforare; as door has been derived from Germ. thor, thur, foramen. It may, however, be from Su.-G. gaa, to go, q. a passage; as door has also been traced to Moes.-G. thairh, A.-S. thurh, per, through, because it is that by which we pass from one place to another. V. Doer, Ihre.

YETT-CHEEK, s. The side or post of the gate.

—"The lady urged him to stay all night, saying his chamber was prepared, but he would not, and night being fallen, he lodges in Andrew Haddentoun's at the yett-check, who was an ostler." Spalding, i. 17.

YETHOUSE, s. A gate-house.

"He—biggit ane gret porcioun of the steple, and ane staitlie yethouse." Addic. Scot. Corn., p. 19.

To YET, YETT, YYT, v. a. 1. To pour, S. yet, yett, poured.

On bois helmes and schieldis the werely schot
Maid rap for rap, reboundand with ilk stot.
Scharp and awfull incesis the bargane,
Als violent as euer the yett down rane
Furth of the west dois amyte apoun the wald.
Doug. Virgil, 301, 54.

On yet, poured on.

Ouer al the schip discendis the perrellus low :
There was na strenth of vailyeant men to wale,
Nor large fludis on yet that mycht auale.

Ibid. 150, 44.

"Fundo, to yet, or power [pour] forth, ut fundo aquam." Despaunt Gram., F. 2, a.

"Fundo, fundia, to yeat forth." Ibid. G. 1, a.
Belg. giel-en, A.-S. geot-an, Isl. Su.-G. giut-a, Moes.-G. giut-an, Germ. Alem. giezz-en, Germ. giess-en, fundere; Su.-G. utgiut-a, effundere. Hence Jute, to tippie, jute, weak and bad liquor, S., q. v.; Eute, Exmore, to pour in, is from the same origin.

2. To cast metals. Yyt, molten, cast.

Sum goukis quhil the glas pyg grow al of gold yyt.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 51.

YETLAND, YETTLIN, adj. Of or belonging to cast iron, S.

"The ploughs in general are of Small's construction. They have a cast yetland mould-board, which is curved." P. Ormistoun, E. Loth. Statist. Acc., iv. 167.

This term occurs in the Inventory of Artillerie etc. within the Castell of Edinburgh, A. 1578, p. 253.

"Ane demy culvering of yetline yron marked with the rois monted upoun ane auld sea stok and roweris pairtly garnist with yron werk."

"Fyve pair of cammis [moulds] yetline yron for demy culvering, battard, moyane, and double falcon." Ibid. p. 254.

The term is also used as a s., pron. yetlin, S. Su.-G. giut-a is commonly used in this sense. Giuta en klokku, to cast a bell; giuta stycken, to cast guns. Teut. ghiet-en, id. Metuel ghieten, conflare, fundere; ghieten van metael, fusor, conflator; Kilian. Germ. giess-en, id. Belg. een klok gieten, to cast a bell.

YETLIN, s. 1. Iron not made malleable, S.

2. [A small cast iron pot or] boiler, S. V. YETLAND.

[3. A girdle on which cakes are baked, Shet.]

To YETHER, v. a. 1. To bind firmly; Roxb.

2. To beat or lash severely, properly so as to leave the mark of the stroke, Roxb., Upp. Clydes.

"Ye are maybe—come o' the saints and martyrs—they had unco power—I hae heard o' some o' them that fought the deil, hand to fist, for an hour and forty minutes, and dang him at the last—yethered him and yerked him till he couldna mou' another curse." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 130, 131.

"Weel done, little hawkie! Yether him up, puik him weel." Perils of Man, iii. 417.

This word, as signifying to beat or lash, is probably from Yeather, A. Bor. a twig, or Yedder, "a long stick," Grose; in reference to the use of either in striking.

YETHER, s. 1. A severe blow, Upp. Clydes.

2. "The mark left by tight binding, as with a small cord," Gl. Sibb., Border; probably allied to A. Bor. yeather, "a flexible twig, used for binding hedges;" Grose.

Teut. ghede, signifies virga, flagellum, and gheds-en, flagellare.

It is probable, however, that our word may be traduced from A.-S. eter, septum, a fence, as formed by means of twigs or wattles.

YETHERING, s. Striking, Roxb.

"I like nae yethering ahint backs. Ane may ward a blow at the breast, but a prod at the back's no fair." Perils of Man, i. 247.

To YETT, v. a. To fasten in the firmest manner, to rivet, Loth. Ruve, synonym. Perhaps allied to Isl. gat-a, perforare.

To YEUK, v. n. To itch. V. YOUK.

YEUNS, s. pl. The refuse of grain blown away by means of the fanners; Yauprie, synonym. Clydes. [V. YANS.]

Perhaps from C. B. gwechyn-a, to empty, to shed, to diffuse; although in signification it agrees better with gwechilon, "the refuse or winnowing of corn," Owen: It may, however, be a corruption of acus, Moes.-G. ahana, Su.-G. agn, palea, acus.

YEYERY, adj. Greedy, voracious.

"Gif thay war skalit, vtheris (quhilkis war mair yerery and tume) suld licht in thair rowmes, and souk out the residew of hir blude, quhilk war vnprofitabil." Bellend. Cron., B. xii. c. 7. Alias (muscas) recentes ac famelicas, Boeth.

A.-S. gifer, gifra, gifre, avidus, vorax, rapax, gulosus. Wael gifre fugel, a fowl fond of carrion; gifer, a glutton. Perhaps Su.-G. giri, giring, and Teut. ghierigh, avidus, are allied.

YEVRIOME, adj. Having an appetite habitually craving, Dumfr. V. YEVEERY.

YFERE, YFERIS, adv. In company, together. V. FERÉ.

To YHARN, v. a. Eagerly to desire.

The kynryk yharra I nocht to have,
Bot gyff it fall off rycht to me.

Barbour, i. 158, MS.

A.-S. georn-ian, gyrn-an, desiderare, concupiscere;
Moes.-G. gairn-an, Su.-G. girn-us, Isl. girn-ast, cupere.
V. YARNE.

YHARNE, YHERNE, adj. Eager, keen.

Agayne hym ras a company
In-to the towne of Fethyrkerne:
To fecht wyth hym thai ware sa yherne.

Wyntoun, vi. 10, 152.

[YHEMAN, YHEMANRY. V. under YEMAN.]

[YHEMAR, YHEMSELL. V. under YEME.]

[YHET, s. Gate. V. YET.]

[YHEYME. v. a. To keep. V. YEME.]

YHIS, YHUS, adv. Yes.

"Yhis," said a woman, "Schyrr, perfay,
"Off strang men I kan yow say."
"Yhis," said scho, "Schyrr, I will blythly:
"Ga with yow and your company."

Barbour, iv. 470, 484, MS.

Some view this as contr. from yea is. But A.-S. gese, gise, gyse, are used in the sense of immo, etiam.

[YHONE, adj. Yonder, Barbour, v. 593.]

[YHOUNG, adj. Young, Barbour, xii. 322.]

YHUDE, pret. Went. V. YEDE.

YHULE, s. Christmas. V. YULE.

YHUMAN, YUMAN, YOMAN, YEOMAN, s.

1. A person of inferior station; as, a husbandman or farmer.

"Item, all quha are inferiour in parentage, are husbandmen, (or yeomen). And the Cro of ane husbandman, is saxtene kye." Reg. Maj. B. iv. c. 36, § 4. Rustici, Lat.

This has been deduced from Fris. gaeman, comp. of gae, Belg. gaw, gouwer, a country, a village, and man, q. the inhabitant of a village. But perhaps it is rather from Teut. ghe-meyn. A.-S. gemaun, communis, vulgaris.

As Junius renders kaeman, incola ejusdem pagi, Sibb. views it as "corresponding with Scot. Portioner, the owner of a small piece of land." Yeoman, in E., indeed bears this sense; as denoting "a man of a small estate in land." But we have no evidence that it was ever thus used in S. When Skene gives it as synon. with husbandman, we cannot suppose that he understood the latter as denoting a landed proprietor.

2. It seems to signify a farmer's servant.

In the contré thar wonnyt ane
That husband wes, and with his fe
Offtays hay to the peile lei he.—
And him self, that wes dour and stout,
Suld by the wayne gang ydilly;
And ane yuman, wycht and barly,
Before suld dryve the wayne; and ber
Ane hachet, that war scharp to scher,
Wdre his belt.

Barbour, x. 172, MS.

VOL. IV.

This term, however, may be here used according to the signification following.

3. A peasant or inhabitant of the country employed as a foot-soldier. Yhumanry, the peasantry armed on foot.

And of all Irland assemblit he
Bath burges and chawalry;
And hobilleris and yhumanry.—
Anel Schyr Richard Clar in hy,
Quhen Schyr Edouard was passyt by,
Send lycht yomen, that weill couth schout
To bykkyr the rerward apou fute.—
Bot Schyr Colyne Cambell, that ner
Was by quhar thai twa yhuman wer,
Schowtand amang thaim hardily.
Prykyt on thaim in full gret hy.

Barbour, xvi. 80, 101, 120, MS.

Than sall the mast off his menyne,
That ar bot symple yumanry,
Be dystroyit comonaly,
To wyn thair mete with thair trawail.

Ibid. xix. 171, MS.

Dystroyit is probably an error of the copyist for destryngit. In Edit. 1620, the word is destryngit.

4. As used by Blind Harry, it denotes soldiers on horseback.

Wallace sum part befor the court furth raid,
With him twa men that doughtye war in deid.—
Wallace raid furth, with him twa yemen past.—
Wallace slew iii, by that his yemen wicht
The tothir twa derly to deid thai dycht.

Wallace, iv. 23, 79, 93, MS.

YHUMANRY, s. V. preceding word.

YICKIE-YAWKIE, s. A wooden tool blunted like a wedge, with which shoemakers polish the edges and bottoms of shoe-soles, Dumfr.

"Yickie-Yawkie, a tool used by shoemakers," Gall. Enc.

Isl. jack-a, continuè agito?

YIE, term. (printed Zie). V. YE.

YIELD, adj. V. YELD.

YIELD OF THE DAY. The influence of the sun; also, the height of the day. When the ice melts, although there be no proper thaw, it is said to be owing to the yield of the day, Ang.

This may be from E. yield, as denoting that the frost gives way. But it might be traced to A.-S. æld, S. eild, age, q. the advancement of the day, analogous to the use of the term height. Isl. ellling, age, is used somewhat in a similar sense. Nætur ellling, senium noctis, diluculum; the age of the night, the dawn of the day. So in Lat. senium lunæ denotes the last quarter of the moon.

YIFF-YAFF, s. A puny person who talks a great deal, and little to the purpose: Roxb. V. NIFF-NAFF, v.

YILL, s. Ale, S. This is the vulgar pron. in the West and South of S. "Yill-wife, or browster-wife, a woman who brewed and sold ale;" Gl. Sibb.

M 5

Syne as ye brew, my maiden fair,
Keep mind that ye maun drink the yill.
Burns, iv. 320.

V. Cow, v.
A.-S. eale, id. V. YULC. Hence,

To YILL, v. a. To entertain with ale, a term commonly used by the vulgar, S. O. to denote one special mode in which a lover entertains his Dulcinea at a fair or market.

YILL-BOAT, s. An ale-barrel, Berwicks. V. BOAT.

YILL-CAP, YILL-CAUP, YILL-CUP, s. A horn or wooden vessel from which ale is drunk, S. Hence the singular metaphor, of yill-caup een, large or saucer eyes, Galloway.

—Where chieft wi' sooty skins, and yill-caup een,
Hae their abodes. —

Davidson's Seasons, p. 13.

YILL-HOUSE, s. An ale-house, S.

"I never gang to the yill-house; that is, unless any neighbour was to gie me a pint, or the like o' that."
Bob Roy, ii. 7.

[YILL-WIFE, s. A woman who makes or sells ale, Clydes.]

YIM, s. 1. A particle, an atom; the smallest portion of anything, Ang. It is sometimes pron. as if nyim; but this is most probably from ane being used as the article between two vowels, q. ane yim.

There guns gaed aff ay thud for thud;
Thinks I, wi' her, there's death in play;
Nae mair she'll chew her yims of cud,
Nor brook the heartsome light of day.
The Hare's Complaint, A. Scott's Poems, p. 77.

[2. A thin film of condensed vapour, or fat, Banffs.]

Su.-G. em, im, ime, vapour; Isl. hioom, a very small spark, the most minute object, dust, vapour; G. Andr.

[To YIM, v. a. and n. 1. To break into fragments, Mearns; ymmer, Ayrs.; syn. mirl.

2. To cover with a thin film, Banffs.]

To YIM, YYM, v. a. To keep. YIMMIT, kept. V. YEME.

YIMMET, s. "A piece, a lunch, several yims of food;" Gl. Enc.

Prob., O. Teut. ghemet, modus, mensura, or its synonyme, A.-S. gemete, expl. by the very same terms; "also, a quantity;" Somner.

YIN, pron. 1. Used for Ane, one, from the pronunciation, West of S.

A third yin owns an antique rare,
A soap-brush made of mermaid's hair!
Tannahill's Poems, p. 105.

2. This, or that, Orkn.

Either from Isl. Su.-G. hiinn, is, ille; or hjon, individuū, humanū, persona.

YING, YING, adj. Young. O. E. id.

Bot war I now, as vinquhile it has bene,
Ying as yone wantoun wolstare so strang thay wene,
Ye had I now sic youthheid, traistis me,
Bot ony price I suld all redly be.

Doug. Virgil, 140, 49.

After William men cald the rede kyng,
Henry the coron nam, his brother that was ying.
R. Brunne, p. 95.

YIRB, s. The provincial pronunciation of E. Herb, Gall.

The hawf o' terra firma owre,
He trod in quest o' yirb and flower.
Gall. Encycl., p. 238.

YIRB-WIFE, s. An old woman, who pretends to be acquainted with the medicinal qualities of herbs, ibid.

"Yirb-wives, old females, skilled in the virtues of plants and herbs;" Gall. Enc.

YIRD, s. Earth; [the grave], South of S.

To YIRD, v. a. [1. To plant, to set]; also, to bury, to inter; "Fairly yirdit," dead and buried, Roxb. V. YERD.

[2. To knock violently to the ground, Banffs.]

YIRD-DRIFT, s. Snow, not in the act of falling, but lifted up from the ground, and driven by the wind, after it has lain for some time, Berwicks., Ettr. For.; from yird, earth, and E. drift.

YIRD-ELDIN, s. Fuel of peat or turf, ibid. V. ELDIN.

[YIRD-FAST, adj. V. under YERD.]

YIRDLINS, adv. A yirdlins, along the ground or yird, S. B.

Sometimes the ba' a yirdlins ran,
Sometimes in air was fleeing
Fu' heigh that day.

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 125.

YIRDIN, YIRD-DIN, s. Thunder [in the earth, an earthquake], S. B. V. ERDDYN.

YIRLICH, adj. Wild, unnatural, Ettr. For.

"Scho—sett up sic ane yirlich scrighe that my verie sennins sloomyt." Wint. Ev. Tales, ii. 42.

Synon. with Elritch, q. v.

To YIRM, v. n. To whine, to complain; also, to ask in a querulous tone; implying the idea of continuation, S.

A.-S. yrn-ian, miserum facere.
Mactaggart expl. it by another S. word; "To Yirm, to chirm like a bird;" Gall. Enc.

Sibb. writes earn, yearm, explaining it, "to teaze or importune in the whining manner of a mendicant;" and deriving it from Teut. arm, pauper, Moes.-G. arm-an, misereri. Perhaps more immediately allied to Isl. harm-a, lugeo, plango, harm-r, luctus; G. Andr., p. 107. Jarm-a, balare, jarmur, vox avium; Verel.

YIRMS, s. pl. "Small-sized fruit;" Gall. Enc.

This can hardly be viewed as akin to Isl. garmr, vestis delicta.

YIRNIN, s. 1. Rennet, Fife. V. EARNING.

[2. The stomach; as, "I was like to rive my yirnin," Aberds.]

[To YIRP, v. n. To fret, to grumble; yirpin, fretful, grumbling, S.]

To YIRR, v. n. To snarl, to growl as a dog, S. yarr, E. A. Bor. yirring, expl. noisy, also yelling, (Gl. Grose), seems to have been originally the part. of this v.

Like coward cur, you bustling shew your spite,
You yirr and yowl—you bark but darena bite.

Donald and Flora, p. 45.

Isl. verr-a, id.; whence rerre, a dog. Lat. kirr-ire; Germ. irr-en, irritare; A.-S. yrrr, irritatus.

A.-S. corra, corre, id., also anger; corr-ian, irasci, to be angry. Somner expl. corra, "angry, yeery." The latter is evidently a derivative from the A.-S. adj., although now obsolete. Isl. urr-a, hirrire.

YIRK, s. The growl of a dog, S.

Isl. urr, hirritus.

YIRTH, s. The earth, Renfr.

He kend how mony mile was to the moon,
How a' this yirth rows round about the sun.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1816, p. 28.

YIRZE, adj. Not acquainted, Ayr.

To YISK, v. n. To hiccup. V. YEISK.

YISTRENE, s. Yesternight. V. YESTRENE.

[YITE, YELLOW-YITE, s. Same with Yeld-ring, q. v.]

YIMAGE, s. Homage.

King Eluuard past and Corsepatrik to Sewne,
And thar he gat yimage of Scotland swne;
For nane was left the realmie to defend.

Wallace, l. 116, MS.

YMAGERIS, s. pl. Images.

"Finally be generall decreit was statute that the ymageris of sanctis (as the kirk of Rome vsis) sall be honorit & had in reuerence in al partis, not as only deuinité war bid in thame, bot to represent the figure of God and His sanctis." Bellend. Cron., B. x. c. 5.

Fr. imager-ere, of or belonging to images.

YMANG, YMANGIS, prep. Amongst.

"That fra hine furth the Scottis grotte—hafe coursse ymang our souerain lordis liegis for xiiij d." Parl. Ja. III., A. 1467, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 90.

"Because of the eschewing of gret slachteris quhilkis has bene richt commone ymang the kingis liegis now and of late," &c. Ibid. p. 90.

—"To the eschewing of—distrucionis of citeis, wallit townis, justice & policy, committit ymangis thaim of tyme bigain, & hable to be committit in tyme cumming, &c. Ibid. A. 1473, p. 103.

This is obviously the common change of A.-S. ge into y; gemang, inter. I have not, however, observed this term used any where else, either by S. or old E. writers.

To YMP, v. a. To ingraff, to insert.

Fals titlaris now growis up full rank,
Nocht ympit in the stok of cheritie.
Howping at thair lord to get grit thank;
Thay half no drede on thair nybouris to lie.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 136.

A.-S. Alem. imp-an, imp-ian, Germ. impfen, Sa.-G. ymp-a, id. E. imp, id., although not mentioned by Johna. in this sense.

YMPNE, s. A hymn.

And lo, ane vthir sorte ful blyth and glad

On athir hand behaldis Eneas,—

Ympnis of pryce, tryumphe and victory,

And singand glad togiddir in fallouschip.

Doug. l'irgill, 138, l.

In the dark ages, it was customary in MSS. as Rudd. observes, to omit the initial h, as ympnus, yema, ortus, for hymnus, hyema, hortus, and to insert y betwixt m and n.

"Whenne the ympne was seide thei wenten out into the mount of Olyvete." Wiclif, Mat. 26.

[YMYDDIS, prep. In the midst of, Barbour xii. 576.]

[YNEUCH, YNEW, adj. and s. Enough, sufficient, Barbour, xiv. 235, xix. 626. V. ENEUCH.]

[YNKIRLY, YNEKURLY, adv. Particularly, Barbour, vii. 555; quite, vii. 183.]

YNOM, pret. Took.

The seymen than walkand full besyly.

Ankyrs wand in wysly on athir syd,

Thair lynys kest and waytyt weyll the tyd;

Leyt salys fall, and has thar coursse ynoma;

A gud gay wynd out off the rycht art com.

Wallace, ix. 53, MS.

In edit. 1648, altered to,

Let sailis fall and took thar course anane.

A.-S. ge-nim-an, capere; genom, I took, genam, he took. Ynome, taken, R. Glouc.

YOAG, s. The Great Mussel, Shetl.

"Mytilus Modiolus, Yoag, Great Muscle." Edmonstone's Zeth., ii. 322.

To YOAK, v. a. To look; as, "Yoak your orlitch," look your watch, Fife.

Apparently a mere corruption of the E. r. There is a possibility, however, that it may be allied to Sa.-G. oeg-a, videre, Alem. oug-on, id., from oega, the eye. We may add Teut. oogh-en, prospicere, ghe-oghd, ocellatus, having eyes.

YODE, pret. v. Went.

A colt o' course to asshood cam,—

Yode to a herd o' jet black nout,

That he mote lear their artfu' rowt.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 108.

[YOCHEL, YOCHO, s. A big stupid person. Clydes., Banffs.]

[YOCK, v. and s. Grip, hold. V. YOK.]

To YOK, YOKE, YOCK, v. a. and n. [1. To yoke, to attach, Barbour, x. 215; hence, to begin work.]

2. To plough ridges in a particular way, Banffs.

"We are directed to yoke awal and bear-root, that is to plow the ridges by pairs." Surv. Banffs. App., p. 82.

- [3. To grip, to grasp, to engage with, Shetl.]

4. [To yoke to, to attack], to enter on any sort of employment with vigour or keenness, S.

She—spies a spot of averens are lang;
Right yap she yoked to the ready feast,
And lay and eat a full half hour at least.

Ross's Helenore, p. 27, [2nd Ed.]

"Wi' that they a' yoked to me, and hoisted me ower into the cobbles, and cut the rope; sae there was I set adrift without mair ado." St. Johnstoun, ii. 203.

5. [To yoke wi', or with, to tackle], to engage with another in a dispute, S.

"The Turk is like to be terrible to Italy. France is like in earnest to yoke with the Pope, who is so perverse and foolish, that he will force France to restore the Barbarians to their places, whence they are ejected with the force of arms." Baillie's Lett., ii. 175.

"The orthodox and heterodox party will yoke about it with all their strength." Ibid., p. 232.

[YOKE, s. A grip, a grasp, Shetl.; a dispute, a quarrel, Clydes.]

YOKING, s. 1. The time that a horse is in the yoke, S.

"Where horses are used, and the ground is light, and nearly level, a pair of horses can plough an English acre in three journies, or yokings, of four hours each; but the average of work done, by a pair of ordinary horses, can not be stated at more than a Scotch acre in four yokings." Agr. Surv. Aberd., p. 499-500.

- [2. Metaph., debate, disputation.

"Dr. Barron hath often disputed with me—three yokings laid him by." Rutherford's Letters, cxix.

3. A turn, or bout.

At length we had a hearty yokin
At sang about.

Burns, iii. 235.]

YOKE, s. The natural greasiness of wool, Galloway; Eik, Clydes.

"Is not the yoke, or natural oiliness of the wool in the animal, more efficacious for this purpose, [improving the growth and quality of wool], than any artificial application? If black-faced sheep are deficient in this quality, it will account in a satisfactory manner for the practice of smearing. The wool of the black-faced has commonly less yoke than that of fine-woolled sheep." Agr. Surv. Gall., p. 283. V. Eik.

YOLDYN, YOUNDEN, pret. v. Yielded, surrendered.

—Tharfor in by
He set a sege thar to stoutly;
And lay thar quhill it yoldyn was.

Barbour, x. 804, MS.

YOLK, s. Those round, opaque, and radiated crystalizations, which are found in window-glass, in consequence of being too slowly cooled, are generally termed yolks in

S.; probably from their supposed likeness to the yolk of an egg.

YOLKIE-STANE, s. Plum-pudding-stone, or conglomerate, Forfar.

"In descending from the Grampians, the first rock that occurs after the porphyry, is what is commonly called coarse Pudding-stone, Gravel-stone, or Breccia. The people of this country apply to it the more descriptive name of yolky-stone, because it is composed of a vast number of rounded pebbles resembling yolks of eggs, which are bound together by a ferruginous sandy cement, of various, but generally of great hardness." Agr. Surv. of Forfar, p. 19.

To YOLL, v. a. To strike; as, to yoll with an axe, S. B.

YOLLE, s. A yawl.

"The burgh of Kinghorne—is hellelé trublit and hurt be the skaffis, skeldrykes, and yolles of unfrie tounis," &c. Act. Conv. Bor. V. SKELDRYKE.

Belg. jol, a Jutland boat; Su.-G. julle, navigium, Dan. jolle, id.

To YOLLER, v. n. To speak in a loud, passionate, and inarticulate manner, Roxb.; synon. Goller, q. v.

YOLLERIN, s. Confused or convulsed noise; Gollerin, synon., ibid.

YOLPIN, s. 1. An unfledged bird, Upp. Clydes.; synon. Gorbet.

2. Transferred to children, who are often spoken of as the yolpins, ibid.

Su.-G. golben signifies a novice, from gol, gul, yellow, and ben; of uncertain signification and origin.

To YOMER, v. n. To shriek. V. YAMER, v.

YOMF, s. A blow. To YOMF, v. a. To strike, [to thrust], Gall.

—May thy bonny gipie, Nell,
Entice ye, advise [ye] till Nickie Ben will prize ye,
And yomf ye head foremost to hell!
Gall. Encycl., p. 447.

Corr. from S. Gowff, id.; or, allied to Su.-G. gump, lal. gump-r, nates, clunes, podex.

[YONGAT, YON-GAT, adv. In such wise, Barbour, iii. 171.]

YONT, YOND, prep. Beyond. V. YOUND.

FAR YONT, FAR YOND. A phrase applied to one who is supposed to be in a nearly hopeless state, in whatever sense, S.

"As long as a people will hear reproof, and take with it, there is ay some hopes in their latter end; but when he that reproves in the gate makes himself a prey, then they are far yond, when they refuse to return, and make their face like a flint and harder." W. Guthrie's Serm., p. 24.

YONTER, adj. More distant, farther; the comparative of Yont, S. B.

They turs'd the baggage, and awa' they scour,
Out o'er the yonter bras wi' a' their power.
Ross's Helenore, p. 49.

V. YOUND.

YONTMOST, YONDMOST, adj. Farthest, most distant, S.

"Here the mercy of God is gone to the yondmost." Wisheart's Theologia, p. 393.

[YOOFIE, s. A beating, Shetl. V. YGOUFF.]

YOOLUGHAN, s. The act of yelling.

"I'll gar her set up her yoolughans there, the limmer, an I had since an arrow." Saint Patrick, ii. 18. From YOUL, v.

[To YOORN, YOURN, v. n. To move about in a lazy or listless manner, Perth., Banffs.]

YOPINDAILL, YOWPINDAILE, s. Prob. a heifer.

"The bailies chargit Johnne Dron in judgement to deliver Johnn Auchquholly ane yopindail, or than xv sh. Scottis thairfor." Aberd. Reg., A. 1541, V. 17.

"Five yopeindailis at xv s. Scottis the pece." Ibid. V. 18.

"vi Yopindailis." Ibid. A. 1548, V. 20.

"Five yopeindailis at xv s. Scottis the pece." Ibid. V. 18.

"Item thair was awing to the said vmquhile James be Alex'. Innes of Cromy xvi li. xiii s. iii d. Item, be John Gordon of Carnburrow, xxi li. vi s. viii d. Item, be Thomas Innes of Pethnik auchtene yowpindailis, pryce of the pece xx s." MS. Testament of James Innes of Drennie, 4th Dec., A. 1572.

Can this be a corr. from Cowpendach, a heifer?

YORE, adj. Ready; alert. V. YARE.

YORLIN, s. Yellow-hammer, Gall., Roxb.

—Syne, at his tail,
Frae 'mang the scrogs, the yorlins fly in clude,
Like tykes upon a beggar.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 4.

This seems merely a transposition of Youtring, q. v.

YOUD, s. Youth, Fife.

YOUDFU', adj. Youthful, ibid.

YOUDITH, s. Youth, S. A.

This is a corr. V. YOUTHHEID.

Her cheek, where roses free from stain,
In glows of youthith beek;
Unmingled sweets her lips retain,
These lips she ne'er should steek.

Ramsay's Works, i. 117.

YOUDLIN, s. A stripling, Fife.

Blyd Jamie, a youdlin like a fir in its blossom,
Sair sabbit his tongue, a tear filled his ee,
Ane outlin tae what was aye wringin his bosom,
Till Jenny's wee fittin gaed down the green lee.

MS. Poem.

YOUDEN-DRIFT, s. Snow driven by the wind, S. B.

The strongest wind that e'er blew frae 'he lift,
Tho' mixt wi' hail, wi' rain or youden drift,
Brings ay a calm at last. —

Morison's Poems, p. 121.

Also written Euden-drift, q. v. This may be formed from the old part. pa. of yield, q. snow which is driven as yielding to the force of the wind.

YOUDEN, part. pa. 1. Yielded, given up, surrendered. V. YOLDYN.

2. When the effects of a thaw begin to be felt, it is common to say, "the ice is yowden;" i.e., it has begun to give way, Aberd.

Junius has remarked that gold is the old pret. of the v. to Yeld, i.e., yield. Thus it is used by Chaucer.

—Gladre ought his frend ben of his deth,
Whan with honour is yolden up his breth.

Knight's Tales, v. 3054.

From A.-S. gild-an, solve, is formed gold, solutio.

To YOUF, YOUFF, YUFF, v. n. To bark; [youffin, barking], S.

My colley, Ringie, yous'd an' yow'd a' night,
Cour'd and crap near me in an unco fright.

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 6.

V. WOUFF.

—"In the day of the sickening of the Laird and Lady Kilburnie, whereof they shortly died, his dogs went into the close, and an unco dog coming in amongst them, they all set up a barking, with their faces up to heaven, howling, yelling, and youffing; and when the laird called to them, they would not come to him, as in former times when he called on them." Law's Memorials, p. 224.

—Cerberus, though but just whelped,
Did stan' an' yuff.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 41.

Then Jowler hee begoude to youff,
With a short and ane aungrie tone.

Grousome Caryl, Blackw. Mag. Jan. 1825, p. 80.

Dan. gio-er, Isl. gey-a, latrare.

To YOUF, YOWFF, v. a. To strike forcibly, S.B.; the same with Gowf, q. v.

They yowff'd the ba' frae dyke to dyke
Wi' unco speed and vrr.

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 124.

YOUFF, YOWFF, s. A smart swinging blow; radically the same with gouff, S. [Youffin, a severe beating, S.]

Death wi' his rung rax'd her a yowff,
And see she died.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 218.

[YOUFF, adv. With heavy fall, Banffs.]

YOUFAT, adj. Diminutive, puny, Ayr.

"Thae—critics get up wi' sic lang-nebbit galle-hoings, an' youfat bravooras—as wad gar ane that's no acquant wi' them trou they ettlit to mak a bokeek o' them." Edin. Mag., April 1821, p. 331.

To YOUK, YEUK, YUKE, YUCK, v. n. To itch, to be itchy, S. yuck, id. Lincoln.

Junius mentions this as a S. word, referring to the Prov., "I'll gar you scart where you youk not," i.e., "I'll make you scratch where you itch not." This Prov. is used metaph. as when a parent threatens to beat a child. It is commonly expressed in this manner; I'll gar you claw where ye're no youky.

It seems also to signify the causing of pain or vexation of mind without any previous apprehensions.

"Thay—throw a proud presumption of thair ain wisdome, hearis thame selfis, or sik as flatters thair yeuking eais," &c. J. Hamilton's Facile Tractive, p. 42.

To one who does any thing that may expose him to capital punishment, or who seems to make advances to an action of this kind, it is sometimes said; Your neck's youking, i.e., You seem to long for the gallows. V. Kelly, p. 391.

"Taken from a senseless opinion of my countrymen; that when their nose itches, somebody is speaking ill of them; when their mouth itches, they will get some novelty; when their ear, somebody is speaking of them, &c. The meaning is, that you are doing or saying something that will bring you to the gallows," Kelly, ibid.

Germ. juck-en, Belg. jeuck-en, id. prurire; also, to scratch; Germ. jucke, Belg. jeucke, (pron. q. y.) A.-S. gictha, pruritus, Su.-G. gickt.

YOUK, YEUK, YUKE, YUCK, s. 1. The itch, S.

—A souple taylor to his trade,
And when their hands he shook,
Ga'e them what he got frae his dad,
Fidelicet, the yuke,

To claw that day.

Ramsay's Works, l. 263.

—But waster wives, the warst of a',
Without a yuck they gar ane claw.

Ibid. p. 307.

V. the v.

2. Itchiness; without any relation to the cutaneous disease denominated the itch, S.

YOUKY, adj. 1. Itchy, S. V. the v.

2. Eager, anxious; metaph. used.

Straight Bawry rises, quickly dresses,
While haste his youky mind expresses.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 560.

YOUKFIT, s. The snipe, Upp. Clydes. V. YUCKFIT.

To YOUL, YOULE, v. n. To howl, to yell, S. A. Bor.

And oft with wyldie scryke the nycht oule
Hie on the rufe allane was hard youle.

Doug. Virgil, 110, 10.

With duleful skrik and wailing all is confundit,
The holl housis youlit and resoundit.

Ibid. 55, 15.

"Strike a dog with a bone, and he'll yowll;" S. Prov. "Men will bear small inconveniencies, that bring great profit." Kelly, p. 294.

Gowl, youl, yaul, howl, yell, and yelloch, seem to be all from the same fountain. V. Gowl, v.

YOUL, YOWL, s. A yell, the act of howling, S. V. the v.

The air was dirkit with the fowlis,
That come with yawmeris, and with yowlis.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 22.

YOULLIE, s. A police-man, Edinburgh; a low term, probably formed from their youling or calling the hours.

YOULRING, s. A yellowhammer. V. YELDRIN.

[YOUM, s. Warm air, vapour; smell, aroma, Banffs. V. OAM.]

YOUND, adj. Opposite, what is on the other side.

Wenis thou vuerdit now, and thus vnabil,
Ouer Styx the hellis pule sic wise to fare!—
Vncallit on the yound bray wald thou be!

Doug. Virgil, 176, 35.

"To charge the prelates, and the other benefited men, on the yound side of the Month,—to exhibit and produce the just and trow rentals of their benefices," &c. Knox's Hist., p. 297.

A.-S. deoud, illuc, ultra; there, further; Moes.-G. gaind, illuc. Junius seems, with great propriety, to derive A.-S. ongeond, adversum, contra, from on, and geond, illuc; so that the comp. term signifies whatever is opposite. V. Etym. vo. Against. Germ. gen, adversus, contra; hence jen-cr, ulterior; jen-seit, ultra, trans, in opposita regione, from gen, jen, and seit, latius, side.

S. it is pron. yont; as, the yont side, the further side. Yont, adv. further, is pron. in the same manner.

"What want ye up and down? ye have hither and yont;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 76. A.-S. hider and geond, huc atque illuc; Bed. v. 13. A. Bor. yont, beyond.

Sit yontermert, Fife, sit farther off, from yonder, S. yonter, and mair, more.

YOUNG FOLK. The name commonly given in S. to a newly married pair.

"The Baron, while he assumed the lower end of the table, insisted that Lady Emily should do the honours of the head, that they might, he said, set a meet example to the young folk." Waverley, iii. 360.

YOUNGSONE, adj. Youthful, Ang.

But we're forfain, an' right sair altered now,
Sic youngsone sangs are sairless frae my mou.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit. p. 115.

[To YOUP, v. n. To bark, cough; also, to grumble, fret, Clydes., Banffs. V. YOUP.

Youp implies a harder, sharper sound than Youf.]

YOUP, s. [A bark, cough]; also, a scream. V. YOUT, s.

To YOUT, v. n. To talk idly and loosely, with volubility and noise, Roxb. [V. VOUST.]

YOUT, s. Conversation of this description, ibid.

Old Flem. iest signifies impetus; A.-S. yet and gist, procella; aestus maris. But perhaps it is rather allied to gist, gyst, Su.-G. gacet, (Isl. jast-r, E. yeast.) from gac-a, jars-a, fermentare, Isl. ys-a, intumescere.

YOUSTIR, YUSTER, s. "Putrid matter, corrupt blood, sanies;" Rudd.

I saw that cruell feynd eik thare, but dout,
Thare lymmes rife and eit, as he war wod,
The youstir tharfra chirtand and blak blud.

—He straucht, fordrunkin, ligging in his dreame,
Bokkis furth and yeiskis of yuster mony streame.

Doug. Virgil, 89, 33, 43.

A.-S. geolster, geolsthor, "virus, sanies, tabum; poison, venome; black, corrupt, filthy matter or blood;" Somner. Hence geolstru, virulentus; virulent, full of poison; id.

The A. Bor. v. to youser, to fester (Ray), is evidently from the same origin with our s.

It might seem formed from geolu, yellow, as indicating the colour of purulent matter, and ster, a term, yet retained in some Goth. dialects, by which substantives are formed from verbs, and adjectives from substantive; as Belg. eryster, virgo nubilis, from frey-en, nubere, Germ. Amster, mus agrestis, from hamme, ager. V. STER, term.

Kilian renders Tent. ghest, ghist, faex, sanies, crassamen, crassamentum. This might seem allied, were it not synon. with A.-S. gid, E. yeast. And, from the orthography, it is not probable that the latter has any affinity to geolster.

To YOUT, v. n. To cry, to roar, S.B.

Quhy am I formit sa foull;
Ay to yout and to youll,
As ane horrible oull,
Ougsum owir all!

Houlate, l. 8.

A cow is said to yout, when she makes a noise.

Teut. iuyt-en, iuycht-en, jubilaré, vociferari; iuyt iuytinghe, jubilatus. Isl. gell-a, to bark, is probably allied. This may be traced to gey-a, latraro, whence gaud, latratus, barking. V. Verel. in vo.

YOUT, YOWT, s. A cry, "a scream," Gl. Shirr. S.B.

The fyre flauchtis flew ourthort the fellis,
Than was thair nocht bot youtis and gellis.
Lyndsay's Warkie, 1592, p. 40.

Sum fled for to saue thame sels,
And vther sum with youts and yells,
Maist cairfully did cry.

Burd's Pilg. Watson's Coll., ii. 33.

My heart it quells wi' fear,
The sights to see, the youts to hear
That stound upon mine ear.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 233.

Skinner gives youp as synon. This seems allied to the S. v. YAUP, q. v.

YOUTHEID, YHOUTHADE, YOWTHHEID, s.

1. The season of youth.

—Till swylik thowlesnes he yeid,
As the cours askis off youthheid.

Barbour, i. 834, MS.

In-til the floure of hys yhoutheid
He deyid in clene madynhed.

Wynloun, vii. 7. 331.

Bot quhen youththeid hes blawn his wantoun blast,
Than sall Gud Counsall rewill him at the last.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 123.

The latter is the most proper orthography; A.-S. georh-had, i.e., literally, the state of being young. V. HEID, term.

2. Used to denote persons in the state of adolescence.

—"The vniversities of this realme are appoitit for the educatioun of the youthheid quhill sūd be seide of gude learning and maneris within this realme," &c. Acts Ja. VI. 1578, Ed. 1814, p. 98.

"His diligence & fruit of his labouris vpoune the youthheid." Aberl. Reg. Cent. 16.

—"And to appoint sik personis as thai pliss—for instructing of the youthheid in gude literature and science," &c. Reg. Present. A. 1584. Life of Melville, i. 480.

YOUTHIE, YOUTHY, adj. 1. Youthful, S.

Youthy is used in E. as an adj. But Dr. Johns. condemns it as "a bad word."

2. Of youthful habits, or, with an affectation of youthfulness in dress, or in manners unbecoming in advanced life. Thus, it is often said of a female; "I've warran she's nae less than three score, but she's as youthie as gin she wara out o' her teens;" S.

YOUTHINESS, s. Youthfulness, S.

"My spirits were maintained in a state of jocund temperance, and my thoughts so lifted out of the cares of business, that I was, for the time, a new creature, bringing back with me—a sort of youthiness that lasted sometimes more than a fortnight." The Steam-bat, p. 2.

[YOUTHER, YOUTHIR, s. Smoke, smell. V. YOWTHER.]

YOUTHIR OF THE SOD. The red ashes of turf, Ang.

To YOVE, v. n. 1. To talk in a free, facetious, and familiar way; as, to Yove and Crack, to speak a great deal, in high spirits, S.; synon. Tove and Crack.

This term includes the idea, that, although a good deal be said, it is rather of a trivial nature, or little to the purpose.

Teut. iouw, jubilatus; Isl. goefy-a, celebrate.

2. To go at a round pace; a secondary sense; Loth.

YOW, YOUE, s. 1. A ewe.

Thre velis tho, as was the auld manere,
In wourship of Erix he had down quel,
And ane blak yow to God of tempestis fel.

Doug. Virgil, 153, 51.

—"Thai maid grit cheir of euyrie sort of mylk baytāt of ky mylk & youe mylk." Compl. S., p. 66.

A.-S. cowu, Belg. oye, ouwe.

2. Rotten yow, metaph. applied to a person supposed to be unwholesome, as subjected to much expectoration, S.B.

[YOWIE, s. Dimin. of yow, Burns.]

To YOW, v. n. To caterwaul, Clydes.

An' the wilcat yow't through its dowie vouts
Sae goustie, howch, and dim.

Marmaiden of Clyde, Edin. Mag., May 1822.

R. yow't. V. same number, p. 452.

YOWDE, pret. Went. V. YEDE.

YOWDLIN, part. adj. Dilatory, Fife; as, "Ye're a yowdlin elf."

Isl. ioll-a suggests the idea of tardiness in eating. Edentuli infantis more, cibum in ore volutare.

YOWPINDAIL, s. V. YOPINDAILL.

YOWTHER, YOUTHER, s. 1. Any strong or nauseous smell; often, "a filthy yowther;" as that of housed cattle. V. EWDER.

2. It denotes vapour, Moray.

The yowther drifted sae high i' the sky,
The sun worth a' sae red.

Northern Antiquities, p. 21.

3. The dust of flax, Ayrs.

YRLE, s. A dwarf; [yrilin, Ayrs.]

Wansuckit funnling, that Nature made an yrle, &c.
Kennedie, Evergreen, ii. 49.

V. WANSUCKIT.

Isl. yrling-r, vermiculus, G. Andr., p. 137, a small worm; also applied to the young of little beasts. Or it may be corr. from wurl, one of the forms which scaricolf has assumed. As, however, nirl denotes a dwarf, S. B., it is possible that n has been omitted by Kennedie, or by some copyist, as not belonging to the term. For where words have not formerly been written, beginning with a vowel, it is sometimes doubtful, whether a belongs to them, or only to the article preceding; the pronunciation being in both cases the same. Yorks. "urle, to draw one's self up on a heap;" Clavis.

[To YSCHE, v. n. To issue, to sally, to sally forth, Barbour, iv. 95; pret. and part. 'pa. yschit, V. 338, vi. 404. V. ISCH.]

[YSCHIE, s. Outlet, exit, issue, Ibid. vii. 363.]

[YSCHER, YSCHARE, s. An usher, Lyndsay, The Dreime, l. 23.]

[YSCHING, s. Sallying out, sally, Barbour, xv. 158.]

[YTHAND, YTHEN, adj. Assiduous, Barbour, iii. 285. V. ITHAND.]

[YTHANDLY, YTHENLY, adv. Assiduously, Ibid. vi. 327.]

YTHRANGIN, pret. v. Thrust upwards. V. THRING, v. a.

[YTWYN, adv. A corr. of in-twyn, apart, asunder.]

Tharfor ill dykys out thort he schar,
Fra baith the mossis to the way:
That wer sa fer fra othir, that thair
War ytwyn a bowdraucht and mar.

Barbour, viii. 175.

Euen, even, Edit. 1620.

[In Dr. Jamieson's edition of Barbour this term is correctly printed ytwyn; but in the Dict. it is yincyn, regarding the meaning of which the Dr. confessed he could form no conjecture. Nor could any one else. But ytwyn is plainly the vulgar pron. of in-twyn, asunder, and is still used in the form atween.]

YUCKFIT, YUOKFIT, s. The snipe, Lanarks.

"The yuckfit fell on Fauldhouse know,
The patrick on Auldton lea."

"Yuckfit, the snipe, so called from its cry; called also, from the same circumstance, heatherleat." Edin. Mag. July 1819, p. 529.

This must be an error of the press for heatherbleat.

[YUGGLE, s. An owl, Shetl. Dan. ugle, id.]

YUIK, YUKE, s. [Itch, itching, Clydes.]

"Or he was past ane myle from Struiling, all the partis of his body wer taikin with sic ane sair yuiik as it might easily appeir that the same proceedit not of the force of ony seiknes, bot be plane trecherie. The takinis of quhilk trecherie, certane blak pimples as sone as he was cum to Glasgow, brak out ouer all his haill body, with sa greit yuiik and sic pane throw out all his lymmis, that he lingerit out his lyfe with verray small hope of eschaip." Buchanan's Detect., p. 12.

In the Lond. Edit. ache is the word used, Sign. C. iii. b.; in the Lat. copy dolor, in both places. Dolore et omnium partium vexatione.

Itchiness cannot well be meant, as there is no correspondent term in the Lat. Besides, dolor and exatio are the only terms used by Buchanan, Hist. Lib. xviii. 6. [The term is still used in Clydes. and Loth.]

One would almost think that yuiik were an error of the press for yuiik, as the v. is used in this form, signifying, to ache. But this cannot well be supposed, as yuiik not only occurs twice in such close connexion, but in another place.

"Blak pimples breking out ouer all his body, greuous yuiik in all his lymmis, and intollerabill stinch disclois it." In Lond. Edit. ache, Sign. H. ii. b.

To YUKE. V. YUOK.

"A green Yule makes a fat kirk-yard;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 11. The truth of this Prov. is denied by some learned physicians, who assert that a hard winter cuts off many more, especially those advanced in life, than an open one.

Su.-G. jul, Dan. jule, juledag, Isl. jol, A.-S. geola, geohol, gehhol, gehul, id.

Mr. Pinkerton has justly observed, that this was "originally the Gothic Pagan feast of Yule or Jul;" Gl. Maitl. Poems. The ancient Goths had three great religious festivals in the year. Of these Yule was the first. It was celebrated at the time of the winter solstice, in honour of the Sun, whom the Goths worshipped under the name of Thor. As at this period the Sun began to return, they expressed their joy in this manner, and endeavoured to secure a propitious year. Mallet's North. Antiq., i. 130, 131.

It must be acknowledged, that the same confusion may be remarked in the Gothic mythology, as in that of Greece and Rome. The attributes of one deity are often transferred to another. Hence the Sun is sometimes recognised by the name of Odin; and we are informed that this deity was denominated, by the inhabitants of the North, Julratter, or the Father of Yule, because this feast was observed in honour of him. V. Keysler, Antiq. Septent., p. 159. This confusion may in part be accounted for by a circumstance which Mallet has taken notice of. The different northern nations had their partialities; and as they all observed the feast of Jul, some might ascribe the honour to one deity, and others to another. "The Danes seem to have paid the highest honours to Odin. The inhabitants of Norway and Iceland appear to have been under the immediate protection of Thor; and the Swedes had chosen Freya for their tutelary deity." North. Antiq., i. 97.

I. Many conjectures have been formed as to the origin of the NAME. Some have derived it from Gr. ωλος, which denoted a hymn that was wont to be sung by women in honour of Bacchus, as appears from the following verse:

Δερδαλίδας τευχούσα καλὰς ψαλίδας οὐλοῦσι.

"And preparing the salted flour, she sung the pleasant Juli."

Didymus and Athenaeus assert, that the hymn was in honour of Ceres; and the same thing is intimated by Theodoret, in his work De Materia et Mundo, when he says; "Let us not sing the Julus to Ceres, nor the Dithyrambus to Bacchus." By the way, it may be remarked, that, according to the learned Verelius, Ceres was by the Goths called Friyga or Freia. Not. in Hervarar S., p. 52. Hickes observes, that this agrees very well with the Yule-games of our ancestors, who celebrated this feast after the completion of harvest, and at the commencement of a new year, over the labours of which Ceres was supposed to preside.

It has been objected to this derivation, that it is improbable that the Goths would borrow the term from the Greeks. But if we could view the words as having a common origin, it might rather be supposed that the Greeks had borrowed theirs from the Goths, as the Pelasgi seem to have been of Scythian extract. With our ancestors, however, the worship of Ceres was certainly appropriated to Freya, while Yule was consecrated to the Sun.

Because the 25th of December was reckoned the middle of winter by Julius Cesar, it has been conjectured that the Goths gave the name of Jul to this day. Venerable Bede, in one passage, seems to embrace this opinion. V. Worm. Fast. Dan. L. i. c. 7. Our Buchanan, having observed that Yule was a revival of the ancient Saturnalia, adds, that the name of Julius Cesar was substituted for that of Saturn. Nostris Julia id festum vocant Caesaris videlicet nomine pro Saturno substituto. Hist. L. i. c. 24.

But it is extremely improbable, that Yule should receive its designation among the Goths, from Julius Cesar. "For what reason," as Loccenius inquires, "would they give this honour to him, who, so far from subduing them, never came into their territories?" According to Strabo, who lived under Augustus and Tiberius, the regions beyond the Elbe, where the sea was interposed, were quite unknown to the Romans in his time. Lib. vii. p. 249. V. Loccen. Antiq. Sueo.-Goth., p. 23.

Wormius, although in one place he seems disposed to concede, that the Cimbric name of this feast was adopted out of compliment to Julius, elsewhere prefers a different hypothesis. "The months called Giuli (including part of December and January) receive their denomination from the retrograde motion of the sun, causing the increase of the day.—The name originates if I mistake not, from the winter solstice, because then the sun seems as it were to rest, before he approaches nearer to the Equator. For, to this day, huile denotes rest, as at huile, at rest; and the change of H into G is easy." Fast. Dan., p. 41.

The A.-S. gave the name of Geola to two of their months, December and January, calling the first Aerre-geola, or the first Yule, and the second Aestera-geola, or the later Yule. Bede supposes that they received this designation, a conversione Solis, in auctum diei, from the sun turning back, to the lengthening of the day; the one preceding, and the other following, this change. De Temporum Bat. c. 13. Ihre adopts this idea, observing that C. B. chuyil signifies retrogradation.

Nearly allied to this, is the opinion of those who derive it from Su.-G. huil, or rather hiul, rota, a wheel. Ihre has observed, (vo. Hiul) that, in the Edda, fagra Avel, i.e., beautiful wheel, is one of the designations of the Sun. Perhaps, it may be added, that a wheel seems to have been the emblem of the sun, in the old Danish Fasti.

Others understand the name as simply signifying The Feast. The learned Hickes views i or j, and A.-S. ge, merely as intensive particles, conjoined with lal and Su.-G. oel, commensatio, compotatio, convivium, symposium. The term literally signifies ale or beer, the chief liquor among the Goths; and metonymically a feast.

In lal i indeed is an intensive particle, often prefixed to words for greater emphasis; as igilde, a great price, isurt, very bitter, igraenn, very green, &c. Dr. Thorkelin adopts this etymon; Fragments of Irish History, p. 84. V. Mallet's North. Antiq., ii. 68.

VOL. IV.

Gl. Eddae Saemund. vo. Aul. It is a singular coincidence that Ir. and Gael. cuirn, which denotes ale, also signifies a feast or banquet.

lal. jol has also been viewed (q. jo-ol) as "denominated in honour of the God Jaw, or the Sun. As el, according to the original use of the word, signifies nourishment in general, from ek el, alo, and thus includes the idea both of meat and drink, it more especially denotes a joyous and splendid feast. Very fat meat is called jolfelt kiol; and a well-fed horse, alla hestr. Some have derived Jol from the eating of horse-flesh. This animal, indeed, was sacred to the Sun (Jaw), and was doubtless, in ancient times, sacrificed in honour of this deity." Gl. Eddae Saemund., vo. Jolner.

Passing a variety of other etymons, I shall only add that of several learned writers, who derive the term from Moes.-G. uul, the Sun; C. B. haul, Arm. goril, hiul, id. The resemblance of the Gr. name of this luminary, ἥλιος, has been remarked.

Where there is so great diversity of opinions, I cannot pretend to determine which of them ought to be preferred. I shall only say, that the latter derivation and that from huil, rota, together with that of Hickes, seem to have the chief claim to attention.

II. This festival, among the Northern nations, was the great season of SACRIFICE. On this occasion human victims seem generally to have been offered to their false gods. According to Dittmar, (in Chron.), at this general convention, the Danes once in nine years increased the number of human sacrifices to ninety-nine. Besides these, they offered as many horses, dogs, and cocks in place of hawks. V. Ihre, vo. Hock, p. 912.

The Persians sacrificed horses to the Sun. This noble animal was, indeed, sacred to him. We must view it as a remnant of the same Eastern idolatry, that the Goths offered horses at the feast of Yule. V. El. Sched. de Dis. German., p. 102.

"The Greenlanders at this day keep a Sun-Feast at the winter solstice, about Dec. 22, to rejoice at the return of the Sun, and the expected renewal of the hunting season." Crantz's Hist. Greenland, i. 176. V. Mallet, ii. 68.

The Goths used also to sacrifice a boar. For this animal, as well as the horse, was, according to their mythology, sacred to the Sun. To this day it is customary, among the peasants in the North of Europe, at the time of Christmas, to make bread in the form of a boar-pig. This they place upon a table, with bacon and other dishes; and, as a good omen, they expose it as long as the feast continues. To leave it uncovered is reckoned a bad omen, and totally incongruous to the manners of their ancestors. They call this kind of bread Julagalt; Verel. Not. ad Hervarar S., p. 139. For a fuller account of this ancient custom, V. MAIDEN, a. 2.

Rudbeck asserts that the bread-sow was dedicated to the Earth or Ceres. Atlant. ii. 545. But compare what he says with MAIDEN, a. 2.

Hence, as has been observed, we may perceive what is meant in the Indiculus Superstitionum et Paganarium Synodo Liptiniensi subjunctus, sect. 26, when we meet with this title, De Simulacro de Comparata Farina. Keysler, ut sup., p. 159, 160.

In our own country, the use that is made of the Maiden, or last handful of corn that has been cut down in harvest, bears a striking analogy to this custom. It is divided among the horses or cows, on the morning of Yule, sometimes of the new year, "to make them thrive all the year round." To this custom Burns seems to allude in his beautiful poem, entitled, The Auld Farmer's New-year Morning Salutation to his Auld Mare Maggie, on giving her the accustomed ripp of corn to haeel in the new year, iii. 140.

N 5

A guld New-year I wish thee! Maggie,
Hae, there's a ripp to thy auld baggie, &c.

This custom varies in different places. In some, the horses generally get a feed of corn on the morning of Yule; and the Maiden is given to the horse called the Win, which leads the rest in the plough.

The ancient Romans had a rite analogous to this, in the celebration of the Feriae Sementinae, a festival appointed to be kept at the beginning of seed-time, for imploring their deities, particularly Ceres and Tellus, to give success to their labours. On this occasion, the oxen used for labour were crowned with garlands, and received a double portion of food. In allusion to this custom, Ovid says;

State coronati plenum ad praespe juvenci.

Fast. Lib. i.

Something similar to the custom of the Julagall has evidently subsisted in the Orkney Islands, although the vestiges of it are not now understood.

"In a part of the parish of Sandwick, every family that has a herd of swine kills a sow on the 17th of December, and thence it is called Sow-day. There is no tradition as to the origin of this practice." Statist. Acc., xvi. 460.

This, indeed, may be viewed as a relique of the heathen worship of the ancient Goths, in sacrificing a boar to the Sun.

It is the opinion of some learned writers that the Sun was worshipped under the name of Saturn. Servius (in Virgil, Lib. i.) says that the Assyrians worshipped Saturn under the name of Bel, and that the Sun and Saturn are the same. V. Minut. Fel. Not., p. 45, 46. It is certainly a well-founded idea that Bel or Belus, the great god of the Chaldeans, was the Sun. This is asserted by Macrobius, Lib. i. c. 22. Uranus, i.e., the Heaven, being the father of Saturn, and Rhea, or the Earth, his sister and wife; it seems highly probable that the worship of Saturn was originally derived by the western nations from that of the Sun as adored in the east. At the same time, it is evident that they incorporated many things of their own into this part of their mythology. But as they had different deities that bore the same name, they seem to have often jumbled together allegories concerning nature, the history of their departed heroes, and mere fables, in their accounts of one particular deity.

By supposing that Saturn was another name for the Sun, we can easily account for the striking similarity of the rites used by the Romans in their Saturnalia, celebrated in the latter part of the month of December, to those of the Northern nations. Nay, as the Celts undoubtedly worshipped the Sun under the name of Bel or Belenus, and as some of the most solemn acts of the Druidical worship were performed about this season; we find Goths, Celts, and Romans, conspiring in the observation of a great feast at the time of the winter solstice.

As the Druids then employed their golden bill for cutting the mistletoe, it is remarkable, that the falx, the bill or scythe, was the badge of Saturn, because he was supposed to preside over agriculture; Rosin., p. 294. Banier's Mythol., ii. 260.

His worship, in another respect, agrees with that of the Sun. For it seems to be admitted, that human sacrifices had been offered to him by the Carthaginians; Banier, ibid. p. 258. In the same manner the Pelasgi are said to have worshipped him; Rosin. ut sup.

A custom, similar to that of the Julagall already described, prevailed among the ancient Italians, in the worship of Saturn. We are informed by Dionysius of Halicarnassus, that Hercules, on his return from Spain to Italy, abolished the horrid custom of offering human sacrifices to Saturn; and, having erected an altar to him on the Saturnine mount, presented those offerings, which the Greeks call θυμια αγρα, which, according to the Scholiast on Thucydides, were of paste figured like animals; Banier's Mythol., B. i., c. 3, p. 259.

Something of the same kind has been observed among the Egyptians. According to Jerome, indeed, it would seem to have been a general custom among the heathen, to distinguish the end of the old year, or the beginning of the new, by peculiar religious ceremonies.

The passage referred to, is his comment on these words, Isa. lxxv. 11. "That prepare a table for that troop, and that furnish the drink-offering unto that number." He renders it, "That place a table to Fortune, and pour out upon it;" or, according to the Septuagint, "pour out a drink-offering to the daemon." Then he says; "But there is an ancient idolatrous custom in all cities, and especially in Egypt and in Alexandria, that on the last day of the year and of the last month, they place a table covered with meats of different kinds, and a cup mixed with honey, expressive of abundance, either of the past or of the future year." These words, That prepare a table for that troop, are viewed by the learned Vitringa, as respecting the worship of Apollo or the Sun, who, he apprehends, is there in Heb. called Gad; as he renders Meni, explained in our version, "that number," the Moon. In Isa. lxxv. 11. V. MONE.

In our own country, there are still several vestiges of this idolatry. In Angus, he who first opens the door on Yule-day, expects to prosper more than any other member of the family during the future year, because, as the vulgar express it, "he lets in Yule." The door being opened, it is customary with some to place a table or a chair in it, covering it with a clean cloth, and, according to their own language, to "set on it bread and cheese to Yule." Early in the morning, as soon as any one of the family gets out of bed, a new broom besom is set at the back of the outer door. The design is, "to let in Yule." These gross superstitions, and the very modes of expression used, have undoubtedly had a heathen origin; for Yule is thus not only personified, but treated as a deity, who receives an oblation.

A similar custom must have prevailed in England. For in the Dialogue between Dives and Pauper, published in 1493, in an account of Superstitions which were observed at the beginning of the year, mention is made of using "nyce observances—in the New Yere, as setting of mete or drynke by nighte on the benche, to fede Alkolle or Gobelyn." V. Brand's Pop. Antiq., l. 8.

It is also very common to have a table covered, in the house, from morning to evening, with bread and drink on it, that every one who calls may take a portion: and it is deemed very ominous, if one come into a house, and leave it without partaking. However many call on this day, all must partake of the cheer provided.

It was customary with the Romans, at this season, to cover tables, and set lamps on them. This is one of the observances prohibited as heathenish, in the early canons of the Church. V. GYSAR.

Here we may also mention some other ridiculous rites practised on this day. Any servant, who is supposed to have a due regard to the interests of the family, and at the same time not emancipated from the yoke of superstition, is careful to go early to the well, on Christmas morning, to draw water, to draw corn out of the stack, and also to bring in kale from the kitchen-garden. This is meant to ensure prosperity to the family.

A similar superstition is, for the same reason, still observed by many on the morning of the New-year. One of a family watches the stroke of twelve, goes to the well as quickly as possible, and carefully skims it. This they call "getting the scum or ream (cream) of the well."

This superstitious rite, in the South of S., is observed on the morning of the New-year's day.

Twall struck.—Twa neebour lizzies raise ;

An', liltin, gaed a sad gate ;

"The flower o' the well to our house gae,

"An' I'll the boniest lad get."

"Upon the morning of the first day of the new year, the country lasses are sure to rise as early as possible, if they have been in bed, which is seldom the case, that they may get the flower, as it is called, or the first pail-full of water from the well. The girl, who is so lucky as to obtain that prize, is supposed to have more than a double chance of gaining the most accomplished young man in the parish. As they go to the well, they chant over the words, which are marked with inverted commas." Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 30.

This seems to be a very ancient superstition : and may perhaps be viewed as a vestige of the worship of wells, which prevailed among the Picts. This rite was not unknown to the Romans. Virgil attributes the observation of it to Aeneas. The act of skimming water with the hand was one of the rites necessary in order to successful augury.

—Et sic affatus ad undam

III. Yule, as has been already observed, was celebrated as a FEAST, among the ancient Goths. At this time, those who were related had the closest intercourse. They used by turns to feast with each other. These entertainments they called Offergilden: for the term gild denotes a fraternity or association, for the purpose of having money, meat, drink, &c. in common. Keyser. Antiq. Septent., p. 349. Thence gild or guild among us denotes a society possessing a common stock.

It was also customary during Yule, particularly in Sweden, for different families to meet together in one village, and to bring meat and drink with them, for the celebration of the feast. The same custom was observed, when there was a general concourse to the place where one of their temples stood. Erat veterum more receptum, ut cum sacrificia erant celebranda, ad templum frequentes convenirent cives omnes, ferentes secum singuli victum et commeatum, quo per sacrificiorum solennia uterentur, singuli etiam cerevisiam, quae isto in convivio adhiberetur. Snorr. Sturl. Heimskring. S. Hakonar, c. 16.

This is, most probably, the origin of the custom still preserved among us, of relations and friends feasting in each other's houses, at this time. The vulgar, in the Northern counties of S., have also a custom which greatly resembles the Offergilden. On the morning of the New-year, it is common for neighbours to go into each other's houses, and to club their money in order to send out for drink, to welcome in the year. This is done in private houses.

During the times of heathenism, the solemnities of Yule, lasted three days. The festival seems to have been sometimes continued for eight days. Hakon Skulderbredds S., c. 11, 14.

The festive observation of this season, even where there is no idea of sanctity in relation to the supposed date of our Saviour's birth, is far more general in the N. of S., than in other parts of the country. There is scarcely a family so poor, as not to have a kind of feast on Yule. Those have butcher-meat in their houses on this day, who have it at no other time ; it being the day appropriated for the meeting of all the relations of a family.

Among the lower classes, it is universally observed according to the Old Style. "Our fathers," say they, "observed it on this day ;" and, "They may alter the style, but they cannot alter the seasons."

The ancient inhabitants of the North were never at a loss for the means of celebrating their Yule. Johnstone (Antiq. Celto-Normann.) has a note referring to this subject, which exhibits their character in its true light. "The Scandinavian expeditions," he says, "were anciently conducted in the following manner. A chieftain sailed, with a few ships, for Britain, and collected all the scattered adventurers he could find in his way. They landed on the coast, and formed a temporary fortress. To this strong hold they drove all the cattle, and having salted them, the freebooters returned home, where they spent their Jol, or brumal feast, with much glee. Such an expedition was called a Strand-hoggua, or strand slaughter." P. 65.

IV. The Gifts, now generally conferred at the New-year, seem to have originally belonged to Yule. Among the Northern nations, it was customary for subjects, at this season, to present gifts to the sovereign. These were denominated Jolugjafir, i. e., Yule-gifts. They were Beauvolences of that description, which, if not given cheerfully, the prince considered himself as having a right to extort. Hence, it is said of Hacon, King of Norway, A. 1093, Hann tok tha oc af rid the iolugjafir ; Is quoque tributa, quae donorum Jolensium nomine solvi debant, eis remisit. Johnstone, Antiq. Celto-Scand., p. 230.

The Romans, at this season, were wont to send presents of sweetmeats, such as dried figs, honey, &c., to which they gave the name of Strenae. This was meant as a good omen ; and, by this substantial emblem, they also expressed their wishes, that their friends might enjoy the secrets of the year on which they entered ; Rosin. Antiq., p. 29, 230. The custom which prevails in S., of presenting what the vulgar call a secretion, or a loaf enriched with raisins, currants, and spices, has an evident analogy to this.

In some of the northern counties of S., the vulgar would reckon it a bad omen, to enter a neighbour's house, on New-year's day, empty-handed. It is common to carry some trifling present ; as, a bit of bread, a little meal, or a piece of money.

Those gifts were also called by the Romans Saturnalia ; Rosin, p. 294. Saturnalia, — says Tertullian, strenae captandae, et septimontium, et brumae, et carae cognationis honoraria exigenda omnia, &c. De Idololatria, c. 10. V. also his work, De Fuga in Persecutione, c. 13.

Tertullian severely reprehends the Christians, for their compliance with the heathen, in paying some respect to these customs. "By us," he says, "who are strangers to sabbaths, and new moons, once acceptable to God, the Saturnalia and the feasts of January, and Brumalia, and Matronalia, are frequented ; gifts are sent hither and thither, there is the noise of the Strenae, and of games and of feasting. O ! better faith of the nations in their own religion, which adopts no solemnity of the Christians." De Idolatria, c. 14. We accordingly find that the Strenae were prohibited by the Christian church. V. Rosin. Antiq., p. 29, and vo. GTSAR.

The Strenae are traced as far back as to king Tatius, who, at this season, used to receive branches of a happy or fortunate tree from the grove of Strenia, as favourable omens with respect to the new-year ; Q. Symmach. ap. Rosin, p. 28.

It appears that, in consequence of the establishment of the monarchy under Augustus, all orders of people were expected to present New-years-gifts to the emperors themselves; Sueton. in August., c. 75. During the reign of this prince, these were given at the Capitol. But Caligula was so lost to a sense of shame, as to publish an edict expressly requiring such gifts; and to stand in the porch of the palace, on the Calends of January, in order to receive those which people of all descriptions brought to him; Sueton. in Calig., c. 42. Even Augustus pretended to have a nocturnal vision, requiring that the people should annually, on a certain day, present money to him, which he received with a hollow hand, cavum manum asses porrigentibus præbens; Id. in August., c. 91. It was reckoned a handsome enough way of receiving gifts, when the bosom-fold of the cloak was expanded. But when they were received utraq; manu cavata, as it would be expressed in S., in goupins, it was accounted a species of depredation. Hence rapine was proverbially expressed in this manner. V. Ammian. Marcellin. Lib. 16. Rosin. Antiq., p. 29.

The Strenæ were considered as of such importance, that a particular deity was supposed to preside over them, called Dea Strenia; Rosin. p. 28. This might be the principal reason why they were condemned by Christians in early times. To have any concern with them, might be reckoned a symbolising in some sort with idolatry.

V. This season, in very early times, was characterized by such DISSIPATION, that even the more sober heathens were scandalized by it.

Among the Northern nations, "feasting, dances, nocturnal assemblies, and all the demonstrations of a most dissolute joy, were then authorised by the general usage." Mallet's North. Antiq., i. 130.

On account of the hilarity usual at this season, Wachter concludes, that Germ. jol-en, to revel, Belg. joolig, homo festivus, as well as Fr. joli, and E. jolly, have all their origin from Jol, Yule.

The Saturnalia, among the Romans, at length lasted for seven days, the Sigillaria being included. During this season of festivity, all public business was suspended; the Senate, and the courts of Justice, were shut up. All schools also had a vacation; Rosin. p. 98. I need scarcely remark the striking similarity of our Christmas Holidays.

Masters and servants sat at one table. Some, indeed, say, that masters waited on their servants. Every thing serious was laid aside; and people of all ranks gave themselves up to jollity; Bochart. Phaleg. p. 3.

There can be no doubt that, in the dissipation by which the New Year is ushered in, we have borrowed from the heathen. The account which Seneca the Philosopher gives of this season, might seem to have been written for our times. "It is now," says he to his friend Lucilius, "the month of December, when the greatest part of the city is in a bustle. Loose reins are given to public dissipation; every where may you hear the sound of great preparations, as if there were some real difference between the days dedicated to Saturn, and those for transacting business. Thus, I am disposed to think, that he was not far from the truth, who said that anciently it was the month of December, but now, the year. Were you here, I would willingly confer with you as to the plan of our conduct; whether we should live in our usual way, or, to avoid singularity, both take a better supper, and throw off the togæ. For what was not wont to be done, except in a tumult, or during some public calamity in the city, is now done for the sake of pleasure, and from regard to the festival. Men change their dress.—It were certainly far better to be thrifty and sober amidst a drunken crowd, disgorging what they have recently swallowed." Epist. 18, Oper., p. 273.

I have not met with any proof that the Romans disguised themselves during the Saturnalia; although this custom seems to have prevailed, during the same season, among the Celts, as it certainly did among the Goths. But such disguises were permitted in the worship of Cybele, the mother of the gods. To this purpose we have the testimony of Herodian. "Yearly, in the beginning of Spring, the Romans celebrate the feast of the Mother of the gods. On this occasion, the most striking symbols of wealth, which any one possesses, even royal furniture, and the most wonderful productions of nature or art, are wont to be carried before the deity. Liberty is given to all to indulge themselves in any kind of sport. Every one assumes whatever appearance is most agreeable to him. Nor is there any dignity so great, that a man may not invest himself with the emblems of it, if he pleases. Such pains are taken to deceive and to conceal the truth, that what is real cannot easily be distinguished from what is done in mimicry." Hist. Lib. i. c. 32.

Cybele, it may be observed, is admitted to be the same with Rhea or the Earth.

The ancient Northern nations worshipped Frea or Frigga. Her festival was observed in the month of February. She seems to correspond to Cybele, in the Roman Calendar. As Cybele was the Mother of the gods, Frea was believed to be, not only the daughter, but the wife of Odin; Mallet, ii. 30. In the Edda it is declared, that all the other gods sprung from Odin and Frea. She was the same with Herthus, Hertha, or the Earth. Tacitus describes her under this very designation, of the Mother of the gods. Matrem Deum venerantur Aeatii; insigne superstitionis formas aporum gestant; German., c. 45. The Northern nations indeed sacrificed to Frea the largest hog they could find. This exactly agrees with the Roman mode of worshipping Cybele. For they sacrificed a hog to her; Rosin., p. 232.

With respect to the disguising customary, during this festivity, among the Goths, and also in our own country, V. ABBOT of UNRESON and GYSAR. It may be added, that Dr. Johnson, in his Journey to the Western Islands, mentions a custom, which has probably been transmitted from the Norwegian lords of the Hebrides.

"At new year's eve, in the hall or castle of the laird, where at festivals there [is] supposed to be a very numerous company, one man dresses himself in a cow-hide, on which others beat with sticks; he runs with all this noise round the house in a counterfeited fright; the door is then shut, and no re-admission obtained after their pretended terror, but by the repetition of a verse of poetry, which those acquainted with the custom are provided with." V. Strutt's Sports, p. 188, N.

During Yule, our forefathers seem to have been much addicted to Games of Chance. This custom still prevails. Even children lay up stores of pins, for playing at Te Totum. In some parts of the country, merchants generally provide themselves, about this time, with a coarser sort, which they call Yule-pins.

This custom is analogous to that of the Romans. Although games of chance were prohibited by the laws, these provided an exception for the month of December. V. Adam's Antiq., p. 458.

One species of amusement, on this day, S. B. is lead-shooting. This signifies shooting at a mark for a prize that is laid in pledge. V. WAD-SHOOTING.

VI. CANDLES of a particular kind are made for this season. For the candle, that is lighted on Yule, must be so large as to burn from the time of its being lighted till the day be done. If it did not, the circumstances would be an omen of ill fortune to the family during the subsequent year. Hence large candles are by the vulgar called Yule-candles. Even where lamps are commonly used, the poorest will not light them at this time.

There is no reason to doubt that this custom has been transmitted from the times of heathenism. Rudbeck informs us, that Su.-G. Jule-lins denotes "the Candles of Yule, or of the Sun, which, on the night preceding the Festival of Yule, illuminated the houses of private persons through the whole kingdom." Atlant. P. ii. 239.

The same custom prevailed among the great. Hence it is said; "In the time of Yule, Kertineinar, the servants whose work it is to carry lights, shall hold candles before the King and other princes." Hirdskraa, MS. ap. Verel. Ind. vo. Kertineinar. We learn from Sturleson, that, in royal or princely entertainments, there were as many of these servants as there were guests. V. Ihre, vo. Kerta. This term has undoubtedly been borrowed from the Germans, who pronounce it kers or kerze; evidently corr. from Lat. cereus, as originally applied to waxlights.

The ingenious Rudbeck marks the resemblance between the use of the Jaul-lins, i. e., Yule-lights, and that of lighted torches by the Egyptians, in the worship of Osiris or the sun. He supposes that the Egyptians had borrowed this custom from the Goths; as they were themselves ignorant of the meaning of the rites which they observed in the worship of this deity. Herodotus himself, when describing the worship of Isis, or Ceres, at Bubastis, shews that such sports were used as indicated that the people were not Egyptians, but strangers. Rudbeck is at pains to prove that some of these exactly corresponded to the Yule-games of the Goths. Atlant. ii. 307-309.

Elsewhere Rudbeck says, that at the season mentioned, "they are burnt through the whole night, not from superstition, as in former ages, but merely from regard to ancient custom: and that, with those who are more curious, these candles are formed like the trunk of a tree springing out of the earth, and dividing itself into three branches. By this rite," he adds, "our ancestors were accustomed to celebrate Saturn, or the Sun, as returning to loose all the bonds by which the vegetable world had been bound during winter." Atlant. i. 695-6. It is rather surprising that his ingenuity did not discern in this symbol the three sons of Saturn. Macrobius, Lib. 12. c. 7. 12. says that it was after the return of Saturn into Italy, during the reign of Janus, that they began to burn wax candles in the Saturnalia.

There is a striking conformity between this rite and that of the ancient Romans, in their celebration of the Saturnalia. They used lights in the worship of their deity. Hence originated the custom of making presents of this kind. The poor were wont to present the rich with wax tapers: Cereos Saturnalibus muneri dabant humiliores potentioribus, quia candelis pauperes, locupletes cereis utebantur. Fest. Pomp. Lib. 3. Yule-candles are, in the N. of S., given as a present at this season by merchants to their stated customers.

By many, who rigidly observe the superstitions of this season, the Yule-candle is allowed to burn out of itself. The influence of superstition appears equally in others, although in a different way. When the day is at a close, the portentous candle is extinguished, and carefully locked up in a chest. There it is kept, in order to be burnt out at the owner's Late-wake.

I may observe by the way, that the preservation of candles has been viewed by the superstitious as a matter of great importance. This notion seems to have been pretty generally diffused. An Icelandic writer informs us, that a spakona, a spae-wife or sybil, who thought herself neglected, in comparison of her sisterhood, at some unhallowed rites observed for foretelling the fate of a child, cried out; "Truly, I add this to these predictions, that the child shall live no longer than these candles, which are lighted beside him, are burnt out." Then "the chief of the Sybils immediately extinguished one of the candles, and gave it to the mother of the child to be carefully preserved, and not to be lighted while the child was in life." Nornagestz Sag. ap. Bartholia. Caus. Contempt. Mortis, p. 686.

The reason of the preservation of the Yule-candle, in order to be burnt at the owner's Late-wake, may be gathered perhaps from the superstitious use of candles on Candlemas day in England. Being sprinkled with holy water, and blessed, they were supposed to have the power of driving away evil spirits.

Whose candell burneth cleare and bright, a vnedrous force and might

Doth in these candells lie, which, if at any time they light,

They sure beleve that neyther storme or tempest dare abide,

Non thunder in the skies be heard, nor any devil's spile,
Nor fearful sprites that walke by night, nor harts of froste or hail.

Barnab. Googe's Transl. Nauegeorg, l. 41.

The design must have been to drive away evil spirits, or to prevent their taking possession of the dead body. These consecrated candles were even viewed as useful to the dying. To the question, "Wherefore serveth holy candels?" we find this reply; "To light up in thunder, and to blesse men when they lye a dying." Wodde's Dial. Brand's Pop. Antiq., i. 41, N.

VII. A number of MISCELLANEOUS SUPERSTITIONS may be mentioned, in relation to Yule, which are still regarded by many, especially in the North of S. Some of them, like those already referred to, may be traced to heathenism; others seem to have had their origin from the darkness of Popery. The bare mention of them must, to any thinking mind, be sufficient to shew their absurdity.

In the morning one rises before the rest of the family, and prepares food for them, which must be eaten in bed. This frequently consists of cakes baked with eggs, called Care-cakes. A bannock or cake is baked for every person in the house. If any one of these break in the toasting, the person for whom it is baked, will not, it is supposed, see another Yule. V. CARE-CAKE.

On this day, as well as on New-year's-day, Handel-Monday, and Rood-day, superstitious people would not allow a coal to be carried out of their own house to that of a neighbour, lest it should be employed for the purposes of witchcraft.

It is remarkable that the ancient Romans had the same superstition. "At Rome on New Year's day, no one would suffer a neighbour to take fire out of his house, or any thing of iron, or lend any thing." Hoepinian. de Orig. Fest. Christ. f. 82. Brand, i. 11, N.

The generality of people in the North of S., even of those who have no attachment to the rites of the Church of England, so far retain a traditional regard for Yule, that they observe it as a holiday. They would reckon it ominous to do any work; although they can give no better reason for their conduct, than that "their fathers never wrought on Yule."

Women seem to have a peculiar aversion to spinning on this day. This bears strong marks of a pagan origin. The ancient heathens would not suffer their women to spin on a holiday. Hence Tibullus says;

Non audeat ulla lanificam pensis imponisse manum.

And Ovid relates, that Bacchus punished Alcithoe and her sisters for presuming to spin during his festival. There is a single passage in Jhone Hamilton's Facile Traicteise, which, while it affords a proof of the traditional antipathy to spinning on Yule-day, also shews how jealous our worthy reformers were against the observation of all festival days.

After declaring the opposition of the Calvinian sect to all halydayes except Sunday, he says; "The Ministers of Scotland—in contempt of the vther halie dayes obseruit be England,—cause thair wyfis and scruants speie in oppin sight of the people upon *Yeu*l day; and thair affectionat auditeurs constraines thair tennants to yoke thair pleuchs on *Yeu*l day in contempt of Christis Natiuitie, whilk our Lord hes not left vnpuinisit; for thair oxin ran wol and brak thair rekis, and leamit [lamed] sum pleugh men, as is notoriously knawin in sindrie partes of Scotland." P. 174, 175.

The term Yule is also used for Christmas; A. Bor. They have their Yu, or Yule-butch, i.e., Christmas-butch; their Yule-games, and Yule-clog, or Christmas-block. "In farm-houses, the servants lay by a large knotty block for their Christmas fire, and, during the time it lasts, they are entitled, by custom, to ale at their meals;" Grose's Gl.

Yole occurs in the same sense in O. E.

His Yole for to hold was his encheson.

R. Brunne, p. 49.

Bourne, speaking of the custom of lighting up candles, and of burning the Yule-clog, says that it "seems to have been used as an emblem of the return of the Sun, and the lengthening of the days. The continuing of it," he adds, "after the introduction of Christianity, may have been intended for a symbol of that Light which lightened the Gentiles;" Antiq. Vulgar.

"In Yorkshire and other Northern parts, they have an old custom after sermon or service on Christmas-day, the people will, even in the churches, cry Ule, Ule, as a token of rejoicing, and the common sort run about the streets singing, Ule, Ule, Ule, Ule, &c. V. Bloant's Dict., vo. Ule. V. YULE-E'EN.

That some such childish cry was anciently used in S. at this season seems probable from the old Prov., "It is eith crying yool on anither man's stool;" Ramsey's S. Prov., p. 45.

TO YULE, YOOL, v. n. To observe Christmas according to the customary rites.

"The lords refused to let the lady marchioness go to the castle with her husband, unless she would ward also, and with great intreaty had the favour to yool with him, but to stay no longer." Spalding's Troubles, i. 48.

YULE-BOYS. "Boys who ramble (through) the country during the Christmas holidays. They are dressed in white, all but one in each gang, the Belzebub of the corps." Gall. Enc. [V. GYSAR.]

In the alternate rhymes repeated by them, there seems to be a vestige of something resembling an old Miracle Play, which may have been acted in Galloway at the time of Christmas. The amusement appears, indeed, to have been an odd intermixture of the ridiculous solemnities of the Boy-Bishop, and of a mimic representation of a tourney, or perhaps of knight-errantry.

YULE-BROSE, s. A dish formerly common in S. on Christmas morning.

—"Geese—were chiefly destined for the solace of gentle stomachs, the prevailing Christmas dish among the common people and peasantry, being the national one of fat brose, otherwise called Yule brose. The large pot, in almost every family of this description, well provided with—bullock's heads or knee bones,—[is] put on the fire the previous evening, to withdraw the nutritive juices and animal oil from the said ingredients. Next day, after breakfast or at dinner, the brose was made, generally in a large punch-bowl; the mistress of the ceremonies dropping a gold ring among the oatmeal upon which the oily soup was poured. The family, or party, (for on these occasions there was generally a party of young people assembled) provided with spoons, and seated around the bowl, now began to partake of the half-boiling brose, on the understanding that the person who was so fortunate as to get the ring—was to be first married." Blackw. Mag., Dec. 1821, p. 692.

Wynntoun, viii. 36, 69.

An expressive Prov. is borrowed from this season; "As bare as the birks at Yule-e'en;" applied both in a physical, and in a moral sense. The following example occurs of the latter application, with a slight variation.

"A colonel—gave him [Mr. John Semple of Caraphern] ill names, calling him 'a varlot, old greeting carle.' To whom he answered, that he was no more a varlot, than he had the saving grace of God; and that he was as free of, as the birk is of leaves at Yool-even." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 9.

This the A.-Saxons denominated Myd-wyntres mæsse-aefen, vigilia Nativitatis Christi. For they called Christmas itself mid-winter, and myd-wyntres mæssedæg, i.e., the mass-day in the middle of winter; as, for a similar reason, they gave the name of mid-summer to the day observed in commemoration of the nativity of John Baptist.

The Northern nations called this night Modranect, or Moedrenech, (Modranatt, Ihre,) not according to the sense given by Sibb., as being "the night of mothers," but the Mother-night, "as that which produced all the rest: and this epoch was rendered the more remarkable, as they dated from thence the beginning of the year, which among the northern nations was computed from one winter solstice to another, as the month was from one new moon to the next." Mallet, i. 130. We learn from Wormius, that to this day the Icelanders date the beginning of their year from Yule, in consequence of ancient custom which the law of their country obliges them to retain. They even reckon a person's age by the number of Yules he has seen; so that one who has lived during the celebration of this feast for twenty times, is said to be twenty years of age, although he was born on December 24th, or the very day preceding Yule-e'en. This night they denominate Jolanat; and he who, according to this mode of reckoning, is twenty years of age, is said to have lived xx Jolanatur; Fast. Dan., Lib. i. a. 12.

A similar mode of reckoning is retained in some parts of S. V. SINGIN-E'EN.

The Goths also called this Hoekanatt; because, in times of heathenism, on this occasion hawks were sacrificed. Ihre observes, (vo. Hock), that, as this feast was instituted in honour of the Sun, the Egyptians, according to the testimony of Horadollo, accounted hawks sacred to that luminary, because, by a secret power of nature, they could steadfastly look at him.

The vulgar, in the North of S. especially, have a great many ridiculous notions with respect to the eve of Yule, and on this night observe a number of superstitious rites.

It is believed by some, that, if one were to go into the cow-house at twelve o'clock at night, all the cattle would be seen to kneel. This idea seems to refer to our Lord's being born in a stable. Many also firmly believe, that bees sing in their hives on Christmas-eve, as welcoming the approaching day.

It has been observed, on the word Yule, that on this day women abstain from spinning. On the evening preceding, they will not even venture to leave any flax or yarn on their wheels; apprehending that the devil would reel it for them before morning. Women in a single state assign another reason for this caution. Their rocks would otherwise follow them to church on their marriage-day. If any flax be left on their rocks, they salt it, in order to preserve it from satanical power. If yarn be accidentally left on a reel, it must not be taken off in the usual way, but be cut off.

The same custom is exercised on Good-Friday; but a reason is given, different from both of these that have already been mentioned. On this day, it is said, a rope could not be found to bind our Saviour to the cross, and the yarn was taken off a woman's wheel for this purpose.

It is a striking proof of the tyrannical influence of custom on the mind, that many who have no faith in these observances, would not feel themselves easy, did they neglect them.

Some farmers, I have been assured, are so extremely superstitious, as to go into their stables and cow-houses on Yule-e'en, and read a chapter of the Bible behind their horses and cattle to preserve them from harm.

—And, O, I'm sure the craws will yurn,

Whan they in April do return,

And misses you.——

Gall. Enc., p. 239. 501.

[Yurn, Yurm, and Girn, are similar, but not alike in meaning, yurn and yurm are applied to the whimpering fretfulness of a sickly child: Girn, to the grating grumbling of bad temper or self-will.]

To YURN, YYRNE, v. a. To coagulate, to curdle.

Albeit na butter he could gett,
Yit he was cummerit with the kirne;

And syne he het the milk our het,

And sorrow a spark of it would gyrne.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 217, st. 3.

Milk is said to rin, i.e., run, when it breaks and forms into knots, in making of pottage, puddings, &c. V. EARN.

YURN, [YURNIN,] s. The acid substance used for coagulating milk, rennet, Dumfr. V. EARNING.

YYT, part. pa. Molten; cast. V. YET, v.

Z.

[For some important particulars regarding the misuse of this letter in many of the early printed books, see the introduction to Y.]

ZADAK, most probably for Yadak. Zadak kidis, Aberd. Reg., V. XI., 281. V. YADOK.

ZICKETY. A term occurring in a traditional rhyme, used by children, when they mean to determine by lot who shall begin a game. The person, who repeats the rhyme, at the same time goes round the company, touching each of them in succession; and he who is touched at the last word has the privilege of beginning the game, S.

"Zickety, dickety, dock,
The mouse ran up the nock;
The nock struck one,
Down the mouse ran;
Zickety, dickety, dock."

Blackw. Mag., Aug. 1821, p. 36.

In Mearns apparently by corruption, the first words are pronounced Zickerty, dickerty.

The terms and sports of children, although they may seem unworthy of attention, and any attempt to investigate their origin may provoke the sneer of fastidiousness, yet in various instances afford the sole vestiges of very ancient laws and customs. In proof of this, I beg leave to refer to the articles TAPPISTOUSIE and THUMB-LICKING.

In others, we may perhaps remark the traces of ancient monkish rhymes, taught in schools several centuries ago; although now disguised and mixed up with such jargon as hits the fancies of children. The rhyme given above may be of this description. It was thus explained to me, partially at least, many years ago, by a good classical scholar; but unluckily no memorandum of his version was made. It was to this purpose;

Sic uti dico tibi de hoc.

The second line, although it ran differently, appearing to be also of Latin origin. The repetition was that of the county of Perth.

[ZILL, s. A child; as, Zill Morris, Banff. Zillie is the diminutive.

Zill is the local pron. of chiel, chield, q. v.]
